THE REPEALERS OF DUNDALK.—Last week, Mr. O'Connell made his promised entry into Dundalk, and was entertained at a banquet. The learned gentleman's speech to the people in the streets, as well as that made at the banquet, ridiculed the idea that the concession of an increased grant to Maynooth would stop Repeal. Mr. O'Connell gave this figurative illustration of the inutility of trying to coax the Repealers—"Ministers, amongst themselves, said they would take away from you the Repealers, but they said, 'How will we take them away?—oh, we will give a spoonful of honey to Maynooth College.' (Cheers and laughter.) And there is an old proverb that you can catch more flies with a spoonful of honey than with a tun of vinegar. (Laughter.) They were using the vinegar hitherto, and they at length sent it to us in a vinegar cruet on two legs, Attorney-General Smith. (Laughter.) But, said they, we cannot catch any flies with the vinegar, and we will now try the honey. Well, the honey was very good, and from my heart I am delighted that Maynooth got it; but I can tell the Government this for their comfort, that they are as near catching the flies as if they had used nothing but vinegar." (Laughter.) In another part of his speech, Mr. O'Connell again hinted that the threatening state of America was the motive for the conciliatory tone of the Government. In his dinner-speech his language towards the Ministry breathed a tone of defiance. He said—"The conduct of the Ministry is most consolatory, but at the same time, there is something in it like inconsistency (hear, hear)—tergiversation (hear)—turning round (cheers)—and then jumping Jim Crow. (Laughter.) I am exceedingly thankful for what we have got, but we have not asked for it. I have not heard of any Irish petitions in favour of it, with the exception of a few, for which I am thoroughly grateful, and one of which was from Belfast. (Cheers.) But the Catholic people are looking on with the dignity of men who had been foully robbed and ought to be conciliated. They are looking calmly on, allowing those who robbed them to make them restitution. (Cheers.) There is no exaggeration in stating it that the opinions of the British Ministry, of the British Government, must abide the messages of peace they send to Ireland. (Loud cheers.) If they conciliate Ireland they can bully the rest of the world, but they cannot bully Ireland. We are this day laughing at them, because we have the solid foundation of a people's voice backing us in our solemn determination." (Loud cheers.)

SECESSION OF MR. GREY PORTER FROM THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—Mr. Grey Porter has seceded from the Repeal Association. Mr. Grey Porter assigns, as the reason of his resignation, that he has discovered, from the speeches at the recent Dundalk demonstration, that Mr. O'Connell is determined, at all hazards, to have Repeal, and that no concessions which the Imperial Parliament may, or can make, will divert him from his purpose. Mr. Grey Porter has no sympathy with this feeling. He thinks that the Imperial Legislature could, were it so disposed, administer the affairs of Ireland quite as beneficially and satisfactorily to the Irish people, as a Parliament located in College-green.

MURDER IN LEITRIM.—Another dreadful murder has been committed in the county of Leitrim. The unfortunate victim was forced from his bed in the dead of the night, dragged out in the open air, and shot in the presence of his wife and children! The particulars of this brutal outrage have not reached us, but of the fact there can be no doubt. Leitrim is bidding fair to outdo Tipperary in acts of atrocity and bloodshed. This is the district described by Lord Clements (its representative) in the discussion on the Arms Bill, as orderly, peaceable, and loyal.

OPENING OF THE ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE BAZAAR.

On Thursday, punctually at 12 o'clock, the doors of Covent-garden Theatre were opened to hundreds of well-dressed visitors to the Great Bazaar, in support of the Anti-Corn-Law League. The arrangements were very complete; and will be best understood by a sort of descriptive détour of the theatre.

Under the portico is the vestibule, through which is the entrance to the Bazaar. Visitors ascend a wide staircase of stone, decorated on each side with statuary, to the Shakspeare Hall or Saloon. On the left side of this hall is the exhibition of tapestry, shawls, and carpets, and in the corners next the passage are displayed a splendid mirror and a stall of chemical preparations. Passing this hall, and turning to the right, visitors enter the Box-lobby, the side wing of which will be closed during the Bazaar. On the left is a stall for Miller's Glass Works. Visitors proceed to the left, and on coming opposite the central box of the dress circle, they reach the entrance to the Grand Gothic Hall. The first view at the entrance is very imposing; the illuminated roof, with its Gothic mouldings and richly decorated arches, the two vistas of pillars extending along each side, and the gorgeous painted window at the remote extreme are very effective. The elevation of the dress circle above the level of the Pit, enables the visitor to take in the whole at the first glance, and hence the effect of the coup d'œil is most striking and imposing.

There is a descent of a few steps into the body of the hall, where the stalls are situated, and we shall first describe those connected with the range of boxes on the right-hand side of the visitor at entrance. The boxes next to the entrance are themselves stalls, and are approached by a raised platform; they are divided between the towns of Northampton and Rochdale. The pillars projecting into the body of the hall extend from this point to the proscenium, and the stalls allocated to Yorkshire are placed between the pillars, the boxes behind serving for the display of goods, and also as magazines for the supply of the stalls. These four stalls are assigned to Halifax, Leeds, and Bradford; the towns being named in the order that the stalls follow from the entrance. In the centre of the hall is a double row of stalls, but we shall only describe that row now which is opposite and nearest to the box stalls we have mentioned. Next the enerance are the stalls of Bolton, Stockport, and a Scotch burgh; then follow those of Swansea, Carlisle, York, Stockton on Tees, Hull, Beverley, Bristol, and Newcastle.

The stalls we have enumerated occupy half of the semi-ellipse which forms the part of the theatre in front of the stage. The stage itself being quadrangular, admits of a different arrangement. From the central line of stalls, adjoining that allocated to Bristol, there springs a series of stalls in the shape of a reversed L, the extreme of the letter joining the central stalls. The Newcastle stall is continued at right angles; then follow those of Huddersfield, Barnsley, Wakefield, and Bloomsbury, on the perpendicular side of the L; and at the top is the Kentish Town stall. Opposite to these, forming the right-hand side of the Gothic Hall, is first an ornamented door, and then two recesses, each richly illuminated with transparencies, painted to imitate stained glass; the first of these is the Peckham stall; and the second the Islington stall.

The right side of the upper part of the stage fronting the entrance, is appropriated to the Metropolis, and is divided into three stalls, named in their order, from the right hand corner, the City, Kensington, and Camden stalls. Returning again to the reversed L, which joins the central table, and which forms a recess of stalls just in front of the Camden (the reader will remember, that as he turns into the recess, he faces the door of entrance), at the turn next to the Kentish Town, is the Sussex; and then the Norwood stall; at the horizontal line of the L are the Pentonville and Hoxton stalls; and we then again turn our back to the entrance, passing the St. Martin's and the Savoy stalls. The curved top of stalls, which unites the two central lines of stalls, is assigned to the contributions of the ladies of Sheffield.

Before we go down the other side of the hall, we must enter, what would in ancient times be regarded as "a chamber of dais," a large recess at the extreme of the Gothic Hall, and forming itself a hall of superior decoration, illuminated by a large transparency, representing a Gothic window of the richest stained glass. The whole length of this magnificent apartment is laid out in refreshment stalls; the right hand side as you enter is the Book stall, and opposite is the Post Office.

Returning to the stage, and turning to the right, we have to examine the remaining half of the Bazaar, which is arranged on the same plan as that just described. At the stage-end of the Bazaar there are three stalls next the wall, assigned to Manchester, equal in extent to the London stalls on the opposite side; and there are in the side-wall three recesses, each illuminated by a transparency, representing a window of stained glass, also occupied by stalls connected with Manchester. In the recess, formed by the second reversed L and the centre table, are the stalls assigned to Gloucester, Norwich, Exeter, Dudley, Warrington, Preston, and Lancaster. The outer side of the L, beginning at the top, opposite Manchester's stalls are allocated to the contributions from Liverpool, Staley-bridge, Ashton, and Bury; the end facing the body of the house is assigned to the Blackburn stall.

FREE TRADE BAZAAR, AT COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

Crossing back from the stage to the body of the house, we have the boxes on our right, and the second central line of stalls on our left. This central line is given to the Midland Counties; and the stalls are assigned in the following order, beginning from the stage—to Nottingham, Leicester, Derby, Coventry, Birmingham, and Wolverhampton. Near the top is a Scotch stall, and at the top is a stall for contributions from Colebrook Dale, in addition to those in the saloon, to be described hereafter. The stalls on the right-hand, between the pillars, in front of the boxes, are assigned to Scotland, and are distributed, beginning from the stage, to Dundee, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Paisley. The stalls in the boxes, next to the place of exit, are given to the contributions from Shetland, Dunstable, and Luton.

The door of exit is separated by a thin partition from the door of entrance; it leads into the Box-lobby, from which visitors pass into the lower Saloon. This noble room is divided into a central hall, and two spacious wings. The wing through which we enter is occupied by the Sheffield stall, and exhibits a gorgeous display of the articles for the manufacture of which that town has long been celebrated. In the central hall are arranged the contributions from the iron works of Colebrook Dale. The remaining wing is assigned to the contributions from the Potteries, which consist of porcelain, china-ware, &c.

We next ascend the staircase leading from the central saloon to the upper boxes, and may at our choice go on to the upper saloon, or take a view of the Gothic Hall from the second circle of boxes. The upper saloon is the only part of the exposition to which daylight is admitted. It has been papered and fitted up for the present occasion by Messrs. Hennell and Crosby, who have here introduced a novel style of decoration. Free Trade mottoes are enclosed in rich medallions which form part of the design of the paper hangings, and produce a most pleasing effect. The upper saloon is designed for the exhibition of machinery, models, and works of art, and also as a place for promenade and conversation.

REFRESHMENT ROOM, FREE TRADE BAZAAR.

We must now venture behind the scenes. At the Manchester side of the stage is a door leading to a gallery of apartments fitted up as dressing-rooms for the ladies. At the end of the gallery is a large saloon, commonly called the King's room, where refreshments are provided for the ladies attending stalls.

On the opposite side of the house is a similar gallery of apartments, which includes two dressing-rooms for gentlemen, a refreshment room, a committee room (the old green room), the superintendent's room, the chairman's room, the secretary's room, and the clerk's room.

The vast Gothic Hall has been painted, at a great expense, by Messrs. Grieve: it is a most effective specimen of scenic architecture.

At the upper end of the hall was a large and splendidly decorated cake, weighing upwards of 280 pounds, which had been sent from Bury, in Lancashire. The top of it was ornamented with a kind of arabesque work, in portions of which were inscribed the names of the most distinguished free-trade members of the House of Commons This cake, it is stated, is at the close of the Bazaar to be cut up and distributed to the visitors by the ladies who have presided at the stalls.

Among those earliest in attendance were—Sir John Cam Hobhouse, M.P. with a party of friends; Mr. Bright, M.P.; Mr. Brotherton, M.P.; Mr. Hutt, M.P.; and Mr. P. A. Taylor, with a party of friends.

Notwithstanding the check imposed on Thursday, to some extent, by the high prices of admission, the Gothic Hall was nearly full in less than an hour after the doors of the Theatre had been opened; and the sale of articles commenced very early, as indicated by the sound of money, which could be heard in all directions. Some elegant stand fire-screens bore the portraits of Mr. Cobden, Mr. Villiers, and Mr. Bright; and a splendid piece of Sheffield cutlery, in the shape of a pair of scissors, represented full length figures of Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright, with the words—"Champions of Free Trade."

The Bazaar will be opened on Monday next, at the admission charge of one shilling.

CALAMITOUS ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE AT YARMOUTH.

"Tune brevior diræ mortis aperta via est."

Whoso wends his early way
Through the fields at morning hour,
Will see fine threads from spray to spray,
Linking thorn and linking flow'r,
Some with dewdrops sparkling bright—
Some, dingy cobwebs of the night;
All resembling various ties
That bind up this world's families!
Come there but the slightest breeze
To wake the drowsy morning trees,
The pearly strings are all undone,
Their splendour fled, their beauty gone!

And such is Life! the brightest hour
Doth oft precede the tempest's gloom—
And in the march of Glory's pow'r,
Perhaps we're treading on the tomb!

What is all yon bright array
Seeming met for holiday—
Young and old, and rich and poor
Stand on that suspended floor,
High above the streamy water,
Doom'd, alas! for scene of slaughter!

Hark! what means that dreadful crash—
And that sudden, deep-mouth'd splash,
Yelling forth the piercing cries
Of some who sink no more to rise!
Thickly in the gorging wave—
Beyond the power of man to save—
They fall, and falling hold each other,
Husband, wife, with sister, brother,
Father, child, in struggling grasp
Together end their dying gasp!

But oh! who can with truth relate
That long wild cry so desolate,
Which rang from widows—orphans, there
In dreadful chorus of despair!
Oh! mem'ry sickens at the sound,
It was so deadly shrill;
It turned my brain and heart quite round,
And moans within them still!

W.

In part of our impression last week we gave such particulars as we could obtain of a most fatal accident at Yarmouth, caused by the giving way of a suspension bridge. We now supply the most authentic details which have been received of this calamity.

The scene of the dreadful event was the Suspension-bridge, on the North quay, crossing the river Bure, and which had been the entrance to the town from the railway terminus, and the new road from Acle. Cooke's Equestrian Company had, for some time, been staying in Yarmouth, and on the morning of yesterday (Friday) week, it was announced by public hand-bills that Nelson, one of the clowns, would sail up the river Bure, starting from Yarmouth-bridge to Vauxhall-gardens, at five o'clock, in a common washing-tub, drawn by four "real geese," elegantly harnessed and caparisoned. At the time appointed, this absurd exhibition took place. The clown and his geese started from the Old Bridge in the presence of an immense concourse of persons, who had assembled to witness the feat. On his arrival at the mouth of the Bure, a current took him towards Braydon, whence he was obliged to be towed back to the union of the two streams. The multitude of persons along the North Quay was greatly increased by the rush from the Old Bridge, and every spot where a view of Nelson and his geese could be obtained, was filled with spectators. By far the most advantageous view was had from the Suspension-bridge, and this was eagerly sought for by the unsuspecting populace. About 400 persons occupied this position, and were pressing on the south side to obtain the first glance of the coming wonder. The bridge is an elegant structure, suspended from two piers, and capable of standing a much larger number of persons; but every point of vision towards the spot where the geese were to be looked for was densely crammed with men, women, and children, and even the chains and suspenders had many occupants. This is the bridge which has been the cause of so much litigation between the Yarmouth Railway Company and Mr. Cory, its proprietor, and which has, since the arrangement with the parties, become the principal, if not the only medium of transit to and from the railway terminus. In order to accommodate this increased traffic, the proprietors were induced to extend the bridge on each side the chains, to the extent of four feet for foot passengers, and the platform on the south side was the chief receptacle for the multitude who were on the bridge on this occasion: the north side was comparatively empty; consequently there was an extreme pressure on the south; so much so, that a gentleman who passed over, noticed that the crown of the bridge, instead of maintaining its convex form, was completely flattened. He remarked the circumstance to a companion, but at this moment all eyes were stretched to the utmost, and every ear listening with eagerness for the first announcement of the clown's appearance. This anxiety was brought to its highest pitch by the cry of "Here come the geese." The shout resounded from side to side; but amidst was a shriek from the shores; the bridge was observed to give way; it lowered on one side; the chains snapped asunder one after another in momentary succession, and almost before the gaze of the thronging multitude could be drawn from its object of worthless interest, it was rivetted to the half-sunken bridge—suspended on one side by its unbroken chains—cleared of all its occupants—every one of whom was plunged into the stream; and over them the waters were flowing, as if unconscious of the fearful tragedy which had momentarily occurred.

Those who witnessed it asserted that not a scream was heard, nor a sound emitted from the unfortunate victims. A fearful splash, and a few gurgling struggles, only recognised the spot which had swallowed such a mass of human life. Some few men hanging by the broken chains were earnestly entreated to maintain their hold, but it was soon observed that, in consequence of the obstruction of the stream by the fallen bridge, and the human bodies below, that the advancing tide would soon bury even them from sight. Every boat was immediately in requisition, and as many as twenty-five were soon on the spot, and rendered active and gallant service. The scene at this moment beggars description—husbands and wives, parents and children, were excited with the deepest anxiety. The efforts to save the victims were noble and praiseworthy. One man who was precipitated from the bridge caught a hold and maintained it; a woman made a desperate clutch at his ancles, and succeeded in reaching them. The brave fellow looked down, and, though in fearful peril himself, encouraged her to hold tight, and she was rescued. The man refused to get into the boat, telling the occupants to pick up those who were floating about the river—subsequently, however, he was obliged to release his hold, and he fell into the stream. We are happy to say that a rope was thrown to him immediately, and he was brought safely ashore. The bodies were picked up in quick succession, most of them dead. Among the number was a woman, doubtless a mother, who had in her arms an infant, and in one hand a little girl three or four years old—she had firmly grasped both, and her firm hold had not been broken by the struggles of death, for it was with difficulty they were separated. They were all corpses and very stiff. The various incidents of the tragic scene are some of them very touching. The children were many of them found with their heads fast in the railing (which, on the bursting of the chains, lapped over into the water), doubtless fixed in that position in their anxiety to feast their eyes on the expectant sight. It was with difficulty they were extricated, and there were some discovered with their heads smashed to pieces by the falling of the iron-work. Mr. F. N. Palmer, surgeon, was amongst the parties rescued; by proper attention, however, being paid to him, he was so far restored at ten o'clock as to be considered out of danger. Many others were also restored by similar means. Barrels of hot water were sent from the brewhouse of the Messrs. Lacon, to Mr. Laws, of the Norwich Arms Inn, where the scene was most dreadful. The kitchen, the tap room, and other rooms, with the stables, were filled with victims. As many as ten or a dozen were ultimately restored, but no less than 53 bodies were brought into that house, which defied all the means of restoration; others were taken to other public houses in the neighbourhood, but not in very considerable numbers. Of the number who had been taken out of the river at 11 o'clock at night, the eyes of 73 were for ever closed in death. The great majority of them were women and children. About 30 umbrellas were taken on shore. Persons whose relatives and whose children were down to see the sight, on hearing of the catastrophe, flocked from all parts of the town to make inquiries, and to examine the dead bodies; fathers and mothers were moaning for their children, and children for their parents, husbands for their wives, and the awfully distressing scene was such, that no description can do justice to. The bodies were removed by the relations as they were recognised, and at 12 o'clock only one body remained in the Norwich Arms stables that had not been recognised. Several bodies are said to have passed under the bridge, and it seems to be impossible to remove them without great violence, or, as our informant says, "pulling them limb from limb." It is said that the coachman of Mr. H. N. Burroughes, M.P., of Burlingham, is missing, and it is feared he has experienced the common fate, but no such body has been picked up.

REMAINS OF THE SUSPENSION BRIDGE, AT GREAT YARMOUTH.

THE SUSPENSION BRIDGE AND RIVER, GREAT YARMOUTH.

The escape of some was miraculous. One woman, of the name of Gillings, the wife of a carpenter, was on the bridge with her child, when she was hurled into the water. With extraordinary presence of mind she seized her child's clothes with her teeth, thus preventing the rush of water, and paddled herself to a place of safety.

The scene presented at one time was most agonising. Children, mothers, and fathers, seeking one or other of their families, tracing and discovering in the pale face of some of the dead one of their dearest ties. In every street were to be seen one or more bodies extended on biers, returning to those homes from which but some short minutes before they had passed in health and life.

The scene at the broken bridge on Saturday morning, was most distressing. Before the faintest approach of morning, a number of boatmen and others were actively engaged, endeavouring to find the bodies of the missing persons, and their efforts were, in some degree, successful.

It is generally supposed that many persons who were standing on the edge of the bridge, or on that portion allotted to foot passengers, when the accident occurred, clasped the hand rails, and were precipitated head foremost into the stream, and became entangled among the broken balustrades.

1. Suspension Bridge, scene of accident.
2. Vauxhall Gardens.
3. Railway Station.
4. Yarmouth Bridge.

Never since the devastating plague, in 1759, which swept off two thousand of its inhabitants, has Yarmouth, notwithstanding its numberless shipwrecks, been visited with so dire a calamity—a calamity occurring at the very moment a public meeting was about to be held to make arrangements for the distribution of the funds which have been received for the widows and families of the beachmen who were lost in January last.

On Saturday morning last the magistrates assembled at ten o'clock. The Mayor in the chair. There was a very full attendance of the bench. Mr.W. Cooke, the proprietor of the Circus, was in attendance.

Of course the late melancholy and calamitous event excited the utmost sympathy on the part of the bench. After a little delay Mr. Cooke said he had come to the determination of withdrawing the company from the town. The Mayor expressed his satisfaction at this announcement, as, while the Circus was open, the feelings of the relatives of the unfortunate sufferers must continue to be very much excited.

The following is the best list which has been produced of the names of the unfortunate sufferers. It was presented to the magistrates at this meeeting. Martha Yallop, 20, George-street, 11; Wm. Trory, 11; Sarah Johnson, 15, Elizabeth Johnson, 7, both of Row 23; Caroline Utting, 9, Louisa Utting, 6, Charlotte-street; Elizabeth Fulcher, 16, St. John's Head-row; Jane Cole, 16, White Horse-row; Emily Borking, 5, George-street; Phœbe Richardson, 17, Row 99, Gaol-street; Amelia Hannah Powley, White Lion opening; Wm. George Durrant, 12, Blue Anchor-row; Eliza Duffield, 10, Laughing Image-corner; Richard Powley, same place; Eliza Crowe, 12, Rainbow-corner; Ann Maria Scottow, 20; Betsey Morgan, 22, Wm. Lynes, 6, Mary Ann Jenkinson, 10, Rampant-row; Thomas Johnson, 8; William Tennant, 10, Elm-walk; John Tennant, 12, Elm-walk; Mary Ann Lake, 2, George and Dragon-row; Harriet Tann, 13; Eliza Barber, 11; Harriet Mary Little, Market-row; Clara May, 20, Elizabeth Powley, 24, Laughing Image-corner; Sarah Hunn, 14, same place; Eliza Conyers, 13; Sarah Ann Buttifant, 18, Black Horse-row; Charles Dye, Moat; William Grimmer, 8, Moat; Rachel Vincent, 20, Apollo-walk; Mary Anne King, 8, Apollo-walk; Elizabeth Manslip, 28, Laughing Image-corner; Maria Vincent, 20, Apollo-walk; Benj. Dye, 9; Maria Juniper, 9, Ferry Boat row; Caroline Church, 6, Horne-row; Susan Meers, 9, Garden-row; W. Hindle, 10; Maria Stalworthy, 14, King's Arms; Epping Thorpe, 11, Black Horse-row; Maria Edwards, 12, Garden-row; Caroline Parker, 8; Hannah Field, 8; Sarah Gilbert, 12, George and Dragon-row; Caroline Anger, 16, Charlotte-street; Horace Fox, 20, Sarah Utting, Walter Watts, — Foulcher, James Livingstone, 9, Matilda Livingstone, 6, Eliz. Hatch, 12, — Barking, — Durrant, Elizabeth Hunerable, — Burton, Robert Burton, — Moss, 26, — Trory, Daniel Ebbage, 9, the two Misses Johnson, Charlotte-street.

Up to Sunday last 113 bodies had been taken out of the river; the number will probably be 130 to 140, as many are under the bridge, as well as those who have been carried up the river.

The bridge has fallen down on the side nearest Breydon, and forms a complete barrier to the stream and navigation.

THE INQUEST.

On Saturday the Coroner held an inquest, at the Church Hall, on the bodies of Harriet Mary Little, Joseph Livingstone, and Matilda Livingstone.

After an address from the Coroner, the Jury went to view some of the bodies. A discussion then ensued as to the time and mode in which the remainder of the bodies should be viewed. Some gentlemen wished to proceed about the business at once; but it was ultimately agreed that the inquiry into the case of all the bodies, with the exception of one, should be adjourned to Monday, at ten o'clock. This was the case of the son of Mr. Bradbury, of King-street, Norwich, whose brother appeared in court and made an application for the removal of the body of the deceased. The Jury proceeded to the public house where it was lying; and, subsequently, a brief inquiry into the causes of death took place, which terminated in a verdict of "Accidental Death."

The Jury re-assembled on Monday morning, shortly after ten o'clock, at the Church-hall, and proceeded with the investigation of this melancholy affair.

After some conversation, which turned upon the subject of the respective jurisdictions of the Borough and County Coroners, the Jury proceeded to hear evidence merely for the purpose of identifying the bodies, that no obstruction might stand in the way of their burial; it being understood that three cases should be reserved on which to try the general merits of the case.

Daniel Cooper was the first witness called. He identified one of the deceased persons, named Maria Vincent. He saw her on the bridge on Friday.

Jane Grimmer identified the body of her child, William Grimmer, 8 years of age.

Elizabeth Blogg identified Charles Dye, 2 years old.

In the same manner, and by a variety of persons, the following bodies were also identified, viz.:—William Tennant, aged 11; John Tennant, aged 10; Matilda Livingstone, aged 6; James Livingstone, aged 9; Harriet Mary Little, aged 13; Caroline Augur, aged 16; Caroline Utting, aged 9; James Adams; and Ann Phœbe Richardson, 17; Richard Powley, 5; Elizabeth Powley, 21; Marianne Jenkinson, 10; Thomas Johnson, 8; and Mary Ann King, 8.

A youth, named J. B. Thorndike, identified the body of Sarah Utting, and deposed that he was on the Suspension-bridge when the accident took place. He stood in the carriage-way, and in about the centre of the bridge. He heard a cracking noise, and observed that one of the connecting links had broken, the ends of the severed link being about two inches apart. He did not apprehend any danger from what he saw. There was, however, a sudden rush to the Yarmouth shore; but several persons laughed, and then ran back to their places. To the best of his belief five or ten minutes elapsed between that time and the time when the bridge fell, when he, with others, was immersed in the water.

By the Foreman: I had been on the bridge about five minutes before I heard the crack. It was crowded with people. There were a great many persons upon it, but they were not so thick as I have seen them. I should say they were about four deep. The bridge was not half full. Sufficient time elapsed between my first observing the link break and the bridge falling for every one upon it to have gone off. I saw more persons on the bridge by a good many upon the occasion of the prisoners who were lately accused of what was called "the Yarmouth murder" returning from Norwich, after their acquittal.

The identification of the following persons was then gone through, none but the necessary questions being put to ascertain that the deceased persons were upon the bridge at the time when the accident occurred, viz., Betty Morgan, aged 62, William Lyons (6), Sarah Ann Butterfint (18), Harriett Bussey (24), Sarah Ann Hunn (14), Happy Thorpe (11), Clara May (20).

Grace Duffield identified the bodies of Elizabeth Manslip and Eliza Duffield (10). She corroborated, in nearly the same words, the evidence given by Master Thorndike, more especially with reference to the time that elapsed between hearing the bar crack and the falling of the bridge. She spoke, also, to the circumstance of herself feeling no alarm when she heard the cracking noise, and to there being sufficient time between the cracking and actual falling in for all to have escaped.

Elizabeth Brown, in identifying the body of Ann Maria Scotton, spoke in nearly similar terms, having no fear when she heard the bridge crack.

In several instances an order for burial was then given upon the parish in cases where the parents or surviving friends were themselves unable to bear the expense, after which the jury proceeded with the identification evidence.

The following were the bodies identified:—Eleanor Detcham, aged 64; Caroline Church, aged 16; James Church; Sarah Ann Susan Pake, aged 2½; Sarah Gilbert, aged 12; Susannah Elizabeth Mears, aged 8; Maria Edwards, aged 12; Hannah Field, aged 12; William Lucas, aged 12; Emily Handworth Borking, aged 5; Benjamin Pattison Burton, aged 7; David Habbage, aged 9; Jane Cole, Elizabeth Jane Hanibell, Elizabeth Hatch, George Henry John Beloe, Elizabeth Conyers, Charlotte Packer, and Martha Yallop.

The court adjourned at seven o'clock, until nine o'clock on Tuesday morning. It is understood that a full inquiry into the cause of the accident is to take place.

The jury re-assembled on Tuesday morning at the Church-hall, shortly after nine o'clock, and thence proceeded at once to view the bodies of eleven persons, whose names had been registered at the police-office.

The names of the eleven other deceased persons are:—Henry Dye, aged 9 years, Elizabeth Read (6), Mary Ann Roberts (19), Ann Beckett (8), William Walter Watts (9), Reeder Hunston Balls (16), Elizabeth Fulcher (16), Alice Gott, jun. (9), Alice Gott (51), Emily Young (6), Susannah Field (8).

The following three persons are all who have been registered and have not been found, viz.:—James S. Buck (4), Louisa Utting (7), John Funnell (19).

The jury, having completed their view of the bodies, returned to the Church-hall, and re-commenced the task of formal identification.

The whole of the eleven above-mentioned were identified, and the total number that has been viewed by the jury and formally identified, amounts to 75.

At the conclusion of this duty, a discussion took place upon the propriety of obtaining the assistance of some engineer, to enlighten the jury upon the causes of the accident.

The foreman said it was certainly a matter of necessity in the consideration of so important a case as this to ascertain in what state the bridge was at the time of the accident. He thought it was essentially necessary that some scientific gentleman should be had before them, and he had in his hand a list of questions which had been suggested to him as fit ones to be proposed to such a witness.

A juror said, that according to the mechanical rule, he believed, that every square foot of surface should bear a hundredweight, and that the suspending power was generally made exactly in that proportion. It appeared here that one-third additional surface had been added to the bridge by the platforms on each side of it, and that nothing had been added to the suspending power.

The room was then cleared of strangers; and, after another discussion amongst the jury,

The Foreman said it had been moved by Mr. Blowers and seconded by Mr. Spilling, that the Council be requested to grant them the aid of an eminent engineer to assist them in their investigation.

The Coroner requested that those who were in favour of the motion would hold up their hands.

All the jury, with the exception of three, held up their hands at once.

Mr. Simon Coble, a magistrate, expressed his readiness to bring this matter forward at the meeting of the Town Council, and he promised to give it his best support.

The Court then adjourned sine die.

ADDITIONAL INCIDENTS.

We subjoin some additional incidents of interest connected with the sad transaction, selected from the communications of correspondents at Yarmouth, and from other sources.

When it was known amongst the thousands assembled that the clown, Nelson, was approaching the landing place, those on the suspension bridge, eager to obtain a sight of him, pressed forward towards the south side of the bridge, the suspending rods of which, suddenly strained by the unequal pressure, after a minute's warning, gave way in the manner represented by our sketch, and at least 400 persons were thrown in a mass into the water; numbers were instantly snatched out by the persons in the numerous boats and wherries on the spot, but, as the tide was high, and continued to increase in depth for two hours afterwards, a large number, of course, fell a sacrifice to their temerity or ignorance. Several persons saw the irons giving way, and warned the parties of the danger, but in vain; they were too eager to see the clown, and, probably, did not believe in it, thinking it was a ruse to obtain possession of their places. In one minute the bridge fell. To describe the scene is impossible; and it will never be forgotten by any one who saw it. By eight o'clock the same evening (that is, two hours and a half afterwards) more than 70 dead had been recovered.

On Sunday night at nine o'clock (says a correspondent) I was down there, and from the most accurate inquiries I found that about a hundred and seven had been then found. I saw a young man, about eighteen, taken home, and a little girl about eight, who had been lost with her brother, about four years old, and was found with a child's cap, supposed to be his, but which parted from the body when drawn up, and the latter, owing to the darkness, was for that time lost. As some have been found from two to three miles up the river, there is no saying at present how many more may be found. Many are still missing, and there are probably others not residing or known here, who were among the victims. The sufferers are principally among the lower classes. Although no blame seems attributable to any individuals except the parties themselves, who have paid so dearly for their temerity, this appalling accident ought surely to suggest the propriety of Government interfering to prevent the occurrence of similar calamities.

A gentleman who was in a boat close to the washing tub, which contained the clown, was not aware of the accident except from the shrieks which arose from both sides of the river—"The bridge is gone!" A fearful splash occasioned by the bridge coming in contact with the water, and the gurgling cries of those who were drowning, was all the noise which could be distinguished by the bystanders.

The sufferers consist, for the most part, of young women and children. We do but recollect only two full-grown men, three old ladies above 60 years of age, forming an exception to this rule; it will be seen, however, that there are very many girls from 18 to 20, and several young married women.

The writer of this account has been in conversation with probably more than twenty individuals who were on the bridge at the time, and who have been saved, with a view to ascertain how the accident occurred, and whether any kind of intimation was given of the danger which impended. Though contradictory in some minor points, they all seem to agree that for about three or four minutes before it occurred a slight and gradual sinking was experienced; but knowing the bridge necessarily vibrated, when even a slight weight was put upon it, it excited no general alarm, and would never have been probably noticed, except from the awful catastrophe of which it turns out to be the precursor. One individual, however, was so alarmed at this, that he ran off on the Vauxhall side of the bridge, and arrived there at the very moment of its fall. Others, he says, did the same.

Never, perhaps, had any eighteen men such a painfully-distressing and truly melancholy task as devolved upon the jury. They assembled at three o'clock for the purpose of viewing the bodies of between 60 and 70 of their neighbours and fellow-townsmen—they had to traverse the dirtiest and worst constructed rows in the town, some of which had as many as four or five bodies lying in each—in the great majority of cases they were conducted up staircases of barely sufficient dimensions to enable a full-sized man to pass through, and on arriving at the summit were shown into the apartment where the body was lain forth, surrounded by relatives uttering the lamentations of distress and misery. In numerous other instances the parties were too poor to be able to occupy more than one room, and here were seen, in an incredibly small space, all huddled together, the living, the dying, and the dead; one unfortunate child, recently shrouded, and with a parish coffin beside it in one corner; another child, suffering from the bruises occasioned by the fall and in extricating her from her perilous condition, in a second; and in the centre of the apartment, the mother suckling newly born twins! In one instance this was literally true. At a house in the North Entrance, where lay the body of Wm. Grimmer, a child eight years of age, the Jury found only one apartment for a husband, wife, and family of four children, and at the time of viewing the body, two children were lingering over a fire in a very infectious stage of small-pox. Two or three other of the houses visited were found to contain several cases of the above disease in its various stages.

The jury did not finish viewing the bodies until nine o'clock in the evening, having been engaged upwards of seven hours in this heart-rending duty.

This melancholy affair will cost the borough probably not so little as £200; the Coroner has a legal claim of £1 6s. 8d. on every body identified, in addition to which, each juryman has a claim of 4d. on each; the summoning officer 2s. 6d. upon each; sums of money must also be paid for exertions in picking up each individual body.

Some sensation has been caused at Yarmouth by the production of a letter reported to be written by a young man residing in the neighbourhood of Bury, who alleges that he was amongst the persons on the bridge, and whose tale, in harrowing detail, exceeds all that perhaps was ever placed before the public. He says:—The chains on the Yarmouth side broke, and let it down only on that side remember, while the other side still hung all right. You will have an exact resemblance by letting the leaf of a table down. Not a timber or bar of the bridge broke, but it shot us all into the water. There we were—the screams were horrible—they were heard for miles. To supernatural presence of mind and a strong arm I owe my escape. I felt an iron under me, and clung to it in a death grasp. My mouth being full of salt water—for the tide was up—I raised myself on the bridge, and got my head above water. I clung up the iron and looked about me. Scarcely had I done so (I was not out of water further than my chin) than a man grasped me round the neck; his head was just above the water. I felt myself going. I drew my arm, and struck him on the face. I hit him hard, for the skin is off my knuckles. A woman next seized me; I was forced to strike her, and her blood spirted from her nose all over my face, and dimmed my eyes. I was the only one above water, but the bridge gave another move; I was under. I rose again, but folks were under the water clinging to me. The case was now desperate. I felt my pocket, and, holding by one hand I opened my knife with the other, and cut all down my legs, but could not make them leave go. My knife and hands were covered with blood. A woman seized my waistcoat; she was young and really handsome, a tradesman's daughter. I did not like to strike her, but necessity was imperative. I hit her; she rolled over and was drowned. Never shall I forget her look at me; it seemed to say, "You murdered me." I once more used my knife about a man, and jumped to a boat and was pulled in, with two girls clinging to me, and got safe on shore. The presence of mind that supported me during this trial instantly deserted me, and I was carried to the next public-house. I drank some brandy and walked home, with my hands and face covered with blood. I went to bed and dreamt of it. I thought the woman whom I last struck came and reproached me for murdering her." This extraordinary statement appeared in one of the local papers.

It is in contemplation to build a stone bridge with two arches over the river at the spot where the accident occurred, and another bridge is also spoken of on the site of the Old Yarmouth Bridge, which is at present a most miserable structure.

The suspension bridge was erected by the late Robert Cory, Esq., in lieu of the ancient ferry across the Bure, of which he was possessed, and was opened on the 23rd of April, 1829, and suspended from a chain on either side, attached to four pedestals or peers, also of iron, and fastened to abutment stones.

A fatality seems to attend Cooke's Equestrian Circus. A few years since Mr. Cooke, sen., lost his valuable horses, theatrical properties, &c., by fire, in the United States, and subsequently experienced a disastrous loss in Ireland. In the early part of the present year, the circus belonging to Mr. W. Cooke was torn down by a violent gust of wind, just before the performance, at Hackney, by which Mrs. Isbister and her nephew lost their lives, and many visitors narrowly escaped serious injury.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

A CHILD MURDERED BY A SERVANT GIRL.

On Sunday morning, about ten o'clock, Martha Brixey, a girl of about 18 years of age, murdered the son of Mr. J. D. Ffinch, a solicitor of Greenwich, under the following frightful circumstances. The girl, who is under nurserymaid in Mr. Ffinch's family, went into the kitchen shortly before ten o'clock, and asked the cook for a knife, and said she wanted to cut a pencil for Mary, who was up stairs in the nursery. The cook gave her an ivory-handled table knife, but remarked that a smaller one would do better for the purpose. She said no, that would do, as she could use it for cuting the bread and butter at tea in the afternoon, and immediately proceeded up stairs. In a few minutes afterwards she came down stairs again, and, opening the parlour door, told her master and mistress that she had killed the baby. Mrs. Ffinch, in a state of indescribable astonishment, asked what the wretched girl said; and was in the act of rushing up stairs to the nursery, but was stayed by her husband and Mr. Traill, the Union-hall police magistrate, who was paying the family a morning visit. She presented an unusual and distracted appearance, and immediately exclaimed, "What have I done? What have I done?" many times over—and again; "What will become of me? what will become of me? I am a murderer, I have killed the baby." On Mr. Ffinch and some of his family going up stairs, his infant son was discovered lying on the bed with his head severed from his body. On this fact being made known, the whole of the family became horror struck.

At the inquest on the child, which was held on Monday, the following evidence was given by Sarah May, upper nurse in the family of deceased's father. She deposed that she had been two years in Mr. Ffinch's family. The deceased was nine months old. The prisoner, Martha Brixey, was under nurse. Witness saw the infant last at a quarter before ten on Sunday morning. She put him into his cot, and left him sleeping at that time. The prisoner was in the next room. Five minutes before she left the nursery, the prisoner said, "Do you think Mrs. Ffinch will forgive me; will she let me stop?" Witness replied no; Mrs. F. had candidly told her she would not. She then advised the prisoner to be quiet, as it would be much better for her. She had been worrying her mistress on Saturday, begging her to forgive her, and let her remain. Mrs. Ffinch had said no positively. She had seen a person that would suit, and could retain her services no longer. To all this the prisoner made no answer. On Sunday morning at breakfast the prisoner said she wondered if Mrs. F. had seen the new maid. Witness remarked that she would call on Monday. This conversation took place while making the beds. Witness then left the room, went down to the kitchen, taking one of the younger children with her. She there left the children with the cook and housemaid, and went into the back yard, and while there she heard loud screams. She immediately ran into the house, and went up into the nursery, from whence the cries came. All the children were crying very much, and Mrs. Ffinch was in a frantic state. Mr. Ffinch was preventing the prisoner from going up stairs. The cook had gone up stairs. Mr. Traill and Mrs. Ffinch were below in the hall. Witness found the child lying on its back, and the head nearly off. She had left it lying asleep on its side. On looking round she saw an ivory-handled table knife covered with blood. The children were at this time all below crying in the hall. About seven minutes elapsed during all this. The knife used was much sharper than others. The prisoner had always behaved very well towards the children. The prisoner had behaved very strangely about a gown (mourning) which her mistress had given her, and she was going to leave partly on that account about three weeks ago. She complained much about the dress not fitting her. She subsequently cut the body from the skirt in the nursery, and burnt it. Witness told her she ought to be ashamed of herself, and that she would tell Mrs. Ffinch on her return home. The prisoner was in a great passion when she burnt the body of her dress, but became quiet afterwards, and seemed satisfied with what she had done. Witness repeatedly advised her not to burn it, as it fitted her. She was most determined, and said she wished the dressmaker had been at the devil before she had made the gown.

Some corroborative testimony was given. The girl, who was present, being questioned by the Coroner, told him she had nothing to say. The jury returned a verdict of wilful murder against Martha Brixey, who was committed to Newgate.—She is of very genteel, but slight stature, and looked very pale.

SUICIDE ON SOUTHWARK-BRIDGE.—On Wednesday evening a respectably-dressed man, about sixty years of age, committed suicide on Southwark-bridge, by shooting himself with a pistol. It appears the unfortunate man paid the toll, and had not walked many yards before the report was heard. On hastening to the spot, the toll-keeper found him deluged in blood. Mr. May, a surgeon in the neighbourhood, was soon in attendance, who rendered all the assistance in his power. He was conveyed to the hospital in a most dreadful condition. No hopes are entertained of his recovery.

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE WOOD PAVEMENT.—On Tuesday evening, Mr Bedford held an inquest in Duke-street, Adelphi, on the body of George Hurst. From the evidence it appeared that the deceased was driving one of Hansom's cabs between six and seven o'clock, on Friday evening, last week, along the wood pavement in the Strand, near Agar-street, when his horse slipped, and he was pitched from his seat over the cab and horse's head. He instantly recovered himself, and got up, and in answer to questions put to him by Mr. Thornwood, the stockbroker, who was in the cab, he said, "All right, sir, I am not hurt." He then was engaged raising the horse, when the animal struck him in the breast with his head, and threw him on his back, at the moment that the Windsor coach drove up. The deceased fell between the horse's feet and the fore wheels of the latter. He was instantly carried to the hospital, where he died at two o'clock on the following day. On a post mortem examination, it was understood that his left arm and three ribs of his right side had been broken, and that his liver was ruptured. All the witnesses attributed the accident to the bad state of the wood pavement. The Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death," accompanied with the desire that the attention of the authorities should be directed to the dangerous condition of the wood pavement in that locality.

THE THEATRES.

The present week has been a lull in the theatrical world; and the play-going public have either been content with the established performances, or feasted upon the anticipation of Whitsun novelties.

HER MAJESTY'S.

The great event of the present week's performances has been the return of Fanny Cerito, fuller of health and spirits, more animated, and more buoyant than ever. On welcoming her back to England, after seven months' absence, and the introduction of another favourite in the ballet, we cannot but observe how entirely different a character her dancing bears to that of all her competitors. With Cerito graceful and animated motion seems the natural result of overflowing exuberance of spirits; no effort is visible in the marvellous feats which, executed by her, lose their power of astonishing, while they gain an additional one of pleasing. To this peculiar charm of Cerito's dancing she has added this year a degree of refined and poetical conception hitherto unknown to her, and the warmth of the plaudits bestowed on her new steps testified to the improvement of what many of her admirers doubtless already imagined to be perfect. In the "Vivandière," with her gay costume, her arch look, and her characteristic and spirited pas; and in the poetical "Ondine," she equally vindicated the justice of the enthusiastic welcome that she received. Saint Leon came in for even a larger share than last year of the applause so warmly lavished on his fair bride—a triumph to him enhanced by the fact that the days of Vestris, and the admiring crowds who flocked to witness and applaud his feats, are passed, and that the Dieu de la danse himself would very likely, in these days, be looked upon as a somewhat absurd combination of affectation and physical effort. St. Leon, however, escapes the unpopularity into which male dancers are fallen, and the theatre has, at each of his wonderful steps, resounded with applause, in which we have been compelled in justice to join, though somewhat in contradiction to our individual taste; for, to our eyes, the graceful Perrot himself gained greatly by the accident which last year and the year before debarred him from the pirouettes and sauts perilleux, in which every male dancer rejoices, and brought forth that display of intellectual pantomimic art which so highly distinguishes him.

Of the ballets performed, we have little to say; for every one has seen and admired "Ondine," and those who have seen it once, are certain to desire to see it again. The same may be said of the "Vivandière," which, however, is, we think, protracted disadvantageously to the plot, to rather an unreasonable length for a divertissement, by the numerous extraneous dances introduced. The novelty of the little Viennoises has been the pas de Miroirs—of charming and peculiar effect, and executed marvellously; it being hardly possible not to believe in the reality of the mimic mirror at the back of the stage, and not to disbelieve the real existence of the little beings who, being placed behind, reflect the motions of their elder sisters with such wonderful precision. Showers of sugar-plums and bouquets on Saturday night, created a general scramble, as usual, and the amusing effect of this scene was heightened by the laughing chorus of all the children in the boxes.

If we have given this week an unjust predominance to the ballet, it is not that the general performances did not merit an important place in our record, but that "I Puritani," "Ernani," and "Don Giovanni"—the operas of the past week—though of such different dates, are all established favourites of the English public, and known to every opera frequenter. "I Puritani," still charming as ever, the opera the most universally popular in both Europe and America, and presenting the four great artists—Grisi, Lablache, Mario, and Fornasari—was not received with the degree of applause bestowed on "Ernani," an opera in which the music is of so far more serious and scientific a cast, but whose massive, harmonious, and splendid concerted pieces are listened to and encored with increasing enthusiasm each night of their performance. To a real fanatico per la musica, however, the dances, charming as they are, interpolated between each act of the opera, somewhat break its thread, and destroy its unity. Last, not least, "Don Giovanni," that wonderful creation of Mozart, with a cast including (with the exception of Moriani) all the great stars of her Majesty's Theatre, was performed on Thursday, but deserves a longer notice than pressure of time, and matter, would allow us to bestow on it this week.

At DRURY-LANE there has been a succession of benefits, with revivals pour à servir, "intermediate" concerts, and performances too various to enumerate, the most attractive being for the benefit of Miss Romer, on Thursday night, when Mons. Duprez sang in three operas! The Whitsun novelty here will be Balfe's new opera of "The Enchantress," with Madame Anna Thillon.

At the HAYMARKET the new comedy of "Time Works Wonders" has drawn crowded houses throughout the week—the play has already been reprinted.

The LYCEUM has been moderately well attended; but the little comedy lately produced here is somewhat too slight for a first piece. The Whitsun novelty will be a romantic burlesque of "Cinderella."

At the ADELPHI, the benefit bills have filled the house. On Thursday, the revival of "Paul Pry," with Wright as the hero; and "The Pretty Girls of Stilberg," with Webster's Napoleon, drew "an immense overflow."

At the PRINCESS', Mr. Kenny's five-act play of "Infatuation," has been repeated with advantage; Miss Cushman has continued to gather fresh laurels on each additional performance. A farce, entitled "Love in Livery," the only novelty of the week, is too trifling for further notice.

The FRENCH PLAYS have been again honoured by the presence of her Majesty and Prince Albert; and the Royal pair have been greatly amused with the quaint and comic peculiarities of Ravel. On the "off nights," Mons. Phillippe has repeated his Soirées Mysterieuses; his performances out-Dobler Dobler.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

SIR HENRY BISHOP has resigned his baton at the Philharmonic, and Mr. Moschelles has been appointed in his room, to conduct the remaining Concerts. Of a verity, "A house divided against itself cannot stand."—What a pity that society should be made up of the elements of discord.

THE votaries of the ballet will flock to Her Majesty's Theatre on Thursday next, to pay their homage to the most refined and graceful of dancers, Mdlle. Lucile Grahn; while the lovers of music will find all that can charm the ear, and arrest the imagination. For this night—the benefit of Mdlle. Grahn—"La Gazza Ladra," Rossini's beautiful opera, with its former unrivalled caste, and the addition of Mdlle. Brambilla as Pippo; the fair beneficiaire in her contrasting dances of the "Mazurka d' Extasé" and the "Cracovienne;" the "Bal sous Louis XIV," combining the two unrivalled dancers—Grahn and Cerito, the latter appearing also in her charming "Pas de L'Ombre," make up the sum of the evening's entertainments.

THE Beethoven Inauguration is to take place at Bonn, towards the end of July. Several thousands of musicians from all parts of Europe are expected to be present, and there will be a festival continued for several days.

MR. GRATTAN COOKE will give a soirée musicale at the Hanover-square Rooms, on the evening of the 13th inst., at which several distinguished artistes will appear; and Mr. Cooke will sing, in addition to his unrivalled performance on the oboe.

MR. BALFE.—This popular composer has arrived from Paris, to superintend the rehearsals of his new opera, "The Enchantress," which is announced for first representation on Monday next. The celebrated vocalist, Madame Anna Thillon, has also arrived; and if her agile, clear, and extensive voice succeed in filling the vast space of Drury as it did the Princess', we must make up our minds for a treat of no ordinary interest. The on dit is that Balfe's music is extremely melodious and captivating. What will it not be when in the hands of the graceful Thillon!

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE.—Since our last report, the arrivals of wheat of home produce up to our market, coastwise as well as by land carriage and sample, have been on a moderate scale; hence the stands here have been poorly filled with parcels. The attendance of both town and country dealers having been small, the demand for all descriptions of English wheat must be called dull, at prices barely equal to those quoted in our last report. Foreign wheat—the show of which has been small—has ruled heavy, yet the currencies are mostly supported. Barley and malt—owing to the malting season having been brought to a close—have sold slowly, and the quotations have, in some instances, had a downward tendency. Oats, beans, and peas are selling freely, at very full prices; indeed, in some instances, the latter are held for more money.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 46s to 48s; ditto, white, 46s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s to 52s, ditto, white, 52s to 57s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distilling, 26s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 56s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s, potatoe ditto, 23s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 33s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Town made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk, Stockton, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 28 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 38s to 43s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 24s; oats, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s; beans, 24s to 29s; peas, 28s to 32s, per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to —; Baltic, 18s to —, per barrel.

The Seed Market.—We have not the slightest alteration to notice in the value of any kind of seeds, the demand for which is in a sluggish state:—Linseed English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 45s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 44s. Hempseed 35s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 18s per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 12s to 14s. Tares, 6s 6d to 7s 6d per bushel. English Rapeseed, £24 to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s; ditto foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover seed, red, 45s to 50s: extra, 52s to 56s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s white, 60s to 62s; extra, 70s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5d to 6d, per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 46s 0d; barley, 31s 2d; oats, 21s 4d; rye, 29s 9d; beans, 36s 1d; peas, 36s 10d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 46s 1d; barley, 31s 11d; oats, 21s 2d; rye, 30s 4d; beans, 35s 4d; peas, 35s 11d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 7s; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 7s 6d; peas, 7s 6d.

Tea.—A good demand continues to be experienced for both black and green teas, at fully previous rates. Common Congou is selling at 9d to 9¼d; good common, 10d to 10½d; Twankay, ordinary, 1s 2d to 1s 2½d; and Hyson, low to fine, 2s 4d to 3s 6d per lb. The deliveries are good, but upwards of 3,000,000 lb. have been imported since our last. The stock in London is now 29,362,000 lb., against 27,431,000 lb. at the same time in 1844.

Sugar.—Both grocers and refiners being now well in stock, all kinds of raw sugar have met a very dull inquiry this week, at barely stationary prices. Refined goods are in slow request, at 1s per cwt less money. Standard lumps are selling at 67s to 68s 6d; and brown ditto, 56s to 66s 6d per cwt. Very large quantities are being received almost daily from our colonies, while the stocks in warehouse are unusually large.

Coffee.—In Ceylon a good business has been doing, at 45s to 45s 6d for good ordinary, being an advance of 6d to 1s per cwt. All other kinds of coffee have gone off slowly, at late rates.

Cinnamon.—The quarterly sales have been brought to a conclusion. About 3000 chests have sold, at a decline of 1d to 3d per lb.

Rice.—Bengal is in good request, at very full prices, while the value of other parcels is steadily supported.

Provisions.—The stock of Irish butter is now only 596 firkins; while so little is doing in the article, that prices may be considered almost nominal. Arrivals of new butters are shortly expected, when the quotations will be established. A few contracts, for forward delivery, have been made, at 80s for Limerick and Cork; and 80s to 82s for the best Waterford. The supplies of foreign butter being larger, that article is heavy, on easier terms; the best Friesland being worth only 88s per cwt. A good business has been doing in bacon, at previous rates. Irish hams and lard are steady, but most other kinds of provisions are a slow inquiry.

Tallow.—For Russian we have a better demand, at very full prices, 38s 3d to 38s 6d having been paid for forward delivery. On the spot P.Y.C. is selling, at 38s to 38s 3d per cwt. Town tallow is 38s to 39s, net cash.

Oils.—Although a fair business has been doing in most descriptions of oil since our last prices may be considered about stationary.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 12s to £4 15s; useful do, £4 16s to £5 8s; fine upland do, £5 10s to £5 16s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6 6s; oat straw, £2 to £2 2s; wheat straw £2 3s to £2 4s per load.

Coals.—Adair's, 15s; Carr's Hartley, 17s; Holywell Main, 16s; Old Pontop, 13s 6d; Tanfield Moor, 17s 6d; Townley, 15s; Killingworth, 15s; Newmarco, 15s 6d; per ton.

Hops.—Although the Plantation accounts are by no means favourable, the demand for nearly all kinds of hops is inactive at late rates.

Wool.—The Public Sales commence on the 13th inst. About 9000 bales will be offered. Privately, a good business is doing in English wools, at full prices, but foreign and Colonial qualities are heavy.

Potatoes.—The supplies of potatoes continuing very extensive, the demand for them is heavy, at barely late rates—viz., from 35s to 80s per ton.

Smithfield.—We have had a very active demand for all kinds of stock since our last, and the quotations have further advanced from 2d to 4d per 8lb. Beef, from 2s 10d to 4s 2d; mutton, 3s 4d to 5s 0d; lamb, 5s 4d to 6s 4d; veal, 4s 0d to 5s 0d; and pork, 3s 0d to 4s 0d per 8lb, to sink the offal.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—For each kind of meat the demand continues very active, on the following terms:—Beef, from 2s 10d to 3s 8d; mutton, 3s 4d to 5s 0d; lamb, 5s 4d to 6s 4d; veal, 4s 0d to 4s 10d; and pork, 3s 0d to 4s 0d, per 8lb. by the carcase. ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English Market has been very flat during the week, and several large sales of Stock for money have, coupled with the speculative transactions for the fall, caused a decline of nearly ½ per cent. upon last week's prices. Consols, on Monday, quoted 98⅝ ⅜, for money and time, but, on Wednesday, receded to 98⅜. This price has been slightly improved on since, and the last quotation is 98½, for money, and 98⅝ for account. The Three per Cents. Reduced, and New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents., close very heavily. The final quotation of Reduced is 97¼; Three-and a-Quarter per Cents., 100¼. Exchequer Bills are also declining, closing at 54 to 56. Long Annuities are 11 5-16; and Bank Stock, 209¼ to 210¼.

The only occurrence of interest in the foreign house, has been the fluctuation in Mexican Stock. The news received by the mail on Tuesday, appearing to hold out a prospect, that the cause of Santa Anna was not yet considered hopeless by his party, caused an immense decline in the price of the Active Bonds. In addition to this probability of a recurrence of civil war, the amount of the remittance on account of the over-due dividend, was unusually small. The price receded to 36¾ during the day, ultimately closing at 37 to ¼. The other Stocks were also flat. Spanish Five per Cents. have ranged between 30⅜ and 30½, the closing price. The Three per Cents. have been, and continue, at 41⅜, although heavy at that price. Passives have suddenly advanced to 8. Upon reference to the City article of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, a few weeks since, the probability of this fact will be found to have been alluded to. Portuguese are 66¼; Dutch Two-and a-Half per Cents. are 63⅜; Four per Cent. Certificates, 97¾.

The Railway Market has been very flat during the week, in consequence of continued sales. If a rise occurs, it is immediately met by sales left on limits, in the hands of the brokers, and a decline to the former quotation is, of course, the result. It must be confessed, however, that why this reaction should have occurred so early, is scarcely understood. But, happening as it does, much of the disastrous effect that would have resulted from a postponement will now be probably averted, and the tone of the market the more readily improve. Much anxiety begins to be felt with regard to the concessions of the French lines, and some doubt has been expressed as to whether the Great Northern of France will be adjusted on this session. Caledonians, London and York, and Orleans and Bordeaux, are the only lines improved towards the close of the week. Dublin and Galway have been done at 3 premium, but close at 1¼. Aberdeens are 3⅜; Armagh, Coleraine, and Portrush, 2¾; Birmingham and Gloucester, 136; Birmingham and Oxford, 3¾; Bristol and Exeter 81½; Caledonians, 10⅜; Chester and Holyhead, 15⅜; Churnet Valley, 6; Coventry and Leicester, 2; Cornwall, 5; Dublin and Belfast Junction, 10; Direct Northern, 2¼; Dublin and Mullingar, 4¾; Eastern Counties, 19; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 64½; Great Western, 184; Hull and Selby, 105; Birmingham, Stock, 235; Blackwalls, 8⅞; Brighton, 62¼; Croydons, 18; London and York, 4⅝; Newcastle and Darlington, 49½; Newcastle and Berwick, 13¾; Newry and Enniskillen, 4⅜; Newark and Sheffield, 4; North British, 17¾; Nottingham and Mansfield, 2½; North Kent, 4¾; Rugbys, 4; Scottish Central, 6¾; Scottish Midland, 3¾; Shrewsbury, &c., 4¼; South Wales, 5; Dovers, 39⅜: Trent Valley Continuation, 2¼; West Yorkshire, 8¼; Boulogne and Amiens, 9¾; Bordeaux and Toulouse, 2½; Great Northern of France, 5⅜; Ditto Rosamel's, 2¼; Namur and Liege, 5; Orleans and Bordeaux, 10; Over Yssell, ⅝, prem.; Paris and Lyons (Lafitte's), 2¾; Ditto (Ganneron's), 2¼; Paris and Orleans, 46¼; Sambre and Meuse, 9¾; Tours and Nantes (Mackenzie's), 3.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

FRIDAY, MAY 2.

BANKRUPTS.—J. H. HENSMAN and F. HENSMAN, Adelphi-wharf, Strand, coal-merchants. E. SLATER, Queen's-buildings, Brompton, cabinet-maker. W. C. TUPPER, Catherington, Hampshire, grocer. L. LEPLASTRIER, Alfred-street, River-terrace, Islington, clock and watch maker. J. E. SMIRK, Wrekin Tavern, Broad-court, Bow-street, Covent-garden, licensed victualler. B. CHANDLER, Stanmore, ironmonger. H. NICHOLS, late of Coleford, Gloucestershire, auctioneer. J. LEE, Tadcaster, Yorkshire, porter-merchant. T. OLIVER, Prestbury, near Cheltenham, livery stable-keeper. T. R. KNOTT, Bolton-le-Moors, Lancashire, druggist. J. COOKE, Wem, Shropshire, brewer. T. CAPAS, Birmingham, builder. H. PARES, Loughborough, Leicestershire, plumber. J. HEATON, Ludlow, Shropshire, stationer. T. HODGHKISS, Wellington, Shropshire, victualler. H. WARR, Bridport, Dorsetshire, currier.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATION.—A. CONNELL and Co., Glasgow, commission-merchants.

TUESDAY, MAY 6.

DOWNING-STREET, May 3.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint William Ferguson, Esq., to be Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief in and over the colony of Sierra Leone and its dependencies.

FOREIGN OFFICE, May 3.—The Queen has been graciously pleased to appoint Abraham Carlton Cumberbatch, Esq., now British Vice-Consul at Constantinople, to be her Majesty's Consul-General at Constantinople. The Queen has also been graciously pleased to appoint Charles Duncan Wake, Esq., now British Vice-Consul at Copenhagen, to be her Majesty's Consul at Charleston.

WHITEHALL, May 3.—The Queen has been pleased to constitute and appoint the most Hon. John Marquis of Bute, K.T., to be her Majesty's High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

WHITEHALL, May 5.—The Queen has been pleased to constitute and appoint the Rev. Samuel Wilberforce, Doctor in Divinity, to be Dean of the collegiate church of Saint Peter, Westminster, void by the promotion of Doctor Thomas Turton, late Dean thereof, to the Bishopric of Ely.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.

CROWN OFFICE, May 6.—Borough of Woodstock.—John Henry Loftus, Esq., commonly called Viscount Loftus, in the room of John Winston Spencer Churchill, commonly called Marquis of Blandford, who has accepted the office of Steward of her Majesty's Chiltern Hundreds.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, APRIL 16.—Royal Regiment of Artillery: Captain and Brevet Major Joseph Hanwell to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Walcott; Second Captain Thomas Ackers Shone to be Captain, vice Hanwell; First Lieutenant William Henderson to be Second Captain, vice Shone; Second Lieutenant Paul Winsloe Phillips to be First Lieutenant, vice Henderson; Second Captain James Turner to be Captain, vice Stokes; First Lieutenant Charles John Torrens to be Second Captain, vice Turner; Second Lieutenant Edward Moubray to be First Lieutenant, vice Torrens.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, May 5.—Erratum in the Gazette of the 29th ultimo.—Royal Regiment of Artillery: For Captain Trevor, retired on full pay, read, "Captain Trevor, retired on half pay."

BANKRUPTS.—W. THURNELL, Leadenhall-street, and Great Windmill-street, Coventry-street, Piccadilly, upholsterer. G. WARRINER, Lloyd's Coffee-house, Royal Exchange, victualler. R. ROBINSON, King William-street, Strand, wholesale spirit-merchant. J. BATT and T. BATT, Old Broad-street, silkmen. E. S. DARVELL, Great Tower-street, colonial grocer. D. CEASER, Woolwich, victualler. W. J. TAYLOR, High-street, Camden-town, grocer. R. CROSS, Hythe, Colchester, corn-merchant. W. MEESON, Aston, Staffordshire, innkeeper. W. START, Sneinton, Nottingham, lace-maker. H. BENT, Brierley-hill, Staffordshire, chain-maker. J. HAIGH, Almondbury, Yorkshire, clothier. J. W. NEWTON and F. J. NEWTON, Rotherham, Yorkshire, spirit and porter merchants and druggists. C. HALL, Sheffield, grocer and tea-dealer. J. BROWN and A. URQUHART, Manchester, carpet-warehousemen and stuff-dealers. M. HUMPHRIES, Holme, Lancashire, joiner and builder. G. LAWRIE, Fleetwood-upon-Wyre, Lancashire, chemist and druggist. M. COX, Weymouth and Melcombe Regis, ironmonger. T. FORSYTH, Dinsdale Spa Hotel, Durham, hotel-keeper and farmer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. DAVIDSON, Aberdeen, painter and glazier. A. M'ARTHUR, jun., Tarbert, Argyleshire, merchant.

BIRTHS.

At Hyde-park-gardens, the Hon. Mrs. Arthur Kinnaird, of a daughter.——At High-street, Shoreditch, Mrs. Edward Deane, of a daughter.——Lady Charles Wellesley, of a son.——At Gibraltar, the Lady of Lieutenant-Colonel Brown, Royal Regiment, of a daughter.——At Kensington, the wife of the Rev. D. F. Morgan, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

At Stanground, Hunts, the Rev. John Mills, to Emma, eldest daughter of the Rev. William Strong, of Stanground, one of her Majesty's chaplains in ordinary.——At Bryanston-square, Richard Musgrave, Esq., eldest son of Sir Richard Musgrave, Bart., to Frances Mary, daughter of John Ashton Yates, Esq.——At Paddington, William H. Harrison, Esq., to Harriett Mary, second daughter of the late Henry Hurle, Esq.——At Llanlivery, Colman Rashleigh, Esq., only son of Sir John Colman Rashleigh, Bart., to Mary Anne Kendall, only daughter of Nicholas Kendal, Esq.——At Clifton, Captain Chichester, 16th Regiment, to Anna Maria Frances, relict of the late J. Crooke Freeman, Esq.——At Holmwood, Surrey, William Godfrey Whatman, Esq., to Emma Jane, younger daughter of Mr. Sergeant Heath.——At Paddington, the Rev. Alleyne Higgs Barker, M.A., rector of Wouldham, Kent, to Marianna, second daughter of the late Hieronimus Burmister, Esq.——At Manchester, William Bradshaw, Esq., of Levenshulme, to Charlotte Ellen, youngest daughter of the late George Dixon, Esq., of Higher Ardwick, formerly of Haliax.

DEATHS.

At Itchingfield Rectory, Horsham, the Rev. Edward Elms.——At Woolwich, Sarah, the wife of Bernard O'Neill, Esq., Deputy Ordnance Storekeeper.——At St. Helena, William Stewart Bell, Esq.——Edward Turner, Esq., late of Warrington, aged 72.——At Bath, Elizabeth, wife of Lieutenant-Colonel Kaye.——In Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, Captain Blanckley, R.N.——At Clapham-road-place, Mrs. Adron, widow of the late Samuel Adron, Esq., of Watford, Herts.——At Brompton, Kent, Mrs. Lock, wife of M. Lock, Esq.——The Rev Edward Covey, M.A., St. James's Parsonage, Ratcliff.——At Government-house, Barrackpore, near Calcutta, John Edwardes Lyall, Esq., Advocate-General of Bengal.——At Cork, James Willes, Esq., M.D., aged 69.——At Milton-on-Thames, Elizabeth Rebecca, the wife of Lieutenant Lardner Dennys, R.N.——At Steeple Aston, near Woodstock, Thomas Mitchell, Esq., M.A., late Fellow of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge

TISSINGTON WELL-DRESSING IN 1845.

Tissington is a village in Derbyshire, and only a very little way from the most beautiful of English valleys—Dovedale.

Tissington is the residence of Sir Henry Fitzherbert, Bart. The family mansion is of stone, the front entirely covered with ivy. The church, shadowed by sycamore of magnificent growth, is dedicated to St. Mary, and contains monuments of the family for several centuries; the oldest dates, however, are annexed to three coats of arms of deceased members of the house, dated 1472, 1535, 1515.

The village consists of a mansion, a church, a school, and scattered houses, very few of which can be seen at a time, as the ground is considerably varied, and fine trees close in the view everywhere. The approach to it, from the Ashborne and Buxton road, is through an avenue of limes; and there is a way out to Alstonfield, and another to Matlock Bath. There is no inn, but there are several in the immediate neighbourhood; the Izaak Walton Hotel, for Dovedale visitors, and fishermen, and tourists; and other near scenes and streams of public resort. It is four miles from Ashborne, ten from Matlock, and not twice that distance from either Chatsworth or Buxton.

This shady village is watered with five springs, which, on one particular day in each year, Holy Thursday, are decorated with flowers. It is not known when the custom commenced; but old men remember gathering flowers for the decoration when they were children, and the people now consider it a festival, and devote the two previous days to prepare for it.

During the life of Sir William Fitzherbert, the Well-dressing was discontinued on account of the disorderly conduct of the people from a distance; but after his death it was revived in the following manner.

During the minority of the present baronet, the house was occupied by Mrs. Mills; and the gardener at the Hall, John Marsh, an old servant of the Tissington family, and father of the present gardener, put up a hatchment over the Hall-well, which remained there during the day.

On a subsequent year, an old woman, Mary Twigg, wrote the following lines, and hung them up among field-flowers and garlands of the Town-well:—

This well is not adorned as it had used to be,
Yet 'tis the finest spring, as you may plainly see;
It's not adorned with Pride, or any garden flowers,
But what the field affords, we think, is surely ours.

From this time, which is upwards of forty years since, the Well-dressing has been continued every year.

May 16th, 1844.—There was no rain during six weeks before this festival; the Dovedale Hills, Bunster, and Thorpe Cloud, were scorched on their sunny sides, and springs were low everywhere; but the Tissington Wells flowed as they were wont to flow. There were plenty of flowers for this occasion; and on Tuesday and Wednesday the villagers were actively engaged in preparing for the decoration, in buildings contiguous to their respective wells; for the wells are in different parts of the village, and are distinguished by name—the Hall-well, because it is near the Hall; Hand's-well, because it is near the house of a farmer of that name; the Coffin-well, because it is thought to resemble a coffin in shape; the Town-well, and Miss Goodwin's-well. The people engaged in the adornment of each, are those who enjoy the bounty of the well nearest to their dwellings, and they try in the most friendly manner to produce the best ornament for the situation.

The decoration consists of a fanciful pattern formed of various flowers, inserted in moist clay, upon boards, which, when put together, form the figure represented in the sketches.

It is natural that they should inquire of strangers which is the best? But it were invidious to draw a comparison where all are so good; one may have the advantage of situation, and on this account a preference may be given to it, which a favourable disposition of the objects around may afford; while another, equally beautiful, may not be seen to so much advantage:—it was so. The brilliant head of Miss Goodwin's Well-dressing was seen against a dark yew, but the Coffin-well, which was very beautiful, wanted relief. The clearest was Hand's-well; and the devices of the Town-well and the Hall-well were agreeably adapted to the purpose; and it must be mentioned that all this prettiness of design and accuracy of detail is performed by the inhabitants of a retired village, most of whom are in humble situations of life, without any extraneous help.

At an early hour in the morning, a few booths with refreshments were permitted to be placed upon the Green, near the church-yard. About ten o'clock several carriages had arrived, and there were, beside, many respectable people in the place. At eleven o'clock divine service was performed in the church, the prayers for the day were read by the Rev. Alleyne Fitzherbert, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Day, of Calton, from the 6th verse of the 84th Psalm—"Who going through the vale of misery use it for a well; and the pools are filled with water." From the church, the congregation moved to the Hall-well, where the Rev. A. Fitzherbert read the 8th Psalm; some verses, composed for the occasion, were then sung, accompanied by music.

The beauty of the day, the richness of the scene, the respectability of the company assembled at the well, and the subdued tone of the music will long be remembered.

The company then proceeded to Hand's-well, where the 15th Psalm was read, and other verses were sung.

The Coffin-well was next visited, and the 21st Psalm was read, and the following verses sung:—

Our smiling vales and beauteous hills,
Our verdant fields and healthful rills,
Inspire the song, invite the praise,
Which to Creation's Lord we raise.

Pure as these waters leave their bed,
Thy love o'er all the earth is spread;
And free as through the plains they roll,
Thy gifts descend to cheer the soul.

Our fathers, sleeping 'neath the sod,
Here raised the anthem to their God;
Their voices from the earth have pass'd—
But, still unchanged, Thy mercies last.

Great Source of Good! Thy grace impart,
With gratitude to warm each heart,
That still these peaceful vales may sound
His praise, who makes their joys abound!

The Epistle for the day was read at the Town-well, and the following verses told with as much effect as those which had been sung before:—

Sov'reign of all, omnipotent, supreme,
Whose glory wakes the universe to praise;
Whose goodness flows in one perpetual stream,
To bless our race—Thine is the song we raise:
Boundless thy love, O, Father, as thy might,
And all thy creatures live beneath Thy sight.

Around us spread Thy works, Great Source of Good—
In all thy various forms, Thy mercies shine;
We trace Thy gifts in mountain, vale, and wood,
And all the harvests of our field are thine:
Thine are these streams in flowery beds that rise,
Thine all the beauteous scene that round us lies.

God of our lives! accept our humble strains,
For streams of gladness which thy love supplies!
And, as each vernal season girds our plains,
And bids this day of festal joy arise;
O grant, that to Thy truth our souls may be
More fit for Heav'n, and nearer still to Thee!

The clergy and the congregation now proceeded to the fifth well, where the Gospel was read by the Rev. Mr. Day; and when the old version of the 100th Psalm had been sung, the company separated, and the various houses in the village entertained their friends as on former occasions. In the evening, the booths were all removed, but the decorations of the wells were allowed to remain till the Monday following, to gratify the curiosity of any who might wish to see them.

The Well-dressing this year (1845) was very like the last: the devices were inlaid upon the frames of the preceding year; the Coffin-well, however, was not dressed, on account of illness in the house adjoining the well. The day was fine, and the company numerous and respectable.

TISSINGTON WELL-DRESSING IN 1845.

MISS GOODWIN'S WELL.

The service in the church was performed by the Rev. Mr. Arkwright, who read the prayers; and the Rev. Alleyne Fitzherbert, who preached from the 12th and 13th verses of the 19th chapter of St. Luke. The Procession moved from the church to the Hall-well, where the 8th Psalm was read, and a portion of the Benedicite was sung, accompanied by music: at Hand's-well the 15th Psalm and a Hymn were performed; at the Town-well, the 21st Psalm and a hymn; and at Miss Goodwin's Well the Epistle and Gospel for the day were read; and the ceremony concluded with the Old 100th Psalm.

There are beautiful springs in the village of Tissington, besides those which are annually adorned with flowers: one was liberated from the limestone only 30 years ago, and it has continued to supply a copious and regular stream. This fount is in a private garden; it was called the "Nymph of the Spring," by one who wrote the following lines about the time of its discovery:—

'Tis fit and right the inquiring world should know
'Twas Johnson caus'd this copious stream to flow.
Doom, then, the stones that late my prison were
To shield my waters from the biting air.
O'er them a neat and modest dome erect,
Their pureness from pollution to protect,
Which maidens fair, on this propitious morn,
With garlands gay shall annually adorn:
Their daughters' daughters shall perform the same,
And thus, to latest times, transmit thy name.

These lines were addressed to John Goodwin Johnson, Esq., the proprietor of the garden.

HAND'S WELL.

THE CEREMONY AT THE HALL WELL.

THE COFFIN WELL.

THE TOWN WELL.

THE HALL WELL.

CAPTURE OF A SLAVE-VESSEL, OFF THE CONGO RIVER.

EXTRAORDINARY CAPTURE OF A SLAVE VESSEL.

We have been exclusively favoured with the sight of a letter from an officer of the Albatross, 16, Captain R. Yorke, describing the capture of a slave brig, on the 1st March, off the Congo River, on the coast of Africa. The extreme vigilance of our cruisers must be a source of congratulation to those who have laboured so hard for the suppression of this traffic in human flesh; and the Albatross in particular has been instrumental in the capture and destruction of many noted and previously successful slavers.

"On the 28th Feb. we observed, as we thought, a vessel lying close under the land, near the River Congo. The weather was rather hazy; and as it appeared to us that the vessel in question was on fire, we hoisted the pinnace out, and sent her to ascertain what nation she belonged to. The pinnace remained absent all night, and in the meanwhile we ran in under the land, and anchored about seven miles to the southward of the river. At daylight on the following morning, observing a brig to the northward, we got under weigh, and made all sail. As we neared, we saw several boats rowing to and fro, and two objects in shore, which seemed to us to be wrecks, that had burnt down to the water's edge. Shortly afterwards we observed our pinnace board the brig, but she shortly afterwards left her again, and pulled in towards the land, in the direction of what we thought to be the wrecks. One or two muskets were fired at our boat from the shore, which the boat's crew returned, and shortly afterwards we saw our red ensign flying at the vessel's mast-head, which gave us all hopes that it was a prize. Other boats were now sent away, and we at length made out that what we took to be wrecks were two rafts, formed of water casks, each carrying two hundred slaves, which the brig was in the act of taking on board when our pinnace interrupted them.

"The brig was of 250 tons, and had already embarked 300 negroes; and had we been a day later in the field, she would have had her whole cargo of 743 slaves on board, and have been on her way to Rio Janeiro. A supply of water and provisions, as well as slave irons, was also on its way; but our arrival induced the canoes conveying it to put back.

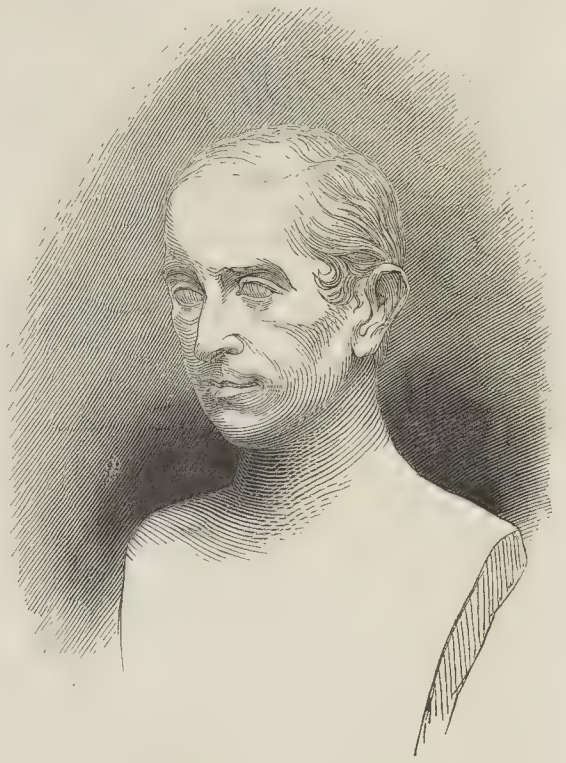
"Our boats were now very busy in taking the slaves off the rafts, and had not our brig been there, we must have lost very many; but, as it was, we took every soul of them, and carried them on board the slave brig.

"By the log of the captured vessel we found that she had cleared out at Loando, about twelve days previously, bound to Pernambuco; but that after stretching off for a week to the westward, articles had been signed for a slave voyage, and she stood in for the Congo river, to embark her cargo. Of course the clearance for Pernambuco was nothing but a blind, as every arrangement must have been previously made to purchase her cargo and to provide her slave fitments. We have since heard that the merchants of Loando had entered into a bond for 16,000 dollars to guarantee that the vessel was actually going to Pernambuco, which they will probably have to pay, as the captain and crew deserted her in such haste that he had not time to destroy his papers and log, which will be brought forward on the vessel's trial.

"Our having captured this brig is very singular. The fires, which first attracted our attention, were on shore, where they were clearing the land and burning wood, so that our sending away our pinnace was the result of accident, and yet proved the cause of our taking this large vessel. They did not see our brig, or they would not have anchored; indeed, they only anchored a few hours before we did. Had they seen us, or our boat, they would have set fire to the brig in the night, and escaped to the shore.

"Shortly after we had obtained possession of the brig, she went adrift—one of the Portuguese crew having nearly cut a link of the chain cable in two before quitting. The Portuguese, who had in the meanwhile taken possession of a schooner in the river, observing the brig to be adrift, were coming out with the view of obtaining some of the slaves; but by pointing a gun at them, they kept their distance for the night. We were obliged to carry our prize to Loando, in order to procure provisions for the negroes on their voyage to Sierra Leone; and in running down for the former place, we passed several vessels with rafts in tow, which no doubt had provisions on board for the brig. One vessel, which I saw throw slave-irons overboard, had bags of farina on board, which they give to the slaves. After provisioning the brig, we sent her to Sierra Leone in charge of the Second Lieutenant."

THOMAS HOOD.



Tom Hood has been taken from among us! The hand of Death has arrested a writer of an original kind—a real wit and humorist, in the best sense of the word. Hood has followed Hook. "Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment, to set the table on a roar? Not one now!" Poor Hood! and at the too early age of forty-seven—three-and-twenty years before the scriptural three score and ten.

> The hoary mower strides apace,
> Nor crops alone the ripen'd ear;
> And we may miss the merriest face
> Among us 'gainst another year.

But Mr. Hood's was not a merry face—rather, indeed, of a serious caste. His mouth, however, had a peculiar expression of humour, and his eyes sparkled at a story of his own telling, or at the happy flash of merriment in a friend he loved, for Hood, like Charles Lamb, was shy amongst strangers, and required a friend to call him out.

Thomas Hood was born in the Poultry, London, in the year 1798. His father was a native of Scotland, and for many years acting partner in the firm of Vernor, Hood, and Sharpe, extensive booksellers and publishers. "There was a dash of ink in my blood," he writes; "my father wrote two novels, and my brother was decidedly of a literary turn, to the great disquietude, for a time, of an anxious parent. My mother suspected him, on the strength of several amatory poems of a very desponding cast, of being the victim of a hopeless attachment; so he was caught, closeted, and catechised, and, after a deal of delicate and tender sounding, he confessed—not with the anticipated sighs and tears, but a very unexpected burst of laughter—that he had been guilty of translating some fragments of Petrarch!"

No one has told us what kind of education Mr. Hood received. He finished his education, it is said, at Mr. Wanostrocht's academy, Camberwell; "And here," he writes, "I may correct an assertion of my biographer in the 'Book of Gems,' who states that my education was finished at a certain suburban academy. In this ignorant world, where we proverbially live and learn, we may indeed leave off school, but our education only terminates with life itself. Instead of my education being finished, my own impression is, that it never so much as progressed towards so desirable a consummation at any such establishment." From Mr. Wanostrocht's school he was removed to a merchant's counting-house in the City, where he realised his own inimitable sketch of the boy "Just set up in Business:"—

THE LATE THOMAS HOOD—FROM A BUST BY E. DAVIS, IN THE PRESENT ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

> Time was I sat upon a lofty stool,
> At lofty desk, and with a clerkly pen,
> Began each morning at the stroke of ten
> To write in Bell and Co.'s commercial school,
> In Warnford-court, a shady nook and cool,
> The favourite retreat of merchant men;
> Yet would my quill turn vagrant even then,
> And take stray dips in the Castalian pool.
> Now double entry—now a flowery trope—
> Mingling poetic honey with trade wax:
> Blogg, Brothers—Milton—Grote and Prescott—Pope—
> Bristles and Hogg—Glyn, Mills, and Halifax—
> Rogers and Towgood—Hemp—the Bard of Hope—
> Barilla—Byron—Tallow—Burns, and Flax.

His avocations at this time were very much as he has here described them—penning stanzas, playing upon words, and attending to his master's books. "My commercial career," he writes, "was a brief one, and deserved only a sonnet in commemoration." The fault, however, lay not with the Muses: his health was so precarious that his friends were advised to remove him from the stool and ledger, and try the effects of the bracing breezes of the north of Scotland on a sickly constitution. "Accordingly," he says, "I was soon shipped, as per advice, in a Scotch smack, which smacked through the breeze, as Dibdin sings so merrily, that on the fourth morning we were in sight of the prominent old steeple of 'Bonny Dundee.'" Here he remained for two years and more with some relations in Dundee, and acquired the art of drawing with ease and skill, and his first acquaintance with the press in the columns of a Dublin newspaper and the pages of the Dundee Magazine. On his return he was articled to his uncle, Mr. Robert Sands, to learn the art and mystery of engraving. The Muses, however, won and wooed him away from the copper; and the success of the London Magazine, in or about the year 1821, made him irrecoverably an author. He became, on John Scott's death, a sort of sub-editor of that magazine, with Charles Lamb, Cary, Allan Cunningham, Barry Cornwall, and the rest of that fine phalanx of contributors to "The London" for his friends.

BELVIDERE BLUE BELLE. INO. CHAMPION. MYSTERY. ANTAGONIST.

ROYAL THAMES YACHT CLUB.—MATCH FOR THE BELVIDERE CUP.—DRAWN BY N. M. CONDY, ESQ. (SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Mr. Hood's first work was anonymous—his "Odes and Addresses to Great People"—a little, thin, mean-looking sort of a foolscap sub-octavo of poems, with nothing but wit and humour (could it want more?) to recommend it. Coleridge was delighted with the work, and taxed Charles Lamb by letter with the authorship. "My dear Charles," he says, "it was certainly written by you, or under you, or una cum you. I know none of your frequent visitors capacious and assimilative enough of your converse to have reproduced you so honestly, supposing you had left yourself in pledge in his lock-up-house." Coleridge's mistake was a compliment after Hood's own heart; for no one had a higher admiration for Charles Lamb than the real author of the "Odes and Addresses to Great People." Presentation copies were sent, he tells us, at the suggestion of a friend, to Mr. Canning and Sir Walter Scott: "the Minister took no notice of the volume, but the novelist did in his usual kind manner."

His next work was "A Plea for the Midsummer Fairies," a serious poem of infinite beauty, full of fine passages and of promise. The "Plea" was followed by a volume of "Whims and Oddities," inscribed to Sir Walter Scott—the forerunner of the Comic Annual. Then came the "Epping Hunt" and the "Dream of Eugene Aram" ("L'Allegro" and "Il Penseroso"); "Tylney Hall," a novel, in three volumes; a book called "Up the Rhine;" and "Hood's Own; or, Laughter from Year to Year," a volume of cullings from his comic lucubrations, "with an infusion of New Blood for General Circulation." The Comic Annual became immediately a favourite, and Christmas, the period of its appearance, was looked forward to from year to year with more than common expectation. Hood was seldom in time, but the public forgave him; for his printed letters of excuse were masterpieces in their way—a sort of foretaste of what they were to receive. We are not, however, to attribute this backwardness in publication to the indolent habits of a writer in good health. Poor Hood never knew for any great length of time what good health was; and his last wood-cut of excuses, "half-a-dozen doctor's bottles," was his real apology on all occasions.

Hood followed Hook in the editorship of the New Monthly Magazine. He was not, however, long in charge; he quarrelled with Colburn, or Colburn quarrelled with him (perhaps both), and he started in the January of last year, a magazine of his own, with his own name to it. "The Song of the Shirt" had been sung through the whole length and breadth of the three kingdoms, and people were more than usually prepared to receive with welcome, a magazine of Hood's Own. But poor Hood was unfit for the dull duties of an editor—nay, more, he was disabled by disease from exerting himself in any important way in support of this new bantling of his own. "The Bridge of Sighs" was a flash from the old flint, but the rest of his lucubrations were poor indeed.

The friends of Hood (and he had many) soon found it necessary to do something for their friend—and application was made in the proper quarter for a Government Pension. Hood had many claims for a pension of this kind—his works—his sufferings—and the inoffensive nature of his writings—for though a satirist, he was always a kindly one. The application was successful, and her Majesty was pleased to issue a warrant for the payment of a pension of £100 a year to Mrs. Hood.

Victoria R.,—Whereas, We are graciously pleased to grant and allow unto Jane Hood, wife of Thomas Hood, Esq., author of various popular works, an annuity or yearly pension of One Hundred Pounds, in consideration of his literary merit and infirm state of health; Our Will and Pleasure is that there be given and granted, and We do hereby give and grant unto William Elliott, M.D., of Vicarage Terrace, Stratford, Essex, and to his Executors or Administrators, an Annuity or Yearly Pension of One Hundred Pounds in trust for the said Jane Hood, wife of the aforesaid Thomas Hood, for her sole and separate use, payable out of our Civil List, and to commence in and from the 1st day of July, 1844, and from thenceforth to be payable and paid to him or to his Assigns quarterly, free and clear of all deductions whatever, on the 1st day of October, the 1st day of January, the 1st day of April, and the 1st day of July, in each and every year, during Our Pleasure; and in case of the death of the said Jane Hood, a rateable proportion of the said Pension for the quarter then current from the last quarter-day to the day of her decease, and for so doing this shall be your warrant. Given at Our Court at Windsor Castle this 28th day of January, 1845, in the 8th year of our reign.

Henry Goulburn.
Alexander Pringle.
Henry Baring.

To the Commissioners of Our Treasury,

Mr. Hood died on Saturday the 3rd of May, and has left a widow and, we believe, two children to lament his loss. Mrs. Hood was the daughter of old Mr. Reynolds, the Head Writing Master at Christ's Hospital, a wit and humorist in his way, and the sister of "Young Reynolds," mentioned encomiastically in the letters of Lord Byron.

THE ROYAL THAMES YACHT CLUB MATCH FOR THE BELVIDERE CUP.

Carry on, carry on: reef none, boys, none:
Hang her out on a flowing sail;
Gunnel in, gunnel in, for the race we'll win,
While the land-lubbers so pale
Are fumbling at their points, my son,
For fear of the coming gale. Old Song.

The Third of May, of this 'Forty-five of peaceful memory, will live long and honoured in the annals of our metropolitan yachting. It call'd into lusty rivalry, the goodliest display of amateur seamanship ever witness'd on the Thames; and into graceful contrast, the most perfect miniature fleet ever brought together by our pleasure marine. Some months ago it was announced that Lord Saye and Sele proposed to give a prize, to be contended for by vessels of the Club, which hails from that Queen of Rivers, on whose banks he resides. No sooner was this gracious design made known, than sundry keels were laid down by the most distinguished manufacturers of flying craft—and everywhere the yachting interest was on the qui vive.

This may be called the Iron Age—of locomotion: the high ways are made of iron, and the high seas promise soon to be covered with it. Fifty years ago, Jack could imagine nothing more disparaging than going to sea in a washing-tub: what would he have said to a cruise in a coal-scuttle? Iron has been discovered to be a great fact in getting up "clippers"—so the announcement, as aforesaid, put the crack men of the T.Y.C. on their metal as well as their mettle. Lord Alfred Paget having won all before him, last season, with the Mystery—a metallic—and sold her in the autumn to Lord Seaham, straightway ordered another vessel. Not long since she was launched, call'd the "Belvidere," and became, as they say on the turf (but more appropriately), "a great pot." Mr. Gunston—the father of river sailing—brought out a new boat, the Antagonist: Captain Meeson did the same with the Ino; and a new Prima Donna made her début on the occasion. In short, nothing was wanting to ensure the éclat of the spectacle but a suitable day, and that was vouchsafed it. Saturday last was perfectly set out for a nautical fête—there was a bright gladsome forenoon, with a handsome whole-sail breeze, which, as the day got older, grew more fresh, and finished with a spanker from the Sou' West.

As early as nine A.M., a first class river steamer, appropriated to the friends and guests of the members of the Club, took in a freight of some four or five hundreds of "fair women and brave men," as Chile Harold describes worshipful company; and later in the morning—for May Fair, that goes to bed at four, can scarcely be expected at London-bridge at nine—you might have seen the neatest pair of skewbalds in the world penetrating the "imminent deadly break" of Temple Bar, driven by the neatest coachman in England—we won't say, and also the most popular of her peerage, or it might be deemed too particular an allusion to his Grace of Beaufort. Awaiting the dilatory classes, was a little squadron of steam-boats, at Blackwall; and notwithstanding the very early note of preparation, at noon all was in statu quo in the picturesque bay of Erith, hard by the lordly towers of Belvidere. Here the wager fleet was moored, and hence they were to sail to the Chapman Head Buoy—some dozen miles below Gravesend, and back to the ordinary goal—abreast of Greenwich Hospital. Because there was a heading wind down, and plenty of it, and because the flood would not make till late in the afternoon, the start was postponed till half-past twelve. Awaiting the signal for "slipping," the following fleet of clippers, their half-set canvas briskly flapping to the breeze, lay head to it—forming as pretty a picture as a man may expect to look on, as Byron says, in "his nautical existence."

Yachts.	Tons.	Owners.
Antagonist	25	H. Gunston, Esq.
Prima Donna	25	C. R. Tatham, Esq.
Champion	25	T. P. Wickham, Esq.
Belvidere	25	Lord A. Paget.
Ino	25	T. Meesom, Esq.(Captain)
Blue Belle	25	Twisden Hodges, Esq.
Mystery	25	Viscount Seaham.
Widgeon	24	T. E. Snook, Esq.
Cygnet	10	B. M. Williams, Esq.

Also awaiting sailing orders, was the jewel of cutters, Lord Anglesey's Pearl, the completest craft that ever sailed salt water or fresh, or both combined, as she was doing at this particular era. The gallant Marquis loves to join the throng of a regatta match, but he declines to make one of the competitors. He won't let his beauty run the risk of a defeat. She had her day; but, alas! like that of other beauties, it couldn't survive beyond the licence of "Time the pathless." At half-past noon the starting gun boomed from the Commodore's vessel, and there was casting off slips, "up jib and foresail," "hurrah, throat and pique," and every sail of ultra marine contrivance; and sung, or might, or could or should have sung, the gallant skipper of each gallant bark—

Haul away! haul away! down helm I say;
Slack sheets; let the good boat go.
Give her room, give her room, for a spanking boom,
For the wind comes on to blow;
On the weather beam its gathering gloom,
And the scud flies high and low.

And so did the wager-fleet scud too, with as lofty canvas as vessels of twice their tonnage are prone to show; and their water-lines for'ard, "deep in the bosom of the ocean buried." It is very questionable policy to press craft so violently out of their trim, as the custom is when "running" in a wager race. With their bows under, Joan is as good as my lady—a Dutch galliot as a Rhode Island water witch. Past Purfleet they swept in noble array, the Mystery a good cable's-length ahead of everything; the Widgeon next; then the Blue Belle, with such a gaf-topsail, and the rest well up, because the pace had not begun to tell. Thus they went free to the rounding buoy, which they passed—the Belvidere at 11 minutes past two; the Mystery almost at the same instant; the Blue Belle and the Ino two minutes later; and the whole squadron, except the Cygnet, within seven minutes of the first! a pretty good proof how evenly they were matched in their "running" properties. They now began to "nose" the wind, with a strong ebb to weather, and beautifully they did it. Of course every manœuvre was strained to take advantage of the slack water—where it was to be found. In this the Belvidere and the Blue Belle eminently distinguished themselves, and the interest of the "beating" centred in these two champions, "in complete iron." A finer specimen of handling fore and aft rigg'd craft was never seen, and certainly it was not from lack of skill, or "hanging on by the eyelids," that the crew of the Belvidere presently found the Blue Belle overhaul them, looking on, as she forged ahead, "like grim death." The fact was, she liked the day, and the more it sneezed the more she didn't mind it: a darling to creep to windward in dirty weather. It was half-past eight when she rounded the winning flag at Greenwich, beating the Belvidere by very hard upon a quarter of an hour; the Mystery third, a few minutes later. It now came on to rain miserably—even so cold as it only does in May in England. Whether this be the effect of a temperature lower than at Christmas, or indiscretions in muslins and Russia ducks, may be worth consideration. As it poured down, the owner of the "Belle" poured forth his courtesies and congratulations, and so the day closed "just like life."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MR. GRATTAN COOKE has the honour of announcing that HIS SOIREE MUSICALE, is fixed to take place on TUESDAY EVENING, 13th of MAY, at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, at which are engaged Herr Staudigl, Madame Atbertazzi, Miss Hawes, the Misses Williams, and Miss Rainforth. Signor Brizzi, Giulo Regondi, Mr. Kiallmark, and Mr. John Parry. Conductor Mr. T. Cooke. Tickets Half-a-guinea. To be had at the principal Music Shops, and at Mr. G. Cooke's, 34, Foley-place. To commence at half-past Eight.

BATTLE OF WATERLOO.—New Model upon a very large Scale, representing the Splendid Charge in the earlier part of the Battle by the British Heavy Cavalry under the Marquess of Anglesey, and by the British Infantry under Sir Thomas Picton.  Described by Waterloo men.—EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY. "It is a national memento of one of England's most glorious triumphs."—The United Service Gazette.
Open from Eleven in the Morning, till Nine in the Evening. Admission, One Shilling

THE NEW SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.—The ELEVENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION, is NOW OPEN, at their Gallery, 53 Pall Mall, next the British Institution, from Nine o'clock till dusk.—Admission, One Shilling. Catalogue, Sixpence. JAS. FAHEY, Sec.

MAGNIFICENT AND UNEQUALLED COURT COSTUMES.—MADAME TUSSAUD and SONS, anxious to give the Middle Classes an idea of the splendour of the Court, have entirely redressed their Female Figures in a style never before attempted. They respectfully request an early visit, as the exposure to the air must soon tarnish their beauty. The group of the House of Brunswick may challenge all former efforts. Admittance One Shilling. Napoleon Rooms, Sixpence. Open from 11 till 10. Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square.

EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY.—THE O-JIB-WAY INDIANS.—A party of these interesting and romantic "Children of the Forest," from the Western Wilds of North America, will make their first appearance at the above Hall, on Monday next, when they will perform their novel Ceremonies, Games, Dances, &c., in full Native Costume. The Interpreter will deliver a Lecture descriptive of Indian character each performance. At Two o'clock each Afternoon, and at Eight o'clock in the Evening. Admission 1s.; Children and Schools half-price.

WHITSUN HOLIDAYS.
ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—The ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY exhibited by a WORKING MODEL, having a power to carry visitors. A CURIOUS MECHANICAL HAND on a person who has lost his natural hand. Dr. RYAN'S LECTURES on the CHEMISTRY of DOMESTIC LIFE, Daily. Professor BACHOFFNER'S VARIED LECTURES, with brilliant Experiments. LECTURES on CHARACTER, with MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS, by Mr. J. RUSSELL, accompanied by Dr. Wallis on the Pianoforte, every evening except Saturday, at Eight o'Clock. New and beautiful objects in the CHROMATROPE, PHYSIOSCOPE, PROTEOSCOPE, &c. NEW DISSOLVING VIEWS. SUBMARINE EXPERIMENTS by the DIVER and DIVING BELL. WORKING MODELS described Daily.—Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price.

MARYLEBONE LITERARY and SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTION, 17, Edwards-street, Portman-square.—MONDAY, MAY 12th, Second Lecture "On the Genius and Writings of Living English Composers," by W. A. Wordsworth, Esq. (with Vocal Illustrations).
MAY 19th.—A Lecture "On the Manufacture of Glass," by T. Griffiths, Esq.
Tickets for the Lectures, 1s. each. The Subscription to the Institution (which consists of spacious and well supplied Reading-rooms, Chess-room, and an extensive Library of circulation), £2 2s per annum. Members have free admission to the Lectures, with the privilege of introducing a lady. Further particulars, with a Syllabus of the Lectures, may be obtained on application to the Secretary.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—Every description of assurance may be effected with this Society, and policies are granted on the lives of persons of all ages.
Table of Premiums for Assuring £100 on a Healthy Life.

Age.	For One Year only.			For Seven Years at an Annual Payment.			For 14 Years at an Annual Payment of
	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
25	1	1	0	1	2	2	1	3	8
30	1	2	1	1	4	1	1	6	1
35	1	5	2	1		2	1	9	3
40	1	8	9	1	10	4	1	13	6
45	1	12	2	1	14	8	2	1	0
50	1	16	11	2	3	10	2	13	11

The sum accumulated and invested, for the security and benefit of the assured, already exceeds half a million sterling; and the income, which is steadily increasing, is now £101,500 per annum.
Bonuses.—The two first divisions averaged £22 per cent. on the premiums paid. The third bonus, declared in January, 1842, averaged £23 per cent.; and the future bonuses are expected to exceed that amount.
The balance sheets of this Society are at all times open to the inspection of any of the assured.
Further information may be obtained of George H. Pinckard, Actuary, 78, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London; or of any of the Society's agents.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Mdlle. LUCILLE GRAHN respectfully informs the Nobility, Subscribers to the Opera, her Friends, and the Public, that her BENEFIT will take place on THURSDAY NEXT, May 15th, 1845, when will be performed, first time this season, Rossini's Opera, LA GAZZA LADRA. Ninetta, Madame Grisi; Pippo, Mdlle. Brambilla; Gianetto, Sigr. Mario; Podesta, Sigr. Lablache: Fernando Villabelo, Sigr. Fornasari. The DANSEUSES VIENNOISES, under the direction of Madame Josephine Weiss, will dance some of their most favourite Pas. After which, the Divertissement of UN BAL SOUS LOUIS XIV. In which Mdlle. Lucile Grahn will appear as a Cavalier of the Court of Louis XIV.; and will dance with Mdlle. Cerito, in the Costume of the same Court, the celebrated Minuet de la Cour and Gavotte; and in the course of the evening will appear in various Dances and Pas de Caractere. With other Entertainments, in which Madame Anaide Castellan and Sigr. Moriani will appear. In the course of the evening, the celebrated Spanish Dancer, Dona Manuela Perea, known as La Nena; and the Spanish Bolero Dancer, Don Felix Garcia, will appear in some of the National Pas of Spain. LA CROCOVIENNE (Pas de Caractere), by Mdlle. Lucile Grahn. The Entertainments will likewise comprise the PAS DE SIX, from the Ballet Divertissement of KAYA; ou, L'AMOUR VOYAGEUR; and likewise include a Selection from the Ballet of EOLINE, comprising the Celebrated Mazourka d'Extase, by Mdlle. Lucile Grahn and M. Perrot; and a Selection from the Ballet of ONDINE, including the Celebrated Pas de l'Ombre, by Mdlle. Cerito.—Applications for Boxes, Pit Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven; the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE OF ARTS. Under the Patronage of her Majesty the Queen.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. W. BATTY. Extraordinary Combination of Foreign Equestrian Talent, on WHIT-MONDAY, May the 12th, being the First Appearance in London of Mons Tournaire's Celebrated Troupe of French, German, and Italian Professors of Equitation. Also, the First Time of the New Grand National Domestic Historical Hippo-Dramatic Spectacle, in Three Acts, entitled THE GODOLPHIN ARABIAN; or the Race Horse of the Desert. The New Classical Scenes in the Cirque Olympique, will surpass anything that has ever been submitted to the Public. The Entertainment concludes with a Favourite Farce. The whole will be repeated every Evening during the Week.—Box Office open from 11 till 5.

VAUXHALL GARDENS will OPEN on MONDAY NEXT, being WHIT-MONDAY, and continue open every MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and FRIDAY, with a GRAND VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT; MYRNA, or the Spirits of the Deep. The covered walks have been greatly extended, and, with the Rotunda, Theatre, Ball-room, &c., will, in case of rain, afford shelter for 20,000 persons. Refreshments at Tavern Prices. Admission, Two Shillings; Children at Half-price. Doors open at Half-past Seven; commence at Eight o'clock.

DIORAMA, REGENT'S PARK.—REDUCED PRICE OF ADMITTANCE.—JUST OPENED, with a NEW and highly interesting EXHIBITION, representing the Castle and Town of Heidelberg (formerly the residence of the Electors Palatine of the Rhine), under the various aspects of Winter and Summer, Mid-day and Evening; and the exterior view of the Cathedral of Notre Dame at Paris, as seen at Sunset and by Moonlight, and which has been so universally admired. Both pictures are painted by Le Chevalier Roux.—Open from Ten till Six. Admittance to view both pictures—Saloon, 1s.; Stalls, 2s., as heretofore.

NOTTINGHAM AND BOSTON RAILWAY.—PROSPECTUSES may be had on Application at the OFFICE of the COMPANY, 14, BIRCHIN-LANE, LOMBARD-STREET.
London, May 8th, 1845.

LESSONS IN MILLINERY AND DRESSMAKING.—Mrs. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, sole inventress of teaching the art of Dressmaking in a series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of cutting, fitting, and executing, in the most finished style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to pupils. Apprentices and Improvers Wanted.—Millinery and Dress Rooms.

SKETCHING IN TRUE PERSPECTIVE, by the aid of LORIMIER'S PATENT PLANES.—The commendations of the press on this simple and beautiful apparatus are well merited. May be seen at Mr Deacon's, London and Provincial Advertising Office, 3, Walbrook, first floor; at the "Intelligencer" Office, Leeds; "Courier" Office, Manchester; Mr. Mawdsley's, Liverpool; Messrs. Wrightson and Webb, Birmingham; Mr. Pike, Derby; Messrs. Malchetts and Co., Norwich; Messrs. Best and Snowden's, Southampton; and Messrs. H. Martin and Co. Hamburgh.—Price 18s., 25s., and upwards.

SCHWEPPE'S SODA and other ALKALINE WATERS continue to be manufactured as usual, upon the largest scale, at their several establishments, and to maintain their supremacy over all others. Each bottle has its proper proportion of alkali; but to prevent imposition, consumers are earnestly requested to ascertain that a label with their NAME is over the cork of each bottle of soda water, and a label on each bottle of lemonade and potass water. Schweppe's Liquid Magnesia is of the finest quality, and strongly recommended as a cure for gout, acidity of the stomach, &c., by the first London Physicians.—51, Berners-street, London.

CABBURN'S OIL, for RHEUMATISM, GOUT, TIC-DOLOREUX, &c.—"Seabrook, near Hythe, Kent.—To Mr. Cabburn.—Sir,—A few months since, from the application of your Oil, I derived the greatest benefit imaginable. I had been lame in my ankles and feet for more than 20 years, from which affliction no application relieved me, until I made use of your valuable remedy. I gave a portion, also, to a lady, who had Tic-doloreux in her face for 13 weeks past, and a very few applications entirely cured her. Yours, &c., John Norwood."
Cabburn's Oil is positively under the immediate sanction and recommendation of the Faculty, as may be seen in "Bradshaw's Railway Guide."

A SHOWER BATH, with curtains, 12s. 6d.; ditto, with copper conducting tubes, force pump, and valves, from 60s; Hazard's Patent Shower Bath, 21s.; ditto, made very portable, and Case, 30s.; Sponging Baths, 12s., 19s., and 21s.; Hip ditto, 19s., and 21s. Also every description of Toilet Ware thirty per cent under any other house.—R. and J. SLACK beg to call attention to the quality of their Baths; as they are all manufactured on their premises, they can confidently warrant them for durability. Their Illustrated Catalogue of Baths, and every article of Furnishing Ironmongery, may be had gratis, or sent to any part post-free.—RICHARD and JOHN SLACK, 336, Strand, opposite Somerset House. Established 1818.

POUR BLANCHIR LA PEAU.—Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and used in the Nursery of Royalty.—MEEN FUN, or CELESTIAL SKIN POWDER.—The celebrated Chinese Cosmetic for preserving the complexion, and for rendering the skin white, smooth, and soft. The great value of this Cosmetic is, that the ingredients being solely herbaceous, the most delicate complexion can apply it without injury, while rough, red, and moist skins speedily experience beneficial results: it will be found, besides, to prevent eruptions on the skin during cold and chilly weather. Another important feature is that of repressing, without detriment to the sanatory condition of the user, the truly unpleasant sensation accompanying too copious perspiration. For infants this powder is invaluable, on account of its harmless and soothing qualities. Gentlemen who suffer from the effects of shaving will find a ready alleviate in this Cosmetic. The sole proprietors are FABIAN and CO. (late Watson, Fabian, and Co.), 24, Mark-lane, London, without whose signature on the labels none are genuine. To be had wholesale of them, and retail of all respectable perfumers, chemists, &c., in town and country, in boxes, price 3s. 6d. and 7s. 6d each.

EXPEDITION ROUND THE WORLD, with PASSENGERS ONLY, under the Patronage of distinguished Men of Science in Germany.—The undersigned intends to dispatch from HAMBURG, on 15th AUGUST next, a first-class fast sailing Ship, of about 350 tons register, on an Expedition Round the World, touching and making stays at the following places, viz.:—Portsmouth, Lisbon, Madeira, Teneriffe, Cape Verds or Gambia, Rio de Janeiro, Rio de la Plata, Falkland Islands, Valparaiso, and all the intermediate ports up to Guayaquil, Galapagos, Marquesas, Society, Friendly, and other Islands in the Pacific, on the way to China, Chusan, Hong-Kong, Macao, Whampoa, Canton, Manilla, Singapore, Ceylon, Isle de France or Madagascar, Cape of Good Hope, St. Helena, Ascension Island, Western Islands, and so back to Hamburg. The object of this Expedition is the promotion of Science, the acquirement of knowledge generally, or the gratification which results to enlightened and enquiring minds from distant travel. Respectable Passengers only, and such as are not afflicted with disease, will be received on board. The Ship will not in any way be used for trading purposes, and will be fitted up in the most convenient and comfortable manner for the accommodation of the passengers, with one large Saloon, two apartments for Study, and State Rooms for Sleeping. The Voyage will require about two years, and the Passage Money is fixed at Two Hundred and Seventy Pounds (£270), including Provisions and Wine at Sea and in Port. The Ship will carry an experienced Medical Man. For further particulars apply to Messrs. E. SIEVEKING and SON, 12, Size-lane, City, or to ROBERT M. SLOMAN, in Hamburg.

SHAWLS.—EVERINGTON'S successors (Graham and Smith) have dissolved Partnership. GEORGE SMITH, now carrying on business in the spacious premises lately occupied by Rundell and Bridge, 32, Ludgate-hill, respectfully invites the Nobility, Gentry, and Public to inspect his magnificent Stock of SHAWLS, and he particularly informs gentlemen purchasers that one price only is made, and that price marked on each article in plain figures. Thirteen years' experience in the late house of Everington, enables George Smith to place before his patrons the same choice collection of goods which for so many years past it has been his particular department to select from the various and most talented Continental and British manufacturers. The success of his new system is complete. The economy of his arrangements will supply the best and most fashionable manufactures at moderate prices, while the order of his Establishment effectually secures ladies from any disagreeable importunity to purchase more than they require, or that which is in opposition to their tastes. Unencumbered by those heavy expenses which the mania for decorating houses of business has heaped upon the prices of goods, George Smith will sell, on ready money terms only, at much less than the usual profit, every useful and fashionable article in Shawls, Silks, Satins, and Velvets, Mantles, Handkerchiefs, Scarfs, Worked Muslin and Lace Collars and Pelerines. Every description of Printed Dresses, from 5s. each to the most costly fabrics. Every article required in full or half Mourning. A room is set apart for the exclusive sale of British and Foreign Table Linen, and every kind of Linen for family use, Long Cloths, Muslins, &c. A beautiful assortment of Swiss Window-curtains.—32, Ludgate-hill.

SELF MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION. The following Directions will ensure an exact Fit, and will be found a most convenient accommodation. The measure may be taken with a piece of tape, and reduced into inches, stating the height of person, and if any peculiarity in figure; also whether taken over a Coat.

Coats, Vests, &c.	Inches
From Neck seam, not Including Collar, to Hip Buttons
From Hip Buttons to Bottom of Skirt
From centre of Back to Elbow joint
Continued to length of Sleeve at Wrist
Size round top of Arm
Size round Chest under the Coat
Size round Waist under the Coat

Trousers.	Inches
From top of Trousers to bottom
From under the Legs to bottom of Trousers
Size round top of Thigh (tight)
Size round Calf
Ditto Waist
Ditto Hips

Hat.
Measure size round the Head

Ready made.	£	s	d
Tweed Taglionis, from	0	7	6
Ditto, superior quality, with silk collar, cuffs, and facings	0	13	6
Codringtons and Chesterfields, in light and gentlemanly materials	0	18	6
Cachmerette Coats, in every style and make, including the registered veltoe	1	2	0
Holland Jean Grand Drill and Diagonal Blouses	0	3	6
Splendid Summer Vests, from	0	2	6
Cachmere and Persian ditto, in endless variety	0	4	6
Black and Fancy Satins	0	6	6
Cloth Trousers, from	0	9	0
Tweed ditto	0	4	6
Spring ditto (woollen)	0	5	0
Dress Coats	1	0	0
Frock ditto	1	3	0

Made to measure.	£	s	d
Tweed Coats, trimmed with silk	0	12	0
Cachmerette ditto, in any shape, handsomely trimmed, made in the first style of fashion	1	5	0
Saxe Gotha ditto, handsomely trimmed	1	15	0
Quilting Vests, 6s. 6d., or 3 for	0	19	0
Cachmere ditto, in choice patterns	0	8	6
Satin ditto, plain or fancy	0	14	6
Spring Trousers in great variety	0	10	6
Tweed ditto, in choice patterns	0	13	6
Single Milled Albert and Plain Doe Trousers	0	19	0
Best quality Black or Dress ditto	1	6	0
Dress Coats	1	12	0
Ditto, ditto, best manufactured	2	15	0
Frock Coats	1	15	0
Ditto, ditto, best manufactured	3	3	0

Mourning to any extent, at Five Minutes' notice.

Important.—Any article purchased or ordered, if not approved of, exchanged, or the money returned.
Observe.—E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Drapers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen.
Caution.—E. MOSES and SON are obliged to guard the public against imposition, having earned that the untradesman-like falsehood of being connected with them, or it is the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons. They have no connection with any other house in or out of London; and those who desire genuine Cheap Clothing, should (to prevent disappointments, &c) call at or send to, 154, Minories, or, 86, Aldgate, opposite the Church.
N.B.—No business transacted at this Establishment, from Friday at sunset until sunset on Saturday, when business is resumed until twelve o'clock.
Notice.—This Establishment will be closed on Monday, the 28th, and Tuesday, the 29th inst., resuming Business as usual on Wednesday morning.

Next week will be Published,

MAYNOOTH and ST. ASAPH; or, THE RELIGIOUS POLICY of the CONSERVATIVE CABINET CONSIDERED.
London: ROBERT WEIR, 57, Harley-street, Cavendish-square.

Just ready,

MARGARET; or, THE GOLD MINE. From the French of ELIE BERTHET.
London: ROBERT WEIR, 57, Harley-street, Cavendish-square.

Just published, in three volumes, post octavo,

THE SMUGGLER.—A NEW NOVEL.—By G. P. R. JAMES, Esq.
London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill.

In foolscap octavo, price 2s. in cloth,

NURSERY GOVERNMENT; or, Hints addressed to Mothers and Nurserymaids on the Management of Young Children. By Mrs. BARWELL. Second Edition, corrected and enlarged.—CHAPMAN AND HALL, 186, Strand.

Now Ready, in 3 vols.,

MR. DISRAELI'S NEW WORK, SYBIL; or, THE TWO NATIONS.
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.
To be had of all Booksellers, and at all the Libraries throughout the Kingdom.

THE FAMILY HERALD.—The most extensively circulated of English Periodicals. Vol. II. is now ready, price 7s. 6d. No. 105 is the first of a new Volume. No house should be without this popular work; it will please the old and charm the young. It is unquestionably the cheapest and most entertaining miscellany ever published. Buy a number and judge.

A NEW (Copyright) EDITION now ready, of MRS. OPIE'S WORKS, price 2s. each, handsomely bound in red cloth, full gilt, back and side.
FATHER and DAUGHTER.
FATHER and SON.
And THE STAGE COACH.
GROVE and SON, Printers and Publishers, Trinity-street, Southwark; and all Booksellers in Town and Country.

TO CHESS PLAYERS.
On the 1st of May was published, price 1s., No. V.—Vol. VI. of

THE CHESS PLAYER'S CHRONICLE, by far the Largest and most Valuable Collection of Chess Miscellanies ever published; containing, in addition to an immense amount of every description of Chess Intelligence, nearly TWO THOUSAND GAMES and PROBLEMS, by the Leading Players of Europe, during the last Fifty Years, the greater part never before in print.
London: R. HASTINGS, 13, Carey-street, Lincoln's-inn; and of all Booksellers.

THE NEW GALVANIC ENGRAVING.—AN EXTRAORDINARY NOVELTY IN TYPOGRAPHICAL ILLUSTRATION.
Exclusively published in Nos. I., II., and III. of "JOE MILLER THE YOUNGER." Containing more Fun, Broad Grins, and Amusement than any other publication of the day.
Price only THREE HALFPENCE; Stamped, to go free by post, TWOPENCE HALFPENNY, WEEKLY.
Office, 1, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and Sold by all Booksellers and Newsvenders.

FIELD'S JUVENILE BOOK ESTABLISHMENT.—Juvenile and Prize Books for the Entertainment and Instruction of Youth.—An extensive collection, comprising the works of the following eminent writers:—Mrs. Sherwood, Mrs. Hofland, Hannah More: Mrs. Barbauld, Mary Howitt, Miss Edgeworth, L. E. L., Mrs. Marcett, Maria Hack, Mary Elliott, Mrs. Markham, Ann Fraser Tytler, Mrs. Hall, Miss Julia Corner, Miss Mitford, Peter Parley, &c. &c., beautifully Illustrated, at FIELD'S CHEAP BOOK and STATIONERY WAREHOUSE, 65, Quadrant. Coloured Picture Books in every variety from 6d.

FIELD'S CHEAP STATIONERY and BOOK WAREHOUSE, 65, Quadrant, Corner of Air-street.—Stamped Envelopes, 1s. per doz.; Plain Envelopes, 4d. per 100; Superfine ditto, 6d. per 100; Satin ditto, 9d. per 100. Note Paper, 5 quires, 6d.; Albert and Queen's Note, 1s. and 1s. 6d. 5 quires; Superfine Bath Post, 2s. and 2s. 6d. the 5 quires; outsides ditto, 3d. and 4d. per quire. Wax of the finest quality, 10 sticks, 1s. Superfine Foolscap, 6d. per quire. Bibles, 1s.; Testaments, 6d.; Prayer-books, 9d., Church Services, 2 vols, in case, 3s. 6d.; a large and elegant stock, varying in price up to 3 Guineas. Mourning Envelopes, 1s. per 100; and every description of Stationery at prices not to be equalled by any other house.—65, QUADRANT.

RODRIGUES' Cheap STATIONERY and BOOK WAREHOUSE, 21, PICCADILLY.—Envelopes, 6d. per 100; superfine Bath post, 4d. per quire, 6s. per ream; note, 3d. per quire, 4s. per ream; best foolscap, 10d. per quire; Albert and Queen's note, 1s. and 1s. 6d. per packet of five quires; quills, 2s. per 100; best sealing-wax, 10 sticks for a shilling; bibles, 1s 6d; prayers, 1s.; testaments, 6d.; church services, two vols., in case complete, 3s. 6d. Name plate, elegantly engraved and 100 superfine cards, 4s. 6d. Account Books, Ledgers, &c., made to order at manufacturers' prices, and every description of Stationery full 30 per cent. lower than any other house in London, at H. RODRIGUES' 21, Piccadilly.

NEW WORK BY MRS. ELLIS.

THE YOUNG LADIES' READER; or, Extracts from Modern Authors, with Observations on Reading Aloud, and Remarks prefixed to the Divisions of the Work, by the Author of "The Women of England." Foolscap 18mo., price 4s. 6d., cloth.

MRS. HOFLAND'S LAST WORK—EMILY'S REWARD; or, the Holiday Trip to Paris. 18mo., price 2s. 6d., cloth.

THE STAR OF THE COURT; or, The Maid of Honour and Queen of England, Anne Boleyn. By MISS BUNBURY, with a Portrait after Holbein, and an Illuminated Title. Foolscap 8vo., price 5s., gilt edges.
GRANT and GRIFFITH, Successors to J. Harris, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

CHEAP POPULAR MAGAZINE,
Containing Original Sermons for Family Reading, &c., &c.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND MAGAZINE for MAY, Price 9d. (with nine Engravings), contains Original Sermons by the Lord Bishop of Lincoln, the Rev. R. W. Browne, M.A., of King's College; the Dean of Salisbury, the Rev. Henry Melvill, B.D., Hailey bury: the Archdeacon of Derby. Papers by the Rev. R. L. Cotton, Rev. E. Strickland, Rev. Charles Kemble; with the usual quantity of Miscellaneous Articles, Narratives, Sketches of Remarkable Places, Scenes in Natural History, Missionary Records, &c., &c.
 All the Sermons in this work are, without exception, printed from the MSS. of the respective Authors.
A few of the Parts from the commencement of the year may still be had, for which an early application is recommended.—London: EDWARDS and HUGHES, 12, Ave Maria-lane.

NEW ILLUSTRATED WORK BY FINDEN.
This Day is Published, to be continued Monthly, the First Part of FINDEN'S BEAUTIES OF THE POETS; being a Series of Portraits of their Principal Female Characters, from Paintings by eminent Artists, made expressly for the Work. Engraved in the highest style of art, by or under the immediate superintendence of Mr. EDWARD FINDEN.

The Series will commence with MOORE, to be followed by Illustrations of BURNS, CAMPBELL, and other popular British Poets.
Each Number will contain Four Plates, with Illustrative Letter-press, from the pen of a distinguished Female Writer.

PRINTS, Imperial Quarto	5s.
PROOFS, on India Paper, Atlas Quarto	8s.
PROOFS, ditto Columbier Folio, of which a few only will be printed, without Letter-press	12s.

London: CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand.

THE NEW

MONTHLY BELLE ASSEMBLEE, for MAY, a Fashionable and Literary Magazine, under the immediate Patronage of her Royal Highness THE DUCHESS OF KENT,
Is beautifully Illustrated with Highly-finished PORTRAITS OF THE NOBILITY
And contains
EXQUISITE ENGRAVINGS OF PARISINA,
AND ELY CATHEDRAL
AND
TWO COLOURED PLATES OF THE FASHIONS
Finished in the First Style, as they arrive from Paris.

CONTENTS.

The History of Edina Bremer. By P. P. C.
The Forsaken. By Georgina C. Munro
Lines on an Ancient Oak Room in Warwickshire. By Rose Acton
Biography. By R. Shelton Mackenzie, LL.D.
The Ruined Abbey Church. By Captain Bellew
Sonnet. By C. C.
Florence; or, Woman's Friendship. By Grace Aguilar
To a Group of Spring Flowers withered by the North Wind. By Jane Fragment of a Song by Richard Cœur de Lion, with Translations by X. Y. Z.
The Past, the Present, and the Future. By Anna Savage
Soliloquy of Francis the First. By Alicia Jane Sparrow
Recollections of Giovanni Pergolesi. By Elizabeth Youatt
The Church Organ. By Mrs. Abdy
The Stout Old British Cable. By J. J. Reynolds
Sophia. By Miss Matilda S. Watson
The Beacon Oak
The Queen of Spring. By Camilla Toulmin.
The Beautiful. By Charles H. Hitchings
Frances Brown's Poems. By Alicia Jane Sparrow
The Worsted-working Wife. By J. S. de Visme
The Bridal Robe. By Mrs. Emma C. Embury
Our Early Years. By Mrs. F. B. Scott
Buttercups and Daisies. By M. F. H.
The Prince and Peasant. By M. A. Y.
On the approach of Spring. By Leonard.
The Earl of Flanders. By Agnes Seymour
A Glance at Mr. Lough's Statue of the Queen. By the Author of "Titian"
"The Pride of the Sea!" By F. L. Jaquerod
Literature
Fine Arts
Amusements of the Month
Fashions for May
Description of the Plates, &c.
To Correspondents

May be had, by order, of all Booksellers. Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

PORTRAIT OF DR. JUSTUS LIEBIG.

THE FARMER'S MAGAZINE AND JOURNAL OF THE AGRICULTURAL INTEREST for MAY, 1845, is embellished with splendid Steel Engravings of DR. JUSTUS LIEBIG, Engraved by E. Hacker, from a painting by Hunt; and "EMMA," A Short-horned Heifer, the property of Thos. Crofton, Esq. of Holywell, Durham, engraved by Scott, from a painting by Davis.

CONTENTS.

Biographical Sketch of Dr. Justus Liebig. By Dr. Smith
On Rent. By Cuthbert W. Johnson, Esq., F.R.S.
Effect of Different Manures on the Composition of the Swedish Turnip. From the Journal of the Highland Agricultural Society
On the Feeding Properties of the above Swedish Turnips, grown by means of Farmyard Dung and of Guano
Chemistry for Farmers. By John Sproule
Stewponey Agricultural Association. Origin, Composition, and Improvement of Soils
On the Management of the Dung-heap, and the Manufacture of Farm-yard Manure. From Boussingault's "Rural Economy" Translated by George Law
Thorough Draining
On the most Economical Mode of Feeding Horses. By W. Dyce Guthrie
East Cornwall Experimental Club
Is the Potato an Exhaustiug Crop?
Culture of the Vine, with a view to Domestic Wine-making. By J. Towers
On the Mismanagement of Stable-dung Manure, especially as regards exposure to Rain
Grass Farming. By a Middlesex Farmer
Burton-on-Trent Farmers' Club. The best mode of Employing Profitably the Largest Amount of Labour on a Farm
Lecture on the Rearing and Fattening of Stock. By Mr. J. C. Nesbit, before the Maidstone Farmers' Club
The Weather. By Joseph Atkinson
Treasure Trove, by Deep Digging in a Valley, on Beachy Head. By Thomas Shorter
Making and Curing of Butter. By Lash and Co.
East Cornwall Experimental Club for the Advancement of Agriculture. Practical Observations on the Husbandry of the District. Communicated by Henry Badcock, Esq., Land Agent
Report on the Exhibition of Implements at the Southampton Meeting, in 1844. By Josiah Parkes, Consulting Engineer to the Society. (From the Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society)
Khol Rabi
Royal Agricultural Society of England
Agricultural Reports
Calendar of Horticulture
Agricultural Queries
Answers to Agricultural Queries
Meteorological Diary
Review of the Corn Trade
Averages—Prices of Seeds, Hops, Potatoes, Wool, &c.

The FARMERS' MAGAZINE, Vol. XL., is just published, with 12 fine Steel Engravings, and may be had, by order, of all Booksellers. Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand.

ROYAL NAVAL COLLEGE.—Young Gentlemen are prepared for entrance into the Navy, on the successful system formerly adopted at this establishment, by Mr. E. G. LIVESAY, of Guildford, Surrey. Terms moderate. References numerous and respectable.

COALS are now much Cheaper than they have been for the last six years, viz.:—Lambton's, 26s. per full Ton, well screened, and warranted not to produce white ash; two tons, at 25s. 6d.; Seconds, 24s.; Small, 13s. Coke, 18s. Delivered within five miles, free—METROPOLITAN COAL COMPANY, 279, High Holborn.

NUMBER ONE SAINT PAUL'S CHURCHYARD.—Tea, the best and cheapest of every description, especially Souchong Tea, at 4s. 6d. per lb., an old-fashioned fine tea, such as the East India Company used to bring over.—DAKIN and COMPANY, TEA-MERCHANTS, who supply the Trade and all large Innholders from NUMBER ONE SAINT PAUL'S CHURCHYARD.

AIR GUNS and CANES.—An entirely new and further improved assortment of these portable and silently destructive weapons, just finished by REILLY, jun., for killing rabbits, rooks, sea-fowl, &c., with ball; small birds with shot; fish with harpoons, &c. &c. He particularly invites inspection and trial on the premises, of the recently reduced size—¾ inch diameter, under 14lb.—REILLY, Gunmaker, 316, Holborn.

THOSE who know the taste of, and are desirous of using in all its native freshness and purity, Old MOCHA COFFEE, can procure it at Number One, St. Paul's Churchyard, where the rarest and very best, which, like good old port wine, has become, from its age, mellow in ripeness and richness of flavour, is sold by DAKIN and Co., Tea Merchants, whose vans will deliver this choice Coffee within eight miles of Number One, St. Paul's Churchyard.

SILVER TEA and COFFEE SERVICES.—Printed Lists sent gratis into the country, in answer to a paid letter, with full particulars of size, weight, and price, or purchasers will find a most extensive assortment of the Silver Services in the Show-rooms. Either Tea-pot, Sugar-basin, Cream-ewer, or Coffee-pot, may be had separately.—T. COX SAVORY, Silversmith, &c, 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

HOBY'S IMPERIAL BLACKING has no unpleasant smell; its lasting polish equals patent leather, it softens the upper leather, prevents it breaking, and alleviates the pain of corns and tender feet.—Bottles, 1s. 6d. and 1s. Paste, 6d.—London: 48, St. James's-street; Benetfink and Jones, 81, Cheapside; Dietrichsen and Co., 63, Oxford-street. Edinburgh: Duncan, 59, Princes-street. Dublin: Hodges and Son, 16, Westmoreland-street.—N.B. Especially recommended for Cleaning and Preserving Harness.

LEGHORNS, MILLINERY, and STRAW BONNETS. BRIGHT'S, 12, Ludgate-street (two doors above Everington's).—M. BRIGHT begs to announce her return from Paris, supplied with every Novelty. Beautifully Fine Leghorns, 20s.; Fashionable Millinery Bonnets, 21s.; Fancy Straws, an immense variety: Dunstable Straws of every kind. Children's Bonnets; Leghorn, Tuscan, and Straw Hats of every size. The Largest Assortment in London, all bearing a fixed Ready Money Price at the Lowest Scale of Profit.

STOOPING OF THE SHOULDERS and CONTRACTION OF THE CHEST are entirely PREVENTED, and gently and effectually Removed in Youth, and Ladies and Gentlemen, by the occasional use of the PATENT ST. JAMES'S CHEST EXPANDER, which is light, simple, easily employed, outwardly or invisibly, without bands beneath the arms, uncomfortable restraint, or impediment to exercise. Sent per post by Mr. A. BINYON, 40, Tavistock-street, Strand, London; or full particulars on receiving a postage stamp.

DAVIES'S FINE WAX-WICK MOULDS, 6d. per lb. Candles, 5d.; Botanic Wax, 1s.; German 1s. 2d.; Fine Wax, 1s. 5d.; Sperm, 1s. 10d.; Transparent Wax, 1s. 10d.; Genuine Wax, 2s.; Price's Composite, 8½d. and 10d.; Hale's ditto, 9½d; Yellow Soap, 46s., 52s. and 58s. per 112lbs.; Mottled 60s and 64s; Windsor, 1s. 4d. per packet; Brown Windsor, 1s. 9d.; Rose, 2s.; Almond, 2s. 6d. Sealing Wax, 4s. 6d. per lb. Ogleby's Patent Oil, 4s. 6d. per gallon; Solar, 3s. 6d.; Sperm, 7s. 6d. For Cash, at DAVIES'S Old-Established Warehouse, 63, St. Martin's-lane, opposite Slaughter's Coffee-house.

REPLENISH your stock of Cambric Handkerchiefs.—Ladies and Gentlemen will do well to give DISON a trial for these indispensables, whose stock is replete with warranted fabrics, and much lower in price than usually offered. His extensive sale has just given him the opportunity of purchasing a large quantity at a great reduction from the regular prices, and begs to draw early attention to them. Orders from the Country must be accompanied with a remittance, or reference.—DISON, Principal Lace-man to the Queen, No. 237, Regent-street.

PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS.—JOHNSON and CO., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street, Hatters to the Queen and Royal Family, Inventors and Patentees.—From the construction of the PATENT FLEXIBLE HATS the unpleasant pressure on the forehead is entirely removed, and by their extreme elasticity they are capable of accommodating themselves perfectly to the shape of the head; the crown, moreover, being ventilated, and the perspiration prevented from appearing on the outside of the hat, are additional advantages. As Ladies' Riding Hats they are light and elastic, and will retain their position on the head without the least discomfort.—Johnson and Co., 113, Regent-street, and Griffiths and Johnson, 2, Old Bond-street

BERDOES LIGHT WATERPROOF OVER-COATS, FROCKS, &c., for SPRING and SUMMER. These well-known and gentlemanly garments will be found most agreeable substitutes for any other outside coat. They are made in the best manner, and are thoroughly respectable—equally free from vulgarity and singularity; are guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and no untried novelty, having been in extensive use among the respectable classes more than six years. A Large Stock of First-rate Garments, in Llama Cloths and other new and greatly admired materials (manufactured expressly for W. B.) now ready, of which an inspection is confidently invited.—Made only by W. BERDOE, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill.

COGAN and GILLO'S NOVARGENT or SILVER SOLUTION, re-silvers worn out Plated Articles, by instantly depositing a Coating of Pure Silver on the surface. It has been highly approved by Dr. Ryan, Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Polytechnic Institution. Sold wholesale by BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon-st., London; and JOSEPH RODGERS and SONS, 6, Norfolk-st., Sheffield; and to be had in bottles, with full directions, at 1s., or four in one 3s. each, of all the principal Chemists, Silversmiths, and Furnishing Ironmongers.

W. Cogan & R. Gillo

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.—The Genuine are all signed on the wrapper, by the inventors,

ESTABLISHED 18 YEARS.—WOOLLEN, SCOTCH, and MANCHESTER WAREHOUSE.—In calling the atttention of the Public to a stock suited for the present season, the foolish assertion of selling cheaper than any house in the Kingdom is not held out as is too often the case; but, at the same time, we positively assert that no house can go to market better, or sell at a smaller rate of profit, our business being conducted on one system, viz., for Ready Money, thus enabling us at all times to meet the utmost competition. Every article in the Establishment is marked in plain figures, at the lowest possible price, from which no deviation can be made. We invite all to inspect and judge for themselves, being confident one purchase will ensure enlarged recommendations and support. No connection with any other house.—HILL and MILLS, 89, St. Martin's-lane, and Corner of St. Martin's-court.

MR. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH. Price 4s 6d. Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent.—The Succedaneum will remain firm in the tooth for many years, arresting the further progress of decay, and rendering extraction unnecessary. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Price 4s. 6d. It can be sent by post, free Sold by Savory, 220, Regent-street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Prout, 229, Strand; Johnston, 68 Cornhill; and all Medicine vendors.—Mr. Thomas continues to supply the loss of Teeth on his new system of self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from 11 till 4. Mr. THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

THE ATRAPILATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE; the only dye that really answers for all colours, and does not require re-doing, but as the hair grows, as it never fades or acquires that unnatural red or purple tint common to all other dyes. ROSS and SONS can, with the greatest confidence, recommend the above dye as infallible, if done at their establishment; and ladies or gentlemen requiring it, are requested to bring a friend, or servant with them, to see how it is used, which will enable them to do it afterwards without the chance of failure, Several private apartments devoted entirely to the above purpose, and some of their establishment having used it, the effect produced can be at once seen. They think it necessary to add, that by attending strictly to the instructions given with each bottle of dye, numerous persons have succeeded equally well without coming to them.
Address Ross and Sons, 119 and 120, Bishopsgate-street, the celebrated Perruquiers, Perfumers, Hair-cutters, and Hair-dyers. N.B. Parties attended at their own residences, whatever the distance.

GREAT SAVING IN SOAP AND LABOUR.
Royal Letters Patent, granted March 4, 1844.

WARD'S PATENT WASHING and CLEANSING POWDER, manufactured at the Oldbury Alkali Works, near Birmingham. One great advantage which this powder possesses over others consists in its not injuring the hands of the persons using it. Other Washing Powders contain carbonate of soda in its free state, which, by acting upon the skin, inflames the hands and renders them sore and wrinkled. Other advantages peculiar to this powder may be stated as follows, viz.:—A saving of at least one-half of the soap which is necessary when soda is used. A great saving in the labour of washing. The colour of linen and other fabrics turns out far superior in whiteness to that which is given by any other means. From the wear and tear caused by the rubbing and maiding being diminished, the durability of the clothes is increased.
This Powder will be found very valuable in Scouring Greasy Floors and Tables, in Cleansing Brass, Tin, and other Utensils of domestic use, and also Publicans' Pewter Pots.
 Warranted not to injure articles, though made of the finest materials.
Sold in packets, at 1d., 2d., 3d., and 6d. each, with directions for using. Be particular in asking for WARD'S WASHING POWDER, as no other possesses the same qualities.—To be had of all Druggists, Grocers, Oilmen, &c., or wholesale from the Manufacturers by application to Mr. P. WARD, at the Works as above, or in London, to Mr. JOHN MACARTNEY, 2, Coleman-street Buildings.

NEW ENVELOPE.—In consequence of the great variety of Counterfeit Envelopes of ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, and other disreputable means resorted to by unprincipled individuals for imposing on the public their highly pernicious compounds under the title of "KALYDOR," the Proprietors and sole Preparers of the Original and Genuine Preparation, acting under a sense of duty, and regardless of expense in the attainment of their object—the protection of the Public from Fraud and Imposition—have employed those celebrated artists, Messrs. Perkins, Bacon and Co., who have succeeded, at great cost, in producing from a steel plate a New Envelope of exquisite beauty. It comprises a highly-finished engraving of the Grecian Graces standing on a classic pedestal, on each side of which is a rich profusion of flowers springing from an elegant cornucopia: these tastefully blending with Arabesque scrolls and wreaths, encircle the Royal Arms of Great Britain, surmounting the words, "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR," &c., &c, whilst a plinth at the foot displays the Signature of the Proprietors, in red, thus—
A. ROWLAND & SON.
20, Hatton Garden, London, Jan 1, 1845.
ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, an Oriental Botanical Discovery, perfectly free from all mineral or metallic admixture. It purifies the skin from all Eruptive Maladies, Freckles, Discolourations, &c. To the Complexion it imparts a radiant bloom, and a softness and delicacy to the Hands, Arms, and Neck.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. Sold by the Proprietors as above, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

PATRONISED BY THE QUEEN AND ROYAL FAMILY OF GREAT BRITAIN, AND THE SEVERAL SOVEREIGNS AND COURTS OF EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.—This ELEGANT, FRAGRANT, and TRANSPARENT OIL, in its preservative, restorative, and beautifying qualities, for the Human Hair, is unequalled throughout the whole world. For Children, it is especially recommended as forming the basis of A Beautiful Head of Hair!!! Price 3s. 6d., 7s., Family Bottles (equal to four small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s.
CAUTION.—Each genuine bottle has the words ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL engraved in two lines on the Wrapper; and on the back of the Wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,028 letters.
ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, a fragrant white powder, prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue for preserving and beautifying the TEETH and strengthening the GUMS. It eradicates tartar from the teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, imparting the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; and gives sweetness and perfume to the breath. Scurvy is by its means eradicated from the gums, and a healthy action and redness are induced, so that the teeth, if loose, are thus rendered firm in their sockets. Price 2s. 9d. per box.
CAUTION.—As a protection from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of Stamps have directed the Proprietors' name and address, thus—A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden—to be engraved on the Government Stamp, which is affixed on each box.  All other articles under the same names are Fraudulent Imitations.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT to EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.
By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.
SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; CARVALHO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

RE-ISSUE OF THE

ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK, and PICTURESQUE CALENDAR FOR 1845.
64 pages, handsome quarto, gilt edges (no Advertisements), with EIGHTY ENGRAVINGS!
Price One Shilling.
It contains a greater variety of Information and seasonable entertainment than is to be found in any other Almanack. The Wrapper is beautifully printed in colours; and the artistical execution of the entire Almanack entitles it to a place upon every drawing-room table in the empire.
Published at the office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand.

EXTRAORDINARY NOVELTY IN TYPOGRAPHICAL ILLUSTRATION.
Now Publishing,

JOE MILLER THE YOUNGER, Price only Three-halfpence.
Contents of No. II.:—The Modern Philanthropist; or, the Silent System. Illustrated by the "New Patent Galvanic Relief Engraving"—The Mysteries of a Muff—The Late Copper Tank Case—Comforts Completed—Joe's Description of her Majesty's Visit to Drury Lane—A Few Scenes in the Life of an Anti-Mathewite—Monody on a Mopstick—The Hypocritical Husband at Home—The Accommodating Barber—The New Lights at Charing Cross—The Fashionable Summer Cut—The Advantage of Two Physicians—Uses of a Nose—Cockney Justice—Royal Taste—Scarce Articles—Taste for Drinking—An Affecting Epistle from Joe—A Civic Illustration of Nose-ology—Predilections in Drinking—Stanzas, dropped from an Alderman's Pocket at a City Feast—How to Become Consequential—Ode to her Majesty's Cats—Legislating Backward—The Lament of the Very Dirty Boy—The Tippling Blacksmith—The Railway Boards and the Press—Modern Courtship a Matter-o'-money—Nasal Analogies—An Irish Method of Embalming a House—Peel the "Bob Major"—Grist for the Young Miller, Illustrated.
"The Funniest, Cheapest, and Best Publication of the Day."
Office, 1, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and sold by all Newsmen and Booksellers.
To be Continued Weekly.

HEAL and SON'S LIST of BEDDING:—Containing a full description of weights, sizes, and prices, by which purchasers are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set of Bedding, sent free by post.—HEAL and SON, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, Tottenham-court-road.

INGRAM'S Manufactory, 29, City-road.

INVALIDS' and CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES.—Children's Chaises, Vis-a-vis Waggons, Phaetons, Barouches, &c. &c., from Ten Shillings to Twenty Guineas. Invalids' Wheel Chairs, from £3 to £35, with hoods. Second-hand, as well as new. Spinal and Self-acting Chairs. Immense and varied collections on sale or hire.

GIBBINS' CREAM OF ROSES AND ROSEMARY.—This esteemed and elegant Article is most respectfully offered to the Public, by GIBBINS, Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, St. James's-square, as the most delicate and effectual Preservative of the Hair. Being a pomade, it will be successfully applied in promoting its growth and luxuriance.
GIBBINS' EXTRACT OF ROSES AND ROSEMARY is a liquid made from the above-named plants, and when applied in washing the Hair, renders it soft and glossy; or, after illness, its astringent properties prevent the Hair from falling off.
No. 7, King-street, St. James's-square, London.

ANOTHER REMARKABLE CURE OF ASTHMA BY DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—Mrs. Willing, 71, Redcross-street, Southwark, has had an asthma for 14 years; nothing ever gave her relief until she took Dr. Locock's Wafers, four boxes of which have all but cured her. Nov. 5, 1844.
Dr. Locock's Wafers give instant relief and a rapid cure of asthma, coughs, and all disorders of the breath and lungs. To singers and public speakers they are invaluable for clearing and strengthening the voice; they have a most pleasant taste. Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 11s. per box. Agents—Da Silva and Co., 1, Bride-lane, Fleet-street, London; sold by all medicine venders.

THE EARL OF ALDBOROUGH AND HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—An astounding cure by this miraculous Medicine after every other means had failed. See Extract from his Lordship's Letter, dated "Villa Messina, Leghorn, February 21st, 1845. To Professor HOLLOWAY—Sir, I beg to acquaint you that your Pills have effected a cure of a disorder in my liver and stomach, which all the most eminent of the Faculty, at home and all over the Continent, had not been able to effect; nay, not even the waters of Carlsbad or Marienbad. Signed, Aldborough."—These wonderful Pills will cure any disease of the liver or stomach. Sold (also HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT) at Professor Holloway's Establishment, 244, Strand (where advice may be had gratis), and by all Medicine Venders throughout the civilised World.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED, without Springs, Clasps, or Wires: Loose Teeth Fastened; and Filling Decayed Teeth with Mineral Marmoratum.—Mons. LE DRAY and SON, SURGEON DENTISTS, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street, continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated Mineral Marmoratum, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the Toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also Fasten Loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of calomel, or diseases of the gums. Incorrodible Artificial or Natural Teeth, of surpassing beauty, to match in colour and shape those left in the mouth, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following charges:—A single tooth, 10s.; a set, £5 5s. Arranged on the most approved principles, and restoring perfect articulation and mastication. At home from Ten till Six.—Mons. Le Dray's "Treatise on the Diseases of the Gums and Teeth" may be had free, on application at their residence, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

TO THE CARPET TRADE.—THE ROYAL PATENT VICTORIA FELT CARPETING, made without spinning and weaving, having successfully overcome the prejudice created by competitors in other descriptions of Carpeting, and being now honoured with the patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty for its use in the Royal Palaces, the Patent Woollen Cloth Company, who are the sole manufacturers, inform the Trade that their new and beautiful Patterns in Carpetings for the present season are now ready for inspection at the Company's Warehouses, 8, Love-lane, Wood-street, Cheapside, where the Company have also a large assortment of elegantly-printed and embossed Table Covers, Window Curtains, Cloths for Coach-linings, Waistcoatings, Thick Felt for Polishing and Gun Waddings, D'Oyleys, &c. &c., manufactured by the same process. The public, in patronising the Felt Carpeting, will obtain, and for one half the price, an article superior in strength and durability to either Kidderminster or Brussels.—Manufactories—Elmwood Mills Leeds; and Borough-road, London.

SANATORIUM, or HOME IN SICKNESS.—The lease of the house hitherto occupied by this Institution having expired, and the house itself being unfitted, by its want of accommodation, for the purposes of the Institution, the Committee have long sought in vain for some suitable mansion which they might rent until sufficient funds could be raised for building. Unsuccessful in this attempt, they have been reluctantly compelled to close the establishment for the present. Convinced, however, from the experience they have had, that, if convenient premises could be purchased or built, the institution would not only support itself, but also afford the means of greatly extending its usefulness, the Committee have determined to exert themselves to procure the necessary funds for this purpose. So soon as these shall be obtained, the institution will be re-opened.—Further information may be had, and subscriptions paid to the Secretary, at the Office of F. W. Pott, Esq., 13, Godliman-street, Doctors' Commons; and Messrs. Jones, Loyd, and Co., Bankers, Lothbury. HENRY S. SMYTH, Secretary.

THE PROVIDENT CLERKS' MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION AND BENEVOLENT FUND, 42, Moorgate-street.

TRUSTEES.

Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P.	W. G. Prescott, Esq.
Thomson Hankey, jun., Esq.	Baron L. De Rothschild.

TREASURER OF THE BENEVOLENT FUND—John Abel Smith, Esq., M.P.
Forms of proposal for MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE to meet every contingency, ANNUITIES, ENDOWMENTS, LOANS, &c., the Fourth Annual Report, and every information, may be had at the Offices, where Donations and Subscriptions to the Benevolent Fund will be received. GEORGE THOMAS, Chairman.
April 26, 1845.

PROVIDENT CLERKS' ASSOCIATION, 42, Moorgate-street.—It is intended to celebrate the First Election of Annuitants, on the 28th of May, by a public DINNER on that day at the London Tavern, at Five for Six o'clock precisely, in aid of the Benevolent Fund.
JOHN ABEL SMITH, Esq., M.P., Treasurer, in the Chair.

STEWARDS.

J. B. Heath, Esq., Governor of the Bank of England	Sir John Hall, K.C.H.	James Pattison, Esq., M.P.
W. R. Robinson, Esq., Deputy Governor of the Bank of England	Thomson Hankey, jun., Esq.	Christopher Pearse, Esq.
John L. Anderdon, Esq.	James Hay, Esq.	G. Pollard, Esq.
Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P.	George Hibbert, Esq.	Sir John Pirie, Bart.
James Blyth, Esq.	Frederick Huth, Esq.	John D. Powles, Esq.
John Brightman, Esq.	P. N. Johnson, Esq.	W. G. Prescott, Esq.
D. B. Chapman, Esq.	T. W. Jones, Esq., M.D.	Sir Charles Price, Bart.
Thomas Chapman, Esq., F.R.S.	W. King, Esq.	A. W. Robarts, Esq.
W. Cotton, Esq.	John Labouchere, Esq.	W. Rattray, Esq.
G. Collin.	E. Lawford, Esq.	Sir J. R. Reid, Bart., M.P.
Thomas Dent, Esq.	Sir John Lubbock, Bart.	Baron Lionel N. de Rothschild
R. Durant, Esq.	George Lyall, Esq., M.P.	J. Sheridan, Esq., M.D.
Thomas England, Esq.	W. Lyall, Esq.	George Shore, Esq.
John Gay, Esq., F.R.C.S.	James Mackillop, Esq.	W. Snee, Esq.
J. W. Gilbart, Esq.	C. J. Manning, Esq.	Alfred Smee, Esq., F.R.S.
George Carr Glyn, Esq.	Stewart Marjoribanks, Esq., M.P.	T. Tooke, Esq., F.R.S.
Samuel Gregson, Esq.	John Masterman, Esq., M.P.	Martin Tucker Smith, Esq.
	Daniel Mildred, Esq.	W. Thornborrow, Esq.
	Edward Moxhay, Esq.	D. W. Wire, Esq.

BOARD OF MANAGEMENT.
CHAIRMAN—Mr. George Thomas.
DEPUTY CHAIRMAN—Mr. Richard Henry Jones.

Mr. John Clarke	Mr. Charles Lloyd	Mr. Henry Bion Reynolds
Mr. William George Hudson	Mr. William Maitland	Mr. William Stanhope Sawtell
Mr. William Jeremiah Jordan	Mr. Samuel Notley	Mr. John

SCENE FROM THE NEW COMEDY OF "TIME WORKS WONDERS," AT THE HAYMARKET THEATRE.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Mr. Jerrold's excellent comedy of "Time Works Wonders," judiciously curtailed on its second representation, has been repeated every evening with increasing success. The points—and the play is like a hedgehog, all points—continue to be taken by the audience with as nice discrimination as they were seized upon at the first performance. The play is admirably acted throughout; the mise en scéne has not yet grown dingy with its popularity; though we augur it will become so; and this good fortune is due to the spirited management under which the comedy has been produced.

Our artist has chosen, for illustration, the early portion of the 4th Act, where, in the well-appointed drawing-room of Florentine's cottage, Felix Goldthumb and Professor Truffles are surprised: we quote a portion of the scene:—

Felix. And the world has, I perceive, been grateful. Now tell me—where did you leave my father?
Truff. Coming here, as he says, to find the mate of the Honeymoon.
Felix. Professor Truffles, I am that mate.
Truff. You? And that young lady—
Felix. What of her?
Truff. Nothing, Your father and mother already doat upon her.
Felix. (Aside.) As I would wish.
Truff. She said she had a letter for your father, but—
Felix. Here it is,—I've just written it. A marvellous letter, crammed with travellers' truths.
Truff. And may I ask for what mysterious purpose?
Felix. This. If I can but melt my father—can but hear him wish me home again—
Truff. Melt him! There never was a softer—that is, never was so sweet a minded gentleman.
Felix. But his pocket has suffered so many gashes at my hands; and then it is his vanity to think himself firm! Seven years ago he lined his trunks with Roman history, and he's believed himself Cato ever since.
Truff. True. 'Twas but last night, your mother, speaking of you, told your father he hadn't flesh and blood.
Felix. And what said he?
Truff. He struck his heart, and talked of Roman bricks, and Roman cement.
Felix. Dear soul! he thinks himself marble, when in truth he 's the very best fresh butter. Nevertheless, this heroic whim I have to combat, and—Truff. To your heels, your father 's here!
Felix. The devil! (Enter GOLDTHUMB and MRS. GOLDTHUMB. FELIX is running to the centre door when enter from the garden Miss TUCKER, who confronts him.) The devil again!—(BESSY enters a moment afterwards.)
Miss T. Welcome, Mr. Goldthumb! How lucky too, for here 's the mate of the Honeymoon.
Gold. Where—where? He must have seen my dear boy, and he can tell me—
Bessy. (Coming down between Felix and Goldthumb.) Not a word, sir—not a syllable.
Gold. Why not?
Bessy. The poor gentleman 's got the tooth-ache.
Miss T. The tooth-ache!
Bessy. Poor creature! (Significantly to Felix.) He 's obliged to cover his face with his handkerchief to the very top of his nose, and to pull his cap quite over his suffering eyes. (Felix does this, wholly covering his face.)
Gold. Why,—why his eyes?
Bessy. The pain 's in his eye teeth, sir.
Miss T. A most sudden tooth-ache! The gentleman was well a moment since.
Bessy. He 'd been to the dentist's and—and—
Truff. Tooth-ache often leaves us at the dentist's door.
Bessy. And then comes again.
Miss T. All I say is this,—it 's very strange.
Bessy. Strange, Miss Tucker! If you only knew the middle watches this gentleman has kept, you 'd not think it strange.

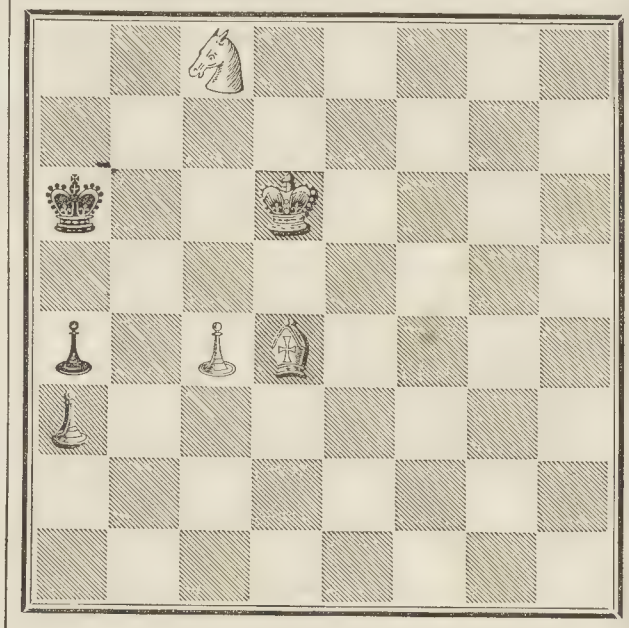
ROYAL HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

The Exhibition of this Society took place on Wednesday week (the 30th ult.) at the Rotunda Rooms, Dublin, when the several prizes were adjudged to the fortunate exhibitors. Our artist has sketched the scene in its full picturesque gaiety. The Rooms were crowded with company in elegant morning costume, who promenaded between the tables and stands upon which the flowers were placed. The company likewise promenaded in the adjoining grounds, where two bands played alternately on the terrace. The display was, altogether, very fine; and the superbly decorated saloon presented a truly delightful scene.

We have not room for the list of prizes. The surpassing beauty of the various productions contributed by Mr. Moore, from the Royal Dublin Society's Botanic Gardens, were especially deserving of notice: they were truly magnificent plants, and, distributed throughout the stages, imparted an air of grandeur and elegance to the whole. They consisted of Banksias, Dryandrias, Palms, and Rhododendrons, with a beautiful specimen of Eutaxia myrtifolia. One of the Rhododendrons of this collection was placed on a stage in the centre of the Round-room, and presented a blaze of brilliant flowers.

Among the articles not entered for competition was a collection of rare and beautiful orchidaceous plants from the garden of J. C. Lyons, Esq., Ladiston. These splendid specimens, as well as those exhibited in the classes by the same gentleman, excited the greatest admiration; and when we consider the expense and trouble involved in the transmission of such fragile structures from so great a distance, we cannot but admire the public spirit of Mr. Lyons which led him to encounter so great a risk.

EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY, AT THE ROTUNDA, DUBLIN.



CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—"A. J.," Trelethin.—Your solution of the first capped-pawn position is quite wrong. Mate cannot be given in four moves in the way you suggest. The position received is much too simple for any but the merest tyros. With respect to the Indian problem, persons wishing to see it should buy the work in which it was originally published.
"M. R. G."—In your miscalled "solution" to the marked pawn problem No. 1, *you say—"*4. P to K 5*th checkmate;" but we can see no checkmate. Why cannot the King retire to B's* 2*nd?*
"S. H. G."—The pieces are all correctly placed. Try again.
"Q. L. M.," Kensington.—All wrong.
"H. S.," Lincolnshire.—Such very silly positions are not worthy of being called problems.
"A. Z."—The King cannot go into check; he must not, therefore, in castling, pass over any square which is attacked by an adverse piece.
"M. A."—You may claim a Queen for every pawn you can advance to his eighth square, and thus, have half a dozen Queens on the board at once.
"Running Rein."—Your question is too vague. Do you refer to ancient or modern authors on chess?
"Rook."—Lewis' "Second Series of Lessons on Chess." Your solution is all wrong.
"R. R. F."—We do not intend to publish the Indian problem. It is published on the wrapper of every monthly number of the "Chess Player's Chronicle." Hastings, Carey-street, Lincoln's Inn.
"A. G.;" "A. J. M.," Dalston; "H. P.;" "H. D.;" "S. J.;" "R. S. S.;" "H. S.;" "J. A.," Birmingham; "J. M.;" "Novice."—The solutions are correct.
"J. L. C."—Hardly difficult enough for publication.
"A Member of the Reading Mechanics' Institution."—Your problem is very neat and shall appear shortly.
"Indagator."—Lolli's problem is not correctly transcribed. You give Black two Queens, which the author, we are sure, did not.
"L.," Newport.—The problem is ingenious, though somewhat easy of solution. "L.' should send a diagram of it to the editor of the "Chess Player's Chronicle." W have not space for a fiftieth part of the contributions of this description which pour in upon us.

PROBLEM, NO. 71.

The following position has been lately put forward with some parade in "Le Palaméde," as an original problem. It is, however, a problem which appeared long ago in the Chess Player's Chronicle, slightly modified.

White having to play mates in four moves.

WHITE.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM NO. 69.

WHITE.	BLACK
1. Q to her Kt's 3rd (ch)	K to R 2nd (best)
2. Q to her 3rd (ch)	K to Kt's sq
3. Q to her 5th (ch)	K to R's 2nd (best)
4. Q to K's 4th (ch)	K to Kt's sq
5. R to B's 8th (ch)	K takes R
6. Q to K's 8th (checkmate)

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, NO. 70.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to her B's 2nd	Q B P one
2. Q B P one	P takes P
3. Q to her Kt's 3rd	P takes P
4. Q to her B 2nd	P one
5. Q to her B square (checkmate)

GREAT MATCH OF CHESS BY CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN PARIS AND PESTH (HUNGARY) FOR 100 GUINEAS.

In November, 1842, a match by correspondence, between the Chess Clubs of Paris and Pesth was proposed by the members of the latter, and accepted by the players of the Cercle des Echecs. As the contest has excited a remarkable degree of interest throughout Europe, and is now, after a struggle of two years and a half, on the point of terminating, we have no doubt the moves in the two games played will be highly acceptable to the readers of our Chess Department. The leading players on the French side are MM. St. Amant, Laroche, Calvi, Devinck, Lecrivain, Saslas, and Chamouillet; and on the part of Hungary, MM. Szen and Löwenthal, with other players of Pesth whose names have not reached us.

PARIS GAME.

WHITE (PARIS).	BLACK (PESTH)	WHITE (PARIS).	BLACK (PESTH).
1. K P two	K P two	20. K to R 2nd	Q B takes Kt
2. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	21. P takes B	Kt takes B
3. K B to Q B 4th	K B to K 2nd	22. Q takes Kt	Q Kt to Q 2nd
4. Castles	K Kt to B 3rd	23. Q Kt P one	Q to K B 7th (ch)
5. Q P two	Q P one	24. Q to K Kt 2nd	Q to K 8th
6. Q P one	Q Kt to his sq	25. Q B to Q Kt 2nd	B to K Kt 4th
7. K B to Q 3rd	Castles	26. Kt to Q 2nd	B to his 5th (ch)
8. K R P one	Q B P one	27. K to R 3rd	Q to K 6th (ch)
9. Q B P two	Q B P takes P	28. Kt to K B 3rd	B takes P
10. Q B P takes P	K Kt to K's sq	29. B takes B	Kt takes B
11. Q to her B 2nd	K Kt P one	30. R to K sq	Q takes Kt (ch)
12. K Kt to R 2nd	K Kt to his 2nd	31. Q takes Q	Kt takes Q
13. K B P two	K B P two	32. R to K 7th	R to K B sq
14. K B P takes P	Q to her Kt 3rd (ch)	33. R takes Q Kt P	R to K B 2nd
15. K to R sq	K Kt to K R 4th	34. R to Kt 8th (ch)	K to his Kt 2nd
16. K R to B 3rd	K B P takes K P	35. Q R P two	K to his B 3rd
17. K B takes P	R takes R	36. Q R P one	K to his 4th
18. P takes R	Q B takes K R P	37. Q R P one	K takes P
19. K Kt to his 4th	Kt to his 6th (ch)	38. Q Kt P one

And Black have now to play.

In our next we shall give the moves in the game began by the players of Pesth.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 159.—Vol. VI. FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1845. [Sixpence.

THE NEW COLLEGES.

SIR ROBERT PEEL is at present standing between two fires; his endeavours to establish any plan of education, either for Priests or Laymen, in Ireland, seem to be anything but fortunate; if he gives a permanent grant to an exclusively theological seminary, he encounters the most violent opposition and is denounced as something resembling a political Antechrist. If he proposes to establish colleges where theological differences shall not be allowed to disturb the course of secular education, an immense body of religionists take fright again, and hold him up as "godless" and indifferent, and in matters of faith inclining to a Sadducean laxity of opinion. By the former plan he offended a most powerful body in England, but he, at least, secured the support of another powerful class in Ireland. The second proposal is more unfortunate in this respect, that it seems to offend one interest without pleasing the other, being at the present moment condemned by both.

In these conflicting forces a statesman finds his "chief difficulty," when legislating on such a question as education. It is by no means the first time it has had to be encountered even by the present Ministry. The clauses of the Factory Bill, which gave to the Church of England a power over the education of the children of the class affected by the measure, were assailed with as much virulence as the bill that favours the teaching of the Church of Rome. The jealousy shown by the great mass of Dissent in England was fatal to the measure in this respect, and the education of the working classes of the factory districts remains much as it was before. Thus, whatever exertions a Government may make, either to place the means of education within the reach of those who cannot command it themselves, or to give a higher kind of tuition to those who are shut out of our exclusive colleges and universities, it is met by the opposition of differing sects, or churches. Dissent defeated the attempt to give the Church of England the educating power under the Factory Bill; the Church of England and Dissent forgot their quarrel for a time, and joined in the effort to defeat the Maynooth Endowment Bill as a Catholic measure; and now the Establishment, and Catholicism are both banded together against a plan in which the State will not give the predominance to either of them. They each fight strenuously with one another, if there is the slightest appearance of a preference on the part of the State to either; they unite and attack the Government the moment it professes to stand neuter, and show equal favour to all. Now there is something exceedingly unreasonable in this. If a Government—we speak of the ruling power, not of any one party—has repeatedly found itself checked and foiled in all its efforts to advance in this direction by some one of these separate interests in turn, what is left it except to avoid all conflict with them? In England, the Dissenter would not allow the Churchman to teach his child; why, then, in the name of consistency, should both these insist on educating the children of Catholics in Ireland? There can be no objection to allowing each and every sect to teach their own principles to their own flocks; but a vast amount of mischief has always been caused by the attempt to force a creed upon others. All the efforts that were made to bring Scotland over to Episcopacy failed, though seconded by the power of the Crown, by massacres, by martial law, by military executions, by atrocities of every description. Laud and his master lost their heads on a scaffold, the throne was overturned, the sceptre of England passed to a plebeian hand, but Episcopacy, as the dominant system, never crossed the Tweed. Every attempt to make Ireland Protestant has signally failed; England accepted the Reformation from the King and Prelates with whom it commenced; but Ireland remained steadfast to the old church, and all it learned of the merits of Protestantism was from the savage and detestable policy of Elizabeth, who, by her armies wasted the land and murdered the inhabitants, seized its church revenues, and gave them to a host of unprincipled and profligate ruffians, who disgraced religion itself in the name of Protestantism, by their rapacity, profligacy, and violence. It was all in vain; the land of the nobles was confiscated, the people were all but exterminated, the country was made a desert; but Protestantism never took root there, and it would have been strange if it had, considering how its preachers

> Fixed their faith upon
> The holy text of pike and gun,
> And proved their doctrine orthodox,
> By apostolic blows and knocks;
> Called fire and sword, and desolation,
> A goodly, thorough Reformation.

The struggle was continued for centuries, the chronicles of which are crowded with horrors, and stained by those dark penal laws which remained in operation down to the close of the last century, and long within living memory. Yet what is the present state of Ireland? Seven-eighths of the people are Catholics. Would the English nation sanction another series of massacres and confiscations there for that reason? We apprehend not. Then there only remains to us the course of governing with justice and impartiality: and next comes the question, how is this to be done?

The law for a long period did not recognise the existence of a single Catholic in Ireland; there was not till very lately any recognised Church there but the Protestant Establishment; it is only of late years that any provision was made for education except through that Church. The consequence was, that this provision was wholly inefficient. As long ago as 1812, a Protestant Commission, of which the Archbishop of Armagh was a member, stated in a report that any project of education for the poorer classes of Ireland would be impracticable, unless it was clearly stipulated that it should be based on the non-interference in religious doctrine. It took nearly a quarter of a century to force this truth on the Government; but Lord Stanley at last established the present system of National Education, on the above non-interfering principle. In 1839, under its operation, there were 1581 schools, attended by 205,000 children; and the number of both has since increased. A Protestant society had been supported by Parliamentary grants for many years, without producing a hundredth part of this effect. Catholics and Protestants now attend the schools together for elementary instruction; their religious training is left to their parents and pastors.

This system, which has been found to work so well among the poorer classes, Sir Robert Peel now proposes to extend to a higher kind of education, that of the College or Academy, which may also be shared alike by Protestant, Catholic, and Presbyterian; this plan Sir Robert Inglis denounces as "godless;" we object to the term as conveying a falsehood most offensively expressed. He talks as if irreligion was deliberately encouraged, because all creeds are placed on an equal footing. In what other way is any education possible in a country like Ireland, where there are three established faiths? Because neither of these can have the exclusive education of the people, are the people to be for ever untaught? The plan leaves it free and open to all of them, to found and endow professorships of their respective creeds, but the State will not make attendance on the exclusive teaching of one of them the condition of admittance to study, or gaining honours; this is all there is in the plan to justify so harsh a term as "godless!" We hope the good sense of the people of both countries will not be frightened by this groundless accusation, or induced by it to withhold their support from a really practical measure.

WHITE-HEADED EAGLES, AT THE ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, REGENT'S-PARK.

WHITE-HEADED EAGLES, AT THE GARDENS OF THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

The singular and interesting spectacle of a pair of White-headed Eagles (Haliætus leucocephalus) building a nest in captivity, and joining together in the parental offices of incubation, under circumstances purely artificial, and very far removed from their natural instincts and habits, has, for the last month, been daily witnessed by thousands of spectators in the gardens of the Zoological Society, Regent's Park. The birds are now sitting, and a few days, it is expected, will bring the eaglets to light.

By Zoologists, the event is anticipated with a laudable amount of professional anxiety, as the future growth of the young birds, will afford an opportunity of testing the theories which have been propounded in support of "species," whose only claim to individual existence is suspected to rest on chronological changes of plumage in one and the same bird; and by the public the whole affair is justly regarded as a wonder, not merely on account of its unparalleled character, but in regard of the very domestic behaviour exhibited through the whole proceeding by these ordinarily unsocial and savage birds. The nest is scanty and shallow, made of sticks and straws, and contains two eggs, upon which both the male and female sit by turns. Our cut shows the male bird on the nest.

It is not generally known that the White-headed Eagle is the famous Bald Eagle of America, and that it is the national emblem of the United States. Benjamin Franklin, in alluding to this circumstance, says, "For my part, I wish the Bald Eagle had not been chosen as the representative of our country. He is a bird of bad moral character; he does not get his living honestly. You may have seen him perched on some dead tree, where, too lazy to fish for himself, he watches the labours of the fishing hawk; and when that diligent bird has at length taken a fish, and is bearing it to his nest, for the support of his mate and young ones, the Bald Eagle pursues him, and takes it from him. With all this injustice, he is never in good ease, but, like those among men who live by sharping and robbing, he is generally poor, and very often lousy. Besides, he is a rank coward: the little king-bird, not bigger than a sparrow, attacks him boldly, and drives him out of the district. He is, therefore, by no means a proper emblem for the brave and honest Cincinnati of America, who have driven all the King Birds from our country; though exactly fit for that order of knights which the French call Chevaliers d'Industrie."

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

You are aware of the excitement that was caused by the destruction of the grand organ which belonged to the Church of Eustache by fire. In England, the injury would have been quickly repaired, and a hundred chances to one that a more splendid one would have been erected in its place by the donations of a few wealthy parishioners. In the first instance, the Government authorise a lottery for its re-establishment; and then, M. le Comte de Rambuteau, préfet de la Seine, places the great hall of the Hotel de Ville at the disposal of those who wish to gamble for the good purpose. Here are exposed to view the various tempting objects to be raffled for—each manufacturer and donor have places for their specialties—to each article is attached the trade price—large as is the hall it is impossible to find places for the 50,000 articles which are to be drawn for. The hall is open for the public daily from eleven till five. The several salesmen and saleswomen have all the appearance of groom porters, and we fancy the sounds reaching our ears of "Make your game." The whole affair is intensely shabby, and reflects little credit on the spirit of the public functionaries, or on the wealth of the great city.

Horace Vernet has returned, and draws crowded salons; since his Algerine tour, he has become the most prononce lion of the hour. I can excuse the French enthusiasm in this instance, for it is well directed, and the object is right worthy the highest honours the public voice can bestow. I am to have a glance at his sketches, and I assure you I look forward to the hour with great impatience.

I was present at a most extraordinary scene two days since which took place on the Quai Valmy; a young girl, it appears, had been washing some linen on the banks of the canal, and, in endeavouring to regain a handker chief, fell into the water and disappeared. The crowds who witnessed the accident ran shrieking to and fro, but none made the attempt to save the drowning girl. Suddenly appeared a young lady fashionably dressed; the moment she was made acquainted with the circumstance she divested herself of her bonnet and shawl, and dashed into the water; more than thrice this brave girl laboured to save the drowning victim; at length, three young men assisted in drawing both females safely to land. The name of the heroic girl is Adele Chevalier, an actress. She was placed in a fiacre, and conducted to her lodgings; need I add, amidst the cheerings of the populace. This is an instance of devoted heroism which exceeds that of Grace Darling.

Apropos, talking of lilies, I have just returned from Nanterre, a charming little village, a few miles from Paris, from witnessing the interesting ceremony of La Rosiere, and an ancient and a graceful institution it is—a beautiful relic of a fine and chivalrous age, when female virtue was something holy, and not its only reward. The floral coronation took place in the old village church, in the presence of a considerable crowd, in which might be seen several gants jaune from the large city. At three o'clock, the Mayor and his Clerk, the Municipal Council, and the National Guard, under arms, went to seek "la jeune rosiere" at the house of her parents, to conduct her to the Mairie, and thence to the Church. She was dressed in white, and accompanied by twenty young maidens, the playmates of her youth and the companions of her adolescence, arrayed in the same costume. At the Mairie was read the deliberation of the grave Areopagus which had decreed the prize to her virtue. Every spot of the little Church was filled. The crown was blessed by the venerable pastor, and the pure emblem was placed on the brow of the happy and blushing girl, who was re-conducted to the bosom of her family to the sounds of music. "Never," say the inhabitants of Nanterre, "has a 'rosiere' stumbled in her path in after life." I have witnessed many customs of many countries, but never has any left on my mind and heart so vivifying and tender a memory.

Whatever may be the personal feeling—whatever the party politics of the observer—no one can deny that to Louis Philippe is due the peace of Europe. If he has raised himself on the ruins of a consanguineous throne—if he is profoundly versed in the habits and tendencies of the intriguing men of the day—it profits the nation and its neighbours. But at this moment his motions are curious. When M. Guizot threw up for a moment in his illness his portefeuille, he asked for two months congé, in the thought it would refund in his double capacity of ruling minister and leader in the Chamber of Deputies, he would be refused. But no, his request was instantly acceded to. Under the devouring wish of return to power, the case of the minister was marvellously rapid. But when he wished to return to the Rue des Capucines, he was advised not to hurry himself—not to adventure his precious health—to remain quiet two months—to take the benefit of the mineral springs. His zeal and devotion for the state prodigiously increased, but in vain. The anxiety of his Royal Master for his restoration augmented in the same ratio, and the visits of M. Thiers to the Palace have increased likewise in frequency. Did the King only wish to consult with him as to which would be the most curative waters for M. Guizot, the latter would, no doubt, have preferred consulting another physician. Now the question is, will M. Guizot travel and Thiers succeed him? This all the knowing ones assert will be the result; but then everybody knows that the knowing ones are frequently bitten—the difficulty is to hedge the bet.

FRANCE.

We are glad to learn by the Paris papers that the health of M. Guizot is very much improved.

Private letters state that the King and Queen of Holland will visit the King and Queen of the French this summer. "It is equally certain," say those letters, "that King Louis Philippe will visit the Chateau of Pau (now in process of restoration) in a month or two, whence he will go to Bayonne to have an interview with the Queen of Spain; also will proceed to San Sebastian from Barcelona. In fine, it is almost equally certain (at all events strongly hoped), that her Majesty Queen Victoria will, in the course of the season, pay another visit to the Chateau of Eu, where the King and Royal Family propose spending at least a month.

The bill for providing the matériel for arming the fortifications of Paris, has passed the Chamber of Deputies, in the form recommended by the committee to which it had been referred, by a large majority. The numbers were:—

For the bill	227
Against it	131
Majority	—96

It appears from the report made by the Committee on these fortifications, that the total sum expended since their commencement in 1841, is 108,000,000f., about £4,000,000, and that 32,000,000f. voted in addition to that sum by the Chamber, remain in the hands of the Government.

The Committee of the Chamber of Deputies appointed to report on the Paris and Strasbourg Railroad Bill, has approved the course proposed by the Government.

La Presse announces that the Duchess of Nemours is shortly to leave Paris for London, being invited to the fancy ball to be given by the Queen on her Majesty's birthday.

It seems certain that the French Government, from some strong motive, or from fear of Abd-el-Kader, are determined upon a campaign against the Kabyles. General Delarue, the military diplomatist, is to proceed to Morocco, to compel the Emperor to fulfil his engagements in respect of Abd-el-Kader.

In the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday the discussion on the line of railroad from Paris to the Belgian frontier, with branch lines to Calais and Dunkirk, and also that from Creil to St. Quentin, was commenced.

M. Ganthier de Rumilly opposed the bill on the ground of want of confidence in private companies to carry on such great enterprises. He advocated their being executed by the State, and afterwards let out to farming companies. This was not the intention of the bill, for it proposed, after their execution, to let them out to financial companies. This, in his opinion, was a bad system.

Some other members spoke both against the bill and in its favour, and the general discussion was declared to be closed, and the Chamber proceeded to the consideration of the articles.

The Revue de Paris asserts that some difficulties have arisen in the way of he negociations now proceeding in London, with the Duke de Broglie and our Government, for the suppression of the slave trade, but we are inclined to think that our Parisian contemporary has no authority for his [statement, which is probably founded on mere speculation.

UNITED STATES.

STATE OF PUBLIC FEELING IN AMERICA TOWARDS ENGLAND.

In the great part of our impression last week, we gave some extracts from New York papers received by the Great Western, with a view to show the effect produced in America by the declaration of Sir R. Peel, with respect to the Oregon question.

By the Caledonia, which arrived at Liverpool on Wednesday, we have New York papers to the 1st inst., being a week later than those by the Great Western. The Caledonia also brings late accounts from Washington, Mexico, &c., and a large number of passengers, one of whom is the Hon. A. Smith, Chargé d'Affaires of Texas, whose mission, according to the New York Herald, is, "to see what new conditions they may procure for Texas, provided she remain independent, and refuse annexation to this country."

The Oregon question naturally occupies a great share of public attention in America, and as there is in this country considerable anxiety to know the effect produced by the recent declaration of Sir R. Peel, we make further selections from American journals of different views. Upon the whole, the accounts may be considered of a pacific character, although it is true that there is no want of bluster on the part of a few violent organs. The semi-official Washington Globe has a somewhat ominous article under the head of "War with England." In an article on the subject of the Oregon it says:—

"Nothing was ever more true than the sentiment expressed by Mr. Polk in his inaugural address—that every extension of our empire gave an additional security of peace to the world.

"Yet have we been forced at times, and that, too, under the mildest of our rulers, from this, the settled policy of our government; and it is our solemn conviction that we shall soon again be called on to take up arms against our former and only adversary. It is perfectly manifest that they regard this as a favourable moment to renew the system of aggression upon us, which has resulted in war heretofore; which to submit to is only to invite new wrongs—wrongs premeditated, not for the advantage which accrues to them, but arranged and settled upon merely as the means of bringing on the conflict of arms, or an entire abandonment of our rights as a nation. The only mode to avoid this is the firm adherence by the President to the letter and spirit of his inaugural address. He will be sustained by the nation in that; for, notwithstanding the English Ministers choose to level their lances at Mr. Polk, it is not to be forgotten that the previous action of the House of Representatives had, by an immense majority, given their sanction to his language. By the truckling abandonment of our rights by Mr. Webster in the Ashburton Treaty, we lost the subject of controversy; forfeited the respect of the world and ourselves, and invited new and unfounded pretensions from our adversary.

"The Administration may, then, safely assume that England cannot permanently occupy any part of the American wilderness but by the consent of America itself. If England chooses to interrupt negociations, the crisis must be met: if negociations continue, the Administration can know but one rule—'to demand nothing but what is right, and to submit to nothing that is wrong.' Let the people support the President with union and a sentiment of nationality, and no foreign power will adventure on aggression."

To this the Courier and Enquirer replies:—

"This, so far as it goes, certainly indicates a disposition on the part of the dominant party, to insist upon our whole claim to Oregon, even at the hazard of war. We do not believe any such action will be sustained by the people. The question is pre-eminently one for arbitration. If our claim is not just, we ought not to insist upon it. Great Britain has heretofore offered to submit it to such arbitration, under the most liberal conditions. This proffer of peace was rejected—with more emphasis than dignity—by our Government. Should it be renewed, we have no hesitation in saying that it should be at once accepted. We shall run no risk of losing anything to which we have a right; and when rights are conflicting, mutual concessions—concessions which a neutral party would deem just—should reconcile them. If we should be plunged, by madness or folly, into war with England or with the world, we should do all in our power to ensure its vigorous prosecution and successful issue; but we trust the country will not become engaged in such a contest without having exhausted all honourable efforts for the preservation of peace."

The avowed and acknowledged organ of Mr. Polk is the Richmond Inquirer. The latest number of that paper has a leading article as follows:—"Whilst we would most earnestly deprecate a war with England, of which we see no prospect, we would not recede an inch from our national rights. If Oregon be ours, let us maintain it at all costs. Let, however, no rash proceedings mark the course of our Government. Let a wise, prudent, dignified, and enlightened policy be pursued. Let all fair and honourable measures be resorted to, which, while they will maintain our rights, will settle the controversy to the satisfaction of both nations, if it be possible."

The Washington National Intelligencer is as calm as a summer's morning in relation to the war rumours. It says there is no talk at Washington of an extra session of Congress, and adds, with reference to some of the rumours of the day, "there is no extraordinary activity" in the department of State, that we have heard of; the Secretary, we believe, eats, drinks, smokes his cigar, and sleeps as usual. We do not hear of any particular despatches "handed in by Mr. Pakenham," nor of course of any "anxiety" felt about them, or any "reply" to them that is "looked for with considerable interest." The intimations, from whatever source, are entitled to none of the consequences which appear to be given to them.

The Texas quarrel with Mexico had begun to assume a very hostile appearance, and there had been some further angry correspondence between Mr. Shannon, the United States' Minister, and the Mexican Government: it closed abruptly, by the Mexican Minister declining to hold communication or correspondence with Mr. Shannon, who, at the latest accounts, had quitted the capital, and only awaited the arrival of the despatches, which were on their way, before he quitted the country to return to the United States.

Several meetings of the Cabinet, it is stated, had been held, to consider the relations of the United States with Mexico. The result had not transpired.

Accounts from Rio de Janeiro to the 19th of March, published in the American papers, report the amicable settlement of the difficulties between the Brazilian and United States Governments.

The Pittsburg American, on the authority of J. R. Snowdon, Treasurer of he State of Pennsylvania, states, that the interest due on the State debt can only be partially paid on the 1st of August, and that bills will be issued for the unpaid part, redeemable out of the first monies which come into the Treasury.

The Bowery Theatre, in New York, had again been laid in ruins by fire.

COMMERCIAL NEWS.—The latest New York commercial advices say:—"We continue in an agitated state in respect of our foreign relations: not that any one thinks war is at hand, but that many fear, through the complication of difficulties, war may at last come. We do not deem such a result possible with common prudence on the part of this nation, and yet the bare apprehension of it causes doubts and hesitation both in the stock and money market. At this season there is generally great activity in home business—and such is the case just now, for produce does not feel the effect of the warlike rumours and apprehensions. Indeed, thus far the whole is confined to the operators in stocks, which rise and fall as rumours more or less angry, or more or less probable, prevail."

EARTHQUAKE AT MEXICO.

The Vera Cruzano, of the 12th of April, contains the account of an awful earthquake which desolated the city of Mexico on the 7th of April.

"At the moment we write," says the Sligo of the 8th, "the inhabitants of the capital of the republic are still under the influence of the horrors excited by the earthquake of yesterday, the disastrous effects of which we are still imperfectly acquainted with.

"Yesterday, at 52 minutes past 3 o'clock, P.M., the oscillations began, slight at first and then stronger. The direction of the motion appeared to be north and south. It lasted about two minutes. The shocks were terrible; nothing like them was ever experienced before, and the condition of the buildings too surely proves the absence of all exaggeration.

"We were by chance upon the great square at the time, and we witnessed a spectacle not easily forgotten. In an instant the multitude, but a moment previous tranquil and listless, were upon their knees, praying to the Almighty and counting with anxiety the shocks which threatened to convert the most beautiful city in the new world into a vast theatre of ruins. The chains surrounding the portico were violently agitated; the flags of the pavement yawned open, the trees bent frightfully, the buildings and lofty edifices oscillated to and fro; the immense arrow which crowns the summit of the cathedral vibrated with astonishing rapidity; at 56 minutes past three the movement had ceased.

"It is impossible yet to ascertain the extent of destruction. Not a house or a door but bears the marks of this terrible calamity. Many of them are cracked and greatly injured, others are tottering; and others entirely fallen; San Lorenzo, La Misericordia, Tompeate, Zapo, and Victoria-streets, and the Grand-street, have particularly suffered.

"The aqueducts were broken in several places. The Hospital of Saint Lazarus is in ruins, and the churches of San Lorenzo and San Ferdinand greatly injured. The magnificent chapel of St. Teresa no longer exists. At the first shock the cupola, a building of astonishing strength and great beauty, fell, and was soon followed by the vault beneath the tabernacle and the tabernacle itself.

"Fortunately, all those in a church so much frequented succeeded in escaping. At eight o'clock last evening, seventeen persons had been taken from the ruins of other buildings, and carried to the hospital.

"At three quarters past six, and a quarter past seven, two more shocks were felt. They were, however, slight, and occasioned nothing but a temporary renewal of terror.

"The authorities did everything that zeal and humanity could suggest to carry help to the victims, and restore the aqueducts which furnish water to the city."

Santa Anna's trial was slowly progressing. His health is represented as being very indifferent.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Papers have been received from the west coast of South America to the beginning of February. The republic of Chili was in a state of tranquillity. General Santa Cruz continued at Chillan as a prisoner of state, but was expected to be released before long, at the intercession of the King of the French. Business was not brisk; the simultaneous arrival of four valuable cargoes having tended in some degree to check the upward tendency of prices.

General Castillo had been elected to the Presidency of Peru, by a large majority; and that distracted country was looking forward to a more peaceful state of things.

In Bolivia everything was quiet. General Ballivian continued at the head of affairs.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

The House of Commons resumed its sittings to-day.

RAILWAY BILLS.—The following bills were severally read a first time, and ordered to be committed:—London and Croydon Railway (Enlargement); London and Croydon Railway (Chatham and Gravesend); London and Croydon Railway (Maidstone, Ashford, and Tonbridge); London and Croydon Railway (Orpington Branch); London and Croydon Railway (Chatham to Chilham).—On the motion of Lord PALMERSTON, the Dublin, Mullingar, and Athlone Railway Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed.—The Birmingham, Gloucester, and Wolverhampton Railway Bill was read a second time, after a division.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS.—Mr. WAKLEY moved "That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the management of the Royal College of Surgeons of England: also, to investigate the circumstances which led to the grant of an additional Charter to the Council in 1843, and into the effects produced by the operation of that Charter upon the interests and professional rank of the great body of the members of the College."—Mr. Wakley was addressing the house, when a motion was made that the house be counted, and there not being forty members present, an adjournment necessarily took place.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

After the presentation of several petitions against the Maynooth Grant, the Marquis of SALISBURY presented a petition from the master, wardens, and commonalty of the Company of Clothworkers of the City of London, praying to be heard at the bar against the bill for securing the due administration of charitable trusts in England and Wales.—Lord BROUGHAM wished the noble and learned lord on the woolsack would not press the bill forward, but would afford ample time for discussion.—The LORD CHANCELLOR was as anxious as any one that the bill should undergo a thorough discussion, and would fix the second reading of the bill for Thursday next.—In reply to a remark made by Lord Ashburton, the LORD CHANCELLOR said he thought the petitioners misunderstood the object of the bill. It was only applicable to charities under a certain amount. The only thing that would be required from these parties would be from time to time to state the amount of their revenue, and the application of their funds, and no public body ought to raise an objection to the production of such information. The administration of charities would in no way be affected, provided they were of such a nature as to come within the practical jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery.

Lord BROUGHAM gave notice, that on Monday next he should present several bills to their lordships, for the purpose of removing the many great defects which now exist in the system of our civil and criminal jurisprudence.

The Earl of WINCHILSEA presented 56 petitions from places in the counties of Lincoln, York, Lancaster, Gloucester, Kent, Essex, Devon, Surrey, &c.

The High Constables Bill, and also a bill for assimilating the law of Scotland with that of England with regard to the keepers of toll-bars selling spirits, were read a second time, and the house adjourned at half-past six.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

A number of petitions relating to railways were presented, and ordered to be referred to the committees on the several bills.

Mr. S. WORTLEY moved a resolution, in conformity with that recommended by the First Report of the Committee on Railways of last session, viz.:—That the following clause be inserted in all railway bills passing through this house:—"And be it further enacted, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or construed to exempt the railway by this or the said recited acts authorised to be made from the provisions of any general act relating to such bills, or of any general act relating to railways which may hereafter pass during the present or any future session of Parliament." That the said resolution be a standing order of this house.—Mr. GISBORNE did not object to the resolution in itself, but he had the greatest objection to its being made a standing order. He should take the sense of the house on the latter question.—A desultory conversation ensued, in which Mr. Darby, Mr. B. Hawes, Mr. S. Wortley, Sir G. Clerk, Mr Labouchere, and Mr. Gladstone took part, after which Mr. S. Wortley withdrew his motion, on the understanding that it was to be discussed on a future day.

The Lord Mayor of Dublin appeared at the bar in his robes of office, and presented a petition from Dublin in favour of the Mullingar Railway Bill.

The Liverpool and Manchester Railway Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed.

The Aberdeen Railway Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed.

On the order of the day for going into Committee of Supply being read, Sir R. PEEL said he trusted the house would, as on former similar occasions, agree to the motion he was about to propose, viz., that after Monday, the 2nd day of June next, orders of the day shall have precedence of motices of motion on Thursdays.—Mr. H. BERKELEY said he had an important motion which he wished to bring forward; and, therefore, before he agreed to the motion, he wished to have a day appointed for discussing the subject to which his motion alluded.—Dr. BOWRING, Mr. WARD, and other members, also said they wished for an opportunity to bring forward motions of which they had given notice.—Sir ROBERT PEEL said he wished for Thursdays to be given up as regarded motions, on the sole and only ground that the present bills before the house might be proceeded with.—Mr. WAKLEY said he believed that the Government had assisted him in making a house last night, but they did not use any exertion to keep one after it was made. He would not, however, oppose the motion if the right hon. baronet the Home Secretary, would withdraw that "mess," called the Medical Bill. The Medical Bill, which was delivered only this evening, was a most obnoxious measure.—Mr. S. O'BRIEN justified his conduct in moving that the house be counted last night.—The motion of Sir R. Peel was then agreed to.

NAVY ESTIMATES.—On the motion that the Speaker do leave the chair, for going into a Committee of Supply on the Navy Estimates, Mr. TRELAWNY rose, pursuant to notice, and brought under the consideration of the house the case of John Seccombe, mortgagee of the ship Velocity, seized and brought into Plymouth for an act of smuggling committed without the knowledge of the owner.—Mr. CARDWELL could assure the hon. gentleman that the Government had made every inquiry into the circumstance to which he alluded. They found it was impossible for them to interfere on the subject.—Captain BERKELEY then called the attention of the house to the present sytem of manning her Majesty's navy, and the difficulty that arises in procuring able seamen for her service.—This motion gave rise to a long debate upon the state of the Navy, in the course of which Lord PALMERSTON taunted the Government for not having made efforts for the suppression of the slave trade.—Sir R. PEEL denied that the Government was indifferent to the subject, and said that when the papers were laid on the table, the noble lord could, if he liked, bring forward a motion directly criminatory of their policy in this respect.—The house then resolved itself into Committee of Supply.—Mr. CORRY moved a vote of £129,000 on account of the Admiralty.—After discussion, this vote was agreed to.—Some other votes were also passed, and the house adjourned at a late hour.

IRELAND.

DEATH OF LORD CARBERY.—The Irish papers announce the death of Lord Carbery, which took place on Monday morning.

THE IRISH MEMBERS AND THE CALL OF THE HOUSE.—On Monday Mr. O'Connell spoke at the Repeal Association, chiefly upon the subject of the threatened call of the house. He strongly denied the authority of the Speaker to compel the Irish members to attend. He would not obey any such warrant. (Loud cheers.) There was but one contingency which could induce him to obey, and that was the use of force by any one in resisting it, or any ill-treatment of the persons employed to serve the warrant. His course, then, would be plain. The moment the Sergeant-at-Arms approached him, armed with Mr. Speaker's warrant, and told him he was authorised to arrest him, he (Mr. O'Connell) would desire him to carry his authority into operation by laying hold of him as his prisoner, and when that was done he would apply to the Court of Exchequer for a writ of habeas corpus. (Cheers.) He would not go to the Queen's Bench, for the Chief Justice knew as much about constitutional law as he did about Arabic or Gentoo. (Hear, hear, and laughter.) He would apply, therefore, to the Court of Exchequer, and try the question fully and legally; but he supposed it would scarcely be considered advisable to give him the opportunity of doing so. Mr. O'Connell condemned Sir James Graham's plan for academical instruction in Ireland, and agreed with Sir R. Inglis that it was a gigantic system of Godless education. The rent for the week was announced to be £420 13s. 1d.

FATAL ACCIDENT TO COLONEL SHELTON, COMMANDING THE 44TH REGIMENT.—A serious accident occurred to Colonel Shelton of the 44th Regiment, in the square of Richmond Barracks, Dublin, on Saturday last. The regiment had been ordered for an evening parade at four o'clock, at which Colonel Shelton expressed his intention of being present, and at two o'clock went out to ride on Adjutant Phillips's horse, his own not being in good health. On going round one of the squares of the barracks, which are very extensive, the horse shied, and ran away, and on passing through an archway struck the cook-house of the 6th Foot, which is also quartered there, when the Colonel was thrown and the horse fell heavily upon him. On being raised up the Colonel was found to be badly wounded in the back of the head and over the temples. Colonel Shelton was insensible until Tuesday evening, when he expired. An inquest was held on the body, and the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death," with a deodand of 1s. on the horse.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS, RECENTLY DECEASED.

EDMUND LECHMERE CHARLTON.

Edmund Lechmere Charlton, Esq., of Ludford, in the county of Hereford, of Witton Court, Shropshire, and of Hanley Castle, in the county of Worcester, was the son of Nicholas Lechmere, Esq., of Hanley Castle, and succeeded to the estates and representation of the united families of Charlton and Lechmere upon the demise of his father. The former of these, the Charltons of Witton, descend from one Robert Charlton, a cavalier in the great Rebellion, and a severe sufferer in the cause of royalty, who was the second son of Charlton of Apley Castle. This Robert Charlton was himself the father of Sir Job Charlton, Knt., who was a judge of the Common Pleas in the time of Charles II., and who, in the succeeding reign, was Speaker of the House of Commons, and was advanced to the dignity of a baronet. Sir Job's great grandson, Sir Francis Charlton, died unmarried in 1784; the baronetcy consequently ended with him; and the estates were inherited by his nephew, Nicholas Lechmere, Esq., the son of his sister Elizabeth, who had married Edmund Lechmere, Esq., of Hanley Castle. On thus succeeding to the Charlton estates, Mr. Lechmere assumed the additional surname of Charlton, and marrying Susanna, daughter of Jesson Case, Esq., of Powyck, had issue, with another son and a daughter, Edmund Lechmere Charlton, Esq., the subject of this notice. This gentleman, who was born on the 20th September, 1789, was formerly M. P. for Ludlow, but did not take a very prominent part in politics: in opinions he was a Tory. Mr. Charlton died on the 17th ult., at his seat, Ludford Park, Ludlow.

THE EARL OF STAMFORD AND WARRINGTON.

George Henry Grey, Earl of Stamford, in the county of Lincoln, Earl of Warrington, in the county of Lancaster, Baron Grey, of Groby, in county of Leicester, and Baron Delamere, of Dunham Massey, in the county of Chester, was born on the 31st October, 1765, and succeeded to the family honours at the demise of his father, the 23rd May, 1819. His lordship married the 23rd Dec., 1797, the Lady Henrietta Charlotte Elizabeth Charteris, granddaughter of Francis, fifth Earl of Wemyss, by whom he had issue with another son, and two daughters, George Harry, who was summoned to the House of Lords in his father's barony as Lord Grey of Groby, and who married Katherine, daughter of Francis, sixth Earl of Wemyss, and dying the 24th October, 1835, left a daughter, Margaret, and a son, George Harry, born the 7th January, 1827, who now, at the early age of eighteen, inherits the dignities and large possessions of his grandfather, and is the present Earl of Stamford and Warrington. The late earl was Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of Cheshire, and Chamberlain and Vice-Admiral of the coast of the same palatinate. His lordship, whose health had been declining for some months, expired on Saturday, the 26th ult., at Enville Hall, the ancient seat of the family, near Stourbridge, in Staffordshire—thus, being within a few months of completing his 80th year.

The house of Grey, Earls of Stamford and Warrington, is one of the most ancient and well-known in the peerage. It deduces an uninterrupted line from the Conquest, and has formed alliances with the Plantagenets and the Tudors. Henry de Grey obtained from Richard I. the manor of Turroc, in Essex, and had the same confirmed by King John, with the privilege of hunting the fox and hare in any lands belonging to the Crown, except the King's own demesnes: he was father of John de Grey, who was Justice of Chester, in the reign of Henry III., and whose son held the same dignity under the succeeding monarch. Their descendant, Sir Thomas Grey, was made Marquis of Dorset in the reign of Edward IV., and was grandfather of the third Marquis, Henry, who espoused for his second wife, Frances, eldest daughter and co-heiress of Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, by Mary, Queen Dowager of France, and sister of Henry VIII., and was in consequence advanced to the Dukedom of Suffolk. This Henry was the Duke of Suffolk, who, aiding the ambition of his daughter's father-in-law, Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, placed her, the Lady Jane Grey, upon the throne of England, and whose life, as well as hers, paid the forfeit of the treason. From that unhappy period the honours of the family were eclipsed until revived by King James I., who created the nephew of the attainted Duke, Lord Grey of Groby: this nobleman's son, the first Earl of Stamford, with his son, Lord Grey, one of the judges on the trial of King Charles I., earned an unenviable notoriety in deserting the Monarch who had given them an Earldom, and in taking an active part in the Rebellion. The descendant of this first Earl, George Harry, fifth Earl of Stamford, was created the 22nd of May, 1796, Earl of Warrington: he married, in 1763, the Lady Henrietta Cavendish Bentinck, daughter of William, second Duke of Portland, and was father by her of three sons and five daughters: the eldest of these sons was the Earl of Stamford and Warrington, recently deceased.

THOMAS DUNCAN, R.S.A. AND A.R.A.

The untimely death of this promising Associate of the Royal Academy, has followed closely upon that of the Royal Academician, Thomas Phillips, whose memoir we gave a short time ago. It is an event to be equally deplored. Mr. Duncan was a native of Perthshire. When twenty years of age, and not till then, he commenced the elementary studies of the art of painting; he, however, quickly made up for lost time: his advances towards excellence were surprising. His works, many of them well known to the public both in England and Scotland, give unequivocal proof of his genius. There are his "Sir John Falstaff," his "Sweet Anne Page;" and who has not seen and admired, either in the painting itself, or the engraving, his "Entrance of Prince Charles Stuart into Edinburgh?" One of his last works, "The Cave Scene of Prince Charles in Glen Morison," is now being engraved by Ryall. The productions of Mr. Duncan bore the stamp of a mind endowed with pictorial powers of the highest order. There appeared in them a natural arrangement of groups in composition, a correctness of drawing, a truth of expression, a fine distribution of the masses in chiaro scuro, together with an exquisitely sweet and masterly finish in working out the details, and a fine eye for harmony in colouring. Mr. Duncan was an industrious, sober, and frugal man, as well as an able artist, and he had just begun to receive the rewards of his talents and assiduity. He had lately had an order from the Marquis of Breadalbane for a picture, for which he was to be paid £1000. In the midst of these prospects, in his 39th year, and in the possession of an apparently powerful constitution, he was attacked by a physical calamity, which in a few months was to end in his death. An internal tumour, first fixing its action near the optic nerves, finally invaded his brain, and the sufferer gradually sunk, in defiance of all the efforts that his talented medical friends could devise to save his valuable life. What adds to the bitterness of this affliction is, that he has left a widow and six helpless orphans wholly unprovided for. We trust, however, that his country, and especially all admirers of painting and genius there, will come at once to their assistance.

THEODORE DE SAUSSURE.

M. Theodore de Saussure was the son of the celebrated naturalist of that name, and was himself the author of many works of great merit on physics and chemistry. He died recently at Geneva, in his 78th year.

COLONEL TOWNSEND.

Colonel Townsend, the late gallant commander of the 14th Light Dragoons, served in that distinguished regiment, uninterruptedly, for more than forty years, and only left the corps in India a few months since to recruit his impaired health. Col. Townsend entered the army as a cornet, by purchase, on the 24th January, 1805; he was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant the 8th March, 1806, and went with his regiment to the Peninsula, where it commenced that glorious career which imprinted on its colours—"Douro," "Talavera," "Fuentes d' Onor," "Salamanca," "Vittoria," "Orthes," and "Peninsula." In almost all the brilliant affairs of the Peninsular War, Townsend was present, active, and conspicuous. On the 8th March, 1814, he was taken prisoner in France, near the town of Pau, and on the expiration of his short incarceration, he embarked for America the same year, and there concluded, at the attack on New Orleans, the good service he did his country during the late war. Col. Townsend advanced through every stage of military promotion, and was gazetted full Colonel on the 23rd Nov., 1841: he was also aide-de-camp to the Queen. The Colonel was the representative of an ancient and highly respectable Irish family, the Townsends of Castle Townsend, in the County of Cork: he was the son of Richard Boyle Townsend, Esq., by Harriet his wife, daughter of John Newenham, of Maryborough, in the County of Cork, and succeeded to the paternal estate on the demise of his father, the 26th Nov., 1826. Col. Townsend died, unmarried, on the 22nd ultimo, at his seat of Castle Townsend, near the town of Skibbereen: his death was sudden, being the result of apoplexy.

MRS. DAVIES GILBERT.

Mary Anne Gilbert, an eminent philanthropist, was the only daughter and heiress of Thomas Gilbert, Esq., the representative of an old and respectable family of that name, seated at East-Bourn, in Sussex. On the death of Mr. Gilbert, in 1782, his daughter inherited his estates, and she married, the 18th April, 1808, Davies Giddy, Esq., D.C.L., a gentleman of high reputation in science and antiquities, and the successor of Sir Humphrey Davy in the President's chair of the Royal Society. Mr. Giddy assumed on his marriage the name and arms of Gilbert. In 1804 he sat in Parliament for Helston, and in 1806 for Bodmin: he died the 24th December, 1840. His widow, the subject of this notice, deserves indeed an honourable record. During her whole life her efforts were unwearied in establishing and maintaining schools for the education of the humbler classes in the neighbourhood where her influence existed. She supported with no less laudable devotedness the cause of ground allotments, a plan most beneficial in improving the condition and increasing the comforts of the poor. Her writings in favour of her plans were many and powerful, her ardour never abating in her continual theme of Christian philanthropy. Mrs. Gilbert died at her seat, East-Bourn, on the 26th ultimo: she leaves, with four daughters, a son, John Davies Gilbert, Esq., of Tredrea, in Cornwall, and East-Bourn, in Sussex, one of the co-heirs of the Barony of Sandys.

SIMON COUNT SARSFIELD.

Simon Count Sarsfield had succeeded, as the nearest male relative, to the property of the late celebrated Spanish General Peter Count Sarsfield. Patrick, the father of Count Simon, was a cadet of the family of Sarsfield, of Johnstown, near Carrigtoo-hill, in the county of Cork, and was also in the Spanish service, in one of the Irish Brigade regiments, called the Regiment of Ultonia, or Ulster, where he ultimately attained the rank of Colonel. Simon Count Sarsfield died at an advanced age, at Cork, on the 19th ultimo.

REGINA MARIA ROCHE.

By some inadvertence we have not before given a notice of this once popular writer, the authoress of "The Children of the Abbey," and of other interesting novels, which delighted our elders half a century ago. Mrs. Roche had long retired from the world. She died about six weeks since, aged eighty-one, at her residence, The Mall, Waterford. "The Children of the Abbey," on which Mrs. Roche's fame chiefly rests, was published so long back as 1798. Her earlier novels were "The Vicar of Lansdowne" and "The Maid of the Hamlet." Her other principal ones, published subsequent to the year 1800, were "The Nocturnal Visit," "The Discarded Son," "The Houses of Osma and Almeria," "The Monastery of St. Colombe," "Trenthick Bower;" and "The Munster Cottage Boy," which appeared in 1819.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The festival of Whitsuntide is described by the old writers on our national pastimes as the prime season of manly revels and such games. Easter was looked upon rather as a holy day, in the more serious meaning of the term—but in Whitsun week merry-making took its fling. . . . . .

In Somer at Whitsuntide,
When knights most on horseback ride,
A cours let them make on a daye,
Steedes and palfreys for to essay:
While horse that best may ren,
Three myles the cours was then,
Who that might ryde him shoulde
Have forty pounds of redy golde.

So singeth "Sir Bevis of Southampton," while others, his contemporaries, relate quaint instances of the pastoral jollities to which it gave birth. "On the Monday after Whitsun week," says one of these rural chroniclers, "at Kidlington, in Oxfordshire, a fat lamb was provided, and the maidens of the town, having their thumbs tied behind them, are permitted to run after it, and she who, with her mouth took hold of the lamb, was declared Lady of the Lamb,"—with certain attendant honours and profits. To be sure this may not seem sufficiently genteel to our City damsels, who resort to Greenwich Fair in silk attire, and attitudes furnished from the studies of Mr. Baron Nathan, and yet, on the score of profit and loss in morals, if not in manners, the balance was more probably in favour of those who chased the lambkin on Kidlington-green, than such as circumvent the Polka in the Crown and Anchor booth. The current week has been more prolific in the general round of popular pastimes, than such amusements as come properly under the head of sports. In the country, May games in all their varieties have been the order of the day, and haply, beneath some patriarch oak or elm, the evening star has rained lustre and influence upon lads and lasses discussing the vigorous jig with all the spirit of their sires. In the places of metropolitan assembly, every device of modern pleasure was put in requisition for the holyday people. Recreation wooed them by land and by water: steam awaited their convenience on rail and river. Tens of thousands whose fathers used to read of London as they did of Pekin and Pristen John, were seen lounging about Charing-cross, as if they had been to the matter born, while cockneys, whose progenitors know as little of Hyde Park as of Hyder Ally, called for Brighton excursion tickets as cavalierly as they would hail a Whitechapel 'bus; and some are said to have crossed over from Folkestone to Boulogne, and "had dinner" at a table d' hôte, just as they might a "chop and rabbit" at the Cheshire Cheese. Then the theatres—taste, has once more taken to stage plays—and the exhibitions, and last, but assuredly not least, Vauxhall, risen like a phoenix from its ashes, with Widdicombe as M.C., who, like the Wandering Jew, can never die! Who shall say that this has not been a brave Whitsuntide! All hail the festival at which the whole human family are welcome guests! "Pleasure," says the poet, "was born a twin;" rather, say we, a harbinger of good things, with whom all mankind should be coheirs.

The last five days produced a little cricket at Cambridge; a little boating from Putney to Chiswick; but chiefly a little race meeting at Newmarket, known as the Second Spring. This is quite a by-week at the head quarters of the turf; an occasion rather for making the fathers of steeds acquainted with their race, than offering general inducements to the indiscriminate seekers after sport. It has, indeed, once or twice, brought out a great creature—a winner of the Derby—in the person of the winner of the Rowley Mile Plate; but such fortune is not likely to distinguish it this year. The town, however, not sympathising with the domestic views of the proprietors of racing establishments, and in the desire that the last three days of its spring harvest might afford something more than a mere gleaning of the exclusives, latterly established a handicap called the Suffolk stakes, well knowing the miscellaneous attractions of such a contrivance. The scheme has been successful to some extent, and promises to go on and prosper. The Second Spring, as aforesaid, commenced on Tuesday, with a fair sprinkling of sport. The important (by prestige) Rowley Mile Plate brought half-a-dozen to the post, and was won cleverly by Captain Phœbus, whilom the Duke of Beaufort's, now the Duke of Bedford's. He is not in the Derby, which is a clear saving of £25 to his owner. This race settled the hash of Seaman, and of Paultons—nags once in good odour for the great essay at Epsom. The Suffolk Stakes was a good level betting race. Half-a-score horses were backed for it; the winner, Queen Mab, at 7 to 1. The favourite, of course—when it was known she would go—was Alice Hawthorn. Her weight—looking at the course (the last mile-and-a-half of the R. C.), was certainly not one to stop her, if in form in such a field. She cut up very badly, and, coupled with the signal defeat of Fitzallen, at Chester, it seems as if the old mare's day was over. This much the whole of the running at Newmarket has shown: viz.—that, with the exception of Idas, its three-year-olds are good for nothing.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY, MAY 12.—The betting on the Derby—the only event on which any real business was transacted—was confined to the favourite, Weatherbit, Pantasa, Pam, Old England, and Doleful, but, except as against the last two, without any matcrial influence on the prices. The rush, however, to back this pair was tremendous, but, so shy were the layers of the odds, to very little purpose. Young Eclipse, who is now located at Goodwood for the purpose, it is said, of being put to the test, was in favour at an improved figure, and will, no doubt, be "bonnetted" into the 20 or 25 to 1 rank. The Ironmaster qualification is still an open question, and, as we said long ago, is likely to find its way into a court of law. The Oaks betting was flat. The following were the market prices at the close:—

SUFFOLK STAKES.

6 to 5 agst Alice Hawthorn	6 to 1 agst Bishop of Rumford's Cob (t)	7 to 1 agst Young Lochinvar
5 to 1 —— Khorassan		8 to 1 —— Queen Mab

DERBY.

2 to 1 agst Idas (t)	14 to 1 agst Pantasa	33 to 1 agst Young Eclipse (t)
9 to 2 —— J. Day's lot	16 to 1 —— Alarm	35 to 1 —— Ironmaster
9 to 1 —— Forth's lot (t)	20 to 1 —— Old England	50 to 1 —— Maynooth
9 to 1 —— Weatherbit	20 to 1 —— Doleful	50 to 1 —— Jinglepot
14 to 1 —— Pam (t)	20 to 1 —— Newsmonger	1000 to 15 agst Columbus
	2000 to 25 agst Winchester.

OAKS.

6 to 1 agst Lancashire Witch	8 to 1 agst Rose of Cashmere	28 to 1 agst Glee (t)
7 to 1 —— Hope	11 to 1 —— Lady Wildair (t)

THURSDAY.—The subjoined list of market prices in the Derby is made up from the business transacted in London and Newmarket, up to Thursday evening; as introductory to which we may observe that the horses now most in favour are the four leading favourites, Old England, and Doleful: none others are in force with those who are supposed to be well advised. The Oaks betting is flat at present, but promises to repay those who have opened books:—

DERBY.

2 to 1 agst Idas	20 to 1 agst Alarm	50 to 1 agst Maynooth
9 to 2 —— J. Day's lot	20 to 1 —— Doleful	50 to 1 —— Laird o' Cockpen
8 to 1 —— Forth's lot	40 to 1 —— Clear-the-Way	50 to 1 —— Remorse (t)
9 to 1 —— Weatherbit	40 to 1 —— Miss Whip c.	60 to 1 —— Sister to Laundress colt (t)
11 to 1 —— The Libel (t)	40 to 1 —— Titmouse
15 to 1 —— Pam (t)	40 to 1 —— Young Eclipse (t)	1000 to 10 —— Adela colt (t)
17 to 1 —— Pantasa	50 to 1 —— Jinglepot (t)	2000 to 15 —— Cabin Boy (t)
17 to 1 —— Old England (t)	50 to 1 —— Fuzbos	5000 to 25 —— Winchester (t)

OAKS

7 to 1 agst Hope (t)	10 to 1 agst Rose of Cashmere	17 to 1 agst Maid of Orleans
7 to 1 —— Lancashire Witch	12 to 1 —— Lady Wildair (t)	(taken)

NEWMARKET SECOND SPRING MEETING.

TUESDAY.

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs. each

Duke of Rutland's f. by Beiram, 4 yrs	(W. Boyce)	1
Lord Exeter's Mocha, 4 yrs	(Mann)	2

Match.—Sir J. Hawley's Bishop of Romford's Cob, 8st 7lb (F. Butler), beat Lord Exeter's Celia, 7st 13lb (Mann), T.Y.C. 150, h. ft.—7 to 4 on the Cob. Won by a length.

50 sovs. for three-year-old colts.

Duke of Bedford's Captain Phœbus	(G. Edwards)	1
Lord Exeter's Adrianople	(Mann)	2

50 sovs. for three-year-olds.

Mr. Newton's Sister to Ma Mie 3 yrs	(Gooch)	1
Lord Albemarle's Tisiphone, 3 yrs	(J. Sharp)	2

WEDNESDAY.

Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each.

Duke of Bedford's Panther, by Liverpool	(Robinson)	1
Lord Exeter's c by Belram, out of Amaryllis	(Mann)	2

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each.

Colonel Peel's Little Finch	(Nat)	1
Mr. Rogers's St. Domingo	(Bartholomew)	2
Lord Orford's c by the Grand Duke, out of Miss Julia	(Chapple)	3

The Suffolk Stakes of 15 sovs each.

Mr. Payne's Queen Mab, 6 yrs, 7st 3lb (carried 7st 5lb)	(Nat)	1
Sir J. Hawley's the Bishop of Romford's cob, 5 yrs, 7st 9lb	(Bell)	2

Handicap Plate of £50.

Duke of Rutland's Welbeck, 4 yrs, 7st 8lb	(Whitehouse)	1
Mr. T. B. Charlton's Ruff, 3 yrs, 5st 7lb	(Dockeray)	2

Match, T.Y.C., 50 sovs.—Lord Exeter's f by Velocipede (W. Boyce), beat Capt Spencer's The Wryneck, in a canter.

The Jockey Club Plate of £50. B.C.—Duke of Bedford's Oakley walked over and divided the Plate with Duke of Rutland's Welbeck.

MANCHESTER RACES.—TUESDAY.

The Manchester Cup of £100, added to a handicap of 20 sovs.

Mr. Meiklam's The Best of Three, 4 yrs, 7st 12lb	(Hutchinson)	1
Mr. Worthington's Hooton, 5 yrs, 8st	(Marlow)	2

Plate of £50, the second to receive 10 sovs. Heats.

Mr. Robinson's Wasp, aged, 8st 9lb	(Hopwood)	1
Mr. Dawson's Montgomerie, 2 yrs, 7st	(Lye)	2

Won by a length cleverly.

WEDNESDAY.

A Cup of 100 sovs added to a Handicap of 15 sovs each.

Mr. Meiklam's Philip, 5 yrs, 8st 6lb		1
Mr. Buckley's David, 6 yrs, 8st 6lb		2

Free Handicap of 10 sovs each, and 30 added.

Mr. Dawson's T'Auld Squire, 7st 4lb	(Lye)	1
Lord Stanley's Ambition, 6st 7lb		2

The Filly Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 30 added,

Mr. Salvin's Marian Ramsey, 8st 3lb	(Bumby)	1
Mr. Cooke's Chemise, 8st 3lb		2

The £50 Plate, on Tuesday, was won in three heats by Mr. Robinson's Wasp (Hopwood), beating Mr. Dawson's Montgomerie and Lord Stanley's Ambition.

THE WAVERLEY CLUB BOAT RACE.

A very spirited pair oared race, with four boats, came off on Tuesday evening, amongst the gentlemen of the Waverley Boat Club. The distance was the same as that chosen for eights and fours in the Thames Regatta, being from Putney-bridge to Chiswick Ait.

Messrs. Watkins, Bennet	Light Blue	1	Messrs. Strutton, Mougredieu	Purple	3
A. Prior, E. Prior	Orange	2	Westmoreland, Green	Crimson	0

Off the Duke's Head purple was leading, closely pressed by orange; and in the heat of the race purple and orange accidentally made a slight foul, and light blue came up, and shortly after took the lead, and kept it. The struggle from the Duke's Head up to Hammersmith-bridge, between purple and orange, was very interesting; orange frequently rowed up to purple, and ultimately passed them, after a very dashing spurt. Won by about 60 yards.

THE ARIEL CLUB BOAT RACE.

The Ariel "scratch," four-oared race, was rowed on Wednesday evening, and drew a strong muster of the various aquatic clubs. The distance was from Westminster to Putney; and the start took place about seven o'clock.

Messrs. Rowland (stroke), H. Cooper, Bolbrit, Allen, C. Cooper (coxswain). Blue, 1.

Messrs. Peachy (stroke), Cheeswright, Williams, Longrove, Hendry (coxswain). Yellow, 2.

Messrs. Dodd (stroke), Frusby, Trigge, Gill, Tewnham (coxswain). Red, 3.

The gentlemen were started by the St. George's, in their eight, and went away from the bridge at the same moment. After being oar and oar for a few seconds blue took the lead, and although pressed severely throughout the race, maintained it. Yellow and red disputed the second place gallantly. Red had the best of it up to the Penitentiary, when yellow came oar and oar, and gradually drew a length a head. Red, however, were not so easily shaken off, and were close upon their adversaries' quarter all the way up. The race was won by two lengths; yellow two yards in advance of the third. The St. George's, Neptune, Waverley, Nautilus, Trident, Herne, and other clubs, accompanied the race.

NOTTINGHAM AQUATIC FESTIVAL AND REGATTA.

(From a Correspondent.)

On Monday the holiday folks at Nottingham were delighted with a very novel sight, which had been decided on as a prelude to the more exciting sports of the following day. The whole of the boats were marshalled at their moorings, at the Trent-bridge, preparatory to moving in a body, and between eleven and twelve o'clock, headed by the Admiral (Mr. Kenyon), proceeded to the canal, along which they passed on their way to the Beeston Rylands, where the annual dinner was to take place. The boats were upwards of twenty in number, and presented a most beautiful appearance. Each was decorated with evergreens, laurels, ribbons, and fanciful devices. The crews wore the colours that each patronised, and symbolical of the names of their craft. The steersman was covered with a magnificent arch of flowers and evergreens, and fire-arms were discharged in numbers, as feu de joies on the joyful occasion.

The dinner took place at the Boat Hotel (Mr. Bradshaw's), Beeston Rylands.

The place of contest was from the Wilford Ferry-boat to the Trent-bridge, a distance of a mile and a quarter, starting at the former, and winning under the arches of the latter. The Wilford Ferry forms the crossing from the inn to the villages of Wilford, Clifton, Barton, Ruddington, and other places which can be approached by that means sooner than by the high road lower down, and by the bridge. The Trent-bridge commanded an excellent view of the coming in, and was crowded with spectators, as were the banks on each side, to view the exciting spectacle.

COURT-MARTIAL ON THE OFFICERS AND CREW OF THE SKYLARK.—A court martial was held on Monday, on board the flag ship St. Vincent, in Portsmouth Harbour, to try Lieutenant-Commander George Morris, and the officers and ship's company of her Majesty's late brig Skylark, for the loss of the said vessel. It appeared that in consequence of the illness of Lieutenant Morris, the whole charge and responsibility of the navigation and conducting of the vessel rested on Mr. William Henry Crane (acting) Master; and, after hearing all the evidence, and a short but able defence made by Mr. Crane, the Court, after a short deliberation, were of opinion that due precaution had not been used in navigating the Skylark, particularly in Mr. Crane not having had the lead constantly going; they therefore sentenced him to be dismissed her Majesty's service, and acquitted Lieutenant Morris and ship's company. Mr. Crane appears, before this unfortunate occurrence, to have been considered a clever and correct officer.

SHIP LAUNCH AND ACCIDENT AT MIDDLESBRO-ON-TEES.—On Saturday evening last a handsome brig, fully rigged, was launched from the building yard of J. G. Holmes, Esq., of Middlesbro-on-Tees. She entered the water in gallant style, and was shortly after taken in tow by a steamer to be moved to the coal staithes to load her cargo. On turning her round, owing, it is supposed, to the weight of the masts and rigging, and the ship being tender and entirely without ballast, she capsized, and the vessel that a few minutes before swam so proudly, lay like a wreck on the water. Fortunately there were only five or six persons on board, and these all scrambled on to the ship's broadside. Several small boats and two or three steamers put off to the assistance of the brig, which, after a great deal of exertion, was towed on to the sand bank at the side of the river, and it is expected she will be got afloat in a tide or two.

WRECK OF THE 'SWALLOW" STEAM-BOAT, ON THE HUDSON RIVER

WRECK OF THE AMERICAN STEAMER "SWALLOW."

On the evening of Monday, the 7th ult., the city of New York was thrown into great excitement by the striking of the steam-boat Swallow, on a rock in coming down the Hudson river. It appears that the steamer left Albany at the usual hour in the evening, with a large number of passengers. The night was dark, and the pilot getting confused in going through the western channel near Athens, ran the boat, while at the top of her speed, on a shelve of rocks. In a few minutes she began to fill with water, and was rapidly sinking when the Rochester came by and took off most, if not all of her passengers.

A passenger says, that it is impossible to describe the consternation on board the Swallow when the accident occurred. The cries of women and children—men running about half frantic—the complete darkness of the night, and the uncertainty whether the next moment would not find all of them in the water, all conspired to render the scene terrific in the extreme. Many were disposed to jump overboard in the hope of swimming to the shore, and were only restrained by the persuasions of those who were more cool and collected. The water entered the ladies' cabin so suddenly that several of them were only saved by being drawn up to the hurricane deck through the skylights. In the midst of the confusion the coals escaped from the furnaces and set the boat on fire. In a few moments the whole of them would have been enveloped in flames, but for the arrival of the Rochester, and shortly after of the Express.

A passenger on board the Swallow writes:—

"You can imagine the horrors of the scene at this moment, when more than three hundred souls were thus exposed in the midst of falling snow and almost utter darkness. As the water reached the boiler fires, a sheet of mingled steam, smoke, and flame poured into the boat, illuminating the ghastly countenances with a sudden glare of vivid light, and completing the consternation. The conviction that the curse of fire was to be added to our other imminent perils, curbed the resolution of the stoutest hearts. But the rapid sinking of the boat extinguished the fires, and all was darkness again.

"In less than five minutes, by the blessing of God, the stern rested on the bottom, the water being above the windows of the aft-saloon state rooms. Several females were drawn out of state rooms by dashing in the windows. Two almost exhausted—one very aged, and now lying on board this boat in a precarious situation—were taken from the ladies' cabin by cutting through the floor. They had sustained themselves on settees, with only a few inches of breathing-room for their faces. The bow had been forced high and dry upon the rock, and the boat, split open amidships, was left rising almost perpendicularly upward, covered with anxious beings clinging to the bulwarks. The rest of the passengers were sadly grouped on the forward upper deck, many bewailing the absence of dear companions, and actuated by the most dreadful apprehensions for their fate.

"By this time the alarm had been thoroughly communicated to the shore on either side. The bells of the churches began to ring, and the river was soon covered with torches, waving in the fleet of boats that put off to our assistance; while the Rochester, which had found it difficult to get to us, and the Express, which had now come up, were gradually approaching along side. The sound of the bells pealing on the air, the shouts of those in the boats, the light of the waving torches and the wailing grief of many on the wreck, constituted features of the most impressive scene."

The New York papers contain several accounts of the disaster, and the details are truly horrifying. The number of passengers on board is variously stated. By some, it is given at 300; by others, over 500. It appears that the Express took on board 40; the Rochester, 90; carried to Athens and Hudson, 70; making a total of 200. At the lowest computation from 40 to 60 persons were drowned. The calamity is attributed to the reckless racing of the Swallow with other steamers; and, in one of the journals, it is remarked:—"If this racing is permitted, we shall soon hear of another accident much worse than that of the Swallow. The Hudson is surely becoming the race course to eternity."

The boat is broken into three pieces: the forward part lying upon the island, at an angle of 35 degrees with the water, and the bow some 10 or 15 feet above the rock. The Swallow must have been going at great speed at the time of the accident, to have run so far up on the rock.

We are yet at a loss to conjecture how it was possible for an experienced pilot, as Mr. Burnett, of the Swallow, is known to be, to have run his vessel aground, in the Athens Channel, with the Hudson and Athens lights on either side, and the bold outline of Prospect Hill in front, to guide his course.

FLOATING THEATRE.—"THE TEMPLE OF THE MUSES."

This novel aquatic home of Thespis has just been launched at New York.

It is constructed out of one of the old southern steam packets, called the Virginia, has a 42 feet beam, perfectly flat bottomed, 22 feet wide, with a keel of about 26 inches; she is about 385 tons burthen, 90 feet in length, and near upon 50 feet high, and draws about seven feet of water. The entrance is ten feet wide, placed about midships, where there is also an engine of about ninety-horse power. The stage, parquette, and boxes are aft. They are formed in the shape of a horse-shoe, and have altogether a very neat and chaste appearance.

It has a roomy little stage, four private boxes in the proscenium, one tier of boxes, a pit, and is capable of seating 1200 persons comfortably. The parquette is 42 feet by 36, the opening of the proscenium 27 feet: the stage is 42 feet wide and 45 feet deep; and the scenery is 16 feet high. The space between the wings is about four feet. At the back of the stage are two dressing-rooms for the ladies; and beneath the stage are the dressing-rooms for the male performers, together with dining-room and bedrooms for the whole company, engineers, &c. In the bows is a large and elegantly furnished saloon, in which all the good things of this life are disposed of, on terms the most reasonable.

It is about 36 feet deep by about 40 wide; in which are two handsomely fitted up bars, well furnished with good eatables and drinkables. The handsome marble-topped tables, the splendid mirrors and some elegant paintings—the beautiful cut ground glass shades to the lamps give this part of the vessel a gay and elegant appearance. A brilliant "Drummond light" surmounts the establishment, illuminating the whole neighbourhood, and directing the visitors to this floating dramatic temple. The whole establishment is brilliantly illuminated with portable gas, and is so constructed, that the north wind will scarce affect it, and she has already buffeted more than one heavy blow.

The orchestra has nine musicians. The scenery is from the pencil of Mr. Grain, one of the best artists in the country. There is an excellent company engaged, and the New York papers speak highly of the performances. One of them facetiously observes:—"Everything appears to go on swimmingly; there is, certainly, considerable floating capital and talent engaged in the concern, and there is little doubt but that, if they take the tide that is set in upon them, it will lead to success."

One evening the vessel was moored at the foot of Chambers-street, and on other evenings of the week at various other slips towards the Battery and on the East river; after which it proceeded up the North river to visit the several towns on its banks. Next, the establishment is to visit the principal cities and towns on the navigable waters of America, under a coasting license.

FLOATING THEATRE.—"TEMPLE OF THE MUSES," NEW YORK.

NEW CHURCH AT SOUTH HACKNEY.

On Thursday the interesting ceremony of laying the first stone of a new parish Church took place in Grove-street, South Hackney. Divine service was first performed in the present Church, at which attended all the workmen employed in the new building, with the committee, and a large number of the neighbouring clergy, besides a numerous congregation of the parishioners.

The service ended, a procession was formed to the works of the new Church, consisting of the parochial school children, the workmen, the architect, carrying the trowel, the purse of coins, and a drawing of the new edifice; the builder, carrying the mallet, triangle, and the glass bottle, followed by the Committee, the Clergy, and the Rector, with the Churchwardens

NEW CHURCH, SOUTH HACKNEY.

On entering within the walls of the Church (which are already advanced sufficiently above the ground to show the form and general proportions of the plans), the "Venite exultemus" was chanted, as the procession walked along the nave to the east end, where a large platform had been raised to the level of the chancel floor. The ceremony was then continued by reading a few suffrages, followed by the 84th Psalm, the Lord's Prayer, succeeded by a beautiful and appropriate prayer for God's blessing both on the work and on those who had "contributed of their substance" towards it. A parchment scroll, setting forth the name of the Church, &c., was then read, and placed in the bottle, with the coins, and the whole deposited within the foundation-stone, which was laid with the accustomed ceremony, by the Rector, the Rev. H. H. Norris.

We should not omit to mention that during the ceremony, a deputation of pupils from Mr. Eady's Grammar School advanced towards the platform, and presented to the worthy Rector a purse of money, to be added to the building fund, which the Rector kindly and impressively acknowledged.

The new Church (dedicated to St. John of Jerusalem) is from the designs of Mr. Edward Hakewill: it is in the style of the best period of Pointed Architecture—13th and 14th centuries: it is cruciform in plan; the tower and stone spire at the west end, rise to the height of nearly 200 feet; the spire is well-proportioned, being about equal in height to the tower; it has three tiers of graceful lights, and broaches supporting the Four Evangelists, beneath canopies placed at the four angles. The principal entrance beneath the tower is by a deeply recessed arched double doorway, with centre column; above is a pointed arcade, and the belfry story has in each face a recessed triplet, surmounted by a corbel-table and enriched cornice; and at angles of the tower are massive buttresses, projecting about seven feet. The nave has side aisles with flying buttresses to the clerestory; each of the transepts is lit by a magnificent window, about 20 feet high; the choir has an apsidal end, and is lit by seven lancet windows. The length of the entire edifice is about 200 feet. The materials are Kentish rag and Speldhurst stone. The present contracts amount to about £10,000; but this does not include the cost of the spire, stained glass, or oak carving, which, it is confidently hoped, will be provided for. The present funds have been collected chiefly by the exertions of the Rev. Mr. Norris.

After the ceremony, the company partook of a déjeuner at the Rectory; the workmen were regaled with an old English dinner; nor were the charity children and the tenants of the almshouses forgotten; and many were the prayers that the venerable Rector would live to witness the completion of this good and great work.

THE FREE-TRADE BAZAAR, AT COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE.

We resume our engravings of this great Demonstration, with a view of the Bazaar Hall, on the stage of the theatre; and a sketch of one of the stalls, and a fair marchande. There have been large additions made to the stalls since the first opening, and the articles displayed have been rendered more characteristic of their several localities. To the Shakspeare Room the largest additions have been made. It may be regarded as a new Manchester Stall for the exhibition and sale of printed goods, but it also contains some splendid specimens of drapery, contributed by Messrs. Dewar and Co., of Dunfermline, which have surpassed all former productions of the loom in similar materials. One of these is a communion-cloth, having the Bible and Crown damasked in the centre, and a crucifix on each side; the damasking is of silk, and the ground unbleached flax; this difference of material gives a strength and depth to the shading, which throws out the pattern in high relief. Opposite to this is a table-cloth, manufactured by the same gentlemen, Messrs. Dewar and Co., of Dunfermline, containing a coat of arms, similarly damasked. Around the room are printed ladies' dresses, of muslin, and similar materials, contributed by Messrs. Hoyle and Co., Swanwick and Johnson, Cobden, and several other manufacturers. Mr. Hertz has sent several dresses of printed lace, a new style of dress, of such light and gossamer texture that it seems as if it had been woven by fairy hands.

The Sheffield stall has received some very valuable and splendid additions. We particularly noticed a gold-backed knife, valued at twenty guineas, and several cases of table knives and forks, sent by Messrs. Nowill and Sons; an exquisite model of a steam-engine, executed with equal taste and accuracy, so as to be at once a handsome ornament in a drawing-room, and a valuable teacher of mechanical science. This model was contributed by Messrs. Chesterman and Co.

The China and Porcelain Stall, at the upper end of the saloon, exhibits some noble specimens of Wedgewood's unrivalled jasper vases, from New Etruria, in the Staffordsbire Potteries. Among them is a fine copy of the Portland or Barberini Vase. Among new contributions in the Gothic Hall, we may mention a lady's scarf, formed of the feathers of the Peacock and Guinea fowl, worked into flower patterns; there is a smaller scarf, similarly worked with feathers, but we did not ascertain from what birds they were obtained. These curious articles were sent to the Islington Stall, by Mrs. Hobson, of No. 5, Hamilton-place, New-road.

Among other novelties, we must not omit to mention a monster sheet of pottery tissue paper, displayed in the outer hall. It is a mile long, and has been manufactured entirely from the old ropes of a coal-mine.

An Ancient Lock from the strong box of Turton's Hall, Wolverhampton, manufactured by Messrs. Moreton and Langley, Wolverhampton. The Lock is of large dimensions, and contains much curious workmanship, and possesses 14 bolts, the whole of which are moved by a single key, working from the centre.

STALL AT THE FREE-TRADE BAZAAR.

We notice two literary contributions: one at the Sussex Stall, an original poem on Free-trade over all the world, contributed by Horatio Smith, Esq., one of the authors of "The Rejected Addresses," and lithographed in the fac-simile of his handwriting; and a poem by the Rev. Dr. Jenkins, at the Bloomsbury Stall, printed very elegantly on a glazed card. Miss Martineau has also contributed a tale for the occasion, which has been printed in a pocket volume.

Nor must we omit to mention a very beautiful muslin printed in gold by a galvanic process, by the patentees, Messrs. Vallé and Co., of Manchester, and presented by Messrs. Watson, of Holborn-hill. This new system of gold-printing is intended to supersede the more expensive mode of embroidering fabrics with gold and silver for window-curtains, and other descriptions of furniture. It is peculiarly adapted for long drawing-room draperies; the brilliancy of the gold is rather heightened than impaired by washing; and the fabric is as economical as it is elegant.

The Bazaar has been well attended throughout the week, more especially on the "Shilling Admission" days, when it was densely crowded.

TRIBUTARY LINES TO THE MEMORY OF THE LATE THOMAS HOOD, ESQ.

Farewell! Farewell! Tom Hood,
Many a day shall come
Before a head and heart so good.
Be destin'd to the tomb!

Thou wert Apollo's child,
Born in a frolic hour—
Each Muse and Grace upon thee smil'd
Within thy cradle bow'r!

They kiss'd thee all—then fled,
For Momus was at hand—
Who took thee from thy infant bed,
And gave thee this command:—

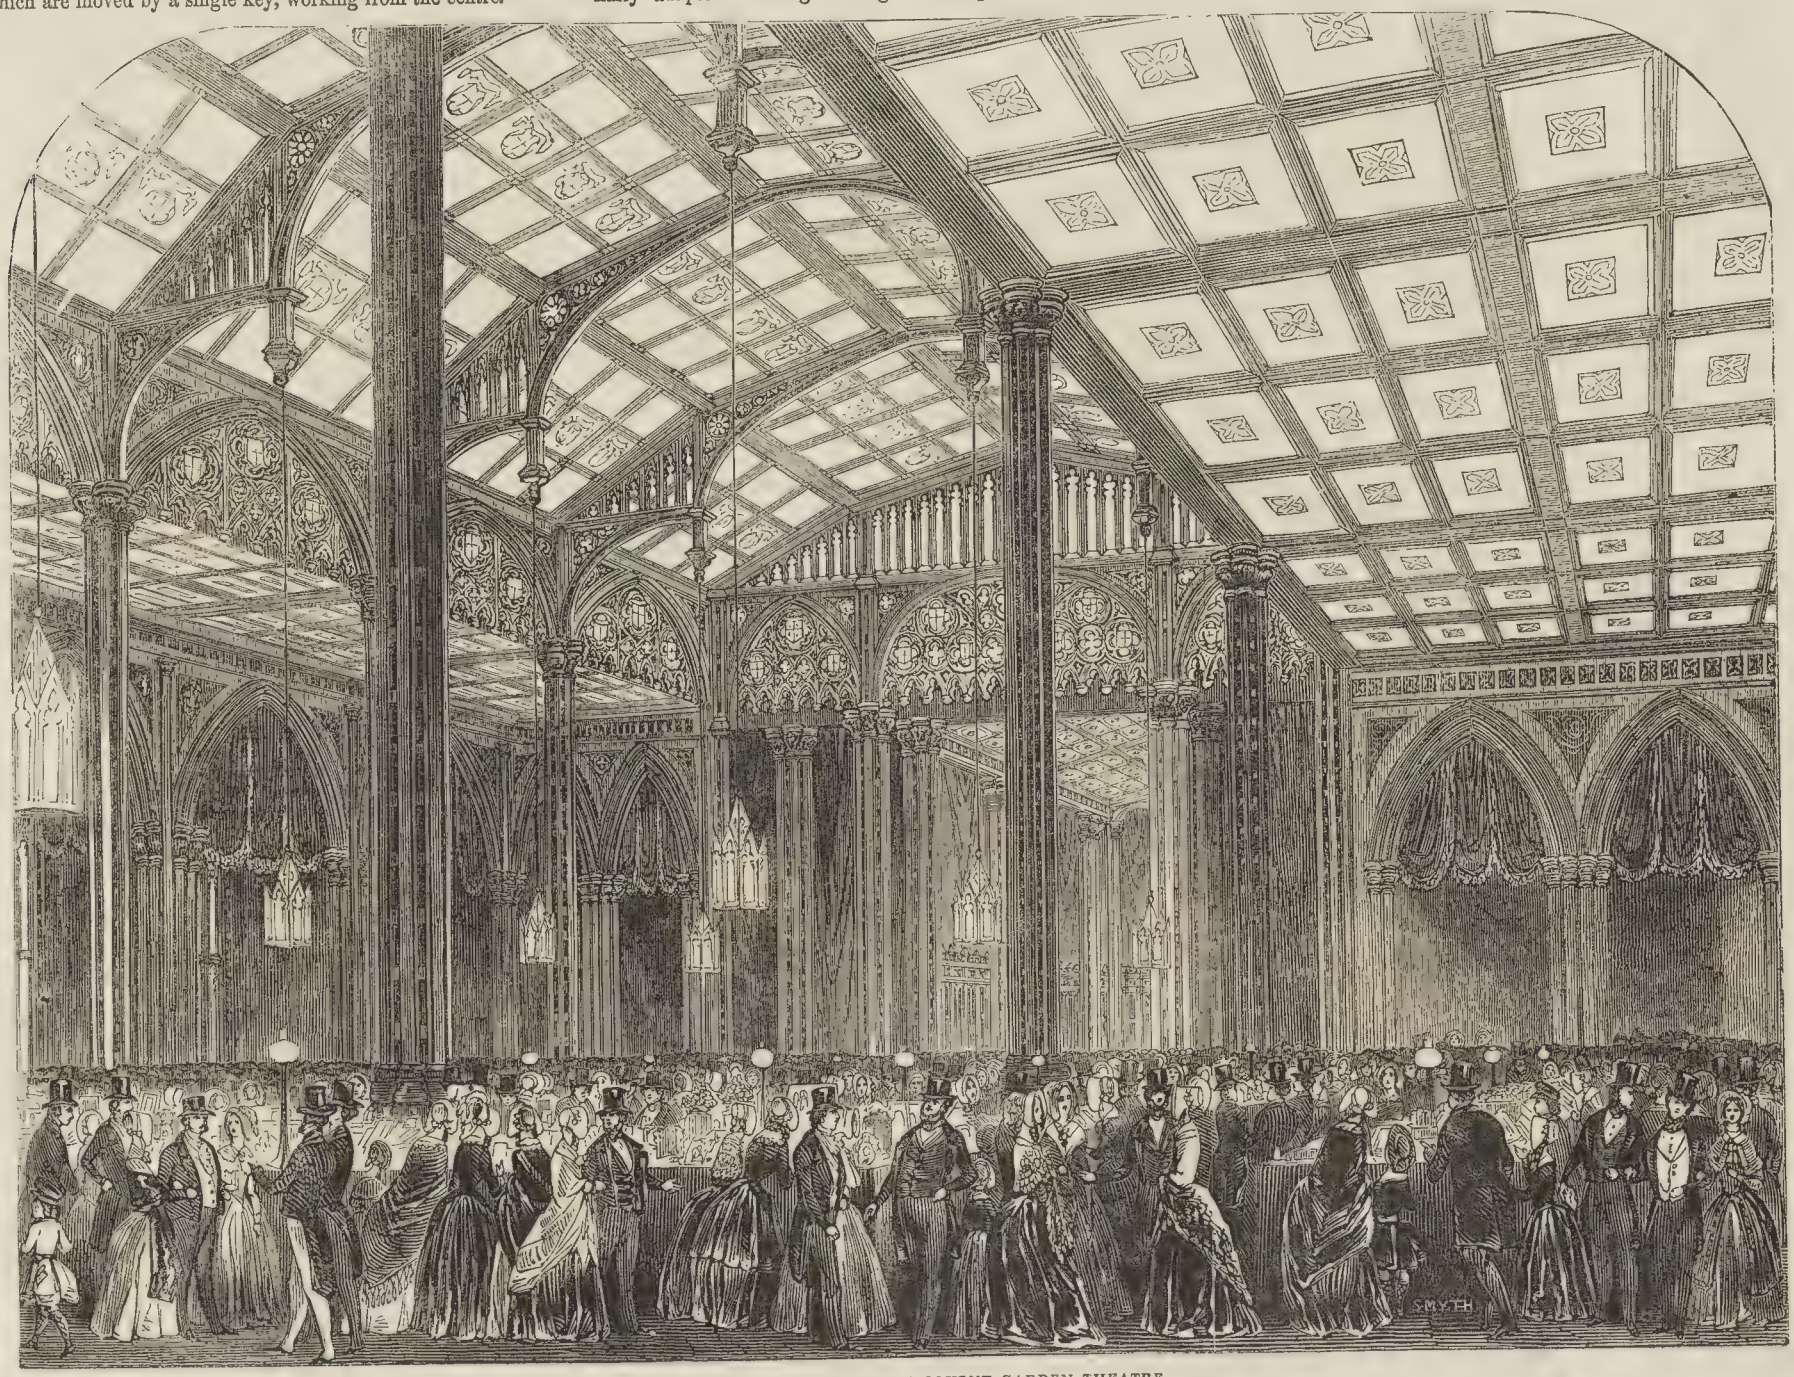
'But seldom heed the smiles
Of those who just have flown—
And I'll give thee a world of wiles,
Shall make all earth thine own.

"Thou shalt be King of Jest,
Of Wit's best witchery—
Go—heed this my farewell behest,
And Lord of Humour be!"

And it was so—for rare
Was thy all-serious lay—
Tho' once thy fancy thou didst dare,
On "A Midsummer's Day!"

Still laughter was thy god—
And ne'er was Wisdom known
Her hoary locks to shake and nod,
As 'fore thy mirthful throne.

But Yorick! Now where lies
The mind that caus'd the "roar?"
Far up within the blessed skies,
'Tis gone—to come no more!



Farewell! Farewell! dear shade,
Thy loss, 'tis vain to mourn—
Spirits like thine, that have essay'd
Heav'n's porch must back return!

W.

Grand Entertainment by the Goldsmiths' Company to Prince Albert.—The most extensive preparations are being made to make the grand banquet which will be given by the Goldsmiths' Company to his Royal Highness to-day (Saturday) exceed, if possible, in splendour, the magnificent banquets that have been given at Goldsmiths' Hall. The Duke of Wellington, Sir Robert Peel, and the whole of the Cabinet Ministers and Foreign Ambassadors, and the principal portion of the nobility and gentry have been invited to meet the Prince in the morning.

The Literary Fund.—On Wednesday the 56th anniversay of the Literary Fund was celebrated by a public dinnes in the Freemasons' Tavern. The Right Hon. the Earl of Ellenborough officiated as chairman, and was supported on the right by the Archbishop of Dublin, Chevalier Bunsen, Lord Colchester, Lord Mahon, Major General Pasley, and Mr. James; and on the left by Lord Brougham, Mr. Murchison, Mr. M. Milnes, Sir H. Ellis, Mr. Serjeant Talfourd, the Rev. Dr. Russel, Mr. Walter, Mr. B. B. Cabbell, &c. The company, which comprised some of the leading literary characters of the d y, numbered about 100.

A letter from Berlin, states that the Prussian Government contemplates the establishment of a national bank, with an issue of notes.

THE FREE-TRADE BAZAAR, IN COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, May 18.—Trinity Sunday.
Monday, 19.—St. Dunstan, Archbishop of Canterbury, died A.D. 988.
Tuesday, 20.—La Fayette died, 1834.
Wednesday, 21.—The first Railway Act passed, 1801.
Thursday, 22.—Trinity Term begins.
Friday, 23.—Francis attempted to shoot the Queen, 1842.
Saturday, 24.—Queen Victoria born, 1819.

High Water at London-bridge, for the Week ending May 24.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m
0 0	0 1	0 27	0 51	1 17	1 38	2 2	2 28	3 49	3 13	3 37	4 0

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"G. H. T.," Liverpool.—The Duke of Wellington was born at Dangan Castle, County Meath, Ireland.
"B.," Cork.—The charge is 6s. 6d. per quarter, paid in advance.
"An Old Subscriber."—The lady was divorced previous to her second marriage.
"A. E.," Bold-street, Liverpool.—Declined.
"E. M. J.," Liverpool.—The price of the book in question is 10s. 6d.
"W. G. S."—The work named is a sound one; its price may be ascertained of any music-seller.
"An Old Subscriber," Windsor.—The season of Her Majesty's Theatre usually closes about the same period as the Session of Parliament. The Subscription extends to sixty nights.
"A Subscriber."—Of Messrs. Shoolbred, Jermyn-street.
"Singleton*.*"—Copies of newspapers are only sent, by law, to the Stamp-office. Copies of books are only sent to the libraries named. Sir H. Ellis, British Museum. To the question about Napoleon—No.
"G. T N.," Liverpool.—Thanks.
"H. W.," near Whetstone.—We have not room.
"M. M"—Next week.
"J. L. C.," Isleworth, should complain at the Post-office.
"C.," and "S. B.," Limerick.—The price of our Journal is uniformly 6d. per No.
"W. W.," Newent.—On her Majesty's birthday, the houses of the tradesmen to the Royal Household are generally illuminated. There is no formal celebration of Restoration Day.
"W. E. H.," Oxford.—Dr. Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon and English Dictionary will be published shortly.
"Trevor."—The portrait suggested has been engraved more than once of late.
"J. B.," Everton.—The series will be continued.
"Equus."—"Ruff's Turf Guide" commenced in 1842: the last two numbers may be purchased; those for the previous years are out of print.
"J F.," West Malling.—In the Strand front of Somerset House, the summit of the attic is crowned by the British Arms, supported by Fame and another female figure, representing the Genius of England.
"J. P.," Manchester.—We have not room for the School procession.
"J. R."—The sketch of Ludlow Castle shall appear.
"S. E. B.," Cranbrook.—A canvas tilt, soaked in oil, and tied up closely, will be liable to ignite spontaneously.
"Sonnet on April," and "The Wanderer's Return," shall appear.
"H. M. M.," Oxford, may receive the No. in a bookseller's parcel by railway.
"J. A. M." (Land a head); Lines on the Tissington Wells; Lines by "D."; are ineligible.
"L. E. L."—University Intelligence is given in our paper, except upon occasions when the space is required by matter of more pressing and more general interest.
"C. E. H. A."—The Bill in question is for the general regulation of the affairs of the Company. It is impossible for us to find room for a description of the objects of Bills, unless of public interest; but the Bills themselves may be purchased at a very cheap rate.
"A Subscriber from the First," is informed that all the latest news is to be found in our Town Edition. It is of course not always practicable to give results of trials in our first impression, as sometimes they are not finished; but every case is given in a complete form in the latest impression; and these additions always appear in the first edition of the following week for the information of our country subscribers. This was done in the instance of the Whitechapel Distillery case; but as our correspondent appears to have received a copy from which the result was withdrawn, we repeat that the verdict was for the Crown, on the 2nd count. The Jury gave their opinion that there was no proof of a fraudulent use having been made of the communication. A verdict was taken by consent for £75,000, and a verdict of Not Guilty was given on the remaining counts.
"Zaccheus."—Lord Glenlyon sits in the House of Lords in right of the Barony of Glenlyon, which was conferred by patent, in 1821, on his Lordship's father, the late Lord James Murray, second son of John, fourth Duke of Atholl. The meaning of the motto "Furth Fortune, and fill the fetters," appears to be "Follow fortune, and make as many prisoners as you can," allusive to the success in war so much prized in early times by the Scots.
"A Subscriber," Cornhill.—Our correspondent does not state upon what style of architecture he wishes to obtain a practical work.
"W. H."—I. H. S. is an abbreviation for Jesus Hominum Salvator, Jesus the Saviour of Mankind.
"Q. Q." will find further information on St. George in a work just published by Murray, entitled, "Feasts and Fasts."
"L. M. C."—The charge for admission to the Exhibition of the Royal Academy is One Shilling.
"A. B. Z.," Milford Haven.—The act would be illegal.
"O. P. Q.." Kidderminster, had better write to the Secretary to the General Post-Office.
"Glaukopis."—We do not give medical advice.
"Teddy the Tiler."—The first named actor is the most popular of the three named by our correspondent.
"Juvenis" should consult the "Cyclopædia of Practical Receipts."
"Canis" should appeal
"A Subscriber," Middlesbro.—We have not room.
"P. T. R.," Ludlow, may procure the requisite instruments at a surgical instrument maker's.
"A Subscriber."—The New Testament is translated from the Greek, Hebrew, and Syro-Chaldaic. The address of Heralds' College is in the City: fees are customary.
"Moneydie" should refer to our edition of the last Census of England and Wales.
 We are compelled to defer our Chess Department, this week, for want of room.
Erratum.—In the account of the Capture of a Slave Vessel in our last number, page 301, for "Congo," read "Coanzo," a smaller river about 200 miles southward of the Congo.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1845.

The indefatigable attention to public business which Sir Robert Peel exacts from the House of Commons, has prevented the holidays from absorbing the whole of the week; but they have still occupied enough of it to render the topics of home-interest very few. The only question in fact, before the public, is the new scheme of Academic Education in Ireland; on which we have touched in another place. To compensate for this, the intelligence from America is rather important. It enables us to judge of the effect of the declarations made by Sir Robert Peel and Lord Aberdeen, in their places in Parliament, with respect to the disputed territory of Oregon. The general tone of the American journals is pacific; they express a desire for the quiet and amicable settlement of the question which we are sure will be echoed on this side the Atlantic. A war between this country and America would merely result in doing each other an immense deal of injury, while it would leave the cause of the quarrel in the same state as ever. A war of resistance to invasion may be unavoidable, even in an age of civilization; but one for the possession of a comparatively worthless and barren territory, as yet peopled by neither nation, though it is claimed by both, would be a folly as well as a calamity. The nature of the territory itself is such that it could not be held, with anything like an effectual occupancy by any military force this country could spare; we might take possession of the chief points of the coast, by sending troops from India and China, long before America could send any naval force round Cape Horn, and then northward, to oppose us; as to marching any large body of troops from the Western States into the heart of the territory, or to the coast, it is a military impossibility; the war once begun would be carried on everywhere except on the soil contended for; the commerce of both countries would be ruined; the Southern States of the Union would lose their great cotton market; our manufacturing population would be thrown out of work and reduced to destitution; on both sides a great amount of human misery would be created, without one single advantage, for we hope both England and America have outgrown the weakness that sees any advantage in the mere "glory" of war. With such a question pending between us and France we should really tremble for the peace of Europe; but two really great commercial nations are bound over to keep peace towards each other under the most grievous penalties, and they each know too well what they have to lose, to engage in that desperate game, in which all is risked and nothing can be won. Putting aside, then, all apprehensions of war, we think it quite as well that the matter is brought to something like an issue; it might have lingered on for many years, like the boundary question, but for the rash speech of Mr. Polk; the Americans express some degree of wonder that we should have attached so much importance to an address "horribly stuffed with epithets of war," when there was no purpose behind it, other than pacific. A very fair amount of frothy nonsense is talked at the hustings in an English election, about the "flag that braved," and all that sort of thing; but a president of one of the great people of the world, stands in a much more elevated position than the candidate for a "six hundred and fifty-eighth share" of the responsibility of the Government, as Lord Francis Egerton describes his Membership. As far as other countries are concerned, the President of America is the Government, and the policy of that Government is considered to be indicated by his words. The absurd bombast of Lord Ellenborough, in his "songs of triumph," were fatal to his reputation, and as they "stripped him out of his Lieutenancy," he had better have copied Napoleon a little less, and attended to his instructions a little more; it is dangerous for a State to have what Lord Brougham calls a "brilliant" governor, particularly when that "brilliancy" chooses to exhibit itself in a warlike manner. There is too much of a gunpowder character about it; like a firework, it is dazzling, brief and expensive, with the risk of suddenly exploding, to the destruction of those who handle it, or of setting all round it in a blaze. We hope Mr. Polk may use a little more discretion in his language in future, and not make both America and England uneasy. It is reported that Mr. Van Buren will be sent over here on a special mission on the subject. We are glad to hear it, assured that he will be received with all respect and consideration, and we hope he will be able to bring the dispute to a close as satisfactory to both parties as that which attended the mission of Lord Ashburton to the United States.

CAPTAIN TAYLER'S BREAKWATER.

To the Editor of the Illustrated London News.

I observe, in your paper of Saturday week, an accurate engraving of my Breakwater, moored off Brighton; which, I beg to inform you, was laid down in the early part of December, and completed by the 24th of that month; since when it has encountered several very severe gales, without sustaining the slightest injury. Indeed, so effective has it proved, that nothing more than the spray has broken upon the lighthouse fixed upon one of the sections; and the water within it has been so calmed that a small boat has been riding within it all the winter without shipping any water. There have been several very severe gales to try it; particularly the one which inundated Dover on the 28th February, and caused such devastation in the Channel; besides others which have caused several large vessels to be wrecked. The pilots of Shoreham, who have often seen the operation of its checking the violence of the sea, have given it their most unqualified approbation; and they speak in the highest manner of the noble way in which it rides during a storm, and completely breaks the violence of the tempest.

M. Tayler, Capt. R.N., C.B.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

Christening of the Son of the Duke and Duchess of Montrose.—The ceremony of christening the infant son and heir of the Duke and Duchess of Montrose took place on Monday morning, at the church of St. George, Hanover-square, in the presence of a select family circle. The Duke of Rutland, Lord William Graham, and Lady Ernest Bruce stood sponsors for the noble infant, which received the patronymic of "James." In the evening the Duke and Duchess of Montrose gave a magnificent banquet in honour of the event at the family mansion in St. James's-square, on which occasion they were honoured with the presence of the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburg Strelitz, Prince George of Cambridge, and a distinguished circle of the nobility.

Reported Royal Visit to Southam.—There is a report of its being the intention of her Majesty to pay a visit to the Earl of Ellenborough, at Southam Hall, during the coming summer.

The Queen's Visit to Ireland.—The Lord Mayor of Dublin has arrived in London, to present an address to her Majesty, praying that her Majesty may be graciously pleased to visit Ireland in the course of the present year. This address is to be presented to the Queen in a few days, when it will be definitively known whether the rumoured visit is to take place.

The Duchess of Northumberland's Soiree.—The Duchess of Northumberland had a soirée on Wednesday evening, at Northumberland House, the magnificent saloons of which were thrown open on the occasion for the first time this season. The card of invitation described the party as a "small and early" réunion. The guests, therefore, were not numerous, but they comprised many leading members of the aristocracy, and several foreign ministers.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE. May 9.

At a congregation just held the following degrees were conferred:—

B.D.—John Robinson Hutchinson, St. John's College.

M.A.—The Hon. George Denman, Trinity College; Horatio Mansfield, Trinity College; William Williamson Newbould, Trinity College; William Baliol Brett, Caius College; Edgar William Montagu, Caius College; John Fenwick, Corpus Christi College; Richard Surtees, Corpus Christi College; Thomas Bennett, Queen's College; John Mathew Ridley, Jesus College.

LL.B.—James Blencowe, Christ's College.

B.A.—Charles Bethune Ewart, Trinity College; Mortimer Manley, Queen's College; Henry Thomas Veness, Queen's College; John Bartholomew Vale, Emmanuel College.

May 15.

Robert Godolphin Peter, M.A., of Jesus College, has just been elected a Foundation Fellow of this Society. The following Church appointments have just taken place:—The Rev. John Hindes Groome, M A., of Pembroke College, to the Rectory of Earl Soham, Suffolk; value, £515. The Rev. Robert Hindes Groome, M.A., of Caius College, to the Rectory of Monk Soham, Suffolk; value, £530. The Rev. John Henry Howlett, M.A., of St. John's College, to the Rectory of Meppershall, Bedfordshire; value, £500. The Rev. John Collett Reynolds, B.A, to the Rectory of Holton, Suffolk; value, £310.

OXFORD. May 14.

In a Convocation held this day, the following degrees were conferred:—

Masters of Arts.—Rev. James John Welldon, St. John's, Grand Compounder, (incorporated from St. John's College, Cambridge). Rev. John Udney Robson, Magdalen Hall, Grand Compounder. Rev. William Lloyd Collett, Queen's, Grand Compounder; Robert Blayney, Exeter, Grand Compounder; Rev. John Hext Bushnell, Worcester, Grand Compounder; Rev. Thomas Holmes Ravenhill, Worcester; William Scarlett Vale, Worcester; Rev. William Henry Jones, Queen's; Rev. Francis Thomas Mac Dougall, Magdalen Hall; Rev. Frederic William Vaux, Magdalen Hall; Rev. Thomas Helmore, Magdalen Hall; Rev. William Brassey Hole, Exeter; Rev. Robert Weatherell, St. Edmund Hall; Rev. Seth William Stevenson, St. Mary Hall; Rev. Frederick Kennedy, Christ Church; Rev. Brymer Belcher, Wadham; Rev. William Bushnell, University; Charles Edward Leopold Wightman, Lincoln; Rev. William Bousefield, Fellow of Lincoln; Rev. George Murray Houghton, Lincoln; Henry Fort, Balliol; Rev. Philip Sydney Ashworth, St. Alban's Hall; Charles Godfrey Price, Jesus; Vero Gordon Driffield, scholar of Brasenose; George Frederic de Teissier, scholar of Corpus; Rev. Hatfield Edge Pettman, Trinity; Rev. Thomas Pantin, Pembroke.

Bachelors of Arts.—John Joseph Ebsworth, Edwin Bittlestone, and John Lovick Johnson, St. Edmund's Hall; James John George Graham, Queen's; Edmund Baskerville Mynors, St. Mary Hall; Joseph Hesselgrave Thompson and William De Porre, Magdalen Hall; Joseph Henry Bainbrigge, Wadham; Thomas Binfield Ludlow, Christ Church; Henry Alex. Douglas and Charles Tufnell, Balliol; Charles James Stuart and Armine W. Mountain, University; Gansell Jebb, Lincoln; Henry Hayman, Fellow of St. John's; Charles Gore Gambier, Thomas Andrew Walker, and George Pardoe, St. John's; Augustus William Green, William Browne, Philip Smith, and William Johnson, Trinity Thomas Hughes and William Buckle, Oriel; Francis William Peel, Worcester; David Price, Jesus; Charles Chambers, Jesus.

Preferments.—The Bishop of London has instituted the Rev. W. C. Fynes Webber, M.A., student of Christchurch, Oxford, to the incumbency of St. Botolph's, Aldersgate, vacant by the death of the Rev. E. D. Legh, on the nomination of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The Rev. Thomas Prowse Lethbridge, M.A., has been instituted to the rectory of Combe Florey, Somerset, vacant by the death of the Rev. Sydney Smith.

St. Paul's Cathedral.—The Lord Bishop of London has appointed the following gentlemen to be Prebendaries in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul:—The Rev. Charles Brown Dalton, M.A., fellow of Wadham College, Oxford, chaplain of Lincoln's Inn, his lordship's chaplain; the Rev. R. W. Browne, M.A., professor of classical literature, in King's College, London; and the Rev. T. G. Hall, M.A., professor of mathematics in King's College, London, and rector of St. Benet's, Paul's-wharf.

Diocese of Winchester.—Dr. Haggard, Advocate of Doctor's Commons, will succeed the Rev. Dr. Dealtry to the Chancellorship of the diocese of Winchester.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

THE LATE MURDER IN ST. GILES'S.

On Thursday Joseph Connor was tried before Mr. Baron Alderson and Mr. Justice Coltman, for the murder of Mary Brothers, in George-street, St. Giles's.

As soon as the Judges had taken their seats on the bench, the prisoner was placed in the dock. He appeared rather flushed and excited; and, on being called upon to plead to the indictment read by the Clerk of the Arraigns, he said, in a very subdued tone, "Not Guilty."

Mr. Bodkin proceeded to state the case to the jury on behalf of the Crown, and called witnesses in support of it. The facts of the case, however, were published so recently that it is only necessary to give a recapitulation of the evidence.

Mary Palmer was the first witness called, and examined by Mr. Chambers: In March last I was charwoman at the house, No. 11, George-street, Bloomsbury. On the 31st of March a man and woman came to the house. The woman passed by the name of Tape. The man was dressed in a cap and velveteen jacket. I gave them a light, and they went into the back parlour. They had not been there many minutes when I heard a cry of "Murder" repeated three times. I knocked at the door, but receiving no answer, I forced open the door, on which I saw a woman sitting on the side of the bed, and the man standing over her with his hand raised. I thought he was beating her, and said, "For God's sake, don't beat the woman." He turned round, and came out at the door; he did not speak. I caught him by the pockets of his coat, but he forced me away and threw me against the fireplace. He succeeded in getting away. The woman walked towards the fire-place, where she fell. I gave the alarm, and Mrs. Hall tried to stop the man, but he got away from her also. Mrs. Hall and I went into the room and found the woman making a noise, but she could not speak. A police-constable named Allen came directly afterwards. A knife was sticking in the neck of the deceased, which was taken out by the police-constable. I cannot swear that the prisoner at the bar is the person who came to the house with the woman on the night in question.

Mr. Ballantine, who appeared for the prisoner, cross-examined the witness, but nothing material was elicited.

Mrs. Mary Hall, wife of John Hall, the landlady of the house, corroborated all the chief parts of the evidence of the preceding w tness.

The policeman Allen deposed to the condition in which he found the deceased. He had seen a man leave the house, but he would not swear it was the prisoner.

Ellen Napier, alias Scott, deposed to the conversation she had had with the prisoner, about a month before the murder, in the course of which he had made a threat towards the deceased.

Bridget Rowan also deposed to the threat made by the prisoner against the deceased. Similar testimony was also given by a woman named Hill.

Mr. Henry Oldham, the cutler, of High-street, St. Giles's, was called, and proved the purchase by the prisoner of the knife, on the night of the 31st of March.

The witness underwent a rather long cross-examination by Mr. Ballantine, but his testimony as to the fact of the sale of the knife to a person on the night in question, and the identity of the prisoner as that person, was not shaken.

To Mr. Baron Alderson: The prisoner was in my shop altogether about three minutes. He had his hat on all the while.

Emily Elizabeth Oldham, daughter of the last witness, examined by Mr. Chambers: I was in my father's shop on the night when a man came in to purchase a carving-knife. I noticed the man; I was standing by my father's side when he came in. The man who stands there (in the dock) is the man.

William Pocock, 81 F division of police, examined by Mr. Huddleston: I went, on the 4th April, to 15, Endell-street. It was in a two pair front room I found a velveteen jacket on a peg, with two others over it. Next morning I examined it, and found blood on the right-hand cuff, and a little on the left. I produce it now. I also produce a hat and a cap, and some hospital tickets which I found there.

Cross-examined: It was at the house of the prisoner's father.

Nicholas Pearce, examined by Mr. Chambers: I am a superintendent of the F division of police. On the 4th April I went to 4, Stone-cutter's-alley, Gate-street, Lincoln's inn-fields. I went up stairs, and knocked at the door, which was fastened. It was opened by a female. I went in and saw the prisoner sitting down with some females. I asked him his christian and surnames. He said his name was Joseph Connor, upon which I told him that there was a charge against him of murdering a woman named Tape; he said, "Yes, Sir," or "Yes"—that is all he said.

Adolphus Lonsdale, 110 F: I was in the cell with the prisoner the night before his examination at Bow-street. At about four o'clock in the morning he said, "I am sure to be tucked up if those two women come and give evidence against me who saw me on Monday evening between eight and nine o'clock."

A witness named Charles Waugh, who worked at Messrs. Garrard's, silversmiths, where the prisoner had also worked, deposed to a conversation which he had had with him, in which he had made threats against a woman, whose conduct had prevented his marriage with his cousin. The prisoner used to come in a velveteen shooting jacket, like that produced, which he used to change for a fustian one to work in, and when he went away he used to put on the velveteen shooting jacket again.

Cross-examined by Mr. Ballantine: He was a good tempered, very nice young man. He was liked by his comrades, and was very honest and industrious. Rouge was used in Messrs. Garrard's factory, and might, if rubbed into velveteen, look like blood. But no rouge was used in the room in which the prisoner worked.

Michael Connor, the prisoner's father, was next examined: He said, my son was living at 15, Endell-street, Long-acre, at the time of this occurrence. That coat is my son's. The hat was never worn by him. I suppose the cloth cap was my son's.

Cross examined by Mr. Ballantine: The prisoner came home at eleven o'clock, to a minute, on the night of the murder. I noticed nothing extraordinary in his demeanour. He slept with me. My wife slept with my daughter in another bed in the same room. He undressed in my presence, and laid his clothes on a chair. I got up and left him in bed at half-past six in the morning. Nothing occurred during the night to attract my attention. He was not disturbed.

Mr. Fitzgerald, surgeon, said I was called to the house on the night of the murder about eleven o'clock. The woman was dead. I made a post mortem examination by order of the Coroner. There were sixteen wounds altogether, and one mortal, passing through the chest, entering the first and second ribs, and penetrating the pulmonary artery.

Mr. Bodkin said that was the case for the prosecution.

Mr. Ballantine then addressed the jury for the defence. He argued that there was no motive for the commission of the crime, and also that the evidence of identity was defective. Then, with respect to the evidence of Mr. Oldham. Persons were, no doubt, continually calling at his shop to purchase knives, and it was singular that an ordinary individual, making such a purchase at an ordinary time, should have been so strongly impressed on his mind. The assertion that if the women came forward he would be sure to be tucked up, merely denoted a morbid state of mind, and that he was labouring under great apprehension as to the threats he had used towards the unfortunate woman. After referring to other matters in relation to the case, he concluded by a powerful appeal on behalf of the prisoner.

The learned counsel then called several witnesses on behalf of the prisoner, who gave him a good character as a quiet and inoffensive young man.

Mr. Baron Alderson having summed up, the jury retired at twenty five minutes past six o'clock. After an absence, however, of three hours and twenty-five minutes, they entered the court, and the Judges, Baron Alderson and Mr. Justice Coltman, having taken their seats, the Clerk of the Arraigns called the names severally over, and a verdict of GUILTY was pronounced.

The prisoner, who appeared pale, but unmoved, was then formally asked whether he had anything to say why sentence of death should not be pronounced?

Proclamation was then made in the usual manner; and the Judges having assumed the black caps, Baron Alderson passed sentence of death. He said that the jury, after a careful investigation of the case, had pronounced a verdict of guilty—a verdict in which he fully concurred. It was one which would cut the prisoner off from this world, and leave nothing before him but the world to come. A more barbarous murder on an unprotected female than the one for which the prisoner had been convicted could hardly be conceived. It showed very clearly, however, that he who offends against one law is liable to be led on by degrees, until he offends against others more serious, as regards the laws of God and man. Crime had been commenced in what was called venial sin, and it led to the commission of the crime of murder. He besought the prisoner to think of his case and endeavour to atone for the fearful crime of which he stood convicted, for who could say what true repentance and sorrow would do for him. Nothing remained for him (Baron Alderson) but to declare the sentence of the law.

The Learned Judge, who appeared to be greatly overcome by his feelings, then passed the awful sentence of death in the usual manner.

The wretched culprit heard the sentence in silence.

Bill Discounting Transactions.—On Tuesday a case was tried at this court, arising out of some late transactions, some particulars of which appeared under our police head a short time since. Basil Cochrane Willis and Lionel Piafer Goldsmid surrendered in court, on the charge of conspiring together for the purpose of obtaining possession of bills or promissory notes to the amount of £1100, the property of Edmond Lyons Hearne, with intent to defraud him thereof. The jury found both the defendants guilty. The sentence was deferred until next sessions, and bail was ordered to be taken for the appearance of the prisoners.

The Late Explosion at Blackwall.—On Wednesday George Lowe surrended in discharge of his bail, to take his trial for the manslaughter of Thomas Wright and others. The indictment alleged that the prisoner, being on the 5th March last in charge of a certain steam-boiler, in the parish of All Saints, Poplar, did wilfully and unlawfully put into the said boiler a greater quantity of steam than it could bear, so that it burst, and caused divers wounds and bruises on the body of Thomas Wright, of which wounds and bruises he then and there died. Several witnesses were examined, but their evidence formed only a recapitulation of the circumstances connected with the accident, as they were detailed in our paper at the time. Mr. Baron Alderson said he thought that there was no evidence to criminate the prisoner. The real cause of the catastrophe was the defective construction of the safety valve, and the obstruction which, it appeared, existed in the steam pipe which connected the boiler with the engine. At the same time, it was for the jury to decide whether it was worth while to carry the inquiry further. The jury, after a short conference, returned a verdict of "Not guilty." Mr. Baron Alderson observed, that although the catastrophe had beena very awful one, nevertheless he believed it to have been pure accident, and that Mr. Lowe was in no way to blame. The prisoner was accordingly discharged.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Suicide on Southwark Bridge.—On Tuesday afternoon a gentleman named John James Gogerley, aged 51 years, expired in Guy's Hospital, from the effects of a wound which he had inflicted upon himself by firing a loaded pistol into his body on the night of Thursday week. It appears that between twelve and one o'clock on that night, as City police-constable No. 478 was on duty on Southwark iron-bridge, his attention was directed to the flash and report of fire arms which proceeded from about the centre of the bridge. On hastening to the spot he found the deceased man lying on the ground, bleeding profusely from a wound on the left side, which had evidently been caused by a pistol, the stock of which he held tightly grasped in his hand, the barrel having been blown to pieces. A neighbouring surgeon was immediately sent for, and deceased was ultimately conveyed to the hospital. Mr. Marsh, the house surgeon, administered to him the proper restoratives, and deceased was some time afterwards restored to consciousness. He, at first, refused to give any account of himself, but subsequently stated his name, and where his relatives resided. The latter having been apprised of the occurrence visited him in the hospital, and it was ascertained that he had borrowed a pistol from a person named Pearce, a night-watchman in the employ of Messrs. Boyd, warehousemen. He then loaded it with four bullets, stating that he wanted it to shoot a mad dog at his sister's. He subsequently proceeded to the bridge, and there committed the act. Two of the balls were afterwards extracted, and deceased lingered until Tuesday, when he died. He had formerly been in comfortable circumstances, and filled the office of clerk to his brother, a solicitor in Mark-lane, but lately having become reduced in his circumstances. A verdict of Insanity was returned at the inquest.

Fire in Moorfields.—On Tuesday night, a fire, nearly attended with fatal results to a mother and her infant, broke out on the premises belonging to Mr. James Reiley, baker, 90, Bunhill-row. It originated in one of the sleeping apartments, in which Mrs. Reiley was in bed with her infant. It appears that the nurse incautiously approached so near the bed with a lighted candle as to cause the curtains to be ignited, and in an instant the poor creature and her child were completely enveloped in flame. The piercing cries of the nurse brought Mr. Reiley to her assistance, when a most pitiable sight presented itself. The curtains of a portion of the bedding were blazing, and Mrs. Reiley, with her offspring in her arms, was endeavouring to climb over the top of the bedstead. Fortunately she managed to effect her escape, without any of her night clothes taking fire. The nurse, who exerted herself to the utmost in tearing down the blazing curtains, was most severely burned about the hands. Mr. Reiley also, in assisting to remove his wife, was likewise burned about the hands, and the hair on his head was much singed. Not many minutes elapsed before the engines arrived, but owing to the exertions of Mr. Reiley and the rest of the inmates, the fire was so far subdued that it was not necessary to set an engine to work.

Burglary and Attempted Murder.—On Sunday morning a burglary was committed on the premises of Mr. Foot, a green-grocer and pleasure-car proprietor, residing in Windmill-street, Finsbury, which was attended with circumstances of great violence to Mrs. Foot, the wife of the occupier. It appears that after the shop was closed on Saturday night last, and shortly after Mrs. Foot had counted up the proceeds of the day, and was proceeding with the till across the back yard, she was suddenly struck a blow upon the head, which felled her to the earth and instantly rendered her insensible. In her stupor she moaned most piteously, and her cries alarming her husband, who has been for some time apparently near death, he summoned up all his energies, and attempted to gain the landing on the top of the stairs. From excessive weakness, however, the sufferer fell in the passage in a state of so much exhaustion that the circumstance has much retarded his recovery. Meantime the poor woman was writhing with pain; blood was flowing from a wound in the front of the head. A neighbouring cheesemonger, having heard the cries of the injured female, procured the assistance of the police. Mr. T. W. Walls, surgeon, of 9, Windmill-street, Finsbury square, was called up, and the premises as well as the wounds of the poor creature were examined. Close by the spot where she fell, a large piece of wood was found, with which there is little doubt that the blow was struck. The unfortunate woman's body was covered with blood. The wound presented a most frightful appearance. The main artery connected with the temple was divided, and a number of the minor vessels were severed. For some time after the occurrence, it was feared that a fracture of the skull had taken place, nor is it now quite evident that such is not the case, as the sufferer is in a most deplorable condition, from the consequences of the outrage, nor is it expected that she will be able to rise from her bed for some time to come. When found, the poor woman still grasped the till, the contents of which were safe.

Death of a Lady of Title from Drinking.—On Tuesday Mr. Baker held an inquest at the Myddleton Arms, Queen's-road, Dalston, on the body of Lady Anne Platers, aged 61, the widow of Sir William John Platers, Bart., residing in Cornwall-terrace, Dalston. It appeared from the evidence of the deceased's grand-daughter, and of her servant, that for some months past the deceased had complained of great troubles upon her mind, arising from family differences, and which induced her to take constantly large quantities of wine and brandy. On Friday she had been drinking largely of wine and brandy, and at night she was conveyed to her chamber in a senseless state. On the following morning she had more wine, but did not leave her room, and about four o'clock in the afternoon she was discovered lying upon the floor in a dying state. Mr. Rayner, surgeon, was called in, but the deceased expired immediately after his arrival, as the surgeon was of opinion, from serous apoplexy, resulting from excessive drinking. Verdict, "Died from Apoplexy."

Accident at Southampton.—On Whit-Monday a fatal accident occurred at Southampton, by the sudden upsetting of a boat with a party of pleasure bound for Netley Abbey. Five persons embarked in an open boat, without a waterman, and had proceeded but a short distance, when a heavy squall of wind and rain caught the sail, which was a very large one, and upset the boat, and precipitated the whole of the passengers into the water, when two men and one young woman were drowned. The accident would not, probably, have happened, had there been an experienced waterman on board.

Loss of Life at Brighton.—On Tuesday afternoon, a young man, named Richard Swinburne, the son of Mr. Henry Swinburne, a wholesale chemist in Bush-lane, City, accompanied by a person named Henry Stewart, of 21, James's-street, Limefields, engaged a small skiff at Brighton, for the purpose of taking an excursion on the water, accompanied by a boatman named Heath. They had not proceeded far from shore, when a sudden gust of wind capsized the boat, and the whole of them were instantly under water. There were several boats about, and assistance was immediately rendered. Stewart and the boatman were both picked up, but the unfortunate youth Swinburne could not be found.

A Girl Killed by a Swing.—A frightful occurrence, attended with the loss of life, took place on Sunday evening in the Old St. Pancras-road, occasioned by a swing. The deceased, Mary Ann Hammet, a girl 14 years of age, went to a gateway leading out of the main road, closely adjoining Old St. Pancras church; and, although the swing was full at the time, was persuaded to get in. She had to stand up in the centre, and, while going at its utmost velocity, she pitched, head-foremost, out; and, whilst on the ground, the swing, on its return, struck her so violently on the back of her head as to hurl her several yards into the road. She was at once conveyed to the University College Hospital, where she expired in twenty minutes after her admission.

Sudden Death in the Street.—On Wednesday Mr. Bedford held an inquest at the Black Horse, Bedfordbury, on the body of John Harper Kirkham, aged 40, a licensed victualler, of Bedford-street, Liverpool. On Sunday morning deceased and two friends were walking near Cock's and Biddulph's bank, when, exclaiming "Oh dear," he suddenly staggered off the footpavement into the middle of the road, and fell on his back. He was removed to the Charing-cross Hospital, when the porter ordered him to be laid on the floor, sho k him, and tried to administer a restorative, pending the arrival of the house-surgeon, who ordered deceased up stairs and bled him. The usual remedies in cases of apoplexy were subsequently applied ineffectually, and he died at seven in the evening. A post-mortem examination showed fracture of the skull, but cerebral symptoms proved the cause of death to be apoplexy. Verdict accordingly.

POSTSCRIPT.

Saturday Evening.

THE CHILD-MURDER AT GREENWICH.

Yesterday, Martha Brivey, aged 18, was tried at the Central Criminal Court for the murder of Robert Barry Ffinch, the infant child of Mr. Ffinch of Greenwich.

On being called upon to plead, she replied, "Not Guilty" in a very feeble voice. She was accommodated with a chair, and during the trial continued to rock herself backwards and forwards, as if suffering mental anguish.

Mr. Bodkin stated the case to the jury for the prosecution.

We last week gave an account of this melancholy affair, but the following outline of the evidence supplies some additional facts:—

Mr. John G. Ffinch was the first witness called. He stated: I am a solicitor, residing at Greenwich. On the 4th of May I was in the dining-room, with my wife and Mr. Traill, when I saw the prisoner enter the room in a very excited state. and she exclaimed, "Oh, Sir, what have I done! what have I done! Will you forgive me?" I said, "What have you done?" She said, "Oh, Sir, I am a murderer; I have cut the baby's throat." I instantly ran to the nursery, and saw my child in the cot, with his head very nearly off. There was an ordinary table knife lying across my child, and I saw he was dead. I left the room, and on the landing I met Mr. Traill. I called his attention to what had happened; went down stairs, and shortly afterwards saw the prisoner in what is called my room. She again addressed me, saying "Oh, Sir, what have I done—will you forgive me?" She was about to seize hold of me, but I thrust her from me, and said, "You wretch, you have murdered my poor child, who never injured you, and you will be hanged; that is what will become of you." A police officer was then sent for, and she was given into custody. One of her fellow servants brought her down her bonnet and her shawl. The policeman was about to take her away, when she said, "Oh, Sir, let me change my boots." I said there was no occasion for that, but she was allowed to do so.

Cross-examined by Mr. Clarkson, who defended her: Her conduct was generally kind to a degree. She had been ill, and a medical man had been spoken to relative to putting her under a course of medicine.

Mr. Traill, the police magistrate, was next called and examined by Mr. Bodkin. He stated: I am a police magistrate, and was present in Mr. Ffinch's drawing-room on the morning of Sunday, 4th May, when the prisoner came into the room, as described by the last witness. I went into the room with Mr. Ffinch, and, on seeing what had taken place, I went out of the room to prevent Mrs. Ffinch from coming in, thinking the sight was too horrible for her. I saw the prisoner on returning, and took hold of her to prevent further mischief, not knowing what further violence she might be guilty of. She addressed me by name, and asked me if I thought God would forgive her, if she asked for pardon: she appeared to suffer great distress of mind.

Lord Denman: In what way did she manifest distress of mind?

Mr. Traill: Both by her words and manner.

Sarah May: I am upper nursemaid in the family of Mr. Ffinch. I remember the morning of the 4th of May. I had placed the child in the cot as usual; the prisoner had nursed the child that morning while I was doing something else. She always behaved to the children with great kindness. She assisted me in making a bed that morning, and asked me whether I thought Mrs. Ffinch would forgive her, and allow her to stop. I said I did not think Mrs. Ffinch would, and told her she had better be quiet. I afterwards went down to the lower part of the house, and then heard a screaming. I did not see anything of the prisoner between the time of being up stairs with her and the time of hearing the screaming. During the time I have known her I have always considered her a person of very kind disposition. The children were very fond of her. She had the same mourning given her as the other servants. She complained of one of the dresses not fitting her. She had it altered several times, and then was not satisfied with it. I had latterly noticed a change in her manner; she did not look so well, and was rather low in spirits sometimes. She tore the body off the dress, said she wished it was at the devil, and would burn it. She did burn it by throwing it into the fire. I said I should tell Mrs. Ffinch what she had done, and did so on her return from Dover. On hearing it, Mrs. Ffinch said she must have been in a great passion to have done it, and if she did such things she must leave her service. Mrs. Ffinch also said that if she heard any more about the dress, she should leave. The prisoner's mother was sent for, and on her promising not to repeat such conduct, she was told she would be allowed to remain. She afterwards seemed to wish to leave. On the day following, the 2nd of May, the prisoner was sent to fetch the children from school, and was a very long time gone. On her return she had the dress in her hand, and said she had been to the dress-maker's. On seeing this, Mrs. Ffinch said, "Now, you recollect, Martha, what I said to you last night about that dress, and now you must go." She cried very much, and said she should never be happy if she went away; she did not, she said, like another to come in her place. I knew that she had been taking medicine. There was something wrong about her; she complained of her head, and said she had a curious sort of aching pain in it. She was very much liked in the family, and was treated with great kindness. On the Saturday before the murder the prisoner said something about people being hanged. She said, "I need not make myself so unhappy as I do; any one would think I had committed a murder. But I have not done so." I said, "Don't talk in that way." Upon which she asked me if I had ever heard of a woman being hung? She had never herself heard, she said, of a woman being hung. I said, "If women commit murder, they are hung as well as men." She talked a good deal of leaving. That seemed to be uppermost in her mind.

Cross-examined: She had expressed a wish to leave some time before this, and said that Greenwich did not agree with her.

Elizabeth Middleditch: I am housemaid to Mr. Ffinch. I recollect opening the door to Mr. Traill at about twenty minutes to ten o'clock. On my return to the kitchen I saw Sarah May with one of the children. I then saw the prisoner take a large knife from the box in the pantry. I asked her what she wanted it for? She said "to cut a pencil." I told her she had had better take a small one. But she said she would take the large one to cut the children's bread and butter in the afternoon, and went up with both the knives in her hand. I shortly afterwards heard a scream, and learned what had occurred. I had noticed her altered manner of late.

Police Constable 21 R: I was at the station house when the prisoner was brought there. She asked me if I thought God would forgive her, and whether she should be hanged or sent across the water in chains? She started up once or twice, and said, "Let me go; I can't stay here." She also asked if I thought she should have to wear the prison dress, or would be allowed to wear her own clothes. She said she hoped she should not be treated harshly, as she had always been treated so kindly, that she did not know what she should do if they treated her harshly.

Elizabeth Garrard: I have the charge of the station-house. On Monday, May 5, I supplied the prisoner with a pen and ink, to write a letter. The letter produced is that which she wrote.

The letter was put in and read. It was to the following effect:—

"Dear May,—Pray send me another gown, a collar, and a pair of gloves. May God Almighty forgive me for the wickedness I have done. I remain your sincere friend, "Martha Brixey."

This closed the case for the prosecution, and

Mr. Clarkson then rose to address the Jury on behalf of the prisoner. He contended that she was insane when she committed the murder.

Lord Denman in summing up left it to the Jury to say whether it was the case.

The Jury, after nearly half an hour's absence, delivered the following verdict:—

"We find that at the time when she committed the murder, the prisoner was not responsible for her actions."

Mr. Baron Alderson: That is that she is "NOT GUILTY," on the ground of insanity.

The Foreman: Yes, my lord.

The prisoner was then ordered to be detained during her Majesty's pleasure; and she will be sent to Bethlem.

MANCHESTER RACES.—Thursday.

Plate of £50. Heats, one mile and a half.

Mr. Worthington's Dr. Husband, 4 yrs. .. .. .. (Marlow)		1
Mr. Dawson's T'Auld Squire, 4 yrs.		2

Friday.

The Broughton Stakes of 15 sovs. each, 5 ft, and 30 added.

Mr. Meiklam's Best of Three, 4 yrs .. .. .. (Hutchinson)		1
Mr. Dawson's Montgomerie, 3 yrs		2

Cup of 100 sovs., added to a Handicap of 15 sovs. each.

Mr. Cuthbert's Queen of Tyne, 6 yrs .. .. (Joy)		1
Mr. Buckley's David, 6 yrs		2

Plate of £50; winner to be sold for £150. Heats.

Mr. Meiklam's Poussin, 5 yrs .. .. .. (Hutchison)		1
Mr. Dawson's T'Auld Squire, 4 yrs		2

The Queen's Visit to Ireland.—The Lord Mayor of Dublin has waited pon Sir J. Graham with the address of the Dublin Corporation respecting er Majesty's visit to Ireland. The Right Honourable Baronet received the eputation graciously, but said he should not be able to ascertain her Madesty's pleasure until Saturday (to-day). He, however, alluded to the threats made about annoying the Queen by raising shouts of Repeal, and significantly asked if her Majesty went to Ireland, and were to be met in this way, did they imagine she could give any assurance on the question but the one her Majesty had already communicated through her Minister to Parliament? Thus the matter stands at present.

Irish Approval of Sir R. Peel's Policy.—This morning (Saturday), a deputation, consisting of the Marquis of Downshire, Lord Castlereagh (Lord Lieutenant of the county of Down), Lord Viscount Newry and Morne, M.P.; John Boyd, Esq. (Seneschal of Newry), Hill Irvine, Esq., Charles Jennings, Esq, J. Lyle, Esq., J. Scott, Esq., &c., waited on Sir R. Peel, for the purpose of presenting him with an address, approving of his Irish policy, lately agreed to by an influential meeting of the inhabitants of Newry. Sir R. Peel, in returning thanks, said, "In devising measures calculated to improve the social condition and to promote the general prosperity of Ireland we are acting in unison with the benevolent desires and intentions of a gracious Sovereign, who has ever taken the deepest interest in the welfare of that part of her dominions. We feel confident of ultimate success, if we shall receive that cordial co-operation and support, of which the inhabitants of Newry have set an example so honourable to their character, and beneficial to the interests of their country."

O'Connell's Levee.—The Repeal Association have ordered that the mode of celebrating the "30th of May," shall be by a "levee," which O'Connell is to hold at the Rotunda.

Death of George Shee, Esq.—George Shee, Esq., the brother of Sir Martin Archer Shee, President of the Royal Academy, died rather suddenly on Thursday, at his house in Cavendish-square, in the 80th year of his age.

Estate Purchased by Sir R. Peel.—It is stated that Sir Robert Peel has purchased the estate of Closeburn, in Dumfriesshire, for the sum of £230,000.

Cricket.—The match between the Marylebone Club, with Lillywhite and Royston, v. the University of Cambridge, was brought to a termination on Tuesday; the result being in favour of the University eleven, who won in one innings by 43 runs.

A Gentleman Suspected of Passing a Counterfeit Sovereign.—A gentleman, who gave his name as Mr. Richard White, was examined on Thursday at Bow-street, on a charge of passing a bad sovereign at the Bazaar at Covent Garden Theatre. His explanation of the circumstance was that he had for years kept some imitation sovereigns in his purse, and that he had given one of them at the stall by mistake. Mr. Twyford, the magistrate, recognised the accused as an old friend, with whom he was in the habit of dining; but he nevertheless entered into a minute inquiry respecting the charge; the result of which was that Mr. Twyford believed the counterfeit coin was tendered by mistake, and the accused was set at liberty.

Loss of Five Lives near Falmouth.—A deplorable accident happened on Tuesday last, within a few miles of the coast-guard station at Mainport, near Falmouth. One of the coast-guard men, named Barnes, took his family, consisting of three sons and a daughter, in a boat for an excursion along the beach. On returning home and rounding the point from Falmouth, a heavy squall caught the sail and instantly capsized the boat, when the whole party were thrown into the water, and drowned before assistance could reach them.

Fire at Deptford.—This (Saturday) morning, between twelve and one, a fire broke out at the Royal Standard Tavern, on Tanners-hill, Deptford New Town, the property of Mr. Buckland. The inhabitants all fortunately escaped, but the whole of the interior of the premises fell a prey to the flames. The total damage is very considerable. The origin of the calamity could not be ascertained.

The Late Fatal Accident at Yarmouth.—The Lynn Advertiser states that on Sunday last a strikingly impressive sermon was delivered in St. Nicholas Church, Yarmouth, by the minister of the parish, from Exodus 12, and part of the 30th verse, "And there was a great cry in Egypt, for there was not a house where there was not one dead."—We hear that Government have determined to send Mr. James Walker, the engineer, to inquire into the circumstances connected with the falling of the bridge. Mr. Walker will probably be in Yarmouth on Wednesday next.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

France.—The Northern Railway Bill.—The French Chamber of Deputies having adopted the important clauses, which fix the charges to be levied by companies on the carriages of merchandise and goods on the Northern Line, proceeded on Thursday to consider the eighth clause, relating to the course which the line ought to take from Lisle towards the Belgian frontier. The Government proposed that the line should proceed by Hasebruck, and that the remainder of the line should not be fixed till time had been given for more mature consideration. The Committee on the Bill had recommended an immediate decision, and proposed that it should pass by Armentières and Bailleul, and branch off to Calais to Dunkirk. The plan of the Committee was ultimately adopted.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Prince Albert's Visit to the Fishmongers' Company.—It is understood that Prince Albert honours the Fishmongers' Company with his attendance at dinner on Wednesday next, on which occasion Viscounts Melbourne and Palmerston, with the Earl of Fortescue and Lord Cottenham, are to be admitted honorary members of that corporation.

The Plantations in Lincoln's-Inn.—A plan is being entertained by the benchers to re-erect the fountain which formerly stood in the centre of the square which now forms the new plantation. It is proposed to sink an Artesian well, and to supply the whole of the chambers in the inn with water, which can be done at a much more reasonable rate than the present supply.

The Protestant Association.—On Wednesday the annual meeting of this body was held in the Great Hall, Exeter Hall. The recent measures introduced by her Majesty's Government for the endowment of Maynooth College, and the establishment of other colleges in Ireland, excited public interest in the proceedings of the association; and, on the opening of the doors, the entrance was besieged by thousands. The chair was taken by the Earl of Winchilsea. The speakers were the Rev. T. F. Robinson, Sir Digby Mackworth, the Rev. R. McGhee, the Rev. C. Prest, the Rev. Dr. O'Sullivan, and Mr. Dudley Perceval. The proceedings were marked with unanimity.

London and Birmingham Railway.—A special general meeting of the above company was held on Wednesday to take into consideration the various Bills pending in Parliament connected with this compauy (pursuant to the standing orders of the House of Lords). George Carr Glynn, Esq., having taken the chair, stated that two of the bills, the Churnet Valley and the Manchester Amalgamation, would not come before them, having been rejected on standing orders. He then read the titles of the various bills, and moved resolutions confirming them, which were carried unanimously. Mr. Williams asked in what state was the Peterborough line? The Chairman replied that it was opened to Northampton on the previous day, that on the 31st instant, or the 2nd of next month it would be opened throughout, and it would be completed both within the time promised and the estimate.

Visitors to the British Museum.—The number of visitors during Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, was 63,549, exceeding those of last year by 14,980. The number present on Monday was 35,233; Tuesday, 8133; and Wednesday, 20,183, whilst on Whit Monday last year there were 25,558; Tuesday, 6418; and Wednesday, 16,608. The conduct of the visitors was very orderly.

Mortality in the Metropolis.—The number of deaths during the week ending May 10, we are glad to state, is the smallest that has appeared for many months, being only 829, showing a decrease of 54, as compared with the previous, and 134 less than the average of five years.

Fatal Collision on the River.—On Tuesday afternoon, as the Waterman steamer No. 5 was conveying from 300 to 400 passengers from London to Greenwich, she met with a serious accident, by a billyboy, from Goole, Yorkshire, running her bowsprit across the bow of the steamer, knocking all the passengers within her sweep on the deck. Unfortunately, a gentleman of the name of Williams, fringe manufacturer, residing in Wilks-street, Spitalfields, accompanied by his son and daughter, were amongst the greatest sufferers. Mr. W. had his collar-bone and one arm broken, and the other arm much injured; his son, aged 10 years, was killed on the spot; his daughter, aged 14, was much injured about the head, and had one finger broken. William Kent, of Seckford-street, Clerkenwell, clerk to Mr. Wallis, of Carey-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, received severe contusions; and two gentlemen were knocked overboard, but were fortunately saved by the crew of the Waterman No. 5. The captain of the steamer immediately proceeded with the sufferers to the Dreadnought Seamen's Hospital ship, and put the unfortunate persons on board that vessel, where every attention was instantly paid by the captain and medical gentlemen in attendance. The accident took place off Limehouse.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

The Privileges of the House of Commons.—The Court of Queen's Bench, on Thursday, gave judgment in the case of Howard v. Gossett, which was an action Mr. Howard had brought against the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Commons for false imprisonment. To that action a demurrer was raised.—Mr. Justice Wightman said that the plaintiff had brought an action for false imprisonment, to which defendant had demurred. In his opinion the plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the demurrer.—Mr. Justice Coleridge said, it was his opinion that the proceedings which had taken place under the Speaker's warrant were bad, and that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment.—Mr. Justice Williams was of opinion that the judgment ought to be for the defendant.—Lord Denman, after going through a very elaborate opinion, in which he referred to the powers possessed by the House of Commons, contended that the house was bound to set forth the offence in the warrant; and as a principle of vital importance was involved, in which the liberty of the subject was affected, he considered that the judgment of the Court ought to be for the plaintiff.

ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

Second Notice.

We resume our consideration this week of the Works of Art in the present Royal Academy Exhibition: and now that the rooms are considerably less crowded than they were at first, and critics can get near a picture without exhibiting any portion, in person, of that rudeness which they are said to exhibit in print, we can look about us "unelbowed, unannoyed," can consider what we are to say, and re-consider what we have said. On the subject, however, of what has been said, we find that we have nothing to retract. The seventy-seventh Exhibition of the Royal Academy is really a very average Exhibition: portraits prevail stronger numerically than we can recollect them within the last seven years; in point of excellence much about the same. Mr. Grant has alone come forward to make good the loss of Lawrence; and painters will find that the female elegance and lady-like air with which Phillips had the art of investing his portraits, are no every day acquirements, to be taken up when the humour is upon them. We remember the time when Rothwell was to perform wonders, and carriage-wheels in thick succession were heard by enthusiastic friends rolling on their way, with the intellect and beauty of Great Britain, to the studio of the painter: but the roll still kept at a distance, and the promises and expectations were never made good, and were never made again. There was a cry on another occasion, that Boxall was to carry everything before him, and some of his local female heads more than justified the partiality of his friends; but the cry of early excellence became a bugbear to a very clever artist—he was always to do and always about doing, but the day never came, and people have already forgotten that a painter of that name had ever pleased them. We mention these cases particularly, that men may be made aware how injudicious and wrong it is to buoy up a painter into the belief that he has little or nothing to learn; and that he may fit up a studio in a fashionable street, and prepare his palette for a career like Lawrence. No painter was ever kept down but by himself, or by his friends; an unkind criticism may repel the student for a time, but if he has the right stuff within him he will bound up at last—his pride will set fire to the spark of genius about him—he will achieve a name, and set his critic at defiance.

The best male portrait in the present Exhibition is the full-length of Dr. Bruuton, one of the Ministers of the Tron Church, and Professor of Oriental Languages in the University of Edinburgh. There is a life-like air about this portrait, and an absence of the common appurtenances of a back-ground—a column and a curtain. It is by J. Watson Gordon, A.R.A. The next in point of merit is the full-length, by J. P. Knight, R.A., of Mr. Pigeon, the Treasurer of Christ's Hospital. The figure is well put upon its legs, and the back-ground is at least appropriate—that part of the committee-room at the Hospital where Holbein's three-quarter portrait of Edward VI. is hung; but Mr. Knight has not done justice to the Holbein; it is a much better picture than he has made it. We are willing, however, to forgive him his neglect in this instance for the sake of No. 399—"A Portrait," as it is called in the catalogue—an admirable head of the artist by himself.

Frank Grant is infinitely less happy with his male than he is with his female portraits. His ladies are the very perfection of female portraits, but his men (look at his "Marquis of Londonderry" and his "Earl of Powis"), stocks and stones. His "Master Fraser," (the head of the boy especially,) is very clever. He may, therefore, advance, as he grows older, from boys to men. However, we advise him for the present to work hard and look about him, for he has much to learn.

In the sketchy style of water-colour portraits, Alfred Edward Chalon was long without a rival. Mr. Richmond, however, has outstripped him in a walk in which Mr. Chalon may exclaim with Swift:—

> Which I was born to introduce,
> Refined it first, and showed its use.

Mr. Richmond lacks, we must add, that peculiar air of high and courtly breeding which Chalon never omits giving; while Chalon, on the other hand, in point of execution, is infinitely Mr. Richmond's inferior.

Sir William Ross maintains his high rank among the Miniatures this year; though Mr. Thorburn, we must add, is treading fast upon his heels. Compare the "Lady Dundas" of Ross (No. 800) with the "Countess of Shelburne" (No. 829) of his rival Thorburn. Ross is better throughout; Thorburn, perhaps, better at the head. Look, however, at the hands, (more the test of good painting than high birth), and you will see at a glance the careful drawing of the elder artist—the hard and puffy execution of the younger. The hands of "Prince Albert," too, in Mr. Thorburn's full-length of the Prince, are far too large for a figure already too large for his Royal Highness. Mr. Thorburn, however, atones for all these faults in his twin portraits in one, of "The Marchioness of Waterford" and the "Viscountess Canning." He has had his eye all the time on the old masters, and has wrought with a good deal of their spirit and success.

KING HENRY IV.—PAINTED BY GILBERT.—ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

The invention of a landscape painter is said to consist in the selection of proper objects and appearances in nature for the employment of his pencil. Where Mr. Turner finds his nature we are utterly at a loss to conceive. The sky and the sea are not now, and never were, as Mr. Turner paints them. He is always for making Nature over again. "I believe," said Pope to Sir G. Kneller, "if God Almighty had had your assistance, the world would have been formed more perfect." "Fore God, Sir," replied Kneller, "I believe so." He is always for undoing what he has done. His early style was the very perfection of his art—true, and fresh, and unmistakable. And there is Martin, too, with fancies of his own—not half so wild, we admit, as Turner—but deviations, still, from Nature. He looks at everything in nature on a system of his own, and paints like a Cæsar born to the purple. How strange it is that his water-colour drawings should be so true to nature as they are; and there is a very fine proof of his art in this style in the Chepstow Castle of the present exhibition—while his oil picures are deviations altogether from the system he pursues when he copies nature with nature before him. Why will he continue to surfeit us with evenings and mornings? Why will he tire his hobby to death? We would give something for an oil picture of one of his own green lanes, or corn fields, or shady nooks, the size of a Lee or Creswick in the present exhibition. He may win a new race of admirers, and achieve a new reputation in another field if he would but try. We hope he will.

If Turner and Martin are right, Stanfield and Roberts, Lee, Creswick, and Sydney Cooper are altogether wrong. There is much in the present exhibition, we admit, to make us forget for a time what Nature is really like; but that fine view of "The Mole at Ancona," by Clarkson Stanfield, will bring us back again to unchanging Nature, while it gives the lie to the Turner that is hanging near it. Stanfield was never greater than he is in the present exhibition: he is, however, too much alike; and we would fain get him into a Devonshire lane with Lee, or a corner in Wales with Creswick. He is always making a novel of the same story—a fresh tune on the self-same string.

Among the new candidates for distinction in the landscape line of art we observe Mr. W. D. Kennedy and Mr. H. Bright. Their works are very unobtrusive; so unobtrusive, indeed, that, while they merit, they will hardly receive, examination. Mr. Kennedy's landscapes are compositions from Italian scenery; one with a recollection of Nicholas Poussin in the foreground, and the other, with what is hardly proper in an Italian landscape, a bit from Cuyp in the extreme right of the composition. Mr. Bright's little picture—a view "On the River Yare, Norfolk—Morning"—is no every-day production; a picture, in a word, that Constable would have loved.

We have selected for illustration Mr. Gilbert's "King Henry IV., Part II., Act iii. Scene 1:

> Canst thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose
> To the wet sea-boy, in an hour so rude;
> And, in the calmest and most stillest night,
> With all appliances and means to boot,
> Deny it to a King!

The picture is specially adapted for engraving on wood; and is, moreover, an impressive scene, cleverly painted.

HER MAJESTY LANDING AT THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—DRAWN BY M. N. CONDY, ESQ.

RECEPTION OF HER MAJESTY BY THE ROYAL YACHT SQUADRON.—DRAWN BY N. M. CONDY, ESQ.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Her Majesty and suite, accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Royal, arrived here on Saturday afternoon from London, by special train from Vauxhall to Gosport, from whence the Royal party and suite embarked on board her Majesty's steamer Lightning, Mr. Petley Master Commanding. About half-past five o'clock, the steamer, bearing the Royal standard at the main, hove in sight, when the castle guns no longer kept silence, but were again made to welcome the "Island Queen." The steamer, however, was observed from the Castle to stand into the bay called Mede Hole (abreast of Osborne House), for the purpose of landing the Royal party on the beach of the estate, and where the Royal carriages had been sometime in waiting for their reception. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and the Royal Infants embarked in the Royal barge, accompanied by the Prince of Lieningen, the Marchioness of Douro, Lady in Waiting; Major-General William Wemyss, one of the Equerries; Colonel Wylde, Equerry to his Royal Highness; Colonel Bowles, and George Edward Anson, Esq., Private Secretary to the Prince, with the intention of landing on the beach; but owing to the state of the tide (it being then nearly low water) the disembarking there was found to be impracticable. The Royal barge, instead of returning to the steamer, was, by direction of her Majesty, rowed along the coast, by Norris, and into Cowes harbour, preceded by one of the boats of the R. C. Stag, an officer of which acted as pilot; and her Majesty at half-past six o'clock landed at the usual landing-place at East Cowes, amid the cheers of her subjects. Her Majesty, on ascending the stairs of the pier, was received by the Earl of Errol, who is residing here, and with whom and his daughter, Lady Hay, her Majesty was observed to shake hands most cordially. The Queen, the Prince, and Royal infants, embarked in the first carriage, and the suite followed in other carriages, which, by the-by, had proceeded hence on finding that the landing on the beach at Osborne House could not be effected. A guard of honour, composed of Lieut. Coppinger and his Coast Guardmen, were drawn up, and presented arms on her Majesty's passing from the boat to the Royal carriage.

The spectators were not so numerous as on any former occasion, which may, in a great measure, be accounted for by her Majesty's expressed wish for privacy being strictly adhered to; there was, however, a goodly number present, and her Majesty and the Prince acknowledged the homage of her loyal subjects, who most enthusiastically cheered them on entering the carriage, and again on driving away.

Her Majesty alighted from the Royal barge, leaning on the arm of the Prince. Mr. Petley, R.N., the Master Commanding the Lightning, had the honour of carrying the Princess Royal from the barge to the carriage, Prince Albert's own servant carrying the infant Prince of Wales. The stairs and landing place were covered with carpeting, placed there by the landlord of the Medina Hotel, for the purpose. The weather, upon the whole, was fine, although, during her Majesty's approach up the harbour, there was a threatening appearance of rain, which, however, wore off, and enabled the Royal party to land without having any dampness thrown upon them or their subjects. In a few minutes afterwards the spectators retired, and the neighbourhood became as dull and monotonous as before—very little company being in the vicinity; in fact few houses are taken, which is supposed to arise from an impression with some folks, that because her Majesty is present everything will be dear, when, in fact, almost the whole of the supplies for the Royal establishment are provided from the estate at Osborne, or sent from London; and had it not been for the firing of the guns announcing her Majesty's arrival, no one about Cowes would be aware of the Royal family being near them. They, however, have been daily seen taking walks in the neighbourhood, and are passed on the road without any other manifestation than what their high rank entitles them to expect—hats off.

On Sunday afternoon, her Majesty, accompanied by Prince Albert and Prince Leiningen, took their usual walk in the grounds of Osborne and on the beach, and did not return till late. The Royal dinner party consisted of her Majesty, Prince Albert, Prince Leiningen, Marchioness of Douro, Lord Charles Wellesley, Col. Wylde, Gen. Wemyss, Mr. Anson, the Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster, and Dr. Prætorius.

Her Majesty, on Monday, walked in the grounds, accompanied by the Royal Children on their ponies, and did not return till twelve o'clock to luncheon. The Queen, accompanied by Prince Albert and Prince Leiningen, afterwards went to the beach, along Osborne Great Wood. During their perambulations, a very heavy shower came on, and the Royal party took shelter in a small mud hut erected for the shelter of the coast guard on this part of the coast, during their night patrol. The shower was, however, soon over, and the Royal party continued their walk for some time.

On Tuesday morning, after breakfast, the Queen, accompanied by the Royal children and the Prince, took walking exercise in the grounds her Majesty returned early to have an audience with Mr. Cubitt relative to further additions to be made to Osborne House. After which, Prince Albert, accompanied by General Wemyss and Mr. Anson, visited Barton Farm, to give the necessary directions for the contemplated improvements to be made in that establishment.

The Corporation of Newport met on Tuesday in council for the purpose of agreeing to an address to be presented to her Majesty on the auspicious circumstance of making the island her future residence. Her Majesty's privacy and desire for retirement will not, however, be intruded upon;—no small disappointment to a few in consequence was occasioned, when the Mayor, Aldermen, and Councillors learnt that neither their addresses nor new dresses would be received by her Majesty, other than through the Secretary of State, or at a levee. It must be observed that thirteen of them had gone to an expense of £5 5s. each for new robes—they never before having appeared in such a costume.

On Tuesday, at eleven o'clock, Major-General the Honourable Sir Hercules R. Pakenham, K.C.B., the Governor of Portsmouth, accompanied by his son (his aide-de-camp), and Colonel Daly, Brigade-Major, arrived at the Barracks, when the half-yearly inspection of the Depôt Battalion took place.

The troops having formed in open column of divisions of the following depôts—12th, 20th, 23rd, 42nd, 45th, 71st, 91st, 97th Regiments, and the Rifle Brigade—the Major General inspected the battalion in complete marching order, and afterwards the books of the several companies, which gave him the highest satisfaction. At one o'clock, the whole of the troops again as sembled on parade, in review order, the two flank companies being provided with twenty-five rounds of blank cartridge each, and the rest with twenty rounds. From thence they marched into the drill-field adjoining, and went into a variety of evolutions, which could not be surpassed by any battalion, although it may be said they are all generally young soldiers; after which the Major-General came up and complimented Colonel Custance on the high state of discipline in which he had found the troops, and should make a special report of the same to Field-Marshal the Duke of Wellington. The Major General also inspected the school-room, and was highly pleased with the advanced state of education in which he found the children.

GREAT FIRE AT PITTSBURGH.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

After the review, the General and his staff retired to the mess-room, where a most sumptuous dejeuner à la fourchette had been provided by the officers of the barracks for the purpose, got up by their messman, Mr. Tomson, in his well-known style—notwithstanding the short notice received of the visit. Colonel Custance took the chair, supported by the General and Colonel Daly on the one side, and Sir Hew Dalrymple, 71st Regt., on the other. At the review there was a number of ladies present, among whom we observed Lady Holmes, Lady Russell; altogether, everything was far superior to anything of the kind previously witnessed in this quarter.

On Wednesday the Queen and Prince Albert took airings in the grounds of Osborne House, accompanied by the Prince of Leiningen. Her Majesty returned to town on Thursday afternoon.

From another Correspondent.)

On Saturday her Majesty and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Royal children, the Marchioness Douro, Lady Dover, General Wemyss, Col. Wild, and Mr. Anson, left the Nine Elms station at two o'clock, arrived at Portsmouth at four, and left immediately in the Lightning steamer, John Petley, Esq., Commander, for Osborne House. Crowds of people were assembled at East Cowes to welcome her Majesty to the island, and the yachts and merchant vessels in the roads were all dressed in their gayest colours, and the Solent presented a beautiful appearance. As the steamer approached Norris Castle, the scene became exciting, the yachtsmen waiting with their matches lighted to salute her Majesty, as also the batteries on shore.

To the evident disappointment of all, the Lightning was seen to alter her course and run into the bay off Osborne House—her Majesty having expressed a wish to land there. The Royal party then got into the barge, and proceeded towards the shore, when the yachts Ganymede, J. H. W. Pigott, Esq.; Esmeralda, T. W. Fleming, Esq.; and Lady June, the Hon. Lindsey Burrell, fired a Royal salute. After a few minutes, it was found impracticable to land, and the barge was again seen rounding Norris Point. The crews of the yachts manned yards, and gave three cheers as her Majesty passed. The batteries at West Cowes Castle and the R.Y.S. House saluted. The Royal party then landed at the Medina, Royal Thames Yacht Club House, East Cowes, where the Earl of Errol was waiting to receive them. They then proceeded to Osborne House.

GREAT FIRE AT PITTSBURG.

In our journal of last week, we briefly announced this terrific calamity—one of the most awful conflagrations that ever devastated any city in the United States.

The fire broke out about twelve o'clock on the 11th ult., and was not materially checked till five in the afternoon. It originated in a frame-building over an ice-house, near the corner of the Second and Ferry-streets. The progress of the flames was so fearfully rapid, that many persons had not time to remove their goods; others, again, had got their property into the street, when the flames seized it there, before it could be removed to a place of safety. At dark, persons might be seen in every direction, families sitting without shelter, guarding such portions of their household furniture as they were able to save from the flames, and not knowing where they would lay their heads, or procure a morsel of food. Of course the kindness of their more fortunate fellow-citizens did much to alleviate their sufferings, and we believe all were provided for as well as the melancholy nature of affairs would allow.

The Councils met in the afternoon, and attempted to devise some means to stay the conflagration. It was proposed to blow up houses that seemed in the way of the flames; the deliberations, however, were ineffectual in results. It seems, indeed, that there scarcely could have been time to accomplish anything in the way of destroying houses, so terribly rapid was the progress of the fire.

There is abundant reason for thankfulness that only one life was lost.

We have not room for the lengthy details, but may state the general results. "We have just returned," says the Pittsburgh Post, "from an hour's walk among the ruins of the disastrous conflagration. Frightful as was the progress of the flames, and terrible as the havoc seemed while it was going on, nobody can realise the losses and privations our citizens have sustained, until he walks through the forest of naked chimneys which mark the path of the destroying element.

"Of the 1200 houses, which were estimated as the number lost, about 700 were dwellings, and we suppose at least 4000 persons have been thrown out of house and home.

"On Friday the vaults of the Bank of Pittsburgh were opened, and the books, papers, and money, were found almost uninjured.

"It is impossible to calculate the loss. Merchants, mechanics, working-men—all, all have been ruined. Nor do we believe that the insurance-offices will ever be able to pay one-hundredth part of the property insured by them. Ruin stares hundreds of families in the face that on the previous morning rose from their beds with plenty of this world's goods, and have now no place to lay their heads.

"The Post Office and adjoining buildings, on the north-east corner of Third and Market streets, have been saved. Everything valuable, however, was removed from the stores, printing-offices, &c., in the block. The letters, &c., were taken from the Post Office.

"From the place where the fire commenced to where it was arrested, is about a mile and a quarter!

"Men who were on Thursday worth thousands are now bankrupt. It has been estimated that the burnt district contains about sixty acres. The total loss, in dollars, cannot be arrived at with any kind of accuracy—it is estimated at twelve millions.

"All the insurance offices are broken up—they will not be able to pay two per cent.

"The loss of the Monongahela bridge and the University is among the greatest the city has endured.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

As the season progresses, so does the aspect of Her Majesty's Theatre increase in brilliancy. Each night an overflowing audience—amongst which are reckoned the great, the noble, and the distinguished of the land, their Majesties at their head—bear testimony to the daily growing love of, or fashion for, this most delightful species of recreation; and we are bound to say that the entertainments provided fully justify their increasing favour, and the enthusiasm of such noble dilettanti as the Royal and distinguished personage who night after night gives audible tokens of his satisfaction. The extra nights, no longer confined to the visits of a less distinguished portion of London society, are now graced by the attendance of some of its most illustrious members, including sometimes her Gracious Majesty herself, as on Thursday week. To hear once again "Don Giovanni" indeed, with so unrivalled a cast, was a treat that few real lovers of music would have missed. On Saturday, the performance of the "Barbiere," with Mario, restored to voice and animation, was in remarkable contrast to the disasters of the last night on which it was given. Of these performances, however worthy of notice, time will not permit us to speak at length, the novelty of the past week, "Il Pirata," deserving as much space as can be allowed to this subject. Not that the opera in itself deserves a special notice, though, from the length of time that has elapsed since its last performance, it presents the attraction of novelty to some, at least, of our readers. Although the production of the composer of the "Puritani" and the "Sonnambula," it possesses but little of the freshness of imagination, and of the depth of feeling and power displayed in these two charming operas; it belongs rather to the maudlin, unmeaning, and mannerist school to whose prevalence Donizetti, in his inferior operas, has so largely contributed. With all our reverence and admiration for the lamented and gifted Bellini, we would protest strongly against works like this, that assist in fostering that false taste in music which has been so prevalent, and which, two or three years ago, would have caused "Adelia," or an opera of the same stamp, to be listened to, and vehemently applauded; while a work like "Ernani," possessing vigour, energy, and science, would have been un-appreciated, and, perhaps, almost unnoticed.

We are glad to see that the tide of musical taste is now setting in the opposite direction, and we could but congratulate ourselves upon this fact as we listened to the first act especially of the "Pirata," and its finale, which, containing so much material for dramatic and musical effect, and interpreted by artists, who, despite the poverty of the score, put their whole soul into the performance, was, nevertheless, wholly ineffective. The music of the second act, it must be said, is of a higher order. The duet of Grisi and Fornasari violently applauded and encored—that of Grisi and Mario, also encored—and the last beautiful air, "Tu Vedrai La Sventurata," warmed and delighted the audience, and we shared the feeling. It would not be fair any longer to delay rendering to Signor Mario the tribute so justly his due. In this opera, the genius which he so often keeps carefully locked up and concealed, bringing it forth with a sort of coquetry, at intervals, to show that it exists, and to make us long for its re-appearance, was allowed to come forth in its full lustre. He looked well, acted with spirit and energy, and sang admirably from the beginning; his tones acquiring increased depth and fullness, and his singing a passionate earnestness and expression, which made him, for the time, a different being. His reading of "Tu Vedrai" appeared to us to be faulty; his execution, as far as it went, was perfect; but it lacked the despairing energy and passion for which there is every material, both in the music and in the situation. Although Grisi, on the whole, hardly equalled her usual performances, at other times her subdued tones, her softened action, produced, especially in the scene with Fornasari a most touching effect. As for this latter artist, he was the very incarnation of the fierce and tyrannical Duke. On the whole it must be concluded that the applause which, especially in the second act, was long and loud, was due more to the admirable performance of the artists than to the intrinsic merits of the work itself.

The benefit of Lucile Grahn, on Thursday, gave an opportunity for the opera votaries to show their appreciation of that refined and poetical style of dancing of which Taglioni is the high-priestess, and in which she is so closely followed by the fair beneficiaire. We need not say that such a call was responded to. "Le Bal sous Louis XIV." displayed this favourite of the English public in a new character; and one that admirably suited her. The stately and graceful "Menuet de la Cour" is as congenial to her peculiar style of dancing as it is, we think, opposite to the bounding buoyant motion of her fair partner, Cerito, to whom the heavy dress of that period is as unappropriate as the slow measure and majestic movements, which seem to restrain her apparent longing for playful and joyous motion. All the pas in which Lucile Grahn has attained her present ascendancy, in the favour of the English public, were given on this occasion, but the charming "Gazza Ladra"—an opera in which all the resources of its great composer's genius are brought forth—one of the most universally liked and appreciated of all his works; replete with exquisite melodies: undisguised and unspoiled by meretricious ornament—must not be forgotten in the host of choregraphic attractions. Its cast—the same as last year and the year before, with the exception of the character of Pippo, now taken by Brambilla—is perfect. It is, however, unnecessary to enlarge upon what almost every lover has so often seen and judged of for himself.

Three great stars will appear in conjunction, on Thursday night, at her Majesty's Theatre: Lucile Grahn, Cerito, and that charming danseuse and great favourite, Carlotta Grisi, who returns to us on this occasion. Besides the feats of these unrivalled dancers, we shall have the pleasure of hearing on that night "Don Giovanni," so brilliant with its present caste; Grisi, the Donna Anna; Castellan, so charming a Zerlina; and Rita Borio, universally acknowledged to be the best representative of Donna Elvira who has ever undertaken this ungracious part. Mario, Fornasari, Lablache, and Botelli are all included, and the little Viennoises, more delightful than ever in their "Pas Rococo," and "Pas des Amours," will add their share to the entertainments so liberally bestowed.

DRURY-LANE.

On Wednesday night Balfe's new opera, "The Enchantress," was produced for the first time at this house, for the début of Madame Thillon on the boards of one of the large houses. Much variety of opinion was entertained as to whether she should be such a star, such a twinkling brilliant, at Drury as she had been at the Princess', but her performance on Wednesday evaporated all doubts, and convinced the sceptics that she is a marvellous singer in the naïve school, who can accommodate herself to any arena. But for the opera. It opens with a prologue (which might be dispensed with), from which all we learn is that a certain pirate, commanding a ship moored in the Archipelago, having ventured ashore, has been detected and executed; but, somehow or other, before his death he manages to transmit to his band a solemn obligation to rear and protect his infant child left in their care, and, as the book says, "no matter at what cost, or in what country, to give her the most brilliant education possible." Arrived at a mature age, she is to be made acquainted with certain documents, the nature of which at present is a secret. The band all pledge themselves to this, and thus ends the prologue.

Fifteen years are supposed to elapse before the actual commencement of the opera, which opens with a view of the Hermitage of "Our Lady of the Woods," in the Abruzzi mountains, near Chietti. In this scene we learn that Ramir (the Pirate's Lieutenant) has become hermit, under the name of Fra Antonio, and that the neighbourhood is bewitched by the presence of an Enchantress or Sorceress. A facetious Doctor (more like a runaway apothecary's boy) arrives in search of his charge, Sylvio, whose horse being killed in a fall, and himself stunned, the Doctor Mathanasius) kindly inquiries, "What has befallen thee?" There is so much obscurity in this part of the libretto, that we will not undertake to unravel it. Suffice it to say that the Enchantress appears, and, of course, there is instantly a mutual love kindled in her breast and that of the youthful Sylvio. She, by means of drugs, sends him to sleep, and transports him to a romantic grotto, where, for a time, he believes everything to be supernatural; and in her character of Enchantress, promises him promotion, even up to the regal dignity. This, with some slight interruptions, is ultimately effected. The artifice of Stella, at a masqued ball, inducing the Regent to lay aside his insignia, and placing them upon Sylvio, produces the former's assassination instead of the latter, against whom Ramir, the Pirate's Lieutenant, had conspired. At this juncture the Pirate Lieutenant offers to prove Sylvio's legitimate right to the throne on condition that Stella should give him her hand in marriage. This is indignantly refused, and a suicide threatened. Ramir ultimately relents, and bestows her hand upon Sylvio (at last known to be somebody), now Don Paul of Sicily. Thus ends this farrago of fifty modern French pieces, squeezed into each other. We must not omit a second funnyism which Harley, as Mathanasius, had to utter. Alluding to certain papers, Stella remarks, "It will be two hours before we obtain them!"

Math. (in despair).—"Two hours! Why we shall be hung three times a-piece, long before that! and that would be the height of inconvenience!"—!!

The music of this opera bears more the impress of fluency than of thought or design. It is of the makeweight school—it will not last, although it abounds in pretty things, sometimes amounting to beauties. As usual, the best things were passed by with comparatively faint praise (how sickening to a composer's feelings!) and the lightest aplauded to the echo. Witness the Prayer in the Prologue, which is perhaps one of the best imagined things in the whole opera: "I've love-spells for the young coquette." Madame Thillon's introduction song in the second act is over-wind-instrumented, frequently producing what the Italians call radoppiami amento, by the crossing of the parts. Madame Thillon's voice will not bear much wind instrument accompaniment. The chorus, "Ever be happy," is a pretty composition. Sylvio's air, "When this enchantment," is smooth and graceful, but not over original. The duet, "My presence still in calm or storm," is really a fine composition, but not fitted to vulgar ears. With this the first act ends. In the second act, "A youthful knight," sung by Madame Thillon as a page, elicited a second encore. It is the gem of the opera. The romance (by Sylvio), "I love her as that heaven I love," was encored also; but simply, in our thinking, because Mr. Harrison would take the applause at the end of the verse as an universal call for repetition. In fact he indicated he would sing it again before the terminal symphony had well finished. We hate encores: why are they not introduced in tragedy? The song of "The young Nadir" is pretty, but not new: the couplet—

"I know not if the tale be true;
But as they sang, I sing to you,"

is very familiar to us. There is nothing further worthy of notice till we arrive at the chorus "Hither we come," which is very charming: the solo by Stella, "My task is ended," with the coro sostenuto, was admirably executed. She was encored in it most rapturously. Her song, "Who has not heard," is full of difficulty, which she most gracefully overcame. The trio, "The love, almost sublime," is one of the finest things in the opera; the latter part of it, with which the opera concluded, was deservedly encored.

Madame Thillon is a spiritual creature. She is right in selecting parts which have that mixture of truth and improbability which the French so much delight in. Her voice in the low notes is a little shrewish, but it is beautifully clear and musical in the upper. It possesses, moreover, an unbounded flexibility. As an actress in the Opera Comique style, she is perfection—nay fascination! At the fall of the curtain, the usual honours were bestowed upon the principal singers, who appeared in due form before the curtain. The opera has been splendidly got up, and no doubt will have the run of the season. The house was very well filled at first price.

Before we quit our notice of this night's performance, we must say a word or two about the very reprehensible conduct of the box-keepers on the third circle. It is rare that seats are taken on that tier to the very back rows; but we were assured it was so, and that there was not even standing room. A sixpence or a shilling (thrown away) soon made it plain there was room for 500 on the circle, Mr. Bunn ought to correct such flagrant abuses. He should look before the curtain as well as behind.

LYCEUM.

The burlesque of "Cinderella," produced at this theatre on Monday evening, promises to prove the most successful of all the extravaganzas that have been brought out under Mrs. Keeley's management. The mise en scène is most gorgeous, surpassing "Aladdin," and the other spectacles which have gained public approbation at the Lyceum. The acting is unexceptionable. The construction of the piece, and the dialogue, are by gentlemen who have had much experience in such matters; and, as a coup, the thirty little English children, in their Pas de Fleurs and Pas des Moisonneurs, will certainly teach the Danseuses Viennoises at the Opera, to put their best little feet forward, that they may not be overtaken in the race for popular favour.

The original story of Cinderella has been often put upon the stage in various forms. It is a favourite one with the children of every nation, and nearly every nation has its version. The leading facts are adhered to in the present burlesque, but some change is made in the relative social positions of the dramatis personæ. The Prince, for instance, becomes Prince Rodolph, Grand Duke of Gerolstein, the hero of the "Mysteries of Paris," capitally played by Mr. Wigan, who takes compassion upon Cinderella, Mrs. Keeley, as his prototype would have done upon the Goualeuse, Fleur de Marie, with the exception that he finally marries her. The prosy, although respectable, person of the opera, Alidoro, is done away with altogether; but the Prince's valet, Capillaire (Mr. Keeley), struts and frets his hour and three quarters most amusingly. The Baroness, too (Mrs. Woollidge), wife of the Baron Soldoff (Mr. Frank Mathews), is introduced, and the two daughters appear as Rondeletta (Miss Farebrother) and Patchoulia (Miss Villars). An evil spirit is also introduced in the person of the celebrated German gnome, Rumpelstiltskin (Mr. Collier), and an "induction" is supported by Burlesque (Mr. Wigan), admirably dressed as a clown on one side, and a gentleman of the present day on the other. The effect, as each phase is presented to the audience, is remarkably ludicrous. And besides these we have imps, fairies, and masquers; supernatural guards and natural attendants; with processions, ballets, and tableaux without end. And if we add to these that puns and allusions, some good and others bad, and the rest intermediate, are thickly interspersed in the dialogue, touching our old friends Hungerford Bridge and the Exeter Arcade, the "increased grant," the Premier, the Free Trade Bazaar, Lucille Grahn, &c. &c., our readers may conceive that there is enough in the three acts—a dangerous experiment, by the way, for a burlesque—to keep their attention on the qui vive.

Amongst the principal effects we may notice a cemetery attached to the ruined chateau of the Countess d'Anois, in which all the chief fairy stories are called from their tombs. There is also a ludicrous parody of the double staircase procession in the "Daughter of St. Mark;" and a clever transformation of the pumpkin, rats and lizards, into the equipage for the ball, not in the clumsy mechanical method in which it has hitherto been done, but by a phantasmagoria process, which allowed the forms to blend insensibly one into the other, the theatre being in total darkness. The change was hailed with loud approbation. A Triple Polka, by Misses Villars and Farebrother, as two dashing débardeurs, and Mr. Wigan, was encored; and a "Mazourka d'Extase," from "Eoline," was admirably danced by Mrs. Keeley and Mr. Collier, the object of Rumpelstiltskin being to keep Cinderella at the ball until after twelve o'clock. The delight of the audience at the very clever performance of the "Danseuses Anglaises" knew no bounds; in fact, as a contemporary has remarked, it was quite reckless.

The burlesque was played to perfection. Mrs. Keeley's nature and perceptive humour, as the heroine, made every point tell; an author may rest assured that if a joke does not get a laugh when she delivers it, the case is indeed hopeless. Her comical spouse was deliciously pompous and inflated as Capillaire; and Mr. Wigan had a part which allowed him every opportunity of displaying his versatile talents, which are of no common order: few performers are making such rapid advances in their profession as this gentleman. Mr F. Mathews, as the henpecked anti-temperance Baron, was also exceedingly effective. Misses Farebrother and Villars performed with unusual spirit, and in the second act were loudly applauded; as was an imitation of the love-scene in "The Lady of Lyons," by Mrs. Keeley and Wigan, who played as Helen Faucit and Macready with singular fidelity.

The curtain came down amidst a storm of applause which continued for some minutes. All the principal characters were called before the curtain, together with the thirty children, who curtsied their respects, as they surrounded Mr. Frampton, to whose careful tuition their excellent performance must be ascribed. Keeley announced the burlesque for repetition every evening, and it will, no doubt, have a long and lucrative run. It is the joint production of Messrs. Taylor and Albert Smith.

STRAND.

This little theatre has re-opened for the summer season, after various vicissitudes, with a piece called "London by Night," an adaptation, if we mistake not, of a drama, "Paris la Nuit," produced in Paris some time back. In its English dress it is a very poor affair; although the French drama (if it be the same) enjoyed a long run in France. But this can be easily accounted for. The wonderful attention to detail, and general excellence in the scenery, which requires the stupendous mechanism of the Porte Saint Martin and Ambigu Comique to give effect to, are totally unattainable in a theatre like the Strand. Every tableau is, in a French piece, the result of several combined talents, directed towards one perfect whole; and the Parisian artistes know that one careless appliance is as fatal to general excellence as one bad egg to the entire omelette. Again, situations and incidents, indigenous to Paris, are rendered worthless by being translated into parallel ones in England; and, consequently, the sympathies of the audience are no longer enlisted. They do not understand the precise nature of the situations into which the characters are thrown, and so become careless as to their fate. We do not mean to say that all was not done for this drama that might have been, but the capabilities of the theatre were not suited to its production. A scene of Blackfriars-bridge was meritorious, and a very pretty trio was introduced; but an attempted representation of a masquerade at Vauxhall was somewhat melancholy, and the appearance of a virtuous country grazier amongst the throng, who moralizes thereupon, very comical; indeed, the dreary and unmeaning attempts at festivity, in the entire scene, were amusing to any one who felt inclined to look at the piece in a perfectly matter-of-fact point of right. Mr. John Webster, Mr. H. Hall, and Miss Walcott said what was put down for them; the other performers were below mediocrity. A well-managed "tag" brought down the curtain with applause; but we fear the dramatic day for virtuously indignant uncles, penitent nephews, and stage piemen has gone. A burlesque upon the old story of "Robinson Crusoe" followed, from the pen of Mr. P. L. Blanchard, whose "Antigone" enjoyed a very successful career at this theatre and elsewhere, as well as "The Artful Dodge," "Angels and Lucifers," "The Road of Life," and other pieces produced by Mr. Wild at the Olympic. Time is set quite at defiance in this extravaganza, which runs over with points and allusions to passing topics, involved in a web of amusing anachronisms, at which we scarcely know whether to laugh or be angry, at seeing our dear old nursery friend held up to ridicule. But the audience appeared to have made up their minds upon the subject, and laughed very heartily at everything and everybody, so that the burlesque achieved a perfect success. A farce concluded the programme of the evening's entertainments, in which Miss Wallcott sustained three or four different characters with effect. We may speak in terms of commendation of a very efficient, though small orchestra. Not only was the music well played, but, what is of equal consequence, it was well selected; and some agreeable quadrilles and waltzes relieved the tedium of the entr'actes.

VAUXHALL.

Those who believe in Murphy and the professors of meteorology in general, may find matter of deep research in prosecuting an inquiry as to the cause of the absence of rain or any fall in the mercury of the barometer on Monday last, seeing that Vauxhall Gardens were opened on that evening. The morning, to be sure, had been somewhat lowering, and one or two undeniable showers came down pretty smartly. Suburban purveyors looked gloomy, and managers of London theatres rejoiced. Holiday makers lingered in doubt about the steamboat piers, and watched the weathercocks; things were certainly not promising. They looked up to the chimney pots and saw the smoke beating down; they looked down to the river and saw its dull stream reflecting the leaden hue of the sky above; they looked around them and saw—worse than all—announcements that Vauxhall was to open that evening. And then many gave up their intended merry-making, and went home in despair.

But the seasons have evidently changed: we have chilling winds in May, and hot days in December. Cold enough, indeed, it is at present, to a degree that forces us to look upon Chaucer's or Spencer's rhapsodical descriptions of May as pleasant fictions, and shakes our belief in the old poets altogether. These changes pervade the weather generally, inasmuch as Vauxhall has actually thrown open its gates, lighted up its lamps, deployed its armies of cold fowls and lobsters, and —there has been no rain! This supernatural circumstance was, we confess, to ourselves somewhat painful. An indefinable feeling of mistrust stole over us as we walked about: we doubted everything and everybody: we were evidently under the influence of glamour, and a few large drops of rain would have relieved our overcharged mind, as though it had been a thunder-cloud.

Fine, nevertheless, it was, and fine it continued throughout the evening. Crowds again thronged the illuminated walks and glittering rotunda, as of old. The gardens were still "a great fact," and had not been desecrated into dwellings for luxuriating clerks, or vinegar, chimney-tile, and composite candle manufactories, as we had resolved they were about to be, putting faith in the placards when they closed last. Country gentlemen, visiting the Free-trade Bazaar, who had been accustomed to talk largely to their families about "the lights of other days" at Vauxhall, had yet an opportunity of taking them to see that they had not romanced too strongly—that the "Arabian Nights," with their gorgeous imagery and splendour, were not the fictions they had always been supposed to be. And we have all pleasant recollections of Vauxhall, in spite of its pluvial associations. We would not willingly exchange our own for clearer reminiscences of things far more important in the romance of our life. It is at least pleasant, when jaded, blasé, and spirit-wearied, to think that there was a time when we regarded the "twenty thousand extra lamps," not as little glass vessels, with smoky wicks and common oil within, but as terrestrial stars, lighted by fairy hands, and fitted only to shed their radiance upon what must have been links in the same wondrous chain of dazzling creations—the tempting fruit of Aladdin's subterranean gardens.

Vauxhall, then, has opened, and we think with every chance of success; dependent, of course, upon the climate. The gardens have been thoroughly redecorated and improved; no traces of the dreary efforts to appear festive and joyous, which were so dismally apparent during the last seasons, now remain. The orchestra, if not new, has been rendered quite as good; the covered walks have been extended; various effective objects are placed about the grounds, constructed with artistic skill; and the fireworks—time out of mind the feature of the evening's amusements—are, if anything, better than ever. An attractive little ballet, also, was produced in the Rotunda, very well supported by the corps engaged; and the present proprietor seems determined to do everything on a sensible satisfactory scale. The price of admission is reduced—a good step, seeing what was offered for a shilling at the Surrey Gardens—and the charges for refreshments put on a level with those of a tavern. This is especially judicious; as many will now stay to supper who hitherto sought it, at a moderate price, without the gates, in the same feeling that makes a man go out of a theatre to buy eight juicy oranges for sixpence at the doors, instead of paying twopence for a single woolly one in the house. The new management of Vauxhall has our best wishes for its success; and, if St. Swithin and Jupiter Pluvialis can in any way be propitiated, we doubt not but that the speculation will prove a profitable one.

ASTLEY'S.

Mr. Batty is certainly entitled to some praise for his unwearied exertions in the production of novelty at this theatre. We miss, at times, in the mise en scène of his pieces—in the groupings and general appliances—the artistic taste which characterised the spectacles brought out by poor Ducrow, whose eye for effect, and talent to work it out, were unequalled; but the constant succession of novelty shows a spirited management; and the public will usually support a theatre whereon they imagine that money is freely spent, and the arrangements of which are liberal. The new equestrian drama produced on Whit Monday, to a very full audience, is an adaptation of Eugene Sue's romance, "L'Arabian Godolphin; ou, l'Histoire d'un Cheval," a translation of which, as our readers are aware, has lately appeared in the columns of a contemporary under the title of "The Godolphin Arabian." The task of dramatising this romance was entrusted to Mr. Moncrieff, and he has performed it with much ability. The action passes in three acts, and in as many parts of the world successively—Arabia, France, and England; and this affords great scope for variety of costume, scenery, and adventure. The first act is appropriately interspersed with selections from "The Desert" of Felicien David. There are the usual number of wonderful incidents and situations, more or less incidental to the action; but, as we have before said, it does not do to criticise the "Unities" of an Astley's Equestrian drama too closely, or the charm is lost. The audience were very liberal with their applause, and the piece was perfectly successful.

The Scenes in the Circle were unusually interesting, the troupe of M. Tournaire mainly contributing to the effect. We are convinced that they will become great favourites, more especially Madame Klatt, whose graceful performance was one of the best things connected with the manège we ever remember to have seen. By the way, the elegant deportment and affability of one "not for an age, but all time"—the immortal Widdicombe—so long displayed in the ring at Astley's, and, for aught we can tell, in the riding-school of Sesostris, has gained him the honourable post of Master of the Ceremonies to Vauxhall Gardens, vice Simpson, deceased.

The theatres at the two opposite extremities of London—Sadler's Wells and the Surrey—shall receive due attention in our next: but we are compelled to omit several of our notices, from the pressure of the Whitsuntide productions. By general report, however, we learn that the houses were all completely filled.

Mr. George Osborne, the celebrated pianist, resident at Paris, has arrived in London, and will play during the season.

We were present, on Thursday week, at a representation of the "Biche au Bois," at the Porte St. Martin theatre in Paris—the piece which has created such a sensation amongst the playgoers of the French capital, from the unparalleled splendour with which it has been produced. It is written by the Messrs. Cogniard, two brothers, managers of the theatre, and is the story of a Princess, who is changed into a deer, by the machinations of a spiteful fairy. Two or three other tales, including the Sleeping Beauty, the Fish and the Ring, Prince Ahmed, &c., appear to be grafted on to it: but the whole is a clever vehicle for the introduction of some of the most gorgeous pageantry and stupendous mechanical effects ever yet put upon the stage. In one tableau—Le Royaume des Poissons—the characters are all fishes, costumed with marvellous skill. The King is a salmon; the body guard are pikes and crocodiles; the Prince is very properly a dolphin (le dauphin): the favourite lady a carp: and the Prime Minister a lobster. There is a crowd of attendants—gold and silver fish, shrimps, and cray-fish. The eyes of the heads are all glass, like those used for stuffed birds, but on a large scale; they wink, and throw all sorts of curious expressions into their faces—languishing, staring, and coquetting. In another scene they are all vegetables; a dance of cucumbers and artichokes produced roars of applause. To the most minute details the care and effect is astonishing. The piece would not, however, do much in London. In the first place our managers would flinch from laying out money upon it sufficient to carry out its splendour; as we heard the expense of getting it up at the Porte St. Martin exceeded 50,000 francs (£2,000); and in the second the capabilities of the theatre are very extensive for accommodating a large audience, and, in the event of the pieces having a run, it is always densely crowded.

General Tom Thumb—Tom Pouce, as our neighbours call him—is also the rage in Paris. He appears on the lithographed titles of songs; statuettes of him are in the windows; he is made out of chocolate and sugar in the bonbon shops; and casts of his hand are at some of the fancy repositories. He also appears nightly in the piece "Le Petit Poucet," or, our old tale of "The Seven Leagued Boots," at the Vaudeville. "The General" has learnt a few words of French, and his acting in the play shows a vivacity and intelligence which we scarcely gave him credit for. He has been to the Tuileries, and is altogether in high feather.

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The fourth concert of the series took place on Monday night, under the direction of M. Moscheles, and attracted, we think, the most numerous audience of the season. Expectation was on the tiptoe to hear the great German baritone, Pischeck, who had already made a sensation at Madame Caradori's concert. Nor was it disappointed. Pischeck is an extraordinary man; he feels his subject to the fullest extent of its poetry, and has at his beck a physique that will obey him from the demands of the highest energy and power to those of the most delicate and sutble nuances of gentle expression. Though his voice is radically in the register of baritone, yet he can at ease quit it to revel freely in that of the tenor, occasionally, further still, in a beautiful voce di testa. He gave Spohr's beautiful gem from "Faust," "Der Holle Selbst," and aria, "Liebe ist die Zarte Bluthe," in the purest and most impassioned manner: in a style half German, half Italian, but whole perfection from the union. His "Lied," in part II., "Die Fahnenwacht" (the Standard Bearer), a common-place composition of Lindpainter, he was equally successful in a different style. In fact, he is at home in everything, "from gay to grave, from lively to severe." Our enthusiasm for this great singer we fear has carried us a little away from our gallantry, but let not Mdlle. Bertucat suppose for a moment that she could be overlooked. This lady, it must be recollected, distinguished herself a season or two ago as a harpiste of no ordinary ability, but finding herself possessed of the much more useful and pleasing power of vocalism, she resolved upon becoming a singer. Her voice is a very fine soprano of considerable extent, and, considering that she must have but recently commenced the laborious practice of singing, everything brilliant can be augured of her future success at no very distant period. She has feeling, fancy, and judgment; she only wants to be a little more au fait from habit.

And now for one melancholy side of the picture. What in the name of all that is tasteful could induce the "powers that be" to commence their concert with the vilest rubbish that was ever misnomed a Sinfonia? Of a verity it is a most ludicrous production—here and there we see some offspring of the immortal Beethoven, mutilated as stolen children are by gipsies, and then there is a dash off into Mr. Ries's own quagmire of dullness and obscurity, where not even a goblin of his own imagination is present to light up the dreary sceno. Faugh! this Philharmonic is "an unweeded garden—things rank and gross in nature possess it merely!" Madame Dulcken performed Mendelssohn's Concerto, in "D Minor," most admirably, but why was it in the place of the customary overture at the end of act 1? Beethoven's magnificent symphony opened part second, and obliterated all disgust occasioned by Ries's puerile nonsense. It was very finely performed, also most admirably conducted by the steady and watchful Moscheles. In the first part, Sivori played the first movement of his Concerto in E flat, with immense effect; and in the second an adagio and rondo, recently composed, but intended to be part and parcel of the same work, in which his pure intonation and brilliant (particularly staccato) playing leave him, we think, the man who really does inherit old wizard Pag's mantle. It was a sin to place Beethoven's Egmont as the last item! Perhaps it was a trick to detect the sincerity of public taste.

ANCIENT CONCERTS.

The Fourth Concert of the series took place on Wednesday last. Conductor, Sir Henry Bishop. Leader, Mr. Loder. Organ, Mr. Lucas.

We were sorry to perceive that the indisposition of the Noble Director (Earl Howe), prevented him from enjoying the pleasure of his own exquisite selection. Part I. commenced with Handel's Coronation Anthem, which was divinely performed. The Hallelujah, at the conclusion, produced an extraordinary effect; all rose up in reverence to its sublimity. Emanuel Bach's fine chorus, heard for the first time at these concerts; a "Sanctus and Hosanna," from one of Mozart's masses; Pergolesi's "Gloria in Excelsis;" Graun's "Cum Sancto Spiritu," a charming corale by the great Bach, and a motett, by Marceto, formed some of the chief novel features in this judicious selection. Madame Caradori sang charmingly, as she ever does. Miss Birch in "Deh Parlate" was sweetly impressive, also in Gluck's "Invaro &c.," which was encored. In Handel's "But bright Cecilia," she was magnificent. There is an affinity between her voice and Handel's soprano songs, which is very felicitous. As we had occasion to remark on a former notice, her magnificent voice perfectly defied Harper's trumpet, which nevertheless was not to be outdone. Mdlle. Schloss has ventured out of her "two songs," and sang "Non temer," very charmingly—Loder's violin accompaniment was exquisite. "O Liberty," was given very well by Mr. Pearsall, and accompanied by Lindley, with his accustomed ability: we must protest, however, against the egotistical cadenza at the close—it means nothing—but as a tour de force, was admired by the many. We must not omit to notice Mr. Lucas's performance of Handel's concerto, No. I, on the organ, which deserved much applause. Staudigl, although indisposed, sang two songs admirably. The next Concert will be under the direction of His Grace the Duke of Wellington.

A MUSICAL PRODIGY.—A new infant prodigy is at this moment a candidate for fame in the Metropolis, as a performer on the pianoforte. His name is Sebastian Bach Mills, from Cheltenham, the son of Mr. Mills, the organist of that city, and only six years of age. He plays with perfect ease and precision several fugues composed by Handel and Sebastian Bach. He was christened after the latter, in consequence of his being born on the anniversary of the birth of that celebrated musician. It is curious that, as it was impossible his extraordinary talent for music at that time could have been predicted, he should excel in the performance of the favourite productions of that master whose name he bears. Although so young, he has been thoroughly instructed; for, besides the fugues, he plays other pieces equally well. He can modulate through the major and minor keys very readily, and will read an easy composition at sight. His style is firm and full of character; and it is very intereresting to see with what feeling and spirit he enters into his subject, while standing on a thick volume of music, to enable him to reach the keys of the grand piano, and to give him a sufficient command over the instrument, so as to render it subservient to his will. Besides his genius for music, he is naturally a very clever and wonderful child.

THE CHAT OF THE WHITSUN WEEK,

IN PROSE AND VERSE.

Whitsuntide has brought with it its Spring bursts of merriment—the fun and frolic of the holiday, and the mad delight of the millions escaped from work. The joke cracking people have furnished the wit—the sparkling firmament the sun—and the bounding waters, with their life-freighted barks and steamers, the tide; so that Whitsuntide has set in pleasantly, and does honour to May. The rejoicings of the week have truly been pretty vociferous—and quick indeed has been the transition of clown and conjuror, cakes and gingerbread—the music and the million—the people and the pop—from the unrecovered astonishment of Brook Green, to the fresher aspirations of Greenwich and One-Tree Hill. The parks of the metropolis have been literally dizzy with delight; and as for the processions in the suburbs, with band and banner—with song, shout and chorus—in the wide roads—in the green lanes—upon the startled waters—why no Easter ever saw the like. The very canals have crammed their barges with the spirit of the holiday, and the pathway hacks have been drawing human beings and Sunday clothes, instead of corn, coal, and flour. Then the Summer exhibitions have opened as full of promise as the buds, and with even more rapid expansion. The balloons are getting ready—the scene painters are capping the climax of their renown—the Surrey Zoological is proclaiming a season of wonders—and Vauxhall—the Royal property, as Simpson delighted to call it—is already alive. We never knew a brighter or more bustling Whitsuntide; and the universal happiness shines cheerily upon our hearts.

But apropos of Vauxhall. Have we not a feast of glory for our readers in the fact that the par excellence of a former day—that old immortal Simpson, whose name we have already reverentially ejaculated—is succeeded in his courtly vocation by the only other man in the world-habitable who could properly succeed such a predecessor? Yes, and with the announcement let Creation crack its riding-whips for joy. Widdicombe, the monarch of Astley's, the hero of the Amphitheatre, the champion of the Ring, the self-possessed survivor of a hundred generations—old in youth, young in age, and great in all things—the one unperishing and imperishable Widdicombe is MASTER OF THE CEREMONIES IN THE GARDENS OF VAUXHALL!

Her Majesty has set the example of a pleasure excursion to her people, and has gone to the Isle of Wight. The officers at Portsmouth, however, seem to have made a bungling business of the Royal embarkation, and to have mulled it as they would their port—indeed if Portsmouth should be saddled with the character of the "Mull'd Port" for the future we should not be surprised. Certes the Queen was not pleased, nor could she have been greatly flattered when that graceful prettiness of condescension which caused her to hold up her laughing children to the jolly tars and admiring crowds around her, failed of that spontaneous recognition which should have insured it a vociferous shout of Royalty. Perhaps her Majesty never felt more disgust at John Bull than during this episode of her journey to Cowes.

The people take to the water like so many water wag-tails, and river and marine excursions are all the go. They make a wonderful change in the aspect of the newspapers; and in the place of dull debates in Parliament, we have column after column of advertisements of the places that are to be gone to, and the thousand and one ways and means of going. You take in your confusion the extreme points of the holiday compass, and your mind oscillates between the two antipodes of pleasure. This is very Whitsuntidish and very right.

While we are thus plunged into the delights of peace, America puts on the war-bluster, and threatens us with a sound drubbing. The New York Herald is sorry to be obliged to thrash us, but intimates that the necessity of the case makes the castigation imperative. The "aggressive policy"—these are the Editor's words—"of America requires it, and the thing must be done."

The ashen hue of pallid fear,
Proclaims Britannia now a noodle;
And her old Union Jack—Oh! dear—
Will soon be struck to Yankee Doodle!

They will not let us keep a ship,
And scarce allow our Queen a poodle,
Much less a crown! when made to slip
From Britain's throne by Yankee-Doodle!

Mint julep fine while they imbibe,
To England they'll give nought but swipes O!
Shine bright in stars themselves, and gibe
At John Bull when he gets the stripes O!

As on aggression's line they strive
They'll not omit a thing to vex us!
They'll swallow Oregon alive,
Burn Mexico, and pillage Texas!

Then if their Patriot, Polk, grows bold
With conquest gained at every measure, he
Will pay the nation's debt in gold—
The spoil of England's captured treasury!

Thus all our greatness shall relapse
Back into slav'ry worse than feudal;
And so we may be doomed—perhaps!—
To bear the yoke of Yankee-Doodle!

We wonder how Napier and Wellington feel under the circumstances!

In France they have clapped a rider upon the Fortifications Bill, which is somewhat Irish, inasmuch as it forbids them to be fortified. It may now, in fact, be called a sort of cannon-law, in which the cannons are prohibited, for it is enacted that the guns shall not be brought to Paris, but kept at Bourges. This is one of the ordinances of the Deputies against the ordnance of the State, and seems to have been made upon the principle of not allowing the forts to be trop fort. Meanwhile our own artillery have been practising in the marshes of Woolwich, and Lord Francis Egerton has been firing some heavy jokes at the electors of South Lancashire, in resigning his trust. He goes out of Parliament, but not into disgrace; he leaves not for his principles but his health; and he is less a martyr to Maynooth than to the gout, which is just now a bodily bar to his mental exercise. And to this end he resigns.

The wielder of Parliamentary philippics has published another political novel, and Sybil is the historical Oracle that finds utterance in the wake of the political Coningsby. The book will be found a startling one, and Mr. Disraeli will have added another notoriety to his name. His praise of Burke, at the expense of Fox, suggests an epigram:—

About with iron fists he knocks,
And bravely goes to work,
Until we find him Burking Fox,
By force of lauding Burke!

In Ireland, the M.P.s have given an anticipatory refusal to obey the approaching Call of the House. Says Dan to his followers—"We'll resist the Speaker's warrant, I warrant you!" and we suppose he'll abandon his usual practice, and keep his word. Since he has mounted the '82 uniform, and defied the Speaker, the schoolboys of the national schools declare that he likes Gingerbread better than Parliament.

ICE.

The progress of civilization, and the artificial wants which it has created, have originated a strange and endless variety of trades and professions. Immense establishments are erected, and vast numbers of persons employed, to produce articles which, a few generations since, had no existence, but which have now become absolute necessaries of every-day life. It is, perhaps, fortunate, that civilization, with its wants and refinements and luxuries, has kept pace with the increase of population, and furnished fresh and increasing employment to those accumulating masses of people who must otherwise have been given over to idleness—that fruitful parent of mischief. Insuffiency of employment has created leisure and room for invention, and invention has, in turn, supplied the material for labour; and if (as seems probable, reasoning from analogy) this reciprocal process is to continue as mankind increase, it is impossible to fix any limit to invention—any boundary to the multiplicity of occupation—or the infinite diffusion of the luxuries furnished by human ingenuity, and, by habit, transformed into wants.

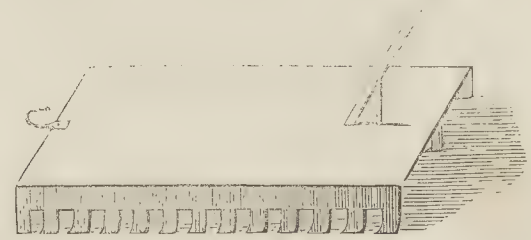
These observations are suggested by the fact that the commodity named at the head of this article has progressed through the various stages of occasional, frequent, and constant use—in the kitchen, in the butler's pantry, and on the table—till the obtaining and supplying it have not only formed a distinct trade, furnishing regular occupation to a large number of persons, but the ice itself has become an important article of commerce, and is transported by sea in vast quantities, to every quarter of the globe.

In America, where the extreme cold of the winter furnishes the Ice in great abundance and perfection, and the excessive heat of summer renders the necessity for its use proportionably great, the trade in it has acquired an importance which, not long since, would have seemed impossible. In different districts of the country, large and pure Lakes have almost the value which here attaches to mines; and companies with large capital are formed, who purchase them as one might purchase a coal-mine, to rob them periodically of their crystal treasures, for the summer supply of the public. One of the lakes which has been purchased for this object, is situated so near the seaboard, that its proprietors, with the genuine Yankee spirit of enterprise, have, within the past few years, hit upon the novel plan of making the product of their mine—no, their lake—an article of export, for the supply of those regions where the heat of a tropical summer makes its cooling properties not only acceptable and refreshing, but highly salubrious. Thousands of tons of this Arctic crystal are now annually shipped from Boston (United States) to our East Indies, to the West Indian Archipelago, and to the Continent of South America. Not content with these extended fields of consumption, the indomitable perseverance of these Yankee trespassers on the dominions of King Frost, has induced them to throw their merchandise into the English market; and after one or two individual, and but partially-successful attempts, to introduce it here had taken place of late years, "The Wenham Lake Ice Company" have taken up the matter in earnest,—erected extensive Ice-houses here and at Liverpool, and arranged for the transportation to this country of thousands of tons of Ice. Many of our town readers have, of course, seen the massive specimen of their commodity which has for some time attracted so much attention in a shop window, not far from our office in the Strand; and from the Court Circular we learn that a fragment of similarly vast dimensions was, a few weeks since, transmitted to Windsor, and submitted to the inspection of her Majesty and Prince Albert.

One surprising circumstance connected with the trade, is the fact that their Ice, though transported to this country in the heat of summer, is not reduced in bulk. Those engaged in the trade, we find, account for this by the fact that the masses of Ice are so large, that they expose a very small surface to atmospheric action in proportion to their weight, and therefore do not suffer from exposure to it, as the smaller and thinner fragments do, which are obtained in our own or other warmer climates. It appears, also, that Ice frozen upon very deep water, is more hard and solid than Ice of the same thickness obtained from shallow water; and even when an equal surface is exposed, melts more slowly.

In this country, the collection of Ice, even by those largely engaged in the trade, is an occasional and fitful undertaking; depending, both as to time and quantity, upon the accidental occurrence of severe frost; and when the process of collection is carried on, it is with very few artificial aids. In America, on the other hand, this labour can be regularly carried on through the whole winter; while the adjuncts of machinery for cutting and storing, and of steam for transporting it, are brought extensively into action.

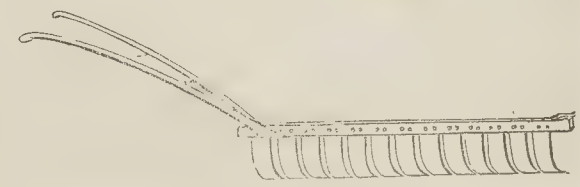
The details connected with this trade, as carried on in America, are so novel and so interesting, that we have been at some trouble to obtain them from authentic sources, accompanied with accurate illustrations; and we now lay them before our readers, with the confident belief, that the result of our labours will prove attractive to them.



The large engraving, which heads the present article, is an accurate sketch of the Wenham Lake (18 miles from Boston, in the state of Massachusets), whence the Ice now imported to this country is obtained.

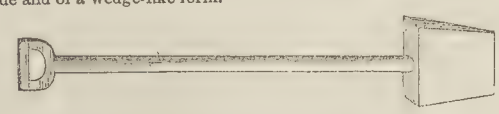
This lake occupies a very elevated postition, and lies embosomed in hills of majestic height and bold rugged character. The lake has no inlet whatever; but is fed solely by the springs which issue from the rocks at at its bottom, a depth of 200 feet from its surface. [This vast depth readily explains the great solidity of the Ice formed upon the lake.] On the verge of the lake, to the right, is seen the Ice Company's store-house, covered by four roofs, occupying an area of 100 feet square, and capable (as we are informed) of storing 20,000 tons of Ice. In the back-ground, a little to the left of the Ice-house, a train of cars, laden with Ice, is seen upon the Company's railway; a railway constructed at their own expense to communicate with the great railway to Boston. The process of cutting the Ice, transporting it to the Ice-house, and storing it, is also exhibited in the picture; but requires further explanation to be fully understood.

The Ice-house itself is built of wood, with double walls, two feet apart, all around; the space between which is filled with sawdust; thus interposing a medium, that is a non-conductor of heat, between the Ice and the external air; the consequence of which is, that the Ice is entirely unaffected by any condition or temperature of the external atmosphere; and can be preserved without waste for an indefinite time.



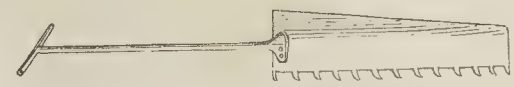
The machinery employed for cutting the Ice is very curious, and was invented for that express purpose. It is worked, by men and horses, in the following manner:—

From the time when the Ice first forms, it is carefully kept free from snow until it is thick enough to be cut; that process commences when the Ice is a foot thick. A surface of some two acres is then selected, which at that thickness will furnish about 2000 tons; and a straight line is then drawn through its centre from side to side each way. A small hand-plough is pushed along one of these lines, until the groove is about three inches deep and a quarter of an inch in width, when the "Marker" is introduced.



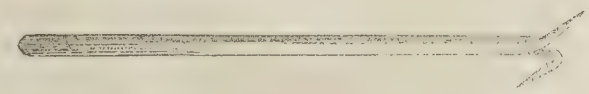
ICE-MARKER.

This implement is drawn by two horses, and makes two new grooves, parallel with the first, 21 inches apart; the guage remaining in the original groove. The marker is then shifted to the outside groove, and makes two more. Having drawn these lines over the whole surface in one direction, the same process is repeated in a transverse direction, marking all the Ice out into squares of 21 inches. In the meantime, the "Plough," drawn by a single horse, is following in these grooves, cutting the Ice to a depth of six inches.



ICE-PLOUGH.

One entire range of blocks is then sawn out, and the remainder are split off toward the opening thus made with an iron bar. This bar is shaped like a spade and of a wedge-like form.



ICE SPLITTING-BAR.

When it is dropped into the groove, the block splits off; a very slight blow being sufficient to produce that effect, especially in very cold weather. The labour of "splitting" is slight or otherwise, according to the temperature of the atmosphere. "Platforms," or low tables of frame-work, are placed near the opening made in the Ice, with iron slides extending into the water, and a man stands on each side of this slide, armed with an Ice-hook. With this hook the Ice is caught and by a sudden jerk thrown up the "Slide" on to the "Platform." In a cold day everything is speedily covered with Ice by the freezing of the water on the platforms, slides, &c., and the enormous blocks of Ice, weighing some of them more than two cwt., are hurled along these slippery surfaces, as if they were without weight. Beside this platform, stands a "Sled" of the same height, capable of containing about three tons; which, when loaded, is drawn upon the Ice to the front of the store-house, where a large stationary platform of exactly the same height, is ready to receive its load; which, as soon as discharged, is hoisted block by block, into the house, by a horse; as shown in the large engraving. This process of hoisting is so judiciously managed, that both the taking up of the Ice and the throwing it into the building are performed by the horse himself. The frame which receives the block of Ice to be hoisted, is sunk into a square opening cut in the stationary platform; the block of Ice is pushed on to it; the horse starts, and the frame rises with the Ice, until it reaches the opening in the side of the store-house ready for its reception, when, by an ingenious piece of mechanism, it discharges itself into the building, and the horse is led back to repeat the process.

ICE-SAW.

ICE-HOOK.

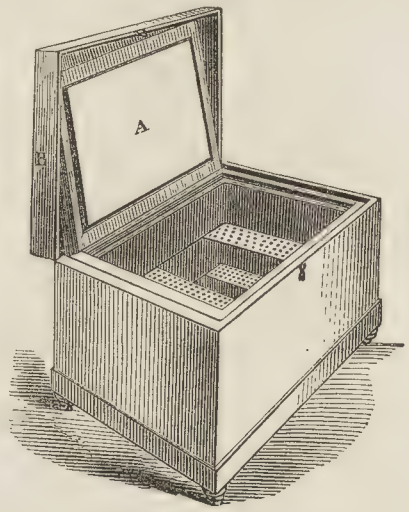
THE WENHAM ICE LAKE.

Forty men and twelve horses will cut and stow away 400 tons a day. In favourable weather 100 men are sometimes employed at once. When a thaw or a fall of rain occurs, it entirely unfits the ice for market, by rendering it opaque and porous; and occasionally snow is immediately followed by rain; and that again by frost, forming snow-ice, which is valueless, and must be removed by the "Plane."



ICE-PLANE.

The operation of "planing" is somewhat similar to that of "cutting." A plane guaged to run in the grooves made by the "Marker," and which shaves the Ice to the depth of three inches, is drawn by a horse, until the whole surface of the Ice is planed. The chips thus produced, are then scraped off; and if the clear Ice is not reached, the process is repeated. If this makes the Ice too thin for cutting, it is left in statu quo, and a few nights of hard frost will add below as much as has been taken off above.

In addition to filling their Ice-houses, at the lake and in the large towns, the company fill a large number of private Ice-houses during the winter—all the Ice for these purposes being transported by railway. It will easily be believed, that the expense of providing tools, building houses, furnishing labour, and constructing and keeping up the railway, is very great; but the traffic is so extensive, and the management of the trade so good, that the Ice can be furnished, even in England, at a very trifling cost.

People in this country have, however, yet to learn the various uses to which Ice may be applied, as well as the best methods of preserving it. In America, every family has a "Refrigerator," or portable Ice-house.

This engraving exhibits it, with the lids raised, and showing the interior, with its sliding and perforated shelves (under which the Ice is placed), for cooling and preserving wines, fruits, and provisions, without permitting them to come in contact one with another. A and B are the two lids. A, when closed, renders the interior air tight; and being (together with the sides and bottom) constructed on the same principle as the large Ice-houses, i e., with the intervention of a non-conducting medium, speedily reduces by a few pounds of Ice, everything placed within it, to an uniform temperature, very little above the freezing point. B. is the exterior lid, forming part of the chest, which encloses the non-conducting and Ice preserving portion of the Refrigerator, making the whole into a handsome piece of furniture. In these miniature Ice-houses, every American house keeper, through the warm season, places provisions and fruits of every kind; keeping for weeks, if desirable, large joints of meat, and every species of comestible. A block of Ice, weighing a few pounds, is placed within it, and is a supply for several days, except when the Ice is broken off for table use, or for the purpose of mixing with water, or making some of the celebrated Ice-drinks.

THE REFRIGERATOR.

The peculiar and ascertained purity of the Ice used in America, fits it for table-use; and it is accordingly the constant custom there, to mix it with water or milk, for drinking; to dilute with it wines or spirits, and to place it upon the table, in direct contact with butter or jellies. Some of our hotels and taverns are beginning to use this Ice for the manufacture of "Mint-juleps," "Sherry-coblers," and other American beverages of celebrity; and we should not be surprised, if these tempting drinks, as well as the Ice itself, were to come into very general use. We can imagine nothing more beautiful or refreshing, in the heat of summer, than the pure fragments of crystal Ice, which glitter here and there like huge diamonds, upon an American dining-table; and even English experience begins to assert, that "Mint-julep" and "Sherry-cobler," are but modern names, for the vaunted Nectar of the Immortals.

PRINCE RUPERT'S COTTAGE, LIVERPOOL.

This interesting relic of the Civil War, has just been removed by the hand of improvement, to the great regret of many persons who feel an interest in the early history of Liverpool. It was situated in the northern suburbs, and was memorable as the place where Prince Rupert established his head quarters, when, in 1644, he commenced the siege of the town, on its north side, having doubtless learned that to be the weakest point, as in fact it was. On June 2, finding that the attempt to carry the town by assault upon level ground would be of no avail, the Prince therefore changed his operations, and removed to Everton, where he encamped on the common, near to, and around the beacon, taking up his quarters in this cottage. The circumstances are thus neatly related in Lacey's diligently-compiled "Handbook of Liverpool":—

The Prince first raised a battery on a natural mound or platform, a little to the south-westward of the cottage. Portions of the earth thrown up may still be distinguished while passing along Shaw-street. From this point he expected to be able to command the town; but the distance being too great for carrying his offensive operations into effect, he therefore advanced batteries upon the ridge of ground running from Townsend's mill (the site of the late Islington Market), to the Copperas Works (now Copperas-hill), where trenches were formed on the slope of the declivity. The Prince, when he first approached the town, exclaimed, "It is a mere crow's nest, and may be taken by a band of children;" but, before he became master of it, he was compelled to alter his opinion, and exclaim, "It might have been a haunt of eagles, or a den of lions."

PRINCE RUPERT'S COTTAGE, LIVERPOOL.

The trenches and batteries were relieved every twenty-four hours. Many attempts were made to storm the town, but they were always unsuccessful, the assailants being effectively repulsed, until the night of the 25th, when the Prince, perceiving the north side of the town to be undefended, or, perhaps, carelessly guarded, concentrated his forces in that quarter; and, about three o'clock on the following morning (the 26th June), carried the place by assault, his troops putting all persons to death in their progress, without distinction of age or sex, having besieged the place 26 days!

The victorious Royalists proceeded onwards until they arrived at the High Cross, the site of the present Town-hall, where they encountered a regiment of soldiers, drawn up in battle array; these having demanded quarter for themselves and companions, it was, after some parley, allowed, but without any other stipulation than as prisoners of war, and the surrender of the castle, and their arms. The Parliamentarians were then sent to the tower, the church, and other places for safety; the Prince and his officers taking up their quarters in the castle.

The cottage had become greatly dilapidated; and the modern improvements in the locality, including the new park opposite Shaw-street rendered its removal a matter of necessity—not of taste.

FUNERALS AT ST. NICHOLAS CHURCH, GREAT YARMOUTH.

THE CATASTROPHE AT GREAT YARMOUTH.

The jury at Great Yarmouth have made but little progress in their important investigation during the past week. The Foreman and most influential members of the jury, who were determined that the inquiry should be, as it deserved, full, fair, and impartial, decided upon addressing a memorial to Sir J. Graham, in the hope that, as a Government engineer had been sent down in the Ashton-under-Line case, the same privilege might be acceded in this investigation. Upon the reply to this memorial depended the future mode of procedure. The total loss of life may now be correctly estimated at 78.

Our illustration shows the ceremony of the interment of a number or the sufferers in the church of St. Nicholas; the sketch, taken from the principal entrance, shows the aisle; the coffins were placed in a row of four or five, at the other end of the church. There were twenty-seven buried in one afternoon, in addition to others who had not died from the effects of the accident. A dumb peal was rung in the morning, and immediately preceding this unusually solemn occasion; the whole of the service appointed by the Church was read over each body; the worthy minister being assisted by three or four clerical friends. The residents of the place and in the neighbourhood describe the continual passing of bodies to the church, taken in connection with the melancholy event which was the cause of death, as one of the most distressing ever witnessed.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

GIGANTIC OAK, AT BALE, NORFOLK.

The accompanying sketch is an accurate representation of the wreck of a gigantic and venerable oak-tree, which is still standing in the village of Bale, in Norfolk, and is well deserving of a visit from the lover of natural curiosities.

This "monster" tree has acquired considerable local notoriety, and is highly prized in its own immediate neighbourhood; but, owing to the secluded position of Bale, which is a small village, with a purely agricultural population of under 250 souls, lying in the wilds of Norfolk, remote alike from any important high-road and town, its existence is hardly known beyond the limits of the county of its birth. It stands on the estate of the late William Gay, Esq., in immediate proximity to the village-church. The tree is reputed to be upwards of 500 years old: it is now both branchless and leafless, the trunk alone remaining as a memorial of its former magnificence. It measures 36 feet in circumference, or 12 feet in diameter, at the distance of between two and three feet from the base. The interior, which is perfectly hollow, is capable of containing with ease twenty men standing upright; and some few years ago was used as the place of abode of a cobbler, who carried on his trade in it for one entire summer, having, for the convenience of his occupation, cut a doorway in the shell, which still remains, but on the side of the tree opposite to that shown by the accompanying sketch.

The branches appear to have been of a magnitude worthy of the trunk; for one of them, which was lopped about sixty years ago, extended to within three feet of the summit of the church-tower, which is itself 54 feet high, and 72 feet distant from the base of the tree: many of the elders of the village recollect the lopping of this branch, and can attest to the truth of this statement of its dimensions.

Although there have been some oak-trees of greater size than that at Bale, yet the dimensions of many of less bulk have been considered deserving of record. Thus, the celebrated Fairlop Oak, in Essex, was less in circumference by nearly sixteen feet; the great oak which was felled, in the year 1697, in Withy Park, Shropshire, was less by nine feet—the latter being only twenty-seven feet in circumference; an oak in Holt Forest, Hampshire, of which much has been written, measured thirty-four feet only in circumference; the Boddington Oak, in the vale of Gloucester, however, was considerably larger, for it measured fifty-four feet in circumference at the base; but Damory's Oak, in Dorsetshire, was the very largest oak of which mention is made: it was of the enormous size of sixty eight feet in circumference, and the cavity of its hollow, which was sixteen feet long and twenty feet high, was in the time of the Commonwealth used as an alehouse Many other gigantic trees might be placed in comparison with the subject of the present sketch; but it will be found that, notwithstanding the superiority in size of some few of the most celebrated specimens, Bale Oak merits the brief space we have here allotted to it.

GIGANTIC OAK, AT BALE.

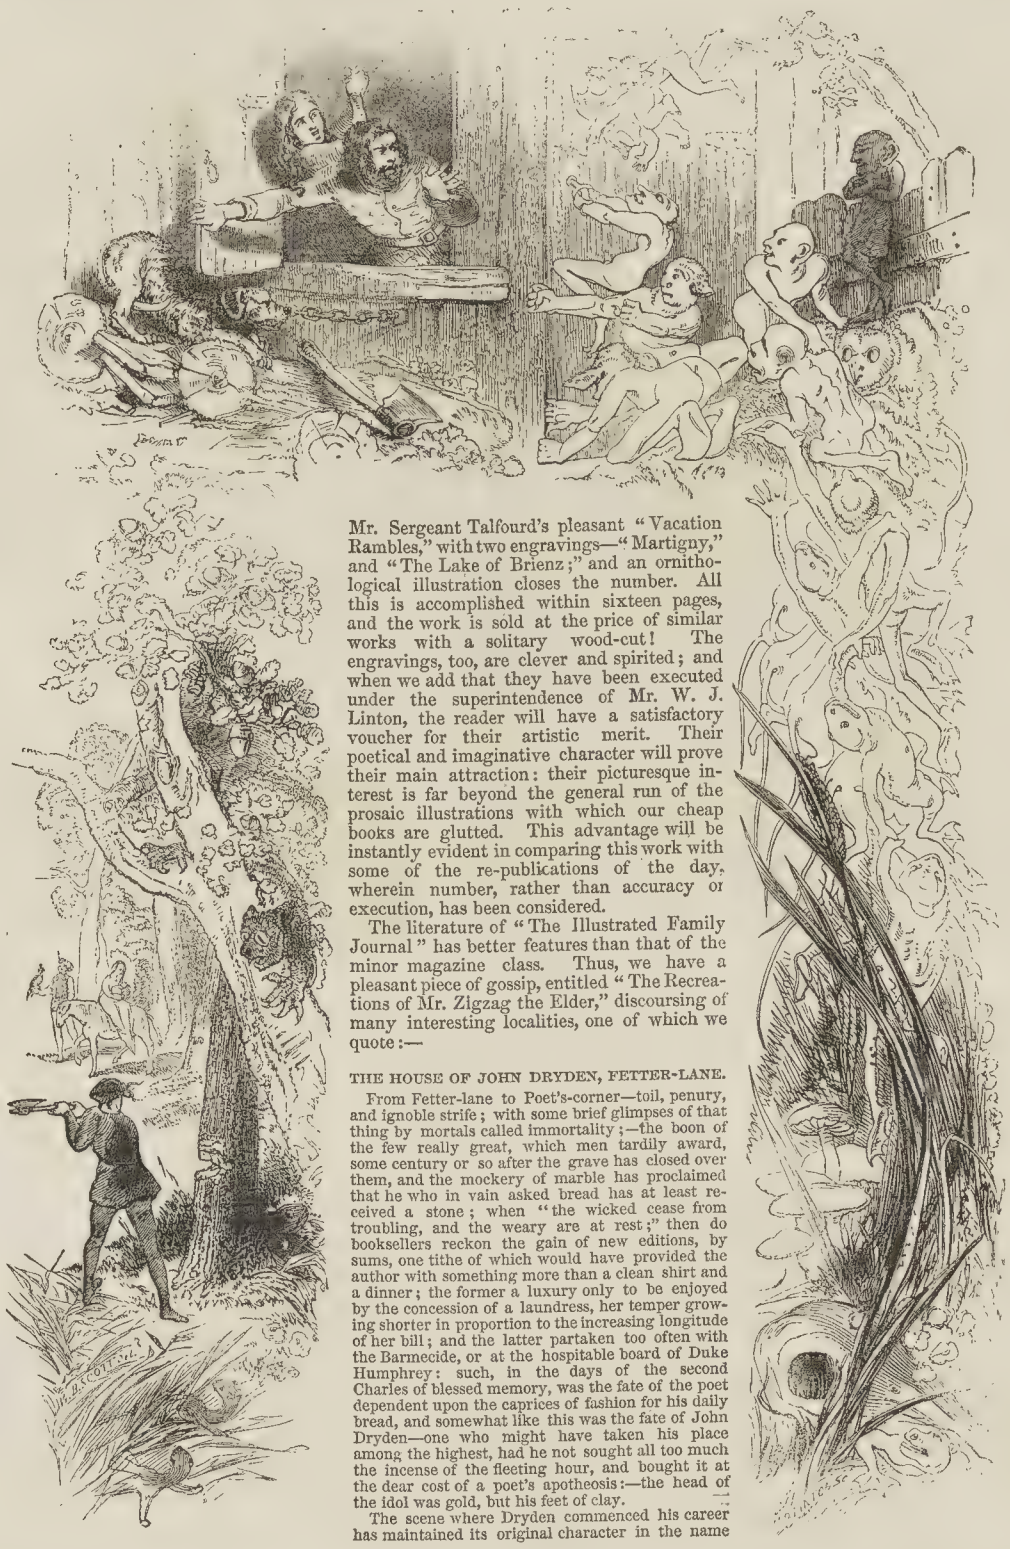
NEXT MEETING OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.—The fifteenth meeting will be held at Cambridge in the week commencing Thursday, 19th June. The time was fixed thus much earlier than usual in order to suit the "Commencement," which is on the 24th, and brings a large concourse of members to the University. The great feature of the ensuing meeting will be a congress of the observers at the different magnetical observatories stationed throughout Europe, at which many distinguished foreigners are expected to attend. Sir John Herschel, Bart., is the president for the present year.

DEATH OF R. B. COOPER, ESQ., LATE M.P. FOR GLOUCESTER.—We regret to record the decease of Robert Bransby Cooper, Esq, who expired on the 10th instant, at the residence of his son, near Gloucester. Mr. Cooper represented the city of Gloucester for twelve years, and in three successive Parliaments. Mr. Cooper was senior magistrate for the county of Gloucester, a brother of the late Sir Astley Cooper, Bart., and an uncle of the present baronet. He was in his eighty-fourth year.



THE PROGRESS OF RAILWAYS.—The Great Western line, vid Gloucester, Stroud, and Swandon, to London, was opened on Monday.—It is proposed, we hear, to start another fast train on the Great Western, to accomplish the distance between Exeter and London in four hours and a-half. Last week one of the express trains on the London and Birmingham ran the 112 miles in two hours and a half. It is expected that the distance between Liverpool and London, nearly 200 miles, will soon be accomplished in four hours and a-half. The Midland lines have joined in the general acceleration.—We understand it is the intention of Government, in conjunction with the Chester and Holyhead Railway Company, to have the electric telegraph established on that important line, reaching from London to Holyhead, a distance of between 200 and 300 miles, and embracing in its route the commercial capitals of Liverpool, Manchester, and Birmingham. The adoption of this invention on a scale of magnitude bids fair to effect a radical change in the entire correspondence of the country, by bringing as it were momentarily into close consolidation and communion the exchanges of London, Liverpool, Manchester, and Birmingham, conveying with lightning-like velocity every fluctuation of affairs, and telegraphing from mart to mart, with marvellous exactitude, and over areas of hundreds of miles, intelligence that may be received and reciprocated almost simultaneously by every mercantile community in the kingdom. Lines of telegraph have been, or are about being, adopted on the following amongst other lines. On the South Western, as a Government Telegraph for the Admiralty to Portsmouth, 90 miles. On the same line, as a Commercial Telegraph, from Nine Elms to Southampton, 77 miles; with branch to Gosport, 21. On the South Devon atmospheric line, now in progress, 52 miles. On the Great Western, from Paddington to Slough, 18 miles. On the Yarmouth and Norwich, 20 miles. On the Dover line, from Tonbridge to Maidstone, 15 miles. On the Croydon, atmospheric. On the Blackwall; on part of the Manchester and Leeds, and its branch to Oldham; on part of the Edinburgh and Glasgow; upon the Dalkey atmospheric branch of the Dublin and Kingstown The above embraces an extent of nearly 250 miles over which the telegraph principle is already in operation; and its adoption between London, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, and Holyhead, will add about 300 miles more.

GREAT TROTTING MATCH OF ONE HUNDRED MILES FOR ONE HUNDRED POUNDS.—On Monday a considerable concourse of persons assembled at the Friend-at-Hand, Kensal New Town, near Bayswater, to witness the performance of the long talked of match, made by Mr. French, to drive his galloway (under 12 hands high), in harness, one hundred miles, in sixteen hours from the time of starting, for a stake of £50 aside. Much betting took place prior to the start, the odds being against the pony. A very light match-cart was provided, and a boy of light weight was seated in the cart, and at four o'clock he commenced his journey. He performed the first ten miles in an hour, he then relaxed his speed for the next ten miles, and at the conclusion was refreshed, and then proceeded on his road. He continued at a steady pace, and appeared to trot in perfect ease, and fully competent to the task. At twelve o'clock he had accomplished 50 miles, and without the least symptoms of distress or fatigue. He had the necessary attention, and then performed another 15 miles, and, having at this time covered 65 miles of road in 10½ hours, the gay little animal was then taken out of the chaise, rubbed down, and allowed to rest, and in a short time brought out and reharnessed, and on the road. At this period the pony appeared full of vigour, and as fresh as if it had only just entered upon his match. He continued at a steady, although winning pace, and ultimately trotted in, with the greatest ease, after having accomplished the 100 miles within the stipulated time, and won the stakes.

LITERATURE.

THE ILLUSTRATED FAMILY JOURNAL, AND GAZETTE OF VARIETY. Part I. SHERWOOD and Co.

This is a new enterprise in periodical literature, which is entitled to notice beyond the import of its title. Hitherto, the embellishments of works of this cheap class have been, for the most part, copied from old prints, &c.: whereas, the illustrations of this new candidate are from original sketches or designs. It is true that we start with Old St. Pancras Church; but the point of view is novel. Then we have "The Advocate and the Marchioness," a tale translated and adapted from the French, with two characteristic illustrations; Tennyson's exquisite ballad of "Mariana," with "the lonely moated grange;" and the sorrowful maiden in her chamber, and her bed. Next we pass to a review of Mr. Sergeant Talfourd's pleasant "Vacation Rambles," with two engravings—"Martigny," and "The Lake of Brienz;" and an ornithological illustration closes the number. All this is accomplished within sixteen pages, and the work is sold at the price of similar works with a solitary wood-cut! The engravings, too, are clever and spirited; and when we add that they have been executed under the superintendence of Mr. W. J. Linton, the reader will have a satisfactory voucher for their artistic merit. Their poetical and imaginative character will prove their main attraction: their picturesque interest is far beyond the general run of the prosaic illustrations with which our cheap books are glutted. This advantage will be instantly evident in comparing this work with some of the re-publications of the day, wherein number, rather than accuracy or execution, has been considered.

The literature of "The Illustrated Family Journal" has better features than that of the minor magazine class. Thus, we have a pleasant piece of gossip, entitled "The Recreations of Mr. Zigzag the Elder," discoursing of many interesting localities, one of which we quote:—

THE HOUSE OF JOHN DRYDEN, FETTER-LANE.

From Fetter-lane to Poet's-corner—toil, penury, and ignoble strife; with some brief glimpses of that thing by mortals called immortality;—the boon of the few really great, which men tardily award, some century or so after the grave has closed over them, and the mockery of marble has proclaimed that he who in vain asked bread has at least received a stone; when "the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest;" then do booksellers reckon the gain of new editions, by sums, one tithe of which would have provided the author with something more than a clean shirt and a dinner; the former a luxury only to be enjoyed by the concession of a laundress, her temper growing shorter in proportion to the increasing longitude of her bill; and the latter partaken too often with the Barmecide, or at the hospitable board of Duke Humphrey: such, in the days of the second Charles of blessed memory, was the fate of the poet dependent upon the caprices of fashion for his daily bread, and somewhat like this was the fate of John Dryden—one who might have taken his place among the highest, had he not sought all too much the incense of the fleeting hour, and bought it at the dear cost of a poet's apotheosis:—the head of the idol was gold, but his feet of clay.

The scene where Dryden commenced his career has maintained its original character in the name of Fetter or Fewter lane, which is thus described by Stowe:—"Fewter-lane, which stretches south into Fleet-street, by the east end of St. Dunstane's Church, and is so called of Fewters (or idle people) lying there."

DRYDEN'S HOUSE, FETTER-LANE.

But in the poet's time this place of ill-omened designation had been improved by the erection of certain tenements of a more reputable aspect; in short, dwellings where a poet might starve genteely; and the house in question, if not among the most stately, is yet not devoid of a character somewhat ornamental, according to the taste of the time.

On either side of the thoroughfare, over which stands the house of Dryden, as shown in the cut, and which was heretofore known as Fleur-de-Lys-court, but is now yclept Lion's-head-court, appear two very critic-like and grim specimens of physiognomy, intended to represent the facial portion of the tawny lord of the desert.

It may be a freak of the imagination, but, though the countenance of the poet, according to the veritable portrait, is no other than that of a comely, kind-hearted man, having the eye of a poet withal—an eye like Coleridge's, but a degree bluer, with a good dash more of the world in it; and a complexion of mixed sanguine and lymphatic temperament, such as may account for the contradictions which mark his career—yet do those same leonine physiognomies bear a Drydenish look, even some such aspect as a shaded dip might have given the otherwise placid countenance, when criticising the latest production of the abhorred Elkanah Settle.

* * * *

Dryden has never been a popular poet. He complied with the demands of an artificial taste; and the simplicity of nature, which alone appeals to the universal heart, was by him clipped and alloyed, to pass current as court coin. It has been seen that his house, the first locality of his literary career, is desolate enough; probably it never was a cheerful house; but we see nothing of the hearth in Dryden's poetry; he lived in the days of the taverns and coffee-houses. Such were properly his home; there he ate and drank—there he presided over the keen encounters of choice spirits—and there, probably, he wrote. Elsewhere he is poor John Dryden, the inconsistent author of heroic stanzas on the death of Cromwell, and, again, of the praises of the restored Charles; the abuser of priests, because they preached not in rhymes, even as he indited his tragedy; and the prose advocate of the Romish doctrines, which he adopted on the accession of the second James, but, failing in which, who put his arguments into the mouths of beasts, and revelled once more in congenial verse. Again the laureate displaced for his own Og, who succeeded him in the laureate Bashan. And, moreover, twitted in wicked rhymes by the real author of the libel, for which he was unrighteously beaten. All this, however, somewhat redeemed by his positive refusal to compliment him of the hook nose, who succeeded to James II., his royal and stiff-necked master But at Wills's he is indeed glorious John, surrounded by the wits and the would-be wits, the noble and the aspiring—"The Templars and the smarts;" patronised and patronising; here graciously nodding approval of an epigram, there raising "a mortal to the skies," by a compliment, or, as it might be, even by making him the envied butt of his pleasantries.

A man sensitive on some trifling points, even to awkwardness, and habitually slow of speech, though rich in its materials, he must have required the genial atmosphere of the tavern, and the soothing concession of the armed chair (by the fire in winter, and in summer on the balcony), to prompt and stimulate the generous qualities of his disposition—to warm him into confidence—and, in short, to develop glorious John.

The other engraving illustrates the Danish ballad of "The Elfin Gray," from the "Kæmpe Viser," and first published in 1591.

Altogether, this is a superior work of its class: its tone is unexceptionably healthy and moral; and it blends entertainment with instruction in a more attractive form than its compeers. We cordially recommend it.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

It is the intention of Lord Francis Egerton to retire from Parliament, chiefly on the ground of ill health, but his lordship does not mean to resign his seat immediately.

A gentleman named Shouldham, died at Marlsford (Suffolk) last week, at the age of 102. On his completion of 100 years he gave a grand fête at his residence, which was remarkable for many features of interest; one of the most gratifying being the testimony of a large circle of friends that added years had but matured his virtues, and made him stand forth as an honourable specimen of "a good old English gentleman."

The Marquis of Westminster has been appointed Lord Lieutenant of Cheshire, vacant by the death of the late Earl of Stamford and Warrington.

Madame Laffarge has written a letter to a young poet, who had presented her with his works, in which she says, speaking of herself, "Providence never abandons the innocent. It allows them to suffer, but suffering is only a divine crucible in which are purified minds, which to save them from despair have the testimony of their own conscience, and the respect of just, noble, and good men."

A Brussels paper announces that a steam navigation service between Antwerp and St. Petersburgh is about to be established in virtue of a special privilege from the Emperor.

M. Hamson, Governor of the Danish possessions in the East, has, it is said, signed a treaty with the English Government for the acquisition of Serampore in Bengal.

On the 3rd instant a man servant, named Eppsteiner, had his head taken off with the sword at Munich, having been convicted of cutting the throats of his mistress and her maid, and then carrying off the most valuable part of the property in the house. On this occasion the police revived an old and barbarous custom. During the three days preceding the execution, the public were admitted to see the murderer, and speak to him in the prison, on condition that each person should, on entering, put into a box, fitted for the purpose at the door, a piece of money. The amount thus collected is to be distributed among the poor relations of the condemned man, or to be applied in payment of masses for the repose of his soul.

An extensive fresh importation of American hops has just taken place of very excellent quality. The duty on this produce is so high that the last which were imported were sold for the use of Sydney and the Channel Islands.

It is reported that guano is being manufactured in immense quantities in Liverpool from sand, tanners' waste, sulphate of ammonia, and a brown substance. This rubbish, costing a mere trifle, is sold to careless country people at £4 to £5 per ton, while the genuine guano is worth between £7 and £8.

A Constantinople letter of the 28th ult., says:—"Sir S. Canning has had a conference with Chekib Effendi, the result of which has been that the Seraskier Reschid Pacha has received orders to proceed immediately to the provinces on the southern frontiers of Greece, and has already left the capital. He is instructed to concentrate a considerable body of troops in Thessalia and Albania, and take the command of it. The conciliatory measures, recommended by the foreign ministers, do not seem to accord with the taste of the Porte."

Prince Clodwig Charles Victor of Hohenlohe Waldenburg Schillingsfurst, brother to Victor Prince of Hohenlohe Waldenburgh Schillingsfurst, Duke of Ratisbone, expired on the 2nd instant, at Donaueschwangen, after a short illness. The deceased was born 31st of March, 1819.

The Vienna journals of the 2nd instant announce that a serious accident had occurred on the Vienna and Gloggnitz Railroad, in consequence of a rail having been displaced, by which a train was upset; four persons were killed on the spot, besides a vast number seriously injured.

The compositors engaged on two of the Madrid papers, the Heraldo and Posdata, have just gained the second prize in the grand lottery of Madrid, amounting to 520,000 reals, or £5000. The lucky winners divided the money among them.

Sir Robert Peel has granted £50 to the widow of the late John Banim, the author. The grant is made from the Royal Bounty Fund, and Sir R. Peel has engaged to place her name on the Pension List, when a vacancy occurs.

The Journal des Débats says it has received letters from Macao, which announce the abolition of the rigorous edicts which forbid the Chinese to embrace and practise Christianity. These edicts, after having been revoked under the reign of the Emperor Kan-Hi, were again brought into force about a century ago; and, until these latter times, at least, have been put into execution by the Chinese magistrates with the utmost rigour.

The Franconian Mercury contains a letter from Munich, May 2, which states that a duel having taken place there between a Portuguese and an attaché of the French embassy, about a lady to whom the former was betrothed, the attaché has been suspended by M. Guizot from his functions, and his passports having been delivered to him, he has taken his departure from Munich.

A letter received in South Shields, last week, from Sydney, states, that Frost, the Chartist convict, is in comfortable circumstances there, being on a ticket of leave, and the manager of a large mercantile store. The writer states, he looks healthy and happy.

An accident, which produced a most lamentable catastrophe, happened on the 3rd inst. at Valencia, in Spain. A fire broke out in the premises of a confectioner, but was rapidly extinguished, without any serious consequences; but at a manufactory of cigars, nearly adjoining, several hundreds of young women were employed at the time. A report got among them that the gas-pipes had burst, and that they were all likely to be burnt alive. Under the terror of this impression, they all rushed to the doors and staircases, and in the confusion 18 were killed and 50 so seriously injured that they were obliged to be carried to the hospital.

The Russian Admiral Count Mordwinow died recently at St. Petersburg, at the advanced age of ninety years.

The Ami de la Constitution of Berne announces, that on the 6th instant the Government of that Canton had despatched M. Aubry, a member of the Grand Council, to solicit a pardon for Dr. Steiger, who had been condemned by the criminal tribunal of Lucerne to be executed. It was generally believed that the Government of Lucerne would grant a pardon to Dr. Steiger.

In the south-west province of Russia a violent snow-storm occurred about the middle of March, which continued for six days. It extended over the governments of Volhynia, Podolia, and the province of Bessarbia, and caused the greatest destruction to life and property. Seventy-six persons are reported to have perished.

The town of Schemacha, situate in Transcaucasus, has, since January, been visited by violent shocks of earthquake. At the time a continuous and severe cold of 8 degrees Reaumur prevailed—a rare occurrence in this part of the Russian empire, which lies 2300 wersts in a southerly direction from Moscow.

The Bury Post says "It is but three or four weeks since that we gave an account of the extraordinary age of Mr. and Mrs. Plaisance, then living in Redmoor Fen, in the Isle of Ely, the husband of the age of 107, the wife 105!—a case without parallel perhaps in England or in the world. On Wednesday, strange to relate, after a short affliction, both expired on the same day; their united ages 212! The greater part of their lives were passed when agues were so prevalent in the Fens that very few escaped the disorder, yet they were prolonged to this extraordinary period."

A letter from Bourges states that from 1000 to 1500 workmen are at present employed on the railroad from Vierzon to that town. It is intended to double the number, in order that the line may be terminated at the same time as that from Orleans to Vierzon.

A letter from Berlin, May 2, states that the latest news from St. Petersburg is that towards the end of the month the Emperor will accompany the Empress as far as Warsaw, whence her Majesty is to proceed to Berlin to consult the medical men, and learn what baths she ought to repair to. At a later period the Emperor is to proceed to Berlin to escort back her Majesty. During his stay he is to accompany the King to witness the manœuvres of the troops.

The diligence between Rochefort and Saintes was overturned last week in consequence of the intoxication of the driver. The conductor was killed, and several of the passengers were injured.

THE MARKETS.

CORN-EXCHANGE (Friday).—For the time of year the arrivals of English wheat for our market continue good, yet the show of samples of that grain here to-day was by no means large. Very few buyers being in attendance, the demand was extremely inactive, and previous rates were barely supported. Foreign wheat was again heavy, but not cheaper, while corn under lock was amending. Barley and malt ruled extremely dull at our last quotations. Oats were heavy, at barely late rates. Beans and peas commanded full prices.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 7280; barley, 1280; oats, 3550 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 8500 quarters. Foreign; wheat, 4590; barley, 12,420; oats, 18,290 quarters. Flour, 4790 sacks; malt, 4300 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 46s to 48s; ditto, white, 46s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s to 52s; ditto, white, 52s to 57s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distilling, 26s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 56s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 33s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Town made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk, Stockton, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 28 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 38s to 43s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 24s; oats, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s; beans, 24s to 29s; peas, 28s to 32s, per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to —; Baltic, 18s to— per barrel

Seed Market.—The season for sowing having been brought to a close, the seed trade is dull and, in some cases, the currencies are almost nominal. Linseed, English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 45s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 44s. Hempseed 35s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 18s per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 12s to 14s. Tares, 6s 6d to 7s 6d per bushel. English Rapeseed, £24 to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s; ditto foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover seed, red, 45s to 50s: extra, 52s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5d to 6½d, per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 45s 10d; barley, 30s 5d; oats, 21s 6d; rye, 31s 4d; beans, 37s 1d; peas, 36s 8d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 46s 1d; barley, 31s 7d; oats, 21s 2d; rye, 30s 7d; beans, 35s 3d; peas, 36s 3d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 7s; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 7s 6d; peas, 6s 6d.

Tea.—Public sales of tea have been held this week. The biddings have been by no means spirited, and only a small portion has sold at late rates. Privately, a good demand exists for both black and green sorts. Common congou can be purchased at 9d to 9½d; and low yellow-leaf twankay, 1s 2d to 1s 3d per lb.

Sugar.—A fair business has been doing in West India sugar, at fully previous rates. Bengal and Mauritius sugars in good request, at last rates. Refined goods are rather inactive, though not cheaper.

Coffee.—By private contract, very little is doing in coffee, yet holders are firm, and will not sell, except at very full currencies. In Ceylon, speculative purchase- are being effected.

Rice.—Bengal still continues in fair request, at fully the late improvement in the quotations. Middling white is producing 11s to 11s 6d; good middling, 11s 6d to 12s; and middling, 11s to 11s 6d per cwt.

Fruit.—A fair business is doing in currants, at a slight improvement in the quotations. Several sales have been made, at 46s 6d for Cephalonia. Red Smyrna raisins are offering at 38s; new Turkey figs, 45s for fine.

Provisions.—In English butter a good business is doing, at 54s per firkin for Dorset, and 15s per dozen for fresh. Large quantities of foreign butter have again come to hand, yet the transactions are extensive, at full prices. The best Dutch is selling at 86s to 90s; inferior and good, 76s to 84s per cwt. About 900 casks have reached us from Ireland, and which have been taken at from 84s to 96s per cwt, the latter quotation being for Limericks. Bacon is in active request, at fully previous rates. Prime sizeable Waterford, landed, is selling at 42s to 45s; Limerick, 41s to 43s; and heavy, 40s to 42s per cwt. Lard moves off freely at 56s to 62s for bladdered Waterford, and 55s to 57s for Belfast. Most other kinds of provisions rule about stationary.

Tallow.—Russian is in ready demand, at very full prices. P. Y. C. on the spot, is quoted at 38s 6d, and for small parcels, 38s 6d to 39s have been paid. For forward delivery the prices vary from 39s to 39s 6d per cwt. Town made—which is not very plentiful—is selling at 38s 6d to 39s net cash.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 14s; useful ditto, £4 15s to £5 4s; fine upland ditto, £5 5s to £5 10s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6 3s; oat straw, £1 18s to £2; wheat straw, £2 to £2 3s per load.

Oils.—We have very little variation to notice in the value of oils, still the demand is somewhat inactive.

Wool.—About 3500 packages of colonial and other wools have been submitted to public competition this week. On the whole, the biddings have been spirited, and prices are firmly supported. There are yet about 7000 bales to bring forward.

Potatoes.—The supplies of potatoes being more than adequate to meet the wants of the dealers, the trade is only dull, at a reduction in the currencies of 5s per ton, the present rates varying from 30s to 73s per ton.

Hops (Friday).—The accounts from the plantations being tolerably favourable, the demand here, for all kinds of hops, is heavy, and prices have a downward tendency. Sussex Pockets, £7 0s to £8 3s; Wealds, £7 8s to £8 10s; Mid Kent, £7 7s to £8 15s; East Kent, £9 9s to £11; Choice ditto, £11 11s to £13 0s; Mid Kent bags, £7 15s to £8 15s; East Kent ditto, £10 10s to £12 0s.

Coals.—Hilda, 16s; Haswell, 11s 9d; Shotton, 18s; South Durham, 16s 3d; Hartley, 16s; Moreton Stone, 22s; Smiths' Pontop, 13s 6d; Adelaide, 17s 9d per ton.

Smithfield (Friday).—Although the supply of beasts on sale to-day was seasonably extensive, the beef trade was active, at an advance on Monday's quotations of 2d per 8lb. From Scotland we received 430 Scots, and from Holland 44 oxen and cows, in good condition. The numbers of sheep were rather extensive, owing to which the mutton trade was somewhat inactive, yet previous rates were supported. In lambs only a moderate business was doing, at unaltered currencies. From the Isle of Wight 200 came fresh to hand. The veal trade was active, at an improvement of from 2d to 4d per 8lb. In pigs very little was doing. Milch cows sold at from £16 to £19 10s, cash.

Per 8lb., to sink the offals:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; second quality ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; prime large oxen, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 2d to 4s 4d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 4d to 3s 10d; second quality ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 4d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 6d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; large coarse calves, 3s 10d to 4s 8d; prime small ditto, 4s 10d to 5s; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; neat small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lambs, 4s 10d to 5s 10d. Suckling calves, 18s to 30s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 20s each. Beasts, 769; cows, 121; sheep and lambs, 9630; calves, 232; pigs, 284.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a very steady demand to-day, and prices were firmly supported.

Per 8lb, by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime large ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime small ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; large pork, 2s 10d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; middling ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 4d; prime ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; veal, 3s 10d to 4s 10d; small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 4s 8d to 5s 8d.

ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The transactions in the English market, at the commencement of the week, were unusually small, from the general absence of the dealers, during the Whitsun holidays. The arrival of the Caledonia, however, on Wednesday, gave an impetus to prices, from the pacific nature of the news it brought from America. Many of the speculators, who, for the last fortnight, have been bearing Consols, hastened to change their accounts. An improvement in price was the immediate result, and, on Wednesday, quotations advanced to 99⅛ to ¼; but this has not since been fully maintained, the closing price being 99⅛ to 99, for money and time. The Unfunded Debt remains about 56 to 54 prem., for large and small bills. Bank Stock is 209; India Bonds, 70 to 72 prem.; India Stock, 279; Reduced Three per Cents, 98⅛; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents, 101; Long Annuities, 11 9-16.

The Foreign Market has been very inanimate during the week, with scarcely any variation of prices. Spanish Five per Cents on Tuesday closed at 30⅜ to ⅝; and the Three per Cents, 41⅜ to ⅞; Mexican, 36⅞ to 37⅛. The latter stock was flat on Wednesday, at a slight decline, although the market in other respects was certainly firmer. A slight reaction, however, occurred as the week advanced, and the last price of Mexican is 36⅝; Spanish Actives are also a point worse, closing at 30½; the Three per Cents, 42½; the Passives have been done as high as 8¼; Dutch Four per Cent. Certificates' quote 97⅞; Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 63⅝.

The few days' holiday at the commencement of the week, afforded a favourable opportunity for the jobbers to arrange their accounts. The last account has not been a heavy one in itself, business having most materially diminished latterly. But much remained outstanding for several accounts past, and the recent reaction in prices has rendered the brokers generally anxious to settle with their principals before any new accounts are opened. The settlement may be said to have passed off on Thursday with comparative ease, although money was in considerable demand, and continuations fetched high prices. London and York receded on Thursday to 1⅝ premium, but have since slightly rallied; Eastern Counties have advanced to 20½, and Midlands to 162; Shrewsbury, Wolverhampton, &c., are 5; Dovers have rallied upon last week's prices, closing at 40; Blackwalls are 9½; Dublin and Galway have improved to 4⅜; Guildford, Farnham, and Portsmouth quote 4⅜ firmly. The general closing prices are Aberdeen, 3⅜; Birmingham and Gloucester, 136; Bristol and Exeter, 82⅜; Caledonian, 11¼; Cambridge and Lincoln, 7⅜; Chester and Holyhead, 16; Churnet Valley, 6⅜; Cornwall, 4⅜; Direct Northern, 3⅜; Dublin and Mullingar, 4⅜; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 64; Great North of England, 200; Great Western, 185; Harwich, 1½; Brighton, 63¼; Croydon, 18¼; South-Western, 185; London, Salisbury, and Yeovil, 2⅞; Londonderry and Enniskillen, 4; Do. and Coleraine, 3½; Manchester and Birmingham, 58; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, 49½; Newcastle and Berwick, 13½; North British, 16⅜; North Kent, 5½; Norwich and Brandon, 17⅞; Rugby, Worcester, and Tring, 4½; South Wales, 5⅜; Waterford and Kilkenny, 3½; Yarmouth and Norwich, 25⅞; York and North Midland (Extension), 17⅜; Boulogne and Amiens, 10; Bordeaux and Toulouse, 2½; Do. and Cette, 2¼; Dijon and Mulhouse, 2⅜; Great Northern of France, 5¼; Do., Rosamel's, 2¼; Namur and Liege, 5⅝; Orleans and Bordeaux, 10⅛; Paris and Lyons, 2¼; Sambré and Meuse, 9⅝; Tours and Nantes, (Mackenzie), 2⅞.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Yesterday was pay day in the Share Market; demands were generally well met; prices scarcely fluctuated.——In the English House Consols yielded a fraction, but afterwards attained the previous day's quotations.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, MAY 13.

DOWNING-STREET, MAY 8.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Admiral Sir Robert Waller Otway, Bart., and Vice-Admiral Sir Edward W. C. R. Owen, Knights Commanders of the Most Hon. Military Order of the Bath, to be Knights Grand Cross of the said Order; and Rear-Admiral Sir Edward Chetham, Knt., Companion of the said Most Honourable Military Order, to be Knight Commander thereof.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORDS-LIEUTENANT.—West Somerset Regiment of Yeomanry Cavalry: Major C. J. K. Tynte to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice the Earl of Carnarvon; Capt. E. A. Sanford to be Major, vice Tynte; Lieut. J. Hole to be Captain, vice Halliday; Cornet A Capel to be Lieutenant, vice Hole; Cornet W. H. Burnard to be Lieutenant, vice Hancock.

Royal Wilts Yeomanry Cavalry: Cornet John Davis to be Lieutenant, vice Benett. Alfred Morrison to be Cornet, vice Davis.

Queen's Own Regiment of Yeomanry Cavalry (Dorsetshire): James Edward Bradshaw to be Lieutenant, vice Huddlestone.

BANKRUPTS.—J. FURNIVAL, Kettering, Northamptoushire, corn dealer and baker. T. SEAGER, Hammersmith, leather cutter. J. W. ELLIS, Lawrence-lane, Cheapside, cloth merchant. J. BRAIN, Winchester place, Pentonville, copper-plate dealer. M. STURLEY, Southam, Warwickshire, organ builder. W. H. WEBB, Stratford-upon-Avon, Warwickshire, wharfinger. J. B. BUCKLEE, Kidderminster, Worcestershire, mercer. J. Y. BETTS, Cardiff, Glamorganshire, grocer. H. MALPAS, Bath, victualler. J. SIMPSON, Talentire, Cumberland, shipowner. W. DAVIES, Liverpool, milk seller.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. SUTHERLAND, Edinburgh, bookseller. J. COOK, North Leith, spirit-merchant. A. RAMSAY, sen., Kersehill, Stirling. T. ALDRIDGE, J. H. ALDRIDGE, and S. M'CLARY, jun., Edinburgh, paper-stainers.

FRIDAY, MAY 16.

WAR OFFICE, MAY 16.—1st Dragoon Guards: Capt. J. Crofts to be Captain, vice Jackson. 7th: Capt. G. W. C. Jackson to be Captain, vice Crofts.

2nd Dragoons: Cornet H. S. Scobell to be Lieutenant, vice Barnett. D. C. R. C. Buchanan to be Cornet, vice Scobell.

3rd Light Dragoons: Major R. B. Edwards to be Major, vice Brevet Lieut.-Col. G. A. Malcolm; Capt. C. W. M. Balders to be Major, vice Edwards; Lieut. W. E. F. Barnes to be Captain, vice Balders; Cornet J. G. A. Burton to be Lieutenant, vice Barnes; C. R. Colt to be Cornet, vice Burton. 7th: Lieut. C. H. Wyndham to be Captain, vice Lord A. Paget; Cornet J. M. Hagart to be Lieutenant, vice Wyndham; E. H. Cooper to be Cornet, vice Hagart. 14th: Brevet Lieut.-Col. E. Harvey to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Townsend; Brevet Lieut.-Col. T. Jones to be Major, vice Harvey; Capt. W. H. Archer to be Major, vice Jones; Lieut. J. H. Goddard to be Captain, vice Archer; Cornet R. J. Brown to be Lieutenant, vice Goddard; W. English to be Cornet, vice Brown.

1st Grenadier Guards: Lieut. and Capt. J. H. Hudson, to be Captain and Lieut.-Colonel, vice the Hon. C. J. F. Stanley; Ensign and Lieut. the Hon. M. West, to be Lieut. and Captain vice Hudson; A. H. L. Fox, to be Ensign and Lieutenant, vice West.

12th Foot: Ensign F. Brydon to be Ensign, vice Maitland. 15th: Lieut. A. R. Sewell to be Adjutant, vice Hay. 46th: Brevet Col. F. Le Blanc to be Lieutenant Colonel, vice A. Clarke; Brevet-Lieut. Col. R. Garrett to be Lieutenant-Col., vice Le Blanc; Capt. R. Campbell to be Major, vice Garrett; Lieut. D. Fyffe to be Captain, vice Campbell; Ensign B. Menzies to be Lieutenant, vic Fyffe; F. Dallas to be Ensign, vice Menzies? 49th: W. W. Maitland to be Ensign, vice M'Dermott. 67th: Ensign F. R. Taylor to be Lieutenant, vice Jones; F. W. Breedon to be Ensign, vice Taylor. 77th: Lieut. B. W. A. Sleigh to be Lieutnant, vice Dumaresq.

1st West India Regiment.—F. Miller to be Ensign, vice Hills. 2nd: Lieut. C. T. Dumaresq to be Lieutenant, vice Sleigh. 3rd: C. F. Amiel to be Ensign, vice Brydon.

UNATTACHED.—Capt. Lord A. Paget to be Major.

BANKRUPTCIES ANNULLED.—F. L. COLE, Fenchurch-street, wine-merchant. A. FRANCIS. Alkin. Flintshire, ironfounder.

BANKRUPTS.—J. RICHARDS, Deptford Bridge, plumber. F. L. COLE, Fenchurch-street, wine-merchant. J. LAMPRAY. Warwick, money-scrivener. J. LIVINGSTON and T. BRITTAIN, Manchester, plumbers. W. SUMMERS and N. RAE, Manchester, rope-makers. E. LAWTON and T. KAY, Rochdale, iron-founders. W. RUSSEL, J. KNOWLES, and H. SIMISTER, Salford, Lancashire, perchers.

BIRTHS.

At Northwick-terrace, Maida-hill, Mrs Edward Reid of a son.——At Hunsdon, Herts, the lady of Edmond Calvert, Esq., of twins.——At Cadogan-place, the lady of Samuel Beachcroft, Esq., of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At Otaheite, Andrew Hammond, Esq., Commander of her Majesty's steam-frigate Salamander, to Mary Ann Miller, daughter of Edward Miller, Esq.—— At Clerkeuwell, Charles Selby Fallowdown, Esq., to Jane, daughter of the late James Smetzer.——At Rochester, George William Powlett Bingham, Esq., 64th Regiment, to Sophia, youngest daughter of the late Colonel Charles Cox Bingham.—— At Dublin, the Rev. Robert Mann to Harriet, the fifth daughter of the Right Hon. Sir Edward Sugden.—— At Leamington, George Teixera Dalrymple, third son of Sir Charles Dalrymple, of Brighton, to Ellen, youngest daughter of the late Matthew Salmon Kent, M.D.—— At Leamington, the Rev. Robert Shirley Bunbury, M.A., Incumbent of St. Thomas's, St. Helen's, to Millicent Adele, third daughter of the late S. Tertius Galton, of Leamington.—— At St. Saviour's Church, Jersey, William, youngest son of John Hargreaves, Esq., of Hart Common, to Catharine Withington, eldest daughter of Edward Kearsley, Esq., late of the Ivy Cottage, both in the county of Lancaster.

DEATHS.

At Scarborough, John Tindal, Esq., one of her Majesty's deputy lieutenants.——At Tottenham, Anne, the wife of G. A. Cottrell, Esq., of the Excise Office.——At Portland-place, Ann, relict of the late John Turner, Esq., of Sisley Croft, Erdington, near Birmingham.—— At Malta, Charlotte Anne, youngest daughter of the late Major-General the Hon. Vere Poulett. ——At Dresden, Charles Francis Barkley, Esq——At St. Petersburgh, Mary Raikes, relict of the late Timothy Raikes, Esq.——At Hampstead, Ann, second daughter of the late William Gaskell, Esq.——At St. John's-wood, the Rev. George Moultrie, vicar (for 45 years.)——At Mitcham, Alfred Collett Bartley, Esq., M.D.——At Langport, Vincent Stuckey, Esq., Deputy Lieutenant for the county of Somerset.——In Upper Portland-place, the Right Hon. Lady Walsingham, in the 69th year of her age.—— At Eton College, Jane, wife of the Rev. Robert Fowler Holt.——At Fulham, George Gillam Mills, Esq.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public are respectfully informed, that there will be an EXTRA NIGHT (not included in the Subscription), on THURSDAY next, MAY 22nd, when will be presented MOZART'S chef d'œuvre, DON GIOVANNI.—Donna Anna, Madame Grisi; Donna Elvira, Madame Rita Borio; and Zerlina, Madame Anaide Castellan. Don Giovanni, Signor Fornasari; Don Ottavio, Signor Mario; Il Commandatore, Signor Botelli; Masetto, Signor F. Lablache: and Leporello, Signor Lablache. The DANSEUSES VIENNOISES, under the direction of Madame Josephine Weiss, will appear in some of their FAVOURITE PAS. To be followed by a variety of ATTRACTIVE ENTERTAINMENTS, in which will appear Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi, Mdlle. Ferdinand, Mdlle. Moncelet, Mdlle. Cassan, Mdlle. Demelisse, Mdlle. Cerito, and Mdlle. Lucile Grahn; M. St. Leon, M. Di Mattia, M. Gosselin, and M. Perrot. To conclude with the highly successful ballet, by M. Perrot, with New Scenery, Dresses, Decorations, &c., founded on Victor Hugo's celebrated work, of "Notre Dame de Paris," entitled LA ESMERALDA. The Music composed by SIGNOR PUGNI. La Esmeralda, Mddle. Carlotta Grisi; Fleur de Lys, Mdlle. Ferdinand; Made Aloise de Gondelaurier (Mother of Fleur de Lys), Madame Copere; Phœbus de Chateaupers, M. St. Leon; Claude Frollo, M. Gosselin; Pierre Gringoire (the Poet), M. Perrot; Quasimodo (the Sonneur Notre Dame), M. Bertrand; Clopin Trouillefou, M. Gouriet.—Applications for Boxes, Pit Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven; the Opera to commence at half-past Seven.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE OF ARTS.—Proprietor and Manager, MR. WM. BATTY.—Overflowing Houses! Enthusiastic Approbation!! Immense Success of the New Spectacle!!! Second Week of Monsieur Tournaire's celebrated Troupe of FRENCH EQUESTRIANS, whose performances have been rewarded by the most flattering encomiums.—On MONDAY, May 19th, and during the week, will be presented, for the Seventh Time, an entire new and Grand National, Domestic, Historical, Hippo-Dramatic Spectacle, in Three Acts, with new and characteristic Music, extensive Scenery, Dresses and Decorations, called THE GODOLPHIN ARABIAN; or, THE RACE HORSE OF THE DESERT, with novel and extraordinary Scenes in the Arena, &c. &c.— Mr. Batty has concluded an engagement with Monsieur Tournaire for Four Day Performances, introducing the entire Troupe of French Equestrians. These Performances will take place every Thursday, commencing on the 22nd and 29th of May, and the 5th and 12th of June.—The Doors will opened at Half-past One, and the Performances will commence at Two o'clock precisely. Box-office open from Eleven till Five.

VAUXHALL GARDENS.—OPEN every MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and FRIDAY.—Brilliant Success!—Overflow of the Gardens!—The Public Press have pronounced the revival of the "Royal Property" to be a most decided hit.—Grand Vocal and Instrumental CONCERT. Band of 100 Performers. A new Ballet, "Myrna; or, The Spirits of the Deep." Golden Temple of Honan, or Hall of the Celestial Kings, with Tableaux Pyrotechniques. View of the Villa d'Este, at Tivoli. Eruption of Mount Etna, with Destruction of the Ancient City of Catana. Pirates' Cave. Monastery of the Olden Time. Swiss Landscape. The Hermit, &c. Illuminations displayed by 20,000 Lamps. Italian Walk, with Fountains and Dissolving Views. Magnificent Ball-room. Signor Joel Il Diavolo will make a terrific descent, on a single wire, from an immense altitude, encircled with fireworks. The covered walks have been greatly extended, and, with the Rotunda, Theatre, Ball-room, &c., will, in case of rain, afford shelter for 20,000 persons.—Refreshments by Mr. Ellis, of her Majesty's Theatre, at tavern prices.—Admission, 2s., Children, Half-price. Doors open at Eight, commence at Half-past Eight o'clock.—Master of the Ceremonies, Mr. Widdicombe.

MR. H. B. RICHARDS has the honour to announce that his FIRST GRAND EVENING CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on TUESDAY, MAY 20, to commence at Eight o'clock precisely, on which occasion he will be assisted by the following celebrated Artistes:—Vocalists—Mesdames Dorus Gras, W. H. Seguin, Steele, Lucombe, Barrett, A. Romer, Williams, S. Flower, and Alfred Shaw; Messrs. Brizzi, Machin, Weiss, W. H. Seguin, Calkin, John Parry, and Staudigl. Instrumental Performers—Pianoforte, Mr. H. B. Richards; Violin, M. Vieuxtemps; Flute, Mr. Richardson; Concertina, M. Giuleo Regondi. Conductors, Messrs. Benedict and Lavenu. —Stalls and Tickets may be had at all the principal music warehouses, and of Mr. H. B Richards, 53, Albemarle-street.

MRS. ANDERSON, Pianist to the Majesties the Queen and the Queen Dowager, has the honour to announce that her ANNUAL GRAND MORNING CONCERT will take place in the OPERA CONCERT ROOM, on FRIDAY, MAY 23rd, at half-past One o'Clock precisely. Conductor, Signor Costa. Artistes already engaged—Mesdames Grisi, Castellan, Dorus Gras, Mdlle. Bertucat, Mdlle. Bockholtz, Miss Kirkman, and Miss B. Hawes; Signori Mario, R. Costa, Mecatti, Lablache, Herr Staudigl, Herr Pischek, and Mr. J. P. rry, Violin, M. Vieuxtemps; Pianoforte, Mrs. Anderson; Sax Horns. Messrs. Distin. Leader, Mr. Loder. The Band will be on the grand scale of former years. Several other distinguished artists will be engaged.—Tickets, 10s. 6d.; and Stalls, One Guinea each. Boxes for six persons, Three-and-a-half and Four Guineas each. May be had at all the principal Music shops, and of Mrs. ANDERSON, 21, Manchester-street, Manchester-square.

SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The FORTY-FIRST ANNUAL EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, at their Gallery, 5, Pall-Mall East, each day, from Nine till Dusk. Admittance, One Shilling. Catalogue, Sixpence. J. W. WRIGHT, Secretary.

BATTLE OF WATERLOO.—New Model upon a very large scale, representing the Splendid Charge in the earlier part of the Battle by the British Heavy Cavalry under the Marquess of Anglesey, and by the British Infantry, under Sir Thomas Picton.  DESCRIBED BY WATERLOO MEN.—EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY. "It is a national memento of one of England's most glorious triumphs."—The United Service Gazette.

Open from Eleven in the Morning, till Nine in the Evening. Admission, One Shilling.

HIS R. H. the PRINCE of WALES, by gracious permission of her Majesty, from the picture of Winterhalter at Windsor Castle. The HOUSE of BRUNSWICK at ONE VIEW; George I., George II., George III., George IV., William IV., Queen Charlotte, Queen Caroline, Princess Charlotte, Coburg, Dukes of York, Kent, Cambridge, Sussex, &c., the Robes of George IV., restored, the British Orders of the Garter, Bath, Thistle, St. Patrick. The National Group, Mr. Cobden, and Tom Thumb. "This is one of the best sights in the metropolis."—The Times. Open from 11 till 10 at night.—Admittance One Shilling; Napoleon Rooms, Sixpence.—MADAME TUSSAUD and SON'S Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—The ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY exhibited by a WORKING MODEL, having a power to carry visitors. A CURIOUS MECHANICAL HAND on a person who has lost his natural hand. Dr. RYAN'S LECTURES on the CHEMISTRY of DOMESTIC LIFE, Daily, at a quarter past Three, and on Wednesday and Friday evenings at a quarter to Nine. Professor BACHOFFNER'S VARIED LECTURES, with brilliant Experiments. LECTURES on CHARACTER, with MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS, by Mr. J. RUSSELL, accompanied by Dr. Wallis on the Pianoforte, on the evenings of Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday, at Eight o'Clock. New and beautiful objects in the CHROMATROPE, PHYSIOSCOPE, PROTEOSCOPE, &c. NEW DISSOLVING VIEWS. SUBMARINE EXPERIMENTS by the DIVER and DIVING BELL. WORKING MODELS described Daily.—Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.—The ANNUAL MEETING will be held in EXETER HALL, MONDAY, MAY 19th. JOSEPH JOHN GURNEY, Esq., will preside.—Doors open at Five o'clock; Chair to be taken at Six o'clock.—Tickets of Admission to the Central Seats may be obtained at the Office of the Society, 39, Moorgate-street, SHIPWRECKED FISHERMEN and MARINERS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

PATRONESS.

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

PATRON.

H. R. H. PRINCE ALBERT.

VICE PATRONESSES.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN DOWAGER.

H. R. H. The DUCHESS of GLOUCESTER.

VICE-PATRONS

HIS MAJESTY THE KING OF PRUSSIA.

H. R. H. The DUKE of CAMBRIDGE.

The SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY FEST

Now Ready, in 3 vols.,

MR. DISRAELI'S NEW WORK,

SYBIL; or, THE TWO NATIONS.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

To be had of all Booksellers, and at all the Libraries throughout the Kingdom.

PLEASURE GUIDE-BOOKS, Sixpence Each, with many beautiful Engravings. The following are already Published:—Pictorial Guides to Greenwich, Woolwich, Erith and Greenhithe, Gravesend, Cobham, Rochester, and Chatham. To be followed by Guide-Books to Windsor and Eton—Richmond—Hampton Court—Chelsea, Putney, and Fulham, &c. &c.—WM. S. ORR and Co., Paternoster-row.

THE FAMILY HERALD.—The most extensively circulated of English Periodicals. Vol. II. is now ready, price 7s. 6d. No. 105 is the first of a new Volume. No house should be without this popular work; it will please the old and charm the young. It is unquestionably the cheapest and most entertaining miscellany ever published. Buy a number and judge.

CURTIS ON DEAFNESS.

Just Published, with Plates, price 1s.,

THE PRESENT STATE of AURAL SURGERY. By JOHN HARRISON CURTIS, Esq., Surgeon to the Royal Dispensary for Diseases of the Ear.—"Interesting to all classes."—Literary Gazette.—"The author appears well versed in its diseases."—Lancet.—London: WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

FIELD'S JUVENILE BOOK ESTABLISHMENT.—Juvenile and Prize Books for the Entertainment and Instruction of Youth.—An extensive collection, comprising the works of the following eminent writers:—Mrs. Sherwood, Mrs. Hofland, Hannah More: Mrs. Barbauld, Mary Howitt, Miss Edgeworth, L. E. L., Mrs. Marcett, Maria Hack, Mary Elliott, Mrs. Markham, Ann Fraser Tytler, Mrs. Hall, Miss Julia Corner, Miss Mitford, Peter Parley, &c. &c., beautifully Illustrated, at FIELD'S CHEAP BOOK and STATIONERY WAREHOUSE, 65, Quadrant. Coloured Picture Books in every variety from 6d.

FIELD'S CHEAP STATIONERY and BOOK WAREHOUSE, 65, Quadrant, Corner of Air-street.—Stamped Envelopes, 1s. per doz.; Plain Envelopes, 4d. per 100; Superfine ditto, 6d. per 100; Satin ditto, 9d. per 100. Note Paper, 5 quires, 6d.; Albert and Queen's Note, 1s. and 1s. 6d. 5 quires; Superfine Bath Post, 2s. and 2s. 6d. the 5 quires; outsides ditto, 3d. and 4d. per quire. Wax of the finest quality, 10 sticks, 1s. Superfine Foolscap, 6d. per quire. Bibles, 1s.; Testaments, 6d.; Prayer-books, 9d., Church Services, 2 vols, in case, 3s. 6d.; a large and elegant stock, varying in price up to 3 Guineas. Mourning Envelopes, 1s. per 100; and every description of Stationery at prices not to be equalled by any other house.—65, QUADRANT.

RODRIGUES' Cheap STATIONERY and BOOK WAREHOUSE, 21, PICCADILLY.—Envelopes, 6d. per 100; superfine Bath post, 4d. per quire, 6s. per ream; note, 3d. per quire, 4s. per ream; best foolscap, 10d. per quire; Albert and Queen's note, 1s. and 1s. 6d. per packet of five quires; quills, 2s. per 100; best sealing-wax, 10 sticks for a shilling; bibles, 1s 6d; prayers, 1s.; testaments, 6d.; church services, two vols, in case complete, 3s. 6d Name plate, elegantly engraved and 100 superfine cards, 4s. 6d. Account Books, Ledgers, &c., made to order at manufacturers' prices, and every description of Stationery full 30 per cent. lower than any other house in London at H. RODRIGUES' 21, Piccadilly.

THIS DAY.—CLARKE'S CABINET SERIES.

LIFE IN DALECARLIA. By MISS BREMER.

2s. Authentic Edition.

STRIFE AND PEACE. 1s. 6d.
THE H—— FAMILY. 2s.
THE PRESIDENT'S DAUGHTER. 2s.
THE NEIGHBOURS. Two vols., 4s.
THE BONDMAID. 1s.
THE HOME. Two vols., 4s.
THE TWINS, and Other Tales. 2s.
NINA. Two vols., 4s.
A DIARY. 2s.
THE ROSE OF TISTELON. Two vols., 4s.

London: H. G. CLARKE and Co., 66, Old Bailey.

THE GO-A-HEAD JOURNAL for MAY, as usual, full of splendid Engravings, and the price only Twopence.—The Insurrection in Switzerland, with a spirited cut—The Attack upon Lucerne—The Fountains at Versailles, and the Monster Concert at the Tuileries on the 1st of May; two fine engravings—A View of Ludgate-hill and St. Paul's—Horse-riding at Astley's—Charing-cross as it was and is, illustrated—Steeple-chasing at Paris, illustrated—The Florist, illustrated—Passages from a Rhymer's Log-book, illustrated—The Delights of the Bathing Season, with many comic cuts—The Nelson Testimonial, illustrated—Mr. Polk at Washington, with a fine View of the Congress House—The Go-a-Head Railway Time-table, Steam-boat Guide, Places of Amusement, INDISPENSABLE TO ALL WHO TRAVEL BY RAIL OR STEAM. Give your orders early at the Office of the Go-a-Head, 17, Warwick-lane, Paternoster-row, and all Booksellers.

RE-ISSUE OF THE

ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK,

and PICTURESQUE CALENDAR FOR 1845.

64 pages, handsome quarto, gilt edges (no Advertisements), with EIGHTY ENGRAVINGS!

Price One Shilling.

It contains a greater variety of Information and seasonable entertainment than is to be found in any other Almanack. The Wrapper is beautifully printed in colours; and the artistical execution of the entire Almanack entitles it to a place upon every drawing-room table in the empire.

Published at the office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand.

THE MUSICAL BOUQUET, Edited by F. LANCELOTT.—Part V., price 1s., of this very interesting and elegant publication for Pianoforte players, contains No. 17, The Bouquet Quadrille; No. 18, a New Song, At the Sound of the Merry Horn, composed by E. F. Rimbault; No. 19, The Overture to Tancredi, price only 3d., embellished with a portrait of Rossini; No. 20, Patriotic Song, by Balfe, The Prayers of the Nation. Part VI.: No. 21, price 3d., a new Forester's Song, composed by Alexander Lee, with splendid steel engraving of Robin Hood, Little John, and Friar Tuck, illustrative of forest life and scenery; No. 22, the Bal Masque Quadrille, composed by the Editor, and illustrated with an engraving of her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Court, in their masquerade costume; Nos. 23 and 24 will contain two popular pieces.—Lists may be had of the Publishers and all the Booksellers. Each No., price only 3d., may be had separately, and sent by post, for 2d. extra. London: W. STRANGE, 21, Paternoster-row.

Now Ready at all the Libraries, in 3 vols.,

JONATHAN SHARP;

OR, THE ADVENTURES OF A KENTUCKIAN.

WRITTEN BY HIMSELF.

"This narrative is worthy of De Foe. It is full of romance from beginning to end. There is scarcely a chapter in the work that would not have made the fortune of a modern novel, for whether the author be exploring the haunts of the Buccaneers of the Havannah—wandering among the trackless prairies of Texas—dwelling with the hospitable plauters in Mexico—or making the acquaintance of Mormons, Indians, or Yankee bravoes of the true bowie knife school, he renders his narrative so singularly interesting, that the reader finds it impossible to lay it down till he has gone through to the last page."—New Monthly Magazine.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

CHEAP POPULAR MAGAZINE,

Containing Original Sermons for Family Reading, &c., &c.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND MAGAZINE for MAY, Price 9d. (with nine Engravings), contains Original Sermons by the Lord Bishop of Lincoln, the Rev. R. W. Browne, M.A., of King's College; the Dean of Salisbury, the Rev. Henry Melvill, B.D., Hailey bury: the Archdeacon of Derby. Papers by the Rev. R. L. Cotton, Rev. E. Strickland, Rev. Charles Kemble; with the usual quantity of Miscellaneous Articles, Narratives, Sketches of Remarkable Places, Scenes in Natural History, Missionary Records, &c., &c.

 All the Sermons in this work are, without exception, printed from the MSS. of the respective Authors.

A few of the Parts from the commencement of the year may still be had, for which an early application is recommended.—London: EDWARDS and HUGHES, 12, Ave Maria-lane.

THE NEW GALVANIC ENGRAVING.—AN EXTRAORDINARY NOVELTY IN TYPOGRAPHICAL ILLUSTRATION. Exclusively published in Nos. I., II., and III. of "JOE MILLER THE YOUNGER."

CONTENTS OF No III., NOW PUBLISHING:—

SAIREY GAMP AND HER PET BANTLING MAYNOOTH—With an Illustration.
Joe's Trip over Hungerford Suspension Bridge
Examinations at Apothecaries' Hall. Illustrated
The Arrival of Prince Leiningen and Suite. Illustrated
The Small Difference between Rich and Poor
The Mysteries of a Muff. Continued
Stray Notes upon Duelling. Many Cuts
The True and Eventful History of LEWtenant Curtis's only Son
Correspondence between Mrs. Groves and Messrs. Tupping and Co. Illustrated
Pilgrim's Progress. A Lucid Definition
Regular Jonathans. Improvements in Trade
Irish Mode of Rising a Row. A Dead Sleep
The Brougham Sun Dial. A "Jew" de Mot
A Lawyer's Habeas Corpus. A Prophecy
Human Waste Butts in India. Illustrated
Tars in a Methodist Chapel. Illustrated
The Oath of Love Pat and the Peer
Valentine Day in the Olden Times
The Present State of Things
A Lawyer's Bill. Provincial Theatricals
Sorrowful Death of Peter Gray and Lizzianny Querl, &c. &c.

MODERN PHILANTHROPY; or, THE ROYAL HUMANE SOCIERY v. BATHING. With a Galvanic Engraving.

Containing more Fun, Broad Grins, and Amusement than any other publication of the day. Price only THREE HALFPENCE; Stamped, to go free by post, TWOPENCE HALFPENNY, WEEKLY.

Office, 1, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and Sold by all Booksellers and Newsvenders.

PITY.—A GOVERNESS, once in affluence, but now, from ill health, TRULY and LITERALLY in WANT of LIFE'S COMMONEST REQUISITES, implores the ASSISTANCE of the Humane and Wealthy, to enable her to realise the sum of £40, for the purpose of establishing a little School. In a very few days, if unable to pay £25, she must forfeit all she possesses, and then, Heaven only knows what can be her fate. His Grace the Duke of Rutland, and Mr. Culling Smith, to whom her misfortunes are known, have generously commenced a Subscription for her benefit, at Mr. HOUGHTON'S, 162, New Bond-street, who has kindly consented to rec ive whatever may be offered on her behalf, and by whom the most trifling Contribution will be gratefully acknowledged.

TO THE CARPET TRADE.—THE ROYAL PATENT VICTORIA FELT CARPETING, made without spinning and weaving, having successfully overcome the prejudice created by competitors in other descriptions of Carpeting, and being now honoured with the patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty for its use in the Royal Palaces, the Patent Woollen Cloth Company, who are the sole manufacturers, inform the Trade that their new and beautiful Patterns in Carpetings for the present season are now ready for inspection at the Company's Warehouses, 8, Love-lane, Wood-street, Cheapside, where the Company have also a large assortment of elegantly-printed and embossed Table Covers, Window Curtains, Cloths for Coach-linings, Waistcoatings, Thick Felt for Polishing and Gun Waddings, D'Oyleys, &c. &c., manufactured by the same process. The public, in patronising the Felt Carpeting, will obtain, and for one half the price, an article superior in strength and durability to either Kidderminster or Brussels.—Manufactories—Elmwood Mills Leeds; and Borough-road, London.

SANATORIUM, or HOME IN SICKNESS.—The lease of the house hitherto occupied by this Institution having expired, and the house itself being unfitted, by its want of accommodation, for the purposes of the Institution, the Committee have long sought in vain for some suitable mansion which they might rent until sufficient funds could be raised for building. Unsuccessful in this attempt, they have been reluctantly compelled to close the establishment for the present. Convinced, however, from the experience they have had, that, if convenient premises could be purchased or built, the Institution would not only support itself, but also afford the means of greatly extending its usefulness, the Committee have determined to exert themselves to procure the necessary funds for this purpose. So soon as these shall be obtained, the institution will be re-opened.—Further information may be had, and subscriptions paid to the Secretary, at the Office of F. W. Pott, Esq., 13, Godliman-street, Doctors' Commons; and Messrs. Jones, Loyd, and Co., Bankers, Lothbury. HENRY S. SMYTH, Secretary.

DISEASED AND HEALTHY LIVES ASSURED.

MEDICAL, INVALID, and GENERAL LIFE OFFICE, 25, Pall-mall, London, and 22, Nassau-street, Dublin. Subscribed Capital, £500,000.

This Office was Established in 1841, for the Assurance of Diseased as well as Healthy Lives, having caused tables to be specially calculated for that purpose.

Members of Consumptive Families Assured at equitable rates.

Increased Annuities granted on Unsound Lives, the amount varying with the particular disease.

Healthy Lives are Assured at Lower Rates than at most other Offices.

More than two-thirds of the population are not Assurable in other Offices, from the prevalence of disease, and in several of the leading Assurance Societies in London, 23 per Cent., or more than one in five, of the applicants are rejected on examination.

About three-fourths of the Policies already issued by this Society are on Diseased Lives, the majority of which had been previously rejected by other Offices.

A Capital of Half-a-Million Sterling fully subscribed, affords a complete guarantee for the ulfilment of the Society's engagements. F. G. P. NEISON, Actuary.

ROYAL NAVAL COLLEGE.—Young Gentlemen are prepared for entrance into the Navy, on the successful system formerly adopted at this establishment, by Mr. E. G. LIVESAY, of Guildford, Surrey. Terms moderate. References numerous and respectable

WANTED, by a Member of the University of Cambridge, during the long vacation, a SITUATION as TRAVELLING COMPANION, or the Care and Instruction of Two Young Gentlemen about to enter the University.—Address to Y. Z., the Office of this Paper.

DANCING.—LESSONS in the MAZURKA, CELLARIUS VALSE, POLKA, and VALSE a DEUX TEMPS, as taught by Cellarius), by Mr WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons at all hours to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age, wishing privacy and expedition An Evening Class on Mondays and Fridays. Terms may be had on application as above.

BED FEATHERS, Duty Free:—

Best White Dantzic	2s. 10d.	Best Foreign Greys	2s. 0d.
Irish Whites	2s. 0d.	Irish Greys	1s. 6d.
Best ditto	2s 6d.	Best ditto	1s. 9d.

HEAL and SON, 196, Tottenham-court-road, opposite the Chapel.

BRETT'S IMPROVED COGNAC, NOT CAPSULED. "There's that within which passeth show!" In Sealed Bottles, 2s., and 3s. 6d. each; Imperial Gallon, 18s. Our LIQUEUR GINGER BRANDY on similar terms. Other choice Spirits, Wines, Malt Liquors, and Mineral Waters. HENRY BRETT and Co., Old Furnival's Inn, Holborn Bars.

INGRAM'S Manufactory, 29, City-road.

CHILDREN'S and INVALIDS' CARRIAGES.—INVALIDS' Wheel Chairs, from £3 to £35, with hoods; second-hand, as well as new. Spinal and Self-acting Chairs. Children's Chaises, Vis-a-vis Waggons, Phaetons, Barouches, &c. &c., from Ten Shillings to Twenty Guineas. Immense and varied collections on sale or hire

DAVIES'S FINE WAX-WICK MOULDS, 6d. per lb. Candles, 5d.; Botanic Wax, 1s.; German 1s. 2d.; Fine Wax, 1s. 5d.; Sperm, 1s. 10d.; Transparent Wax, 1s. 10d.; Genuine Wax, 2s.; Price's Composite, 8½d. and 10d.; Hale's ditto, 9½d Yellow Soap, 46s., 52s. and 58s. per 112lbs.; Mottled 60s and 64s; Windsor, 1s. 4d. per packet; Brown Windsor, 1s. 9d.; Rose, 2s.; Almond, 2s. 6d. Sealing Wax, 4s. 6d. per lb. Ogleby's Patent Oil, 4s. 6d. per gallon; Solar, 3s. 6d.; Sperm, 7s. 6d. For Cash, at DAVIES'S Old-Established Warehouse, 63, St. Martin's-lane, opposite Slaughter's Coffee-house.

STOOPING OF THE SHOULDERS and CONTRACTION OF THE CHEST are entirely PREVENTED, and gently and effectually Removed in Youth, and Ladies and Gentlemen, by the occasional use of the PATENT ST. JAMES'S CHEST EXPANDER, which is light, simple, easily employed, outwardly or invisibly, without bands beneath the arms, uncomfortable restraint, or impediment to exercise Sent per post by Mr. A. BINYON, 40, Tavistock-street, Strand, London; or full particulars on receiving a postage stamp.

COMFORT and ECONOMY are equally studied in the SHIRTS manufactured by W. E. WHITELOCK, 166, Strand (established 20 years), which, for their durability and superior fit, have obtained deserved celebrity—particularly those of Marsland's Patent Long Cloth, with fine linen fronts, &c., newest shape and very best work, 6s. 6d. each; and all linen, extra fine fronts, &c., 10s. 6d. A sample shirt sent into the country, post-age free, upon receipt of a P.O. order for the amount, with 1s. added, as part payment of carriage. The dimensions requisite are the tight measure of the neck, chest, and wrist.

SCHWEPPE'S SODA and other ALKALINE WATERS continue to be manufactured as usual, upon the largest scale, at their several establishments, and to maintain their supremacy over all others. Each bottle has its proper proportion of alkali; but to prevent imposition, consumers are earnestly requested to ascertain that a label with their NAME is over the cork of each bottle of soda water, and a label on each bottle of lemonade and potass water. Schweppe's Liquid Magnesia is of the finest quality, and strongly recommended as a cure for gout, acidity of the stomach, &c., by the first London Physicians.—51, Berners-street, London.

SAVING OF SILVER AND LABOUR.

FOR CLEANING GOLD and SILVER PLATE INSTANTANEOUSLY, without wearing the precious metals in the slightest degree.—JONES'S SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, a new chemical discovery, recommended by the eminent Chemist, Andrew Ure, M.D., F.R.S., &c., and sold in half pint, pint, and quart bottles, at 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. Caution.—Every genuine Bottle of this Compound is protected by the Stamp and Address of the only Inventors and Makers, "Jones and Co., Light House, 201, Strand, London." Sold wholesale by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Sutton, and Co., and Edwards and Co., London; and retail by Sangar, Oxford-street; Johnson, Cornhill; and Jones and Co. 201, Strand.

PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS.—JOHNSON AND CO., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street, Hatters to the Queen and Royal Family, Inventors and Patentees.—From the construction of the PATENT FLEXIBLE HATS the unpleasant pressure on the forehead is entirely removed, and by their extreme elasticity they are capable of accommodating themselves perfectly to the shape of the head; the crown, moreover, being ventilated, and the perspiration prevented from appearing on the outside of the hat, are additional advantages. As Ladies' Riding Hats they are light and elastic, and will retain their position on the head without the least discomfort.—JOHNSON and CO., 113, Regent-street, and GRIFFITHS and JOHNSON, 2, Old Bond-street.

ESTABLISHED 18 YEARS.—WOOLLEN, SCOTCH, and MANCHESTER WAREHOUSE.—In calling the atttention of the Public to a stock suited for the present season, the foolish assertion of selling cheaper than any house in the Kingdom is not held out as is too often the case; but, at the same time, we positively assert that no house can go to market better, or sell at a smaller rate of profit, our business being conducted on one system, viz., for Ready Money, thus enabling us at all times to meet the utmost competition. Every article in the Establishment is marked in plain figures, at the lowest possible price, from which no deviation can be made. We invite all to inspect and judge for themselves, being confident one purchase will ensure enlarged recommendations and support. No connection with any other house.—HILL and MILLS, 89, St. Martin's-lane, and Corner of St. Martin's-court.

THE ATRAPILATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE; the only dye that really answers for all colours, and does not require re-doing, but as the hair grows, as it never fades or acquires that unnatural red or purple tint common to all other dyes. ROSS and SONS can, with the greatest confidence, recommend the above dye as infallible, it done at their establishment; and ladies or gentlemen requiring it, are requested to bring a friend, or servant with them, to see how it is used, which will enable them to do it afterwards without the chance of failure, Several private apartments devoted entirely to the above purpose, and some of their establishment having used it, the effect produced can be at once seen. They think it necessary to add, that by attending strictly to the instructions given with each bottle of dye, numerous persons have succeeded equally well without coming to them.

Address Ross and Sons, 119 and 120, Bishopsgate-street, the celebrated Perruquiers, Perfumers, Hair-cutters, and Hair-dyers. N.B. Parties attended at their own residences, whatever the distance.

BARGAINS IN PAISLEY SHAWLS AND MANTLES.—BAILEY and CO., beg to announce to the visitors of St. Paul's that their SHOROOMS are now OPEN to the public, with an elegant assortment of La Cracovienne Mantilles, now the prevailing fashion, 31s. 6d. each.

		s.	d.
125	Rich Frilled Mantle Scarfs	17	9	Full Size.
272	Superb Paisley Shawls	14	9	New Patterns.
1057	New French Gauze Robes	8	11½	Fast Colours.
795	Organdie Muslin Dresses	3	11½	New Patterns.
1229	New Cross-over Cashmeres	7	11	Full Lengths.
	A few boxes of Shot Spitalfields Satinettes	2	3½	per yard.
	511 Royal Claremont Parasols, as now in Paris, ..	4	11½	Ivory Tips.
1529	Favorites	1	9½	Ivory Tips.

Observe—BAILEY and Co., Albion House, 77, St. Paul's Church-yard, London.

WATCHES by WEBSTER and SON, Chronometer Makers to the Lords of the Admiralty and the East India Company.—Webster and Son's manufactory has continued in Cornhill 134 years, where may be selected from one of the most extensive stocks in London, every description of superior manufacture in Chronometers, Watches, and Clocks, and at the lowest prices consistent with security for the maintenance of that reputation for superior workmanship which has distinguished their house for so many years. Compensated duplex and lever watcoes, to counteract the variations of temperature, upon the principle of their chronometers, to which Government awarded the prizes three years in succession; small elegant lever and horizontal watches in gold cases, engraved or engine-turned for ladies or gentlemen; small flat silver detached lever and horizontal watches, for youths, at very moderate prices. Superior workmen are employed upon the premises in the repairing department for English and foreign work. The utmost value allowed for old watches in exchange.—WEBSTER and SON'S Publication, with their Equation Table for the Present Year, will be sent free on the receipt of two postage stamps. A large selection of fine Second-hand Watches at very low prices.—74, Cornhill, London.

GREAT SAVING IN SOAP AND LABOUR.

Royal Letters Patent, granted March 4, 1844.

WARD'S PATENT WASHING and CLEANSING POWDER, manufactured at the Oldbury Alkali Works, near Birmingham. One great advantage which this powder possesses over others consists in its not injuring the hands of the persons using it. Other Washing Powders contain carbonate of soda in its free state, which, by acting upon the skin, inflames the hands and renders them sore and wrinkled. Other advantages peculiar to this powder may be stated as follows, viz.:—A saving of at least one-half of the soap which is necessary when soda is used. A great saving in the labour of washing. The colour of linen and other fabrics turns out far superior in whiteness to that which is given by any other means. From the wear and tear caused by the rubbing and maiding being diminished, the durability of the clothes is increased.

This Powder will be found very valuable in Scouring Greasy Floors and Tables, in Cleansing Brass, Tin, and other Utensils of domestic use, and also Publicans' Pewter Pots.

 Warranted not to injure articles, though made of the finest materials.

Sold in packets, at 1d., 2d., 3d., and 6d. each, with directions for using. Be particular in asking for WARD'S WASHING POWDER, as no other possesses the same qualities.—To be had of all Druggists, Grocers, Oilmen, &c., or wholesale from the Manufacturers by application to Mr. P. WARD, at the Works as above, or in London, to Mr. JOHN MACARTNEY, 2, Coleman-street Buildings.

NEW ENVELOPE.—In consequence of the great variety of Counterfeit Envelopes of ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, and other disreputable means resorted to by unprincipled individuals for imposing on the public their highly pernicious compounds under the title of "KALYDOR," the Proprietors and sole Preparers of the Original and Genuine Preparation, acting under a sense of duty, and regardless of expense in the attainment of their object—the protection of the Public from Fraud and Imposition—have employed those celebrated artists, Messrs. Perkins, Bacon and Co., who have succeeded, at great cost, in producing from a steel plate a New Envelope of exquisite beauty. It comprises a highly-finished engraving of the Grecian Graces standing on a classic pedestal, on each side of which is a rich profusion of flowers springing from an elegant cornucopia: these tastefully blending with Arabesque scrolls and wreaths, encircle the Royal Arms of Great Britain, surmounting the words, "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR," &c., &c., whilst a plinth at the foot displays the Signature of the Proprietors, in red, thus—

A. ROWLAND & SON.

20, Hatton Garden, London, Jan 1, 1845.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, an Oriental Botanical Discovery, perfectly free from all mineral or metallic admixture. It purifies the skin from all Eruptive Maladies, Freckles, Discolourations, &c. To the Complexion it imparts a radiant bloom, and a softness and delicacy to the Hands, Arms, and Neck.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. Sold by the Proprietors as above, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

PATRONISED BY THE QUEEN AND ROYAL FAMILY OF GREAT BRITAIN, AND THE SEVERAL SOVEREIGNS AND COURTS OF EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.—This ELEGANT, FRAGRANT, and TRANSPARENT OIL, in its preservative, restorative, and beautifying qualities, for the Human Hair, is unequalled throughout the whole world. For Children, it is especially recommended as forming the basis of A Beautiful Head of Hair!!! Price 3s. 6d., 7s., Family Bottles (equal to four small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION.—Each genuine bottle has the words ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL engraved in two lines on the Wrapper; and on the back of the Wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,028 letters.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, a fragrant white powder, prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue for preserving and beautifying the TEETH and strengthening the GUMS. It eradicates tartar from the teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, imparting the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; and gives sweetness and perfume to the breath. Scurvy is by its means eradicated from the gums, and a healthy action and redness are induced, so that the teeth, if loose, are thus rendered firm in their sockets. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

CAUTION.—As a protection from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of Stamps have directed the Proprietors' name and address, thus—A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden—to be engraved on the Government Stamp, which is affixed on each box.  All other articles under the same names are Fraudulent Imitations.

EPSOM RACES.—Sparkling Pink CHAMPAGNE:—Pints, 21s.; Quarts, 30s., per dozen. This Wine is confidently offered as quite equal to Foreign. HOBSON'S Grocery and Foreign Warehouse, 6, Connaught-terrace, Edgeware-road.

HAMS! HAMS! HAMS!—Several Hundred of YORK, any size from 7lbs. to 30lbs. each, in prime condition, mellow and full flavour, at 8½d. per lb. CRAFT, 20, Fpot-lane, City. Conveyed free to any part of London.

BACON! BACON! BACON!—CRAFT, 20, Philpot-lane, City, respectfully notifies he continues to receive weekly supplies of his justly-esteemed mild Breakfast Bacon, and is at present selling it at 6½d. per pound, by the whole or half side. Conveyed, free, to any part of London.

ALE! ALE! ALE!—Best, brightest, purest, and most in esteem by Connoiseurs, to be had in Eighteen or Nine Gallon Casks, at One Shilling per Gallon, by addressing to the JOHN BULL BREWERY. Office, 20, Philpot-lane, City. Conveyed, free, to any part of London.

INTELLECTUAL PAPER HANGINGS, in which the writings of various Authors are inserted in Ornamental Patterns, by HENNELL and CROSBY, Queen-street, Southwark-bridge-road, Manufacturers of Panel Decorations, and all other kinds of Paper Hangings. For a specimen of Free Trade and Literary Paper Hanging, see the Saloon of the Anti-Corn-Law Bazaar, Covent Garden Theatre.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

NUMBER ONE SAINT PAUL'S CHURCHYARD.—Tea, the best and cheapest of every description, especially Souchong Tea, at 4s. 6d. per lb., an old-fashioned fine tea, such as the East India Company used to bring over.—DAKIN and COMPANY, TEA-MERCHANTS, who supply the Trade and all large Innholders from NUMBER ONE SAINT PAUL'S CHURCHYARD.

THOSE who know the taste of, and are desirous of using in all its native freshness and purity, Old MOCHA COFFEE, can procure it at Number One, St. Paul's Churchyard, where the rarest and very best, which, like good old port wine, has become, from its age, mellow in ripeness and richness of flavour, is sold by DAKIN and Co., Tea Merchants, whose vans will deliver this choice Coffee within eight miles of Number One, St. Paul's Churchyard.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED, without Springs, Clasps, or Wires; Loose Teeth Fastened; and Filling Decayed Teeth with Mineral Marmoratum.—Mons. LE DRAY and SON, SURGEON DENTISTS, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street, continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated Mineral Marmoratum, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the Toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary They also Fasten Loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of calomel, or diseases of the gums. Incorrodible Artificial or Natural Teeth, of surpassing beauty, to match in colour and shape those left in the mouth, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following charges:—A single tooth, 10s.; a set, £5 5s Arranged on the most approved principles, and restoring perfect articulation and mastication. At home from Ten till Six.—Mons. Le Dray's "Treatise on the Diseases of the Gums and Teeth" may be had free, on application at their residence, 42 Berners-street, Oxford-street.

MOURNING—Court, Family, and Complimentary.—The Proprietors of the London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249, Regent-street, beg respectfully to remind families requiring mourning attire, that every article of the very best description, requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning, may be procured from this Establishment at a moment's notice. Widows' and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note particularising the mourning required, will insure immediate attention either in town or country. Ladies requiring Silks or Velvets for Dresses, Mantles, Cloaks, &c., are particularly invited to a trial of the new Corbeau Silks and Velvets introduced at this house. They will be found not only more durable, but the colour very superior, unaffected by the strongest acid, or even sea-water. Black and Grey, and Fancy Mourning Silks, Cashmeres, Plaids, and Merinoes, of every description. The Show Rooms are replete with every novelty for Mourning in millinery, flowers, Tulle and Nett Sleeves, Collars, Berthes, Head-dresses, trimmings, &c. &c.—W. C. JAY and Co.

SEVENTEEN SHILLINGS are now charged by the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY for 6lbs. of good sound TEA. This is the lowest possible price at which Tea can be supplied with credit to the merchant and advantage to the consumer. 6lbs. of COFFEE for 5s. Offices, No 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street.

THE MINARET PARASOL.—CAUTION.—Ladies are particularly requested to observe that the Silver Runner of the Parasol is Stamped with the word "MINARET." This Caution is necessary, as other parasols have been sold for the Minaret which are not so. This elegant Novelty can be had at all the respectable Drapers in the Kingdom.

PLATE SUITED for PRESENTATION.—Committees or private individuals requiring splendid or simple articles of PLATE for presentation, may by addressing a paid letter, have drawings sent for their approval. A number of large articles, as Epergnes, Cups, Waiters, &c., are always in stock, second hand; a list of them, with price, can be furnished.—T. COX SAVORY, Silversmith, &c., 47, Cornhill, (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

THE SKIN and COMPLEXION.—GOWLAND'S LOTION. The well-known effects of a spring temperature upon the skin and complexion, are pleasingly counteracted by the use of this congenial and long-established article, which prevents and removes all impurities and discolourations of surface with a promptitude and safety conclusive of its value as a constant appendage of the toilet,—"ROBERT SHAW, London," is in white letters on the Government stamp, without which none is genuine. Prices, 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d.; quarts, 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers.

BAD HEALTH FOR TWENTY YEARS.—IMMEDIATE RELIEF BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Extract of a letter from the Rev. George Prior, Curate of Mevagh. Letter:—"Kenny Carrigart, Ireland, 2nd May, 1845. To Professor Holloway. Dear Sir—Within a short distance of my house resides a small farmer, who for more than twenty years had been in a bad state of health, and never got but a moment's relief. Mrs. Prior procured a box of your pills for him, which did him so much good that I heard him say that, for twenty years previously, he never ate his food and enjoyed it so much as since taking your pills.—Signed, GEORGE PRIOR.—Sold at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment, 244, Strand; and by most all who sell medicines throughout the civilised world.

HAIR RESTORED.—IMPORTANT TO THE LADIES.—All who study the graces are now referred to another proof, in addition to those which have been afforded in such numbers, and from persons of such undoubted standing and respectability, of the excellent virtues of Oldridge's Balm of Columbia for nourishing, improving, and restoring the Hair, in the following decisive testimonial.

44, Savile-street, Hull.

Gentlemen,—A few weeks ago a young lady, whose hair had become very thin, and, in some parts, had entirely fallen off, applied to me to see if I could prepare her anything to restore it. I advised her to try your Balm, and I am sure you will have much pleasure in hearing that, after using three small bottles, she called to inform me that her hair was perfectly restored. As this is one of the most decided cases I ever knew, I thought it only right that you should be made acquainted with it.—Gentlemen, your's truly, JOHN FREEMAN.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle. No other prices are genuine. Ask for OLDRIDGE'S BALM, 1, Wellington-street, Strand.

SAVING OF SILVER AND LABOUR.

JONES'S SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, for cleaning GOLD and SILVER PLATE, Jewellery, Silver Plated Goods, &c., &c.—The following Letter, from Dr. URE the eminent Chemist, at once establishes the usefulness of this new discovery:—

"I have examined the preparation invented by Messrs. JONES, for cleaning silver, called SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, and find it to be safe, effectual, and instantaneous in its operation. Being founded on chemical principles, it merely removes the tarnish on plate, and restores the white silver lustre without abrading or wearing the precious metal itself in the slightest degree.

ANDREW URE, M.D., F.R.S, &c.
Professor of Chemistry and Analytical Chemist.

London, 13, Charlotte-street, Bedford-square, March 8th 1845.

Sold in Half-Pint, Pint, and Quart bottles, at 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s.; and Sample Bottles at 9d. each, by all respectable Chemists, Silversmiths, and Ironmongers. Wholesale by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Sutton and Co., and Edwards and Co., London. CAUTION.—Every genuine bottle of this compound is protected by the Stamp and Address of the only Inventors and Makers, JONES and Co., Light-House, 201, Strand, London.

PARR'S LIFE PILLS.—The extraordinary success of this Medicine is the wonder of the age; it has been tried by hundreds of thousands as an aperient, and has in every instance done good: it has never, in the slightest degree, impaired the most delicate constitution. Tens of thousands have testified that perseverance in the use of PARR'S LIFE PILLS will completely cure any disease, and are living witnesses of the benefit received from this invaluable medicine.—Sheets of testimonials, and the "Life and Times of Old Parr," may be had, gratis, of every respectable Medicine Vendor throughout the Kingdom.

Beware of spurious imitations of the above Medicine. None are genuine unless the words 'PARR'S LIFE PILLS" are in WHITE LETTERS ON A RED GROUND, engraved on the Government Stamp, pasted round each box; also, the fac-simile of the signature of the Proprietors, "T. ROBERTS and Co.," London, on the directions.

Sold in boxes, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and family packets, at 11s., by Edwards, 67, St. Paul's; Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; Sutton and Co., Bow Churchyard, London; Mottershead and Co., Manchester: and J. and R. Raimes and Co., Edinburgh; and by SCENE FROM THE NEW BURLESQUE OF CINDERELLA, AT THE LYCEUM THEATRE.

SCENE FROM "CINDERELLA," AT THE LYCEUM THEATRE.

Our illustration represents the tableau at the conclusion of the second act of the burlesque of "Cinderella," where, just as Cinderella has given orders to "drive on to court," Rumpelstiltskin, the German gnome, tries to press his suit in the following words:—

Rumpel. I claim your hand for the first six quadrilles!
Fairy. Back! or be crush'd beneath the chariot wheels!
Rumpel. 'Tis not the first time I your spells have marr'd.
Fairy. Ha! is it so? Appear, my Fairy Guard!
Surround the coach, watch over my god-daughter;
Spite of the gnome, safe to the ball escort her!

The "guard"—a bevy of pretty girls in glittering armour—appear, and repulse Rumpelstiltskin, who flies off, vowing vengeance; and the cortège, surrounded by the fairy attendants, moves on to the ball.

NEW MUSIC.

Gems for the Accordion, with or without Semitones. Arranged by J. Alexander. Alexander, Holloway.

Through the kind and liberal permission of most of our musical publishers, Mr. Alexander has been enabled to present the public with the most elegant collection of airs that were ever compiled together for the accordion—moreover, their arrangements for instruments, either with or without semitones, are admirable, and reflect the highest credit upon Mr. Alexander's ingenuity and taste. We recommend the work warmly.

Valse d'Arlequin. Composée par Eugene Dejazet. Arrangée par Henry J. Rosenmuller. Leader and Cock.

Neither composer nor arranger of this waltz has succeeded in producing anything new. We have heard fifty thousand similar emanations from the over-teeming and ephemeral press.

Childhood's Dreams. Duet. The Words by J. E. Carpenter, Esq.; the Music by N. J. Sporle. J. Williams, Cheapside.

A very pretty and tasteful composition, full of grace and airy melody. It is within the compass of ordinary voices, and, sung correctly, cannot fail to be highly effective.

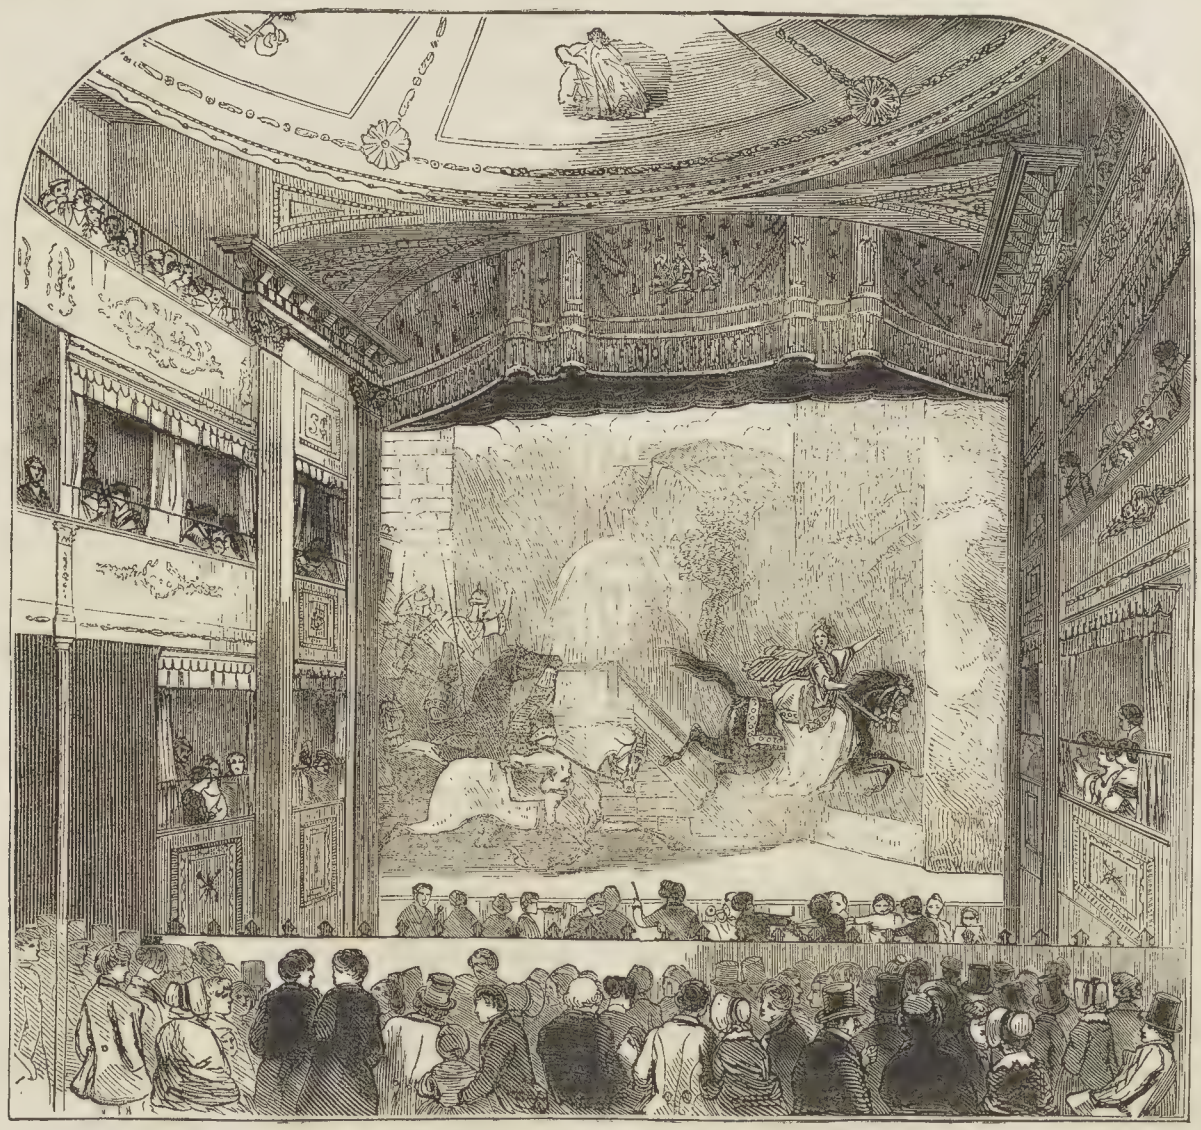
Vocal Gems of Germany, No. VI. Edited and Arranged by William Hutchins Callcott. Leader and Cock, New Bond-street.

This selection of songs, with their original words very faithfully translated and nicely arranged, with an accompaniment for the pianoforte, entitles Mr. Callcott's elegant taste and judgment to our sincerest admiration. The present number contains a charming andantino in $\frac{3}{4}$ A flat, by Heinrich Proch.

Hark! the Sabbath Bells are Pealing" Written by R. C. Gidley, Esq. composed by Edwin Flood. Leoni Lee (for the Author).

One of the best songs we have seen on the subject. The melody is simple and expressive, and the use of the carillon in the accompaniment is admirably managed—assisting the meaning of the words without intruding upon them. We sincerely recommend it to notice—that is, to still further notice; for we perceive it has reached a second edition.

Songs, Duets, and Trios, selected from the Oratorios, &c., of Handel; and arranged by permission of her Majesty from the Original Manuscript Scores of the Composer, with an Accompaniment for the Pianoforte. By Henry R. Bishop. Vol. VII. D'Almaine and Co., Soho-square.



This delightful work, we rejoice to see, has attained its seventh volume: it abounds, like the preceding numbers, with "many a flower" which might have been "born to blush unseen," but for the care of Sir Henry Bishop. The various readings copied from the Author's score are very interesting and valuable.

Les Trois Graces. Three original Polkas for the Piano Forte. Composed by F. Kalkbrenner. D'Almaine and Co., Soho-square.

We notice this publication on account of the respectable name of Kalkbrenner, a composer who can do nothing wrong. The three bagatelles are very elegant, in fact the only music under the designation of Polka which we have seen. Nos. I. and III. are characterised by simplicity and grace, and No. II. contains some passages which would do honour to a more serious performance. In fact they are well named "Lès Trois Graces."

Welcome Joy and Feast. A Convivial Glee. The Words selected from "Comus;" the Music composed by Henry Farmer. Farmer, Nottingham.

We are informed that this is a Prize Glee which won the day at the Nottingham Anacreontic Society, on the 11th of February, 1845. But there are none of the essentials of glee-writing about it; it more resembles the joyous terminal chorus of a vaudeville. Moreover, the coro is too often repeated (six times!). Au reste, it is an effective morceau for a dramatic situation; but it is no more like a glee than a psalm-tune.

THE NEW STANDARD THEATRE, SHOREDITCH.

Sing, Sing, Sing! Song. Written by Andrew Park, Esq.; composed by Henry Farmer. Z. T. Purday, High Holborn.

A very clever composition. The title-page announces that it has been sung by many celebrated vocalists, and we do not wonder at it, for, even under the treatment of a correct, but mediocre singer, it would be sure to make its own way.

While Blue Violets Deck the Spring. Composed by Henry Farmer. Jullien, Regent-street,

This vocal arrangement is founded upon Jullien's Original Polka, and, thanks to Mr. Farmer, is much more graceful than in its original form.

The Chimes Polka. Composed by H. Farmer. Farmer, Nottingham.

Fatigued as we are with Polkas, Mr. Farmer's is really an agreeable flower in the wilderness. It cannot fail to please.

We have received about five hundred Polkas, &c., the which, to place in several niches in our columns of review, would exceed all bounds. We have just recovered from the task of going through them, and can only say that they are constructed in such beautiful uniformity with one another, that if they were all transformed into one key and played together, they would go as well as singly. We are heartily tired of such trash.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Mr. Poole's very neatly-written play of "Paul Pry," revived at this theatre, for the benefit of Mr. Wright, has been repeated during the week with increased effect. Mr. Wright's personation of the village Marplot, is second only to the great original, Liston; whose ubiquitous umbrella, and "I hope I don't intrude," are here transmitted to us with almost unimpaired lustre.

MR. WRIGHT, AS "PAUL PRY," AT THE ADELPHI THEATRE.

THE NEW STANDARD THEATRE.

The East-enders have now their Amphitheatre, or Cirque Olympique, for equestrian performances, which the proprietors of the New Standard Theatre have just provided for, in a novel and ingenious manner.

This little Temple of the Drama was erected a few months since, on the site of twelve houses, adjoining "the Standard Theatre," by Mr. John Gibson, for the proprietors, Messrs. Johnson and Nelson Lee. It faces the Terminus of the Eastern Counties Railway, in Shoreditch. The interior is of the horseshoe form, and a domed roof, a construction peculiarly well adapted for the transmission of sound. The proscenium is 30 feet wide by 30 feet in height; the auditory has a circle of ten private, and fourteen public boxes, which, with the pit and gallery, will accommodate 2200 persons. It is lit by a cut-glass chandelier; the fronts of the boxes are coloured in two drabs, relieved with gold mouldings, pilasters, equestrian medallions, &c.

The equestrian performances were the holiday novelty of Monday last: they are not given in the area of the auditory, but in the place of the stage; for which purpose the flooring is, by ingenious machinery removed upon a kind of railway, the proscenium boxes are made to recede, and a ring is presented 39 feet in diameter, wherein Mr. Cooke and his Stud first exhibited on Whit Monday. Our illustration is a scene from an Equestrian Spectacle, also then produced, and entitled "The Conquest of Tartary; or, The Eagle Rider of Circassia, and her Monarch Steed of the Desert!" wherein a Mrs. R. B. Taylor's performance is very striking.

Fairs.—Fairs were held on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, at Greenwich, Wandsworth, and Stepney; and, notwithstanding the rather unfavourable weather, the visitors at all of them were very numerous. It is computed that the steamers, the railway, and the coaches, took down to Greenwich about 75,000 persons from London and its environs, and that the expenditure in the town on Monday amounted to £15,000, up to the close of the fair, independent of the sums paid to the railway and steam-boat companies to and from the place. The cases of robbery and violence at those places were very few indeed—a remarkable circumstance, when the multitudes that visited them is taken into consideration.

The Artesian Wells in Trafalgar square.—The service mains have all been laid down for the supply of water from the engine-house in Orange-street to the different Government offices in Parliament-street, Whitehall, and the vicinity. The water will be laid on at Midsummer, the Chelsea Water Works having received orders to discontinue their supply at that period, and it is estimated that by this new arrangement a saving of £500 per annum will be effected.

The Tower.—Upwards of one hundred of the military are daily employed, in addition to the ordinary labourers, in proceeding with the works of this ancient fortress. The site of the old Armoury has been nearly excavated, and concrete laid for the foundations of the new barracks. The earth taken out of the latter has been thrown over the Tower into the moat to fill it up, and it is not now intended to make it into a plantation, but into an exercise ground for the military, and a promenade for the inhabitants of the fortress.

Murder in Portugal.—A barbarous murder has been lately discovered in the vicinity of Lisbon. A young man who followed the occupation of a pedlar, well known in the district where the crime was committed, and respected for his integrity, suddenly disappeared; and traces of blood were found in the neighbourhood of a house where he had been last seen, and to which he had returned for the payment of a debt of ten moidores. He had arrived there late, had spent the night in the house, and was seen no more. Inquiries were set on foot, and the horse and package of goods of the unfortunate pedlar were said to have been in the possession of these persons, and to have been made away with. The owner was an old man, who had three grown up sons, of bad reputation in the neighbourhood. Spots of blood were discovered in the house on its examination, and eventually the body was found buried in the garden in a mutilated condition. The father and sons are now in prison.

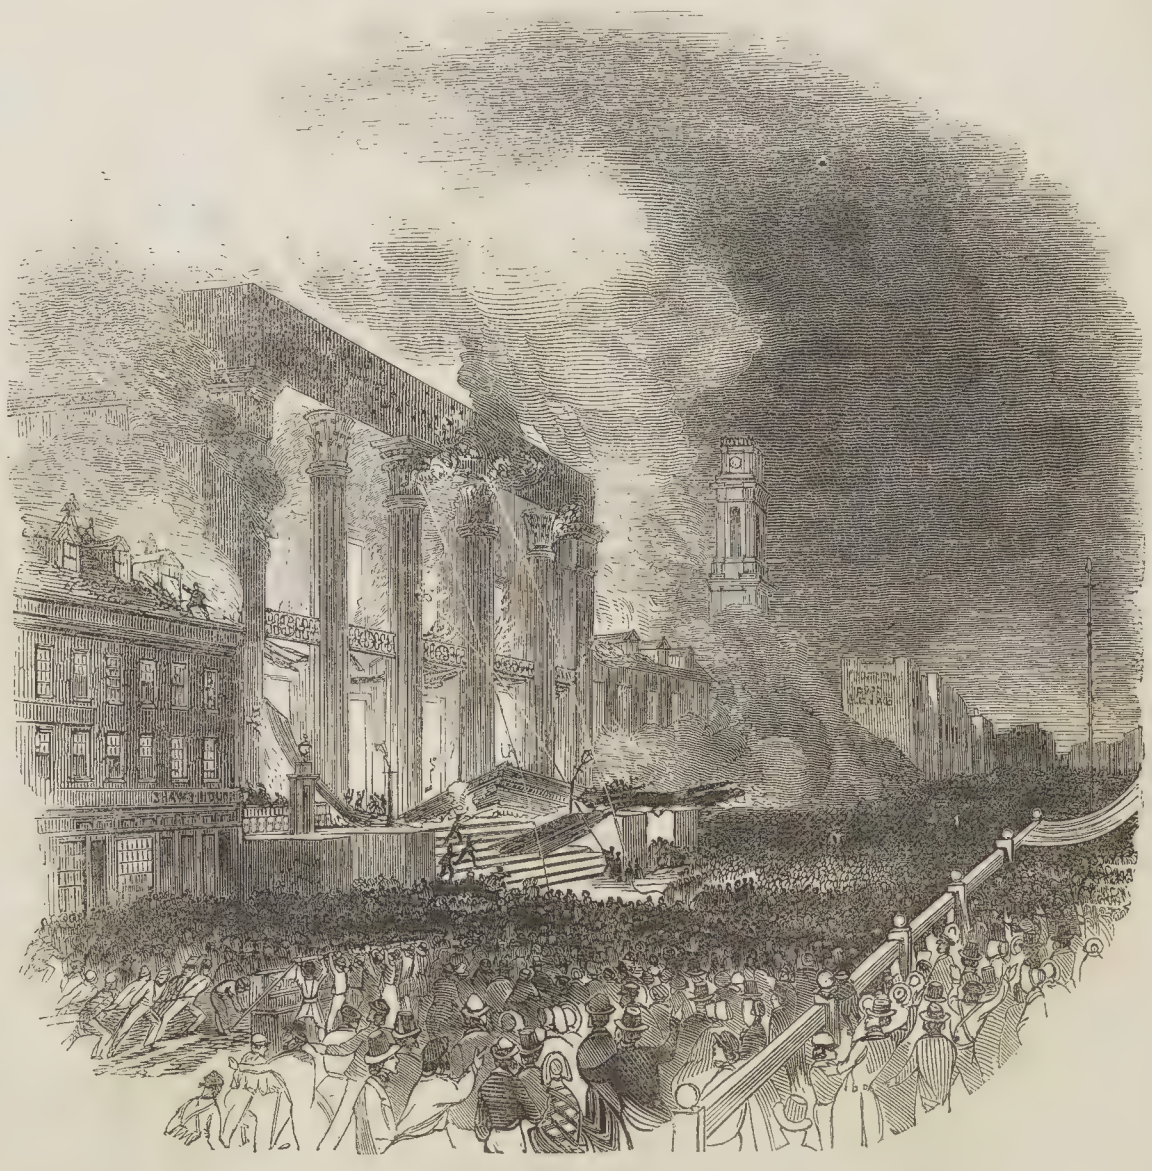
London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, May 17, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 160.—Vol. VI.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1845. [Sixpence.

THE MAYNOOTH BILL.

THE Maynooth Bill was read a third time and passed on Wednesday night, by a majority of 133. It will be immediately sent to the Lords, where we do not anticipate for it so much opposition as it has met with in the Commons. Their lordships are independent of constituencies; they are "blissfully haven'd" both from the joy and pain of the excitement of the hustings, and the importunities of deputations from constituents: from the serene height of their hereditary eminence, they can look on the dissensions of party and sects—unless they happen to share in them—with placid indifference, and, as they have more than once demonstrated, they may disregard the voice of the people with comparative impunity. It is easy to foresee, then, that a measure introduced by the Government, and supported by all its interest, while it carries out the principles avowed by the great body of the Opposition, will receive no check from the enmity of the few isolated peers who will separate themselves from the two chief parties of the State, and denounce the measure in a repetition of the arguments that have already been worn threadbare in the debates of the House of Commons.



Now that the long, and, we must say, unpleasant series of discussions has closed, it may not be out of place to take, if possible, a calm review of them, and to clear up some of the apparent difficulties that have embarrassed the question, and have involved a necessity for more words, and those of greater bitterness, than the simple measure itself seems to have required.

A principle that is deemed objectionable can only be effectually combated by an antagonist principle which should be comprehensive, clear, and distinct. The opposition to the Bill, grounded on the objection to all State endowments of religion, was of this kind; it could be understood; it was capable of gathering round it, as in fact it did, a great mass of opinion prepared to assert it. But great as it was, it did not give to the opposition its distinguishing peculiarity; those who opposed the Bill exclusively on what is called the "voluntary principle" were overwhelmed by the far greater number who stood in their enmity on the "Protestant principle." It was in the assertion of this principle that the arguments advanced, though urged with extraordinary zeal and unquestionable sincerity, failed altogether as practicable guides for the Government of an Empire, where different religions are united in allegiance under one crown.

This argument appeared in a hundred different forms in the debate, but its two principal heads were these—first that a Protestant people ought not to contribute towards teaching what it thinks to be error; and secondly, that a permanent grant to a Catholic College made by a Protestant Government, is an infraction of our Protestant Constitution.

The first of these positions plunges us at once into the depths of religious controversy. For nearly two thousand years have Christians been disputing with each other on the question of Pilate, "Quid est Veritas?" and as yet are not agreed in what Truth consists. It is the worst consequence of discussions of this nature that they unavoidably inflame the passions on both sides, and, without producing conviction or advancing the cause of Truth, wholly destroy that spirit of Charity, without which, says the Apostle, we are "nothing." Into this part of the question, then, we cannot enter, farther than to point out the inconsistencies which opposition to a measure of State policy on this ground involves—inconsistencies which have prevented the judgment and sense of the nation at large coming to the aid of those who acted on it. The agitation against the Education Clauses of the Factory Bill was exclusively that of the immense Dissenting body of England. It declared the teaching of the Established Church to be error, though the Church is Protestant; so deep and intense was the feeling, that a declaration was made by a Dissenting Minister that he would rather poison his children than have them learn the Church Catechism! It is evident that the Truth of Dissent is not the Truth of the Church of England. according to the first, the last is error. Yet Dissenters do pay towards its being taught, and that continually; there are Tithe and Church Rates, and immense sums from the State Taxes for Colonial Bishops, perpetually being drained from them; yet we hear of no strong opposition to all this; the feeling against Church Rates seems to be dead—certainly, it is sleeping; every Dissenter in the realm is daily paying for the teaching of "what he believes to be error." How is a statesman to hold the balance so as to ascertain the precise amount of error against which they will protest by denying payment? He has to govern for all, and even the errors of seven millions of fellow subjects must be respected, if their prejudices are conscientious, in order that the Empire may have peace. How many things do a people pay, for that no man of reason can approve? We pay for armies to plunder, and burn, and massacre; for navies to destroy the commerce of our neighbours; for destructive instruments of all kinds to spread around things much worse than theological error: what is the plea that justifies it? Necessity. You must do it or cease to exist as a nation! Civil liberty, peace, and the security of property, are surely worth some concession to each other's convictions in matters of belief. The reader of history reflects with a saddened heart on the violence and atrocities of the past; in the spirit of forbearance, taught by such calamities, the observer of the present should deplore the milder working of the same arrogance, which no longer slaughters and confiscates indeed, which would shrink from doing any individual the slightest injury in person or property, but which would still shut him out from participation in the benefits for which all Government is instituted.

The assertion that a permanent grant to a Catholic College is an infraction of our "Protestant Constitution," descends to a lower ground, and may be more lightly disposed of. The Protestant Constitution no longer exists; it has been extinct this fifty years. The only exclusively Protestant element of it is the very weakest—the Crown. The House of Lords is not all Protestant; the Commons are not wholly Protestant: we have Catholic generals and admirals, Catholic judges, Catholic lawyers, Catholic physicians, Catholic constituencies. The time has been when none of these were permitted; but that is past, and we must act as the present requires us. The State would not hesitate to trust the command of its fleets or armies to a Catholic—certain that the warrior's duty would be performed in life and death. The people place their health and property in the hands of the Catholic physician or lawyer, as confident of finding skill and probity as in men of any other belief. Is the State then forbidden to teach those on whom it calls to serve it? When the Constitution absorbed into it a Catholic nation, by an Act of Union, it forfeited the right, as it certainly lost the power, of legislating on exclusively Protestant principles. We ought not to have undertaken the trust of governing such a people at all, if we had invincible religious scruples against discharging the only conditions on which that Government was peaceably possible. Yet those scruples—or rather, worse and more sordid motives that covered themselves by the religious cloak—long and obstinately denied to our fellow-subjects every privilege of free-men. The civil disabilities of the Jews were mitigated long before the yoke was removed from the Catholic; and we have for ages supported the temples and priests of the foul, obscene, and degrading Paganism of India, while it is alleged that the Protestant Constitution cannot bestow a paltry grant on a college of Christian teachers in Ireland! The truth is the Protestant Constitution will do or deny any wrong or any justice which those who wield it choose to commit or to withhold. Our Protestant Constitution spent millions to bolster up the Catholic Bourbons and the power of the Pope, when the people of France scattered both to the winds, and the most Protestant of Kings told his Protestant people every session from the throne that it was "a just and necessary war." The most Protestant of Ministers now proposes "a just and necessary" measure, and the Protestant Constitution, having allowed so many enormous infractions of what is called the "Protestant Principle," will not be in the slightest degree violated by this trifling sum, which is devoted to a more pacific purpose than the millions of the army estimates.

BURNING OF THE BOWERY THEATRE, NEW YORK.

BURNING OF THE BOWERY THEATRE, NEW YORK.

This celebrated theatre, we learn by the last received news from the United States, has just been burnt for the fourth time! It appears that at a few minutes past six o'clock, on the evening of Friday, the 25th ult., the fire broke out in the carpenter's room attached to the theatre, which instantly communicated to the theatre itself, and, in three quarters of an hour, that fine edifice was a complete ruin, with nothing but the high walls and the massive columns standing. The inside of the building—scenery, furniture, wardrobe, machinery, &c. &c.—was entirely destroyed, and several of the performers, we understand, lost private dresses and properties, to considerable amounts. The evening's performances were to have been for the benefit of Mr. Davenport, and the actors and actresses were all in the building, just commencing to dress for the duties of the night. We are happy to state that every person in the theatre escaped in safety, although several of them with narrow risks of life and limb.

The scene in front, at the height of the conflagration, was magnificiently fearful and sublime. The Bowery, which is the broadest thoroughfare in New York, was densely packed with a crowd extending on either side of the theatre for a great distance, and numbering from fifteen to twenty thousand, while the roofs of the adjoining buildings, illuminated with an intense glare of red light, were covered down to the very eaves, with spectators. On the roofs adjoining, and in the immediate vicinity of the theatre, hundreds of firemen were seemingly insensible to the scorching heat of the flames or the danger of their position. As the flames burst out at the front windows and wreathed around the entablature resting on the lofty columns, the Saloon, with its rows of decanters, pictures, sofas, &c., presented a magnificent appearance. The sky glowed like a red-hot dome, while the air sparkled like a star-shower with the burning cinders, which flew in every direction, and were many of them carried by the fire-breeze, which immediately sprung up, flying over the roofs as far as Broadway.

In the street below, an indescribable tumult raged on every side. At first, the people rushed to the doors, burst them in, and completely jammed up the lobbies—why, no one thought or could tell. The firemen shouted to them to come back, and endeavoured to introduce their hose over the heads of the crowd, to see what could be done within, but they here effected little. The crowd obstinately maintained their places until the heavy entablature and tympanum—now all in bright flame—fell to the ground, breaking into fiery fragments and enclosing them with a wall of fire in front, while the burning theatre itself was at their backs! A general rush (happily successful) through the fallen and burning mass to the street ensued, amid the deafening shouts of the multitude.

The roof now gave way, and all fell in with a stunning crash. The fire then sought the neighbouring buildings on either side, and two hotels, and two coffee-houses, besides other houses, were more or less injured before the progress of the flames was arrested.

In the theatre nothing was saved, and we learn that there was no insurance on any part of the property or building. We are informed, also, that the ground cannot, according to the terms of the lease, again be occupied for the purpose of erecting a theatre.

This is the fourth time the Bowery Theatre has been burnt. First, in 1828, when it took fire about the same time in the evening, (6 o'clock) and was owned by Mr. Hamblin, who was partially insured. So vigorous were that gentleman's measures that in sixty days the theatre was rebuilt and in full operation. It again burnt down, we believe, in 1836 —was rebuilt, and again destroyed in the winter of 1837-8—the last two occasions without insurance.

We have received the following lines from a Correspondent:—

Ill-fated Temple of the Muse,
What heart of feeling can refuse
Its meed of pity for thy doom—
The fourth time to a fiery tomb
Condemn'd! Or was it Mischief's deed?
Envious to see thee so succeed!
If so, may early Vengeance' wrath
O'ertake the wretches in their path;
Where'er they roam about the world
Destruction on their guilt be hurl'd!
But if that Goddess we call Fate,
Laid low, and sad, and desolate
The Hall, where but some hours before,
Were Pity's sigh, or Laughter's roar,
We can but kneel all tranquilly,
And own the pow'r of Destiny! W.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

The principal subject of conversation in the salons of the haute volée, is the anticipated congress of crowned heads that is to take place in the good old city of Paris. Such a visitation would be a great coup for Louis Philippe—it would strengthen for a time the cord with which he is bound for the present with the ancient European thrones, and throw at the same time a bright halo around his family, which would glisten and scintillate in the eyes of the present day Frenchmen. The royal personages are to be the representatives of all the constitutional governments, and the meeting, it is said, will take place in July. The illustrious regalities will consist of the Queen of England, the young Queen of Spain, the King and Queen of Naples, and the King of Holland. Louis Philippe and his family are to do the honours of France and of Paris. The Duke and Duchess de Nemours are to meet her Britannic Majesty, whom it is expected will arrive the first. The Prince de Joinville is to meet the young Queen Isabella on the frontiers of Spain. The Duc d'Aumale will go to Marseilles to receive his uncle, the King of Naples, who is coming by sea, and whose intention it is to embark at Dunkirk. Independently of the Tuilleries, which is to be placed at the disposal of these august guests, the apartments formerly occupied at the Louvre by Henry IV., will be used for their accommodation. This apartment is to be re gilt and superbly furnished. Nothing, however, has been stated officially, and I place no great faith on the on dit, more especially as I have seen no corroborative testimony in any of your English newspapers.

A very simple accident was very near depriving us of the existence of our first tragic actress, Mdlle. Rachel. As she was driving to the theatre, the back of her carriage was stove in by the poles of a water cart; the concussion caused intense alarm to the daughter of Israel—her shrieks were piercing, and her entire appearance was the very picture of terror. After some slight delay, a conveyance was procured, and the French Melpomene, attended by her confidante, was driven to the Français, to excite the sympathies of the public by her exquisite impersonation of Virginie. In the present state of the drama, her loss would be fatal—her death knell would sound the destruction of the tragic stage. At present she has no competitor —there is no successor.

There is no end of the odd scenes which occur nightly at the doors of the various theatres—in no other city but Paris could such instances of barefaced roguery and meanness occur: the sale of forged orders, though watched by the Argus eyes of the police, still continue as largely as though no punishments followed the detection. These fellows watch the late comers, and, by their physiognomical skill, can tell at a glance whether the bate will take. A curious circumstance took place on Monday. A certain M. G. and his young wife were hastening to the Français—they arrived, unfortunately, rather late; they were assailed by a respectable elderly gentleman, who offered them stalls at half-price, as he was obliged to forego the pleasure of witnessing the performance, as he was suddenly called to the bed side of a dying friend. The tickets were purchased, and M. G. and his lady were pleased with what they esteemed a slice of good luck. Well, they offer their tickets—they are examined, and the man immediately consigns the astonished pair to the care of the "Sergent de Ville. They were conveyed to the bureau de commissaire, and were on the point of being committed, had the purchaser not sent for his friends to bear testimony to his character. You will ask how can such things occur? Each actor has the right to a certain number of orders, the sale of which is no secret. Now, in London, no actor would, under any circumstances, take money for his privileged orders; but here, despite the pseudo dignity of the artist, it is considered not infra dig to eke out his salary by such means.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers have been very dull during the week.

The Presse announces as probable the appointment of M. Bois le Comte to the post of French Ambassador to the Court of Rome.

Admiral Villaumez, the senior Vice Admiral of the French navy, and a Peer of France, died on Saturday, at his residence at Suresne, near Paris.

The Chamber of Deputies has been much occupied with the Northern Railroad Bill. The line recommend by the Government between Creil and St. Quentin, passing through Ham, has been rejected by the Chamber. The Government has also been compelled to acquiesce in the demand of the Opposition to indicate the exact line that the road is to take from Noyau to St. Quentin previous to the adjudication of it. On Monday M. Roger developed the amendment, in which he and his colleagues of the Departments of the North and the Pas de Calais, had recommended the establishment of an embranchment between Fampoux, near Arras, and Hazebrouck, which would place the harbours of Calais and Dunkirk in direct communication with Paris and the centre of France. M. Muret de Bord, contended in the name of the committee, that the branch in question would be of little use, and might injure the main road. M. Billault supported the amendment, on the ground that it would be of the greatest utility in accelerating the communication between Paris and Dunkirk, in the event of a war with England. The Minister of Public Works, who spoke next, proposed the adjournment of the question, and maintained that if the embranchment was imposed on the company or conceded to another, it would render the adjudication on the northern line very difficult. The Chamber, however, after hearing Messrs. Berryer and Vivien in defence of the amendment, voted the embranchment by a very large majority.

On Tuesday the Chamber of Deputies proceeded to the adjourned discussion on the Northern Railroad Bill. Mr. Muret de Bort said that the committee, after examining what changes the adoption of the amendment for the execution of the branch line from Fampoux to Hazebrouk ought to produce in the tariff of prices of the Creil and St. Quentin Bill, was of opinion that no modification was called for beyond fixing the caution money at 1,500,000 francs. This being agreed to, the tariff of prices for both lines was adopted. M. Muret de Bort then proposed, in the name of the committee, a clause which, in order not to give any advantage to Calais over Boulogne, or vice versâ, declared that neither line could reduce their fares without the same being done by the other. This stipulation was immediately voted. The discussion next turned on the duration of the concession, fixed by the Government at 45 years, and proposed by the committee to be reduced to 33. It was ultimately fixed at 41 years.

Our letters from Paris state that the health of M. Guizot is rapidly improving, and it is now confidently hoped that he will be able to attend to his parliamentary duties in the important business which is still to be brought forward during the session. The Count de Salvandy is also considerably better, but is still unable to leave his room.

The Débats states that the portion of the northern railroad between Paris and Beauvais is now in a state to receive locomotives, and in a month the passage to Amiens will be practicable. The Paris terminus, in the Clos St. Lazare, is almost terminated.

One of the Paris papers gives the following account of the effect produced by the adoption of the amendment of M. Roger for a branch between Fampoux and Hazebrouk:—"Scarcely had the President declared the amendment adopted, when the delegates from the department of the Pas de Calais fell into one another's arms, and tumultuously rushed to the Salle des Pas-Perdus, which the members for the North and Pas de-Calais were at the time entering. The latter were immediately seized and embraced. The ladies from Fampoux and Hazebrouk, unable to resist so much enthusiasm, fell into the arms of the hon. gentlemen. At length the emotion subsided, and the delegates, storming a table allotted to the officers of the Chamber, who draw up the reports of the discussions in the Committees, hastened with every paper and pen they could pounce upon, to transmit the glorious news to Fampoux and Hazebrouk."

THE BRAZILS.

The following letter from a correspondent at Rio de Janeiro, dated April 1, is important, as exhibiting the state of feeling in Brazil in regard to the Slave-trade. It also contains some other interesting items of news:—

"By the packet which leaves to morrow I send you a little news. The Firebrand steamer arrived yesterday after a voyage of thirty-five days from Plymouth. She brings London papers up to the 22nd of February. The speech of Lord Howick, on the 5th, has appeared in all the Brazilian papers, and has created a great sensation here; I have even been informed that the price of slaves has somewhat fallen in consequence. The price of cotton and rosewood immediately rose in the Exchange when the abolition of the duty on those articles was known.

"On the 26th the infant son of the Emperor and Empress, and heir to the Brazilian Empire, was baptised. The ceremony was performed with all the pomp and formality which the Romish religion enjoins on such occasions. The infant was borne from the Palace by the Mordomo Mor, or chief officer in the establishment of his Majesty, on a platform erected for the occasion, fancifully decorated; and richly carpeted, before him. The Officers and Ministers of State, in their robes, formed really a brilliant procession.

"The Chief Ministers of State, Salvao and Almeida Torres, acted as sponsors on the occasion; one on the part of his Majesty the King of the French, and the other on that of the Duchess of Braganza. The Royal infant has been named Alfonso Pedro Christino Leopoldo Philippe Eugenio Miguel Gabriel Raphael Gonzaga.

"The illuminations have been very general and brilliant. The Post-office, Treasury, Theatres, &c., being entirely covered with variegated lamps, and bands of music stationed in every street. The fair Brazilians have made the most of this opportunity, for, you must know, that on such an occasion only is it considered decorous for a lady to be seen in the streets; on the present occasion, however, all were abroad, and seemed to vie with each other in the splendour of their attire. The illuminations and rejoicings were continued five days.

"'To give you some idea of the state of public feeling, with regard to the Slave-trade, I extract the following paragraph from a Brazilian paper, published yesterday:—

"They (the English) think that by abolishing the traffic, and cutting off our supply of slaves, they shall stop the working of our plantations, and cause an increased demand for the productions of their own colonies. In one respect they are right; the manufacture and growth of our sugar depends entirely on our importation of Africans; and these, in spite of all that England can or has done, we will have. Her selfish policy may escape punishment, but it shall also be unavailing.'"

INDIA.

The Gazette of Tuesday night contains Major-General Sir C. Napier's dispatch to the Governor of India, dated Head-quarters, Camp, Shahpoor, 17th January, 1845, giving an account of his successful resistance to the unprovoked attacks made upon Scinde by the Doomkee, Jakraine, and Boogtie tribes. Those plunderers, he observes, had become harassing to the frontier posts. They are, however, subjects to the Khan of Kelat, but are in open rebellion against him. The report of the triumphant proceedings then follows. The postscript to this dispatch says—"Since writing the above some men have have been captured who were in the fight at Ooch; from these we have learned that about 45 were wounded and 40 killed; among the former is Deria Khan, the chief of the Jakrainees. He received a grape shot in his breast, and was dying. There were 700 men; they thought they had to deal with Wallee Mahomed Chandia, and were not aware we were there till the artillery opened. They had drawn up in battle array to fight, when Captain Salter charged."

ARRIVAL OF THE OVERLAND MAIL.

The half monthly Indian mail has arrived, with accounts from Bombay to the 5th of April, Calcutta to the 7th, and Madras to the 14th. Sir Charles Napier's expedition against the Pindarees has been entirely successful. Their leader, Bejar Khan, was captured. Matters were still very unsettled in the Punjaub. Just before the mail was despatched, there was again a report in circulation of the capture of Aden; but probably with as little foundation as before. The cholera prevailed in Calcutta, but not to any very serious extent. From China there was nothing new.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

Amendment of the Laws.—Lord Brougham introduced nine bills for the amendment of the civil and criminal jurisprudence of the country. After referring to the amendments that had been made in the various departments of the law since 1828, he pointed out the many defects that still existed, and which imperatively called for some remedy. With regard to the transfer of property, there was, under the present system, such an endless prolixity in every deed of sale, that independently of the enormous expense entailed upon the parties, there was a great and pressing danger of some error or omission which would vitiate the whole. He proposed to introduce a bill which would contain a short form, under which property could be legally and safely transferred; another bill with regard to leasehold property; and a third which would embrace the whole subject of mortgages, and place it upon a more equitable and intelligible footing. The next point to which he would address himself was the admissibility of evidence in courts of justice, with regard to which several amendments had been lately introduced. He proposed to go a step further, and to give a power of examining the parties in the cause themselves, under certain limitations and restrictions. He proposed also to introduce a bill to assimilate the law of England to that of Scotland in the case of declaratory actions, and a bill to enable the Crown, by Order in Council, to appoint certain central counties for which commissions should issue four times in the year, and to which criminals from other counties might be sent for trial. He also proposed a bill for amending the law of marriages, and one for securing the independence of Parliament, by preventing bankrupts or insolvents from sitting therein. Now that imprisonment for debt was abolished, he thought the Houses of Parliament should give up the privilege of not paying their debts. Why should members of Parliament be the only persons in the empire exempted from satisfying the just demands of their creditors. He should bring in a bill to make them liable to pay their debts out of their property, and subjecting them to punishment if they fraudulently made away with it. Lord Brougham concluded by moving that the bills should be read a first time. These are the titles of them:—"An Act for Securing the Real Independence of Parliament." "An Act for Facilitating the Conveyance of Real Property." "An Act for Amending and Declaring the Law of Marriage." "An Act for Giving a Remedy in Certain Cases by way of Declaratory Suits." "An Act to Facilitate the Granting of Leases." "An Act to Render the Assignment of Satisfied Terms Unnecessary." "An Act for the Admission as Evidence of Certain Official and other Documents." "An Act for Enabling Certain Parties to be Examined in the Trial of Civil Actions." "An Act for Furthering the Administration of Criminal Justice."—Very few peers were in the house, and the bills were read a first time, without discussion, Lord Campbell merely remarking that Lord Brougham seemed determined that all his propositions should not fail, as he came before the house with as many lives as a cat.—When the bills had been read, the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

The Privileges of the House of Commons.—The Solicitor-General, after referring to the late decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of Howard v. Gosset, recapitulated the circumstances of the case, with which our readers must be familiar. The judges, he said, having decided that the authority of the Speaker's warrant had been exceeded, the plaintiff could now take steps to obtain final judgment, when he would be empowered to levy the damages on the goods of the Sergeant. He therefore moved for a select committee, to whom the facts should be referred, with a view to their coming to some determination as to the course to be adopted. The motion gave rise to a discussion upon the privileges of the house, but it was eventually agreed to.

The Maynooth College Bill.—On the motion for the third reading of this bill, Mr. Ewart moved an amendment deprecating any religious endowment by the State. This amendment, however, was not pressed; but Mr. G. Bankes proposed one to the effect that the bill should be read a third time that day six months. He deprecated the measure in strong terms, said the people were against it, and assured Sir R. Peel that if he would dissolve the Parliament, there would be a majority against him at the next election. Mr Bankes said he feared the result of the present measure would be not only fatal to the Irish Protestant Church, but lead to the possibility of a Catholic successor to the throne. It was said at the battle of the Boyne, "Change your Kings, and we will fight the battle over again," and he would say to her Majesty's Ministers, "Change your Parliament, and we will contest the measure over again."—Sir R. Inglis seconded the amendment.—Mr M'Geachy, Mr. Mangles, and Mr. Escott, spoke in support of the bill —Mr. Spooner made an energetic speech against it.—Mr. C. Buller congratulated the Government upon the improved policy they were adopting towards Ireland, and thought every friend to the Union between the two countries ought to give the present measure, as well as that for the extension of academical education in Ireland, their cordial support.—Sir V. Blake also eulogised Sir R. Peel for the measures he had lately brought forward with regard to Ireland.—Lord Ingestre had voted against the former grant to Maynooth because he thought it too insignificant to be productive of any benefit; but he should vote in favour of the present measure, believing that it would promote the best interests of this country and of Ireland.—The debate was adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The Game Laws.—Lord Campbell presented several petitions complaining of the state of the Game Laws; and impressed on their lordships the necessity of a remedy for the evils to which these enactments gave rise.—Lords Hatherton and Stradbroke assented to the observations of the noble lord; and Lord Dacre stated his intention to bring in a bill on the subject.

At an early hour the house adjourned till Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

Trinity College, Dublin.—A long discussion took place on a motion of Mr. B. Osborne, for a "Return of all moneys derived from rents of college lands, endowments, bequests, fees on matriculations, and taking of degrees; specifying the amount of income paid therefrom to the senior and junior fellows, professors, scholars, and other officers of Trinity College, Dublin."—The motion was rejected on a division.

The Maynooth College Bill.—The adjourned debate was commenced by a speech from Sir H. W. Barron, in favour of the bill.—The interest excited by the discussion may be judged of from the fact that an attempt was made to "count out the house." There were about thirty members present at the time, but many came to the rescue from the lobby and dining rooms, and it was found that sufficient members were in attendance to constitute a house.—Mr. Lawson spoke against the bill, and Mr. Cholmondeley in favour of it.—The other speakers against the bill were Mr. Ffolliott, Mr. Shaw, and Sir R. H. Inglis.—Those who spoke in favour of it were Sir D. Norreys, Mr. Godson, Col. Rawdon, Mr. M. Gaskell, and Mr. Bellew.—Another adjournment of the debate was then agreed to, but rather reluctantly, a division having first taken place upon the question.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

Division on the Maynooth College Bill.—The adjourned debate on the third reading of the Maynooth College Bill was commenced by Col. Verner, who opposed the measure on religious principles, and said it would disgust the Protestant party in Ireland.—Lord H. Vane supported the bill, believing it to be just, and dictated by the best policy.—Mr. Colquhoun reiterated some of his former arguments against the bill, adding his opinion that there was little encouragement either as regarded the literature or the loyalty of those who had been hitherto educated at Maynooth, to the Parliament or the Government, to increase the grant and place the college on a permanent footing.—Mr. F. Mackenzie denied that he had sacrificed his principles to place, and asserted that no communication had taken place between himself and Sir P. Peel before his vote on the second reading of the bill. His late election speech, he said, had been misreported, and too much had been made of it. What he really said was, that he had voted against the smaller grant, because he thought it would do mischief; and that he voted for the greater, not because he thought it would do better, but because he thought it should be tried.—Mr. Wyse called upon the house to put an end to the petty differences which had been so long an effectual bar to the improvement of Ireland. The Catholics of that country were too numerous and influential to be any longer treated with contempt or neglect; and he doubted not the country at large would, ere long, feel the beneficial results of the more liberal policy which Sir R. Peel was now adopting towards Ireland.—Mr. Darby spoke against the bill.—Sir J. Graham, after some personal explanations in reference to Mr. Shaw and other gentlemen, said he believed the grant would be gratefully accepted in Ireland; and whatever the issue of the debate might be, he asserted that never was a measure propounded by a minister from a more conscientious conviction of its utility; and although many of his hon. friends disapproved of it, he felt that he should basely betray his duty if he had failed to press it upon the consideration of Parliament. —Mr. Sheil expressed his satisfaction at the speech of Sir James Graham. After a long defence of the principles taught at the college, Mr. Sheil said that in Ireland there had been no Protestant demonstration against the bill, and in England the opposition had been almost exclusively confined to the Dissenters; but he trusted the peace and welfare of the one country would not be sacrificed to the prejudices and passions of the other.—After speeches from Mr. Plumptre against the bill, and from Mr Sergeant Murphy in its favour, Mr. Ferrand warned the Government that, in the registration courts, they would be driven from power, as they had betrayed the Conservative party who had confided in them.—Captain Layard afterwards addressed the house in support of the measure, amidst very general marks of impatience — Lord F. Egerton trusted the sentiments of Mr. Ferrand and Mr. Plumptre would not be taken as those of the Protestants of England. If they were to carry out to its full extent the proposition that they were dealing with Ireland as a nation of idolators, he thought it would be better to abandon their dominion over it altogether.—Mr. Maclean thought the policy of the Government would lead to the destruction of the Conservative party, and shake the foundations on which the glory of that country was based.—Sir R. Peel in reply, after noticing several of the speeches against the bill, defended the course he had taken as a minister. He said, without reference to what may be the opinion of that man or this, I claim for myself the right to give to my sovereign, at any time, that advice which I believe the interests of the country require (hear, hear); I have not, on this occasion, nor have my right hon. friends, acted without deep consideration, and without feeling most severely the loss of the support, the permanent loss, perhaps, of the confidence of those who, it has been said, have placed us in power. I have been charged with having exhibited an indifference to public opinion on this question, and a disposition to disregard it; but for that public opinion, believing it to be influenced in the main by religious considerations, I have the highest respect (hear), but I retain the determination I have before stated, and now repeat, that so far from that expression of public opinion inducing me to abandon, or causing me to waver in my course—I deliberately repeat, that with every respect for that public opinion, there are high political considerations which induce me to adhere to the course we have adopted. (Hear, hear.) If I thought the opposition which has been raised to this bill were now to prevail—if I thought the principle on which the opposition was founded were to triumph, I should despair for the maintenance of amicable relations between Great Britain and Ireland. (Hear, hear.)—Lord J. Russell reminded the house that the efforts of the Government with which he was connected to improve the condition of the people of Ireland had been frustrated by the violent opposition of the other side of the house. He thought the next best thing he could do was to endeavour to support a Government which had the power to carry out the suggestions which had emanated from his own party. The noble lord ridiculed the idea of an Irish Parliament, which would only render the condition of that country ten times worse and more distracted. He hoped the Government would not stop short in its present career, and so long as they pursued a course of conciliation and justice they might rely upon the support of his side of the house.—After a few words from Mr. G. Palmer, impugning the conduct of Sir R. Peel, a division took place.

For the third reading	..	..	..	..	317
Against it	..	..	..	..	184
Majority	..	..	..	..	—133

The bill was then read a third time.—Mr. Duncombe then moved the introduction of a clause to limit the operation of the bill to the end of the session of 1848.—On a division the clause was negatived by 243 to 145, and the bill was then passed.—The house did not adjourn till past two o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

Many petitions were presented for and against the Maynooth College Bill.

Lord Brougham presented one of the former description from the Corporation of the mystery of Fishmongers. (Laughter.) That body was not only most respectable but most hospitable. (Great laughter.) They had large estates in Ireland, and they were the best landlords in that country.

The Late Condemned Sermon.—The Marquis of Clanricarde took the opportunity of stating, that, since the subject of admitting the public to be present at the condemned sermon had been mooted, he had made inquiries respecting the matter, and he was happy to say that the Sheriffs were entirely without blame in the admission of the public to see Hocker the day before his execution. It was the custom, and the Sheriffs had merely followed the plan of their predecessors. He must, however, at the same time, say that the practice of allowing strangers to be present to observe the deportment of an individual, at the very time when his whole energies should be directed to obtain spiritual improvement, was highly improper.

The Charitable Trusts Bill was read a second time, and the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

At four o'clock, there not being 40 Members present, the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

After the presentation of petitions, the Lord Chancellor complained of a right reverend prelate having moved a bill requiring the consent of the Crown, previously to five o'clock, the usual hour for commencing business.

Small Debts.—Lord Brougham said that the Debtor and Creditor Committee had come to an opinion upon the subject which had been referred to them, and had requested him to bring their report, together with the evidence, before the house. They desired him to report a bill for remedying the evils complained of (hear), and he had now great pleasure in laying on the table a bill for better securing the payment of small debts.—The bill was then read a first time.

The Maynooth Bill.—The Earl of Roden gave notice, that on the motion for reading the Maynooth Bill a second time he should move an amendment, that a select committee be appointed to inquire into the tenets and books taught at the College of Maynooth, and that the bill be referred to that committee.—The Duke of Wellington then rose and moved that the bill be read a first time, which was agreed to. His Grace then gave notice that he should move the second reading of the bill on Monday, the 2nd of June (hear).—The Marquis of Breadalbane presented a petition against any increased grant to the College of Maynooth, from the Conference lately assembled in London.—The Earl of Charleville complained of the short interval which was to elapse before the second reading of this bill. Their lordships would only sit four days before the second reading of the bill, which was far too short a period for the presentation of petitions. He trusted that at all events the second reading would be postponed until the 9th. The Duke of Wellington said the bill had now been more than a month under the consideration of Parliament, and he should not be doing his duty, if he did not persist in pressing the second reading on the 2nd of Jun . (Hear, hear.)

Railways.—Earl Fitzwilliam made a statement upon the subject of railways, and moved for a committee to inquire into the subject.—Earl Fitzwilliam's motion was ultimately agreed to, and the house adjourned at half-past seven.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

Several returns from different public offices were presented.

The Irish Great Western Railway (Dublin to Galway) Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed.

Mr. P. Howard moved that it be an instruction to the committee on the Glasgow, Dumfries, and Carlisle Railway Bill, to consider the petition of the Carlisle Canal Company. A discussion ensued, in which Mr. Greene, Mr. Gisborne, and Mr. W. Patten took part; after which (it was understood) the motion was agreed to.

A number of petitions in favour of and against certain railway bills were presented.

The report of the committee on the Great North of England Railway Bill (Richmond branch) was brought up and agreed to.

On the order of the day being read for the third reading of the Newcastle-upon-Tyne Coal Turn Bill, Mr. Warburton objected to the measure.—After a few observations from Sir G. Clerk, Mr. Warburton, and Mr. Metcalfe, Mr. Warren moved, as an amendment, that the third reading be postponed until this day week.—The amendment was agreed to without a division, and the third reading postponed for one week.

On the order of the day being moved for the second reading of the Lady's Island and Tacumshin Embankment Bill, Mr. Redington strongly opposed the bill, and moved as an amendment that it be read a second time that day six months.—After a few words from Mr. Sergeant Murphy, Lord Howick, and Mr. Redington, strangers were ordered to withdraw, and the house divided, when there appeared—

For the second reading	115
For the amendment	17
Majority	—98

The bill was then read a second time, and ordered to be committed.

The Lords' amendments to the Birkenhead Docks Company Bill were read and agreed to.

Blackburn, Darwent, and Bolton Railway.—After a short discussion, the motion for the third reading of this bill was withdrawn.

On the motion of Mr. Denistoun, the Glasgow Bridges Bill was read a third time and passed.

State of the Navy.—On the order of the day for going into Committee of Supply, Sir C. Napier entered into an examination of the state of our steam navy, and contended that some vessels were badly constructed, although an enormous sum of money had been expended for the purpose. He stated that France was increasing her navy, and was constructing fortifications and basins to receive steam vessels, although this was a time of profound peace.—Mr. Somes expressed his belief that our steam power was in a condition to go to war with any nation in the world. We might set the whole world at defiance.—Sir G. Cockburn said he had answered every point of the speech of Sir C. Napier over and over again.—After some discussion, the house went into Committee of Supply.—Several estimates for naval purposes were agreed to, and the house adjourned, at a late hour, till Monday.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.—Commons.

New Members.—On Monday Lord Loftus took the oaths and his seat as member for Woodstock, in the room of the Marquis of Blandford; and Sir W. W. Wynn as member for Denbighshire.

New Writ.—A new writ has been ordered for the county of Down, in the room of the Earl of Hillsborough, called to the House of Lords by the title of the Marquis of Downshire, on the death of his father, the late Marquis.

The Corn-Laws.—Mr. Villiers has given notice that he will, on Tuesday, June 3rd, bring forward his usual motion on the Corn-laws. Mr. Ward has also announced his intention to renew his proposal for a select committee to inquire if there be any peculiar burdens affecting the landed interest.

Notice of Motion.—On Friday Sir V. Blake gave notice that on June 10 he should move two resolutions, the first to the effect that the avowed enemies of Government ought not to be allowed to occupy the Ministerial benches. The second, to the effect that hon. members habitually using language not recognised in civilised society, he reprimanded from the chair; and, if found incorrigible, be forthwith expelled the house. (Great laughter.)

Call of the House.—On Friday Mr. Hume stated that, having learnt that there was a sufficient number of members to attend to the railway business, he should not persist in his motion for a call of the house.

Grand Junction Railway.—This bill has been thrown out, on a division on the question for bringing up the report, by 206 to 73.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Banquet at the Trinity House.—The festival of the Trinity Corporation was celebrated on Monday evening by a sumptuous entertainment at the Trinity-house, Tower-hill, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, the Master, presiding. In the forenoon the elder brethren, accompanied by his Grace, proceeded down the river in the Trinity state barges to Deptford, to inspect the Corporation alms-houses, and attend divine service at the old parish church, after which they returned in the same state as marked their arrival. The Duke, who was attired in the uniform of the brethren, was loudly cheered throughout his progress: and on his passing through the Tower to embark on board the barges, the whole of the troops stationed in the garrison were drawn out to receive him with all due honour as Lieutenant-Governor. The banquet was served up in the grand dining hall with much splendour, and amongst the principal guests, in addition to the illustrious chairman, were the Marquis of Camden, Marquis of Douro, Earl of Haddington, Earl of Dalhousie, Earl of Lonsdale, Earl of Ripon, Lord Stanley, Lord Wharncliffe, Lord Shaftesbury, Admiral Sir T. Bryan, Admiral Bowles, Admiral Dundas, Sir Howard Douglas, Sir Henry Wilson, Sir James Barrow, Sir Thomas Neave, Captain Sir J. H. Pelly, the Deputy Master; about 20 of the elder brethren; Major Elrington, the Deputy-Governor of the Tower; Colonel Gascoigne, Captain Beaufort, Deputy Chairman of the East India Company; Mr. W. Cotton, the Governor of the Bank of England; Mr. Robinson, chairman of Lloyd's; Dr. Lushington, and the Hon. and Rev. G. Wellesley. The company broke up at a rather early hour, the principal portion of the guests being invited to her Majesty's second grand state ball.

Banquet in the Temple.—On Wednesday evening a splendid entertainment was given by the benchers of the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple to a considerable portion of the benchers of Lincoln's Inn, the Inner Temple, and Gray's Inn. The dinner took place at six o'clock, in the body of the Middle Temple Hall. Covers were laid for upwards of forty. The chair was occupied by the treasurer, R. B. Crowder, Esq., and amongst the company were Sir L. Shadwell, the Vice-Chancellor of England; Sir Herbert Jenner Fust, Sir Frederick Thesiger, Sir John Dodson, Sir Charles Wetherell, Sir Robert Comyn, Sir Gregory Lewin, Sir William Owen, Messrs. Tinney, Stuart, Bethell, Simpkinson, Teed, Romilly, Jervis, Whatley, Chilton, Pollock, Alexander, Whitehurst, Temple, Burge, &c., Queen's Counsel, and several other leading members of the bar of the present day. The banquet was of the most recherché character, and the whole affair went off to the greatest satisfaction of all parties present.

Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, Brompton.—On Sunday morning last, a sermon on behalf of this truly excellent institution was preached at the church of St. Mary-le-Bow, before the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of London, by the Rev. Robert Montgomery, M.A., minister of Percy Chapel, Fitzroy-square. After a very eloquent and emphatic appeal to the congregation, the sum collected amounted to £45 7s. 3d. The new building now in progress at Brompton, and of which his Royal Highness Prince Albert laid the first stone in June last, will form a striking feature in the architectural improvements of the neighbourhood. A considerable sum, however, is yet required in order to its completion. F. J. Francis, Esq., of Bruton street, Berkeley-square, is the architect, and the Messrs. Birds, of Hammersmith, the builders.

Mortality in the Metropolis.—The number of deaths during the week ending May 17, was 835, exceeding that of the previous week by only six, and 53 less than the average of five springs. The virulence of diseases of the lungs and other organs of respiration is greatly abated, and under almost every other head the symptoms were favourable. The number of accidental deaths was 23, of which 10 were caused by burns and scalds, and no suicides.

ANALYSIS OF DIVISIONS ON SECOND AND THIRD READING OF THE MAYNOOTH BILL.

SECOND READING—FOR.		AGAINST.
Whigs	165	Whigs	31
Conservatives	159—324	Conservatives	147—178
Conservative Majority ..	12—Majority for		146
THIRD READING—FOR.		AGAINST.
Whigs	165	Whigs	35
Conservatives	148—317	Conservatives	149—184
Tory Majority against ..	1—Majority for		133

Mr. Raikes Currie was prevented by indisposition from voting for the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Ward intended to have voted on Mr. Duncombe's motion against the limitation of the grant to Maynooth, but he was accidentally shut out from the house on the gallery being cleared.

ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

THIRD NOTICE.

The Royal Academy Exhibition is still the most attractive sight of the London season. Sixty years since and it was the same. "On Monday, if I am told truth," says Dr. Johnson, "were received at the door one hundred and ninety pounds, for the admission of three thousand eight hundred spectators. Supposing the show open ten hours, and the spectators staying, one with another, each an hour, the room never had fewer than three hundred and eighty jostling against each other." This was during the thirteenth Exhibition of the Royal Academy, and in the year 1783. "The Exhibition prospers so much," Johnson adds, in another letter, "that Sir Joshua says it will maintain the Academy. He estimates the probable amount at three thousand pounds." Et vires acquirit eundo, was Johnson's motto for the second catalogue of the Royal Academy; and the propriety of the quotation, so far as money matters are concerned, will not admit of a doubt. The profit of one year's Exhibition was estimated, three years back, by the Academicians themselves, at about five thousand pounds. These particulars will be new to many of our readers, and not uninteresting at this exhibition-going period of the year.

When Mr. Redgrave became an Associate of the Royal Academy, he promised a great deal more than he has since made good. We have seen nothing of his in sentiment and story at all equal to an early picture of his from the "Vicar of Wakefield," now at Mr. Vernon's. In point of execution he has infinitely improved. He is too apt, however, to repeat himself; and "The Governess" of this year's Exhibition is a copy of "The Poor Teacher" of a prior year, with a new background of skipping-ropes and girls. The painter's excuse will, in all probability, be that it is a commission—a second Mr. Hippisley would have a second "Poor Teacher; and, as those that live to please must please to live, he was compelled to paint it, or lose the commission altogether. But a fickle public never takes circumstances into consideration; and, when a new picture was expected from an improving painter, and all that is got is an old friend with a new face, people are apt—too apt, perhaps—to turn disappointedly away, and with a snuff and an air, denoting that we have nothing here but the old story over again. Patrons like to see their purchases on the walls of the Royal Academy Exhibition, and people are too apt to think that a picture, however admirable, is only a crude and hasty performance which they cannot trace to a number in an Academy catalogue. A deserving artist is too often injured in this way by the pertinacity of his patrons—he is losing a whole season, and becoming proficient in nothing but the mechanism of his art.

When painters step for subjects from scenes of domestic life to the pages of a sublime poet, they make a long march onward in the right path, and we are always glad to give the painter a lift who puts in this way his talent to the touch. But when we see such poor embodiments of the finer creations of a poet's mind as Mr. Redgrave's "Affrighted Sempstress on a Rock"—meant, we are told, for Miranda in "The Tempest"—we really regret the step forward, and would wish to see Mr. Redgrave employed once more on subjects of a less ambitious description.

A Royal Academician, a Royal Academician elect, and a young expectant for Academic honours, have each tried their hand at subjects of importance from the page of English history. We refer to Mr. Hart, R.A.; Mr. C. Landseer, R.A. elect; and Mr. A. Johnson. Mr. Hart has chosen the "Farewell Interview of Sir Thomas More and his Daughter;" Mr. Landseer, "The Eve of the Battle of Edge-Hill;" and Mr. A. Johnson, "Tillotson Administering the Sacrament to Lord William Russell in the Tower the Day before his Execution." The More as Roper describes it, is a touching scene,

Something too high for syllables to speak;

but Mr. Hart is hardly up to it. Mr. Herbert was much happier in the same subject a few years back. Nor have we much to say in commendation of Mr. Landseer's picture. The King was on the eve of fighting his first battle with his people; the Earl of Lindsey, his general, had served under Gustavus Adolphus; and he had others around him that had been used to wars. But the King in Landseer's picture is more intent on a piece of roast beef and a foaming tankard on his left, than he is on the map of the field of Keynton that is held before him. Shakspeare makes Richard III., on the eve of the battle of Bosworth, fight imaginary battles in his sleep; and Edward Kean in the tent scene in the play, used to describe imaginary movements with his sword upon the ground. But the King in Landseer, holds the map of Keynton like a bill of fare, and looks altogether unconscious that he is on the eve of fighting a battle with his own people. There are parts, we must add, of Mr. Charles Landseer's picture, that are very beautifully painted, and all is evidently there that art in the absence of genius can supply. If Landseer is deficient, as we think, in a direct individuality of purposes in his picture, Mr. Johnson, in his Lord William Russell, is altogether otherwise; he goes direct to his point. Tillotson is reading the Communion Service with a full sense of the importance of the occasion, and of the contrite heart of the person to whom he is administering it: Lord William Russell is kneeling in close communion with himself and with his God; while his wife kneels by his side, and looks, with affection and resignation, more than she could well utter. There is but one figure in the picture that is bad, and that we unhesitatingly state is very bad; we allude to the figure of Burnet in the back-ground. It is not only ill-contrived and ill-expressed, but unlike Burnet, and untrue to him; the Bishop was never in the back-ground in any matter. The observant historian of his own time is actually represented indifferent to the striking ceremony before him.

Young Mr. Goodall is said to be a rising painter, and so he is; but then Mr. Goodall sends his best pictures to the British Institution, and his second best to the Royal Academy. We do not quarrel with him for the selection he has made. He is hung well (as the painters call it) at the British Institution, and indifferently hung at the Royal Academy. It was hardly fair, however, in the Royal Academicians to bring him into such close juxta-position with Webster;—to hang his worst picture in a bad light, beneath Webster's best in a good light. We remember to have heard of a similar piece of meanness being played off by a Royal Academician upon Wilkie when a boy. But there was no keeping Wilkie down, nor will Mr. Goodall be kept down but by himself. The painter of the "Connemara Market Girls," in the present Exhibition, has only to take common care of himself to achieve permanent distinction in his art. Mr. Egg has been used still more unfairly than Mr. Goodall; and Mr. Herring may complain that his only picture (and from what we can see, it is a clever one) is hung nearer the ceiling than the floor, and in the Octagon Room, too, where a Jew would have hard work to distinguish a precious stone from a common counterfeit.

There was a period in British Art when painters were unwilling to admit that Hogarth was a painter. Northcote was of this opinion, but Mr. E. M. Ward would appear to be of a very different way of thinking. In his "Scene in Lord Chesterfield's Ante-room," he has studied Hogarth to good purpose. "Seven years, my lord, have now past," says Johnson, in his famous letter to Lord Chesterfield, "since I waited in your outward rooms, or was repulsed from your door." This is the subject of Mr. Ward's very characteristic picture. Some of the figures are very good; but never was nobleman troubled with such a levee of applicants in an outer hall as Mr. Ward has assigned to the celebrated Lord Chesterfield. Some little excuse must, however, be made for the man who does too much, and this has been Mr. Ward's fault. His figure of Johnson is full of firm and surly independence, and the clergyman yawning as he goes out, a happy recollection of Hogarth, in his second best manner. We wish we could add that Mr. Ward had done full justice to what painters call the accessories of a picture. The two portraits upon the walls of the outer room would, with Hogarth, have helped the story out; the very ornaments on the clock would have indicated something to make the meaning clearer.

Simson and Fraser studied under Wilkie, and the works of both exhibit a good deal of their friend and master's eye for colour and arrangement. But Simson should elongate some of his figures, and put more mind into some of his heads; and Fraser forsake a certain streakiness of colour, before it becomes a bad habit which he cannot abandon. Simson's "William Tell" is good in parts, and the "Robinson Crusoe" of Fraser, the best picture of his which we have seen for years.

Art was never more encouraged among us than it is at this moment—perhaps it was never so well understood as now. Nor is it too much to say that, at the close of the five annual Exhibitions of Modern Masters (as they are called) for the last five years, it would be hard to meet with a deserving picture leaving the Exhibition Room unsold. Patrons are more numerous and discerning than they were; a new class of purchasers has come forward; and the subscribers to the Art-Union sweep with a drag-net all that remains. Common people are more alive to the beauties of true art than they were; and the wants of a Cartoon or the peculiar requisites for a Fresco are becoming very generally understood. All who are interested in the advancement of art will be glad of this. As the Editors of an Illustrated Paper, in which much art of a sterling character will be found, we certainly rejoice at the spread of true taste through the whole length and breadth of the three kingdoms.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Tragical Duel near Gosport.—A duel was fought on Tuesday night, near Gosport, under the following circumstances:—The combatants were Mr. Seton, late of the 11th Hussars, and Second Lieutenant H. C. M. Hawkey, of the Royal Marines. It appears that at a soirée held at the King's-rooms, on Southsea-beach, on Monday evening, Mr. Seton paid somewhat marked attention to the wife of Lieutenant Hawkey, and was afterwards, in the public room, insulted by Mr. Hawkey, who called him a blackguard and a villain, and told him if he would not fight him, he would horsewhip him down the High-street of Portsmouth. At the time these words were used, Mr. Seton was endeavouring to leave the ball room, when Lieutenant Hawkey, who was sitting upon a sofa, rose, and attempted to kick him as he passed. The consequence may be anticipated. A meeting was arranged, and at five o'clock on Tuesday evening the combatants met at Stokes-bay, near Fort Monckton, opposite Ryde, on the Gosport shore. Lieutenant Byron G. Rowles, R.N., acted as second to Mr. Seton; and Lieutenant Edward L. Pym, of the Royal Marines, was second to Lieutenant Hawkey. The combatants having arrived, the ground (15 paces) was measured, and the principals having been placed, the word was given, when Mr. Seton fired and missed his antagonist. The pistol of Lieutenant Hawkey was placed in his hand by his second at half-cock, and consequently Lieutenant Hawkey did not have his shot. Other pistols were, however, supplied to the combatants, the word was again given, and both fired. Mr. Seton immediately fell. Lieutenant Hawkey, without waiting to see the result of his fire, or going up to his antagonist, immediately fled with his second, saying, "I'm off to France." Mr. Seton was conveyed on a shutter on board a yacht in waiting, and brought about half-past nine o'clock on Tuesday night to the Quebec Hotel, on the water's edge. Surgical assistance was called in, and it was discovered that Mr. Seton had been wounded dangerously on the right side of the abdomen, the ball passing through and coming out on the left side. Whether the wound is mortal or not, the surgeons have not yet given an opinion. Mr. Seton is married, and has one child. It appeared that the seconds never interfered after the first fire to adjust the cause of quarrel. Mr. Seton is a fine-looking man, aged 28; Lieut. Hawkey is about 26. Mr. Seton has retired from the 11th Hussars about eight years. Mr. Hills, chemist, of Broad-street, Portsmouth, sat up with Mr. Seton the whole night. The flow of blood was very great. Mrs. Seton was with her husband the whole of the day. At five o'clock on Wednesday evening Mr. Seton was pronounced rather easier, although but slight hopes are entertained of his recovery. He was at that time lying in a very dangerous state.

A Cotton Factory Destroyed at Burnley.—Yesterday week, late in the evening, the entire fire proof cotton mill at Burnley, belonging to Messrs. Lord and Co., was completely destroyed by the explosion of a steam-boiler, attached to the machinery of the mills. The springing of a mine could not have more effectually completed the work of destruction. Not a vestige of the whole building was left standing, with the exception of about two yards of the north-east angle. The damage is estimated at about £3000, and a providential circumstance connected with it is, that all the hands had left off work, otherwise the loss of life must have been very considerable. Several practical engineers, who have since inspected the wreck of the boiler, have given their opinion that the explosion was caused by its being overcharged.

The Accident at Yarmouth.—The jury were re summoned last Saturday afternoon, in consequence of the body of Louisa Utting, a child six years old, having been found near the gas meter, on the evening of the same day. The child's head and body were frightfully mutilated. The body was identified, and proved to have been on the bridge by her mother, and a sailor proved the fact of picking it up. An adjournment took place till Wednesday, when Mr. James Walker, the engineer sent down by Government, was examined at length. The result of his investigations appeared to be that the quality of the iron of the bridge was defective, and that the immediate cause of the accident was a defect in the joint of the bar that gave way. The following special verdict was returned:—"That the deceased, Louisa Utting, came to her death by the falling of the Suspension-bridge across the river Bure, on the 2nd May last, and that the falling of the bridge was attributable immediately to the defect in the joint or welding of the bar that first gave way, and to the quality of part of the iron and workmanship, being inferior to the requirements of the original contract, which had provided that they should be of the best quality."

Child Murder at Manchester.—A woman named Isabella Pilkington, who lived near Wheat-hill-street, Salford, about ten o'clock on Monday night was observed to leave home, carrying her infant child in her arms. In about half an hour afterwards a young man, who was taking a walk along the bank of the river Irwell, observed some object in the middle of the shallow water. He immediately called out, that if she did not come out of her own accord he would send in his dog for her. In the course of a short time Pilkington came out of the river. She was thoroughly drenched with water, having been overhead in the river. Upon being questioned she admitted that she had taken her infant along with her into the river, and had dropped it into the stream. Drags having been procured, search was made for the body of the infant, but without effect. She was brought up next day at the Salford Town Hall, when the above facts having been stated in evidence, she was remanded. On the next examination the jury found a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against her; at the same time expressing their opinion that she was of unsound mind. The prisoner, who is a married woman, has only lived in the neighbourhood about five weeks, and is about 35 years of age. Her husband is a mechanic out of employment. He left home in search o work on Sunday morning last.

IRELAND.

Her Majesty's Visit to Ireland.—Another change has come over Mr. O'Connell's spirit in regard to the proposed visit of her Majesty to Ireland. He made a speech at the Repeal Association on Monday, withdrawing his determination to force a Repeal demonstration upon her Majesty, and evincing a conciliatory disposition. He adverted to the report of the proceedings which took place at a late interview between Sir James Graham and the deputation from the Dublin Corporation, which went over to invite her Majesty to visit Ireland. He commented upon the observations of Sir J. Graham, and said the cause of the change of language used in the Association was owing to the offensive speech of Mr. Macaulay. He (Mr. O'Connell) had now to say that if the Queen came to Ireland she shall be treated with every mark of respect and affection which her high rank entitles her to. She would see or hear nothing that was not intended to honour her and give her joy. (Hear, hear.) The Repeal agitation should not be abandoned during her stay, but it would be mitigated in such a way as to save her Majesty from any unpleasant feelings on the subject. Mr. O'Connell also disapproved of the apathy about Repeal, and made suggestions to advance the cause. He advised that every county, city, town, and borough, should register as many Repeal voters as possible; that every county, city, town, parish, and hamlet, should have petitions for the Repeal ready by the 1st day of next Session of Parliament. They would have 2,000,000 of signatures on the table of the House of Commons, and thus show the entire empire the feeling of this country. The Association would prepare the petitions in the meantime, and their adoption would stimulate the collection of the Repeal rent through the country. They would place from three to five petitions every day on the table of the house, and thus keep the question constantly before the Legislature. He was encouraged to hope for speedy success, by what he saw passing around. He saw a great dispute between England and America, respecting the Oregon territory—that dispute was anything but settled, and it was manifest there must be an abject submission on the part of England or America, or a desolating war. He wanted England to be prepared for the worst—he wanted England to enlist the Irish nation in her cause, and then she might set America and all the rest of the world at defiance. For the first time since the Union they had a Government that was aware of the great advantages to the empire by conciliating Ireland. (Hear, hear). Sir Robert Peel was making exertions to bring about some good measures—some certainly were not very happy; but still he was entitled to credit for good intentions. They would call upon him to extend corporate reform, to extend the elective franchise, and, in short, to remedy the palpable grievances so often stated in this Association; but the real remedy for all the evils of Ireland was to be found only in an Irish Parliament.

HER MAJESTY RECEIVING THE KEYS, AT PORTSMOUTH.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

The illustration shows an interesting scene during the recent Royal Visit—the Lieutenant-Governor of the Garrison Presenting the Golden Keys to her Majesty, on her Landing at the Royal Clarence Yard from the Isle of Wight; sketched on the spot by a Correspondent. The Royal party having alighted, Major-General Pakenham knelt, and presented the keys to the Queen, who, with a gracious smile, returned them to the safe custody of the gallant Lieutenant-Governor. This ceremony over, her Majesty, the Prince Consort, and their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and Princess Royal, entered the Royal carriage in waiting.

AUSTRALIAN ANT-EATER, ROYAL ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.

We have had frequent occasion, in this journal, to call public attention to animals remarkable for peculiar local adaptations of structure, contrived for their comfort by the benificent wisdom of the Creator, or otherwise popularly interesting, from singularity of habit, or splendour and beauty of appearance. But none of them have equalled in interest a recent arrival in the Zoological Gardens, Regent's-park. The Echidna Hystrix—the Ant Eater of Australia—about whose naturalisation so many ingenious papers have been printed, and for which so many ingenious contrivances have been arranged—has at last arrived there; but, unfortunate to relate, only survived his domiciliation the brief period of three weeks; and, at the present moment, has left nothing to posterity but his skin, in testimony of having dwelt among us. Our engraving presents a very accurate and characteristic portrait of him, as he was seen on his first arrival.

The singularities of structure which characterise the Echidna are found chiefly in the elongated muzzle, and the worm-like retractile tongue, by which the nose of the animal is made to answer the purpose of a spy—a searcher for the ants on which it lives, and, at the same time, a trap for their capture; and also in the digging feet, by which the burrows made to protect the helpless animal are excavated. These points are brought prominently into view in the engraving.

The local haunts of the Echidna, as far as they are at present known, are the Blue Mountains, the environs of Port Jackson, and Van Diemen's Land.

The food of the Echidna of the Gardens, was, we believe, composed chiefly of egg chopped small, with a small intermixture of meats. Its mode of eating has been described to be most singular; the tongue being used in the manner of a chameleon, or in the way in which a mower uses his scythe, and the food swept by its action into the mouth either directly, or by an oblique movement. An adhesive matter appeared to be spread over the surface of the tongue, by which the food was attached and drawn in.

AUSTRALIAN ANT-EATER, AT THE [illegible] ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

ARISTOCRATIC MARRIAGE.—On Saturday last the marriage of Lord Algernon St. Maur, second son of the Duke of Somerset, and Miss Horatia Morier, third daugther of Mr and Mrs. Morier, was solemnised at St. George's Church, Hanover square.

NOVEL USE OF LITHOGRAPHY.—On Tuesday a handbill appeared containing the portrait of a gentleman said to be missing from Dublin. It is well executed, and, if like the person, must greatly aid the police in the endeavours to trace him. This plan no doubt will be generally adopted, where practicable.

WILL OF THE LATE MARQUIS OF WESTMINSTER.—Probate of the will and six codicils of the Marquis of Westminster, late of Eaton Hall, in the county of Chester, who died on the 17th of February last, was granted on the 15th instant to the Most Honourable Richard, Marquis of Westminster, the son, one of the executors, a power being reserved to the Dowager Marchioness, the executrix, to prove hereafter. The personal estate in England, and within the province of Canterbury, sworn under £350,000. Bequeaths to his wife an annuity of £6500, in addition to her property under settlement; bequeaths his estates at Westminster and the manor of Ebury to his eldest son, the present marquis; to his son, Thomas, Earl of Wilton, he devises his estates in the counties of Chester, Flint, and Denbigh, to be freed from any incumbrances, and bequeaths to him the presentation to the rectory of Prestwick, Lancashire. To his son, Lord Robert Grosvenor, his Moor Park estate, and a legacy of £170,000. Leaves the pictures, &c., in the gallery and elsewhere, at Grosvenor House, together with the Nassuck diamond, weighing 357 grains, the magnificent brilliant earrings, weighing 223 grains, and the round brilliant, weighing 125 grains, as heir-looms. Also, the pictures at Eaton Hall, as heir-looms with that property. Bequeaths to the present marquis the furniture and other moveables at Eaton Hall, and also the family jewels, and appoints him residuary legatee. The will is of some length, dated September 4, 1840, signed, "Westminster;" witnesses, John Boodle and William Rand. The sixth and last codicil is dated February 3, 1845, confirming the will.

FASHIONS FOR JUNE.

The very focus and centre of all discussions of toilette at the present moment is the approaching Royal Fancy Ball, which will present a living picture of society as it was a hundred years ago, and at which the beauty, the wit, and the tournure of the courtly beaux and belles of that brilliant period will be revived in their descendants. Let us leave, however, the special characteristics of the costumes to the grand oracles of the day, Vouillon and Laure; still the prevailing idea has affected even the dress of those who do not belong to the favoured few invited, and the novelties in vogue, especially for evening costume, all bear some affinity to those of the chosen period. Thus the brocaded silk, with point lace flounces, opening over an under-skirt of satin, with long pointed waist and jewels blazing on the corsage, are now in the highest favour. The lighter dresses of young unmarried ladies, in crape or in gauze, are now embroidered in gold, silver, or coloured silk; the increased magnificence of all evening costume, the profusion of jewels and embroidery employed, taking their origin from the prevailing taste of that epoch. The head-dresses of young persons still principally consist of those most charming and appropriate ornaments, flowers, which are daily made in greater perfection. The form of the wreaths worn, in which an admixture of jewels is frequently admitted, must vary with the style of face they are destined to adorn. Amongst the favourite are the "Norma" or "Druid" wreath, with oak leaves and ears of corn, frequently made in diamonds; the "Ceres" wreath, in which the corn-ears are mixed with blue-bells and cowslips; the garlands, in which roses, dahlias, and anemones alternate with each other and the grape wreaths, with large bunches of white and red grapes, and large leaves.

FASHIONS FOR JUNE.

Another reminiscence of a bygone period is offered by the new mantelet "à la Marie Antoinette," which has replaced the shawls of the earlier season, and fortunately quite extinguished all remembrance of the Cardinals and Polka mantles, so ungraceful and unbecoming. The form of the new mantle is extremely simple; it is chiefly made in black, with a quilling of ribbon, or trimming of black lace, or in a dark coloured glacé silk—occasionally also in blue, in sea green, or in Persian lilac.

The Pamela, varying slightly with each fair face it adorns, is still the prevailing form of bonnet. The weather is yet too cold for the constant wear of capotes of tulle; but several élégantes have nevertheless ventured to sport this light and becoming form of bonnet, on days when the sun has shone more brightly than usual. The capotes of tulle are trimmed on each side with large rosettes of the same material, which is mixed with satin on those of crape or gauze. As to straw bonnets, their vogue is so universal that the elegance of form and manner of trimming become of greater importance than ever, as a mark of distinction, and no prudent belle would venture now on wearing one whose form had not received the sanction of good authority. The open fancy straw bonnets are frequently trimmed with a Jardinière wreath, composed of anemones; and the lining in crèpe lisse, must be of a bright and decided colour. The paille de riz, which are, as well as the Leghorn, always in fashion, and always in good taste, are now frequently trimmed in folds of crèpe of several shades, and a single feather in white, pink, blue, cherry-colour, or lilac; for young ladies, the feather is replaced by a laurel flower, with broad and open leaves. Every bonnet is now edged with three or four small folds of tulle or gauze of the colour of the trimming. The shades of flowers which ornament them are matched by corresponding hues of ribbon, which are placed on the bonnet in such a manner that the gradations of colour, from the darkest to the lightest, follow each other in perfect order, producing a charming effect: in fact, ribbon for every kind of trimming is in great request. Little caps for the morning costume are much worn. They are usually made in embroidered muslin, trimmed with Valenciennes, or Lisle lace; fluted ribbon in different colours, strong contrasts, such as blue, orange, and pink, or dark green, lilac, and cherry colour, are in great favour.

FASHIONS FOR JUNE.

Many are the novelties in dresses for morning wear, or the promenade. Of these, one of the most successful is in French cashmere (poil de chèvre) of a buff colour, embroidered in shaded lilac or green, or in brandebourgs of the same colour as the material. These dresses are usually made with flounces; silks with Bayadère stripes in cérise and sea-green, lilac and violet, or China rose and light pink, on a white ground—in plain silk glacé, lilac and green, blue and pink amaranth and brown, are in great request for the promenade. The skirts of these dresses are usually plain, or trimmed with ribbon up the front, with Grecian corsage—the sleeves open at the wrist, rather short, terminating by two puffings of the same material as the dress, with under sleeve of embroidered muslin. Grenadines, with horizontal stripes in green, blue, or lilac and white, are in great vogue for morning visits or carriage drives, and deservedly, for this material is exquisitely soft and transparent, and at the same time rich and effective. The skirts are usually trimmed with five rows of light fringe, shaded in the same colours as the dress, the uppermost row reaching nearly to the waist. The body is tight and pointed with three front seams and side pieces, the sleeves opening half way up to the elbow, with a half sleeve of embroidered muslin, with insertions, and lace ruffles.

MYSTERY ANTAGONIST. BELVIDERE. VIXEN. PRIMA DONNA.

THE ROYAL THAMES YACHT CLUB MATCH, ON SATURDAY LAST.—DRAWN BY N. M. CONDY, ESQ.

THE ROYAL THAMES YACHT CLUB MATCH.

FIRST CLUB MATCH OF THE SEASON

A wet sheet and a flowing sea,
A wind that follows fast,
And fills the white and rustling sail,
And bends the gallant mast.
And bends the gallant mast, my boys,
While like the eagle free,
Away the good boat flies, my boys,
And merry men are we!

It was this day week, and the 17th of this instant merry month of May, that the pleasure mariners of the river Thames opened their regular campaign, and entered upon their nautical existence, proper. Some brief time before they had a skirmish for a cup given by Lord Saye and Sele—or "say and sail," as a reprobate punster would probably put it, because the match was made at the instance of that noble lord; the progress and result of which were duly chronicled in these columns. This passage at naumachia, however, was pronounced a very unsatisfactory one—by the losers; which nobody, indeed, can doubt it was. This said his craft was "overballasted;" that asserted his trim was faulty; this protested his boat was too much by the head; that insisted his was too much by the stern; all swore (we're afraid they did), or at all events most energetically stated, that they could win, only give them time to come to the post "ship shape."

R. T. Y. C. MATCH.—DRAWN BY N. M. CONDY, ESQ.—THE "ANTAGONIST" AND "MYSTERY" TOWED OFF BY THE WATERMAN STEAMER

The effects of the Belvidere Cup race were to set the imaginations of the beaten skippers on the rack for improvements. The yacht of that ilk, built by Lord Alfred Paget to replace his Mystery, had her mast "unstepp'd" and shifted more aft; the spars of the Prima Donna were scraped down; in short, the whole fleet had been "overhauled," and now showed off Greenwich as fresh as paint. The morning was unpropitious—in reference to silk bonnets and satin parasols — but promised well for the matter in hand, as there was a brisk wind and that freshness of the air which boded well for its continuance. The hour fixed for the departure of the steam-boat appropriated to the use of members of the Club and their friends from London-bridge was nine A.M., which, at the best, is an unseasonable one, and, on this occasion, quite too early, as the match did not commence till noon. The usual preliminaries being gone through, as the clock of the Hospital tolled twelve, the signal gun rung out, and the following clipping little fleet got under way in truly yachting fashion.

FIRST CLASS.

Yachts.	Tons.	Owners.
Prima Donna	25	C. R. Tatham, Esq.
Mystery ..	25	Viscount Seaham.
Belvidere	25	Lord A. Paget.
Vixen ..	25	J. and J. Heighington, Esqrs.
Antagonist	25	H. Gunston, Esq.

SHREWSBURY RACES.

SECOND CLASS.

Cygnet	..	..	10	B. N. Williams, Esq.
Charm	..	..	12	G. P. and I. W. Smith, Esqrs.
Wave	..	..	10	Thos. Howard, Esq.
Dolphin	..	..	10	T. and I. M. Wanhill, Esqrs.

The prizes, it is meet to say in anticipation of the contest for them, were three very elegant silver-gilt cups, variously embellished with emblematic devices, the chief of them being the reward of the winning boat of the first class, the second of the winning boat of the second class, and the third of the second boat of either class. The wager boats were lying in their respective berths abreast of Greenwich Hospital, when the signal gun for starting was fired as aforesaid, and—

"All hands unmoor," proclaims a boisterous cry;
"All hands unmoor," the ready crews reply.
Along the slippery masts the yards ascend,
And high in air the canvass wings extend;
Redoubling cords the lofty canvass guide,
And through inextricable mazes glide.

This is the heroic-poetic way of describing the scene. To give a homely sketch of it, as soon as "up stick" was the word, men and masters went to work with a will; and, in a minute after casting off, the squadron was bearing down stream gallantly to the tune of "Off She Goes," gaily ringing from the brass band of the Club stationed on board the steamer. The Antagonist had the best of the start, and in running from Blackwall to Woolwich, was evidently the best handled of the lot. The Mystery was second, the Belvidere third, the Vixen fourth, and the Prima Donna last, having carried away some of her top gear, and thereby lost time. Off Woolwich the Dolphin was first of the little ones, with the Wave next her, and all cracking on like flying Dutchmen. Nearly in this form they rounded the flag-buoy off Coal House Point, about a couple of miles below Gravesend:

1. Antagonist	55 min past 2	5. Vixen	1 min past 3
2. Mystery	55½ min past 2	6. Dolphin	5 min past 3
3. Belvidere	56½ min past 2	7. Charm	5 min past 3
4 Prima Donna	58 min past 2	8 Wave	8 min past 3

As a passage of seamanship, it must be confessed the rounding of the buoy was very differently performed by the wager boats, or their crews. The Antagonist gave it a berth perfectly unnecessary, so far as she was affected by her course; while the Belvidere shaved it with the elegance of Jim Robinson skimming Tattenham Corner. And now the tug of war commenced in earnest. The wind was dead on end, and there was a good hour more of ebb to count on. "Steer small!" was the word—and the slack of the tide the place to work in. So soon as the buoy was turned, each vessel bore up for the weather shore, and who should hug Essex the closest seemed the question of death or victory. Just at this time things went wrong, a trifle, on board the steamer. She had forgotten to "bout ship" when she ought, and was drifting, broadside on, half-a-mile below the buoy, when the interest of the affair demanded her presence elsewhere. However, she had begun to make running after the first division of the fleet, and the leading craft hove in sight abreast of a sort of elbow of the shore, which juts out a mile or so below Tilbury, when the eyes of those who kept them in sight, beheld the Antagonist and Mystery go slap ashore, as if the design of the cockswains was to show which could perform that manœuvre in the most masterly manner. The Belvidere, hereupon, of course, was "kept away," and, with the Prima Donna and Vixen in her train, which succeeded the Dolphin and other little ones, spanked away for Greenwich and glory. We were now alongside the grounded yachts which lay vero to leeward, locked together like wrestlers who had fallen in the death grip? . . . . . .

O were it mine, with tuneful Maro's art
To wake to sympathy the feeling heart:
Like him the smooth and mournful verse to dress,
In all the pomp of exquisite distress:
Then might I with unrivalled strains deplore
The treacherous horrors of that—Essex shore.

"Then rose from sea to sky"—the eloquence of row! A very pretty quarrel, as it stood, seemed in course of discussion; but as another smoky convenience—Waterman No. 13,—went to the rescue, we sped on our watery journey, and left the consequence to settle itself. The rain, however, was now over—the Belvidere held her lead all the way up, and finished by passing the goal at forty-four minutes past six, and winning by twelve minutes. The Vixen was second, and consequently winner of the third prize. The victorious craft of the small fry was the Dolphin; she reached Greenwich at eleven minutes past seven, beating the Charm by about five minutes. Thus ended the second R. T. Y. C. match of the season; but even more unsatisfactorily than the first. The fact is that the Mystery was beating the Antagonist fast when they ran aground; what she would have done eventually, of course, cannot be said. The truth is that the Mystery is a better boat than the Belvidere in their present trim; and, moreover, the best in the Club to our honest thinking.

SHREWSBURY RACES.

This meeting commenced on Wednesday; the Viscount Newport, M.P., and Sir W. T. S. M. Stanley, Bart., Stewards. The weather was fine on Wednesday, and there was a good attendance for a first day. The following is a brief account of the sport:—

The Salopian Produce Stakes of 20 sovs each.

Mr. A. W. Hill's br c Sweetmeat, by Gladiator, walked over.

Mr. Minor's br c Breeches, by Pantaloon; Mr. Minor's ch f Birdswing; Mr. Hill's The Libel, and Mr. Fowler's The Witch, were entered but did not start.

The Great Cleveland Handicap of 25 sovs each, with 100 sovs added.

Mr. Taylor na br c Sweetmeat, 3 yrs 5st 10lb	..	..	..	1
Mr. J. Roche na br c Milton, 4 yrs, 6st 13lb	..	..	..	2
Mr. Hill's b g Salopian, 3 yrs, 5st 11lb	..	..	..	3
Mr. Disraeli na ch c Little Hampton	..	..	..	4

Twenty-one were entered, nineteen declared forfeit and paid 5 sovs each.

This was a well-contested race, at the close, between Sweetmeat and Milton, Salopian running a good third, Little Hampton beaten a long way off. For the first round Salopion kept the lead, followed close by Sweetmeat, but, coming up to the Judge's chair, Sweetmeat made a desperate push, and won cleverly by about a length.

The County Member's Plate had not concluded at post-hour. Five were entered for it; heats, twice round and a distance. There was but a small number of betting men. The roulette booths, not having the fear of Sir James Graham before their eyes, flaunted their gayest colours.

The Theatre was opened in the evening, and the race-card announced the performances—The Will of my Grandfather, and a Will of my Own, Young England, and a variety of singing and dancing, and sea bathing.

We annex a description of the Hawkstone Cup. The design of this piece of plate is at once elegant and unique, and is a vast improvement on the commonplace cups that were formerly contended for at these races—and, indeed, at nearly all the provincial meetings in the kingdom. Instead of being an useless ornament for a sideboard, it forms a superb and useful centre-piece for the dinner-table. It is in two pieces, but so admirably is each part adapted to the other, that, while they are combined, they form an elegant ornament to the dining-room, and, when separate, are of most essential service to the drawing-room, also. The upper portion consisis of an elegant épergne, with candelabra for four lights; the sockets for the candles taking off, and leaving shells, in which are placed richly-cut glasses, for preserves, &c.; the centre being sufficiently capacious to hold grapes, flowers, or perfumed water. The base is supported by four feet, formed of shells and flowers; while the shaft springs lightly, wreathed with convolvi, and the roses of the rival houses of York and Lancaster. On one of the four panels which form the base is the inscription. The lower portion consists of a massive and richly-chased salver.

Thomas Hood.—There is a subscription on foot for the widow and children of the late Mr. Hood. Several gentlemen of distinction have formed themselves into a committee for this purpose, and there is every chance, we are glad to hear, of their being able to effect a permanent good for the family. If every man Mr. Hood had made to laugh would give his sixpence, and every sempstress whose sufferings he sung so truly, her penny to the fund, there would be no occasion for the committee to call for any greater amount of subscription. How few at forty-six have laid sufficient by to meet the contingiencies of a long and wasting illness, and all the wants of a widow and a helpless family. Such was Mr. Hood's case, and the subscription has our best wishes and support.

A letter from Coburg, dated May 11, in the Manheim Journal, states that an English courier has just arrived with the intelligence that Queen Victoria was to arrive on a visit to her husband's august relatives in the course of the month of June. The letter added that preparations had already been commenced at the Court for her Britannic Majesty's reception.

The Erebus, Captain Sir John Franklin, and the Terror, Captain Crozier, discovery vessels, have left England on the new Arctic expedition. Each ship has been supplied with two hundred tin cylinders, for the purpose of holding papers, which are to be thrown overboard, with the statement of the longitude, and other particulars worthy of record, written in six different languages.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, May 25.—First Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 26.—St. Augustine, first Archbishop of Canterbury, died, A.D. 605.
Tuesday, 27.—Dante born, 1265.
Wednesday, 28.—William Pitt born, 1756.
Thursday, 29.—King Charles II. restored, 1660.
Friday, 30.—Alexander Pope died, 1744.
Saturday, 31.—Anne Boleyne, mother of Queen Elizabeth, crowned, 1533

High Water at London-bridge, for the Week ending May 31.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
5 15	5 42	6 7	6 36	7 4	7 36	8 6	8 33	9 17	9 48	10 20	10 52

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Folium." The second "a" in Arcades is short. Thus:
"Ambo florentes ætatibus, Arcades ambo."—Virgil, Ecl. vii. 4.

"A Young Student."—The level of the open sea is believed, generally speaking, to be everywhere the sume; or to form a portion of the surface of an oblate spheroid, to which the surface of the land approaches with less accuracy. Certain gulphs and inland seas appear to deviate, in some measure, from the general rule; and there are a few other exceptions.

"Ignoramus."—If our Correspondent will look at "Mercator's Chart of the World," he (?) will better appreciate Sir John Herschel's "fact," that "London occupies nearly the centre of the terrestrial hemisphere."

"M. M."—Almost all the writers of the period have fallen into error with respect to the "two Gorings" of the time of the Civil War, ascribing the actions of the one to the other, and the mistake is easily accounted for: both bore the samé names and title, and both were courtiers of Royalist Commanders. The elder, Sir George Goring, of Hurst Pierrepoint, in Sussex, created in 1625 Baron Goring, and advanced in 1644 to the earldom of Norwich, died in 1662. He was father of General George Goring, so celebrated as a cavalier leader, who, after the surrender of Oxford, retired to the Netherlands, and became Lieut.-General in the Spanish army. He died in Spain, in the character of a Dominican friar, during his father's life time. The death of neither occurred in 1645. There was a Colonel Goring of the same family, (distinguished for his devotion to the fortunes of the young Chevalier) who died a field marshal in the Prussian service.

"Zaccheus."—A correspondent, "W. J. D. W.," adds to the information in our journal of the 10th inst., respecting the Trinacria, or Arms of the Isle of Man, that it is a very ancient symbol, and appears on the coin of Sicily—of ancient Spain before the age of the Cæsars. It is given in "Hunter's Medals," tab. VII., No. 15, in connexion with a cock, as the coin of Aspendus, in Pamphylia; and our correspondent believes both to have had reference to the ancient families of Israel.

Miss Kelly's ticket for Wednesday night's performance did not reach us till Thursday morning.

"Gomhal."—We do not know who is the author of the work in question.

"Curriculum."—A modern chariot is either with or without a box-seat.

"A Correspondent" is thanked for the sketch of the Cotton steam-boat, for which, however, we have not room.

"M. B."—The portrait has not been engraved, but shall appear shortly.

"Adolescens."—Oliver Yorke is the nom de guerre of the Editor of "Fraser's Magazine. There are moderately priced editions of the works of Hazlitt and Lamb; but we think not of Milton's complete works.

"W. J. G.," Hum Cottage.—The property must be equally divided.

"C. F." and "J. M." are thanked for their correction of the popular error as to the birth-place of the Duke of Wellington. His Grace was not born at Dungan Castle, as almost invariably stated, but at Mornington House, 114, Grafton-street, Dublin.

"Bow Wow," Alpha-road.—The lady named is unmarried.

"Trebor."—Artesian wells are so called from their having been first bored in the province of Artois, in France.

"C. T. W.," Oxford.—Sir Eaward Lytton Bulwer has recently taken the surname of Lytton.

"C. T."—Acrostic; Lines to the Birch-tree; On Moss Roses, by H. F. L.—Ineligible.

"T. G. B."—We are not aware of the existence of any "Society" for Engraving Pictures from the Ancient Masters.

"J. D. F.," and "A Derby Sweep."—We shall give some capital Illustrations of the Derby Day at Epsom Races.

"R. T. L.," Regent's Park.—The sketch will be acceptable.

"J. J.," Stamford.—Hullah's works on singing may be obtained of J. W. Parker, West Strand.

"A Constant Reader" may remit money to Canada through an accredited agent.

"T. P.," Borough, had better consult a solicitor.

"C. W.," and "S. R.," Stamford.—We are not especially conversant with the customs at executions.

"B. A. J."—The book in question may be had, by order, of any bookseller.

"E. R."—The sketch of the Chester Cup did not reach us in time.

"A Constant Subscriber."—The proper course is to apply at the Bank of England.

"Cymro," Leicester.—"Senefelder's Treatise on Lithography" should supply the desired information.

"Legateius," Ambleside.—Acts of Parliament may be purchased at the Queen's Printing office, or obtained through any bookseller.

"E. M. G." should write to the editor of the journal in which the statement appeared.

"W. H. C.," York.—Has our correspondent constructed a camera on the principle suggested?

"R. M. E." is thanked for the sketch of the late Lord Carbery.

"Selborne" wishes to ascertain the best means of capturing the male glow-worm.

"A Son of Ink," Ipswich, may learn the value of the Prints in question of a dealer in old prints.

"Peter Puzzlewig" believes it is not generally known that the waterfall by the Swiss Cottage, Colosseum, is worked by a steam-engine, about one hundred yards from the spot. The novel is declined.

"C. E. J."—The lines do not reach our standard.

"C. S. P.," Huddersfield.—Sir Richard Phillips died in 1840.

"T. O."—We have not room to insert our correspondent's humane and charitable suggestions.

"H. J. E.," Tunbridge Wells, should send a specimen.

"A Correspondent."—We have not room for the further interpretations of "J. H. S." &c.

"T. W.," Stepney.—The height of the Duke of Wellington is about 5 feet 8 inches.

"A Subscriber," Manchester.—We have not received any further details of the state of affairs in Chili and Peru. Our latest advices merely mentioned the facts alluded to.

"D. E. R.," Swansea.—There are six distinct varieties of the farthings of Queen Anne in the British Museum: indeed, there may be said to be seven; but one sort alone really circulated; the other six varieties are pattern pieces, struck for approval, but from which no copies for circulation have been taken. These varieties are engraved in the "Mirror," No. 722. See, also, "Popular Errors Explained and Illustrated," pp. 181—184.

"Hugo" should apply to some respectable optician.

"R. J.," Bath.—The pigeon tribe (Columbidæ), a natural family of birds, comprises pigeons, doves, and turtles.

"W. W.," Piccadilly,—The Portraits of John Parry and Albert Smith are contained in No. 111 of our journal.

"G. G. F.," Swansea.—The illustrations of Swansea and the Rebeccaites will be found in Nos. 70 and 80 of our journal.

"C. B. C."—A Portrait and Memoir of Mr. Balfe are contained in No. 68 of the Illustrated London News.

"J. H." and "J. B." inquire the favourite horse at Tattersall's for the Derby Stakes:—

"So great a favourite is Idas,
That all his backers think him Midas."

"J. S."—The office of the Governess' Benevolent Institution is near Gough-square, Fleet-street.

"Galvani."—Matteucci's work on Galvanism may be had, by order, of any foreign bookseller; but we are not aware that it has been entirely translated into English.

"J. W.," St. John's-square.—St. John's-gate is printed, month by month, on the wrapper of the "Gentleman's Magazine. We should be glad to aid in its restoration.

"Marlborough."—The last general election was in 1841.

"A Correspondent," Norwich.—The price of our journal is 6d., supplied by J Darken, bookseller, Norwich.

"T. S.," Clerkenwell.—The series of illustrations will be commenced shortly.

"C. J. H."—We cannot, at present, reply to "A Scene Painter's" somewhat intemperate letter.

"A Ready Subscriber," West Malling.—A plain black cockade is customarily worn by officers' servants. Sir Harris Nicolas has remarked, in connexion with this subject, that "the National cockade of this country is in wretched taste. A plain black cockade conveys no meaning, and produces no associations; and it is, moreover, worn by officers' servants, whereas, a national cockade should be the peculiar badge of the servants of the Crown and of the nation. The American officers, who also use it, distinguish themselves by the appropriate addition of a golden eagle in the centre."

"A Subscriber."—The centre arch of London-bridge is 152 feet span, with a rise above high-water mark of 29 feet 6 inches; the parapet is 4 feet high; of the cornice and dentils we have not the dimensions.

Ineligible.—Lines, by B. J. M., Norwich; Song, by R. M.; A Dirge (Ellesmere); "Soft Music," by A. T.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1845.

Lord Brougham has lately made two exhibitions out of his "diurnal sphere"—the House of Lords—and each perfectly characteristic; without something to abuse, and somebody to flatter, he cannot live; the affliction of his persevering praise fell for a long period on the Duke of Wellington, but the iron constitution of the old warrior has enabled him to outlive that, as well as the many other hardships he has been exposed to in the course of his career. Lord Brougham's favourite aversions at present, are railroads and railway directors; his adulatory humour, is, for the moment, more comprehensive; the Duke has a little respite, and the tide of flattery has turned full upon Lord Ellenborough, and the whole of the late Ministry; Lord Ellenborough had to sustain it at the dinner of the Literary Fund, where the hyperbolic praises of his "brilliant" Governor-Generalship must have had a peculiar relevancy to the distresses of the literary brotherhood of England. Next to the wonder why Lord Ellenborough should have been placed in the chair at all, is the marvel, what his Indian policy had to do with the object of the meeting; but more wonderful than all is it, that any man not blinded by vanity, could be so ostentatiously servile, as to obtrude his flattery so needlessly on a man who had treated the claim of an acknowledgment of similar services, in a more appropriate place, the House of Lords, with marked contempt. Lord Brougham seems to think it his bounden duty to give his certificates of character to everybody he has ever known; he sends Wellington down to posterity, in an oration in which he assures all future generations, that the Duke unites in himself all the greatest qualities of all the Generals, and Statesmen, the world has seen, from Hannibal to Napoleon, Julius Cæsar included. As thorough a master of military strategy, as of equity law, posterity may take Lord Brougham's word for the fact; we fancy the old Duke must have listened to the legal expositor of things military much as the great Carthagenian we have named did to the Greek pedant, who undertook to enlighten him on the art of war. It is the true schoolmaster tendency; he thinks nobody can perceive merits or defects unless taught by him. On Wednesday evening, at the dinner of the Fishmongers' Company, he proceeded to open the eyes of England, to the virtues of the members of the Whig Ministry; "such excellent men—such distinguished Statesmen—such staunch friends of civil and religious liberty;"—Lord John Russell is "his natural superior"—and for once we think he hit the truth; Lord Melbourne was "his old and dear friend." Very dear and very sincere must the friendship have been on one side at least—as certain speeches in that inconvenient work, Hansard, would prove if cited. But it is the fault of great talkers, that they often forget what they have before said, and think all the world as oblivious as themselves. On this occasion, however, the greatest share of laudation fell to Lord Palmerston, as to whom Lord Brougham thus deposes:—

Of the three noblemen who had that day received the freedom of the Corporation two had been his colleagues in office; and he could answer for it that no man ever had more able, or honest, or honourable colleagues. He meant those observations in an especial manner as applicable to the noble viscount who in the late government had presided over foreign affairs. There never was—and he said it on all occasions, both in this country and in France—a grosser error—he would not say calumny—than to suppose that the noble viscount to whom he alluded was less disposed to continue friendly relations towards France than any other individual in the country was; and that was saying a great deal.

How the friend of peace contrived to run the country within a hair's-breadth of a bloody war, is not stated; but, as usual, all the world is in error except Lord Brougham. Now, the chances are, that at no great distance of time, the whole Whig Ministry will be made the objects of his satire, as they have often been before; the first temptation of getting a cheer from the House of Lords will bring it out; the Corporation of London well know that an eloquent panegyric at a banquet at the Mansion-house is no security against seeing themselves held up, the next week, as public plunderers, in a debate at Westminster. We doubt not that his late colleagues are quite aware of the peculiarity, and prepared for the change of language, from compliment to calumny, and that they rate both at their real value. The fact is, the whole man is exaggeration:—

Praising and blaming are his usual themes,
And both, to show his judgment, in extremes;
So over violent, or over civil,
That every man with him is god or devil.

With such power of language and illustration he might make his praise coveted and his censure formidable; but by the indiscriminate use of both—and that often on the same persons—he deprives himself of all weight or influence; this it is that has lowered his position in the House of Lords to that of a very amusing speaker, capable of giviug a sort of agreeable variation to the proceedings of that very dignified but rather dull assembly. Instead of being a political power he occupies the place very slightly elevated above that of a highly intellectual buffoon.

Another of those barbarisms of civilization, a duel, has just occurred, with, it is to be apprehended, fatal effects. The published account contains all the ordinary features of such "affairs"—the quarrel, the meeting in cold blood, the fall of one and the flight of the other, with even more than the usual display of brutal indifference as to the fate of the victim. What the nature of the provocation may have been, can, we suppose, be only precisely known to the parties themselves, and whether this miserable sort of "satisfaction" has brought a punishment upon the aggressor or not is impossible to say. But a previous cold, calculating practice, in a shooting-gallery, before going to the ground—the absence of any attempt by the seconds at reconciliation, and the flight, without a sign of remorse or emotion of any kind at the shedding of blood by premeditation—in short, at the commission of murder—convey an unfavourable impression of the fugitive, perhaps we should call him the survivor; though, unhappily, the arm of justice is too powerless in these cases, we shall regret his escape even from the inefficient retribution the laws would have exacted from him.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

BANQUET TO PRINCE ALBERT AT FISHMONGERS' HALL.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert honoured the Prime Warden and Court of Assistants of the Fishmongers' Company with his presence on Wednesday evening, at a grand banquet given at the Company's Hall, near London-bridge.

The occasion of the entertainment was to celebrate the admission of four noblemen—the Earl of Fortescue, Viscount Melbourne, Viscount Palmerston, and Lord Cottenham—to the fraternity of Fishmongers. The honours of the Company having been voted to them some time since, and on whom (with the exception of Viscount Melbourne, whose state of health had not allowed him to attend) they were personally conferred.

His Royal Highness arrived about seven o'clock, and the guests proceeded to the Great Hall, where the banquet was served.

The Prime Warden occupied the chair, Prince Albert sitting on his right hand, and the Marquis of Lansdowne upon his left, supported on either side by Viscount Palmerston and Earl Fortescue.

On the removal of the cloth, the "Benedictus" was sung.

The Prime Warden then rose, and gave "The health of her Majesty the Queen," prefacing the same with a few brief remarks, in the course of which he took occasion to refer to the gracious forbearance of her Majesty in not having asked an increase to her Civil List, although the expenses of the Court were now necessarily very much larger than they were a few years since.

The toast was drunk with all the honours.

The Prime Warden next gave "The health of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, their honoured guest and brother Fishmonger," which having been enthusiastically responded to,

His Royal Highness, in a few words, acknowledged the compliment, and gave "The health of the Prime Warden and prosperity to the Fishmongers' Company."

The Prime Warden returned thanks, and next gave "The health of the Prince of Wales, the Queen Dowager, and the rest of the Royal Fami.," which was duly honoured.

The Prime Warden then announced the toast of the evening—viz. "The healths of Lords Melbourne, Fortescue, Palmerston, and Cottenham," the four distinguished noblemen who had honoured the company by becoming freemen of their Corporation that day, expressing his deep regret at the absence, through indisposition, of Lord Melbourne.

The toast having been drunk with three times three, each of the noblemen to whom it referred successively returned thanks.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert left the Hall about eleven o'clock on his return to Buckingham Palace.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO IRELAND.—The Queen held a Court at Buckingham Palace on Wednesday, when the Lord Mayor of Dublin, who went in state, read an address from the Corporation of that city, relative to her Majesty visiting Ireland. His Lordship then advanced, and, kneeling near the Sovereign, presented the address.

The Queen returned the following most gracious answer:—

"I receive with cordial satisfaction this loyal address from the Corporation of Dublin.

"I have ever been most anxious to consult the feelings and to promote the happiness of my Irish subjects.

"The wish which you express in gratifying terms that I should visit Ireland is an acceptable proof of the warm attachment of the citizens of Dublin to my person and government.

"Whenever I may be enabled to receive in Ireland the promised welcome, I shall rely with confidence on the loyalty and affection of my faithful subjects."

The Lord Mayor received from the Queen a copy of the answer, and, kneeling, had the honour to kiss hands. Alderman O'Brien (late Lord Mayor) and Town Councillor Patrick O'Brien had also the honour to kiss hands.

CHRISTENING OF THE HEIR OF VISCOUNT VILLIERS.—OnSaturday last the. infant son and heir of Viscount and Viscountess Villiers was baptised at St George's Church, Hanover-square. The Queen was sponsor for the noble infant; and, in the absence of her Majesty, the Marchioness of Douro was deputed to act. Sir Robert Peel and the Earl of Jersey were the two other sponsors—the Earl of Jersey, who was prevented from being present by indisposition, being represented by the Honourable Frederick Villiers. The ceremony was performed by the Reverend Mr. Hewitt, the rector, and the infant received the names of Victor Albert George.

DEPARTURE OF THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF MECKLENBURGH STRELITZ.—The Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz left town on Monday afternoon for Germany. Their Royal Highnesses took their departure by a special train on the South Eastern Railway. His Royal Highness Prince George accompanied his illustrious relatives to Dover.

HER MAJESTY'S BIRTH DAY.—To-day (Saturday) is the twenty-sixth anniversary of the natal day of her Majesty. Sir R. Peel has caused cards to be issued for a full-dress banquet on Tuesday next in celebration of the event. The circle invited are exclusively Peers. The Earl of Aberdeen will receive the whole of the Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers at a grand full-dress entertainment at Argyle-house. Lord Stanley, as Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, will also have a dinner party to celebrate the birth-day.

BANQUET TO PRINCE ALBERT.—On Saturday evening the Prime Warden, Masters, and Court of Assistants of the Goldsmiths' Company, gave a most magnificent entertainment to Prince Albert, her Majesty's Ministers, &c., at their hall, in Foster-lane, City. At the north-end of the banquetting-room, in a recess, were arranged the rich and matchless services of gold plate, &c., belonging to the company, which produced a most splendid effect. The tables were laid out in a style to correspond with the wealth and magnificence of the company. The hall, ante-rooms, landing-places, and stairs, were ornamented with the choicest exotics. Whatever taste, wealth, and influence could desire, was called into action to make the banquet worthy the presence of her Majesty's Consort. The illustrious and noble guests began to arrive about six o'clock, amongst whom were the Marquis of Exeter, Lord Stanley, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Jocelyn, Sir G. Cockburn, and other members of the Cabinet. Sir R. Peel, on alighting from his carriage, was loudly cheered, which he acknowledged by one of his blandest smiles. Prince George of Cambridge, and, at seven o'clock, his Royal Highness Prince Albert and his suite, arrived in five carriages; the Prince was londly cheered. After the cloth was removed, the business of the evening commenced, the principal toasts being "Her Majesty and Prince Albert," to which his Royal Highness responded. "The Queen Dowager and the rest of the Royal Family," which was acknowledged by Prince George of Cambridge; "Her Majesty's Ministers;" "The Houses of Lords and Commons," &c. The company began to depart about eleven o'clock.

ROYAL VISIT.—The King and Queen of the Belgians are expected to arrive in a few weeks, on a visit to her Majesty and Prince Albert.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

FALSE REPORT OF ANOTHER MURDER AT HAMPSTEAD.

Last Saturday morning the body of a man was found in a ditch by the side of the Finchley-road, about 200 yards north of the Swiss Cottage public-house. Several of the Sunday papers which deal in horrors contained alarming accounts upon the subject, and some of Monday's daily papers added to the exaggeration by an account, written in the usual penny-a line style, to the effect "that throughout the entire day (Saturday) the town of Hampstead was thrown into a state of intense excitement by a rumour, obtaining extensive circulation, that a gentleman had been found murdered in a ditch closely adjoining the spot where the murder of the unfortunate Mr. Delarue was perpetrated by Thomas Henry Hocker. On the reporter instituting inquiries, he ascertained that the grounds for supposing a similar shocking occurrence had transpired in the vicinity of Hampstead were not altogether without foundation, as the body of a most respectably-attired man had been discovered."

It was subsequently ascertained that the body was that of Thomas William Cunningham, a tailor, who had lodged at No. 24, Holywell-street, Strand.

An inquest was held on Tuesday, before Mr. Wakley, and the following report of what occurred will explain what sort of "foundation" there was for the inflated narrative given in some of the papers:—

Police-constable 207 S said he found deceased lying in the ditch, "pitched upon his head," and quite dead. He had all his clothes, except his hat, on. His hands and face were cold, but his body was still warm. Witness, with assistance, conveyed the body to that house (Yorkshire Grey), and Mr. Gower, a surgeon, was called in. Sixpence, a tobacco-stopper, snuff-box, a pair of kid gloves, and a silk handkerchief, were found in his pockets.

By the Deputy-Coroner: His hat was found about two hundred yards from him, and must have fallen from his head. I do not know how deceased came into the ditch, but I have not the slightest reason to believe that he met with any violence. I saw nothing whatever to lead me to think he had. There were no marks of violence on his person, and there were no signs of struggling at or near the spot where he was found.

The Coroner: Who can write such stupid statements in the newspapers as we have read about this case, making it one of murder? One would think they were the reports of some old woman. Really it is disgusting to see such injurious misrepresentations. The editors of newspapers ought to exclude the contributors of such exaggerations. There does not appear the slightest ground for supposing that deceased has been wounded. Things are bad enough already, without making them worse.

Sarah Cunningham, wife of deceased, described him as a man who occasionally drank hard, and who would then wander away from home and remain away a day or a night. She did not know whether he had met with violence or not, but she thought there was something wrong, because he had lost his spectacles.

The Coroner—I am sure that the paragraphs in the newspapers about this simple affair would make any wife think the man had been murdered ten times over. It was bruited all over London that there was another murder at Hampstead.

Mr. S. Gower, surgeon, of Hampstead, proved that deceased died of congestive apoplexy, naturally produced.

Verdict, "Natural death."

ALARMING COLLISION ON THE GREENWICH RAILWAY.—Late on Monday night a collision of a very fearful character happened on the Greenwich Railway, near the London-bridge terminus. From the statements made by the passengers of the eleven o'clock train, which was well loaded with the holiday folks from Deptford fair, it appears that on that train arriving at the points where the engine and tender are attached, for the purpose of allowing the train to pass under the shedding of the terminus, three carriages were discovered to have been left on the same line of rail, without the usual signal lights to denote their being there. The guard on the foremost carriage of the train, perceiving the imminent danger, shouted to his fellow officers to put down the breaks. The engine and tender, unfortunately, had moved on to the adjoining rails, and, as is usually the case, was dragging the train along by a rope. The engineers noticed the carriages at the same moment that the guard did, but were unable to stay the speed of the train, and the guard, finding a collision inevitable, saved his life by leaping on to the line. The next moment the train came in contact with the carriages with terrific force, the foremost of the latter being smashed and hurled upside down on to the roofs of the other carriages, besides effectiug much damage to them. The shock to the passengers, upwards of 200 in number, was very alarming. The officers of the company rendered every assistance, and it was ascertained that none of them were seriously hurt, the extent of their injury being severe bruises and sundry damage to their wearing apparel. The South Eastern Company instituted an inquiry relative to the neglect in leaving carriages on the line without signal lights, and he result was, it was understood, the dismissal of several parties.

According to a recent census of the Russian empire, it appears that the population consists of 62,500,000 souls, of whom 2,000,000 are Tartars (Mahomedans), and 182,000 Jews.

POSTSCRIPT.

HENLEY GRAND REGATTA.—This great aquatic event, at which the gentlemen of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge will again contend this season, is appointed for the 6th and 7th of June. The entrances promise excellent sport.

MANCHESTER AND LEEDS RAILWAY.—On Wednesday, a special general meeting of the proprietors of this railway was held at the Palatine Hotel, Manchester, for the purpose of adopting the drafts of several bills authorising the compuny to make and construct the following lines:—Branches from Todmorden to Burnley; from Bluepit to Heywood; from Oldham to Mumps; from Manchester to Ashton and Stalybridge; also the Guide Bridge Junction, the Wakefield, Pontefract, and Goole Railway; and likewise to authorise the directors to enter into a union with the Manchester and Bolton Company The whole of the bills were unanimously adopted, and the directors authorised to enter into arrangements with the Manchester and Bolton Company.

MOHUN LAL.—We are glad to learn that this distinguished Oriental, whose name is so honourably known to the English public in connection with our disasters in Affghanistan, in which country he was mainly instrumental in rescuing the captives of Akhbar Khan, has been rewarded by the East India Company with a pension of £1000 a-year.

THE LATE DUEL AT PORTSMOUTH.—Our latest accounts from Portsmouth report more favourably of the condition of Mr. Seton. Up to four o'clock on Thursday his surgeons entertained considerable hopes of his ultimate recovery, the ball having passed clear of the intestines.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.—The latest Paris papers are chiefly occupied with the proceedings in the Chamber of Deputies on the 4th article of the Northern Railroad Bill. The debate was resumed on Wednesday, but the consideration of the 5th and following articles to the 12th inclusive, containing general provisions, as applicable to all railroads, was postponed. The 13th article authorises the Minister of Public Works to open a credit of 13,000,000f. for 1845, and 6,000,000f. for 1846, for the purpose of covering the advances which the State may yet have to make for the completion of the road and the final settlement of the accounts.

SWITZERLAND.—We have received Swiss papers of late dates. The New Gazette of Zurich states that the case of Dr. Steiger was heard by the Superior Tribunal at Lucerne on the 17th. Dr. Steiger made an eloquent defence, but the tribunal confirmed the sentence of death that had been pronounced upon him by a majority of seven judges to three.

MURDER IN BELGIUM. On Monday last, the railway guard who was on duty at the station at Louvain, was found murdered. It was also discovered that about 200f. were forcibly taken away from the office.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Last Sunday an alarm took place at the English chapel, at Boulogne, during Divine service, which occasioned some personal injury, and was very near causing loss of life. While the minister was preaching, the cord of one of the sashes gave way, and the lead weight made a noise which gave rise to an impression that the gallery was falling. A great number of persons rushed for the door, amid screams from the women and children, and some 20 or 30 were thrown down and trampled upon. Several ladies and children were injured, though not seriously, in the struggles upon the floor; some fainted, and were taken to neighbouring houses; and the sermon was abruptly terminated.

Letters from Constantinople state that the campaign in the Caucasus will be commenced by the Russians this year with an immense force; but, at the same time, the brave mountaineers have not the smallest doubt of gaining the victory. In spite of all the precautions of the Russians, they have received considerable supplies of arms and ammunition from Turkey.

The Presse announces the death, at Dresden, a few days since, of the poet Ernest de Brunow, brother of the Russian Ambassador at London.

Letters from Lisbon announce the death of the Cardinal Patriarch of Lisbon, Don Francisco de St. Luiz Saraiva. The successor to the Patriarchate, though not yet declared, will be the Bishop of Leiria. This is a prelate of austere character, and of the still vigorous age of 50 years.

One of the sons of Schiller, the German poet, filling the office of Keeper-General of Woods and Forests in Wirtemberg, has just been created a Baron, by the title of Baron Schiller de Lorch.

The eminent German author and critic, Schlegel, died a few days ago at Bonn, aged 79.

The Bremen Gazette states that some of the Berlin capitalists have applied to the Prussian Government for the concession of a railroad between Bremen and Oldenburgh. The capital which they propose to raise is 2,000,000 thalers, with a guarantee of 3½ per cent. interest.

Between 200 and 300 workmen are assembled at Montmelian, in Savoy, to be immediately employed in finishing the railroad that is to run between Turin and Chambery, and which will probably be carried on to the French frontier and Switzerland.

The German journals give the following account of a serious accident which happened on the 7th inst., near Kozenburgh, in the environs of Vienna:—A boat, filled with upwards of 100 persons, chiefly Sclavonians returning from a pilgrimage, upset at the moment it was touching the shore, from the precipitation of the passengers in attempting to land. More than one-third of them were drowned.

Letters from Rome dated 6th inst. announce the demise of Cardinal Louis du Drago in his 69th year. He is to be replaced, as Secretary for the Petitions, by Cardinal Adrien Fieschi. The same accounts also mention the demise of Lieutenant Molier, Aide-de-Camp to his Royal Highness Prince Heinrich of Prussia, who expired at Albano from the effects of an accident by the upsetting of the carriage between Albano and Rome, caused by the negligence of his coachman.

It is stated in the continental papers that an awful famine prevails in the principal part of the western provinces of Russia, owing to the bad harvest of last year. To complete the wretchedness of the country, the humidity of the winter having destroyed all the grass, a frightful mortality among the horned cattle was the consequence.

Poland is still in a disturbed state; at Warsaw the prisons are daily increasing the number of their victims. The espionage is more rigorous than ever; and the danger of correspondence by letters is greatly augmented.

Mr. Armstrong, the British Vice-consul at Caen, died of the rupture of a blood-vessel of the heart, at Abbeville, a few days ago, on his way to England en congé, with Mrs. Armstrong.

A Stockholm letter of the 6th announces the arrival from Tangier of the Swedish Consul-General, bringing news of the signature of a treaty of peace between Sweden and Morocco, at Larache, on the 5th ult.

We learn from St. Petersburgh that Dr. Posselt, professor of history at the University of Dorpat, in Livonia, has, during a residence at the Russian capital, found in the archives of the empire eleven autograph letters from Liebnitz to Peter I. Some are in Latin, others in German; and, as they are all on scientific subjects, they show that a most extensive correspondence was carried on between the philosopher and the Czar. Dr. Posselt intends to publish these letters after his return to Dorpat.

A letter from Smyrna, dated April 23, gives a deplorable account of the state of Turkey. It says that a band of robbers, to the number of 30 or 40, attacked a village a few days since, in the suburbs of Smyrna. Some four or five of the inhabitants were mudered in defending themselves; the Aga was tied to a tree, and severely bastinadoed. After they had plundered all they could, they left, and have not since been heard of. In the interior of Asia Minor, about a day's journey from Smyrna, the farmers are in a deplorable condition.

We learn from Brunswick that the Reigning Duke, in compliance with the unanimous recommendation of both Chambers of the State, has issued a decree abolishing entirely corporal punishment in his army. These old punishments are superseded by imprisonment for longer or shorter terms, according to the nature of the offence.

According to a St. Petersburgh letter of the 30th ult., Prince Albert is expected in that capital in the course of the present summer, to return the visit of the Emperor to her Majesty Queen Victoria last year. He would be accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge, ostensibly to be present with him at the series of reviews to take place according to annual custom; but also, it was said at Court, with regard to the possibility of a matrimonial alliance with the Imperial Grand Duchess Olga.

The Senate at Brussels met on the 16th, and adopted, without discussion, the project of law relative to the West Flanders railway. The project respecting the Namur and Liege line gave occasion for some further observations. Upon the suggestion of the Baron de Royer, the Minister promised to take great care that the works of the line from Menage to Mons, and of the Marchienne Railroad and Erquelinnes Canal, should be commenced simultaneously. The project was eventually carried.

The Constitutionnel publishes the following letter from M. Horace Vernet, dated Versailles, the 17th:—"The account published by you that the Moorish authorities had ordered me to quit their territory is incorrect. On the contrary, I can say that I received the most friendly welcome whenever I found myself in contact with them. I was enabled to visit, without any impediment on their part, the field of battle, which it was my object to see."

On Monday last the express train from Carlisle to London, which arrives at the Derby station, on the North Midland Railway, from the north, at three o'clock in the afternoon, made the journey from Normanton to Derby, a distance of sixty three miles, in one hour and forty-eight minutes, including stoppages. The distance of twenty miles from Claycross to Derby, was run in twenty-five minutes. The train being unusually late on that day was the reason of this increased speed.

As a proof of the increasing inclination of the inhabitants of London to proceed towards the sea for recreation, it may be stated that in the year 1843 upwards of 1,500,000 persons were landed at the piers at Gravesend, and which was increased to upwards of 2,000,000 in the year 1844. These are exclusive of those who visited Southend, Sheerness, Herne Bay, Margate and Ramsgate, amounting to upwards of 250,000.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Gather the rose-buds while ye may,
Old Time is still a-flying,
And the same flower that smiles to-day
To-morrow will be dying.

While all manner of learning hath its peculiar disciples, whether we turn to Plato or Epicurius—to Bacon or Joe Miller the Younger—we find the philosophy of all times and persons inculcating as a prominent precept the excellence of turning to the best account the hour and the man. Cheerfulness, like charity, is doubly blest—it increases its own store in the proportion that it endows others with its worldly goods. "Put money in thy purse," counsels the bard; "honestly if thou canst—but put money in thy purse." "Be merry and wise"—says the moralist of these presents, wisely if thou canst—but be merry; always, that is within the limit of a right discretion, which, according to our definition of the boundaries, is no niggard allowance. It embraces the whole round of our national pastimes—the completest contrivances for the promotion of health and light heartedness that the wisdom of man ever produced. If haply there be those who differ with our conclusions in this respect, we wish they had witnessed the opening of the season at Lord's, on Monday last. Comparisons are not courteous; otherwise, if the dissentient were travellers, we would ask them whether they can meet such samples of young gentlehood in the Bois de Boulogne; the Lung Arno; the Prater; or any other rendezvous of foreign fashionable resort. Indeed, allusion to the craft of bat and ball, and the tastes of our Gallic neighbours, is particularly mal apropos. If there be anything of which a man may be said to know less than nothing, it is a Frenchman's idea of cricket. Some years ago, on the occasion of a visit to Dieppe, made by the Duchesse de Berri, for the purpose of bathing, the English, resident in that town, got up a cricket match for the amusement of her Royal Highness. The duchesse came on the ground in great state, and after watching the proceedings for an hour or two, during which time the players had gone through super-human exertions, sent an aide-de-camp to inquire "when the game would begin?"

The only matter of mark during the present week in the aquatic way was the rowing on the Isis by the Oxford men. It is still in progress, and extends over the remainder of the month. The chief feature in national sports was the pleasant, or at all events the picturesque, meeting in Gorhambury Park. They say it is to be the last of the series—the more's the pity. If only in capacity of commentaries on the practice of one man appropriating a thousand acres for the exercise of his—fancy and his hackney—himself taking the air in Hyde Park, or on the Adriatic, while millions of his fellows indulge their love of nature by means of a lark, sod, or sweet lavender at six bunches a penny—races in great men's domains were grateful things. But their careers have been short. Lord Wilton soon grew tired of his; Lord Verulam, they say, is now weary; forefend the Lords of Goodwood and Eglinton should not have more patience or patriotism. The racing at Gorhambury is only of a local character. It is good sport generally: good fun sometimes, and neither more nor less was it on its latest anniversary. To see the business of the turf done artistically, recourse must be had to places where professional people, concerned in it, resort. For instance, the most accountable contest of coursers in Great Britain is that for the Goodwood Cup, which Mr. Ferguson could win "twice running," because he looked after his own affairs. Until my Lord George Bentinck adopted the same policy, he was the worst horsed gentleman in England, with the largest stud; and of all the owners of a yacht in the world, probably, the Queen of these realms is at this moment the worst off for the means of going afloat! But this is steering wide. Gorhambury races are over, and the sporting world is where it was before they began, touching the stupendous question of next week—what is to be the issue of the Derby? This we purpose disposing of—in our next publication—with such illustrations of its times and contemporaries as shall help posterity to its complete history.

During the two days at Gorhambury there were indications that the result might not be such as the betting subsequent to the race for the Two Thousand Guineas Stakes seemed to assure it. On the first, Idas receded a point, probably, in his actual value, while Alarm advanced three points on his Monday's price, and otherwise the field was in better odour. On Wednesday the crack was at pretty much the same price, and the field remained as before, with a few exceptions—among them the fall of that most unsteady of animals, Old England, who went to his old quotation of 30 to 1. The weather on the last day was dreadful: the report of the discontinuation of the meeting was, however, less dreary. There is yet a hope that it may go on.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The Derby betting this afternoon took a very wide range, and in some instances was highly important. Thus, Idas, without moving in the slightest degree from his position, was backed heavily at 2 to 1; J. Day's lot, in various quarters, and in large amounts, at 4 to 1; Weatherbit, for all the money that could be got, at 8 to 1; Alarm, freely and in sums, at 10 and 11 to 1; Forth's lot at 8 to 1; and Doleful, after a momentary decline, at 25 to 1. The Libel, Pantasa, and Old England, were not in force. The chief outside betting was on The Merry Monarch, Mentor, Fuzbos, and Winchester. The weight of the Oaks betting was on Lancashire Witch, Maid of Orleans, and Lady Wildair. Hope was not fancied.

DERBY.

2 to 1 agst Idas (t)	40 to 1 agst Mentor	1000 to 15 agst Laird o' Cockpen
4 to 1 —— J. Day's lot (t)	40 to 1 —— The Merry Monarch	1000 to 15 —— Winchester (t)
7 to 1 —— Weatherbit	40 to 1 —— Remorse	1000 to 15 —— Columbus (t)
8 to 1 —— Forth's lot	40 to 1 —— Titmouse	1000 to 10 —— Y Eclipse (t)
10 to 1 —— Alarm (t)	50 to 1 —— Fuzbos (t)	1000 to 10 —— Cabin-boy (t)
13 to 1 —— The Libel	50 to 1 —— Miss Whip colt	1000 to 10 —— Desperation
20 to 1 —— Old England	50 to 1 —— Maynooth	1000 to 10 —— Cobweb colt (t)
20 to 1 —— Pantasa	50 to 1 —— Jinglepot
25 to 1 —— Doleful (t)

OAKS

6 to 1 agst Lancashire Witch	10 to 1 agst Maid of Orleans	10 to 1 agst Lady Wildair
7 to 1 —— Hope	15 to 1 —— Lælia	33 to 1 —— Refraction (t)
	30 to 1 agst Venus (t)

THURSDAY.—The ceremony of comparing books—and its necessity as a preventive of wrangling, cannot be too strongly enforced—occupied nearly the whole of the afternoon, leaving little time for betting. Some trifing business, however, was transacted, but with no other result than to show that Old England and Pam may be returned "safe," and that Kedger is again putting in an appearance, for the purpose, we presume, of enabling those conversant with his merits, to get a little more out of him. The leading favourites for both races are very steady. We add the final quotations:

DERBY.

9 to 4 agst Idas	20 to 1 agst Doleful	40 to 1 agst Jinglepot
7 to 2 —— J. Day's lot	30 to 1 —— Old England	50 to 1 —— Clear-the-Way
6 to 1 —— Alarm	40 to 1 —— Mentor	50 to 1 —— The Merry Monarch
7 to 1 —— Weatherbit	40 to 1 —— Kedger	50 to 1 —— Pam
8 to 1 —— Forth's lot	40 to 1 —— Columbus	1000 to 15 —— Titmouse
14 to 1 —— The Libel	40 to 1 —— Sis. to Laundress coit (t)	200 to 1 —— Cobweb co
18 to 1 —— Pantasa

The Ironmaster was formally disqualified this afternoon.
Anti-Repealer is also disqualified.

OAKS.

5 to 1 agst Lady Wildair	6 to 1 agst Lancashire Witch	9 to 1 agst Maid of Orleans
	11 to 1 agst Glee (t)

GORHAMBURY RACES.—TUESDAY.

The weather unfortunately was cold and showery, and in consequence the assemblage was not so large as we have seen on some occasions, still it was very numerous; and there was no lack of rank and fashion.

The Craven Stakes of 10 sovs each with 20 added.
Lord Glamis's ch c Satyr by Glaucus, 4 yrs .. .. .. (Nat) 1
Lord G. Bentinck's Moonshine, 3 yrs 2

The Gorhambury Handicap of 25 sovs each, with 50 added.
Mr. Cuthbert's Queen of Tyne, 6yrs, 7st 10lb .. .. (Joy) 1
Mr. Meiklam's Philip, 5 yrs, 7st 12lb 2

The Præ Stakes of 20 sovs each, with 25 added. The second saves his stake.
Lord Verulam's colt, by Liverpool, out of Corumba .. (Cotton) 1
Mr. Coleman's Velox 2
1 to 1 on the Corumba colt, which took the lead, kept it, and won in a canter.

The Brigade Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 25 added. 8st 7lb.
Mr. H. Lowther's Scarmentado, 3 yrs .. .. (Mr. Barclay) 1
Mr. Graham's Hartshorn, 5 yrs 2
Lord Caledon's Molly Mogg, 4 yrs .. ..

The Selling Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 25 added.
Lord G. Bentinck's Best Bower, 4 yrs, 8st 3lb .. .. (Nat 1
Lord March's Jew Boy, 3 yrs, 5st 6lb 2

WEDNESDAY.

The Double-Headed Oak Stakess of 20 sovs each, with 100 added,
Mr. T. Dawson's Crim Con .. .. (Lye) 1
Mr. Greville's Sir Francis 2

Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each, with 25 added.
Mr. John Day's Voltri, 4 yrs .. .. .. (J. Day, jun.) 1
Mr. Death's Isleworth, 6 yrs 2

The Park Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 100 added.
Duke of Richmond's Tug Net, by Elis, out of Baleine .. (Nat) 1
Mr. Hook's Buttress 2

The Ponyard Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 25 added.
Lord Exeter's Deodara, 3 yrs .. .. (Pettit) 1
Hr. Hook's Wild Roe, 3 yrs 2

The St. Alban's Handicap of 15 sovs each, 5 ft, and 25 added. Heats.
Mr. Parr's Europa, 5 yrs, 10st 6lb .. ..(Mr. Osbaldeston) 1
Mr. Clifton's Pedlar, aged, 10st 2
Lord Glamis's Arcanus, 6 yrs, 10st 7lb 3

TROTTING MATCH ON THE ICE.—At Montreal, where the English partiality for racing exists, there has been a trotting match on the ice, between a celebrated American horse and a Canadian pony, for one mile; both heats were won by the Canadian pony, the first heat in 2 m. 45 s., the second heat 2 m. 39 s. These little Canadian horses are very fast, very strong, and very hardy: and their powers are not unknown here, as Tom Thumb and some others have proved.

CRICKET.—THE MARYLEBONE CLUB AND GROUND v. THE PETWORTH CLUB AND GROUND.—This first-class match was brought to a conclusion on Wednesday afternoon, in the midst of somewhat heavy rain. Indeed, the rain fell more or less throughout the day. The Marylebone Club won by four wickets.

DEPARTURE OF THE "EREBUS" AND "TERROR" ON THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

A desart waste of waters lies before—
Behind, the anxious hospitable shore,
Which like a parent bird sees ye depart,
Bold wingèd messengers of daring Art!
We know that sunshine always 'round your path
Cannot attend; that rain and tempest's wrath
Will be your portion; but our pray'r shall be
You live their fury out right gallantly,
And after years you have perchance to roam
That science crown'd you safely seek your home! W.

On Monday H. M. sloops Erebus and Terror left Greenhithe, on their attempt "to penetrate the icy fastnesses of the north, and to circumnavigate America." The fitting out of this expedition was, we believe, definitively arranged by the Admiralty in February last, since which period the requisite equipments have been made; and, as they involve several novelties, we shall briefly detail them.

The Erebus and Terror, it will be recollected, were fitted out for the South Polar Expedition, in 1839—1843, under the command of Captain Sir James Ross. The Terror had previously visited the Arctic regions; it being the vessel in which Captain (now Sir George) Back, in 1836, attempted, by "way of Wager River," to trace the northern boundary of the American Continent. This vessel passed up Hudson Strait in August, 1836, and left it on her way home in August, 1837, after encountering extraordinary perils among the ice, and a narrow escape from foundering: she was then compelled to return home in a leaky condition, with her stern-post shattered. This was the fifty-seventh Arctic Expedition from England, commencing with Cabot's voyage (temp. Henry VII.)—the first of the kind that was made from our country; and the Expedition which has just sailed is the fifty-eighth enterprise of its class.

The vessels were put in commission at Woolwich on Tuesday, March 4. The Expedition is under the command of Captain Sir John Franklin, Knight, K.C.H., who is appointed to the Erebus (the larger vessel), with Commander James Fitzjames, Lieutenant Henry T. D Le Vesconte; mate, Charles F. Des Voux; second master, H. F. Collins; clerk, G. F. Pinhorn; gunner, J. G. Robinson; boatswain, J. G. Terry; carpenter, W. Weekes. Captain F. R. M. Crosier commands the Terror, with Lieutenant Edward Little, Lieutenant G. H. Hodgson; carpenter, Thomas Honey.

The fitting out of the vessels has been superintended and minutely inspected by the Lords of the Admiralty, and other persons distinguished in

CAPTAIN SIR JOHN FRANKLIN, K. C. H., COMMANDER OF THE EXPEDITION.

Polar expeditions. The ships are provided with the most approved Archimedean screw propellers; and in one of the trials in the Thames, the Terror made such excellent progress that she cast off her towing steamer, and proceeded down the river without any additional assistance whatever.

In their visit to Woolwich, the Lords of the Admiralty proceeded to the west end of the dock yard, opposite the wharf-wall of which was stationed the Rattler steam-vessel, fitted with a screw propeller. Their Lordships witnessed the manner in which the screw was shipped and unshipped by tackle and chains suspended over the starboard side of the vessel, and then proceeded on board the Erebus to witness the manner in which the screw-propeller could be taken on deck and replaced in its proper position, by letting it down through a well formed in the stern of the vessel. The advantages of this mode of attaching and detaching the screw, are self-evident, and the principle is so simple and easy of accomplishment, that any vessel in her Majesty's navy may by its aid be fitted with a screw-propeller, the objection and difficulty of shipping and unshipping it on the outside being completely obviated. Their Lordships went below and witnessed the construction of the tubular boiler and steam-forming apparatus, which occupies but a very small space in the vessel, and by the aid of a large pipe, about one foot in diameter, conveys hot water under the deck to warm the men's berths, and all parts of the vessel. The funnel of the furnace is near the side of the vessel under the rigging, and is only about nine feet high. The pipe for blowing off the steam is not three feet high above deck, and is near the centre and over the boiler. Several other ingenious contrivances have been adopted to render the whole as simple and perfect as possible. The decks of the Erebus and Terror are constructed on the diagonal principle, and about twenty feet on each side of the bows of the vessels have been cased with strong sheet iron. There is not any copper sheathing on either of the vessels, as no danger is to be apprehended from the attacks of shell-fish or barnacles, the ice soon clearing them from incumbrances of that description.

The arrangements made for the comfort of the officers and crews are excellent. The quantity of stores taken on board is considerable, and consists of preserved provisions of various kinds, a large quantity of tea, and extra strong West Indian rum, 35 per cent. over proof. The consumption is thus provided for a prolonged expedition. Ten fine live oxen have also been shipped at the Woolwich Dockyard, on board the Barretto, Jun., hired transport-ship; she will accompany the discovery vessels to the edge of the ice, and these animals may then be killed, and their flesh preserved fresh for any length of time.

Each ship has been supplied with 200 tin cylinders for the purpose of holding papers which are to be thrown over board, with the statement of the longitude and other particulars worthy of record, written in six different languages, and the parties finding them are requested to forward the information to the Admiralty.

H. M. S. "EREBUS" AND "TERROR."

The compasses of the vessels have been adjusted by Captain Johnson, and the most perfect arrangements made for the peculiar service in which the vessels of the Arctic expedition are to be engaged.

We annex, also, a portrait of the gallant Commander of the Expedition, who has already taken a share in three Expeditions to the North. Sir John Franklin is a native of Spilsby, in Lincolnshire, and was born in 1786. At the age of fourteen, he entered the Royal Navy, as midshipman, and was on board the Polyphemus when Nelson made his daring and resistless attack on the Danish line and batteries off Copenhagen, April 2, 1801. Franklin next sailed with Captain Flinders on his Voyage of Discovery on the coast of New Holland, in which he endured shipwreck. We pass over several other of Franklin's services, but must not omit that on board the Bellerophon, at the battle of Trafalgar. His first Expedition to the North was as commander of the Trent, in company with Captain Buchan, in the Dorothea, in 1818; both vessels returning in the same year.

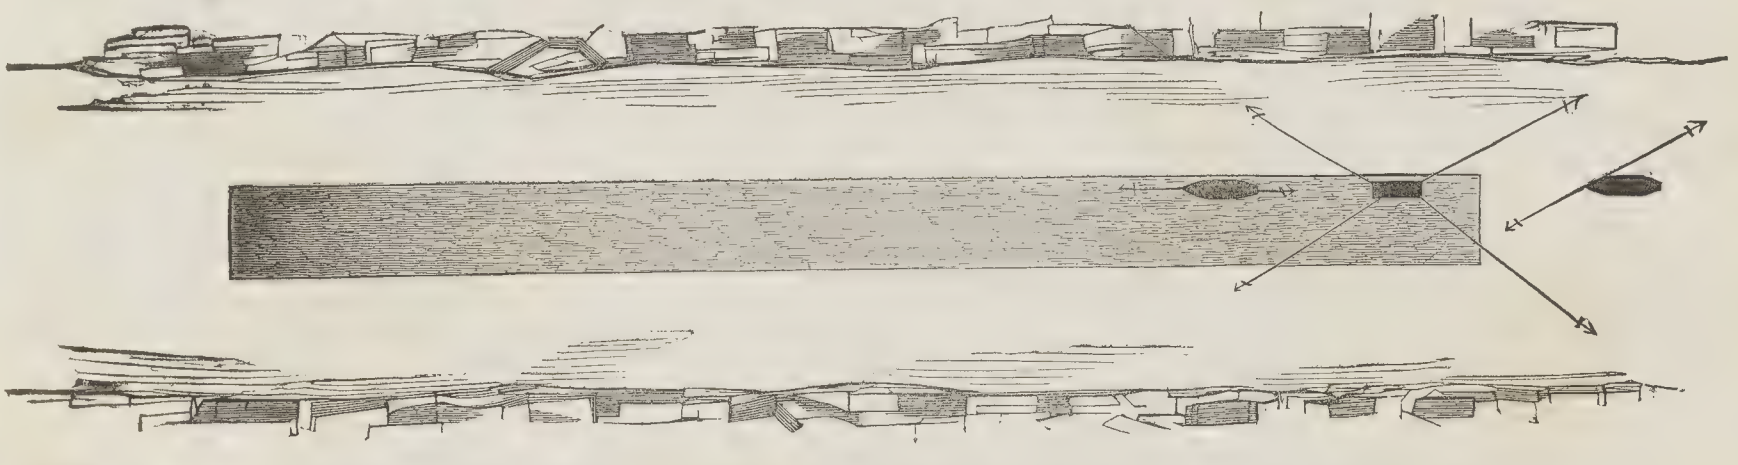
Lieutenant Franklin's next enterprise was in connection with an expedition of Lieutenant (now Sir W. E.) Parry; a journey by land, which, in point of severe and protracted suffering, has not been surpassed in the annals of discovery; he left England in May, 1820, and did not return till July, 1822. In February, 1825, he left Liverpool on a similar journey, and returned in September, 1827.

Captain Franklin was promoted to the rank of Commander in 1821, and to that of Post-Captain in 1822. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, and has published the results of his several expeditions. He married in 1823, Miss Porden, the daughter of the architect, William Porden, Esq.: this lady unhappily died of consumption, in her 30th year, in 1825.

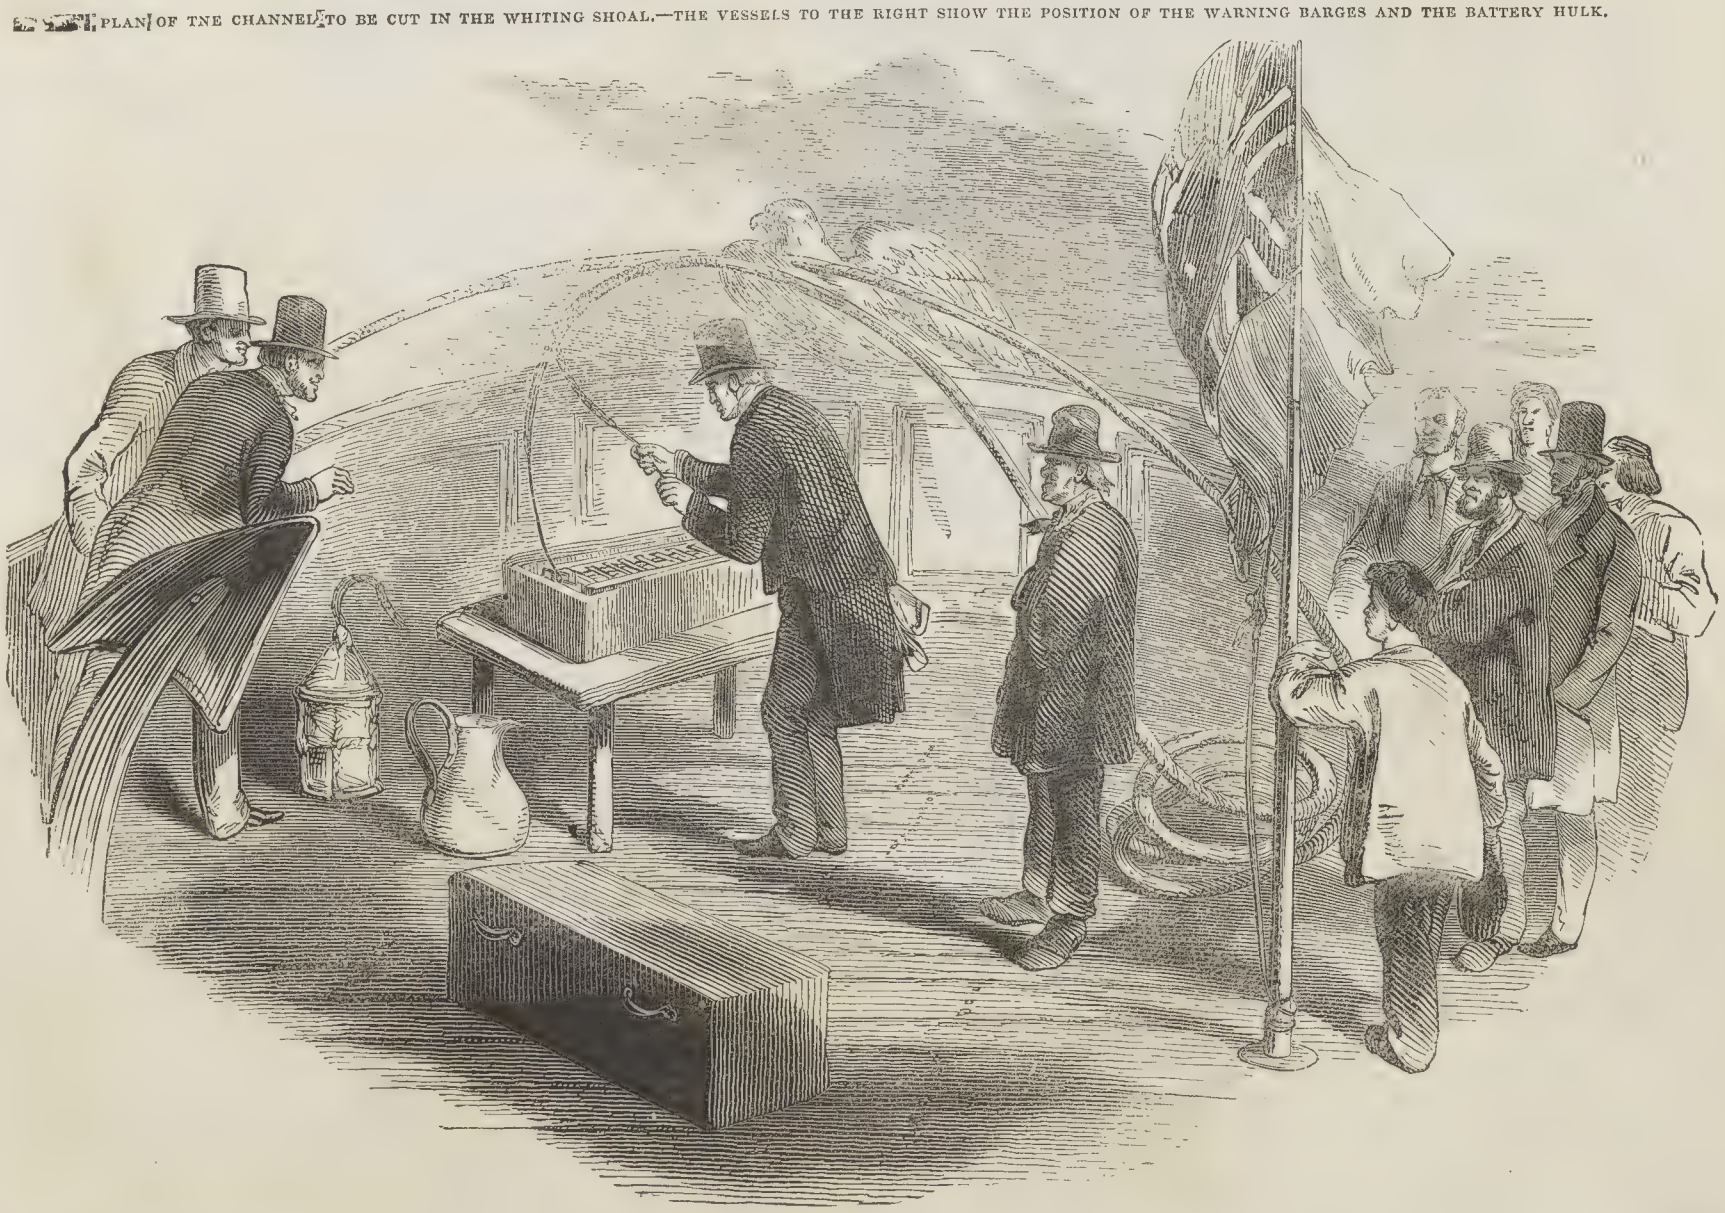
Our illustrations show the cabins of Captain Sir John Franklin, and Captain Fitzjames, in the Erebus. Sir John's cabin is in the stern of the vessel, and has double windows.

Among the external peculiarities of construction may be mentioned the following:—Round the outside of both vessels is a projection as far as the shrouds, inclosing the chains as a protection against the ice: it is flat on the surface, except at the bows, which form an angle. What is generally the figure head is a solid block of wood; the vessel is double, and the bows are a mass of timber about eight feet thick. The stern is nearly perpendicular, for unshipping the rudder; and an ice-board is raised above the bulwarks, which projects over the side, to aid in steering clear of the ice. The screw-propeller is worked by an engine of 25 horse power, which formerly ran upon the Greenwich Railway.

FRANKLIN'S CABIN, IN THE "EREBUS."



CAPT. FITZJAMES'S CABIN, IN THE "EREBUS."



NEWSPAPER

BLOWING UP OF THE WHITING SHOAL, LIMEHOUSE REACH.

PLAN OF THE CHANNEL TO BE CUT IN THE WHITING SHOAL.—THE VESSELS TO THE RIGHT SHOW THE POSITION OF THE WARNING BARGES AND THE BATTERY HULK.

FIRING THE TRAIN BY THE GALVANIC BATTERY

DREDGING MACHINE.

BLOWING-UP OF THE WHITING SHOAL, LIMEHOUSE REACH, ON TUESDAY LAST.

For some time past, seamen and voyagers by the Thames, on their passage to and from the Port of London, have had their curiosity in no small degree excited by the following startling announcement, posted in various conspicuous places on the river:—

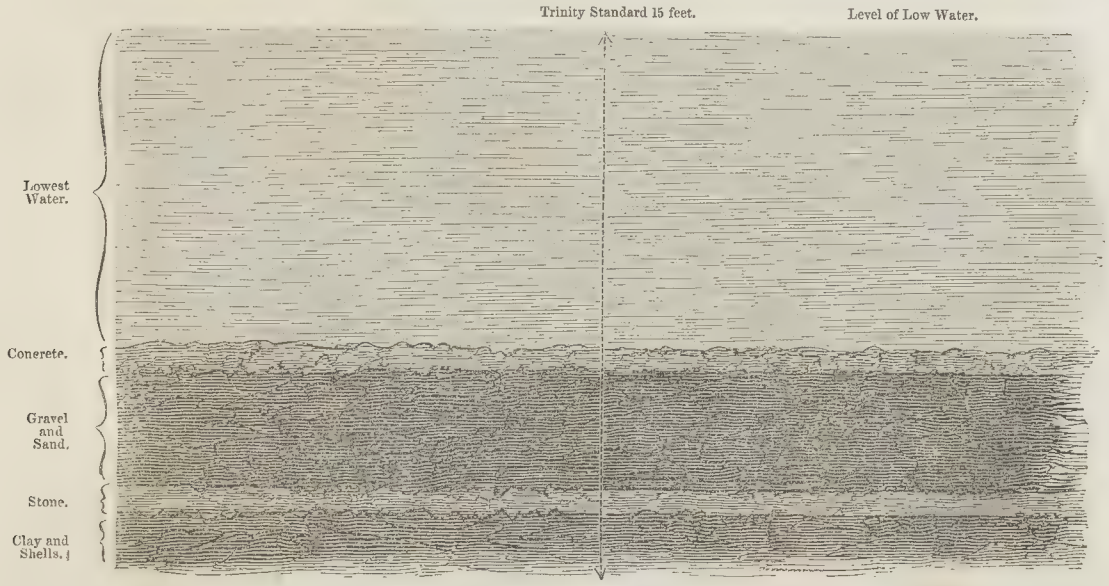
GIBBS, MAYOR.

PORT OF LONDON.

The Corporation of London being about to commence operations for the removal of a part of the Whiting Shoal, in Limehouse Reach, all vessels are hereby directed to take every precaution to keep clear of the two Government hulks and steam-engines employed in the work, and all vessels passing up or down the river are ordered to keep clear of them.

All steam vessels navigating that part of the river are strictly ordered to ease their steam in passing through Limehouse Reach.

As gunpowder will be used in the operations, the City Magazine Lighter will be distinguished by a Red Flag, with the word "GUNPOWDER" thereon.



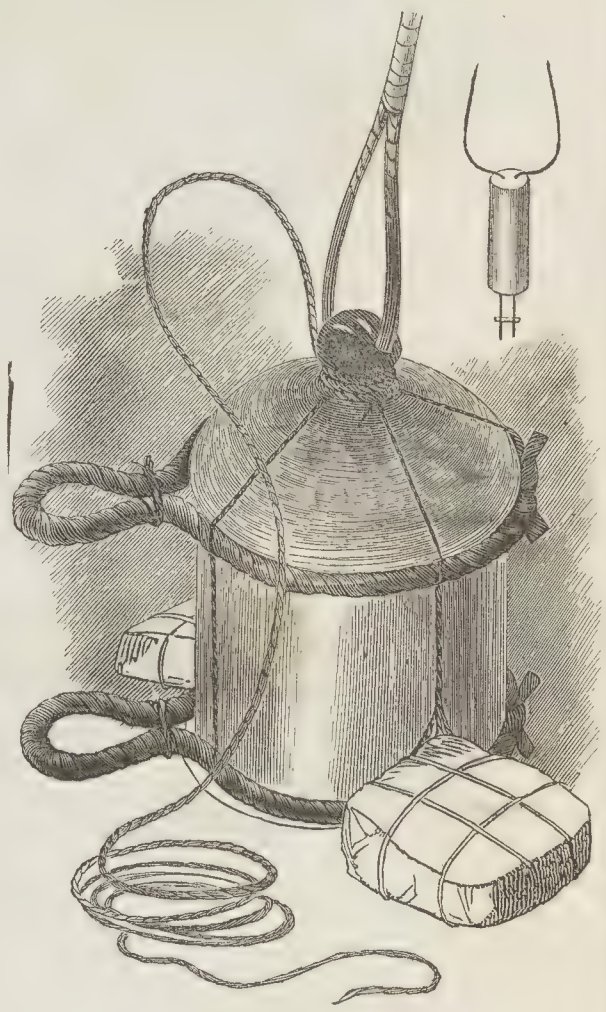
Lights will be hoisted on board the lighter at dark.

By Order of THE LORD MAYOR.

JOHN FISHER, R.N.

May 1, 1845. Principal Harbour-Master of the Port of London.

The interest raised by this extraordinary advertisement soon extended beyond the marine to the general public, who, being wholly unprepared for such a state of things in the easy-going Thames, were in a short time driven to entertain something like a feeling of alarm lest the flow of their majestic river should be in danger of suffering, even for a time, an impediment to its course. The "Whiting Shoal," "Government lighter," "steam-engines," "red flags," and "gunpowder," were words of ominous import, and seemed to indicate a case of serious difficulty. What could the matter be? A panic followed. Nor was the alarm ill founded; for it became known, on inquiry, that the depth of water in Limehouse Reach at low water had decreased from the Trinity standard of fifteen feet to the shallow measure of seven feet! a draught obviously insufficient for the regular course of navigation. This change in the depth of the stream it was discovered was owing to the gradual elevation of the bed of the river, by, it was believed, an accumulation of concrete gravel, gravel mixed with sand, a stone like what is known as "Yorkshire pavement," and green clay mixed with shells, the whole consolidated in greater or less degrees by what was conjectured to be the action of numerous petrifying springs. The shoal thus formed, extending a length of nearly half a mile, had long been under the anxious survey of the conservators of the river, for, since vessels of large burden, leaving Blackwall as their ultimate point of advance, had been towed up and down the river, it was ascertained that not only was their progress through the Reach of Limehouse impeded, but that, in many instances, large portions of their copper sheathing were torn away by abrasion. It was, therefore, resolved that the barrier should be removed; but, as the authorities were not well informed of the extremely indurated character of the materials of which it was composed, they only employed on the work one or more of the ordinary dredging machines, supposing that a few months' digging with their chains of spade-mouthed buckets would suffice for the clearance. In this, however, they were disappointed, for the substance of the rocky strata was found to be so hard, that, with the highest power they could bring to bear upon it, a few superficial chips only were removed. In this state of affairs, it was determined to resort to the use of gunpowder in effecting a series of grand submarine explosions on the sides and in the cavities of the shoal; and, to carry such an arrangement into prompt and irresistible effect, it was further determined to fire the mines by galvanic agency.



SECTION OF THE SHOAL AND RIVER, AT LOW WATER.

The first of these important experiments was publicly tried on the morning of Tuesday last, and with complete success. The command of the whole of the operations, and the invention and management of the apparatus, was committed to Captain Fisher, the Principal Harbour-Master of the City of London, assisted by the able Thames Engineer, Mr. May.

The arrangements were as follow:—At each end of the portion of the shoal, on which the explosion was to be made, a barge was moored, bearing flags, warning all vessels and boats to "keep clear." Between these, and at about one hundred feet from the point of intended explosion, a hulk was placed, containing the explosive apparatus, the charges, &c. &c., and in which Captain Fisher and his assistants were assembled. Beyond this, and near one of the flag-barges, a dredging machine waited, in readiness to raise the fragments of the shivered rock. The explosive apparatus consisted of a powerful galvanic battery, a coil of connecting wire, to transmit the shock, and two strongly-bound canisters, of forty-six pounds of gunpowder each.

A numerous company assembled to witness the result of the day's proceedings; the wharves and vessels in the neighbourhood were crowded with spectators; and many small steamers, laden with timid multitudes, hovered within sight, but at a safe distance from the "blow up." All things being in readiness, the gunpowder cannisters were connected with the conducting wire, and carried from the hulk, in a boat, to the spot to be blasted, where they were carefully lowered and deposited. The boat then withdrew, and the moment of anxiety was reached. Great excitement prevailed: a moment ended it; and a loud cheer proclaimed that Father Thames was relieved of a portion of his difficulties. Capt. Fisher, holding one wire on the left side of his battery, had but to bring the right side into connection with it, and the thing was done. He made the required motion—the wag of a finger was enough—and straightway the hulk in which he stood rocked from side to side, as if she had been struck from beneath by some tremendous power. The water, over the charge, rose in a dome-like form, maintained its position for a moment, and then fell in graceful eddies, which widened and dispersed. The shoal, it was discovered, was shattered by the explosion to the extent of some forty feet, leaving fifteen tons or more of broken lumps to be fished up by the dredging machine.

GUNPOWDER CANISTERS.

These operations will be continued from time to time, till a channel is cut through the centre of the shoal, to a depth of 8 feet, and a width of 100 feet; but the width is afterwards to be increased on the Poplar side to 150 feet.

Our engravings show:—1. The Scene of the Explosion. 2. A Plan of the Shoal. 3. A Section of the Strata of the Shoal. 4. One of the Gunpowder Cannisters prepared for Discharge. 5. The Scene on the Deck of the Engineers' hulk, at the Moment of Firing the Battery. 6. The Dredging Machine at Work.

In the conduct of these very difficult operations, great credit is due to Captain Fisher and all the gentlemen concerned, in bringing so important a matter to successful issue. The Captain is favourably known to the public as a Thames Clearer, by his famous experiment made some years since on the William and Mary, sunk off Tilbury Fort, when he fired 25 cwt. of gunpowder in effecting the dispersion of its timbers.

YORKSHIRE CHESS ASSOCIATION.

The annual celebration of the Yorkshire Chess Clubs was last week held at the Assembly Rooms in Leeds, and was attended not only by a large body of amateurs immediately connected with the Association, but by some of the most distinguished players from the metropolis and elsewhere. The tournament commenced shortly after ten in the morning, and was continued, with the intermission of a short time for luncheon, until six in the evening. Amongst the players present soon after the opening of the Rooms, we noticed—the Earl of Mexborough; Mr. Staunton, the champion Chess player; Mr. Bryan, from the Cercle des Echecs of Paris; Mr. G. Walker; Mr. Worrell, from the London Chess Club; Mr. Newham, President of the Nottingham Chess Club; and many of the leading members belonging to the clubs of Leeds, Huddersfield, Wakefield, Halifax, &c., &c.

During the day Mr. Staunton played respectively with many of the leading amateurs of the Association, including the Earl of Mexborough, Mr. Cadman, Mr. Silas Angas, Mr. Noyes, and Mr. R. Brown; giving to each of his opponents a piece. Some of these games were particularly admired, and, it is to be hoped, have been preserved.

Messrs. Newham and Walker supported their well-earned reputation by competing successfully with many of the northern players; and the sport was kept up with unflagging spirit on all sides until the hour appointed for dinner, when the combatants sat down to the enjoyment of a repast, which was furnished from the famed and extensive establishment—Scarborough's Hotel.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Mexborough occupied the chair, supported by Mr. Staunton and Mr. Bryan; the vice chair was filled by Alderman J. D. Luccock.

Upon the withdrawal of the cloth, and the production of a choice dessert, the Noble Chairman rose, and gave the first customary toast—"Her Majesty the Queen," which was drunk with three times three cheers, and followed by the National Anthem.

The Chairman next gave—"Prince Albert, and the rest of the Royal Family," which was received with loud cheers.

The Chairman then rose, and said—The next toast which he had the pleasure to propose was one which he felt confident would be responded to with enthusiasm. It was, "Success to the Yorkshire Chess Association." (Great cheering.) It was not an Association of long standing, but it was one in which every member felt a deep and personal interest; and proud and gratified they must all feel that day in seeing, amongst many other players of eminence, their champion, Mr. Staunton (tremendous cheering), the gentleman who had so nobly and so triumphantly carried the British Chess Flag into the very heart of France. (Great applause.) He (the Chairman) was but a poor player (cries of "No, no"), and he was not seldom unsuccessful. (Cries of "No, no.") He too often sat down with the conviction that he should lose, which was a sorry preparative for victory; and he wished he could once again recover the confidence of his boyish days, when in all his battles he felt animated by an assurance of success. ("Hear, hear," and applause.) However, whether winning or losing, he dearly loved the game of Chess; it had been his recreation in childhood, and he trusted it would be his solace in old age. (Cheers.) He would detain them no longer, but conclude by giving "The Yorkshire Chess Association, and Success to Chess in all parts of the world" (The toast was drank amidst the loudest acclamations, and a right English round of Kentish fire.)

Mr. W. L. Robinson returned thanks on behalf of the Yorkshire Chess Clubs for the honour they had received. In addition to the gratifying duty of thanking the assembled gentlemen for the interest they had manifested in the welfare of this Association, he had been deputed to propose the next toast, and he regretted his being so unworthy of the honour which had devolved upon him. To appreciate fully the highest excellence in others requires talent of no mean order in ourselves, and such as he could certainly lay no claim to. No less a critic than Aristotle was necessary to render justice to Homer, and a Chess player scarcely inferior to the gentleman whose health he was about to propose, was needed to appreciate, as they deserved, his splendid powers. (Great cheering.) Two hundred years ago, Spain was the favoured land of Chess; when a Lopez, a Paoli Boi, and other famous players, were invited to its court. During the greater part of the past century Italy was in the ascendant, and produced a Ponziani, an Ercole dal Rio, and a Lolli. France afterwards became the seat of the highest excellence in Chess. Mons. Legalle was a great player, and the master of the future Philidor; Philidor's mantle descended on Des Chappelles, who transmitted it to the late De La Bourdonnais, whose living and worthy successor is M. St. Amant. During this period Chess was much played in this kingdom, and both now and for many years past, it has boasted a greater number of second-rate players than any other country in Europe. But the Prince of Chess Players was always a foreigner; we had not a man whom we could commission to struggle for the wreath sure of his returning with victory. Now, however, we have such a man. (Enthusiastic cheering.) The Chess Champion, at length, is an Englishman. (Loud and long-protracted cheers.) "The health of Mr. Staunton, the Chess Champion (tremendous cheers), and, beyond all doubt, the head of the Chess world, and long may he continue so." (The toast was drank with three times three and one cheer more, and followed by long protracted cheers.)

Mr. Staunton rose, and was received with renewed applause. After the cheering had subsided, he begged most cordially and unaffectedly to thank the gentleman who had so eloquently proposed his health, and the company for the highly flattering manner in which they had responded to the proposition. Prior to his late indisposition, an after-dinner speech was an affair of but little moment; of late, however, his nerves had lost their tension, and he began to think that position was of as much importance in a post-prandial address as in the beautiful game they had that day assembled to celebrate. He experienced no difficulty in expressing his thoughts in tolerably perspicuous phraseology while seated, but, somehow, when he rose up now-a-days to speak, he found his tongue had lost its freedom, and his ideas lacked something of their clearness. This was the first time he had the pleasure of visiting their interesting association: he could confidently promise that, if health permitted, it should not be the last. (Loud cheers.) He had frequently had the gratifying duty to allude to the meetings of this society, and he would assure the members connected with it, that any assistance which it was in his power to give, they might freely command. (Hear, hear, and applause.) The success of this institution, fortunately, was no longer problematical. Such an assemblage as that before him—comprising not alone the members of the Yorkshire Clubs, but some of the most distinguished players of the day from other quarters—afforded a satisfactory guarantee for the stability and welfare of the Yorkshire Chess Association. (Applause,) Before he resumed his seat, he would take the liberty of trespassing on their attention for a moment, by alluding to a gentleman who had accompanied him from London for the purpose of being present at this meeting, and to whom he was personally under deep and lasting obligations. It was not unknown to the majority of gentlemen before him that a few months since he departed on his second expedition to confront the Chess Champion of France. It was equally known to most of them that he had scarcely reached the French metropolis when he was attacked by that terrible malady which brought him to death's door. (Hear, hear.) Few of them, however, were aware, that at this time, when helpless, prostrate, and almost hopeless, in a foreign country, and surrounded by strangers, Providence sent him a friend —a more than brother, in the person of Mr. Bryan, the gentleman then at their hospitable table. (Great cheering, which for some moments prevented Mr. S. from proceeding.) With a patience, a solicitude, an assiduity almost unexampled, for one whole month, he attended and ministered to his wants. At the end of that period, the moment his medical advisers gave permission for his removal, Mr. Bryan took him to his house. There for two months more he lavished on him every kindness which humanity could suggest, or his situation require; and when at length he had restored him safely again to his own country, not content with the manifold services before exhibited, he boldly took up his pen in defence of his cause against the mis-statements of his opponent, by the production of his well-known pamphlet, "The History of the Match." (Immense applause.) "I am," remarked Mr. Staunton, in conclusion, "I am quite inadequate, gentlemen, to acknowledge in befitting terms, my profound obligations to Mr. Bryan, and utterly incapable of requiting them. As a poor return for his rare goodness, I can only tender him my heartfelt thanks, and propose to you that we drink to his health and prosperity. In doing so, I beg to call upon this assembly to give that value to the compliment which, in its simple emanation from me, it does not possess. I venture to claim at their hands, such a response as Mr. Bryan richly deserves, and as will show to him the estimation in which his kindness to a brother Chess Player is held in this country. My Lord, Mr. Vice-President, and Gentlemen, permit me to propose "Long Life, Health, and Prosperity to Mr. Bryan." (The toast was drunk with the most enthusiastic acclamations.)

Mr. Bryan rose for the purpose of returning thanks, but was for some moments so overcome with emotion as to be unable to proceed. He thanked the noble chairman, Mr. Staunton, and the gentlemen around him, for the compliment they had paid him. He certainly had no idea that any little service he had rendered to Mr. Staunton could have merited such distinction. The honour was one which he should never forget. It was a tribute far beyond what he had ever expected, far beyond what he had deserved. (Cries of "No, no.") He begged to return his grateful thanks to the Yorkshire Association for the handsome manner in which his health had been drank. (Great applause.)

Mr. Clark said he had been deputed to propose a toast, but before doing so, he must take exception to the wording of it. He was called on to drink the "Health of Mr. Newham, and the Strangers who have honoured us with their presence." Now, he entertained a marked disrelish of that word "Strangers." It was a solecism among the true lovers of their noble game to talk of "Strangers." The past history of Chess would show them that the players of Chess were never strangers to each other, let them meet in whatever land they might. ("Hear, hear," and loud applause.) After alluding in eloquent and complimentary terms to Mr. Staunton, Mr. Newham, Mr. Walker, Mr. Angas, and other visitors, Mr. Clark concluded by giving the toast in an amended form—"Mr. Newham, and the Friends from a distance, who have honoured us with their company this day." (The toast was received with general applause.

Mr. Newham, in a neat and appropriate speech, acknowledged the compliment on the part of himself and the other visiting friends, and ended by proposing the health of Mr. Walker, who, he considered, had done more for Chess than any one of the day, by the publication of Chess works at a price within the reach of every body. (Mr. Walker's health was drank with great applause.)

Mr. Walker, in returning thanks, glanced at the progress Chess had made in this country during the last 20 years. To show what strides the noble art was making and the proficiency to which many players had attained, he need only allude to the fact, that, whilst, a few years back, there were scarcely any modern authors on the game, there were now able writers on the subject both here and on the Continent. The provinces bore testimony to the march of Chess by such publications as their townsman, Mr. Brown's, "Chess Problem" (hear, hear), and "The Souvenir of the Bristol Chess Club," a work which he had just seen. In illustration of the change which had taken place in this country on the subject of Chess, he mentioned that 20 years ago he and a gentleman met casually at an inn in Stratford-upon-Avon, and were desirous of enjoying a game, but were unable to find either board or men throughout the town. Now, however, there were plenty of both to be found there, and in the very room at the inn where he stopped on the night alluded to, there was regularly kept a board and set of Chess-men. (Applause). After adverting to the strength of country Chess players, and favourably mentioning the names of two Yorkshiremen distinguished for their prowess at the game, Mr. Gaskell and Mr. Marmaduke Wyvill, Mr. Walker concluded by proposing the health of Mr. Wilson. (Drank with much applause.)

Mr. E. Cronhelm and Mr. Newham, as personal friends of Mr. Wilson, returned thanks.

Mr. Church then proposed "M. St. Amant and the Paris Chess Club." (Applause.)

Mr. Walker returned thanks on behalf of M. St. Amant.

Mr. Nieburg then rose, and, in a powerful speech, which we deeply regret our limits will not permit us to give, proposed the health of their Noble Chairman. (The toast was drunk with musical honours and received with loud and long protracted cheering.)

The Chairman, in a humorous and eloquent address, replied to the toast, and gave "The Ladies."

This toast was received with the Kentish fire and responded to by Mr. Hamilton Richardson, who proposed the health of Mr. Alderman Luccock, their Vice President.

Mr. Luccock replied, and took occasion to call the attention of the company to the distressed condition of Mrs. Sarratt, the aged and almost destitute widow of the celebrated player, who at present was living in Paris.

Mr. Walker gave some details to prove the very deplorable condition in which Mrs. Sarratt, at 85 years of age, was placed.

Mr. Staunton remarked that the English players had been reproached by a writer in "Le Palaméde," for their apathy on the subject of Mrs. Sarratt, but the truth was her condition had never been clearly made known to them. Upon the principle bis dat qui cito dat, he begged to propose an immediate subscription and would take leave to put down his guinea as a humble mite towards the present relief of the unfortunate lady.

The subscription plate was then handed round, and, in a few minutes, we understood 15 pounds were collected.

After a few more toasts, and some admirable singing by the Noble Chairman, the company resumed their mimic warfare until a late hour, when the party seperated, all evidently delighted with the entertainment they had enjoyed.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

Since the days of Mozart another and totally different school of music has replaced that of which he was one of the brightest ornaments. Rossini—whose rebellion against the conventional rules and trammels of art, as they then existed, and whose exuberance and variety of fancy created, from the commencement of his career, such a revolution in the musical world—laid its foundation. His followers, who, as usual with imitators, have exaggerated his peculiarities, often laying hold of his defects alone, have since divided into two classes, who, till lately, have held a complete sway over all musical composition: the sentimental school, headed by Bellini, whose operas, with the better ones of Donizetti, have served as a text whereon each successive composer of this school has laid a fresh embroidery, and then presented as his own; and the scientific school, full of the strong contrasts, the powerful, but exaggerated, orchestral effects which characterize the compositions of Meyerbeer. Both these styles of music, so widely different, are yet equally opposed to the severely classical operas of the days of Mozart; and, however much the change may, in many cases, be lamented, it is no less certain that our ears must sometimes detect a degree of baldness and monotony of style, and a want of fullness of accompaniment in those compositions which our fathers heard with unmixed delight. Of all these works "Don Giovanni," however, is the one that has most successfully defied the hand of time, which, in an art constantly progressing like music, must bring such important changes. We hear, with a new feeling of delight, music whose very simplicity ensures its perfection. It has all the unaffected majesty of a painting of Raffaele; no glaring contrasts of light and shade are employed, as in the pictures of Rembrandt, to gloss over incorrectness of drawing or defects of style—no meretricious ornament, as in those of a later school, to conceal poverty of idea.

We have already expressed our opinion of the cast of this opera, as now performed at her Majesty's Theatre. We have only to regret that Madame Rita Borio, with whose admirable reading of the ungracious part of Elvira we were on Tuesday still more forcibly struck than on a first hearing, was on Thursday disabled by indisposition. The return of another fair and favourite dancer on Thursday is, however, in the opinion of the amateurs of choregraphy (who form so large a proportion of the Opera frequenters) the striking feature in the past week's performances. The crowd of attractions in the ballet her Majesty's Theatre now possesses is, indeed, beyond precedent. Three of the first danseuses in the world now appear in combination at this theatre: the Queen of the Dance, Taglioni, is expected ere long, and will complete a quatuor certainly unrivalled on any stage. Great must be the embarrassment occasioned, we should imagine, behind the curtain, by the rival claims of so many fair candidates for supremacy. To the public, however, who are in happy ignorance of the heart-burnings and jealousies necessarily excited, the effect is one of unmixed satisfaction. "Esmeralda," in which Carlotta Grisi made her re-appearance on Thursday, certainly deserves its popularity, as one of the most effective of ballets. It possesses all the materials for success—brilliancy and warmth of colouring, dramatic interest, variety of scene and incident, with but few of those longueurs, which are the delight of ballet-masters, and the bane of ballets. "La Carlotta," as archly pretty as ever, is seen to great advantage in "Esmeralda." Nothing can be more graceful than the "Truandaise," as danced by her and Perrot, whose peculiar talent and expressive pantomime in this ballet find full scope.

Those who attended her Majesty's Theatre last Thursday no doubt said to themselves, as they left the theatre, "We have had an allowance of pleasure greater than any frequenter of the Italian Opera will ever enjoy again." On Thursday next, however, the bill of fare will be still more extraordinary. Lablache will triumph in his favourite part of Don Pasquale, seconded by Grisi, Mario, and Fornasari. The last act of "Linda di Chamouni" will produce the soul-stirring tenor Moriani, and the exquisite songstress Castellan, in new parts, and in an opera not performed for three seasons; and Cerito will appear in a new ballet of her own composition. But to this bill of fare must be added some accessory dishes of no common attraction: Cerito will have to vie with Lucile Grahn and Carlotta Grisi, just arrived; and the little Viennese fairies will perform two new steps—the "Oriental" and a Polka—of which no Polkists, and they are numberless, ever dreamt.

PRINCESS'.

On Tuesday evening another translation was produced at this house, called "The Chevalier de St. George," being an adaptation of a piece of the same name lately played at the St. James's Theatre, during the engagement of M. Lafont, in which that admirable comedian sustained the principal character. The hero is a coloured slave, of varied accomplishments; not, however, those which we now associate with a "nigger," such as playing on the banjo, singing "The Boatman Dance," and dancing the "Virginny Breakdown," but a perfect Creole Crichton, who gains a high position in France, about the time of Louis XVI., by his talents and address; and ultimately succeeds in marrying a certain beautiful Countess, who had been attached to him some years before. There is a class of French pieces all of which closely resemble one another; and this is one of them. They are composed of powdered perukes, lettres de cachet, intrigues, recriminating interviews, challenges, and reconciliations, with a great deal of sentiment, and not much situation. In the present instance, the plot would have been somewhat tedious but for the inimitable acting of Mr. Wallack, and, we may add, Mrs. Stirling. We saw Lafont in this character, but have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Wallack was fully equal to him; indeed, in the second act, his performance was certainly more forcible and effective. The other parts were carefully sustained by Messrs. Granby, Heild, and Oxberry. The latter gentleman, as Jujube—a jealous cook who challenges the Chevalier—was especially amusing; and an incident, in which his adversary loads his pistol with a horse-shoe nail, and flinging Jujube's bonnet de coton into the air, fires at it and fixes it to the sign of the inn, was exceedingly well contrived. The applause at the end was very general, and Mr. Wallack, with Mrs. Stirling, appeared to receive the approbation of the audience. The house was not so full at first price as we could have wished to have seen it. The divertissement of Le Printemps followed, in which Mr. Gilbert, Miss Ballen, and their clever little coadjutors, the Marshals, delighted the audience by their excellent dancing. What a pity, with such an effective corps, that the lessee does not produce a grand ballet, which would be sure to draw larger audiences than the present anomalous entertainments. We remember the capital manner in which "Giselle" was brought out here two or three seasons back; and believe that "Esmeralda" would prove equally attractive. There are hundreds and thousands of playgoers to whom the inside of the Opera is unknown; but they would go eagerly to see its ballets at an English theatre, if produced with the same liberality, and attention to detail, that characterised "Giselle."

SADLER'S WELLS.

Trudging from central London to the precincts of the New River Head (even in the cause of the legitimate drama) during the present uncomfortable weather, with the state of the streets, defying all description, is no joke; a visit, therefore, to Sadler's Wells is the greater compliment to the admirable management of Mrs. Warner and Mr. Phelps And we are happy to say that a new five act play, entitled "The King's Friend," brought out here on Wednesday evening, was perfectly successful, as indeed it deserved to be, being excellently written, equally well acted, and very carefully put on the stage. The time chosen, is during the reign of Henri Quatre, soon after the battle of Ivry, when insurrection was rife, and the army grumbling for want of pay; and this position of things affords the situations for a very interesting plot, in which the King chiefly figures, aided by his brave and faithful servant the Marquis de Rosny, afterwards Duke of Sully. The character of Henri was acted with great spirit by Mr. Phelps; indeed we have seldom seen him to more advantage: and Mr. Henry Marston was unusually effective as the sturdy, honest, Rosny: Miss Cooper had a good part to sustain in Katherine, a girl who assists the King, at the risk of compromising her own honour: and Mrs. Warner played Madame Chateaupers, Rosny's intended wife, with great judgment. Mr. G. Bennet had an eccentric rôle, as Le Seigneur de Fresne, and was loudly applauded: in fact we can speak in terms of the highest commendation of all the dramatis personæ. The curtain fell amidst loud cheering, and the principal characters appeared before it. There was also a loud call for the author, whose name, however, did not reach us, but he has reason to be satisfied with the success of his piece. The scenery, by Messrs. F. Fenton and Finlay, deserves especial commendation. A garden, with a fountain playing in it, by moonlight, in the third act, was remarkably well arranged and painted: and there were several interiors equally meritorious.

The theatres have been very well attended during the past week, partly on account of their attractive performances—partly from the number of strangers at present in London. Madame Thillon's indisposition has, however, been a serious affair for the DRURY-LANE treasury. On Saturday the theatre was closed; on Monday and Tuesday some old operas were played, and on Wednesday and Thursday the house was again shut. Madame Thillon was announced to appear on Friday.

The HAYMARKET has been filled nightly, even to the refusal of money at the doors, in consequence of the success of Mr. Jerrold's comedy; and Mr. Wright's representation of Paul Pry, at the ADELPHI, does equally good service to the managerial state.

The LYCEUM, with its gorgeous burlesque, and other attractions, is crowded every evening, and the thirty English children, with the charming little girl who dances in the "pas de deux," are applauded to the echo. The lavish expenditure on "Cinderella" has met with an adequate return; and the spirited management appears determined not to repose idly on the laurels, for every representation exhibits some addition to, or improvement in, the already costly details.

At the OLYMPIC a very beautiful little boy, scarcely five years of age, has made his début as the Infant Orpheus, singing "By the Sad Sea Waves," and "Where the Bee Sucks," with a power, taste, and articulation perfectly astonishing. We are generally very averse to these forced high-pressure prodigies, but confess to have been charmed by this little fellow's performance. His manners are most engaging and graceful.

It is really worth a walk over the water to the SURREY, to see the very admirable manner in which every department of this well-managed establishment is conducted. In a new piece, "The Old Fleete Prison," the costumes and scenery would do credit to any theatre in London; and the acting of the excellent company is deserving of all praise. There is also a "strong man," to whom we have before alluded, but his performance is more wonderful than agreeable.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. Robert Strickland—an admirable actor, long a member of the Haymarket Company, at the early age of forty-eight. We could "have better spared a better man." In his peculiar line, Mr. Strickland was unequalled. His last part was Professor Truffles, in "Time Works Wonders," which, during his illness, was undertaken by Mr. Webster. Mr. Robert Halford, who played several seasons at the Olympic, and Mr. Paul, a low comedian and clown, have also died during the past week.

The Belgian Operatic Company have announced their intended performances at Covent Garden Theatre, under the management of M. Laurent.

MUSIC.

ANCIENT CONCERTS.

The fifth concert for the season took place on Wednesday night, under the direction of his Grace the Duke of Wellington. Conductor, Sir H. R. Bishop; Leader, Mr. Loder; Organ, Mr. Lucas. The programme did honour to his Grace's judgment and taste, and contained a rich treat of well-selected morceaux from the best of the deceased masters. The first novelty was Staudigl's performance of Martin Luther's Hymn, which was as solemn and impressive as anything can be imagined. The new singer, Pischeck, was truly grand in the scena from Gluck's "Iphegenia in Aulis," and received the most rapturous applause we ever recollect to have heard bestowed upon any vocalist. In his duet (from "Fidelio") with Staudigl, he was equally great; the power of the two voices was astonishing at the close of the duet. In Stradella's "Preghiera" (1680), Herr Pischeck still made greater claims upon the universal applause and delight of the room. The name of the unfortunate Stradella is sufficient to awake all the sympathies of a romantic mind; his interesting but tragical story will be found beautifully detailed in "Burney's History of Music." It has more than once been made the subject of lyric tragedy, but its resources are still open to the exercise of higher powers than have been hitherto employed upon it. Brambilla and Caradori, as is their wont, sang beautifully, and a débutante, a Mdlle. Vera, made a favourable impression in Gluck's celebrated "Che faro." Handel's magnificent choruses, "Worthy is the Lamb" (Messiah), and "From the Censor" (Solomon), terminated respectively the first and second parts, and, being magnificently performed, were truly sublime in their effect. The sixth concert will be on Wednesday next under the direction of his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

MR. H. BRINDLEY PHILLIPS'S CONCERT.

This gentleman gave his first Concert on Tuesday last, and, from the various selections, not only from the standard compositions of the best masters, but from his own MSS., gave a guarantee that a similar treat will be conferred upon his friends and the public in the routine of each musical season. His fantasia upon airs from "The Bohemian Girl" elicited the loudest applause and encore, which was modestly declined by the author, no doubt in consideration of the many other demands upon their enthusiastic reception which he had to bring forward in the course of the concert. Altogether, it was a most successful début concert, and reflects the highest credit upon the beneficiaire, both as a performer and composer.

NEW MUSIC.

THE OPERA OF THE ENCHANTRESS; composed by Mr. W. BALFE. Chappell, New Bond-street.

"She is Seen Where the Vapours of Morn Arise." Ballad, sung by Signor Borrani. A descriptive ballad, in 12-8 time. A flowing melody, with some ingenious harmonies, particularly in the second verse.

"Woman's Heart." Romance, sung by Madame Anna Thillon. The gem of the opera; full of expression and grace. Madame Thillon's performance of it was the perfection of elegance and ease in the lyric art. It cannot fail to be an universal favourite.

"When this Enchantment I Behold." Song, sung by Mr. W. Harrison. The false accentuation of the words mars this otherwise pretty song. The faulty instances are too numerous to be pointed out; besides, they are glaring, and cannot fail to make themselves conspicuous.

"The Young Nadir"—Sicilienne. Sung by Madame Anna Thillon. A very brilliant composition, which requires the most delicate powers of execution in the true performance. Still we recommend it as a charming vocal exercise.

"She Loves Him." Song, sung by Sig. Borrani. A nice graceful flowing melody, with a moving accompaniment, which one would have thought would have put more life into the sombre Borrani.

"When Slumber's Pinions O'er Me Play." Ballad sung by Mr. W. Harrison. Not very original; but still elegant, and abounding with phrases of flowing and natural melody.

"Oh! Hither Plume thy Wing." Cavatina sung by Mr. W. Harrison. A very elegant aria in the Italian school. The accompaniment is florid, but still subservient to the simplicity of the vocal part.

"The Love almost Sublime I Felt." Trio, sung by Madame Anna Thillon, Mr. W. Harrison, and Signor Borrani. An effective composition in E flat, equally fitted to the chamber, the concert room, or the stage.

DOCTOR JOHNSON RESCUING OLIVER GOLDSMITH FROM HIS LANDLADY.

"I received one morning a message from poor Goldsmith that he was in great distress, and begging that I would come to him as soon as possible. I sent him a guinea, and promised to come to him directly. I accordingly went to him as soon as I was dressed, and found that his landlady had arrested him for his rent, at which he was in a violent passion. I perceived that he had already changed my guinea, and had got a bottle of Madeira and a glass before him. I put the cork into the bottle, desired that he would be calm, and began to talk to him of the means by which he might be extricated. He then told me that he had a novel ready for the press, which he produced to me. I looked into it, and saw its merit; told the landlady I should soon return; and, having gone to a bookseller's, sold it for sixty pounds."——It was the "Vicar of Wakefield."—Boswell's Life of Johnson. *

'Tis ever so!—bright genius cannot brook
The care for gold, in the gold-keeping sense,
Nor crouch beneath the money-loving look
Which fain would freeze away its soul intense!
Some crushing climax comes; and then the heart
Borrows a bright coin from some friendly mine,
And changes it! so that the vanish'd part
May blend its spirit with a cup of wine!

All-glorious Goldsmith! you did this when Fate
Scowl'd on your splendid soul, and Poor-man's doom
Forbad the aspiring heart to be elate,
And plunged the Poet in the Pauper's gloom!
Deserted, like your Village,—that no more
Deserted can be, now we love your strain,—
You bade old frowning Friendship ope his door,
And, though he frown'd, you did not bid in vain!

The stern man loved you, and the pompous bless'd;
And the kind good man (there were three in one)
Sent you the shining guinea he possess'd,
With word that he—true gold!—would follow soon!
You changed the coin—with poetry's young thought,
That would spend genius in that careless way!
Dear liberal Goldsmith!—you did what you ought,
And the wine's hallowed that baptized that day!

Sententious Johnson came—the giant-word
Made half oracular by social fame!—
And the old man, because his love was stirred,
Plunged in thy lolling chair his ponderous frame;
Without a thought of vanity:—he flung
Away that painted blessing of his life,
And wedded—with his very spirit stung—
Thy poverty, good Goldsmith! and thy strife!

Nay he did more—he dar'd to cork the flask
That warm'd thee,—and forbad the generous wine,
And calmness from thy poet-soul would ask
With "what good can I do for thee or thine?"
So you stole forth a written book and said
"Here's a life-story that but waits the press
I think it would be almost lov'd if read—"
"It shall be read Sir—Fools could ask no less!"

Then the old gladiator—whose sharp tongue
Was like a thousand swords in its gruff spite,
Put on the enthusiasm of a young
And ardent Spirit in its fresh delight
As he pored o'er your quite leaves.—And you?
Press'd, tortur'd, anxious, with a soul of gloom,
What in your poet-frenzy did you do?
Sit down and watch in that man's eye your doom!

Thank God for intellect! the Goldsmith stood
Upon the brink of Fortune's frowning hour,
With the world's misery curdling in his blood
That damp'd with poverty the poet's power!
—The abusing woman and the bailiff pair,
Quick with the furious cry for unpaid gold!—
But he—the Poet—sought his vigil-chair,
With grief subservient, and with brain unsold!

And cared not for the venal waiting crew
Who hung around him! To the annoyance blind,
He fixed his heart's eye on the being who
Was scanning halt the mystery of his mind!
She—the dull woman—might have seiz'd away
A mine of diamonds for her wretched debt;
And he—let that entranced gaze bear sway
O'er all his faculties, nor miss it yet!

Goldsmith was lost in Johnson! trembling up
To the approval of his critic mind!
Like a wine lover bending o'er his cup,
And to all other taste and perfume blind.
What cares he for the wrong he hopes redress'd?
What for the minions who about him crowd?
The poet's heart is beating at his breast;
The poet's pulse is earnest, quick, and loud!

Till the Old Oracle is up and gone,
Leaving his half-enraptured friend alone!
For the world-puppets, with their work half done,
Left—when they heard his altered voice and tone,
And waited till the burly man should come
With the big money to assuage their pain,
And leave them passionless—and make them dumb
With neither rage nor feeling, save for gain!

And when the Poet's friend returned, the book
Was sold, the debt paid, and the money given!
Great God! that volume many an ill soul shook,
Snatched it from Sin, and wing'd it up to Heaven!
While the poor Poet, labouring for mankind,
Was hunted for the price of shelter, he Left Wakefield's Vicar in return behind,
And clothed his name in immortality!

* The whole of this subject—so interesting to literary minds—has been beautifully illustrated in a popular picture painted by E. M. Ward, and, we believe, engraved by Bellin.

SINGULAR OCCURRENCE AT BRISTOL.—During the thunder-storm on Saturday week a remarkable circumstance occurred to two sisters, daughters of a professional gentleman of Bristol. One of them was at a house in Bristol when the lightning entered the drawing room in which she was sitting, and struck her on the head, causing a lump to rise upon it almost instantaneously, depriving her of the sight of the left eye for a considerable time, and drawing the mouth aside, as if she had been attacked by paralysis. Fortunately, with the exception of a degree of numbness on the left side, she has recovered from the effects of the injury. Her sister was at a friend's house, about five miles from Bristol, and, at nearly the same period at which the above occurrence took place, the lightning entered the room in which she and the family were at dinner, the paper was torn from the walls, part of the skirting-boards also torn away, and a gun which was in the room (happily charged with powder only) exploded; but, most providentially, none of the party sustained any personal injury.

SUDDEN DEATH IN THE STREETS.—On Tuesday, Mr. Baker held an inquest at the London Hospital, on the body of Mrs. Sarah Baker, aged sixty-seven years. Deceased was the wife of Mr. William Baker, residing at No. 13, Selby-street, Waterloo-town, Bethnal green. On Monday evening last she was walking along the Whitechapel road, when she suddenly entered the shop of Mr. Pounceby, bookseller, 227, Whitechapel-road, and immediately sunk down in a chair in a state of insensibility. Mr. Pounceby sent for a surgeon, who on his arrival pronounced life to be quite extinct. Verdict, "Died by the visitation of God."

WALTON CHURCH, STAFFORD, STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

WALTON CHURCH STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

On the morning of Friday, the 9th inst., the village of Walton, near Stafford, was visited by a sharp thunder storm; but, singular to relate, only one clap of thunder was heard, and one flash of lightning seen. The fluid struck the spire of the church, and destroyed the greater part of it, and melted the iron spouts on the south-west side, together with the glass and lead in the windows, and shattered the window-sills; a portion of the roof was likewise greatly shattered. Some men at work near the church witnessed the work of destruction, but were not themselves injured. An obliging Correspondent visited the spot on the morning of Monday following the event, and made the annexed north-west view of the church: it was a neat structure in the pointed style, and was the last built by the late Thomas Trubshaw, Esq., F.A.S.

Penny Postage.—The finance accounts just published show a large increase in the revenue of the Post-office. The gross revenue for the year 1844 was £1,705,067, giving an increase of more than £84,000, as compared with 1843; the net revenue was £719,957, giving an increase of nearly £80,000, as compared with 1843. The apparent increase in 1844, taking the returns for 1843 as the standard, is, in each case, more than double the amount here given; but those returns gave the revenue, both gross and net, too low by about £85,000. The actual increase of net revenue in 1844 is greater than for any year since the war, except 1825, when it was £92,000, and 1836, when it was £81,000. From 1840 (the first year of penny postage) to 1844, the increase of net revenue is nearly 50 per cent.

Pedestrian Feat.—On Monday morning, J. E. Molloy, the celebrated runner, undertook for a wager to run round and over the seven bridges, and round the enclosure of St. James's Park, in one hour and ten minutes. Shortly before seven o'clock he commenced his task at Vauxhall-bridge, round and over Westminster, and then round the park, and ultimately ended on the Surrey side of London-bridge. He completed his task in about fifty minutes. On coming in he did not appear distressed. The distance is computed to be about nine miles.

The Officers of the Royal Horse Guards v. the Etonians.—This match was played in the shooting fields of Eton College on Saturday last. The Etonians were beaten in one innings. The score stood 168 for the former, and 171 for the Royal Horse Guards.

THE GRAVESEND AND ROCHESTER RAILWAY.

It may be interesting to the lover of holiday trips to know that a railway has lately been opened from Gravesend to Rochester; for the land communication between these places has not hitherto been of "the first class" of expedition.

Our illustration shows the Gravesend Terminus of this new chemin de fer. It is built of wood, by the side of the Canal, near the Basin at Milton; the line of rail is single, and is laid parallel with the Canal, upon the old towing-path, with the exception of about half a mile near Higham, where it diverges for about that distance, and again joins the Canal at the entrance of a Tunnel two miles and a quarter in length; and, with another station some hundred yards beyond, by the side of the road to Friendsbury. Opposite the Station is a short pier, where passengers may embark on board a small steamer for Chatham. The time occupied by the transit is about thirty-five minutes. In the Tunnel, the rails are laid upon a row of framing and piles driven into the bed of the Canal; sufficient room being left as water-way for barges. The Rochester Station is at Stroud.

To these descriptive notes let us append a livelier glance at the Railway, from a very smartly-written contribution in Fraser's Magazine for the present month: it is entitled "A Holiday Trip to Gravesend and Rochester;" and is throughout a very piquant paper.

We have said that there is a railway at Gravesend; this railway runs to Rochester, and is within ten minutes' walk of the pier. Sound your pockets, and, if there is an odd sixpence to spare, you can get to Rochester. Sixpence there, and sixpence back; the thing is cheap enough!—nay, look not at your watch, or run to get a peep at a clock, dodging in at a shop-door in the way, you have plenty of time before you, the train will take you in twenty minutes, box you up in a dark tunnel for half the time, and then let you loose on the Medway, with the city of Rochester before you; a curious inn-yard or two, such as will set you thinking of Shakspeare, a noble old cathedral, and a still nobler castle. If you are fond of architecture, of castle and cathedral antiquities, and have never been to Rochester before, we promise you a treat, and ask nothing of you in return but that you send others to see what you have seen.

Every thing is conducted on the Rochester railway in the primitive style of railway travelling. You will really be amused with what you see. Two full-grown policemen and a bevy of boys, dressed up in the left-off garments of a lady's page, constitute the force on duty at the Gravesend station. As soon as you are in, they lock the door on your right (now that Sydney Smith is dead), and leave the door on your left open. We made some inquiries about this of one of the two full-grown policemen, and were informed that a whole string of carriage doors had been smashed in the tunnel during the first week that the railway was open. The tunnel, it appears, is very narrow, and several curious travellers had opened the doors in the tunnel, to see what the place was like. The doors were in a moment torn from off their hinges, and the travellers' heads all but torn from off their shoulders. "But the other door is open, Sir," said the policeman. "Oh, very well," was our reply; and so the matter rested. It was at this time we heard the policeman addressing a superior attendant with—"May I trouble you to ring the bell?" "Certainly," was his reply. The bell rang a kind of kitchen ring, and the train went off at an easy rate along the banks of a canal. We were so much amused with this polite but "early English style" of conducting business, that we never gave ourselves time to think of the chances of the train upsetting, or the carriages being overturned on the unlocked side. This thought was very disagreeably supplied by a fellow-traveller, who, as soon as we entered the tunnel, informed us, in an unkindly whisper, "The canal goes through the tunnel, too, Sir: you cannot see it; but it runs, I assure you, on the unlocked side." A squeamish old lady near us half fainted at what she overheard: indeed, we were rather alarmed ourselves; for a canal to get out of on the other side was really something as bad as a locked-up door. However, we got to Rochester without an accident, though, we must confess, with some misgivings whether it was prudent to return the same way.

GRAVESEND AND ROCHESTER RAILWAY.—GRAVESEND TERMINUS.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS LATELY DECEASED.

WILLIAM SHULDHAM, ESQ.

In our last week's paper we announced the death, at the patriarchal age of 102, of William Shuldham, Esq., of Marlesford Hall, in the county of Suffolk. This venerable and much respected gentleman was born 16th July, 1743, and consequently lived through five reigns, commencing with that of George II., and during, perhaps, the most eventful period of English history. His death is deeply lamented in the neighbourhood where he so long resided, and where he fulfilled the duties of a country gentleman in the most exemplary manner. Up to the period of his last illness, Mr. Shuldham preserved his faculties unimpaired, and we have seen in the hands of a friend of ours a letter written by him a few weeks before his death, in a plain, strong hand, and in a clear lucid style. The ancient family he represented was of Saxon origin, and appears to have been one of those which compounded with the Conqueror for the quiet possession of their lands. So early as the reign of Henry III., Sir William de Shuldham, Knt., was Lord of Shuldham, in Norfolk, and in that, as in the neighbouring county of Suffolk, his descendants have remained seated to the present time.

Mr. Shuldham, whose death we record, married, in 1786, Mary, daughter of Robert Barber, Esq., of Boyton, and by her, who still survives at, we believe, the advanced age of ninety, had (with two daughters, Frances Mary, the late wife of William Frederic Schreiber, Esq., of Round Wood, near Ipswich, and Louisa) two sons, the eldest of whom, William Abraham Shuldham, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, alone survives. The younger, Lemuel Shuldham, Cornet in the Scots Greys, fell at Waterloo, in the first charge made by Ponsonby's Brigade: his body, found the morning after the battle, far advanced in the French lines, was buried on the spot.

LORD CARBERY.

John Evans Freke, Baron Carbery of Carbery in the County of Cork, a Baronet of Ireland, and an Irish Representative Peer, was the son of Sir John Evans Freke, Bart., and grandson of the Hon. John Evans, youngest son of George, first Lord Carbery; he was born the 11th Nov., 1765: he succeeded to his father's baronetcy in 1777, and to the honours of the house of Carbery on the demise of his cousin, the fifth baron, the 4th March, 1807.

THE LATE LORD CARBERY.

The ancient family of Evans, represented by the Lords Carbery, is of Welsh origin: it was seated in Caermarthenshire, and thence removed to Ireland in the reign of James I. The creation of the Peerage of Carbery dates the 9th May, 1715.

John, the sixth and late Baron, the subject of this notice, was, whilst Sir John Freke, a distinguished member of the Irish Parliament before the Union. That measure he strongly opposed, on religious grounds, deeming it likely to lead to the ascendancy of the Catholic party in Ireland. He was president of the celebrated Anti-Union Club. His lordship married, the 25th Jan., 1783, his cousin Catharine Charlotte, third daughter of Arthur, second Earl of Arran. He died on Monday, the 12th instant. Having had no issue, he is succeeded by his nephew, George Patrick Percy, now seventh Baron Carbery.

ROBERT BRANSBY COOPER.

Robert Bransby Cooper, Esq., was son of the Rev. Samuel Cooper, D.D., rector of Great Yarmouth, and brother of the late celebrated surgeon, Sir Astley Cooper. Mr. Bransby Cooper represented the city of Gloucester for a period of twelve years in three successive Parliaments. He was the author of some religious and political works, which have passed through several editions. Mr. Cooper, who was the senior Magistrate of Gloucestershire, died on the 10th inst., at the residence of his son, near the town of Gloucester.

ROBERT STRICKLAND.

This eminent comedian was, at the age of thirteen, the clerk of Mr. Comyn, the barrister. At that period the star of Edmund Kean had just risen in the theatrical horizon, and, dazzled by its brilliancy, young Strickland was seized with the dramatic rage. He left the Temple and the law, and through the aid of a well known histrionic agent dwelling at the Harp Tavern, Little Russell-street, he was soon enabled to appear upon the stage. His début took place the 21st September, 1817, at a barn in Winslow, Bucks, in the character of Wilford, in "The Iron Chest," and he at once succeeded. His provincial reputation led to his performing at Sadler's Wells, and at the Olympic, when under the management of Madame Vestris. After a subsequent prosperous tour through most of the large towns in England, Ireland, and Scotland, he finally established himself as a leading and popular member of the Haymarket Company. Mr. Strickland's forte lay in the representation of old men of the jovial, or blustering class:—as Falstaff, Sir Oliver Surface, Sir George Thunder, Old Hardcastle, The Nabob in the "Cure for the Heart-ache"—he had no rival since Dowton. There was a rich, buoyant humour and gentlemanly tone about his acting that rendered it almost invariably agreeable and attractive. He was, too, an indefatigable per former, continually appearing in three, or at least two plays every night.

Mr. Strickland, after a short but severe illness, expired on Sunday last, the 18th instant, in his 48th year, at his residence, Hercules-buildings, Lambeth. His loss, in the present dearth of dramatic talent, will be severely felt.

Plymouth.—A general review of the troops in this garrison, under the command in chief of Major General the Hon. H. Murray, took place on Saturday, at Mount Wise Parade, before Lieut.-General Earl Catchcart, appointed Commander of the Forces in Canada, who, with his staff, arrived here from the Firth of Forth, en route to Quebec and Montreal. The gallant and noble lord expressed his pleasure and gratification in witnessing the well-ordered evolutions of the troops.

THE DUCHESS OF ARGYLE.

LORD CHESTERFIELD.

HER MAJESTY'S COSTUME BALL.

We have already announced her Majesty's gracious intention of giving, early in the ensuing month, a fête on a scale of unusual splendour; the costume of which shall be of the period from 1740 to 1750, or the middle of the reign of George II. We have already made arrangements for our illustration of this most tasteful revival, designed by her Majesty, with the twofold view of aiding the trade of the metropolis, and the pleasure of her noble subjects. Our present purpose is to glance at a few of the leading characteristics of the Costume of the above period, by the portraiture of a few of the haut ton of the day, whose acknowledged taste will, in all probability, lead to their costumes being chosen as authorities. Meanwhile, with the recollection of the magnificence of her Majesty's fête three years since (illustrated in the first number of our journal), the world of fashion has been thrown into a state of agitation in quest of models of Costume. The doors of the fournisseurs of its tasteful elegancies are besieged; the Print-room of the British Museum, and the shops of printsellers, have been "rummaged and put to the sack;" porcelain figures and paintings have risen in the market: a Sevres, Dresden, or even Chelsea figure, has assumed the value of a statue; and Watteaus and Bouchers have advanced in the picture-market to an almost incredible extent. Even the Bibliotheque Richelieu, and other celebrated Continental libraries, are laid under contribution; so that some very recherché results may be anticipated.

The epoch chosen for the Royal Ball is remarkable for its propriety of dress, which was held a sort of virtue. As acceptable hints, we quote a few historical data from a contemporary—the Court Journal—premising that the Costumes will not be restricted to those of our own country:—

"In the year 1740, George the Second was in the fifteenth year of his reign. Among the political characters of the time were, Walpole, Pultney (afterwards Bath), the Earl of Chesterfield, the Duke of Newcastle, and Mr. Pelham. Within the ten years flourished Hogarth, Garrick, Handel, Fielding, the brave General Harvey, Admirals Anson and Hawke; Richardson may be considered as belonging to the same age. The period is fertile in events: at home, the Scotch rebellion and the battle of Culloden; abroad, the assault of Prague, the battle of Fontenoy, and some stout sea fights. (The period of the rebellion may be popular from the present year being the centenary of that event.)

"In 1740 Louis XV, was in the 27th year of his reign, and his court both gay and dissolute. The noted generals of France were Marshal Saxe (who was carried on a litter to the battle of Fontenoy), and Marshal Belleisle; the Duke de Richelieu was also a prominent character.

"In Spain Philip VI. concluded his reign in 1745, and was succeeded by Ferdinand VI.

"John V. of Portugal concluded his reign in 1749. The great man of Portugal was the Marquis de Pombal, whose memoirs have lately been published.

"In Germany there were rapid changes. First, Maria Theresa commenced her reign in 1740. She was succeeded in 1742 by Charles VII. of Bavaria; who was in turn succeeded, in 1745, by Francis I. of Lorraine. There is much of romance in the troubled history of that period."

We may here also quote, from the same arbiter elegantiarum an anecdote, to show with what furore the Costume chace is followed:

"The ruling thought, the monomania rococo, knows no bounds; and it is but two days since that a lady, said to be a lady of quality, and certainly an elegant person, promenaded round Grosvenor-square, dressed in hoops, with powder and patches, high-heeled shoes, &c., with a stomacher of diamonds, and every appoinment of a resuscitated Marquise à la Pompadour."

When we remind the reader that the period boasts of Hogarth for its illustrator, he will acknowledge there to be abundance of accessible authority.

Our artist has selected chiefly from the Print-room of the British Museum, portraits of the Duchess of Argyle and Kitty Fisher; and Lords Chesterfield and Bolingbroke. The latter, fortunately, is not in his "Ramilie tie" wig, which occasioned the Princess Anne to remark, one day, that "she supposed his lordship would soon come to Court in his nightcap."

LORD BOLINGBROKE.

THE QUEEN'S STATE BALL.

The Queen gave a State Ball on Monday evening at Buckingham Palace.

From nine o'clock, when the company began to arrive, until eleven, the visitors continued to arrive at the Palace without intermission, filling the suite of state saloons, which were fitted up and prepared in the usual style of Regal splendour. The whole of the rooms were opened for this reception, with the exception of the Yellow Drawing-Room, in which apartment the Queen received the Royal Family.

Mohun Lal appeared in a very rich and elegant Eastern costume.

The Marquis of Douglas, Lord Glenlyon, the Marquis of Lorne, Captain the Hon. James Murray, and several other Scottish noblemen and gentlemen, wore the Highland costume.

At ten o'clock the Queen and Prince Albert left the Yellow Drawing Room, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent, the Duchess of Gloucester, the Duke of Cambridge, and Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar.

On leaving the Yellow Drawing-Room, the Royal party entered the Grand Saloon, which, together, with the Ball Room, was filled with company, with the exception of a small passage in the centre of both apartments. The Lord Chamberlain, the Lord Steward, and the Vice Chamberlain conducted her Majesty and her illustrious Consort down the avenue formed by the company, her Majesty and his Royal Highness graciously acknowledging the obeisances of their distinguished guests as they passed slowly to the end of the Ball Room.

A quadrille band, led by Monsieur Collinet, director of the orchestra, with a band of twenty-five performers, of first-rate talent, comprising Messrs. Deloffre, Pilet, Bourotte, Arboa, Laurent, Jacquin, and others, from her Majesty's Theatre, was situated in an elevated orchestra, at the south end of the Ball Room. and as the Royal Party entered played "God save the Queen." Her Majesty and Prince Albert, and the Royal Family, having walked to the end of the Ball Room, returned to the centre of the apartment, and took their seats in a recess prepared for the august circle. The Queen then signified her commands to the Lord Chamberlain that a quadrille should be formed, and her Majesty, quitting her station, joined the quadrille and opened the ball with his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar; his Royal Highness Prince Albert and the Countess Deitrichsen, the Austrian Ambassadress, formed the opposite couple.

Other quadrilles and waltzes followed.

At eleven o'clock her Majesty was conducted by the Lord Chamberlain and the Lord Steward from the Ball Room to the Throne Room, Jullien and König's band playing the National Anthem on her Majesty's entrance.

A quadrille from "Kaya; ou, L'Amour Voyageur," and a quadrille from "Eoline," were danced, also the waltzes Styrienne, and "Les Danseuses Viennoises."

The Stop Polka, the Bohemian Polka, and le pas des fleurs were also danced in this apartment.

The whole of the diplomatic corps, and also all the foreigners of distinction at present in town, were present at this most brilliant réunion, which exceeded in the numbers present any former fête given by her Majesty.

Dancing was kept up in both Ball Rooms until 12 o'clock, when the Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by their Royal guests, and attended by the officers of state, went to supper, which was served in the Dining Room in a style of profusion and magnificence commensurate with the princely nature of the entertainment.

The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Duchess of Kent and the Duke of Cambridge, returned to the ball-room from supper.

Immediately on the return of the illustrious party a Scotch reel was danced, in which the following noblemen and gentlemen joined, viz.:—

The Marquis of Douglas, Lord Glenlyon, Viscount Reidhaven, Captain the Hon. James Murray, Hon. Captain Drummond (Strathallan), Captain Drummond Macguish, and Major Moray, of Abercairney. Several ladies also joined the reel.

Her Majesty's piper, Mr. Mackay, was in attendance in the ball-room, and played a Highland reel and the Reel of Tulloch.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert afterwards passed from the Ball Room to the Throne Room. Her Majesty danced in several quadrilles in the course of the night.

The Queen and Prince Albert left the state apartments at a quarter before two o'clock, the band playing the National Anthem.

A very great variety of the choicest shrubs and plants in flower decorated all the recesses of the state rooms and the approaches.

MISS KITTY FISHER.

EVERY BODY'S COLUMN.

EVENING MELODIES.—NO.X.

"Oh! Have you not Heard of the Land?"

Oh! have you not heard of the land
Far over cerulian seas,
Where gold shines untouch'd on the strand,
And silver unpluck'd on the trees?
Where the gleam of rare jewels at night
Is so like that of stars to the eye,
That wild eagles oft pause in their flight,
And wonder which way is the sky?

Has nobody told you how gay,
How happy the people are in it—
How their hours have the length of a day,
And the bliss of one exquisite minute?
How, in treading life's pathway, they find
A sunshine so glorious o'er them,
That the Past's a bright landscape behind,
And the Future another before them?

Have you heard how they're favoured by Love,
Who bears, as we all of us know,
A basket with flowers from above,
Intermingled with thorns from below?

How, while here a sweet rose-bud adorns,
And there twines a rough-looking stem,
He plucks us poor mortals the thorns,
And takes all the roses to them?

Or how they once begg'd for a tear
From a man who came over to see 'em,
And said 'twas the only thing rare
They hadn't got in their Museum.
How philosophers talked and debated,
As only philosophers can,
And over the glass had it stated—
"This came from the eye of a man?"

Have you liv'd all these years in the world,
And never yet heard of the clime
Where the blue flag of Hope is unfurl'd,
And floats on the breezes of Time?
Where Justice and Liberty blend,
And fools make a watchword of neither—
You're as wise as most others, my friend,
For I never heard of it either. R. R. S

FRENCH HUMBUG.

The Paris papers have the following announcement:—"Tom Thumb to be seen at the Salle Vivienne, from ten to four o'clock. Admission, one shilling. Those persons who wish to kiss him are to pay five sous more."

FRIENDSHIP.

Friendship is a silent gentleman that makes no parade; the true heart dances no hornpipes on the tongue.

EPIGRAM.

When Theseus left his Ariadne's side,
Young Bacchus came—at once her tears were dried;
Our widows hence disdain in weeds to pine,
But take another husband with their wine. CROLY.

NAPOLEON ON NEWSPAPERS.

"A journalist," said the great Napoleon, "is a gambler, a censurer, a giver of advice, regent of sovereigns, a tutor of nations. Four hostile newspapers are more to be feared than a hundred thousand bayonets."

ANECDOTE OF DR. JOHNSON.

Dr. Johnson was asked by a lady what new work he was employed about? "I am writing nothing just at present," he replied. "Well, but Doctor," said she, "if I could write like you, I should be always writing, merely for the pleasure of it." "Pray, madam," retorted he, "do you think that Leander swam across the Hellespont merely because he was fond of swimming?"

MATHEWS'S LAST JOKE.

Mathews's attendant, in his last illness, intended to give the patient some medicine; but, a few moments after, it was discovered that the medicine was nothing but ink, which had been taken from the phial by mistake, and his friend exclaimed, "Good heavens! Mathews, I have given you ink." "Never—never mind, my boy—never mind," said Mathews faintly, "I'll swallow a bit of blotting paper." This was the last joke Mathews ever made.

AN EXPEDITIOUS TAILOR.

A few years ago the late Sir John Throgmorton, on one occasion, sat down to dinner in a coat, the wool of which was on the backs of his own sheep that morning. The animals had been washed and sheared; the wool washed, carded, spun, and woven; the cloth scoured, fulled, sheared, dyed, and dressed; and a coat made from it by a tailor—between sun-rise and the hour of seven in the evening.

GROWTH OF PLANTS BY ELECTRICITY.

Some very interesting experiments are now being tried in Sussex, of forcing crops, by conducting to the soil on which they are grown the free electricity present in the atmosphere. The experiments are on the land of a very scientific amateur farmer within a few miles of Brighton; the crop within the influence of the wires has already a very strong and vigorous appearance.

CANNIBALISM IN THE PACIFIC.

It appears from an account of an American expedition for exploring the islands of the Pacific, that in the Feejee group which has been less explored, probably on account of the repulsive, treacherous, and intractable character of the natives, than any other cluster of islands in the Pacific, savage life is exhibited in all its unmitigated ferocity. Cannibalism—not in pursuance of revenge, but avowedly under the influence of an appetite for human flesh—was exhibited before the eyes of the horror-struck Americans too plainly and too frequently, to leave a doubt of its terrific existence. When a Feejeean wishes to express his relish for any delicacy he says, "It eats as nice as a dead man!"

A TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF THE LATE MR. STRICKLAND.

BY EDWARD MORDAUNT SPENCER.

Let fair Thalia weave a wreath of fame,
To grace the shrine that shall record thy name;
Let her lament, with sorrow and with grief,
The fate that crushed thee—like a summer leaf
Destroyed and blighted by the autumn wind;
And when to dust thy form shall be consigned,
Let her lament thy sad untimely fall—
A victim to the "common lot of all."

Thy many virtues let her sons revere;
And, while they mourn thee, let them shed a tear
O'er one who e'er was bounteous and kind—
Who has not left an enemy behind.
Who e'er can speak in terms of aught dispraise?
Who 'gainst thy name a calumny can raise?

We mourn thy loss, and with regret deplore
We ne'er shall gaze upon thy visage more.

Kind Friend! that e'er, with sympathetic breast,
Relieved the sorrows of the poor distress'd;
That ne'er the call of "Pity" could withstand
But ever lent to "Want" a willing hand.
Thou hast departed to another sphere,
Where, good and bad, mankind must all appear.
Though lost to sight, Thalia 'll place thy name
Within the Temple of Dramatic Fame.

DOING JUSTICE BY CONTRACT.

A jovial old farmer of Liverpool, who is fond of social company and his glass, was not long ago brought before the bench on the old charge of "drunk and disorderly." His numerous visits to the Court, consequent on similar delinquencies, trenching further on his time and "tin" than he liked, he asked the magistrates if they would have any objection to contract with him for a year, as such a measure would save trouble to both himself and their honours the justices.

PREJUDICE AGAINST FORKS.

In the time of Elizabeth, there was a strong feeling against the use of forks. One divine preached against the use of them as "an insult on Providence not to touch one's meat with one's fingers." Forty years after this, forks were still a novelty. For a long time after their introduction into England, they were considered as a most superb mark of coxcombery; and it appears that then even as now, empty-headed young men affected to display their consequence by the parade of foreign fopperies.

TALE OF A SHIRT.

An eastern caliph being sorely afflicted with ennui, was advised that an exchange of shirts with a man that was perfectly happy would cure him. After a long search he discovered such a person, but was informed the happy fellow had no shirt.

EPITAPH ON A GOURMAND.

One of the greatest guests of a deceased glutton inscribed the following lines on his grave-stone:—

"Quite well at ten, had a party to sup with him,
To bed went at one, and at two 'twas all up with him."

LUNAR OBSERVATIONS.

The moon, said a total-abstinence orator, is not quite "teetotal," but she lets her "moderation" be known to all men, for she only fills her "horn" once a month. Then she fills it with something very strong, observed a bystander, for I've often seen her "half gone." Aye, said another, and I've seen her "full."

THE WANDERER'S RETURN.

He sank upon a bank in shade,
Where oft in happier hours
His light and careless steps had strayed,
To gather its wild flowers;
He had turned his lone and weary track
To home and love, and beauty back.

He saw his father's cottage smoke
Rise from within the dell,
And that once frequent sight awoke
Thoughts of his last farewell:
Memories that long had slumbering lain
Came floating o'er his soul again;

And deeply yearned his heart to greet
Its old, familiar things,
And joys that he might never meet
In all his wanderings;
The smiles, the words of love that bound
His hopes to one small spot of ground.

A spell had ever o'er him been,
That checked those wanderings wild,
A vision of that early scene
He loved when but a child,
And that had won the wanderer's feet
To where the hearts that loved him beat.

CARADOC.

A FAIR OFFER.

An advertisement in a Philadelphia paper reads as follows:—"Stolen, a watch, worth a hundred dollars. If the thief will return it, he shall be informed, gratis, where he may steal one worth two of it, and no questions asked."

CAPITAL IMITATIONS.

The Charivari says, that after hearing the beautiful quintette of Felicien David, entitled, "A Cruize at Sea," many of the audience were so impressed with the faithful idea conveyed by the music, that they became sea sick. It is not often that music makes people sea-sick. There is at Bordeaux an Italian piano-forte player, who so excels in a morceau, entitled the "Storm," that when he plays it, all the beer in the neighbourhood turns sour. In London also, we may add, good imitations sometimes occur. A gentleman of our acquaintance who has recently had his portrait painted, declares that it is more like him than he is himself.

A CUNNING YOUTH.

"What's the matter, John?" "I aint done nothing, father." "Well, what are you crying for, then, you lubber?" "I was afraid you'd whip me." "What, whip you when you haven't done anything?" "Yes, sir." "Go into the house, you booby." John went into the house, and his father went down to the farm. Very soon his father came back in a rage, and, laying a cowhide over the urchin's back, said, "Did I not tell you when I went away, to hoe that corn?" "Yes, sir; but you told me just now that you wouldn't whip me if I hadn't done anything."

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday) —Since Monday the arrivals of English wheat for our market have been on a very limited scale, hence the show of samples here this morning was very small. For all descriptions the demand was steady, at full prices. In free foreign wheat more business was doing at 1s per quarter more money, while bonded parcels were held for more money. Barley was in steady inquiry, and prices were well supported Superfin malt was quite as dear, but all other kinds were heavy. The oat trade was firm, and the rates were the turn higher. No beans or peas at market.

ARRIVALS.—English wheat, 3260; barley, 110; oats, 1090 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 4290 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 2750; barley, 3870; oats, 4080 quarters. Flour, 2920 sacks; malt, 4710 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 46s to 48s; ditto, white, 46s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s to 52s; ditto, white, 52s to 57s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distilling, 26s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 56s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 33s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Town made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk Stockton, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 28 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 38s to 42s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 22s, oats, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s; beans, 24s to 29s; peas, 28s to 32s, per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to —; Baltic, 18s to— per barrel.

Seed Market.—The supply of green fodder being more abundant, linseed and rapeseed cakes are a slow inquiry, on easier terms. In other kinds of seeds very little is doing, at late rates.

Linseed, English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 46s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 44s. Hempseed 35s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 18s per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 12s to 14s. Tares, 6s 6d to 7s 6d per bushel. English Rapeseed, £24 to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s; ditto, foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover seed, red, 45s to 50s: extra, 52s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5d to 6½d, per 4lb loaf

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 45s 9d; barley, 30s 0d; oats, 21s 9d; rye, 29s 7d; beans, 37s 3d; peas, 37s 0d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 45s 11d; barley, 31s 3d; oats, 21s 3d; rye, 30s 7d; beans, 36s 1d; peas, 36s 6d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 7s; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 6s 6d; peas, 6s 6d.

Tea.—At public sale on Tuesday about 16,000 packages of tea were offered. The biddings were very inactive: gunpowders sold at a decline of from 2d to 3d per lb; while old scented orange pekoes were 2d; hysons and imperials 1d per lb easier. About 1600 packages were disposed of. Privately a fair business is doing at late rates. The deliveries continue good.

Sugar.—For most kinds of West India sugar we have to report a steady demand, at an advance in the quotations of from 6d to 1s per cwt. Bengal has sold freely, at 1s more money; while the late improvement in Mauritius and refined qualities is supported. Brown lumps are selling at 68s, and standard ditto 69s per cwt.

Coffee.—Only a moderate business is doing in Ceylon, yet holders are firm, at 45s to 46s for good ordinary pale. West India parcels are in steady request at extreme rates. Foreign coffee is rather dull, but not lower.

Fruit.—There is more doing in currants at full prices. Patras cannot be purchased under from 49s to 50s per cwt. Raisins are in fair request, and Smyrna producing 38s to 43s per cwt.

Rice.—Bengal still continues to move off freely, at 10s to 10s 6d for low broken and dirty white, and 11s 6d to 12s for good middling white.

Oils.—Twenty tons of sperm have sold publicly, at £84 10s to £84 15s for British, and £83 15s to £84 for foreign. Linseed is held at late rates.

Tallow.—We have a very good demand for Russia, at fully the late advance in the quotations. P. Y. C. on the spot is selling in small parcels at 38s 6d to 39s, and Odessa, 38s to 38s 6d; white, for forward delivery, the prices rule from 39s 6d to 39s 9d per cwt. Y. C., free on board at St. Petersburgh, is quoted at 33s. Town tallow is selling readily at 38s 6d to 39s net cash.

Provisions.—The supplies of Dutch butter still continue extensive, yet the demand is somewhat active, at fully the late advance in the quotations. Fine Friesland is selling at 92s to 96s; fine Holland, 90s to 96s; and Kiel, 90s to 94s per cwt. Dorset butter is producing 54s per firkin. A few parcels of new Irish butter have come to hand, and sold at 94s to 96s for Limerick, and 94s for Waterford. Although the arrivals of bacon continue large, that article is steady, at full currencies Waterford sizeable is selling at 40s to 45s; heavy, 40s to 43s; Limerick sizeable, 40s to 43s; and heavy, 40s to 42s pee cwt. Other kinds of provisions sup port late rates.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 10s; useful ditto, £4 12s to £5 4s; fine upland ditto, £5 5s to £5 10s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6 6s; oat straw, £1 18s to £2 1s; wheat straw, £2 2s to £2 3s; per load.

Wool.—The public sales, held during the present week, have been well attended by buyers, while the biddings have been brisk, at full prices.

Potatoes.—The supplies of potatoes being extremely large for the time of year, the sale for them is very inactive, at prices varying from 30s to 70s per ton.

Hops (Friday).—The accounts from the plantations being of a more satisfactory character than those received for some time past, the demand is in a very depressed state, at barely last week's quotations:—Sussex pockets, £7 0s to £8 3s; Wealds, £7 0s to £8 10s; Mid Kents, £7 7s to £8 15s; East Kents, £9 9s to £11 0s; Choice ditto, £11 11s to £13 0s; Mid Kent bags, £7 15s to £8 15s; East Kent ditto, £10 10s to £12 0s.

Coals.—Charlotte Main, 15s; Chester Main, 15s; Old Pontop, 14s; Ord's Redheugh, 14s; Wylam, 14s 6d; Belmont, 17s 3d; Lambton, 17s 9d; Adelaide, 17s 9d per ton.

Smithfield (Friday).—Although the supply of beasts on sale here to-day was somewhat extensive for the time of year, the beef trade was again active, at, in some instances, further improved rates. There were in the market 500 Scots from Scotland, and 50 oxen and cows from Rotterdam—the latter being most excellent animals. The numbers of sheep were moderate, while the mutton trade was steady, at Monday's prices. There was more business doing in lambs, though at no more money. The veal trade was active, and the quotations improved 2d per 8lbs. In pigs very little was doing. Milch cows sell at from £16 to £19 10s each.

Per 8lbs. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; second quality ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime large oxen, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 4d to 4s 6d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 6d to 4s 0d; second quality ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime coarse woolled sheep, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime Southdowns ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 0d; large coarse calves, 4s 2d to 4s 8d; prime small ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 2d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; neat small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lambs, 4s 10d to 6s 0d. Suckling calves, 18s 0d to 30s 0d; and quarter old store pigs, 16s 0d to 20s 0d each. Beasts, 876; cows, 109; sheep and lambs, 8020; calves, 318; pigs, 331.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a very steady trade here to-day, and the quotations were on the advance.

Per 8lbs. by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; middling ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime large ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime small ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; large pork, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; interior mutton, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; middling ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 4d; prime ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 10d; veal, 4s 0d to 5s 0d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 5s 0d to 6s 0d. ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

A decided improvement has taken place in the value of the English Funds since our last impression. Consols advanced on Monday, in consequence of some extensive money purchases, to 99½, but have since fluctuated between that price and 99½ to ⅝, closing at the latter quotation. The usual advertisement, announcing the falling due of Exchequer Bills in June, and offering renewal at the present rate of interest, has had the effect of improving the value of the Unfunded Debt generally, from its removing all doubts as to the possible reduction of the interest. The last quotations are for the advertised bills, 57 to 59; and the undue bills, 58 to 60. Bank Stock has slightly improved, closing at 211. Reduced Three per Cents are 98⅜; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents, 101⅛. Long Annuities, 11 1-16. India Bonds, 69 to 72. India Stock, 279.

Spanish Five per Cents. on Monday suddenly declined to 29¾ to 30, but the Three per Cents maintained the previous quotation. This price continued on Tuesday, but, as the week advanced, a rally took place, and the last quotation is 30¼. The Three per Cents. have also made a slight variation, closing at 42¼; Passives are not quite so good as last week, quoting only 7⅞ to 8. Mexican Stock has been gradually creeping up from Monday's price, 36⅝ to ⅞, to the last quotation, 37⅜ to ½. The holders of Mexican Stock, as well as the Committee of Spanish American Bond-holders, appear to wait the declaration of a dividend with a degree of patience almost amounting to indifference. Nearly a year has elapsed since the half dividend was paid, and, as it is known that upwards of 300,000 dollars are in the possession of the agents here, no reasonable cause can exist why some portion of the dividend due in October last should not be liquidated. The future prospects of regular payment appear to be lamentably small. Columbian remains about 15¼; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents. are 63⅜; Five per Cents 98½; Belgian is 99; and Portuguese 67⅝.

The business in the Share market during the week, although limited, has been of an improving description. The speculative lines are not in much favour at present, and the only material advancement in price has been in the French shares, which continue in some demand. The (Rosamel) line for the Great Northern of France Railway quotes an improved price firmly, and the competing line (Lafitte's) has also advanced. A new line, under the auspices of the Great Western, called the Wycomb and Great Western, has been done in the market at about ½ prem. The established lines are generally firm, and Blackwalls advanced to 9½ ⅝, upon the termination of the meeting, at which it was resolved to capitalize their debentures. The new shares arising therefrom, are already in demand at a premium. Interest, at 3½ per cent., will be allowed on all paid up calls, until their amalgamation with the original shares. Great North of England shares continue to rise, quoting 220. At closing Aberdeen are 3⅞; Birmingham and Gloucester, 136½; Caledonians, 10⅞; Cambridge and Lincoln, 7¼; Chester and Holyhead, 16⅝; Churnet Valley, 6½; Direct Northern, 3½; Dublin and Belfast Junction, 10½; Dublin and Galway, 4; Dublin and Mullingar, 4⅞; Eastern Counties, 18½ (ex. new); Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 22½; Guildford, Farnham, &c., 5⅝; Harwich, 1½; Birmingham Stock, 239; Brighton, 64; Croydon, 18½; Lynn and Ely, 6½; South Western, 80; London and York, 4¼; Midlands, 169; Newcastle and Berwick, 17½; Newark and Sheffield, 4¼; North Kent, 5; Norwich and Brandon, 16⅜; North British, 17½; Rugby's, 4½; Scottish Central, 6⅝; Do. (Midland), 3⅜; Shrewsburys, &c., 4⅜; Dovers, 40⅜; Trent Valley, 18½; West Yorkshire, 2; West Cornwall, 4; Boulogne and Amiens, 9⅝; Great Northern of France, 5⅝; Do. (Rosamel's), 2⅜; Bordeaux and Toulouse, 2½; Do. and Cette, 2⅜; Louvain and Jemappe, 4; Namur and Liege, 5⅝; Orleans and Vierzon, 14½; Over Yssel, ⅜ prem.; Paris and Lyons, 3; Do. (Ganneron's), 2¾; Paris and Strasbourg, 2¾; Sambre and Meuse, 10½; Tours and Nantes (Mackenzie's), 2⅞

SATURDAY MORNING.—There was no feature of importance in either the English or Foreign Market yesterday. The Share Market was flat, and Great North of England Shares declined to 215.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, MAY 20.

FOREIGN-OFFICE, MAY 20.—The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. John King, as Consul at the Cape of Good Hope for his Majesty the King of Prussia. The Queen has also been pleased to approve of Mr. Charles Maynard as Consul at Graham's Town, Cape of Good Hope, for his Majesty the King of the Belgians. The Queen has also been pleased to approve of Mr. Saul Salomon as Consul at St. Helena for the Free Hanseatic City of Hamburgh. The Queen has also been pleased to approve of M. de Vaubicourt as Consul at Dublin for his Majesty the King of the French.

BANKRUPTCIES ANNULLED.—J. WICKS, Bristol, tea dealer. W. ASTON, sen., Birmingham, victualler.

BANKRUPTS.—G. CLEMENT and H. SAMMONS, Stoke Newington, tea-dealers. V. GUIGUES, Leicester-street, Leicester-square, hotel-keeper. H. TERRY, Battersea, licensed victualler. G. T. PEERS, Ironmonger-lane, Cheapside, plumber. W. STOCKS, Huddersfield, merchant. W. WATSON, Wakefield, Yorkshire, licensed victualler. W. DAVIS, Compton, Tettenhall, Staffordshire, butcher. J. PARKER, Cheltenham, Gloucestershire, cabinet-maker.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—R. SHIRRIFF, Goatfield, Argyleshire, gunpowder-manufacturer. W. BUCHANAN, SON, and Co., Paisley, sugar-merchants.

FRIDAY, MAY 23.

WAR-OFFICE, May 23.—1st Dragoon Guards: Lieut. R. O. Travers to be Captain, vice Pipon; Cornet T. M. Riddell to be Lieutenant, vice Travers: J. R. S. Sayer to be Cornet, vice Riddell.

15th Light Dragoons: Lieut. J. Brett to be Captain, vice Chambers; Cornet J. L. S. Lumsdaine to be Lieutenant, vice Brett.

Grenadier Guards: Ensign W. E. H. Vere to be Ensign and Lieutenant, vice Lord Paget.

7th Foot.—Capt. V. H. Mairis, to be Captain, vice Brevet Major W. Hope; Lieut. W. L. Grant, to be Captain, vice Mairis; Ensign the Hon. F. C. G. Fitzclarence, to be Lieutenant, vice Grant. 12th: T. G. Vereker, to be Ensign, vice Walpole. 13th: Lieut. the Hon. E. J. W. Forester, to be Captain, vice Sinclair. 20th: Capt. J. Powell, to be Captain, vice Murray. 28th: Ensign J. W. Shelton to be Lieutenant, vice Staveley; F. B. Drew, to be Ensign, vice Shelton. 29th: Lieut. L. Farrington to be Lieutenant, vice Johnston. 32nd: Lieut. E. W. D. Lowe to be Captain, vice Campbell; Ensign T. Maunsel to be Lieutenant, vice Lowe; Cadet R. L. L. H. Williams to be Ensign, vice Maunsell. 38th: Major J. Campbell to be Major, vice H. K. Storks; Capt. R. S. Murray to be Captain, vice D. O'Connell. 39th: Lieut. James Johnston to be Lieutenant, vice Farrington. 40th: Captain Henry R. Seymour to be Captain, vice Oliver. 41st: Berkeley James Lennox to be Ensign, vice Jacson. 44th: Major the Hon. A. A. Spencer to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Shelton; Capt. A. W. Gray to be Major, vice Spencer; Lieut. W. M'Mahon to be Captain, vice Gray; Ensign A. Greene to be Lieutenant, vice M'Mahon; G. L. Ottley to be Ensign, vice Greene. 49th: H. Rocke to be Ensign, vice H. Vere. 63rd: Brevet Major J. B. Oliver to be Captain, vice Seymour. 69th: Ensign C. W. Parker to be Lieut.; Serj.-Maj. D. Dunne to be Ensign vice Parker; Lieut. W. J. B. M. Moore to be Adjutant, vice Sutton. 73rd: J. W. Ramsay to be Ensign, vice Fitzclarence. 77th: Capt. E. Wolfe, to be Capt., vice Elgeo; Lieut. E. H. L. Crotton to be Capt., vice Wolfe; Ensign R. S. Walpole, to be Lieutenant, vice Baillie: Ensign F. Kennedy to be Lieutenant, vice Crofton; G. J. Burne, to be Ensign, vice Kennedy. 78th: T. Anderson, to be Ensign, vice Maclaine. 80th: Ensign W. F. A. Colman to be Lieutenant; Serjeant-Major G. Bodle to be Ensign, vice Colman: Lieutenant H. A. Welman to be Adjutant vice Lightbody, 83rd: J. S. Molony, to be Ensign vice Portal. 87th: Second Lieutenant J. Doherty to be First Lieutenant, vice Holmes: A. Magan to be Second Lieutenant, vice Doherty.

1st West India Regiment.—R. B. Wig trom to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Machardy.

BREVET.—Capt. E. Wolfe and Capt. V. H. Mairis to be Majors in the Army.

HOSPITAL STAFF.—Assist.-Surgeon R. J. O'Flarherty to be Staff Surgeon of the Second Class, vice A. Smith, M.D.

DECLARATION OF INSOLVENCY.—R. EVANS, Brosely, Shropshire, tallow-chandler

BANKRUPTS.—R. KIMBLE, Great Marylebone-street, boot-maker. A. MACDONALD, Leadenhall-street, merchant. J. WHITE, Warminster, Wiltshire, currier. J. FEAVIOUR, Liverpool, hotel-keeper. T. SIMS, Whitechapel-road, victualler. J. CANN, Woolwich, bricklayer. T. WOOD, Little Queen-street, Holborn, wine and spirit merchant. T. HARRIS, Newtown, Montgomerysbire, currier. R. HOLLOWAY, Evesham, Worcester, innkeeper. D. B. SMITH, Liverpool, merchant. W. LOWE, Bristol, turner. H. PRIDDEY, Worcester, upholsterer. J. BARKER, Gayles, Yorkshire, maltster. J. THACKREY, Leeds, dyer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. ROBB, Broad-street, Aberdeen, china-merchant. R TAYLOR, jun., and Co., Glasgow, tea-dealers.

BIRTHS.

At St. Olave's, Southwark, the lady of the Rev. W. C. Le Breton, of a son.——At Howbury-hall, Beds., Mrs. Robert Henley Payne, of a son.——At Rusham-house, Lady Charlotte Bacon, of a son.——In South Audley-street, Lady Dinorben, of a daughter.——In Sussex-square, the Hon. Mrs John Gellibrand Hubbard, of a daughter.——At Leicester, Mrs. George Rawlinson, of twins.——At Bryanston-square, the lady of W. S. Binny, Esq., of twin sons.——At Brighton, the lady of the Rev. James Morris, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

At Wrecclesham, near Farnham, Henry Whitmore, Esq., to Margaret, eldest daughter of Newburgh Higinbotham, Esq.——At Paddington, Edward Roberts, Esq., to Emily Eleanor Melveene, elder daughter of H. Melveene Cooper, Esq.——At Liverpool, David Rae, Esq., to Sarah Hately, daughter of C. R. Taylor, Esq.——At Shelley, Essex, Lieut.-Col. Gibsone, to Margaret, third daughter of the late William Crew, Esq.——At St. George's, Hanover-square, John Walrond Walrond, Esq., to the Hon. Frances Caroline Hood, youngest daughter of Lord and Lady Bridport.——At Henley, Charles Augustus Towsey, Esq., to Mary Harriet, only daughter of the late John Sparks, Esq.——At Winchelsea, Mellor Hetherington, jun., Esq., to Mary, third daughter of the late Richard Stileman, Esq.——At Derby, the Rev. E. Lillingston, to Lydia, eldest daughter of the late Rev. Ley Brooks.——At St. Pancras Church, Henry Goodenough Smith, Esq., to Jane, third daughter of William Cooper, Esq.——At St. Margaret's, Westminster, Francis Jess, second son of Francis Gillett, Esq., of Musbury, Devon, to Mary, second surviving daughter of the late James Richards, Esq., of Aller, Somerset.

DEATHS.

On the 14th inst., in the 73rd year of his age, R. C. Strode, Esq.——At Bath, Mary, wife of the Rev. Edward Mangin.——On the 15th inst., in his 85th year, Henry Bigley, Esq., late of the Ordnance-office, Tower.——On the 15th inst., John Griffith, Esq., of Durham, in the 82nd year of his age.——On the 16th inst., Mrs Frederick Heisch, in her 21st year.——At Stourbridge, Captain E. C. Richards.——At Brighton, Captain King.——In Park-place, St. James's, Caroline, wife of J. E. Dowdeswell, Esq.——At Chiswick-lodge, Southampton, on the 18th inst., the Hon. Amelia Quin, relict of the late Hon. Richard George Quin.——At 16, Clapham-road-place, Kennington, John Dixon, Esq.——In Bedford-square, James Parkinson, Esq.——At Reading, Joanna Kemble Whatley, eldest daughter of the late John Whatley, Esq., M.D.——At Doncaster, the Rev. William Monck, second son of Sir Charles M. L. Monck, Bart.——On Monday, Mrs. S. Bensusan, of Lisson-grove North.——At Mespil Villa, Dublin, Maria Leonora, fourth daughter of the late Colonel King.——At Westbury-on-Severn, the Rev. C. Wetherell.——At Chelsea, Thomas Borrow, Esq., of the War Office.——At Tunbridge Wells, Carolina Henrietta, second surviving daughter of Richard Dawkins, Esq.——At Letterfourie House, Banffshire, Lady Gordon, relict of the late Sir James Gordon, Bart.——At Dogmersfield Park, Hants, Paulet St. John Mildmay, Esq., second son of the late Sir H. P. St. John Mildmay, Bart.——At Broxstead, Suffolk, Matthew Stodart, Esq.——In Leadenhall-street, William John Huggins, marine-painter to his late Majesty William IV.——In the Crescent, America-square, Raphael Raphael, Esq.——At 2, Belmont-place, Wandsworth-road, aged 77, Elizabeth Paul, relict of the late Captain Paul.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public are respectfully informed that there will be an EXTRA NIGHT (not included in the Subscription) on THURSDAY NEXT, MAY 29th, when will be performed Donizetti's Opera, DON PASQUALE: Norina, Madame Grisi; Dr. Malatesta, Sig. Fornasari; Ernesto, Sig. Mario; Notary, Sig. Dai Fiori; and Don Pasquale, Sig. Lablache.—THE DANSEUSES VIENNOISES will appear in some of their Favourite Pas, and in Two New Pas, entitled "The Pas Orientale," and "Le Polka" (being their last appearance but Three).—To be followed by the LAST ACT of LINDA DI CHAMOUNI, in which Madame Castellan, Mdlle. Brambilla, and Sig. Moriani, will appear.—To be succeeded by VARIOUS ENTERTAINMENTS in the BALLET DEPARTMENT, in which Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi, Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, and Mdlle. Cerito, will appear.—To conclude with an entirely New Grand Ballet, in Five Tableaux, with New Scenery, Dresses, and Decorations, entitled ROSIDA; OU, LES MINES DE SYRACUSE. The Ballet and Mise en Scene by M. St. Leon; the New Scenery by Mr. Charles Marshall; the Music composed by Sig. Pugni. Characters:—Rosida (a young Sicilian), Mdlle. Cerito; Alman (a Sailor), M. St. Leon; The Queen of the Mine, Mdlle Moncelet; Torbern (the Evil Genius of the Mine), M. Di Mattia; Ottomir, M. Gosselin; A Hermit, M Venafra: Sicilian Peasants (male and female), Sailors, Persons of different Nations, &c. In the course of the Ballet the following Dances:—First Tableau; "La Sicilienne," new Pas de Caractere, by Mdlle. Cerito and M. St. Leon, accompanied by the Corps de Ballet. Second and Third Tableaux; "Pas du Mineur," by Mdlle. Cerito and M. St. Leon, assisted by Mdlles. Ferdinand, Demelisse, and Cassan. "Pas des Quartre Nations," new Pas de Caractere, by the Corps de Ballet. To be followed by "La Wolinienne," by Mdlle. Cerito and M. St. Leon.—Applications for Boxes, Pit Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven; the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, MR. WM. BATTY.—Third Week of Mons. Tournaire's celebrated Troupe of FRENCH EQUESTRIANS.—On MONDAY, May 26th, and during the week, a Grand Historical Spectacle, in Three Acts, called THE GODOLPHIN ARABIAN; or, THE RACE HORSE OF THE DESERT.—Mr. Batty has concluded an arrangement with Monsieur Tournaire for Three Day Performances, introducing the entire Troupe of French Equestrians. These Performances will take place on Thursday, the 29th of May, Thursday, the 5th and Thursday the 12th of June.—The Doors will be opened at Half-past One, and the Performances will commence at Two o'clock precisely. Box-office open from Eleven till Five o'Clock, Daily.

ROYAL GARDENS VAUXHALL, under the Patronage of her MAJESTY.—MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and FRIDAY NEXT, Grand Galas—Extraordinary Attractions in Illuminations and Fireworks.—Brilliant Success.—The Public Press have pronounced the Gardens to exceed their original Splendour.—Concert—Band of 100 Performers—New Ballet, "Myrna, or the Spirits of the Deep"—Golden Temple of Honan, with Tableaux Pyrotechniques, by Darby—Villa d'Este, at Tivoli—Eruption of Mount Etna—Pirates' Cave—The Hermit, &c.—Illuminations, 20,000 Lamps—Italian Walk, with Fountains—Joe Ll Diavolo's Terrific Descent on a Wire, from a fearful height, encircled with Fireworks, &c. &c. Refreshments at Tavern Prices. Admission, 2s; Children, Half-price. Commence at Eight o'Clock. Smoking strictly prohibited.—N.B. In consequence of the great inconvenience experienced by visitors to the BALL-ROOM, from its crowded state (preventing the possibility of dancing), the Lessee feels compelled to make a charge of 1s. admission.

MR. JOHN PARRY'S ANNUAL CONCERT will take place on FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 30, at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, commencing at Eight o'clock. Mesdames Dorus Gras, Birch, Rainforth, M. B. Hawes, Dolby, &c; Messrs. Machin, Wrighton, J. Calkin, John Parry; Madame Dulcken, M. Lazarus, M. Godefroid, M. Distin and four sons, will appear. Mr. John Parry will introduce two new songs. Conductors, Signori Benedict and Negri.—Tickets, 7s.; Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d.—Programmes to be had at the principal Music-shops; and of Mr. JOHN PARRY, 17, Tavistock-street, Bedford-square.

NATIONAL ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE.—FREE TRADE BAZAAR.—The ADMITTANCE to the Bazaar is now ONE SHILLING. The Stalls are replenished with many costly and elaborate specimens of art and workmanship, which have not hitherto been exhibited, on account of want of space. The MODEL ROOM is now complete; and, in addition to an almost endless variety of improved AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS and Machines, exhibiting the latest discoveries in arts and manufactures, there are working models of a POWER LOOM from Bradford, a BLOND LACE MACHINE from Nottingham

Now ready, one vol., post 8vo., price 10s 6d.,

MARGARET; or, the GOLD MINE. From the French of ELIE BARTHET.
London: ROBERT WEIR, 57, Harley-street, and all Booksellers.

Just published, Price 5s.

TO CHESS PLAYERS.—THE SOUVENIR OF THE BRISTOL CHESS CLUB. Comprising One Hundred Games played by the Members of that Club among themselves, or against distinguished Amateurs of other Clubs.
R. HASTINGS, Office of "The Chess Player's Chronicle," 13, Carey-street, Lincoln's Inn.

NEW TALE BY MISS BREMER.—AUTHORIZED EDITION.
In 1 vol., small 8vo., in an Ornamental Cover, price 5s.,

LIFE IN DALECARLIA.—THE PARSONAGE OF MORA.
By FREDRIKA BREMER. Translated by WILLIAM HOWITT.
CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand.

Just Published, second edition, enlarged, 6s.,

PULMONARY CONSUMPTION successfully treated with NAPHTHA, with Cases by other Medical Men in support of that treatment, &c.—By JOHN HASTINGS, M.D., Senior Physician to the Blenheim-street Free Dispensary.
"If experience proves the correctness of these statements, Dr. Hastings will be a benefactor to the human race."—Dr. Johnson's Medical Review.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

QUEEN'S BALL.—THE LADIES' GAZETTE of FASHION, for JUNE, price 1s., post free 1s. 6d., contains the correct Costumes, and Portraits of the Queen, Albert, and the Queen of Belgium, as they are to appear; also double the number of Summer Fashions given in any other work; a Superb Plate of Children's Dresses, and Novelties in endless variety; 4 Plates, 70 Figures, 100 Patterns, 30 Walking Dresses, 50 Bonnets, &c. Descriptions, Tales, Poetry, two complete pieces of Music, &c.
G. BERGER, Holywell-street, Strand; and all Booksellers.

FRENCH NEWSPAPER. Edited by JEAN BAPTISTE DESPLACE. Now publishing, L'OBSERVATEUR FRANCAIS, containing, besides all the Political, Literary, Scientific, and Artistical news of the Week, a Commercial Bulletin, a Guide for the Traveller in London, Fashion, Table-Talk, &c. "Le Juif Errant" and "l'Histoire du Consulat," to be continued every Week.—Published every Saturday, by Alexandre de Lizy, at the Office, 344, Strand; to be had, also, of all Newsmen and Booksellers, in the United Kingdom.

THE CONNOISSEUR, an illustrated journal, price 1s., established for the support and encouragement of music and the fine arts, by the publication of original compositions in music and drawing No. III., just published, containing original articles upon the fine arts and music, notices of exhibitions and sales of pictures, the opera, concerts, reviews, biography, original poetry, and news The Illustrations are a portrait of Purcell, an outline of Narcissus, and an original ballad to words by the Countess of Blessington. Artists, musicians, and amateurs are invited to send outlines and music.—Published every fortnight by SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.

READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES.
Now Ready—Delivered Gratis,

A NEW PLAN FOR READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES THROUGHOUT THE KINGDOM.—This Plan provides an unlimited Supply of Standard Works—all the New Books—and the right of Members to purchase any work desired at one-half the published price.—Delivered Gratis, and sent post-free to order, enclosing two stamps, addressed to Mr. BULL, Librarian, 19, Holles-street, Cavendish-square. Also, BULL'S New List of Duplicates withdrawn from the Library, at very Reduced Prices.

FIELD'S JUVENILE BOOK ESTABLISHMENT.—Juvenile and Prize Books for the Entertainment and Instruction of Youth.—An extensive collection, comprising the works of the following eminent writers:—Mrs. Sherwood, Mrs. Hofland, Hannah More: Mrs. Barbauld, Mary Howitt, Miss Edgeworth, L. E. L., Mrs. Marcett, Maria Hack, Mary Elliott, Mrs. Markham, Ann Fraser Tytler, Mrs. Hall, Miss Julia Corner, Miss Mitford, Peter Parley, &c. &c., beautifully Illustrated, at FIELD'S CHEAP BOOK and STATIONERY WAREHOUSE, 65, Quadrant. Coloured Picture Books in every variety from 6d.

FIELD'S CHEAP STATIONERY and BOOK WAREHOUSE, 65, Quadrant, Corner of Air-street.—Stamped Envelopes, 1s. per doz.; Plain Envelopes, 4d. per 100; Superfine ditto, 6d. per 100; Satin ditto, 9d. per 100. Note Paper, 5 quires, 6d.; Albert and Queen's Note, 1s and 1s. 6d. 5 quires; Superfine Bath Post, 2s. and 2s. 6d. the 5 quires; outsides ditto, 3d. and 4d. per quire. Wax of the finest quality, 10 sticks, 1s. Superfine Foolscap, 6d. per quire. Bibles, 1s.; Testaments, 6d.; Prayer-books, 9d., Church Services, 2 vols, in case, 3s. 6d.; a large and elegant stock, varying in price up to 3 Guineas. Mourning Envelopes, 1s. per 100; and every description of Stationery at prices not to be equalled by any other house.—65, QUADRANT.

RODRIGUES' Cheap STATIONERY and BOOK WAREHOUSE, 21, PICCADILLY.—Envelopes, 6d. per 100; superfine Bath post, 4d. per quire, 6s. per ream; note, 3d. per quire, 4s. per ream; best foolscap, 10d. per quire; Albert and Queen's note, 1s. and 1s. 6d. per packet of five quires; quills, 2s. per 100; best sealing-wax, 10 sticks for a shilling; bibles, 1s 6d; prayers, 1s.; testaments, 6d.; church services, two vols., in case complete, 3s. 6d Name plate, elegantly engraved and 100 superfine cards, 4s. 6d. Account Books, Ledgers, &c., made to order at manufacturers' prices, and every description of Stationery full 30 per cent. lower than any other house in London at H. RODRIGUES' 21, Piccadilly.

SUMMER FASHIONS FOR SIXPENCE!!—A GIANT PLATE, size 187 Square Inches, and another half the size, will be given in CUNNINGHAM'S LADIES' BOOK OF FASHION, for JUNE. Price SIXPENCE!!! Also, a Splendid Engraving of WILKIES' BLIND FIDDLER.
 This work contains the greatest variety of Dress, and is superior in brilliancy of colouring to any other Fashion Book. In giving your orders to your Bookseller, ask for "Cunningham's Ladies' Book of Fashion," price 6d., by post, free, 10d.
London: Published by HUGH CUNNINGHAM, 193, Strand.

The Second Edition, enlarged, price 2s., of

AIRD'S SELF-INSTRUCTING FRENCH GRAMMAR.—"Aird's 'Self-Instructing French Grammar,' is decidedly a work of merit."—Illustrated London News. Also, Now Ready, price 1s. 9d.,
SYNTAX MADE EASY; or, How to Speak and Write French Correctly: A Sequel to "Aird's Self-Instructing French Grammar."—"Mr. Aird, in the fullest sense of the term, has made the acquisition of French Syntax a matter of no difficulty."—The Atlas.
London: HUGH CUNNINGHAM, 193, Strand, and all Booksellers.

Now Ready,

VOL. VIII. OF LIVES OF THE QUEENS OF ENGLAND.
BY AGNES STRICKLAND.
Comprising the Lives of HENRIETTA MARIA, Consort of Charles I.; and CATHERINE OF BRAGANZA, Consort of Charles II.
N.B. New and Revised Editions of the first seven volumes are also now ready, price 10s. 6d. each, bound, with Illustrations.
"These volumes have the fascination of a romance, united to the integrity of history.—Times.
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street

Price 2s.,

THE OLD AND NEW DISPENSATIONS CONTRASTED, with especial Reference to Certain Points at Present Controverted in the Church, by F. I. B. HOOPER, Rural Dean of Wick.—"A thorough exposure and condemnation of the Oxford Tract party; and, besides this, it abounds in original and striking views of the greatest doctrines of Scripture. Out of sight, beyond all the Episcopal charges and other reproofs of Puseyism yet published, the best rebuke and condemnation of that pestilent heresy."—Worcester Herald.—"Evinces depth of research and closeness of argument, and derives additional value from the numerous references to Holy Scriptures and the works of eminent Divines."—Bristol Journal SEELEY'S, London.

Just Published, with Coloured Illustrations,

FLOWERS OF THE MATIN AND EVEN SONG; or, Thoughts for those who Rise Early. By MARY ROBERTS, Author of "Ruins and Old Trees," "Progress of Creation," &c. Fcap. 8vo. Price 5s. Cloth, gilt edges.
Mrs. LOUDON'S GLIMPSES OF NATURE 37 Illustrations. Price 3s. 6d., cloth.
"We could not recommend a more valuable little work."—Literary Gazette.
KEY to KNOWLEDGE; or, Things in Common Use Shortly and Simply Explained. By a MOTHER. 11th Edition, with numerous Engravings. Price 3s. 6d., cloth.
London: GRANT and GRIFFITH, Successors to J. Harris, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

LADIES' NEEDLEWORK.
Now Ready, by the Author of "The Knitter's Friend," 1s., or by post, 1s. 4d,

THE ART OF CROCHET; compiled with an especial view to facilitate Self-instruction in this fashionable accomplishment, and in its pages will be found directions for making, and designs for working, various beautiful articles, all hitherto unpublished. II.
Third Edition of the favourite Knitting Book, 1s., or by post, 1s. 4d.,
THE KNITTER'S FRIEND. The sale, in thirteen months, of 10,000 copies of this little volume on Knitting and Netting is the best guarantee of its value.
III.
THE BOOK OF THE BABY'S WARDROBE IN KNITTING AND NETTING. Twenty-one Receipts for articles of Children's Dress. 6d., or by post, 8d.
The above may be had at any Berlin Shop, or, by post, of the Publisher, J. HOPE, 58, Queen street, Ramsgate.

CHEAP POPULAR MAGAZINE,
Containing Original Sermons for Family Reading, &c., &c.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND MAGAZINE for MAY, Price 9d. (with nine Engravings), contains Original Sermons by the Lord Bishop of Lincoln, the Rev. R. W. Browne, M.A., of King's College; the Dean of Salisbury, the Rev. Henry Melvill, B.D., Hailey bury: the Archdeacon of Derby. Papers by the Rev. R. L. Cotton, Rev. E. Strickland, Rev. Charles Kemble; with the usual quantity of Miscellaneous Articles, Narratives, Sketches of Remarkable Places, Scenes in Natural History, Missionary Records, &c., &c.
 All the Sermons in this work are, without exception, printed from the MSS. of the respective Authors.
A few of the Parts from the commencement of the year may still be had, for which an early application is recommended.—London: EDWARDS and HUGHES, 12, Ave Maria-lane.

Now ready, in 3 vols. post 8vo.,

MR. DISRAELI'S NEW WORK,
"SYBIL; OR, THE TWO NATIONS."
"Another of Disraeli's brilliant novels."—Times.
"Sybil is an improvement upon Coningsby The character and condition of the poor is presented in a more artistical manner than by Jerrold or Dickens."—Spectator.
"In his sketches of the knaves and dupes of party, Mr. Disraeli is without a rival."—Examiner.
"High as is Mr. Disraeli's reputation, Sybil will add a brighter laurel to his wreath. Here he comes forward in the noble character of champion of the poor. He has consecrated his brilliant talents to the sacred cause of truth—he has devoted his energies to the regeneration of the people—in such a cause genius shines with redoubled lustre. Coningsby sought to expose the state of parties—Sybil describes the condition of the people. Coningsby was the novel of the season, a mirror of the political characters of the day—Sybil is the history of the age; a picture of the sufferings of the country. He must be cold and stern, indeed, who can peruse this work unmoved. It is a history of the sorrows of the poor, drawn with all the nervous eloquence of truth, adorned with all the graces of a poet's fancy."—Sun.
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

JOE MILLER THE YOUNGER.
CONTENTS OF No. IV., NOW PUBLISHING:—

Joe's Trip to Greenwich Fair. Illustrated	The Duke of Gordon
A Convert to Mathewism. Illustrated	A Hint to Corn-Cutters
Parliamentary Soothing Syrup	Anecdotes of Eating
Grand Meeting of the Anti-Teetotal Club	The Celebrated Horne Tooke
An Entomological Examination	The Late Mr. Hood
Examinations at Apothecaries' Hole. Comically Illustrated	The Ojibbeways
	The Mysteries of a Muff: Continued.—A Trip to Covent Garden Bazaar
The Drunkard's Dream. Illustrated	Our Song of Triumph
Grist for the Young Miller	Reading Made Easy
Royal Academy Exhibition	Charming Julia
Bewick the Celebrated Wood-Engraver	Important Anouuncement, &c. &c. &c.
The Mode of Fitting Boots and Brogues in Ireland

THE WONDERFUL VEGETABLE HAIR DYE.
With a Galvanic Engraving.
Containing more Fun, Broad Grins, and Amusement than any other publication of the day.
Price only THREE HALFPENCE; stamped, to go free by post, TWOPENCE HALFPENNY, WEEKLY. 10s. 6d. per Annum, paid in advance.
Office, 1, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and Sold by all Booksellers and Newsvenders.

EPSOM RACES.—Sparkling Pink CHAMPAGNE:—Pints, 21s.; Quarts, 30s., per dozen. This Wine is confidently offered as quite equal to Foreign. HOBSON'S Grocery and Foreign Warehouse, 6, Connaught-terrace, Edgeware-road.

HAMS! HAMS! HAMS!—Several Hundred of YORK, any size from 7lbs. to 30lbs. each, in prime condition, mellow and full flavour, at 8½d. per lb. CRAFT, 20, Fpot-lane, City. Conveyed free to any part of London.

BACON! BACON! BACON!—CRAFT, 20, Philpot-lane City, respectfully notifies he continues to receive weekly supplies of his justly-esteemed mild Breakfast Bacon, and is at present selling it at 6½d. per pound, by the whole or half side. Conveyed, free, to any part of London.

THE MINARET PARASOL. CAUTION.—Ladies are particularly requested to observe that the Silver Runner of the Parasol is Stamped with the word "MINARET." This Caution is necessary, as other parasols have been sold for the Minaret which are not so. This elegant Novelty can be had at all the respectable Drapers in the Kingdom.

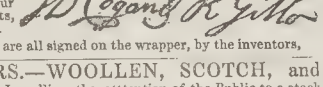
JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp.
INGRAM'S Manufactory, 29, City-road.

CHILDREN'S and INVALIDS' CARRIAGES.—INVALIDS' Wheel Chairs, from £3 to £35, with hoods; second-hand, as well as new. Spinal and Self-acting Chairs. Children's Chaises, Vis-a-vis Waggons, Phaetons, Barouches, &c. &c, from Ten Shillings to Twenty Guineas. Immense and varied collections on sale or hire

LEGHORNS, MILLINERY, and STRAW BONNETS. BRIGHT'S, 12, Ludgate-street (two doors above Everington's).—M. BRIGHT begs to announce her return from Paris, supplied with every Novelty. Fine Leghorns, 20s.; Fashionable Millinery Bonnets, 21s.; Fancy Straws, an immense variety: Dunstable Straws of every kind. Children's Bonnets; Leghorn, Tuscan, and Straw Hats of every size. The Largest Assortment in London, all bearing a fixed Ready Money Price at the Lowest Scale of Profit.

DAVIES'S FINE WAX-WICK MOULDS, 6d. per lb. Candles, 5d.; Botanic Wax, 1s.; German 1s. 2d.; Fine Wax, 1s. 5d.; Sperm, 1s. 10d.; Transparent Wax, 1s. 10d.; Genuine Wax, 2s. 1d.; Price's Composite, 8½d. and 10d.; Hale's do, 9½d.; Yellow Soap, 46s., 52s. and 58s. per 112lbs.; Mottled 60s and 64s; Windsor, 1s. 4d. per packet; Brown Windsor, 1s. 9d.; Rose, 2s.; Almond, 2s. 6d. Sealing Wax, 4s. 6d. per lb. Ogleby's Patent Oil, 4s. 6d. per gallon; Solar, 3s. 6d.; Sperm, 7s. 6d. For Cash, at DAVIES'S Old-Established Warehouse, 63, St. Martin's-lane, opposite Slaughter's Coffee-house.

DINNER SERVICES, TABLE GLASS, &c.—SANDER and Co., 319, Holborn, corner of Southampton Buildings, opposite Gray's Inn Gate, have on view the largest Stock in London of Table Glass, Dinner, Dessert, and Tea Services, Ornamental China, Chandeliers, Lustres, Lamps, Hall Lanterns, &c. N.B. A considerable number of Dinner, Dessert, and Tea Services at a great reduction in price; these patterns are not those of the present year, but the ware is of the best quality, and they will be found worthy of attention; some of the Dinner Services in question, are porcelain, in addition to which, there are a few suspending Drawing Room Lamps; Lustres, and Hall Lanterns.



SAVING OF SILVER AND LABOUR.

FOR CLEANING GOLD and SILVER PLATE INSTANTANEOUSLY, without wearing the precious metals in the slightest degree.—JONES'S SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, a new chemical discovery, recommended by the eminent Chemist, Andrew Ure, M.D., F.R.S., &c., and sold in half pint, pint, and quart bottles, at 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. Caution.—Every genuine Bottle of this Compound is protected by the Stamp and Address of the only Inventors and Makers, "Jones and Co., Light House, 201, Strand, London." Sold wholesale by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Sutton, and Co., and Edwards and Co., London; and retail by Sangar, Oxford-street; Johnson, Cornhill; and Jones and Co. 201, Strand; and Ripon and Burton, Oxford-street.

LONDON CARPET WAREHOUSE.—WAUGH and SON, Manufacturers, 3 and 4, Goodge-street (established 1769), invite the attention of the Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, &c., to an inspection of their large and magnificent Collection of Brussels, Royal Velvet Pile, Axminster, Patent Tournay, Turkey, Patent Felt, and every other description of Carpeting, of British and foreign manufacture; comprehending the most tasteful and elegant designs, the colours and quality of which can be warranted, being all manufactured under their immediate inspection. The long patronage and experience they have had, their establishment being exclusively for the sale of carpeting, purchasers can insure carpets of permanent colours and durable qualities, and at reasonable prices.

BERDOE'S SUMMER WATERPROOF OVER-COATS, FROCKS, &c.—These well-known and gentlemanly garments will be found light and most agreeable substitutes for any other outside coat. They are made in the best manner, and are thoroughly respectable—equally free from vulgarity and singularity; are guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and no untried novelty, having been in extensive use among the respectable classes more than six years. A Large Stock of First-rate Garments, in Llama Cloths and other new and greatly admired materials (manufactured expressly for W. B.) now ready, of which an inspection is confidently invited.—Made only by W. BERDOE, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill.

COGAN and GILLO'S NOVARGENT or SILVER SOLUTION, re-silvers worn out Plated Articles, by instantly depositing a Coating of Pure Silver on the surface. It has been highly approved by Dr. Ryan, Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Polytechnic Institution. Sold wholesale by BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon st., London; and JOSEPH RODGERS and SONS, 6, Norfolk-st., Sheffield; and to be had in bottles, with full directions, at 1s., or four in one 3s. each, of all the principal Chemists, Silversmiths, and Furnishing Ironmongers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.—The Genuine are all signed on the wrapper, by the inventors,

ESTABLISHED 18 YEARS.—WOOLLEN, SCOTCH, and MANCHESTER WAREHOUSE.—In calling the attention of the Public to a stock suited for the present season, the foolish assertion of selling cheaper than any house in the Kingdom is not held out as is too often the case; but, at the same time, we positively assert that no house can go to market better, or sell at a smaller rate of profit, our business being conducted on one system, viz., for Ready Money, thus enabling us at all times to meet the utmost competition. Every article in the Establishment is marked in plain figures, at the lowest possible price, from which no deviation can be made. We invite all to inspect and judge for themselves, being confident one purchase will ensure enlarged recommendations and support. No connection with any other house.—HILL and MILLS, 89, St. Martin's-lane, and Corner of St. Martin's-court.

THE ATRAPILATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE; the only dye that really answers for all colours, and does not require re-doing, but as the hair grows, as it never fades or acquires that unnatural red or purple tint common to all other dyes. ROSS and SONS can, with the greatest confidence, recommend the above dye as infallible, if done at their establishment; and ladies or gentlemen requiring it, are requested to bring a friend, or servant with them, to see how it is used, which will enable them to do it afterwards without the chance of failure. Several private apartments devoted entirely to the above purpose, and some of their establishment having used it, the effect produced can be at once seen. They think it necessary to add, that by attending strictly to the instructions given with each bottle of dye, numerous persons have succeeded equally well without coming to them.
Address Ross and Sons, 119 and 120, Bishopsgate-street, the celebrated Perruquiers, Perfumers, Hair-cutters, and Hair-dyers. N.B. Parties attended at their own residences, whatever the distance.

TO THE CARPET TRADE.—THE ROYAL PATENT VICTORIA FELT CARPETING, made without spinning and weaving, having successfully overcome the prejudice created by competitors in other descriptions of Carpeting, and being now honoured with the patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty for its use in the Royal Palaces, the Patent Woollen Cloth Company, who are the sole manufacturers, inform the Trade that their new and beautiful Patterns in Carpetings for the present season are now ready for inspection at the Company's Warehouses, 8, Love-lane, Wood-street, Cheapside, where the Company have also a large assortment of elegantly-printed and embossed Table Covers, Window Curtains, Cloths for Coach-linings, Waistcoatings, Thick Felt for Polishing and Gun Waddings, D'Oyleys, &c. &c., manufactured by the same process. The public, in patronising the Felt Carpeting, will obtain, and for one half the price, an article superior in strength and durability to either Kidderminster or Brussels.—Manufactories—Elmwood Mills, Leeds; and Borough-road, London.

GREAT SAVING IN SOAP AND LABOUR.
Royal Letters Patent, granted March 4, 1844.

WARD'S PATENT WASHING and CLEANSING POWDER, manufactured at the Oldbury Alkali Works, near Birmingham. One great advantage which this powder possesses over others consists in its not injuring the hands of the persons using it. Other Washing Powders contain carbonate of soda in its free state, which, by acting upon the skin, inflames the hands and renders them sore and wrinkled. Other advantages peculiar to this powder may be stated as follows, viz.:—A saving of at least one-half of the soap which is necessary when soda is used. A great saving in the labour of washing. The colour of linen and other fabrics turns out far superior in whiteness to that which is given by any other means From the wear and tear caused by the rubbing and maiding being diminished, the durability of the clothes is increased.
This Powder will be found very valuable in Scouring Greasy Floors and Tables, in Cleansing Brass, Tin, and other Utensils of domestic use, and also Publicans' Pewter Pots.
 Warranted not to injure articles, though made of the finest materials.
Sold in packets, at 1d., 2d., 3d., and 6d. each, with directions for using. Be particular in asking for WARD'S WASHING POWDER, as no other possesses the same qualities.—To be had of all Druggists, Grocers, Oilmen, &c., or wholesale from the Manufacturers by application to Mr. P. WARD, at the Works as above, or in London, to Mr. JOHN MACARTNEY, 2, Coleman-street Buildings.

SELF MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION
The following Directions will ensure an exact Fit, and will be found a most convenient accommodation. The measure may be taken with a piece of tape, and reduced into inches stating the height of person, and if any peculiarity in figure; also whether taken over a Coat.

COATS, VESTS, &c.	Inches
From Neck seam, not Including Collar, to Hip Buttons
From Hip Buttons to Bottom of Skirt
From centre of Back to Elbow joint Continued to length of Sleeve at Wrist
Size round top of Arm
Size roud Chest under the Coat
Size round Waist under the Coat

TROUSERS.	Inches
From top of Trousers to bottom
From under the Legs to bottom of Trousers
Size round top of Thigh (tight)
Size round Calf
Ditto Waist
Ditto Hips
HAT.
Measure size round the Head

READY MADE.	£ s d
Tweed Taglionis, from	0 7 6
Ditto, superior quality, with silk collar, cuffs, and facings	0 13 6
Codringtons and Chesterfields, in light and gentlemanly materials	0 18 6
Cachmerette Coats, in every style and make, including the registered veltoe	1 2 0
Holland Jean Grand Drill and Diagonal Blouses	0 3 6
Splendid Summer Vests, from	0 2 6
Cachmere and Persian ditto, in endless variety	0 4 6
Black and Fancy Satins	0 6 6
Cloth Trousers, from	0 9 0
Tweed ditto	0 4 6
Spring ditto (woollen)	0 5 0
Dress Coats	1 0 0
Frock ditto	1 3 0

MADE TO MEASURE.	£ s d
Tweed Coats, trimmed with silk	0 12 0
Cachmerette ditto, in any shape, handsomely trimmed, made in the first style of fashion	1 5 0
Saxe Gotha ditto, handsomely trimmed	1 15 0
Quilting Vests, 6s. 6d., or 3 for	0 19 0
Cachmere ditto, in choice patterns	0 8 6
Satin ditto, plain or fancy	0 14 6
Spring Trousers in great variety	0 10 6
Tweed ditto, in choice patterns	0 13 6
Single Milled Albert and Plain Doe Trousers	0 19 0
Best quality Black or Dress ditto	1 6 0
Dress Coats	1 12 0
Ditto, ditto, best manufactured	2 15 0
Frock Coats	1 15 0
Ditto, ditto; best manufactured	3 3 0

MOURNING to any extent, at Five Minutes' notice.

IMPORTANT.—Any article purchased or ordered, if not approved of, exchanged, or the money returned.
OBSERVE.—E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Drapers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen.
CAUTION.—E. MOSES and SON are obliged to guard the public against imposition, having earned that the untradesman-like falsehood of being connected with them, or it is the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons. They have no connection with any other house in or out of London; and those who desire genuine Cheap Clothing, should (to prevent disappointments, &c) call at or send to, 154, Minories, or, 86, Aldgate, opposite the Church.
N B.—No business transacted at this Establishment, from Friday at sunset until sunset on Saturday, when business is resumed until twelve o'clock.

THE POPULAR RECORD OF MODERN SCIENCE, a Journal of Philosophy and General Information.—Published every week at the Office, 344, Strand; and at all Booksellers or Newsvenders. Price, unstamped, 2d.; Stamped, 3d.

DISEASES of the CHEST.—Dr. MADDOCK on a Simple, Safe, and Efficacious Mode of Treating Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Chronic Cough, and Affections of the Heart. The work is made intelligible to all classes of readers. Second Edition, now ready, price 5s. 6d.—SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row.—Gratuitous Advice by the Author, to the Poor, at the Dispensary, 80, Judd-street, New-road.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT to EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.
By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.
SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; CARVALHO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

TEETH.—Ten Guineas the Set for the latest improved MINERAL TEETH, mounted on gold; Single Tooth, mounted on gold, 12s All operations on the Teeth in the most skilful manner, at moderate charges. Mr. HOBBS, Surgeon Dentist, 17, Grafteon-street East, London University.

HEAL and SON'S LIST of BEDDING.—Containing a full description of weights, sizes, and prices, by which purchasers are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set of Bedding, sent free by post.—HEAL and SON, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, Tottenham-court-road.

NOTICE TO INVENTORS.—Office for Patents of Inventions and Registrations of Designs, 14, Lincoln's-inn-fields. The Printed Instructions gratis, and every information upon the subject of Protection for Inventions, either by Letters Patent or the Designs Act, may be had by applying personally, or by letter, pre-paid, to Mr. Alexander Prince, at the Office, 14, Lincoln's-inn-fields.

HOBY'S IMPERIAL BLACKING has no unpleasant smell; its lasting polish equals patent leather; it softens the upper leather, prevents it breaking, and alleviates the pain of corns and tender feet.—Bottles, 1s. 6d. and 1s. Paste, 6d.—London: 48, St. James's-street; Benetfink and Jones, 81, Cheapside; Dietrichsen and Co. 63, Oxford-street. Edinburgh: Duncan, 59, Princes-street. Dublin: Hodges and Son, 16, Westmoreland-street.—N.B. Especially recommended for Cleaning and Preserving Harness.

LESSONS IN MILLINERY AND DRESSMAKING.—Mrs. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, sole inventress of teaching the art of Dressmaking in a series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of cutting, fitting, and executing, in the most finished style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to pupils. Apprentices and Improvers Wanted.—Millinery and Dress Rooms.

HAZARD'S PATENT SHOWER BATH 21s.; ditto, made very portable, with case, 30s. A shower bath, with curtains, 12s. 6d.; ditto, with brass pumps, valves, and conducting tubes, from 60s.; sponging baths, 12s., 18s., and 21s.; hip baths, 19s. and 21s.; also every description of toilet ware 30 per cent. under any other house. R. and J. SLACK beg to call attention to the quality of their baths; as they are manufactured on their premises, they can confidently warrant them for durability. Their illustrated catalogue of baths and every article in ironmongery may be had gratis, or sent to any part post free.—RICHARD and JOHN SLACK, 335, Strand, opposite Somerset House. Established 1818.

PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS.—JOHNSON and CO., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street, Hatters to the Queen and Royal Family, Inventors and Patentees.—From the construction of the PATENT FLEXIBLE HATS the unpleasant pressure on the forehead is entirely removed, and by their extreme elasticity they are capable of accommodating themselves perfectly to the shape of the head; the crown, moreover, being ventilated, and the perspiration prevented from appearing on the outside of the hat, are additional advantages. As Ladies' Riding Hats they are light and elastic, and will retain their position on the head without the least discomfort.—JOHNSON and CO., 113, Regent-street, and GRIFFITHS and JOHNSON, 2, Old Bond-street.

ANOTHER RAPID CURE of COUGH.—From the Rev. O. Thomas, Holyhead.—"Dec. 31st, 1844.—Sir,—I have the pleasure of informing you that my wife is a great deal better from taking one box of your valuable Wafers: she felt herself better the first day she took them, &c. (Signed) OWEN THOMAS, Wesleyan Minister"
Dr. LOCOCK'S WAFERS give instant relief, and a rapid Cure of Asthma, Coughs, and all disorders of the breath and lungs. To singers and public speakers they are invaluable, for clearing and strengthening the voice; they have a most pleasant taste. Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 11s. per box.—Agents: DA SILVA and Co., 1, Bride-lane, Fleet-street, London; sold by all Medicine Venders.

MR. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH. Price 4s 6d. Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent.—The Succedaneum will remain firm in the tooth for many years, arresting the further progress of decay, and rendering extraction unnecessary. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Price 4s. 6d. It can be sent by post, free Sold by Savory, 220, Regent-street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Proul, 229, Strand; Johnston, 68 Cornhill; and all Medicine vendors.—Mr. Thomas continues to supply the loss of Teeth on his new system of self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from 11 till 4. Mr. THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED, without Springs, Clasps, or Wires; Loose Teeth Fastened; and Filling Decayed Teeth with Mineral Marmoratum.—MONS. LE DRAY and SON, SURGEON DENTISTS, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street, continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated Mineral Marmoratum, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the Toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary They also Fasten Loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of calomel, or diseases of the gums. Incorrodible Artificial or Natural Teeth, of surpassing beauty, to match in colour and shape those left in the mouth, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following charges:—A single tooth, 10s.; a set, £5 5s. Arranged on the most approved principles, and restoring perfect articulation and mastication. At home from Ten till Six.—Mons. Le Dray's "Treatise on the Diseases of the Gums and Teeth" may be had free, on application at their residence, 42 Berners-street, Oxford-street.

SANATORIUM, or HOME IN SICKNESS.—The lease of the house hitherto occupied by this Institution having expired, and the house itself being unfitted, by its want of accommodation, for the purposes of the Institution, the Committee have long sought in vain for some suitable mansion which they might rent until sufficient funds could be raised for building. Unsuccessful in this attempt, they have been reluctantly compelled to close the establishment for the present. Convinced, however, from the experience they have had, that, if convenient premises could be purchased or built, the institution would not only support itself, but also afford the means of greatly extending its usefulness, the Committee have determined to exert themselves to procure the necessary funds for this purpose. So soon as these shall be obtained, the institution will be re-opened.—Further information may be had, and subscriptions paid to the Secretary, at the Office of F. W. Pott, Esq., 13, Godliman-street, Doctors' Commons; and Messrs. Jones, Loyd, and Co., Bankers, Lothbury. HENRY S. SMYTH, Secretary.

SHAWLS.—EVERINGTON'S successors (Graham and Smith) have dissolved Partnership. GEORGE SMITH, now carrying on business in the spacious premises lately occupied by Rundell and Bridge, 32, Ludgate hill, respectfully invites the Nobility, Gentry, and Public to inspect his magnificent Stock of SHAWLS, and he particularly informs gentlemen purchasers that one price only is made, and that price marked on each article in plain figures. Thirteen years' experience in the late house of Everington, enables George Smith to place before his patrons the same choice collection of goods which for so many years past it has been his particular department to select from the various and most talented Continental and British manufacturers. The success of his new system is complete. The economy of his arrangements will supply the best and most fashionable manufactures at moderate prices, while the order of his Establishment effectually secures ladies from any disagreeable importunity to purchase more than they require, or that which is in opposition to their tastes Unencumbered by those heavy expenses which the mania for decorating houses of business has heaped upon the prices of goods, George Smith will sell, on ready money terms only, at much less than the usual profit, every useful and fashionable article in Shawls, Silks, Satins, and Velvets, Mantles, Handkerchiefs, Scarfs, Worked Muslin and Lace Collars and Pelerines. Every description of Printed Dresses, from 5s. each to the most costly fabrics. Every article required in full or half Mourning. A room is set apart for the exclusive sale of British and Foreign Table Linen, and every kind of Linen for family use, Long Cloths, Muslins, &c. A beautiful assortment of Swiss Window-curtains.—32, Ludgate-hill.

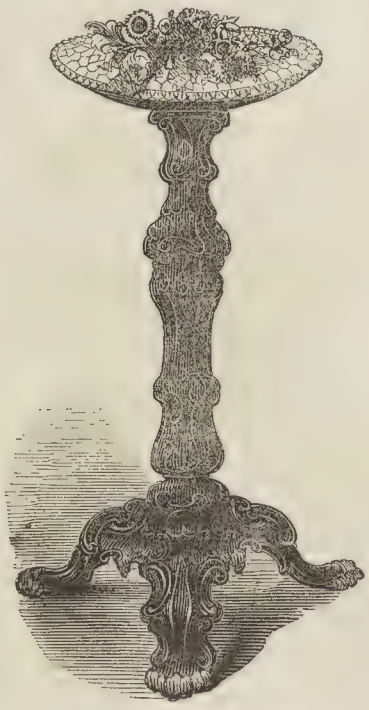
Magnificent Collection of Oak Carvings, Marqueterie, Boule, and Carved Oak Furniture, Bronzes, Rare Florentine Mosaics, Ancient Stained Glass, and Valuable Effects, being the first portion of Mr. Hull's celebrated Stock, removed from Wardour-street, Soho.

MESSRS. OXENHAM and SONS beg to inform the Nobility, Gentry, and Admirers of the Works of the Olden Times, they have received instructions to SELL by AUCTION, at their spacious Rooms, 353, Oxford-street, near the Pantheon, on WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4, and Two Following Days, at Twelve each Day, a MAGNIFICENT ASSEMBLAGE of ANCIENT FURNITURE, comprising Boule, Marqueterie, and Ebony Cabinets: Library, Centre, and Fancy Tables; the whole in the most perfect preservation. A Set of 10 State Chairs, from the Doge's Palace at Venice. Beautiful Carved Oak Dining-room and Library Suites, composed of choice specimens of Carving, of the Gothic and Elizabethan eras adopted with singular good taste, and the finest workmanship, including Pedestal and other Library Tables, Bookcases, Davenports, Library Chairs, rare Gothic Cabinets and Shrines, Pedestal Sideboards, Buffets, Dining Tables and Chairs; also, a Carved Eagle, for a Church Reading-desk, 4 noble Carved Rosewood Pedestals, a handsome Carved Pulpit and Staircase. SPLENDID BRUZES and MOSAICS, in Groups, Figures, and Vases; a

THE FREE TRADE BAZAAR AT COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

The price or Admission to the Bazaar has been reduced to One Shilling, and the attendance has been very numerous.

CHANDELIER.



We select for illustration a few of the beautiful contributions from Coalbrook Dale, by the Messrs. Darby, whose castings in iron compete with the celebrated Berlin productions.

First is a suspended Chandelier, which has a graceful ease and lightness, which comparatively few of our modern metallic chandeliers have attained.

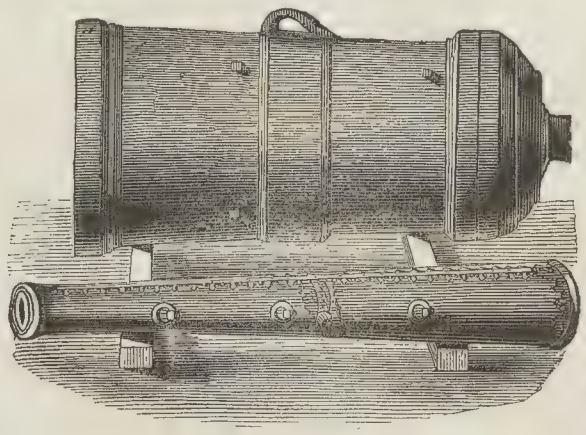
IRON MODEL OF THE WARWICK VASE.

Next is a superb bronzed Fountain, seven feet six inches high, and three feet eight inches in diameter at the base. The outline of form combines, in varying proportions, the cylindrical and pyramidal, with figured details. The dominant figures in the design are the crocodile and the water-snake, the plications and flexions of the latter being so judiciously managed as at all times to complete the details of general outline in a manner exceedingly creditable to the taste and skill of the artist.

IRON FLOWER-TABLE.

The annexed Flower-table displays considerable taste in the design of its support and tripod base.

The vases open too wide a field for present discussion. Nearly all who have written on the Æsthetics of art, have found vases the most illustrative subjects of what they have termed the esoteric archetype which existed in the mind of the designer, and which, it is the perfection of art to suggest forcibly, and yet not thrust ostentatiously on the observance of the spectator. This perfection is attained in the Warwick Vase, and in some copies of Grecian vases;



IRON FOUNTAIN.

but, in one instance we feel that elaborate and multiplied details have overlaid the original design.

MONSTER CHINESE MORTAR.

[This gigantic implement of what Burke calls "the mystery of murder," has just been brought round from Devonport, in the Somerset Ordnance sloop, to the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich. It is an immense Chinese brass mortar, and was brought home in the Cornwallis. It weighs 8 tons 17 cwt., has a diameter of bore of 2 feet 3 inches, and a chamber of 20 inches, the depth of the whole being about 5 feet. The mortar was found in the bush in China, and partly concealed under ground. It is composed of apparently very fine metal, and the trunnions being corroded to a considerable extent afford evidence of the mortar being of great age. It appears, also, as if the part where the vent is, which is very perfect and little worn, had been cast again and inserted in its present position. There is an appearance of a nut and screw in the centre of the breech of the chamber; but, if they are really what they appear to be, a large quantity of fused metal must have been poured into the chamber, as the top of the nut is even with the metal, and could not have been screwed into its present position. Some idea may be formed of the magnitude of the mortar, and the size and weight of shot or shells which it would require to be used in it, when it is known that the large guns cast about two years ago for Mehemet Ali were only 15 inches in diameter, and yet they required shot weighing upwards of 400lb. Yet, the great gun at Beejapore, in the East Indies, weighs 42 tons; and another at Agra weighs 23 tons, and will discharge a ball of 1500lb. These are familiar items in our wonder-books; but the Chinese Mortar here represented is a novelty.

MONSTER GUN, AT WOOLWICH.

EXPLOSION AT THE OLD KENT-ROAD STEAM MILLS.—On Wednesday morning, about ten o'clock, a dreadful explosion took place at the above mills, situated on the banks of the Surrey Canal, near to the Canal-bridge, in the Old Kent road, while Mr. Walters and his son were on the premises. The mill has been worked by steam, and from the pressure of steam becoming too great, or from some other cause at present unknown, the boiler burst. Fortunately, however, no human life has been sacrificed. Some idea may be formed of the terrific force of the explosion from the fact that the boiler, a great portion of the engine, and a part of the machinery, were blown right across the canal, and fell on a piece of waste ground fully 150 yards from the canal itself. Several persons in the vicinity witnessed the flight of the boiler and machinery, and were as much surprised as alarmed at its rapid course through the air, and at the extraordinary distance to which so ponderous a mass was forced. There were several hairbreadth escapes, but among the most fortunate was that of a young lady, the daughter of a gentleman in Maismaur-square, Peckham, whose house is situated at least 500 yards from the spot where the explosion took place. The young lady was dressing in one of the upper rooms, when a large piece of iron passed through the roof and ceiling and dashed to atoms the wash-hand-stand, which she had but the instant before retired from. A poor man in loading a barge with coal was wounded on the head by some brickwork falling on it at the instant the boiler and parts of the engine were flying over his head, but the greatest sufferer is Mr. Walters, the proprietor of the mills himself, who is very seriously injured, while his son, who was also on the premises at the time the explosion took place, escaped unhurt. The dwelling-house and premises of Mr. Walters appear dreadfully shattered, and the destruction of tiles and glass in the neighbourhood is very considerable.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—The solutions forwarded by "J. H.," Woolwich; "E. C. T.;" "W. R.," Glasgow; "G. G.;" "W. F. F.," Worthing; "Clericus;" "Pedona;" "J. At—w—d," are correct.

"J. G.," Truro.—The "Chess Player's Chronicle" is published in monthly numbers on the first of every month, price 1s. Five volumes have already appeared.

"Juvenis."—Thirteen monthly numbers in a volume. The position sent is better adapted for the selection of "Problems for Young Players" in the periodical mentioned than for our columns.

"Scacchi."—In No. 69 mate cannot be postponed beyond the 6th move. Considerable knowledge of the game, and long study of the fine positions invented by Pozziani, Ercole dal Rio, Salvio, Bolton, Bone, D'Orville, &c., are indispensable to a player desirous of excelling in the construction of chess problems.

"A. J.," Trelethin.—Your problem is unintelligible. The Queen is placed on her Kt's 2nd, and then directed to check on "Q R's 4th"—an impossible move in the first place, and, in the second, if it could be made, one which would leave the white King in check. Always send a diagram of any position you wish to be examined—it saves trouble to all parties.

"Stalemate."—The original problem sent is as old as the hills.

"Pedona."—The marked pawn is not inviolate: it is open to capture like any other piece.

"An Admirer of Problems."—There is no mistake whatever.

"Scacchi."—No corrections are required. The board should be placed with a white square on your right hand.

"Cerberus."—Far too simple.

"J. G. B."—A player was concealed.

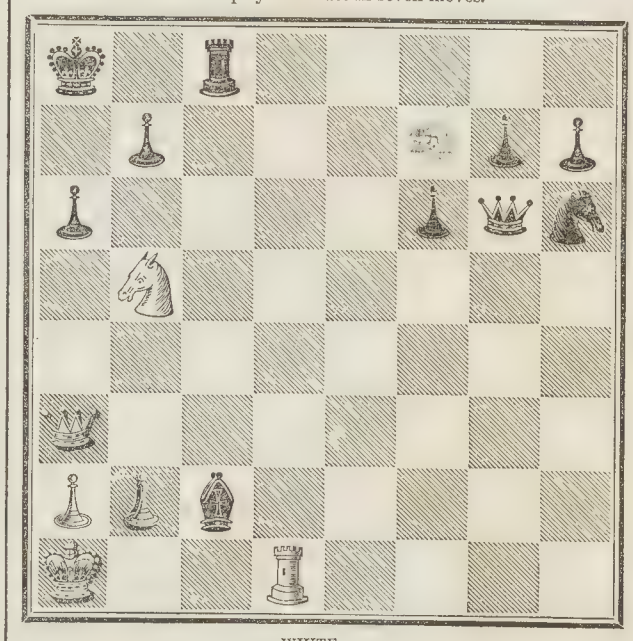
"R. G. C.," Lancaster.—You can demand another Queen.

GREAT MATCH AT CHESS, BY CORRESPONDENCE, BETWEEN PARIS AND PESTH, FOR 100 GUINEAS.

In our last we gave the moves, as far as they have been received, in the game begun by Paris; we now give those of the game opened by the players of Pesth.

GAME NO. 11.

WHITE (Pesth).	BLACK (Paris.)	WHITE (Pesth)	BLACK (Paris).
1. K P two	K P two	20. K Kt to K 4th	K B to Q B 2nd
2. K Kt to B 3rd	K Kt to B 3rd	21. K Kt to Q B 5th	K B to Q 3rd
3. Kt takes K P	Q P one	22. K Kt to K 4th	K B to Q B 2nd
4. K Kt to B 3rd	Kt takes K P	23. K Kt to B 5th	K B to Q 3rd
5. Q P two	Q P one	24. K Kt to K 4th	K B to Q B 2nd
6. K B to Q 3rd	K B to Q 3rd	25. K Kt to Q B 5th	K B to Q 3rd
7. Castles	Castles	26. K Kt to K 4th	K B to Q B 2nd
8. Q B P two	Q B to K 3rd	27. K Kt to Q B 5th	Q B to Q 6th
9. Q to her B 2nd	K B P two	28. K R to K 3rd	Q B to his 7th
10. Q to her Kt 3d	Q P takes P	29. K Kt to K 6th	K R to K B 2nd
11. Q takes Q Kt P	Q B P one	30. Kt takes B	R takes Kt
12. K B takes K Kt	K B P takes B	31. K R to K 2nd	B to Q 6th
13. K Kt to his 5th	Q B to K B 4th	32. B to K B 4th	B takes R
14. Q Kt to B 3rd	Q to her 2nd	33. B takes R	R to K sq
15. Q takes Q	Q Kt takes Q	34. B takes Kt	P takes B
16. K Kt takes K P	K B to Q B 2nd	35. R to K sq	B to K R 4th
17. K R to K sq	Q R to Q Kt sq	36. R takes R (ch)	B takes R
18. K R to K 2nd	Kt to Q Kt 3rd	37. Kt to K 4th	Q Kt P one
19. K Kt to Q B 5th	K B to Q 3rd	38. Q R P one	B to K Kt 3rd



And the Pesth players have to move.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM, NO. 71.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. K to Q B's 7th	K to Q R 4th
2. B to K B's 6th	K to Q R's 3rd
3. B to Q's 8th	K to Q R's 4
4. K to Q Kt 7th (checkmate)

PROBLEM, NO. 72.

White to play and mate in seven moves.

WHITE.

[The above position occurred in the deciding game of a match in which Mr. Staunton gave his opponent the odds of the Queen's Kt. In the situation given, Mr. S. had to move, and he engaged to mate his adversary by force in seven moves.]

TREATY WITH FRANCE FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF THE SLAVE-TRADE.—We believe that the treaty between France and England, for the suppression of the Slave-trade, which the Duke de Broglie came to negotiate, has been agreed upon. The conditions are settled. It requires at present only to be reduced to official form, to be initialed, then signed, and submitted for the ratification of the respective Sovereigns.

FATAL COLLIERY ACCIDENT NEAR WIGAN.—A fatal accident occurred on Monday last by an explosion of fire-damp in one of Mr. Pearson's collieries at Ince, near Wigan. A sub-manager, named Carter, was instantly killed. Two others were seriously hurt, one of whom, a man named George Dawson, is not expected to recover. The cause of the accident is at present unknown.

LOSS OF LIFE ON THE EDINBURGH AND GLASGOW RAILWAY.—An accident, attended with loss of life, happened on Monday night on the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway. A Mr. Cowley, wine-merchant, belonging to Glasgow, hired a special train to convey him to Edinburgh, on some pressing business. The journey was performed without interruption, till the train in which he was had reached within four miles of the Edinburgh end of the line, when the half-past seven o'clock train from Glasgow, proceeding at a greater velocity, overtook the special train engaged by Mr. C. By this time it was past nine o'clock, and of course dark, and, as there were no lights on the trains, and the noise of the one overcoming that of the other, neither of them had the least idea of their increasing proximity until they came into fearful collision, in which the ordinary train penetrated through the carriage of the special one, and thus crushed the unfortunate passenger to instantaneous death. No other person sustained any serious injury, though several of the carriages were thrown off the rails.

THE CONVICT CONNOR.—Last Saturday, the father, mother, and sister of the convict Connor visited him in Newgate. The interview was a most painful scene, the aged mother being carried out of the prison in a lifeless state. It was in consequence of a remark made to his father on Saturday, relative to the visits of the Catholic clergyman, that a rumour has got abroad that he had made a confession. His words were, "When I confess, it will be to a man who has authority to receive it from God," and added, "has power to give me absolution for my sins;" evidently alluding to the form of confession of the Church of Rome. On Sunday he attended Divine Service, both morning and afternoon. The Rev. Mr. Davis describes him as exceedingly attentive to his instructions, and that he is well acquainted with scriptural subjects. It appears from the statement of the father of Connor, that his unfortunate son, upon almost every occasion of his visiting him, inquired if he had seen Cochrane, urging him to bring him up as evidence, as he could prove an alibi. The witness Cochrane was the person who accompanied the prisoner Connor to witness the execution of the unfortunate Tapping, in the evening of which day the murder in St. Giles's was committed. There can be no doubt of this fact now, as Connor has several times lately alluded to it. The prisoner has declared that he never felt his courage leave him till Cochrane stood up and gave evidence against him; he says that he fully anticipated he was a witness for him, and hence his anxiety to speak, as already stated in the report of the trial.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 161.—Vol. VI. FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MAY 31, 1845. [Sixpence.

THE NINE RESOLUTIONS.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL on Monday evening moved a string of nine resolutions, with the purpose of raising a debate on the condition of the labouring classes of the country. The movement, however well intended, and however creditable to the feelings of the Whig Leader, proved one of the weakest and most inefficient ever made by an Opposition. The great defect in the conception of the motion clung to it throughout, and was perpetually visible in the discussion, paralysing every effort with a feeling of the impossibility of any practical result from it. The nine resolutions opened too wide a field of labour to be included in any one debate. The eye of the politician may sweep the whole horizon of evil, but he cannot grasp them all at once for the purpose of arresting and remedying them; and those evils have too real an existence to be charmed away by a Parliamentary formula. the spell is weak, but the fiends who have possession are strong. Grim as want, dark as ignorance, inevitable as death, they walk the land, and will not listen to the voice of a charmer, who comes against them only in the form of nine resolutions—nine barren assertions—with two or three of which all men might agree, while, as to all the rest, they would be certain to differ; and, in the quarrel as to the remedies, leave the diseases to themselves, as they have done, are doing, and will do, till statesmen and rulers are bolder, more in earnest, and more sincere.

On examining them in detail, we find the first asserts the fact that the present period of political tranquillity and revived trade is the fittest for considering the measures that would tend to benefit the condition of the labouring classes. What is necessary to be done at all times, may fitly be done at any; the first resolution, therefore, is little more than a truism no one can dispute. But it is precisely in times of quietude and comparative content that Governments are the least disposed to act. They leave the "well" alone, not being pressed upon by a dread of the "worse," that a change of times brings with it, to find them unprepared. Thus the advocate of change at once encounters an amount of vis inertiæ that nothing but the most powerful influence can overcome. And that influence in the house and out of it, Lord John Russell cannot command. The answer to him is ready and immediate—when you had the power to do much of what you propose, why did you not attempt it? And as to your statements of the benefit the working classes will derive from an abrogation of the protective system, a removal of restrictive duties, and a relaxation of the Corn Laws, why, we have done more for each and all these objects in two years than you did in ten! For House of Commons' purposes, there never was a debate in which the arguments of an Opposition Leader were so easy to meet by a Minister. Then the effective legislator for the poor must be one who has the confidence of the class for whom he legislates; and we need not do more than advert to the coldness and indifference, amounting to positive aversion, with which the poor regard the Whiggish authors of the New Poor Law, with its harsh and penal regulations, its punishments for destitution rather than relief, its felon garb, and worse than felon's food, and the now known and detested purpose, by its means, to bring down the usual diet of the people to a coarser quality. All this is not forgotten; and when the politicians on both sides of the House claim the title of the Poor Man's Friend, the poor regard their professions with very grievous suspicion, and rather think, to be delivered from their interference altogether, is about the best thing that could happen to them.

This indifference out of the House, and the knowledge within it, that among the people such a feeling very widely prevails, combined with the impracticability of the resolutions themselves, all tended to render the two nights' debate one of the greatest failures we ever witnessed. There was a previous conviction that this would be the case. Lord John Russell's long speech on Monday was addressed to a thinner House than ever an ex-Minister, on a formal motion, addressed; that small number diminished till barely the legal number to make "a House" could be kept together. The indifference with which the motion was received reacted on the mover. The noble lord spoke with less than his usual spirit, and plodded on through a waste of extracts from political economists and Reports of Inspectors and Commissioners, with which the world is already familiar. It is not this that is wanted; we need not borrow lanterns to be convinced of the existence of a Sun, nor go to Reports, however able, to learn, that, among all our wealth, and all our knowledge, there are masses whose suffering is great, and ignorance grievous. What is wanted is action; the people require from its rulers something more than an intimate acquaintance with the writings of political economists and the authors of commercial dictionaries.

EPSOM RACES.—"DERBY DAY."—LEAVING THE COURSE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

The debate that so languished on the first night, gained no animation on the second; it could hardly contend with the attractions of Epsom and the Derby Day, and, at an early hour, narrowly escaped a premature end from a "count out;" but it did survive, and dragged on till it received the coup de grace from Sir R. Peel, the Ministry meeting the resolutions by "the previous question," by which they escaped the necessity of either denying the evils Lord John Russell depicted, or affirming the efficacy of his remedies, some of which they have tried already to a much larger extent than he could do himself, and the others they are not prevented from adopting in future, if they are so disposed.

If any one practical measure had been so lost, the country would have reason to lament it; but the failure of this string of resolutions is not much to be deplored. We do not see that the Whigs have any special right to claim the title of champions of the poor. They wasted greater political power than even Peel now possesses, without passing one measure for their advantage; with the merit of believing in the efficacy of Free Trade, they left the principle for their opponents to carry out; Colonization is no new remedy, and that they never attempted to promote by any scheme worthy of the nation. In everything they suggest, the present Government has done as much or more than they; and are as able—from all that ever appeared as willing—to do as much in future. They have removed some of the fetters from commerce; they have granted some relaxations of the Poor Law—a scheme of colonization may be among their future efforts. For all that the people have gained from Ministries, the balance is pretty equal between the two parties—with a slight preponderance against those who are making up by present zeal for past neglect. For the great and essential blessing of abundant harvests, the want of which no legislation would fully supply, the people are indebted to the goodness of a Power far above all rulers and parties alike.

THE DERBY DAY.

Aurora smiles upon the morn, and lo!
Coach, chariot, britska, drotska, equipage!
Wheels whirl from Piccadilly to Soho,
And happy they who horses can engage.
The turnpikes glow with dust, and Rotten-row
Sleeps from the chivalry of this bright age. BYRON.

Reader, hast ever seen a kaleidoscope? and have you looked into it and admired its perpetual panorama? No doubt you have. Having laid it aside for a space, you return to the examination with new zest and curiosity when one accosts you, saying, "There, put it away—you have already seen its contents." What would you think of such logic as that? And yet the same is the reasoning which would hold it unnecessary to portray last Wednesday's pilgrimage to Epsom, because its preceding anniversaries have been noted down. We tell thee, had Swift narrated and Hogarth illustrated the Derby procession into Surrey, in 1844, that of this year of grace would have furnished ample room and space enough for the historian and painter. Equipage having offered up its oblations, the relics are removed, and all is forgotten till the time comes for a renewal of the sacrifice.

Lo! it is the eve of Epsom Races, and, from Hyde-park-corner to Shoreditch, from the Regent's Park to Ratcliffe-highway, every Pantechnicon, Bazaar, and Repository, is gutted, from cellar to garret, and forth poureth every imaginable locomotive convenience and inconvenience.

The horse in all its varieties is called into requisition; and perpetual motion dwelleth in the heels of the post-boy. Neither is it necessary to treat the notice of this wondrous Carnival merely in caricature. There are points of view in which it may be seen full of matter for deep reflection. Haply it is early dawn when you set forth for the smiling hills of Surrey. A calm, balmy sunrise pours the essence of health and peace upon the multitudes that are hastening towards the metropolis with all the countless items of rural produce. As yet this scene of active industry is uninterrupted by the idle hordes that, at a more advanced period of the day, crowd all the avenues to London. The silent streets through which ye have passed were untenanted, save by solitary, houseless, wandering curs, and drowsy policemen, lounging about with the peculiar swing of listlessness which is the characteristic gait of that body. As you advance further into the country, the outlines of the immense capital may be all distinctly traced, free from smoke, the "inky cloke" which envelopes it by day, and all within it still apparently buried in repose. The grey mists of morning, which hang upon the hills, give a soft and tranquil hue to the landscape, well according with the solemn calmness reigning over a spot containing more dead and living inhabitants than any other city in the world. Is not here a scene and a season for grave thought?

But your holiday philosopher belongeth to the sect of Epicurus, eschewing "Plato the sententious." . . . . He is "at his old lunes;" not, indeed, "to meet the sun upon the upland lawn," but his jolly companions, at the Elephant and Castle. Here they come and there they go: Phaeton send them a good deliverance of Kennington-gate! What myriads of reminiscences arise apropos of that Charybdis of chariots! It was upon a time, while desperate people were dashing through it, laughing danger to scorn, and snapping their fingers at fate, that we found ourself thus soliloquising:—"Wonderful! passing wonderful! No compound fractures of thighs; and they have all their heads on! Some especial Providence must surely do this!" "It's all very fine to talk in that fashion," observed a reprobate in a red nose, at our elbow, "so long as they are all going one way. Will Providence help a man to swim up the Falls of Niagara? Suppose any of these gentlemen should take it into his head to return to his mansion in Tooley-street, instead of continuing his course to Epsom; could Providence land him safe and sound there, under existing circumstances?" The occasion not being convenient for argument, we held our peace. . . .

And now we are fairly on our pleasure pilgrimage. See! there, on the left, is the Swan; it is Clapham. Already has good provision begun to wait on appetite. To be sure, the groups that feed so early are not of the class Corinthian, exactly; but, nevertheless, by're Lady, there are goodly creatures among them. Look at the nymph descending from the caravan. Ah! how steep the step is! See ye her

White stockings drawn—uncurdled as new milk—
O'er limbs whose symmetry sets off the silk?

You were too late for a peep. We are not sorry for it. Now, onward by classic Morden (mark ye, we said classic, not Do-the-Boys' Morden), Merton, and, anon, Ewell—Ewell of the fatal corner for all such charioteers as steer too small. The village is all a fête, filled with lots of pretty lasses—Cockneys an' ye will—but, for all your sneer, a comely company. We contend, at the point of the pen, that east of Temple Bar female beauty and taste abound—ay, to prodigality! That the daughters of Cheap are glorious girls; but its sons—their brothers—we hand over to thy disposal. Ineffable things they be—thin atomies, with frills to their corazzas, and swallow tails to their coats, black satin waistcoats, relieved with mosaic gold—like the furniture of a coffin—and faces of a ghostly hue, proclaiming the warfare of the stomach with the fumes of the unaccustomed Havannah.

Two short miles, and Epsom spreads before us—the Spread Eagle, rendezvous of all true sportsmen, on our right hand. Here pause we for a space. It is a goodly hostel, and a fit, for its locality, for its host began the world with racing—continues racing—and no doubt will do so 'till his race be run. Here Dorling's cards solicit your notice, together with gentlemen, as Shakspeare says, "but half made up," being minus a moiety of legs and arms, and others made up with a grievous care that might melt the heart of a hearthstone. As you linger in front of the Spread Eagle, by degrees ye mark the arrival of the carriage company, as "gents" call "the quality." We counsel you to make the best of your way to the Downs. Did we advise amiss? Is not that a glorious sight for the lover of nature and of art? Look, a city of canvas! Observe the sutlers, as busy as bees: preparations, in point of guarding against the possibility of the supplies being cut off, have been made, which would have done credit to the siege of Troy.

The Course from below the Grand Stand to far beyond Tattenham Corner is occupied on either side by files of carriages, in many places twenty deep. On the hill are equipages in thousands. Talk of the Olympic games! Here are more chariots and horsemen to be seen at one swoop than ever Greece possessed during its whole existence as an empire! And if the carriages have brought down their multitudes, conceive what the railways must have done; contrivances of removing simultaneously any amount of human cattle. "It is the greatest anniversary of the Derby ever witnessed," said those who have had long experience of such events, and so say we.

Half-past two was the hour appointed for the great race; but, long before, the neighbourhood of the starting-post was crowded with persons, anxious to see "the terrible high-bred cattle" take their preparatory canters. Of these, when the word, "to the post," was given, thirty-one appeared mounted. A gorgeous array it was; the many-coloured jackets of the riders gleaming in the sunshine like a moving bed of tulips. The awful moment for the start had arrived, and they gathered for the final struggle, when The Libel—one of the favourites, as it will be seen—reared, and, striking out, caught Nat, the rider of Alarm, heavily on the left wrist, which prevented his holding his horse, which then ran away with him, and fell over the ropes; he was presently caught, however, and took part in the mighty struggle for

THE DERBY STAKES,

Of 50 sovs each, h ft, for three yrs old; colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 2lb; the owner of the second horse to receive 100 sovs out of the stakes, and the winner to pay 100 sovs towards the police regulations of the course. Last mile and half. (138 Subs.)

Mr. Gratwicke's The Merry Monarch. by Slane ..	(F. Bell)	1
Mr. A. Johnstone's Annandale	(Marson)	2
Mr. Gully's Old England	(S. Day)	3
Mr. Mostyn's Pantasa	(Marlow)	4

The following also started, but were not placed:—

Lord Stradbroke's Idas	(G. Edwards)	0
Mr. Gully's Weatherbit	(J. Day, jun.)	0
Mr. A. W. Hill's The Libel	(Calloway)	0
Mr. Gratwicke's Doleful	(H. Bell)	0
Lord Chesterfield's Pam	(F. Butler)	0
Mr. Ford's Fuzbos	(Sly)	0
Colonel Cradock's Jinglepot	(Templeman)	0
Duke of Richmond's Laird o' Cockpen	(Whitehouse)	0
Mr. Wreford's Worthless	(J. Howlett)	0
Mr. St. Paul's Mentor	(Lye)	0
Colonel Peel's Cobweb colt	(E. Edwards)	0
Mr. Waller's Columbus	(Wakefield)	0
Lord Exeter's Wood Pigeon	(Boyce)	0
Mr. Worley's John Davis	(Crouch)	0
Mr. A. W. Hill's Salopian	(Denman)	0
Colonel Anson's Kedger	(Simpson)	0
Lord Glasgow's Miss Whip colt	(Holmes)	0
Lord Verulam's Corumba colt	(W. Cotton)	0
Sir G. Heathcote's Gwalior	(Chapple)	0
Mr. Theobald's Desperation	(Bartholomew)	0
Mr. Lintott's Cabin Boy	(Buckle)	0
Mr. Greville's Alarm	(Nat)	0
Mr. Watt na Adonis	(Hornsby)	0
Mr. Fergusson's Clear-the-Way	(Robinson)	0
Mr. Coleman's Young Eclipse	(W. Coleman)	0
Mr. Mytton's Black Prince	(Copeland)	0
Mr. Mack's Little Jack (Chance colt)	(Balchin)	0

BETTING AT STARTING.

3 to 1 agst Idas (t); 7 to 2 agst Weatherbit (t); 6 to 1 agst The Libel (t); 10 to 1 agst Alarm; 20 to 1 each agst Pam, Doleful, and Fuzbos; 22 to 1 each agst Pantasa and Old England; 30 to 1 agst Jinglepot; 40 to 1 each agst Mentor and Worthless; 50 to 1 each agst Columbus, Laird o'Cockpen, Cobweb colt, and Annandale; 1000 to 15 each agst Miss Whip colt and Wood Pigeon; 2000 to 10 agst Clear-the-way.

The winner was not named in the Ring, though, of course, he belonged to the backers of Forth's lot. As soon as the horses had got off, and settled in their places, Kedger took the lead, but at no great speed, for the pace was not good the first half of the distance. The foremost rank up the hill consisted of Kedger, Wood Pigeon, Annandale, Old England, Pantasa, The Merry Monarch, Idas, and Pam. Thus they rounded Tattenham Corner; and, in making the descent to the road, Pam fouled Wood Pigeon and fell, and Weatherbit certainly jumped over him—if not some of the others, including Clear-the-Way. As soon as they were over the road, The Merry Monarch took the lead, followed by Annandale, who could never reach him—Old England, and Pantasa. And thus ended the Derby of 1845, in which the worst horses, without any exception, were those selected by the public for favourites; the very last being Idas, "the crack," backed not long before at 2 to 1!!! The winner is in the Leger, and, moreover, is a very fine animal. . . . . .

The Derby is won: the steeds turn round—the jockeys return to weigh. Holy Mother of Moses! has it entered the heart of man—even an Irishman—to conceive the tearing and swearing, the howling and screeching, that rend the sky? Quick as thought a circle of policemen and truncheons is formed, into which the horses are received as they arrive, and against which a roaring tide of humanity is dashing as fiercely as the vexed ocean. Look at the Grand Stand! Behold two acres of countenances uplifted to the clouds, wedged as closely as Yarmouth bloaters in a barrel, and resembling nothing in nature but a dish of opened oysters! The great globe is shaken: Echo gives up the ghost—the thunder hides its diminished head, as, with the roar of ten thousand volcanoes, myriads of furious lungs crash forth—"WHO HAS WON?"

Who thinks of racing after a Derby? There was a galloping of horses, indeed, but none to care for it. There was a pouring forth of creature comforts, and such palates to welcome them! Thus, then, the company feasted; and anon turned to their recreations—the exhibitions of the "Flying Woltigeurs," "the Egyptian Gymnastistics—individuals with never no backbones, but only a morsel of gristle as holds 'em together;" minstrels, who dispense melody by the mile—a penny a fathom; conjurors, who swallow knives and forks like gingerbread nuts; and last, not least, the man who balances the donkey on the tip of his nose, and keeps continually crying aloud, "Now then, ladies and gentlemen, a few more coppers and up he goes."

But there must be an end to all things—yea, even to a Derby Day: and now the note of preparation sounds for the retreat. Disastrous was that return in full many an instance, and yet were its ills borne with a philosophy seldom found in the flesh—of the cockney. There were terrible collisions and full many a capsize: one which lodged a party of six in the limbo of a wet ditch, about a mile from the Course, was an extreme case. "Will nobody save my frock?—that I should get it ruined the first day I put it on! And my bonnet—oh! do—do save that. Whatever shall I do?" This came from the bottom of a heart, on which sixteen summers had left no deeper cause for anxiety. Other scenes by the road were those better suited to the pencil of the caricaturist than the pen of the philosopher, and these are well delineated by one who has made human absurdities his study. See how he treads on their kibes through Sutton and Mitcham, even unto Kennington, of the remorseless "pike" and unstinted vocabulary—where men are allowed to use their own parts of speech, on condition of paying the gate twice over. And now the tale is told and illustrated, say, is not the Derby Day a "great fact"—a passing tableau of English character?

The world can furnish no festival within a thousand per cent. of its "pride, pomp, and circumstance;" a whole year is occupied in getting up its interest by all imaginable artifices for awakening men's hopes and fears. What a commentary it is on the spirit of our land, where order and disorder reign in most admired method. The race for the Derby, with its Course kept as free and clear as though it ran through a wilderness instead of among a vast multitude, is the emblem of our treatment of business: the jollification which succeeds is the true type of the natural idiosyncracy—the most naturally quaint and social in the world,

When once you've melted its confounded ice.

THE DERBY DAY.—1845.

The Derby Day! it always was a famous
Day in the annals of our English spring;
Coming with hope to lure or fraud to shame us,
With the bee honey or the waspish sting,
With some proud winner every one could name us,
Or else the field deceiving all the ring.
Since London Cockney left the stone called "Curb"—he Never loved any "Epsom" like the Derby!

The Derby was the Crack! not the old Oaks!
Rode by a small slight weight upon a filly.
No! 'twas the Derby furnished all the jokes:
O'Connell made one on the "Derby Dilly!"
The "Derby Station" is no common hoax,
Where a man's kept, and must dine will he—nil he!
Or at least pay the forfeit of a sinner,
And tip for, if he does not eat, his dinner!

The Derby Wordsworth's and O'Connell's (Dan)
Had (in the poetry) its "Six inside;"
A small, genteelish bus—unlike the van
In which your human "Cockney-hundred" rides,
With sixty women and one happy man
Within; the rest upon the roof astride;
Whose horses' noses—with the seldom bag on—
Can't smell the pull of drawing such a waggon.

But touching "Six *in*sides"—that Derby thought,
With all its old felicity, must yield,
When understood *out*siders—all unbought—
Come in, and beat the favourites with the field.
Stanley may laugh—O'Connell goes for naught!
The Derby 'scutcheon's lost its inside shield,
And Fortune's got a sudden whim for letting
The horses win that are not in the betting!

The Derby Day! What kind of day is that?
There's John Day senior and John Day young,
And both are far above the "All round my hat"
Turf-confidence, that has a blabbing tongue.
But then there's William Day, who fast and flat,
Sells all the other Days he lives among,
And proves to Gully that his horse is mull'd,
So notwithstanding Gully—Gully's gull'd!

The Derby Day! In Tattersall's famed yard
There used to be some betting, fair and free;
And so there is; but people on their guard
Are seriously requested now to be;
When the same shining process maketh hard
The conscience of the groom and briber, he
(The latter) half drives gentlemen away,
And makes them shy of any Derby Day!

No matter! Wednesday's Derby did its work,
And a good quadrupedal victor won;
'Twas not a horse named after Jew or Turk,
But after the Eighth Harry—king of fun—
Whose pleasure seldom did reflection irk,
But passing all the turf-faiths followed none!
With such a Merry Monarch in its train,
What wonder that the Day began to rain!

And rain it did—and many trod the Course
As if they really thought the ground was soft,
As the wise heads who guessed they knew the horse,
That eat the winner's pay from out his loft;
And as they gazed on the grand stand by force,
Of strong conviction they both wink'd and cough'd,
With "some boys here will stand a pretty penny
And that will be, the grandest stand of any!"

There was a talk of duel here and there,
As Gully's exposé work'd up the ring:
But Annandale to Harry said it's fair,
That I should be the Second of the King.
I'm next to you below the Zero—bear
That in your mind, and never mind the sting,
Let them all call you out—and you come in,
And I will follow you through thick and thin.

They will not call me "Rose of Annandale,"
But they will say that "Annandale is rose;"
You wont be the eighth Harry—you can't fail
To be the world's eighth wonder, goodness knows!
And badness too, or else th' historian's tale
Lies, and you're shocking slandered by your foes.
So much your reputation doth blaspheme you,
That you'll want this one Derby to redeem you!

So "Harry" won the Derby with proud head,
And "Annandale" was second, sure enough;
"Old England" was considerably bled,
And so was Gully, though he got the puff,
And wished that he had got the stakes instead,
And many a better had his quantum suff.
Of drink and drag—of pleasure, fuss, and fear,
And felt that it would last him for the year.

THE RACE.

The race! well, what about the race?
It's hardly worth the showing one's
Knowledge; when all are knowing now
How it has bit the knowing ones!

How one Day promised foul to spoil
Another fair for Gully!
And all that Tattersall turmoil
Reported now so fully!

How brave "Old England," who was fix'd
As being fit for knackers,
Had nearly got the knack himself
O' winning for his backers!

How Merry Monarch came in first
(An understood outsider),
And played Old Harry there—and rang
Bell's joy for Bell the rider!

How Annandale, whom Marson rode,
In truth began to Mar soon
The funny looks of fools of Turf,
Who flabbergaster'd are soon!

How many a fair "Adonis" there
Made grievous calculation,
While "Young Eclipse" bit both his lips,
In "Doleful" "Desperation!"

How "Clear the way" had nought to say,
Except that 'twas clear'd for him;
How "Jingle-pot" no coin had got;
Pigeon—(but we abhor him)

Was pluck'd! Where wise "Columbus" came's
A riddle each man throws up;
While "Laundress"—if it's all the same—
Will give up getting Clothes up!

The "Libel's" pu.ish'd; "Weather-bit"
(The race was bit by Weather)
Bridles his rage, while "Cabin Boy"
Is un-buoy'd altogether!

"Miss Whip," poor thing, has lost her thong,
No winning-post abutting;
She wasn't like the LONDON NEWS—
She couldn't win by "cutting."

And "Worthless," too, was worthless all,
He went so very slow in;
He wasn't like the LONDON NEWS,
He couldn't win by "going."

Its going off so fast, we mean,
As any winner need do.
What would the "Laird o' Cockpen" gie
To Cock a pen as we do?

But now no more, the race is o'er,
The winners all are "Jonnach,"*
So ere we go, our horn we'll blow,
And drink the "Merry Monarch!"

* One of the most gloricus expressions of an improving civilisation, signifying "jolly."

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

The leading subject just now is the curiosity excited by the calculating child, young Prolongeau, whom I mentioned in a former letter. The parents disavow any desire of emolument in the exhibition of the extraordinary powers of the boy. He is only six years of age, but he effects by heart, and with the greatest facility, not only the most complicated numerical calculations, but many algebraical problems. Formerly there frequently appeared children who were supposed to possess naturally these combinatory powers. In England such have appeared at various periods. In Italy a boy, Zuccaro, born close to Syracuse—the birthplace of Archimedes—a curious coincidence, who, entirely untaught, could guess the abstrusest points in algebra; a sum was voted for his future education, and a new Newton was supposed to reillumine the world of science. But soon appeared two rival children, and in Paris the young Mangiamele did arithmetical wonders. But who ever heard of either of these prodigies since their childhood? The general opinion, however, seems to be that the Government is judicious in watching over the future development of the boy, and to superintend his education But would it not be as well to seek out the many adults who have already proved, by positive success, wonderfully scientific abilities, who might assist the progress of mathematical science, but have been hindered by pecuniary obstacles from pursuing this enlightened career? A great nation should learn that glory and genius contribute principally to the establishment of the moral grandeur of a people.

We are getting somewhat clear just now of the horse-racing mania; yet, really, taking it all-in all, the attempts were not very ridiculous. The French turfites are in high glee at what they call their equine superiority. One man said to me—"We shall make your boasted Epsom races and New market look small in a short time." Louis Philippe is doing his utmost to increase the desire and to enlarge the taste. He told Lord J—— that such sports improved the physical powers of both man and horse; and that, as far as depended on his efforts, every town and village in France should have a race course. I think the feeling is gaining ground here; and a few well-established "sweeps" would turn out a capital job for the speculators. Preparations are making at Piu for the end of July and the beginning of August. At Nancy, at Angers, at Limoges, at Pompadour, at Aurillac, at Bordeaux, and at Tarbes, these races come off between June and July. Upwards of 100,000 francs are to be run for; no bad thing. If the people were not "ignorant and unwilling to be teached," racing would quickly improve, and become, in a few years, a grand national sport.

Disraeli's new book of "The Sybil" is quite the rage here. Many persons suppose his works emanate from certain Talmudic apologues; others imagine him to be the bona fide "Juif Errant," and that his works will ultimately disperse Jesuitism; others deem him to be a retailer of Turkish tales; and, again, that he is a sort of Eastern Jack Cade. I assure you, that the majority of literary flaneurs spout nothing but "Coningsby," and to allude to the "Sybil" is a passe par tout to the intellectual salons. A certain oracle, who does considerably for "La Presse," and who is notorious for talking feuilletons, which are swallowed with great goût by the gapers, preached a good hour the other evening at Madame G C.'s upon the subject. "Coningsby," said the learned Pundit, "is a romance, wretchedly composed, confused, in which the incoherency of the subject leads its author into all sorts of awkward dilemmas; he did not think him so brilliant as Horace Walpole, or so satirical as Addison." I said, "Perhaps you mean Swift." "No," replied the littérateur, "I mean Addison, the author of 'Gulliver's Travellers.'" This, I assure you, is not exaggerated or coloured. You can have no idea of the entire and blind ignorance the majority of Frenchmen have of English literature. Their Alpha and Omega are Scott and American Cooper in romance, and Byron in poetry; the latter they still believe to have been a corsair, who was a lineal descendant of Don Juan; that he committed several assassinations in the Levant, and that he was hung as a traitor for placing certain Greek papers into the possession of Ali Pacha.

I doubt whether the excitement in London, relative to the Royal "Bal Costumé," be greater than it is in Paris. The invitation sent by Queen Victoria to the Duke and Duchess de Nemours has set all the haute volée on the qui vive. Libraries have been ransacked, portfolios of scarce prints have been examined, and every possible and impossible source of authority been resorted to, for the illustration of correct and becoming costumes Perruquiers and shoemakers, modistes and manaquins, here play characters of as vast importance as diplomatists and their diplomatic dames. The diamonds of the Duchess would almost purchase the fee simple of the mines of Potosi, and the outlay for the voyage would reach a kingdom's annual rent. The compliment is considered flattering, and tends to strengthen the report of the British Queen's visit to Louis Philippe. It is supposed that her Majesty will in person give her consent to the Duke and Duchess. The presence of her Majesty within the walls of the Tuilleries would be positive balm of Gilead to the Citizen King. And I firmly believe that the people here would welcome her with the wild enthusiasm which characterises the nation, whatever be their feelings for perfide Albion. A large number of dresses intended for the brilliant occasion have been ordered here by many of your leaders of fashion. I have seen the material for one dress, the cost of which alone is £1200. All our coiffeurs are busily engaged in fashioning head dresses; and all the old-fashioned jewellery, which a month since might have been purchased for an old song, is now deemed of priceless worth. Lord M——'s dress alone would melt a small principality. The Duke and Duchess have been practising the minuet and gavot with most praiseworthy diligence, and the French Court look forward with great hope that their young representatives will eclipse all possible rivalry.

FRANCE.

There are several topics of political interest in the Paris papers this week. Some agitation had been created among the journalists by the refusal of the Emperor of Morocco to ratify the treaty concluded between his Envoy and General De la Rue. According to the Débats, the Emperor asserts that his Envoy exceeded his powers in negotiating the treaty of commerce, for which he had no instructions. The Opposition papers, of course, ascribe the non-ratification of this treaty to British influence or intrigue. The Constitutionnel, however, frankly questions the correctness of this imputation.

Prince Jerome Bonaparte visited the Hotel of the Invalides a few days since. His resemblance to Napoleon caused an immense excitement amongst the old soldiers, who crowded round the Emperor's nephew.

The National announces the death by apoplexy of M. Merilhou, peer of France. He had, since the revolution of July, filled the offices of Minister of Public Instruction and Keeper of the Seals.

The political world in Paris has been rather excited by the letter of Queen Pomaré to the King of the French, which was published in the English papers from the Polynésien, a journal printed in the Sandwich Islands. The letter comprises a long list of grievances alleged by Queen Pomaré against Admiral Dupetit Thouars and Captain Bruat, and supplicating Louis Philippe to restore her to power. The language used in regard to the French officers by Queen Pomaré, has excited a vast deal of anger among the Opposition papers.

The Débats states that two despatches have been received from Marshal Bugeaud, dated the 9th and 16th inst. In the first, the marshal announces his arrival in the Ouarensenis, and his preparatory movements. In the second, he gives an account of two affrays on the 13th, between the rear-guard of a convoy and about 500 Kabyles, who attacked it. The enemy were beaten off, with the loss of several killed and 20 prisoners. The French, who had only eight killed and 15 wounded, captured 300 head of cattle, and made other booty. Another affair of slight importance took place on the following day. Marshal Bugeaud states that, in the evening of the 14th some tribes made their submission. The entire insurrection in the Ouarensenis was caused, he says, by the same Scheriff who raised the Dahra, and who presented himself as a kind of prophet sent by God to deliver Algeria from the Christians. Two other impostors, however, are stated to have appeared, one in the Mountain and the other in the Dahra. He attributes the revolts to the expectation of the arrival of Abd-el-Kader.

SPAIN.

The latest letters from Madrid state that the Queen of Spain closed the session of the Cortes, in person, on the 23rd instant. The new constitution was promulgated the same day. There was no political news in circulation.

THE GRAND POLISH FANCY AND FULL DRESS BALL, ON FRIDAY, JUNE 13TH.—Most ladies will appear in the fancy dresses worn by them at her Majesty's Ball; and some of the airs, characteristic of the historical period selected by the Queen, will be again performed at the above fête.

GENERAL SIR GEORGE COCKBURN, G.C.H.—The above venerable and gallant officer continues in a very precarious state, at his seat near Dublin, and we are sorry to add that Lady Cockburn, from delicate constitution and extreme fatigue in attendance on her husband, has within the last week given way also, and has been for several days considered in great danger.

MR. J. F. HERRING, SEN. has had the honour of being appointed Animal Painter to Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, and has recently painted portraits of two of the Queen's favourite saddle horses, the picture being presented by the Royal Duchess to Her Majesty on the late anniversary of her birthday.

HENLEY REGATTA.—As we have already stated, Henley-on-Thames Grand Regatta will take place on Friday and Saturday, June 6th and 7th, when the Grand Challenge Cup, New Challenge Cup for eight-oared boats, and other Challenge Cups, Silver Wherries, and Diamond Sculls, will be contended for by various Clubs, and other Amateurs, of London, Oxford, Cambridge, Norwich, Windsor, and Henley. Trial heats will be rowed by the challengers on the first day; and the winners of the heats will contend with the holders of the Cups, and for the other prizes, on the second day. The races will commence each day at two o'clock.

THE ROYAL HARWICH YACHT CLUB.—The annual regatta of this club is fixed to come off, in Harwich Harbour, on the 25th and 26th of July. A steamer will leave London for Harwich on the Thursday preceding the regatta, which falls on the Friday and Saturday—Ipswich Races falling on the Wednesday and Thursday.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS BILL.—LORD COTTENHAM moved the second reading of the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill. He detailed the proceedings that had taken place in Parliament during the last few years on the subject, and explained the provisions of his bill, which were nearly similar to the measure brought forward by the present Government in 1843.—The bill excited some discussion between the Bishop of Lincoln, Lord Brougham, Lord Campbell, and the Lord Chancellor. The latter noble and learned lord intimated that the Government did not intend to oppose the bill, which was read a second time, and the house adjourned till Friday (yesterday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

CONDITION OF THE LABOURING POPULATION.—Lord J. RUSSELL brought forward his Resolutions respecting the Condition of the Labouring Poor of England. He commenced by vindicating the general nature of his propositions, on the ground that the Government discountenanced attempts of individual members to bring in legislative measures, because it considered that Government alone ought to be responsible for them. Lord John Russell next entered into various details to show the miserable condition of the labouring classes. Some families lived upon bread, flour, oatmeal, potatoes, and milk. The wages in agricultural counties did not exceed seven or eight shillings a week. Under these circumstances, the dwellings of these labourers were totally insufficient to furnish ordinary comforts, the families were crowded together without regard to any rule of delicacy, and many members of the family were obliged to sleep in the same room, and neither health nor comfort was consulted in the arrangements necessary to be made in order to obtain that room for which they alone could afford to pay rent. After referring to the rise and gradual extension of the national debt, and the Bank Restriction Act of 1797, the tendency of which, he maintained, was to degrade the labourer, he went on to describe the origin and operation of the modern system of restriction and monopoly—a system which was supposed by some to be of such antiquity as to be interwoven with the constitution of the country, and which had been termed protection to native industry. The tendency of this system was, in his opinion, to impair the efficiency of labour, and they had now arrived at that period when they must maintain the protection laws in their full power, or abandon them as vicious and unsound. Abstractedly, Parliament had no right to interfere with the choice of a man as to the cheapest or dearest market for his labour or produce; but, in removing restrictive laws, it was manifestly unjust to apply free-trade principles to the humbler and operative classes, and to leave monopoly in operation on all articles in which individuals of great possession and ancestral honours were concerned. He introduced his proposal respecting the Corn-laws rather to show the Government that they ought not to leave the Corn-law where it was, than to suggest what should be done. His own opinion, however, was that, after all the discussion which had occurred, we could not now fairly and reasonably propose the 8s. fixed duty of 1841, but he thought 4s., 5s., or 6s., would be the duty which he should recommend. Lord J. Russell repeated his objections to the sliding-scale, and then referred to the existing poor-law, and strongly urged the necessity of a more equitable adjustment of the law of settlement, and recommended a well considered scheme of emigration, and a more general diffusion of education. He also reminded the house, that while pious men met almost daily to consider what money they should distribute in China, the South Sea Islands, or in Africa, for the promotion of the Christian faith, they had in the county of Sussex, and in almost every other county of England and Wales, numbers of persons who become inmates of the gaols, and fell under the lash of the criminal laws, being totally ignorant of every duty which a Christian should perform. (Loud cheers from both sides of the house.) For this reason he wished to provide a remedy for the ignorance that prevailed. Lord J. Russell, having propounded his views, moved the following Resolutions, which embodied them. They have already appeared in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, but it is necessary to repeat them, in order fully to elucidate the subject.

1. That the present state of political tranquillity, and the recent revival of trade, afford to this house a favourable opportunity to consider of such measures as may tend permanently to improve the condition of the labouring classes.
2. That those laws which impose duties usually called protective tend to impair the efficiency of labour, to restrict the free interchange of commodities, and so impose on the people unnecessary taxation.
3. That the present Corn-law tends to check improvements in agriculture, produces uncertainty in all farming speculations, and holds out to the owners and occupiers of land prospects of special advantage, which it fails to secure.
4. That this house will take the said laws into consideration, with a view to such cautious and deliberate arrangements as may be most beneficial to all classes of her Majesty's subjects.
5. That the freedom of industry would be promoted by a careful revision of the law of parochial settlement which now prevails in England and Wales.
6. That a systematic plan of colonisation would partially relieve those districts of the country where the deficiency of employment has been most injurious to the labourers in husbandry.
7. That the improvements made of late years in the education of the people, as well as its more general diffusion, have been seen with satisfaction by this house.
8. That this house will be ready to give its support to measures, founded on liberal and comprehensive principles, which may be conducive to the further extension of religious and moral instruction.
9. That an humble address be presented to her Majesty, to lay the foregoing resolutions before her Majesty

Mr. S. CRAWFORD moved an amendment to the effect that the present time of tranquillity afforded a favourable opportunity for giving immediate attention to the claims so repeatedly urged in the petitions of the people for an extension of parliamentary suffrage.—Sir J. GRAHAM, in answer to Lord J. Russell, said he was ready to admit that the noble lord had referred to the various matters comprised in his comprehensive speech with fairness and good temper, but he complained of the unspecific nature of the resolutions. The great object of Mr. Huskisson had been the substitution of protective for prohibitive legislation, and such was the policy of the present Government. He contended that a fixed duty on corn would operate injuriously, and, in times of scarcity, could not be maintained; while, under the present system, prices were equable, and the supply of corn steady and regular. By their recent measures for the reduction of protective duties, the present Government had gone to the verge of throwing land out of cultivation, and masses of the agricultural population out of employment. He admitted that there were great difficulties in grappling with the question, as, since the present Government had come into power, the population had increased one million and a half. He then referred to various returns, for the purpose of showing that the labouring classes, in amount of wages, and command over the necessaries of life, were in a very different position from what they were a few years since. Admitting the influence of a good harvest, he thought the Government was entitled to some credit for the change. The right hon. gentleman then referred to the improved position of our commercial affairs, and the large amount of capital invested in railway and other speculations. He disapproved of any Government plan of emigration, inasmuch as voluntary emigration was at present going forward fully equal to the wants of our colonies. He believed the education of the people had been, of late years, materially improved, and that the means at present adopted for the purpose were carried out in the most efficient manner. After expressing the anxiety of the Government to do everything in their power to promote the physical and moral welfare of the people, he met the proposition of the noble lord by moving the previous question.—Sir C. Burrell, Mr. Labouchere, Sir J. Tyrrell, Lord Pollington, Mr. Villiers, and Mr. Scott, addressed the house, and the debate was then adjourned till Wednesday, it not being the intention of the house to meet on Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

DECISION ON LORD JOHN RUSSELL'S RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. P. HOWARD recommenced the debate on Lord J. Russell's Resolutions with a speech in opposition to them, on the ground that they were of an abstract and impracticable character.—Mr. B. ESCOTT opposed them because they would lead to a change of Government. Such a change would risk the continuance of that tranquillity and prosperity which resulted from the measures of the present Government, and he could not consent to peril existing prosperity for doubtful prospective advantages.—The subject appeared to excite so little interest, that an attempt was made, while Mr. Escott was speaking, to "count out the house." There were, however, more than 40 members present.—Captain PECHELL supported the Resolutions, and Sir J. WALSH opposed them.—Lord HOWICK, in support of the Resolutions, contended that the present being a time of unusual prosperity, was the most advantageous moment for considering the condition of the people with a view to its improvement, before we were again visited, as we had a right to anticipate we should be, by deficient harvests. The noble lord dwelt strongly upon the necessity of encouraging the spread of education, which could only be done by raising the English labourer from the poverty by which he was too frequently beset, and this again could be best accomplished by the removal of those restrictions which prevented them from turning their industry to the best advantage.—Sir R. PEEL contrasted the opinions of Lord J. Russell and Lord Howick; and, while adverting to the apparent indifference of the house to the condition of the labouring classes, gave his opinion that this indifference was caused by the conviction that the Resolutions were not calculated to lead to any practical result. He addressed himself to the topics of Lord J. Russell's speech, insisting that the Government had introduced liberal and comprehensive measures. Adverting to the Corn Laws, Sir R. Peel said—"If I thought it advisable to come to the abstract resolution on this subject, I do not see how I could differ from the noble lord—because, when he asks us to consider the subject with such cautious and deliberate arrangements as may be most beneficial, I consider that that is the very course we have taken, and I confess I thought the noble lord was going to pay us a compliment on the course we pursued. ("Hear, hear," and a laugh.) Instead of passing such resolutions, it was far better to deal practically with the various subjects they embraced as they became ripe for legislation, instead of dealing in promises, which, however easily made, were sometimes very difficult, as they had very recently experienced, to be carried out in all their details. Government had already done much towards the advancement of education and of other matters referred to in the resolutions of the noble lord; and they were ready to avail themselves of every opportunity as it arose to propose practical measures for the improvement of the condition of the labouring classes.—After a reply from Lord J. RUSSELL, and a few words from Lord CLEMENTS against the resolutions, a division took place. The result was—

For Mr. S. Crawford's amendment	33
Against it	253
Majority against the amendment..	—220

The house then divided on the resolutions:—

For the resolutions	104
For the previous question	182
Majority against the resolutions	—78

The house sat till two o'clock in the morning.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL brought up the report of the committee appointed to inquire into the case of the action of Howard v. Gosset. The report stated that on Tuesday last judgment was obtained against Sir William Gosset, and a verdict of £200 returned, execution upon which would be levied on the 2nd of June. The committee recommended that a writ of error should be brought on the judgment in the Court of Queen's Bench. As the execution would not prejudice the proceedings in the writ of error, the committee did not feel it expedient to prevent the levy. The Solicitor-General then moved that the report be printed. After some discussion, the motion was agreed to, and it was arranged that the matter should be taken into consideration to-morrow (Friday).

In answer to a question from Lord J. Russell, Sir R. PEEL said, negotiations of a treaty with Brazil were still in progress, if he could use such a word in a case where the movements were so dilatory. The negotiations certainly had not been broken off.

Sergeant MURPHY then brought forward his motion for a committee to inquire into the subject of the levying of Ministers' Money in Ireland. During the discussion the house was counted out; at a quarter to 8 o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

In the first part of the evening many petitions were presented against the Maynooth Grant, the Charitable Trusts Bill, and the Union of the Sees of St. Asaph and Bangor.

POST OFFICE OFFENCES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.—Earl RADNOR moved the second reading of this bill.—Lord STANLEY objected to this bill.—A long debate arose, which lasted till midnight, and on a division the bill was rejected by 55 to 9.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

This being the last day for receiving reports on private bills, other than railway bills, a great number were brought up. The following bills were read a third time and passed:—The York and North Midland Railway (Bridlington Branch) Bill, the York and Scarborough Railway Deviation Bill, the Ely and Huntingdon Railway Bill, the Bristol and Exeter Railway Branches Bill, the Hull and Selby Railway (Bridlington Branch) Bill, the Bradford and London and Birmingham Railway Bill, and the Dunstable and London and Birmingham Railway Bill.

The Diss, Beccles, and Yarmouth Railway Bill and the Goole and Doncaster Railway Bill were read a second time, and ordered to be committed.

Mr. W. PATTEN postponed the third reading of the Blackburn, Darwen, and Bolton Railway Bill until Monday next.

Mr. SPOONER brought in the Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Bill, which was read a first time.—Mr. T. S. DUNCOMBE moved that the time for presenting a petition for leave to bring in the Kentish Coast Railway Bill be further extended till Tuesday, the 10th day of June next.—After a few observations from Mr. Greene, Lord G. Somerset, and Mr. T. S. Duncombe, the motion was postponed until Tuesday.

A conversation took place between Mr. HOPE and Mr. C. BULLER on the subject of some statements, made by Mr. Hope, with reference to an alleged compromise on the part of Lord Stanley with the New Zealand Company.—Mr. AGLIONBY defended the conduct of the New Zealand Company.—In reply to a question from Mr. Hume, with respect to the case of James Deedes, committed to Reading Goal for four months, for selling pheasants' eggs, Sir J. GRAHAM said, in this case, there were two commitments, one for three months, and the other for one month. He had advised the Crown to remit the punishment of one month, and not the imprisonment for three months. He had acted according to the usual practice of the Home Office.—Mr. M. GIBSON trusted the right honourable gentleman would use the influence of his office to prevent the sale of live game and eggs. It was frequently the case that they were bought by the gamekeepers of gentlemen, who afterwards had to decide on the offence. After a few observations from Sir J. Walsh, Mr. Osborne, and Sir J. Graham, Mr. COLLETT said he had sent his servant to Reading on Thursday last, and paid the fine, £10 11s., for Deedes, and he believed that person was immediately set at liberty.—The subject then dropped.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—The case of Howard v. Gosset, was again brought on. After a long discussion, Mr. HUME proposed a resolution to the effect, that it would be a breach of the privileges of the house for any person to levy execution in the case of Howard v. Gosset.—The SOLICITOR-GENERAL, as an amendment, moved that the report of the Committee be taken into consideration on Monday week.—Ultimately, upon a division, it was agreed, by 96 to 50, that the debate upon the subject should be adjourned till Monday week.

THE COLLEGES (IRELAND) BILL.—The second reading of this bill having been moved, Lord J. MANNERS opposed the bill, on the ground that it did not impose any religious test. He said, that without a basis of religion, learning was worse than useless, and moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months.—After a lengthened discussion, the debate was adjourned.—The house sat till a late hour.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.—COMMONS.

THE CORN LAWS.—Mr. Villiers has postponed his notice on the Corn-laws till Tuesday week, June 10.

RAILWAY BILLS.—On Monday the resolutions of Mr. Stuart Wortley, subjecting all railway bills to the provisions of any general measure which might be hereafter introduced, were adopted, with some amendments.

NEW ZEALAND COMPANY.—Mr. C. Buller has given notice that on the 17th of June he will move for a select committee to consider the petition of the New Zealand Company.

RECALL OF THE EARL OF ELLENBOROUGH.—Mr. Hume has given notice that, on Tuesday, June 10, he will move for the production of the correspondence between the Board of Control and the East India Company, relative to the recall of the Earl of Ellenborough.

CHESTER AND HOLYHEAD RAILWAY.—This bill has been read a third time and passed.

RAILWAYS.—The Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth Railway Bill, and the Exeter and Crediton Railway Bill have been read a third time and passed.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

THE PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—A case was tried in the SHERIFF'S COURT on Tuesday, Howard v. Gossett, involving the question of the extent of the privileges of the House of Commons. The facts have repeatedly been before the public. The action was brought by the plaintiff, an attorney, residing in Norfolk-street, Strand, against the defendant, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons, for seizing and illegally detaining and conveying the plaintiff along certain passages and in certain rooms, and then conveying him before the House of Commons. The defendant had pleaded several pleas in justification, but upon demurrer to those pleas the Court of Queen's Bench decided that the warrant upon which the plaintiff was arrested by the defendant was illegal, and gave judgment for the plaintiff; and this inquiry was to ascertain and assess the amount of damages the plaintiff had sustained in consequence of such arrest.—Evidence having been given, the learned Under Sheriff addressed the jury, and called upon them to confine their attention to the mere fact as to what injury the plaintiff had sustained from the arrest upon the warrant only. What had taken place previously, and the subsequent imprisonment of the plaintiff, they had nothing to do with.—The jury almost immediately returned a verdict for £200.

MR. C. MATHEWS AND HIS CREDITORS.—A dividend of 1s. 8d. in the pound has been declared in the COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, under the estate of Mr. C. Mathews, arising from a portion of his professional income being set aside for the creditors. The debts proved amount to upwards of £6000, and the dividend was declared on the amount at present in the hands of the official assignee. The payment of a part of Mr. Mathew's income, jointly with his wife's, will be continued; and now that the debts have been ascertained, the creditors will be paid as the funds are placed in the hands of the official assignee.

LOSS OF THE "CATHARINE."—A letter received at Lloyd's from the Foreign Office, communicates the stranding of the British brig Catharine, Thornton master (from Cadiz to England), on the coast of Algarve, 26th of April, and states that the Director of Customs at Olhao, and the British Vice-Consul at that port, were making every effort to save the vessel and cargo.

SUDDEN DEATH.—On Wednesday, Mr. Carter held an inquest at the Three Goats' Heads, Wandsworth-road, on the body of Mr. Benjamin Mills, corn-dealer, residing at Hersham, near Walton-on-Thames. On Monday morning last he quitted home for London on business. On his return homeward, about three o'clock in the afternoon, towards the terminus of the South Western Railway, at Nine Elms, he became suddenly ill on the road, and went into the shop of Mr. Bowles, a grocer, in Belmont-row, Wandsworth-road, and asked permission to sit down, exclaiming, "I am dying, send for a doctor." Mr. Stathan was immediately sent for; but, before he could arrive, deceased had expired. Verdict, "Natural death."

TWO BOYS COMMITTED FOR MANSLAUGHTER.—Two young lads, named Bedford and Spencer, have been examined before the magistrates at Southampton, on a charge of killing a little boy, eight years of age, named Jacob Light, the son of a pedlar. The prisoners were playing on Netley Common, and the child having passed them on a donkey, they took hold of him, and tied him to the animal, which they set off at full speed. The child fell from his seat, and was dragged a considerable distance, until life became extinct. The boys were committed to gaol for manslaughter.

SUFFOCATION OF A CHILD BY A PIECE OF PUDDING.—On Tuesday night Mr. Joseph Payne held an inquest at Guy's Hospital, on the body of George Gravely, aged three years. Deceased's parents reside in Queen's Head-yard, Borough, and on Sunday last the deceased was sitting at the table eating some pudding, and had just put a small piece, the size of a nut, into his mouth, when he was seized with a fit of coughing, and turned black in the face. He was brought immediately to the above hospital, and an incision was made in his throat. Artificial respiration and galvanism were used for some time, but ineffectually, life being quite extinct. Verdict, "Accidentally suffocated."

EPSOM RACES.—THE RETURN

MR. GRATWICKE'S "THE MERRY MONARCH," THE WINNER OF "THE DERBY."—DRAWN BY HERRING.—(See page 338.)

THE MERRY MONARCH

Is a bright bay horse, 16 hands high, with good head, very light neck, high in his withers, large ribs, deep brisket, oblique shoulders, good arms, and flat legs; good open feet; turns his toes a little out; straight back; tail set on well; quarters long, large thighs and gaskins, with good hocks, which he rather twists out in walking.

PIGEON EXPRESSES.

Advantage has been taken, from the earliest ages, of the strong, sustained, and rapid flight of various species of the Pigeon, to employ it in the conveyance of information between distant points. Thus, in the antique sculptures, we see the birds, in pairs, yoked to the chariots of angelic couriers; in the early histories of romance, we read of pigeons being used to convey the welcome intelligence of succour and relief to besieged cities, of battles lost or won; and in the poetry and tales of the East, they are frequently described as the carriers of lover's vows. At the present day, when a utilitarian spirit gives character to the age, they are employed in all cases where extraordinary dispatch is required; and in Holland, France, and our own country, very expensive establishments are maintained for breeding, training, and dispatching them. The great use of a pigeon express is found in forwarding intelligence from Paris to London, by way of Boulogne and Folkstone, and on that line of flight the system may be studied by the curious with advantage. The principle on which the whole business proceeds, is found in the singular attachment shown by the pigeon for the place of its birth; for to that loved spot, the bold carrier, urged by an irresistible instinct, will wing his way back from a distance, even though he should have been born, from his home the space of many hundred miles. Upon such occasions, the bird, on being set at liberty, soars at once to a high altitude by a spiral series of evolutions, and then, as if it saw its birth-place—the old familiar nook—it darts off with immense velocity, and pursues a course so true, that neither the direction of a compass nor the dictates of experience could devise a better. In this way, the pigeon bred at Folkstone, flies with his despatch from Boulogne to Folkstone; the native of Sittingbourne, from Folkstone to Sittingbourne; the "carrier" of Gravesend, from Sittingbourne to Gravesend; and the prime game bird of the metropolis, from Gravesend to London; completing the entire journey, from the coast of France to the British capital, in about one hour and a half. At the places here mentioned, establishments are kept by the London stockbrokers, to convey to their several coteries the price and circumstances of foreign stocks. The despatch is usually written in symbols, on a strip of oiled French tissue paper, and wound tightly round a leg of the bird. In this position it is not visible to a spectator, and has the further advantage of not impeding the flight. Before starting, the bird is kept for some time without food, and is fed immediately on reaching his station. In training them for the channel passage, short distances are first tried; and a despatch journey is not ventured till many preliminary ones have been accomplished.

CARRIER PIGEON.

We have chosen the present racing season as an appropriate opportunity for illustrating what may be termed a system of Pigeon Expresses. They have been numerously employed during the present week in transmitting the results of the Epsom Meeting; and on Wednesday must have conveyed unwelcome intelligence to scores of "knowing ones."

STARTING THE PIGEON EXPRESS.

CELEBRATION OF THE QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY.

There were various public rejoicings on Tuesday, in celebration of her Majesty's natal day.

There was a grand inspection of the Household Troops in St. James's Park, fronting the Horse Guards. The different regiments were attired in new uniforms. Shortly before ten o'clock, a battalion of each of the three regiments of Foot Guards, accompanied by their respective bands, and that of the Life Guards, marched on to the parade. The troops being drawn up in line, shortly after ten o'clock his Royal Highness Field Marshal Prince Albert, as Colonel of the Scots Fusilier Guards; his Grace the Duke of Wellington, Colonel of the 1st or Grenadier Guards; and his Royal Highness Field Marshal the Duke of Cambridge, rode on to the parade. The three bands, having formed into one, struck up the National Anthem when Prince Albert made his appearance. After the troops were inspected, they marched past the Royal staff, presenting arms, and the bands playing some of the most favourite airs. Both on arriving and returning, the Prince and the Duke of Wellington were most enthusiastically cheered.

The club-houses and the theatres were tastefully illuminated at night; and the early part of the evening being fine, a considerable crowd gathered in the public streets, to see the splendid sight. Her Majesty's tradesmen, too, very generally illuminated, and the west end of the town was quite in a blaze. The principal emblems were roses and thistles, with stars and crowns, while the letters V and A were frequently repeated.

Marriage in High Life.—The marriage of Algernon George Percy, Lord Louvaine, eldest son of the Earl and Countess of Beverley, and Miss Louisa Drummond, eldest daughter of Mr. Henry and Lady Harriet Drummond, was solemnised on Monday at St. George's Church, Hanover square.

Sir John Franklin's Arctic Expedition.—The Erebus and Terror discovery ships, with the transport, in tow of the Rattler steam-sloop and the Monkey tug, weighed anchor on Saturday, in Aldborough Bay, and proceeded to the Orkney Islands, on their way to the Arctic Circle.

Launch of a War-Steamer.—On Saturday last a first-class steamer, named the Inflexible, 1100 tons burthen, was launched at the royal dockyard at Pembroke. The dimensions are:—Length between perpendiculars, 186 feet; extreme breadth, 36 feet; and depth in hold, 20 feet. The armament is to consist of six large guns, four twenty-four pounders, and two eighty-four pounders.

Supposed Murder at Lincoln.—Some excitement has been caused at Lincoln, in consequence of the supposed murder of Mr. R. Hoyle, a medical practitioner, residing at the village of Heighington, on the river Witham. On Thursday afternoon week Mr. Hoyle, who has an extensive practice in the neighbourhood, made a professional visit to the Five-mile House, and then rode up to Lincoln, and passed the evening with Mr. East, of Motherby hill, from whose house he set out at eleven o'clock, to return home. He, unfortunately, however, from some unknown cause, has never reached his destination. He has been traced to have gone from Lincoln by the nearest way, a bridle-road along the river bank, which is much higher than by the high road to Washingborough and Heighington; and early on Friday morning week a farming man, in the service of Mr. William Cappe, of Canwick, found Mr. Hoyle's pony fastened by the bridle to a gate on the river bank, near to Washingborough, more than two miles from Lincoln; one of his gloves being thrust under the saddle, and the stirrups tied or knotted together, and thrown over on one side. An alarm was instantly given, and a strong conviction prevailed that he had been waylaid, murdered, and thrown into the river. Diligent search was made for the body, by dragging the river, but without success. Mr. Hoyle left Mr. East's house perfectly sober. It is not known how much money he had in his pockets, but he took out a £10 note, which it cannot be ascertained has been paid away anywhere in Lincoln. On Saturday morning Temperton's steam-packet, from Boston, brought up a hat to Lincoln, which had been found in the river Witham the day before, and it has been identified as belonging to Mr. Hoyle. The deceased was 35 years of age, and has left a family of eleven children.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 1.—Second Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 2.—The Lord George Gordon Riots commenced, 1780.
TUESDAY, 3.—William Harvey died, 1657.
WEDNESDAY, 4.—The Kingdom of the Netherlands divided, 1831.
THURSDAY, 5.—King of Hanover born, 1771.
FRIDAY, 6 —Corpus Christi.
SATURDAY, 7.—The Reform Bill passed, 1832.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending June 7.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
0 0	0 22	0 46	1 10	1 31	1 53	2 12	2 30	2 49	3 5	3 25	3 40

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Owing to the large space occupied by the Engravings in the present Number all Answers to Correspondents are unavoidably omitted; but they will be inserted next week.

☞ The Print of Epsom Races—the Return from the Derby—is intended, for binding, as a folding plate.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 31, 1845.

THE "Derby" week is generally unproductive of political matters; the Queen's Birth-day, too, has co-operated with the Metropolitan holiday, and on Tuesday the Commons did not sit. The Peers, with the lordly love of leisure that distinguishes them, have had but two sittings during the week, as they honoured the anniversary of the Restoration on Thursday, like true and loyal nobles as they are. But the work of the House of Lords does not begin till a comparatively late period of the session; then the bills begin to be brought up from the Commons, and the labour of discussion in "another place" begins. Thus an animated debate is anticipated on Monday next, on the second reading of the Maynooth College bill; but for the past week the proceedings of the Upper House are a blank, with the solitary exception of Lord Cottenham's bill on the Jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts, which was read a second time on Monday last.

The business of the Commons has been almost entirely confined to the debate on Lord John Russell's nine resolutions respecting the labouring classes of the country.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER MAJESTY'S DRAWING-ROOM.

The Queen's Birthday, on Tuesday, was celebrated by a Drawing-room at St. James's Palace, which was most numerously attended.

The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the great officers of the household, and escorted by a detachment of the Life Guards, left Buckingham Palace, in four of the Royal carriages, shortly before two o'clock. On passing through the Park to St James's, her Majesty and her illustrious Consort were loudly cheered by the thousands who had congregated to witness the brilliant spectacle.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Kent, the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, Prince George of Cambridge, the Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers, Cabinet Ministers, and those having the privilege of the entrée, arrived in full state, between one and two o'clock.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Duke of Wellington, Sir Robert Peel, Sir James Graham, and most of the Cabinet Ministers, arrived at the Palace early.

The general company was exceedingly numerous. Various addresses of congratulation upon the occasion were presented.

The costumes of the ladies were very splendid. Her Majesty wore a court dress, composed of a sky-blue crêpe lisse dress, and tunic, elegantly trimmed with silver guipure flounces and insertions; train and body of rich blue and silver brocade, of British manufacture, lined with white satin, and trimmed with silver guipure insertions; body and sleeves ornamented with diamonds and silver guipure; plume of rich white feathers, blue flowers, silver lappets, and diamonds.

THE CROWN PRINCESS OF HANOVER.—It is stated that there can be no longer any doubt respecting the interesting situation of the Crown Princess of Hanover. Her Royal Highness is in a satisfactory state of health.

THE DUKE DE NEMOURS.—His Royal Highness the Duke de Nemours is expected to arrive at Buckingham Pelace in the course of the ensuing week, on a short visit to her Majesty; and it is expected that the Duke will be present at her Majesty's grand bal costumé, at Buckingham Palace, on the 6th of June.

DEATH OF LADY DE CLIFFOED.—The Dowager Lady de Clifford expired suddenly on Wednesday afternoon, shortly after one o'clock, at her residence on Carlton-house-terrace.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY. May 29.

The following distinguished prizes have just been awarded as follows —

THE CHANCELLOR'S ENGLISH MEDAL. — Edward Henry Bickersteth, Trinity College, for the best English poem in heroic verse. Subject—"Cabul."

THE CAMDEN MEDAL.—James Leigh Jones, of King's College, for the best Latin poem in hexameter verse.

THE PORSON PRIZE.—Thomas Markby, of Trinity College. Subject—Shakspeare, Hamlet, Act I. From the beginning of Scene 3 to the words—
"Though none else near."
Metre—"Tragicum Iambicum Trimetrum Acatalecticum."

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE SALE OF THE FLEET PRISON.—On Monday the last portion of the Fleet Prison was disposed of by auction. The materials sold comprised the south wing of the principal building, eight iron fire-proof floors, 500,000 bricks, &c. The entire building, which, with the site, was bought by the Corporation of the City of London for £25,000, fetched £4900; being about £1000 more than the estimate of the surveyor. This is exclusive of the high walls which are erected on either side of the late prison, and are valued at about £1000. They will still remain, as it is not yet determined to what purposes the site shall be appropriated. The bricks alone sold for £2820.

THE LEAGUE BAZAAR.—The League Bazaar closed on Tuesday. The number admitted on that day was 10,364. Upwards of one hundred thousand persons have been visitors during the seventeen days the Bazaar has been open, and no complaints have been heard. As yet the accounts are not made up: but besides the money taken at the doors for 100,000 persons, who have paid for admission, goods to the amount of £20,000 have been contributed as free gifts. The services of 400 ladies on each day, most of them acting every day, and nearly 150 of them far distant from their homes, have been gratuitously rendered. The goods which are not sold will be taken to Manchester. The proceedings were wound up with a soirée, or musical promenade, on Wednesday evening, of which the Times gives this pleasant account:—"The chief occupation of the guests was in walking about, listening to the music, or gazing at the chiefs of the League, who were scattered among the gay crowd. All this occupied from about seven until nearly eleven, when some one more light hearted (footed) than the rest, proposed dancing. The proposition was received with very general acclamation, and the fairer portion of the guests were in a decided flutter. But, alas! there is a sliding-scale, it seems, in sanctity, though the Leaguers do not recognize it in corn. So there was some demur to the proposed gaiety. A Dr. Price was the spokesman of these anti-saltatory scruples, mounting the platform, so lately occupied by the fiercely graceful Jullien and his band, and suggesting that there were many present who objected to dancing, and would be obliged to leave. A sensible cry of 'Let them leave then' was unheeded, until Mr. Fox, like a true peacemaker, declared himself a friend to 'free trade' in 'hops,' which joke immediately brought harmony in its train."

EXTRAORDINARY INFLUX OF STRANGERS IN LONDON.—At no period, with the exception perhaps of a few days before and after the coronation of her Most Gracious Majesty, was London so full as at the present moment. The cause of the extraordinary influx of strangers is principally owing to the present extraordinary rage for railroad speculations, and the desire to give all the principal cities and towns in the United Kingdom the benefits derivable from this great modern improvement. For one Irish line alone there are nearly fifty witnesses in attendance to be examined before the committee, besides the numerous solicitors, agents, &c., to support and oppose the Bill introduced; and the benefits derivable to the hotel and tavern keeper are very considerable The theatres, too, are reaping a profitable harvest, as well as the various exhibitions in the metropolis.

MORTALITY IN THE METROPOLIS.—The total number of deaths registered in the metropolitan districts during the week ending Saturday, May 24, was 810, an amount which exhibits a great decrease on both the vernal and annual averages, in which the numbers are 888 and 963. The mortality from diseases of the lungs and other organs of respiration was, for the week, 227, showing a decrease on the vernal and annual averages, in which the numbers stand respectively 267 and 192. During the same period the number of births registered was 1194, being an excess over the mortality of 384.

IRELAND.

THE DEMONSTRATION AT TARA AND NAVAN.—In our late impression last week, we stated that the attempt to produce a monster meeting on Tara Hill was a failure. At three o'clock the head of the procession from Tara appeared in the town of Navan, where a meeting, in pursuance of requisition, had assembled. The estimated number of men then at Navan and along the line of the procession was not more than 7000 or 8000, although it appeared that Mr. O'Connell, in his after-dinner speech, in his usual figurative style, talked of having had 100,000 men around him. Nay, one of the Dublin papers magnified the number into 200,000. Mr. O'Connell's speech at the Navan meeting contained nothing new. He spoke of the necessity for Repeal, and thus described the position of affairs:—"The question is not between Whig and Tory—between Lord Melbourne and Sir Robert Peel—between Lord Stanley and Lord John Russell; the question is between no parties; but the question is, what will satisfy Ireland? (Cheers.) It is literally so; I am not exaggerating; there is nothing of the painting of my imagination in the description. England stands in this predicament: her Minister is in what the Americans—not very gracefully, but very truly—call a fix; he is all-powerful against his antagonists in Parliament, but he wants to know what is to be done for Ireland? Would he be so kind as to ask me? I think I can tell him at once. (Laughter.) I heard a little bird whisper Repeal. (Cheering.) Yes, I tell him nothing short of Repeal will do. He may try his experiments; he may give us a good bankers' bill; he may take off the glass duties; he may give a bountiful grant, and an uncontaminated grant, to Maynooth; he may hold out the prospect of sustaining Education—but education does not consist merely in literature—it is not in Greek, or Latin, or science, or algebra, or in any branch of mathematics or natural philosophy, that education alone consists; no, education should form the mind, elevate the heart, direct the judgment, give to genius its wing, and to talent its display; education should confirm morality; give a zest to the finest feelings of humanity, and to religion an impulse. (Cheers.) But if there be an education to corrupt and to poison the source of literature, by making the youth subservient—if there be that kind of education that, instead of ennobling the mind, enriches the pocket at the expense of the integrity—if there be that kind of education that vitiates and contaminates—that makes the sycophant and the slave—that gives temptation to the renegade, and a bribe to the deserter from his conscience and his faith—if there be education of that kind, and the Minister offers it to us, I would not speak of his bounty, but the curse he would inflict on the country by such an education."

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—The chief subject of discussion at the Repeal Association, on Monday, was the bill proposed by Government to encourage education in Ireland. Mr. O'Connell energetically denounced that measure. He said, his opinion was, that a more atrocious bill was never attempted to be introduced. There was no necessity to cry, "Step into the auction," for this bill. He would not bid for it at all, and the only connection he wished to have with it was the "knocking of it down." (Laughter.) He condemned the bill as a nefarious attempt to corrupt the rising youth of Ireland—to bribe them with a little Latin and Greek to become sneaking sycophants—to forget their love of country, and forsake the cause of nationality. What education could be given that could at all mitigate the horrible disgrace of the corruption which would ensue if this bill were made law. The professors would be like the revenue officers, or officers in the police. (Hear, hear.) As long as they continued unfriendly to their country they might remain in their places; but, if they suffered a word of a patriotic nature to escape their lips, while in these colleges, how long would they be lecturers? (Hear, hear.) In France a similar attempt was in the course of being made at present, and what a triumph to the patrons of infidelity there would the passing of this bill be. (Hear, hear.) It was "a mockery, a delusion, and a snare," and the opinion given by the Catholic prelates regarding it put an end to it altogether, in his mind. The other speakers coincided in this description of the bill.

MURDER IN THE COUNTY OF LONGFORD.—The Irish papers contain an account of a dreadful murder perpetrated on the 22nd inst., at a place called Drummoney, in the county of Longford. About five or six o'clock, on the evening of that day, a man named William Abbott was waylaid by a party of four ruffians, and beat and mangled in so dreadful a manner that death speedily ensued. The executive have offered a reward of £80 for the apprehension of the assassins.

MURDER AND ATTEMPTED SUICIDE IN LIMERICK.—On Saturday last, about 12 o'clock, a most awful murder of a wife by her husband, and attempted suicide of the latter, took place at Highmount, near Ballingarry. A man named Blucher, married to a woman who kept a dancing school in the neighbourhood, locked himself up in his house with his wife, after sending every person out of the way on errands. A short time afterwards a little girl—Blucher's child—gave the alarm that her father was choking her mother. Some people collected around the house, and having broken in found him stretched near the door with his throat nearly severed across, and his stomach half ripped open with a reaping-hook. They found the poor woman quite dead near him—strangled. The man was still alive.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

SERIOUS FIRE AT RAGGETT'S HOTEL, AND LOSS OF LIFE.

A fire broke out about one o'clock on Tuesday morning, at Raggett's Hotel, Dover-street, Piccadilly; and we deeply regret to state that several persons were burned to death, including Mrs. John Round, the lady of the member for Maldon, Essex, and Mr. Raggett and his daughter. The fire was discovered by police-constable 44 C, who observed smoke issuing through the windows on the southern corner of the first floor. Several persons quickly made their appearance at the front and back windows in their night-clothes. Such a strong hold had the fire obtained, that in less than ten minutes the flames were shooting forth from the windows with great fury, and extending nearly half way across the road.

The police constable, on giving the alarm, had the presence of mind to send messengers for the fire-escapes and engines; consequently, in a few minutes, two escapes, belonging to the Royal Society for the Protection of Life from Fire, were at the scene of conflagration, and also the parish engine. The one belonging to the County Office was also early in arriving, as well as several belonging to the London Brigade and the West of England, from the station in Waterloo-road. The first object that was sought to be accomplished was the rescue of the inmates, but before ladders or the escapes could be placed in front of the building, a number of persons got out upon a small balcony over the doorway, and, being assisted by the police and neighbours, they were enabled to effect their escape in safety. The persons in the upper floors were obliged to remain until the escapes could be placed to their windows. As soon as that was done, several of them entered the machines, and were received below in safety.

The following facts, collected from statements made by the Earl of Huntingdon and other survivors, leave no doubt as to the origin of the fire, and that four persons at least, viz., Mrs. John Round, the lady of the hon. member for Maldon, Essex; Mr. Raggett, sen., the proprietor of the hotel; his daughter, Miss Raggett, aged 27; and Mrs. Jones, a nurse in the service of the Earl of Huntingdon; have perished by the sad occurrence.

It appears that the hotel (which is a very capacious one) was, at the time of the outbreak, completely occupied by families, chiefly from the country. The Earl and Countess of Huntingdon, with their infant son, Lord Hastings, occupied the front drawing-room on the first floor, and the corresponding rooms above for their servants, Mrs. Jones, and the nursemaid, &c. The back drawing room was occupied by Mrs. John Round and her daughter (who had only arrived there late on Monday afternoon, from Brighton, to be presented at Court), and they had also a sitting-room and other apartments on the second floor. Another suite of apartments on the drawing-room floor were occupied by Mr. Richard Poer King and his sister; and beneath these were apartments in the occupation of Lord Louth, the Hon. Colonel Bouverie, and other gentlemen; the remainder of the building being devoted by Mr. Raggett to his own family and domestics, and those of the families staying at the hotel.

Singular as it may appear, when the fire was first discovered, the hotel had not been closed for the night. Mr. Raggett and his daughter retired to rest shortly before twelve o'clock, as did the servants, with the exception of the head waiter and the cook, who, as well as Mr. Raggett, junior, were sitting up for those inmates who had not returned home. Mrs. Round and her daughter had been to the St. James's Theatre, to see the French plays, and the Earl and Countess of Huntingdon, to the Opera. Mrs. Round and her daughter came home a few minutes after twelve, and retired to her sitting-room, on the second floor, to partake of supper. They had scarcely sat down when the head waiter, who had seen Miss King, while going up-stairs, entering her bed-room at the back of the first floor, and who had again descended, was alarmed by hearing screams of fire. On rushing up to the first-floor landing, he met Miss King coming down in a distracted state, exclaiming that her bed-room was in flames, and that she feared she had set fire to the bed-curtains. He found the whole room in a blaze, and entrance impossible, from the dense smoke that issued from it. The screams had attracted the attention of the inmates, and, on the second floor stairs, he saw Mrs. Round on the landing, in the same dress in which she had arrived from the theatre. He told her the house was on fire, and to make her escape. He ran down-stairs, supposing the lady to be following him, and saw no more of her. Miss Round states that she was with her mother at this time, and, either from the smoke or fright, the lady fell on the stairs, but, at the same moment, a man caught her up, saying he would save her; and, seeing her, as she supposed, safe, she ran into the apartment occupied by her attendant, but was unable to proceed down stairs, on account of the intensity of the heat and smoke. She and Miss Raggett again went back to the front room, nd opened the window; and when the fire escape arrived the fire was coming into the apartment. Miss Raggett was the first to go out, but did so before the conductor could get up, and fell on to the pavement and was killed. Miss Round then got out with her attendant, and effected their escape. A minute or two before this occurrence, a painful sight was witnessed by the crowds which had already assembled. A poor fellow, servant to Mr. King, was seen to make his appearance at an adjoining window of the second floor to that from which Miss Raggett fell. The flames were in the apartment, and in the hope of immediate assistance he got outside, and clung to the window sill for several minutes. The flames bursting through the window burnt his hands so dreadfully that he let go his hold, and fortunately fell into the balcony, from which he ultimately managed, with difficulty, to scramble into the street. About three or four minutes prior to the cries of fire being raised, Lord Huntingdon had arrived home, and his lordship states that he had scarcely put his hat down when he was startled by the alarm. His first impulse was to run to the room where his son and servants were. Mrs. Jones, the nurse, had heard the alarm, and was preparing to dress the child, but his lordship snatched his son from her arms, and with the countess ran out of the house, telling her to follow him. He believed she did so, but returned for some article, and must afterwards have mistaken the staircase, and got into one of the back rooms, and out of the window, from the position in which her body was found. The person whom Miss Round saw on the landing with her mother is supposed to be Mr. Raggett, sen., from the fact that the remains of the two bodies, when discovered, were found close together.

The rapidity and intensity of the fire may be accounted for from the fact that the whole of the apartments were wainscoted, and that there was three times as much wood in the building as is usual in modern houses. Although, therefore, there were ten engines in attendance within half an hour of the outbreak, and a plentiful supply of water, the whole building, with the singular exception of the sitting room of Mrs. Round, which remains with the supper things still standing on the table uninjured and untouched, was in flames.

The first body discovered was that of the unfortunate woman Mrs. Jones, about three o'clock, by Mr. Inspector Aggs, of the C division, and some o the firemen, dreadfully burned about the head, face, and arms, on the top of some leads in the rear of the premises and over the kitchen. She had evidently dropped from one of the second floor-windows. She had also a frightful wound on her head, but her body was immediately identified by Lord Huntingdon. The ruins were not sufficiently cool to commence a search for the other bodies supposed to be there until ten o'clock, when, at the earnest request of Colonel Boucher, Colonel Rolt, and other relatives of Mrs. Round, some of the brigade were induced to enter, and, after a short search, they found what are supposed to be the remains of Mrs. Round, lying on a part of the burnt flooring of the first floor, and close to them the remains of another person supposed to be those of Mr. Raggett. They presented a truly horrifying spectacle, scarcely anything but the mere trunks remaining. They were placed in shells, and conveyed to the workhouse of St. George's, Hanover-square, in Mount-street, as was also that of Mrs. Jones. Miss Raggett was conveyed to No. 8, Dover-street, exactly opposite the hotel, where she died almost immediately after.

It appears that the Countess of Huntingdon has lost the whole of her jewels, the estimated value of which his lordship stated to be as much as £3000; and those of the unfortunate Mrs. Round and her daughter, which they intended to have worn at the Drawing-Room, are estimated at a much larger sum, in addition to the plate. Mr. King, who is a merchant from Bristol, had in one of his apartments a large and valuable chest of plate, supposed to be destroyed.

Mrs. Round's family had, up to the discovery of the bodies, entertained a hope that the unfortunate lady had escaped.

Her Majesty had herself witnessed the progess of the flames from the Palace, and a messenger was at an early hour sent to inquire into the extent of the damage.

In the report made by Mr. Braidwood he attributes the rapid progress of the fire to the fact that the whole of the doors were thrown open, and thus a free current of air tended to increase the flames.

A singular circumstance in connection with this shocking affair occurred on Tuesday afternoon, about two o'clock. Lord Huntingdon came to Inspector Aggs and asked if it was safe to enter the drawing-room on the first floor, as he remembered that in his flight he had left a valuable gold watch on the mantel piece. He was referred to the firemen, one of whom his lordship accompanied up the ladder and through the window into the apartment, and shortly after returned, having found the watch in the fender partially melted.

Prior to taking apartments at Raggett's Hotel, on Monday evening, Mrs. Round and her daughter applied at Mivart's, but that establishment was full.

The loss of property is estimated at little short of £30,000.

The particulars given below were supplied by sufferers from the fire:—

Benjamin Rich, a footman to Mr. W. King, said that he went to bed shortly before twelve o'clock, and supposes that he had been asleep about ten minutes, when he was awoke by hearing a loud cry of "fire" raised. He immediately got up, and opened his window, on the third floor, when he noticed his master and mistress looking out of the drawing-room window, and shouting "Fire." He (Rich) got out of window, and hung by the sill until the flames burst open his bed-room door, and burned his hands so badly, that he was obliged to relinquish his hold, and, dropping upon the balcony, he succeeded in climbing round a post, and then slid down the lamp. He saw his master get out of the window first, and then pull his wife out, and escape in the same way.

Charles Roberson, the head waiter to the establishment, said: I was sitting up, waiting for the return of two families from the French Theatre. On the arrival of one, I saw the party up stairs, and was returning down again, when Mr. Raggett, jun., called for a light to show another party up stairs. I then noticed a light in the drawing-room, and, on going in, I there perceived a lady; she had a candle in her hand, and she entered the bed-room adjoining the drawing room. Having been down stairs about three minutes, I heard a sudden cry of fire raised, and, on running up to ascertain the cause, I met the Earl of Huntingdon on the stairs, who begged of me to go and rescue Lord Hastings. I tried to rush through the smoke and flame, but could not. I then ran to awake the parties asleep in the building. In the meantime Lord Hastings had been rescued and brought down. Mrs. Raggett was confined to her bed, she having broken her leg a few days previous; the two sons forced their way up, and carried her down. I then, after much difficulty, succeeded in saving the books and the cash-box, and also Colonel Bouverie's luggage. I believe that the fire was occasioned by a spark flying from the lady's candle on to the bedding. I had a most difficult task to wake the porter; for upon entering his bed-room I shook him violently, and told him that the house was on fire; he answered me, and I retreated, but he not making his appearance I returned and found him fast asleep again. By great force I at length succeeded in getting him up.

C. Collins, valet to Lord Maidstone, stated that he was just leaving the Coach and Horses, opposite the hotel, when flames were bursting from the back part of Raggett's Hotel. As he well knew, and was well known on the premises, he ran in instantly, the people in the streets at the time joining in a general cry of "Fire!" Finding that the staircase was in flames, he went to the foot of it, and called as loudly as he could, shortly after which the screaming of persons in the upper rooms was dreadful. At this instant three ladies appeared at one of the drawing-room windows, nearest the balcony. Being encouraged, they came out in their night-dresses, and, ladders being procured, they were taken, in safety, into the neighbouring houses. After rescuing a quantity of property and clothing, which he lodged at the Coach and Horses opposite, belonging to Col. Bouverie and others, he was compelled to withdraw, and leave the house and its contents to the fury of the flames, as the heat was too powerful for him. He saw eight or nine persons rescued, the majority of whom were ladies.

THE INQUEST ON THE BODIES.

On Wednesday evening, Mr. Bedford, the coroner for the city of Westminster, and a jury of thirteen householders of St. George's, Hanover-square, assembled at the Rising Sun, Charles-street, Grosvenor-square, to investigate the circumstances connected with the death of the four unfortunate persons whose bodies have been discovered.

The jury were impannelled on the bodies of Mr. William Raggett, aged 62; Miss Anne Raggett, aged 37; Ann Jones, aged 28, and the body of a female unknown (supposed to be that of Mrs. John Round).

Lord Huntingdon and several other members of the aristocracy were present during the proceedings, which excited an intense and painful degree of interest. The bodies lay in shells in the dead house in the rear of St. George's workhouse, Mount-street, and on being viewed by the jury presented a shocking spectacle. That at of Mr. Raggett. sen., and the body supposed to be that of Mrs. Round, were literally burnt to cinders, whilst that of Lord Huntingdon's nurse, Mrs. Jones, and Miss Raggett, were very much mutilated.

Miss Elizabeth King was the first witness called, and appeared much affected whilst giving her evidence. Her left hand was bound up in silk, and she had evidently been greatly burned about the face. She said, I reside at No. 2, Ratcliffe-parade, Bristol. Shortly after 12 o'clock on Monday evening last I was staying at Raggett's Hotel, with my brother and sister-in-law. We had a drawing-room and two bed rooms. My sister had just left me to retire for the night, and I went into my bed-room to obtain a little water to make some liquorice tea. I procured the water, and returned to the drawing-room, where I placed the water on the fire. In about two or three minutes I heard a cracking noise, and I went to the drawing-room door to see what it was, and I then saw the flames issuing from my bed-room door and over the door. I called "Fire, fire!" as loud as I was able, and one of the waiters, came up the stairs and then shouted fire also. My brother and sister then came up to the room. I ran into the bed-room to get a blanket to throw on the fire. I found I could not, and I got much burned. I ran back to the drawing-room, and my brother and sister broke the window, and called out "Fire!" and "Police!" I persuaded them to come down the staircase, which the fire had not then reached. They had only their night clothes on, and were afraid to go, but I ran to the staircase to show them it was safe. I thought there was plenty of time to get down the staircase, but when I descended a step or two, the flames caught me and burnt me in several places. Two men, I believe, rushed up stairs past me at that time. When I got down I begged the people to bring ladders to save my brother and sister, who were at the window.

By the Coroner: There was no fire in the bed-room. I took a candle with me when I went in there, and brought it back again. I was caught hold of by two or three men, and carried down stairs. I cannot exactly say the cause of the fire; but, having been in the room so recently, and knowing there was no fire or candle there, I feared that it had been caused by my candle. My candle had no guard before it. To reach my bed-room I had to pass through a narrow passage, and the bed room was very small. I had no reason for believing that any one had entered my bed-room. There were some lucifer matches in the drawer of the washing-stand. I had not used any of them at that time. The bed curtains were of dimity, and a spark from the candle might have ignited them, but I cannot say it did so. I cannot say in what part of the room the flames commenced. They must have burst through the door, or the door was open when I heard the cracking noise.

By the Jury: There is no circumstance which leads me to believe that a spark from my candle ignited the bed-curtains.

Francis Henry Earl of Huntingdon examined: I am residing at present at No. 13, Hill-street. On Monday night last, I and my family were staying at Raggett's Hotel. I had been on Monday night to the French plays, and returned to the hotel, I think, about half-past twelve o'clock. I went to the drawing-room, and had just put my hat on the table, and was taking a chamber light to go into my bed-room, when I heard cries of fire. Lady Huntingdon and her mother, Mrs. Power, had just preceded me, and I was wishing Mrs. Power good night at the time. I think I can swear it was young Mr. Raggett's voice I heard cry "Fire!" and "Oh! my mother!" I then ran first up stairs to my child's room, and shook Mrs. Jones, the nurse, who was asleep, saying, "Jones, Jones, the house is on fire! give me the child." She said, "Wait, my Lord, till I dress him; the cold will be the death of him." I snatched the child from her, and shook her again by the shoulder, exclaiming, "Good God! woman, the house is in flames. Follow me." I then rushed with him down stairs, the whole of which were on fire. My eyebrows and the child's hair were singed off. I rushed into the street, and into Batt's Hotel, who kindly threw their doors open to every one. I then found Lady Huntingdon and her mother in the street. My apartments were the opposite drawing-rooms to Mr. and Mrs. King's. After my wife was in safety, I went back to see for Jones, and then saw the fire escape being put up, but it was being done in a very bungling manner. The room where my son and Jones were was exactly over Miss King's bed-room; and when I tried to come out with my son the flames had reached its door.

By the Foreman: I will not undertake to say there was neglect on the part of those who had charge of the fire escape, but there appeared to be some difficulty in their getting it close enough to the house. The men appeared to be sober who had charge of the escape.

Evidence resumed: About three o'clock a policeman informed me that a body of a female had been found in the rear of the hotel, and I went to see it. I have seen the same body at the workhouse, and I believe it to be that of Ann Jones, from her having red hair, and being a married woman, and having a ring on her finger.

By the Jury: I never saw a body of firemen and police do their duty on any occasion so effectively in any country in the world. Everything was done to save life and property. I have no idea from what part the flames first came. Where Ann Jones's body was found was immediately under the window of the room in which I had left her on the second floor. It is my opinion she threw herself from the window, and was crushed by the fall rather than killed by the fire.

Mr. Frederick William Raggett examined: I am the son of the deceased Mr. William Raggett, late proprietor of Raggett's Hotel, in Dover-street. I acted as head-waiter and manager of the hotel for my father. I was at home when the fire broke out. My father and sister retired to rest at eleven o'clock, and I was sitting up with the head-waiter and cook for the Earl of Huntingdon and Mrs. Round, who had gone to the French plays; the latter lady having ordered a roast fowl for supper at half-past 12 o'clock. Mrs. Round occupied a sitting-room and two bed-rooms on the second floor, which are all connected with one another by doors. Mrs. Round and her daughter arrived home at 12 o'clock, and I took up the urn for making tea, and the fowl. She then ordered some dry toast, and asked to have the things left up there to save us trouble. On my return down stairs I saw flames rushing out of Miss King's bed-room, on the drawing-room floor, and heard the cry of fire. I instantly rushed to my mother's bed-room, she having been bed-ridden through a broken leg for three weeks. My mother slept on the second floor, and my brother followed me and assisted her down the stairs, but the flames were so overpowering that we both fell with her. I was assisted then by some men, and we carried my mother to Batt's Hotel. I then returned to see after the safety of my brother. I must here remark that when I saw the flames I called out "Fire, fire!" loud enough to disturb every one in the house. On my going back to look for my brother I found him on the ladder bringing Miss Round down the escape. He went up again and brought down Miss Round's servant. My brother appeared mad, as he said he could find neither his father nor his sister. Had the fire-escape been there in proper time, and the conductor not been drunk, it would have been properly placed, and, I believe, every soul might have been saved.

Mr. Raggett here said, that although the house was insured for £2000, every vestige of property belonging to his father was destroyed. The candles used were all patent candles, and a spark falling from them would not have ignited. Miss King's bed curtains were of quilted dimity. He was of opinion, therefore, that the candle must, while Miss King was passing the bed, have come in contact with the curtains unknown to her.

By the Jury: It is my firm belief that the two bodies so much burned are those of my father and Mrs. Round, as they were seen together by Miss King, my father endeavouring to save her, on the staircase. There was a trap door by which persons could escape to the roof. The housemaid, Mrs. Barnes, slept in a front room on the second floor, and, as I understand these bodies were found in the back part of the premises, I should say that the female body is that of Mrs. Round.

The Coroner, at this stage of the proceedings, remarked, that as there appeared to be considerable doubt as to the identity of the fourth body, whether it was that of the unfortunate lady, Mrs. Round, or Mrs. Barnes, the housekeeper, perhaps it would be proper to adjourn the inquiry, in order to set that matter at rest.

A discussion then ensued amongst the jury as to taking further evidence, when, in answer to the Coroner,

Mr. Inspector Aggs stated that the hotel was being now shored up, and there was every probability of the other bodies being discovered, if they were in the ruins, in the course of another day.

The inquiry was then adjourned till Friday (yester day).

The following is the official report of the damage:—Nearly one-half of the front of building and greater part of the back and contents destroyed. Supposed cause of fire, curtain becoming ignited from a candle. Five lives lost. Insurance unknown. No. 46, Lord Gardener's, slight damage to furniture, insured in the Sun Office. No. 44, Mr. E. Moxon, publisher, slight damage to building. Fire extinguished by eight brigade engines, with those of the County and West of England Offices, and two belonging to the parishes.

The Building.—Raggett's Hotel was a cruciform structure of great breadth of frontage and of considerable depth, both in flank and base. Including the basement, it contained about forty rooms, comprising dining apartments, drawing-rooms, sleeping dormitories, attics, &c.; in fact, each floor was so fitted as to furnish a complete suite for each family. The principal defect, however, in the structure was, that there was no escape from the upper rooms to the front door only by the staircase leading to it, nor was it possible that any one could have got out from the midst of the flames had the usual communication by the staircase been cut off, except by a door on the roof. Unfortunately, that difficulty was felt in the present instance, and it is, undoubtedly, owing to this cause that so many persons lost their lives.

Several hair breadth escapes were experienced by parties on the premises. Two ladies were saved by rushing from the blazing building in their night dresses, and making their escape from the balcony over the door of the hotel on the shoulders of the populace. Two others were rescued by the fire-escape, while one or two others escaped by the roof.

Curious Accident on the Birmingham and Derby Railway.—On Monday evening the seven o'clock train from Birmingham, consisting principally of pigs and cattle from Liverpool, intended for the Derby market on the following day, had arrived within about five miles of the last-mentioned town, when smoke, fire, and horrible yellings, were noticed to be proceeding from the next carriage but one to the tender, which contained about twenty pigs. The guard was the first to discover the circumstance, and, having apprised the engine-driver, the train was stopped. Immediately it was discovered that the whole of the interior of the vehicle was a mass of flame, and that the animals were writhing about and yelling in the extreme of agony. Five of the pigs were killed on the spot, and the remainder were forwarded to their owner at Nottingham, who found them so seriously burnt and scalded with the steam arising from the water thrown upon them to extinguish the flames, that he had them all butchered forthwith. The accident originated in a quantity of sparks being thrown from the engine chimney upon the loose straw on the carriage where the pigs were penned. The damage done cannot be less than £100.

Fatal Accident in the City.—Last Saturday afternoon an accident of a frightful and most distressing nature occurred in Moor lane, Fore-street. The persons injured were, with others, employed in demolishing a large factory at the north end of Moor-lane, formerly used as a workhouse for the Ward of Cripplegate; and, whilst on the third story of the building, a wall which supported the floor gave way, and precipitated them to the bottom, a distance of about 30 feet. An instant alarm was given, and men set to work to remove the rubbish, when three individuals were dug out of the ruins, and immediately carried to St. Bartholomew's Hospital. One of them, named George Bedford, was dead, and the other two received injuries of so serious a nature that no hopes are entertained of their recovery.

Manslaughter Against a Cabman.—On Monday night an inquest was held at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, on the body of William Temple, aged 49, who met his death whilst driving a light empty cart down Snow-hill, about eight o'clock in the evening of Friday last, in consequence of, as alleged, the furious driving of a cabman, of the name of James Holt, one of the sons of the celebrated Harry Holt, the pugilist. The jury returned a verdict of "Manslaughter" against Holt, the driver of the cab.

Mysterious Suicide.—On Tuesday night two persons who had resolved on perishing together swallowed oxalic acid at a beer-shop in Cross-street, Leather-lane, Holborn, and one of them died. The names of the parties are William Cock and Hannah Moore, and they had lived in the capacity of waiter and kitchenmaid at the Bell and Crown, and were discharged by the landlord a few hours previous in consequence of a very unpleasant discovery respecting them. After leaving the Bell and Crown they engaged a room at the beer-shop in Cross-street, and having purchased a quantity of oxalic acid, mixed it in hot water, suffered it to become cool, and then swallowed the poison. The woman expired a few minutes afterwards, in great agony. The poison did not take effect upon the man, who, trembling for the consequences of his rash act, gave an alarm, and the landlady, on going into the room, found her lodger in a dying state, who soon afterwards breathed her last. Cock was given into the custody of the police. The deceased is stated to be only twenty one years of age.—The accused was brought up for final examination at Clerkenwell yesterday, charged with the wilful murder of Hannah Moore, and was fully committed for trial.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

A letter from Constantinople of the 7th, states that the complications between Turkey and Greece are increasing. Shekib Effendi has addressed a note to the Great Powers, complaining of the language held by the Greek Cabinet, and announces that the Turkish troops on the frontier will be increased.

The India mail, dispatched from Malta on the 29th ult. by the Sydenham, reached London in 138 hours 55 minutes, or less than six days! The return mail left London on the night of the 7th, reached Malta early on the afternoon of the 14th, so that, including stoppages, and the aid of steam only for the sea voyage, the journey from Malta to London and back has been performed in less than 11 days!

According to a letter from Naples of the 8th, the Neapolitan Government has signed a treaty of commerce with France and England, and the ratifications are to be exchanged within three months.

Copenhagen papers of the 17th state, that on the 9th inst., the King of Denmark ratified in Privy Council the treaty which on Feb. 22, had been concluded at Calcutta, between the Governor of the Danish possessions, State Counsellor Hansen on one side, and Sir H. Hardinge, General Governor of British India, on the other, respecting the sale of certain Danish East Indian Colonies to the East India Company. The purchase-money amounts to 1,125,000 rix dollars.

Sheridan Knowles has arrived in Lisbon, from Madeira; and it is stated, that he intends to give some public readings of his plays in the former city.

A communication has been sent from the Stamp office notifying that neither tavern keepers, nor any other persons, can sell postage stamps without being properly licensed. This may prove a useful hint, as it was a very common practice for gentlemen at hotels, to ask for such stamps, and the sale of them rendered the landlord liable to a penalty.

Cape of Good Hope papers to the 21st of March, mention that there had been some heavy storms on the frontier, during one of which a Mr. Philipps, a farmer of some note, about 50 miles from Grahamstown, had been killed by the electric fluid, and also one of his maid servants.

Sir Henry Pottinger has just received a mark of the esteem in which his services are held by the Chinese authorities, in regard to the treaty lately concluded by him between this country and the Celestial Empire, in the shape of a portrait of the Imperial Commissioner Keying, which has just arrived by a vessel from China, as a present to Sir Henry from that exalted personage.

A Berne journal states that M. Guizot and Prince Metternich have exerted themselves so earnestly to save the life of Dr. Steiger that there is little doubt of his obtaining a commutation of punishment.

We understand that the proposed treaty with Brazil has been abandoned.

Civil war has recommenced in the Lebanon between the Christians and the Druses. On the 30th ult., the first battle took place near the village of Aramur. The Christians retreated, after having had six men killed, amongst whom was the Emir Assad Hmoud. The Druses, who were much more nemerous, had 27 killed, including the son of the Sheik Emir Eddin. Another affair took place on the same day near Diar el Kamar, but the results are not stated. The war has commenced on various points.

Madame Ida de Saint Edme (La Contemporaine) died at Brussels, on 24th inst., in the 78th year of her age. It was in an hospital this celebrated beauty of the Consulate and the Empire terminated her career.

The National announces that the celebrated Russian tragedian Karatignie is about to quit Russia on a journey through Europe. This artist, whom British travellers in their admiration have frequently compared with Macready, and whom the Russian journals placed above the British Talma, proposes making a long residence in Paris.

The treaty between Frankfort and Hesse for the construction of a railway from Cassell to the first, by way of Marburgh, Giessen, Friedberg, and Bockenheim, has been ratified by the contracting parties. It will be constructed at the expense of the two Hesses and of Frankfort, and will form a junction with the railroad to Heidelberg. The line is to be completed within five years. It will shortly be commenced.

It is stated at Cambridge that the railway will be open for passengers as far as Trumpington, by the 16th of next month, two days before the meeting of the British Association.

So late as the 20th inst. the snow fell heavily round Geneva till it became full a foot deep. At the same time it came down at Thann in the Haut Rhin, at Auch, Tarbes, and other parts of France, even at Compiegnè.

THE MORNING MAILS.

In consequence of the numerous railways that are now established through out the United Kingdom, the Postmaster-General, the Right Hon. the Earl of Lonsdale, has taken advantage of this public benefit by the facility thus afforded for the transmission of morning as well as evening mails to nearly every town in Great Britain, Scotland, and Ireland. The following is the official list of post towns to which letters and newspapers can now be forwarded by the morning mails:—

Abingdon	Coventry	Lechdale	Sunderland
Accrington	Cowes	Leighton-Buzzard	South Shields
Alnwick	Cranbrook	Lewes	Southampton
Andover-road	Cuckfield	Liverpool	Staplehurst
Appleby	Darlington	Loughborough	St. Asaph
Ashford	Dartford	Maidenhead	St. Alban's
Banbury	Daventry	Maidstone	St. Leonard's
Bangor	Derby	Manchester	Stafford
Bath	Dorking	Margate	Stockport
Barnsley	Dover	Maryport	Stockton
Basingtoke	Dunmow	Melton Mowbray	Stone
Battle	Durham	Milnthorpe	Stroud
Beaumaris	Dursley	Mold, Monmouth	Stony Stratford
Belford	Exeter	Morpeth	Stratford-on-Avon
Belper	Fareham	Newcastle on Tyne	Swinton
Berwick	Fairford	Newmarket	Taunton
Berkhampstead	Farringdon	Newport, Isle of Wight	Tetbury
Bilstone	Felton		Thirsk
Birmingham	Fenny Stratford	Newport Pagnel	Towcester
Bishops Stortford	Feversham	Northampton	Tring
Blackburn	Folkestone	North Shields	Tunbridge
Bolton	Gateshead	Nottingham	Tunbridge Wells
Bradford, Yorksh.	Godalming	Northallerton	Ulverstone
Brackley	Gloucester	Oxford	Uxbridge
Brampton	Gosport	Penkridge	Wakefield
Bridgewater	Grantham	Penrith	Wallingford
Bristol	Gravesend	Portsmouth	Walsall
Brighton	Guildford	Preston	Ware
Brough	Guernsey	Preston Brook	Warrington
Buckingham	Halifax	Pwllheli	Warwick
Burnley	Hastings	Ramsgate	Watford
Burton, W.	Haydon-bridge	Reading	Wednesbury
Bury, Suffolk	Hemel Hempstead	Reigate	Weedon
Cambridge	Hertford	Rickmansworth	West Bromwich
Canterbury	Higham	Ripon	Wellington (Salop)
Carlisle	Highworth	Rochdale	Wellington (Somersetshire)
Carnarvon	Hoddesdon	Rochester
Chatham	Holyhead	Rotherham	Whitehaven
Chepstow	Holywell	Rugby	Wigan
Cheltenham	Huddersfield	Ryde	Wigton
Chester	Hurst-green	Saffron Walden	Winchester
Chester le-Street	Hythe	Sevenoaks	Windsor
Chesterfield	Jersey	Sheffield	Wolverhampton
Chippenham	Kendal	Shiffnall	Wotton-under-Edge
Cirencester	Lancaster	Sittingbourne
Clitheroe	Leeds	Shoreham	Workington
Cockermouth	Leamington	Shrewsbury	Wortley
Conway	Leicester	Slough	York

All Scotland and Ireland.

For all the above places the letter-boxes at the Receiving Houses will be open till 7 A.M., for newspapers, and 8 A.M., for letters; and those at the Branch-offices, Charing-cross, Old Cavendish-street, and the Borough, for the reception of newspapers, until half-past 7 A.M., and for letters until 8 A.M. At the General Post-office, St. Martin's-le-Grand, and the Branch-office in Lombard-street, the boxes will close for newspapers at 45 minutes after 7 A.M., and for letters at 30 minutes after 8 A.M.

POSTSCRIPT.

Saturday Evening.

THE DISASTROUS FIRE AT RAGGETT'S HOTEL.

By six o'clock yesterday (Friday) morning the shoring was finished: the walls, however, especially the interior one, appearing much out of the perpendicular, and, consequently, very dangerous. At that hour, despite the impending and fearful appearance of the whole building, ten men in the service of the London Fire Establishment began to turn over the rubbish on the ground floor in the back room, and in the rooms immediately contiguous to the stair-head, just over the hall-ceiling.

About eleven o'clock, Mr. Loder, the principal engineer of the western section of the brigade, received information from one of the men engaged on the upper floor that he had found a body. The Earl of Huntingdon was upon the spot at the time; and, upon viewing the remains, his lordship appeared to feel the deepest emotion. There is no doubt, we understand, as to the identity, though the remains are deplorably mutilated. It scarcely admits of a doubt, from the position in which the body lay, that the ill-fated lady, Mrs. Round, immediately after having been seen by the waiter, Robinson, on the first-floor landing, when the alarm was given, was overpowered by fright, smoke, and flame, and that, as the flames progressed with such terrific rapidity that escape was hopeless, she sank down on the floor, and thus perished. A shell was speedily procured, and the remains conveyed to the workhouse of St. George, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square.

Several odd articles were turned up on the ground floor, but none of material value. A few articles of female apparel were there, and also a quantity of bedding, &c. A chest also, belonging to the unfortunate proprietor of the hotel, containing bills and other unimportant articles, was also discovered. Previously, the firemen found under a heap of rubbish a box containing a rose and spray of diamonds, belonging to the Countess of Huntingdon, and valued at £300. These were very triflingly injured, and were handed over to his lordship. A little further off a case containing his lordship's epaulettes was found, which was unsoldered by the heat of the fire, and the epaulettes were entirely destroyed. A sword, the property of his lordship, was found doubled up in a variety of fantastic shapes. A quantity of satin and silk, with a vast number of shirts, coats, and other articles of wearing apparel belonging to Lord Huntingdon, were also found, but so burnt as to be entirely worthless.

The firemen, whilst overhauling the ruins, came across several portions of a gold bracelet, which Mr. Round, jun., identified as having been worn by his unfortunate mother on the night of the calamity.

THE ADJOURNED INQUEST.

The jury re-assembled at three o'clock yesterday (Friday) afternoon, when they went to view the fifth body which had been recovered. The remains presented a most dreadful spectacle; and, from the injuries which the body had received, it was impossible to recognise it. A portion of the lower jaw was produced for the purpose of leading, if possible, to the identity. The evidence went to show, as far as it was possible, that the remains were those of Sarah Barnes; that as soon as the fire was discovered a gentleman of the name of Wellbore, who was passing, went for the fire-escape, the keeper of which was in liquor, and who threatened to knock Mr. Wellbore down. About eighteen minutes elapsed before it was fixed from the alarm of the fire being given; and it was then fixed between the windows. Miss Raggett made a spring towards it: but, having missed her hold, she fell on the pavement. Mr. Henry Raggett afterwards went up, and brought Miss Round out. None of the witnesses were able to speak to the origin of the fire. Robinson, the head waiter, said, that if small ladders had been brought in the first instance, the lives could have been saved; that an application was made to a livery-stable keeper for his ladders, but he refused to let them go until his horses were saved. This being the whole of the evidence, the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death," and added the following recommendation:—"The Jury request that the Coroner will write to Sir James Graham, for the purpose of calling his especial attention to the evidence given at this inquest, in order that Government may take some means of preventing, in future, such an awful sacrifice of human life."

Down Election.—The High Sheriff of Down has fixed Tuesday next for the election of a member to fill the vacancy caused by the elevation of the Earl of Hillsborough (now Marquis of Downshire) to the Upper House. Lord Edwin Hill is the only candidate, and he will be returned without opposition.

Sheriffs for the Ensuing Year.—Alderman Challis, the senior alderman who has not served the office of Sheriff, and Mr. R. W. Kennard, of Thames-street, the iron merchant, are to be put in nomination for the Shrievalty on Midsummer Day.

The New Zealand Company.—The Annual General Court of Proprietors of this Company was held on Thursday at their offices in Broad-street-buildings. Viscount Ingestre took the chair. The minutes of the last meeting having been read and confirmed, the Secretary proceeded to read the eighteenth general Report of the Directors. The reading of this Report was much broken by citations from the official correspondence to which it alluded, and by occasional statements from Mr. Charles Buller, explanatory of portions of that correspondence, and of the negociations with Government from time to time referred to. The Report entered into a detailed statement of the differences which had arisen between the Company and the Colonial Department, and was ultimately received and adopted. Dr. Evans, one of the earliest settlers, addressed the Court, and detailed the proceedings of the Governor, Captain Fitzroy, with reference to the Company's settlements.

Repression of the Slave Trade.—The new convention between France and England for the repression of the slave-trade was signed yesterday afternoon at the Foreign Office, and the ratifications are to be exchanged within ten days.

The Irish Martyrs.—An express from Dublin has brought an account of the celebration of the anniversary of what is called the incarceration of the "martyrs"—alias the seditious convicts. The affair came off yesterday (Friday), and Dublin appears to have been a scene of great excitement throughout the day. There were various processions of artisans, and the '82 Club in their green costume. There was also a sort of levee at the Rotunda. Mr. O'Connell was seated on a platform, surrounded by his fellow-"martyrs," and their green companions, and received several addresses. Mr. Henry Grattan informed the "martyrs" that the '82 Club had just agreed to a solemn declaration, "that they will never desist from seeking the repeal of the legislative union with England by all possible moral and constitutional means, until a Parliament be restored to Ireland." Mr. O'Connell called for a pen, and, with apparent solemnity, signed this pledge, amidst loud cheering. When the addresses had all been presented, Mr. O'Connell made a long speech upon the usual topics.

The Late Duel near Gosport.—On Thursday Mr. Setou became worse, and in the course of the day it was evident some unfavourable alteration had taken place. These symptoms increased on Friday to such a fearful degree, that the recovery of the patient is now pronounced hopeless. Mr. Liston has been sent for from London, to see if there is any chance of prolonging the life of the sufferer by an operation. Drs. Stewart, Mortimer, and Jenkins, attend very regularly, and consult twice a day upon their patient. Neither Lieutenant Hawkey nor the seconds have been heard of since the warrants for their apprehension have been issued. It is reported and believed they are all on the Continent.

The Convict Connor.—Yesterday Connor's mother, his aunt, Mrs. Leonard, and her daughter, to whom he was to have been married, had an interview with the wretched man, who preserved the greatest strength of mind throughout the whole two hours and a half that they were with him. He acknowledged that he perpetrated the horrid deed in a moment of insanity, and that had he not murdered Mary Brothers, he would have murdered some one else, as he felt uncontrollably propelled to the sanguinary act. Several times during the interview he exhibited a most unnatural flow of spirits, and spoke of his approaching end with the greatest nonchalance and even with a levity approaching insanity. He said that he would not die like Hocker, but that he would ascend the scaffold like a man, and laughingly added that he would kick the hangman from it into the street. When the time arrived for the departure of his relatives, he complained of the short period allowed them to remain, and, addressing his aunt, asked if she would not come and see him hanged? He wept repeatedly, and particularly when, for the last time, he embraced his mother. The execution is to take place on Monday.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

France.—A report was current in Paris on Wednesday that a marriage was in contemplation between the sister of the Duke of Bordeaux and the son of the Duke of Lucca. The French Government has received a semi-official announcement that Queen Victoria will not visit France during the present season.

Spain.—The Abdication of Don Carlos.—The renunciation of the claim to the throne of Spain by Don Carlos, in favour of his son, the Prince of the Asturias, is officially confirmed. Don Carlos announces the fact in a letter to his son, dated Bourges, May 18, and the son, in a dutiful answer, of the same day, states his submission to his father's will. Don Carlos in future will take the title of Count de Molina. The Prince has issued a Manifesto to the Spanish Nation, in which, although he disclaims the idea of throwing "a brand of discord" among that people, he hints the possibility of his return to Spain. Here, then, is another civil war in embryo.

Belgium.—The Gazette of Mons says the price of corn continues to rise in an alarming manner. At the market at Mons, on the 21st, there was a rise of two francs four centimes per hectolitre on wheat, and of one franc three centimes on rye.

The late Mr. Hood.—Sir R. Peel has sent the munificent contribution of £50 to the fund now in progress of collection in memory of the genius of the late Thomas Hood, and in aid of his bereaved family.

The Pitt Club.—The members of the Pitt Club met on Wednesday evening, at the London Tavern, in celebration of their usual anniversary. The party consisted of about fifty; the chair being filled by the Earl of Eldon, the President of the Club, who was supported by Lord Kenyon, Lord Feversham, Hon. Octavius Duncombe, M.P., Mr. G. W. J. Repton, M.P., Sir John Chetwode, M.P., Colonel Conolly, M.P., Mr. Quintin Dick, M.P., Mr. J. Neeld, M.P., Mr. Blakemore, M.P., Sir John Croft, Sir R. P. Glyn, Mr. E. Neale, &c. The meeting passed off with much cordiality, and the party broke up before eleven o'clock.

EPSOM RACES.—"SCENE

N THE ROAD."—DRAWN BY GILBERT.

ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

FOURTH NOTICE.

We took advantage of two wet days in the early part of the week, of a full attendance at Epsom, and the attraction of a Drawing Room, to make a fourth visit to the Exhibition of the Royal Academy. The rooms we found, as we had expected, infinitely less crowded than they had been at any period since the opening of the Exhibition. We were thus enabled to wander unelbowed from one picture to another—from a "Devonshire Lane," by Lee, to a "Coast Scene," by Clarkson Stanfield; from Danby to David Roberts; from Turner to John Martin; from Chalon's full-length of "Mrs. Thwaytes" to Grant's three-quarter portrait of "Miss Singleton"; from the pictures on the floor to the top lines of trash, put there to fill up and assist the general effect of the Exhibition. It is a trying task to the head to look for any length of time to the cornices of a lofty room, but still more tiring to look at human faces upon canvass—hanging cheek by jowl—bare signs, at the very best, and at a distance of forty feet from the floor. We were amused, however, and perhaps repaid by what we saw.

Danby is said to be an imitator of Martin, and no man, it is added, ever grew great by imitation. There was too much justice in the observation. Mr. Danby has hitherto been only Mr. Martin at second hand; but this year he has cancelled his bonds and started a painter on his own account. We congratulate Mr. Danby on this change, and on the noble instances he has given in the present Exhibition, of his power to paint better things than he has hitherto painted. In point of fine poetic feeling his "Wood Nymph's Hymn to the Rising Sun" is by far the finest landscape in the Exhibition. It is not only true to poetry, but true to nature. The effect is very pleasing, but truer, we think, to the setting than to the rising sun. The wood-nymph is a mere fly in the picture—the landscape which occasions her hymn is all in all. The connoisseur, who can see nothing in modern landscape painting beyond a Lane by Lee, or a Mountain Torrent by Creswick, will pass with a shrug of indifference Mr. Danby's classic composition; all, however, who love for art, for the poetic emotions it embodies, or the recollections of poetry which its presence cannot fail to awaken within us, will linger about this picture, and see much more in a momentary glance than a raw observer will perceive in a fortnight.

In perusing the "Lives of Celebrated Men," how seldom do we read of an eminent son of an eminent father. Nature is said to have exhausted herself in the creation of one, and likes to lie fallow for a time before she produces a crop of equal value in the same field. Father and son have been likened—and not inaptly, it appears to us—to two trees growing too near to one another—the shadow thrown by the elder tree spoils the growth of the sapling near it; they grow too near one another for the younger to do well. We have been led into this train of thinking from observing in the present Exhibition, the works of two new candidates for Academic honours—both the sons of distinguished fathers, and both likely to do well. We allude to Mr. Henry Phillips, the son of Thomas Phillips, R.A., recently removed from among us; and to Mr. R. C. Leslie, the son of C. R. Leslie, R.A., who is still alive, and in the full swing and vigour of his genius. Young Mr. Phillips seeks distinction as a portrait painter; young Mr. Leslie as a landscape painter. There is a fine field open for them both, and we wish them every success. With genius they may achieve much; with industry still more; with both united, that eminence which, perhaps, awaits them.

There is little to call for remark in the room set apart for Architectural Drawings. Mr. Sydney Smirke's design for Sir Robert Peel's new gallery at Drayton Manor has at least novelty and name to recommend it. The Premier is a well-known patron of the Arts, with great good taste, a long purse and a generous hand. His pictures have increased so much of late, that he is in want of room for their proper distribution. This gallery, however, will give him "ample room and verge enough" to display to advantage the interesting collection he possesses of the works of the English school. He designs it, however, only as a gallery for the portraits of the Statesmen and men of Genius of his time; and when we recollect how rich he is in the works of Sir Thomas Lawrence, Mr. Phillips, Mr. Jackson, and the late Mr. Phillips, we applaud his determination, and foresee that he will make it, in this way, a companion collection to the famous Waterloo Gallery, at Windsor.

War, represented by the Duke of Wellington—the Senate, by Canning—Literature, by Sir Walter Scott and Sir Robert's old schoolfellow Lord Byron—Painting, by Sir David Wilkie—and Sculpture, by Sir Francis Chantrey. The idea is a good one; but one suggestive at this time, of the fate of a similar gallery, made by the great Lord Clarendon, in the time of Charles the Second. But Sir Robert is a fortunate statesman; Lord Clarendon was an unfortunate one. Sir Robert is gentle in his alliances; Lord Clarendon was regal in his—too regal for his own after happiness and security. Long may this collection remain at Drayton Manor, a monument of the taste and munificence of its founder.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

The musical event of the past week has been the revival of one of the best of Donizetti's later operas—"Linda di Chamouni," with a cast of such perfection that it would have made the fortune of a work of far inferior merit. The great charm of this opera is its simplicity; there is no underplot to confuse, nor adventitious characters to disturb, the singleness of its interest. There is an abiding interest in its story, the outline of which has done good service to the poet, the novelist, the dramatist, and the musician. Mackenzie's beautiful tale of "Julie de Roubigne"—"Clari"—the charming episode in Muhlengelert's poem, are all borrowed from the same source; the village maiden, loved by a noble of high lineage, lured from her native cottage—for a time surrounded by wealth and luxury—heart-broken parents—and the victim, bewrayed by ambition, returning to her simple home—her heart wrecked, and her senses gone. Donizetti has achieved, if not a great triumph, in working out this charming subject into a lyrical form, at least an opera that will hold possession of the stage. He has not marred its simplicity by heavy ensembles; charming arias, picturesque duets, and effective choruses, assist admirably in developing the various interests of the drama; and the denouement is produced naturally and effectively. The very smoothness of the melody which pervades the entire work, prevents the more impassioned results which would have arisen from a different musical treatment. The composer has depended upon the unaided power of nature to produce its effect, and sweetly and satisfactorily she has fulfilled her mission. Donizetti has imparted just sufficient colouring to establish its locale; he has eschewed the marked Schweitzer rhythm, and the monotonous recurrence of the dominant, but in lieu thereof, he has invented passionate melody, and interpreted the conflicting sentiments of the lyrical personages with truthful and enduring motivos. The principal interest centred in Linda; so many are the physical and mental requisites necessary to the perfect embodiment of this character, that it is but seldom that a correct portraiture can be hoped for. Youth, beauty, dramatic intensity, and vocal facility, are seldom found concentred in one person; and we do but scant justice to Madame Castellan in affirming that so perfect a Linda we have never yet seen. She exhibited a delicacy of conception and a fine appreciation of the various points of the character. In the earlier scenes, the confiding love of the girl, the filial tenderness, and the natural grief at leaving the pastoral valley, were each in turn exquisitely shadowed forth. Then, in the gay boudoir, how truthfully were given the woman's pride and the virtuous indignation—how scornfully, and yet how femininely and delicately, did her scorn burst forth at the venal and vicious advances of the silly Marquis of Boisfleury—how passionate and tearful her interview with her father—how entire her mental fatuity when she deems herself betrayed by him on whom she had garnered up her love and happiness: the despair was utter, and every faculty seemed prostrate. These, contrasted by her artistic recovery, when the Ranz de Vaches of her native mountains meets her ear, and the loved voice of the Viscount de Serval assures her that she is to wear the orange wreath, that her parents are to be honoured on her bridal, and that she may meet the glances of early companions with a brow unmantled by the blush of shame, how radiant was her joy—how gushing her sense of happiness. It was a chef-d'œuvre, which will live in our lyrical memory as a triumph of fine acting and executive perfection. Brambilla's Pierotto was marked by a quiet consciousness of power and highly cultivated style. The Antonio of Fornasari is a picture full of genius; and the Prefect of Lablache is instinct with benevolence, while his magnificent voice in the "Prayer," rolled its vast volume like the peals of an organ through the aisles of a cathedral. Moriani was the original Charles, and above all comment is the perfect style in which he renders the music. The applause was, on both occasions of its performance, incessant; and, at the close of the opera, the "principals" were called before the curtain to receive the enthusiastic greetings of the delighted audience.

A new ballet, of novel construction, was produced at this theatre on Thursday night. Of its merits our space will not, this week, allow us to speak so much at length as we would wish; but, we must notice one peculiarity, through which the production of this ballet will, probably, mark an important era in our choregraphic annals: it is the introduction of singing in accompaniment to the dancing—a revival of a custom of venerable antiquity, in the most polished, and also the most barbarous, nations—from the Indians of the back-woods to the courtly heroes of the ballet, even in the time of Louis XV. Although, in the present instance, this accompaniment is confined to one dance alone, the circumstance augurs well for the restoration of a custom, which not only increases the variety and animation of an entertainment of this description, but imparts to it a more intellectual and elevated character. In this instance it is highly effective, being introduced in the graceful "Sicilienne" of Cerito and St. Leon. We now proceed to give an outline of the plot, which is, we hear, the composition of the fair ballerina herself. The scene opens in Syracuse; a Greek vessel is lying at anchor. Alman (St. Leon), a young sailor, is discontented with his mode of life, and is persuaded by Torbern, a miner, to adopt the more lucrative craft to which he belongs. In this proposal he is seconded by the entreaties of Rosida (Mdlle. Cerito), a beautiful maiden, who loves the young Greek, and dreads seeing him, in the pursuit of his present calling, depart in the vessel which had brought him to Syracuse. Alman consents to remain, and enlists in Torbern's service. Before descending with the latter into the mines, Rosida gives him a talisman, to preserve him from misfortune. No sooner has he disappeared, than she gives way to the most violent grief. Torbern returns, and offers to conduct her to her beloved, providing she adopts a miner's costume. To this proposal she joyfully consents. Meanwhile, Alman has commenced his labours; but a bright vision interrupts them. The Queen of the Mines appears to him; and Torbern tells him that if he will swear to devote himself to her, and never leave the gloomy abode over which she rules, power, riches, and honour will be his. Alman consents; but a fierce struggle ensues; for Rosida, in her male attire, has descended to the mines, and implores him to return with her to the earth. Suddenly sulphureous vapours fill the cavern. The Queen of the Mines is coming to wreak her vengeance on the faithless Alman; but the lovers happily escape. Rosida, however, is doomed to feel the vengeance of her formidable rival; for she has become blind. A pilgrimage to the Chapel of the Madonna is undertaken for her recovery; a miracle restores the maiden's sight; but Torbern interrupts their joy, and reminds Alman of his fatal vow; the Queen of the Mines now exerts her supernatural powers, and Alman is on the point of being engulfed for ever in the cavern's mouth, when he remembers Rosida's gift. He draws forth the amulet; he is at once released, and united to his love. Torbern, foiled in his malignant designs, assumes his real form—that of an evil spirit—and hovers with impotent malice above the rejoicing multitude. The most striking features in this ballet, besides the "Sicilienne" we have just mentioned, are—the "Pas des Mineurs," by Cerito and St. Leon; the "Wolinienne;" a spirited and effective "Pas des Quatre Nations," by the whole corps de ballet; and last, not least, the pastoral "Pas des Villageois." The scenery is remarkable.

Next Thursday her Majesty's Theatre will be most brilliant; but the occasion will not be devoid of regret for the subscribers; for it is the benefit and last appearance but one of the delightful little Viennese. They will appear in the "Pas des Miroirs," the "Pas des Moissonneurs," and a "Pot Pourri," comprising snatches from all their favourite dances. Rossini's beautiful opera "Il Barbiere," is selected for the occasion, and Moriani and Castellan will appear later in the evening. In the ballet department, we shall have all the stars; Cerito, Carlotta Grisi, and Lucile Grahn; Perrot and Saint Leon, &c., &c.

STRAND.

"Saloon and Cellar; or, The Ups and Downs of Life," is the title of a drama, in two acts, written by Mr. Leman Rede, and produced here on Monday evening. Its object is to portray characters in different circles of society—the first act passing at the West-end, and the second, in a coal and wood cellar on Muttonhill, Clerkenwell; and strange circumstances throw together the principal persons moving in these spheres. Mr. Leman Rede has almost patented the right of producing pieces of this description: his "Sixteen String Jack," "Jack in the Water," "Jolly Dick the Lamplighter," and others of the same class, appealing chiefly to the sympathies of the lower orders, were very popular a few seasons back at the Olympic.

In the present instance, Augustus de Mowbray (Mr. H. Hall) is discovered to have been changed at nurse; and, from living in luxury and affluence, is claimed by his real father, Slump (Mr. R. Romer), and taken home to the Mutton-hill cellar, where he is introduced to his brother, Barney (Mr. Cockerill), who steals his clothes to go to the "Grecian" in. Susan (Miss Hamilton), a servant-maid, to whom he is attached, does not desert him in his adversity; and his tutor, who turns out to be the real heir, settles a sufficient income on him to make him comfortable. There is an underplot, in which Rosabelle (Miss Bromley) appears as the betrothed of the tutor, whom she ultimately marries.

This is an outline of the plot, which, it will be seen, affords incident for several amusing situations; but it might have been much better acted. Mr. Hall should have performed Slump, and the jeune premier was rather a heavy gentleman for a lover. A valet, represented by Mr. Montgomery, was badly dressed and worse played. Servants do not drawl like theatrical fops, and carry eye-glasses, which they raise to the eye every time they speak, in the old conventional style—nor does anybody else that we can point out. Mr. Cockerill's unmitigated vulgarity in Barney had nothing to redeem it. We must say, however, in justice, that the curtain fell amidst general applause, and the piece was announced for repetition every evening. A cellar-scene, in the second act, is very cleverly arranged; but the room which immediately preceded it was beyond dirty—it was greasy, with long service. After the play, a Mr. Hodges appeared, and tried to sing the Scena in "Der Freischütz." We have seldom heard a more dreary attempt. In the ballet of "The Soldier's Dream," which followed, there was some excellent dancing by Miss James, Miss Waite, and Mr. Harvey; and Mr. Ridgway contributed to the entertainment of the audience by his comic pantomime.

We are afraid, and we state this with regret, for we wish well to all theatrical establishments, that the Strand management is doomed to another lingering, unprofitable career. The present company, with one or two exceptions, is very inefficient, and the reputation of the members entirely esoteric. The theatre can only be conducted successfully by engaging the best actors, and paying the utmost attention to excellence, even in the most minute details, and artistic effect. It is of little use lowering the admission: all who gave eighteenpence will give two shillings, and at the usual prices the house will contain enough to support a proper company, although as the same time its limited size requires the extreme of finesse to be observed in all its departments. Vaudeville and ballet should be the staple entertainments; but, unless they are produced with elegance and care, in the same style of perfection that marked all the pieces brought out at the Olympic, under the management of Madame Vestris, the speculation must prove a failure. Mediocrity is a most fatal characteristic, at the present day, of any undertaking: but when even this point is scarcely attained, the result may be anticipated with tolerable certainty.

ADELPHI.

A very pleasant farce, from the lively pen of Mr. Selby, whom we consider to be one of the safest writers of this class of dramatic productions, was brought out with perfect success at this house on Monday, under the title of "The Irish Dragoon." It abounds in telling situations, and discoveries, mistakes, and sudden entries, of the most laughter-provoking description—so droll that we will not forestal the pleasures of the audience by particularizing them. We will only say that it was received with loud and continuous approbation, that Mr. Hudson played an Irishman capitally, and sang a very pretty serenade, composed for him by Mr. Munyard; and that Mr. Munyard and Mr. F. Mathews were admirable in their respective characters. "Paul Pry," with Wright for the hero, has proved a very attractive revival. It is pleasantly acted throughout, and more especially by Miss Woolgar, who was encored the night we were present in the old favourite, "Cherry Ripe."

SURREY.

A very effective adaptation of Scott's novel, "The Fair Maid of Perth," by Mr. T. Webb, has been produced successfully at this theatre, with the same general excellence in the acting, and attention to the mise en scene, that characterises all the pieces brought out here. Considerable tact has been shown in stringing together the main incidents of the novel, and preserving all the interest of the plot, without wearying the audience by its length; and we can speak in terms of unqualified commendation of the performers' efforts to work out the intentions of the author. The Surrey possesses a very valuable melodramatic corps—possibly, as a whole, the best in London. There is a truthfulness in Mrs. Honner's acting which is extremely effective; she throws herself entirely into every part she undertakes, and can always carry an audience with her, by her intelligence and judgment. Mrs. H. Vining is also a very valuable actress; and Mr. Hughes has strong claims to legitimacy in many points of his performance. His acting as Henry Gow, the Smith of the Wynde, was excellent. The other characters were equally well played. There were combats and processions, morris dances and situations, enough to gratify the most inordinate lover of stage effects; and on the fall of the curtain, the success of the drama was ratified by the hearty approbation of the audience. We have before had occasion to speak of the scenery at this house, by Mr. Brunning. It bears evidence throughout of much artistic skill; which is not only shown in the painting, but in the manner of its disposition on the stage.

Madame Thillon appeared on Monday night at DRURY-LANE, in the "Enchantress," for the second time; and we were glad to find that the frequent cry of "Wolf" had not produced any bad effect, as the house was literally crowded to the ceiling. The opera was immensely applauded throughout, and all the principal performers were called for at the conclusion. Mr. Balfe also bowed his acknowledgments from the orchestra; and Mr. Bunn, in a short speech, introduced his collaborateur, M. St. George, to the British public. Should Madame Thillon's health enable her to fulfil her engagements, the opera promises to have a lucrative career.

We hear a new drama, by Mr. Bourcicault, founded on some passages in the life of the celebrated actress "Peg Woffington," is preparing at the ADELPHI. The heroine will be performed by Miss Woolgar. A new burlesque is also being manufactured by Messrs. Lemon and aBeckett, from the story of "The Fisherman and the Geni," in the "Arabian Nights." The Adelphi will not close until the end of the autumn, Mr. Webster having found the speculation so good as to justify its continuance until then. Much of the success must, however, be attributed to Mr. Buckstone's drama of "The Green Bushes," which kept up the houses until the very last. We believe that authors, hitherto looked upon as useful people about a theatre, in common with the scene-shifters and property man, are beginning to be regarded by our managements as they are in France—as the real pivots upon which the fortunes of the establishments turn.

The first band rehearsal of Mr. Edward Loder's opera—the subject of which is taken from the ballet of "Giselle"—is about to be held at the Princess' Theatre. The part of the Silesain Girl will be entrusted to Madame Dorus Gras. Miss Grant, Mr. Allen, and Mr. Leffler are also included in the cast.

The Belgian Operatic Company have issued the arrangements for their approaching performances at Covent Garden Theatre, under the management of M. Laurent. Report speaks highly of the attainments of this troupe, and their repertoire contains some of the most popular continental operas.

We understand that Mr. Roberts, the late manager of the Strand Theatre, is engaged at several of the American theatres, to give Brother Jonathan a few "notions" of the Polka more than he at present possesses. The President will, no doubt, from the similarity of his name, take a lively interest in the performance.

The vogue of "Cinderella" continues at the LYCEUM. The visitors now are content to look through the doorways of the boxes, rather than go away; and the private boxes are nightly filled with the aristocracy. Some lines, introduced by Mrs. Keeley on Wednesday, relative to the winner of the Derby, were loudly applauded. The six-and-thirty children are about to appear in a new pas, containing some very surprising effects. The authors of the burlesque have every reason to be satisfied, both with the acting and the general excellence of the mise en scene.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Fantastically tangled, the green hills
Are clothed with early blossoms. Through the grass
The quick-eyed lizard rustles, and the bills
Of summer birds sing welcome as ye pass.
Flowers fresh in hue, and many in their class
Implore the pausing step, and with their dyes
Dance to the soft breeze in a fairy mass!
The sweetness of the violets' deep-blue eyes,
Kissed by the breath of Heaven, seems coloured by its skies! BYRON.

Surely here is a sweet picture of the rural life of Spring, and the welcome it offers from

The painted populace who dwell in fields,
And lead ambrosial lives.

It is in seasons and scenes to which the above beautiful lines apply, that the popular sports of this country are chiefly celebrated. With what foreigners are pleased to call the worst climate in the world, England is the only country in the world where rural life is to be met with, accompanied by characteristic occupations and amusements. Without prejudice, may we not be permitted to ask which is most germane to the matter—polking under poplar trees, and eating ices in front of cafés, with the body on one chair and its members on another, or a match at cricket, "a pull" in a wager-boat, or a trip to one of our great Olympics, at Epsom, Ascot, or Goodwood? The former of these has occupied the attention of every sporting circle in Great Britain—if not in the great globe itself—during the current week. The great feature of the meeting—the Derby—will be found dealt with, as it never was before, elsewhere. We write it with regret—nevertheless, we are compelled to write it—much suspicion attaches to its issue. That one, if not more, of the favourites was made safe, is, to all reasonable intents and purposes, beyond dispute. Can any racing man otherwise reconcile Libel's place in the race? Also, it was more than commonly affected by the casualties inseparable from the congregation of a large number of young horses at the post. Old England, for example, was kicked before starting, or he would have been very near winning; and had not the fall of Pam thrown him out of his ground, would he not have won altogether? Alarm was put quite out of it, by the accident to his jockey, who was worse hurt than was at the time supposed. Though won by a dark horse, considerable sums were won and lost upon it, as he was one of Forth's lot, which was speculated about very spiritedly. Among the winners are some who certainly did not merit their good fortune; the Danebury division, threw out largely, it is said. Still, as a whole, the recent anniversary of Epsom Races was a fair average one. The weather was singularly uncertain, Tuesday being summer, and Thursday "winter thorough."

There was an unpleasant episode, of course—the Derby now never passes without one. William Day, the second son of Old England's trainer, and manager of the stable, was tampered with to make the horse safe, by his own confession—if that be worth anything; but the scheme was discovered in time to frustrate it. This affair, treading on the kibes of Samuel Rogers's fraud with Ratan, for last year's Derby, will go far to disturb the popularity of public training establishments. They, certainly, are not quite in keeping with the right turf principle: unless, indeed, it is to be defended on the principle that gentlemen breed their own sons, and send them to be trained at Westminster or Eton.

In aquatics there has not been much doing till to-day, when the R. T. Y. C. have a match. There was, indeed, a regatta on Thursday, at Jersey, in which some yachts of our clubs sailed; but the particulars have not transpired. As a proof that the Chase has lost little of its consideration, it may be stated that at a sale a few days ago at Tattersall's, several hunters sold at prices varying from two to three hundred and fifty guineas each. The week has given existence to nothing of any account in cricket. We have much gratification in announcing that the prospects of the Brighton meeting are much more promising this year than they have been for some time.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—To speak of the change in the betting, now that the event is consummated, would be a work of supererogation. Leaving the odds, therefore, to show in what estimation the different favourites were held on the last public day at the "Corner," for the Derby, 1845, we will simply advert to a fracas between Mr. Gully and two persons who are charged by him with having laid enormous prices against Old England, on the strength of a compact entered into with William Day, the jockey, the intent of which compact was, to make the animal safe. The charge was most indignantly repudiated, the accused parties boldly asserting that they knew the horse was good for nothing, and that they were prepared to cover their bets; in fact, one of them absolutely posted £20,000. There was no getting over this, and the matter dropped—for the present. We presume it will come before the Stewards.

DERBY

5 to 2 agst Idas	22 to 1 agst Old England	50 to 1 agst Laird o' Cockpen (t)
4 to 1 —— J. Day's lot	25 to 1 —— Fuzbos	50 to 1 —— Jinglepot
6 to 1 —— Weatherbit	28 to 1 —— Kedger	50 to 1 —— Mentor
7 to 1 —— Alarm	33 to 1 —— Merry Monarch	66 to 1 —— Wood Pigeon (t)
7 to 1 —— The Libel (t)	40 to 1 —— Worthless	66 to 1 —— Cobweb colt (t)
17 to 1 —— Pantasa	40 to 1 —— Columbus	66 to 1 —— Miss Whip e (t)
20 to 1 —— Pam	40 to 1 —— Annandale (t)	200 to 1 —— Desperation
20 to 1 —— Doleful

OAKS.

5 to 1 agst Lancashire Witch	10 to 1 agst Maid of Orleans	20 to 1 agst Plaudit
5 to 1 —— Lady Wildair	16 to 1 —— Refraction	40 to 1 —— Fickle Wild Rose
9 to 1 —— Hope	20 to 1 —— Venus

EPSOM RACES.—TUESDAY.

The Craven Stakes of 10 sovs each.

Lord Chesterfield's Knight of the Whistle, aged	..	..	..	..		1
Colonel Cradock's Pagan, aged	..	..	..	..		2

The Woodcote Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 50 added.

Lord Bentinck's Cherokee	..	..	..	..	(Nat)	1
Mr. John Day's The Hero	..	..	..	..		2

Won easy by a length.

The Manor Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 40 added.

Mr. Dockeray's Dalesman, 4 yrs.	..	..	..	(Buckle)		1
Mr. T. Dawson's Montgomerie, 3 yrs.	..	..	..	..

WEDNESDAY.

THE DERBY STAKES.

Mr. Gratwicke's the Merry Monarch	..	..	..	..		1
Mr. A. Johnstone's Annandale	..	..	..	..		2

Won by a length.

The Epsom Stakes of 5 sovs. each, with 35 added.

Mr. T. Dawson's b c Live-and-Let-Live	..	..	..	..		1
Mr. Hook's b f Wild Rose, 3 yrs	..	..	..	..		2

The Walton Stakes of 5 sovs. each, with 35 added.

Mr. Phillimore's ro f Physalis, 4 yrs	..	..	..	..		1
Lord G. Bentinck's br f Moonshine, 3 yrs	..	..	..	..		2

The Burgh Stakes of 5 sovs. each, with 35 added.

Mr. Shelley's b c Prince of Wales, 4 yrs	..	..	..	..		1
Mr. Phillimore's ro f Physalis, 4 yrs	..	..	..	..		2

THURSDAY

The Epsom Four Year Old Stakes of 50 sovs. each.

Mr. Ford's b c Qui Tam by Elis	..	..	..	walked over

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs. each.

Lord G. Bentinck's br f Moonshine, 3 yrs	..	..	..	..		1
Mr. Hook's b f Wild Roe. 3 yrs	..	..	..	..		2

All ran but Montgomerie—winner claimed.

The Surrey Cup (handicap), or piece of plate of 200 sovs.

Mr. Barnard na Croton Oil, 4 yrs, 7st 3lb	..	..	..	..		1
Mr. F. A. Millbank's The Wreck	..	..	..	..		2

Seven ran—won by a head.

FRIDAY.

The Oaks Stakes of 50 sovs each. 129 subs.

Duke of Richmond's Refraction	..	..	..	(Bell)		1
Mr. R. Bennett's Hope	..	..	..	(Marlow)		2
Major Yarburgh's Miss Sarah	..	..	..	(Holmes)		3
Lord Chesterfield's Lady Wildair	..	..	(Whitehouse)			4

Won by two lengths. 21 started.

The Members' Plate of 50 sovs. Heats.

Mr. J. Thompson's b f The Wreck	..	..	..	..		1
Mr. Dockeray's Dalesman, 4 yrs	..	..	..	..		2

The Derby and Oaks Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 40 added.

Mr. T. Dawson's Live and Let Live, 4 yrs.	..	..	(Lye)			1
Mr. Hook's Wild Roe, 3 yrs, 6st 8lb.	..	..	(Treen, jun.)			2

CRICKET.

THE MARYLEBONE CLUB v. THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.—The annual match between the Marylebone Cricket Club and the University of Oxford was played at Oxford on Thursday and Friday, last week, when there was a different result than that which followed the contest of last year. The match of 1844 was won by the University by five runs, whilst this year the Marylebone Club were the victors by four wickets. Last season the respective scores were—The University, 67 and 63; this year 76 and 42. The Marylebone Cricket Club, upon the former occasion, marked 43 and 82; this year, 75 and 44.

TROTTING MATCH AGAINST TIME.—An extraordinary horse, of the sort, having been engaged for the last two years in drawing a bricklayer's cart, belonging to a respectable tradesman at Eton, was backed two months ago, to trot five miles in seventeen minutes for £50; it being left to the option of the owner whether it should be ridden or driven. The match came off on Monday evening on Hartford-bridge-flat, a beautifully level five miles of road, near Blackwater. The five miles were performed in 17 minutes and 25 seconds, the backers of time thus winning, and to a very large amount.

AQUATICS.

SIX-OARED BOAT RACE AT WINDSOR.—The annual six-oared boat race between the gentlemen residing in Tutors' houses and those in Dames', at Eton College, came off on Monday evening. The following were the crews:—

TUTORS.	DAMES.
Mr. Freemayne, stroke	Mr. Adlington, stroke
Boughton	Talfourd
Butler	Richards
Watkins	Spencer
Bunny	Luttrell
Sutherland	Fellowes
Shaw Stuart, steerer.	Lawford, steerer.

Mr. Luttrell, the captain of the boats, started them at about half-past six—the Dames' boat being on the Eton side of the river. Shortly after the start, the Dames' boat drew ahead rapidly, and led all the way to Upper-hope, where the Tutors attempted to bump them, but failed, and this gave the Dames a decided advantage, and they went round the rushes and won by about fourteen boats' length. The next boat race will be on the 6th of June, about half-past 6, when the Double Sculling Sweepstakes will take place.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS, RECENTLY DECEASED.

MRS. JOHN PHILIP KEMBLE.

This lady, whose death took place at Leamington on the 13th inst., was the widow of the great tragedian, John Philip Kemble. Like the relict of David Garrick, she very long survived the celebrated actor to whom she had been united, her life extending to the age of almost 90 years. She was, probably, the oldest member of the theatrical profession, in which she had entered in very early youth, when Mr. Garrick was still at its head. She was the daughter of Mr. Hopkins, the prompter of Drury-lane Theatre. As an actress she enjoyed much reputation. She was first married to Mr. Brereton, a performer of fine person, and some talent. Not many years after his decease she became, on the 8th of December, 1783, the wife of Mr. Kemble. The account of their wedding day is rather characteristic of the bridegroom. After they were married in the morning, Mrs. Bannister, who accompanied the bride to church, asked where they intended to eat their wedding dinner. Kemble had made no particular arrangement on this important occasion, and said he did not know—at home he supposed. On this information, Mrs. Bannister engaged them to dine with her, in Frith-street, Soho. Here Kemble came rather after the appointed time. He took his share in the family party in perfect good humour, but without the appearance of anything out of the way having happened. After dinner, the bride, Mrs. Kemble, and her host, Mr. Bannister, went to the theatre to act the parts of Belcour and Louisa in the "West Indian," and Gradus and Miss Doiley in "Who's the Dupe?" During their absence, Kemble remained in the drawing-room amusing himself at play with the children; and at the time the performances were to terminate, he went to the theatre and brought his wife home to the house in Caroline-street, Bedford-square, which he had prepared for her. So odd a bridal proved, nevertheless, a very happy marriage.

Mrs. Kemble ever remained fondly and proudly attached to her husband, who, at all times, delighted in her society: she attended his death-bed at Lausanne, in 1823; and she is spoken of in the highest terms in his will, by which he left her in very easy circumstances. Returning after his decease to England, Mrs. Kemble took up her abode at Leamington; and until the last year, when her frame began to decay, her hospitable residence was the resort of all the eminent persons who visited that place. She was a thoroughly good and charitable woman. The poor of the neighbourhood had a liberal friend in her. Her lively conversation, her long knowledge of the world, and her well-stored memory, which, like her other faculties, remained unimpaired by her great age, made her to the last a highly agreeable and popular member of society. By her will, Mrs. Kemble leaves the larger portion of her property to Mr. Charles Kemble and his children. She bequeaths the piece of plate presented to her husband on his retirement from the stage to Mr. G. Siddons, the only surviving son of the great heroine of the drama; and Sir Thomas Lawrence's admired portrait of Mr. Kemble in plain clothes is her legacy to the Earl of Aberdeen. Mrs. Kemble's remains were interred in the Guy's Cliff family vault, in the High Church, Warwick.

THE COUNTESS SURVILLIERS, WIDOW OF JOSEPH BONAPARTE.

When the English took possession of Corsica, Joseph Bonaparte, the eldest brother of Napoleon, retired from that island to the continent, and there, in 1794, married a daughter of Monsieur Clari, one of the richest capitalists in Marseilles. Joseph afterwards became King of Naples, King of Spain, a citizen of the United States, and, lastly, a private gentleman in England. Mademoiselle Clari, by this alliance within the circle of the Napoleon destiny, subjected herself, of course, to the same ups and downs of fortune as her husband; but so retiring was she, so completely occupied with domestic duties and affections, that her name scarcely once occurs in the whole Imperial history. Without one atom of pride in her prosperity, she bore her adversity with equanimity and resignation; her good humour and benevolence never changed. The royal widow died at Florence on the 7th of last April.

COLONEL SKELTON.

This gallant officer had served with distinguished valour and ability throughout the whole Peninsular War, and lost his arm at the siege and capture of St. Sebastian. He served also, in 1814, in Canada, and subsequently, for twenty years, in the East Indies. He was second in command throughout the disastrous campaign of Affghanistan, under Major-General Elphinstone. Colonel Skelton's death, the consequence of a melancholy accident, happened at Dublin. He was at the time riding a friend's horse, and had caused the usual bridle and bit of the animal to be altered; the horse in consequence became uneasy, and the Colonel loosened, and then endeavoured to shorten his hold; but, being embarrassed, in consequence of having only one arm, he could not effect his purpose before the animal ran off, and, throwing its rider, fell upon him, and in doing so trod upon his breast-bone. The unfortunate gentleman was immediately taken to the Richmond Barracks, where he lingered for four days, and died on the 13th instant.

POLICE.

THE LIFE OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON ENDANGERED.—The Duke of Wellington attended last Saturday at the MARLBOROUGH-STREET Police-court, for the purpose of preferring a charge of furious driving, whereby his life was endangered, against Henry Woods, driver of one of the Fulham carriers' carts.—His Grace having been sworn said: I was walking, on Tuesday last, between two and three o'clock, in Park-lane, on the left hand side, going out of Piccadilly, and when near the Duchess of Gloucester's house, a very heavy four wheeled cart passed me. I endeavoured to cross the lane, to get to the pavement on the other side, under the protection of this heavy cart. I got as far as the right hand wheel of the cart, keeping the cart at my left hand, when I found myself struck on the shoulder, and knocked forward. It was a severe blow, and I found it had been given by another cart, the driver of which did not attempt to give me warning by calling out till he had struck me. I did not fall; if I had I must have been under the wheels of both carts. Now, I have no further complaint to make against the man at the bar, who drove the cart, than that he was going at such a monstrous pace, that he had no control over his horse; indeed, he came along so fast, that he got the whole length of Park-lane, without my having perceived him; and the pace he was going at was such, that it was impossible he could stop his horse. This is my complaint; and I bring it forward on public grounds, because I think it is not right that carriages should go along the public streets at this great rate. The cart by which I was struck, was a heavy, tilted cart; the driver was under the tilt. My groom was behind with my horses, and I called him and desired him to follow the cart. My groom trotted as hard as he could, but he was unable to overtake the cart until he had got as far as South-street. This will prove the rapid pace at which the driver of the cart was going.—The defendant said he was truly sorry at what had occurred, but he declared the whole circumstance was accidental. He saw a gentleman about to cross the road, and he called out to warn him, but he was not aware that he had touched any one. He was not going at very great speed, for his horse was an old one, and could not accomplish more than seven miles an hour, and at the time when he passed his Grace, he was going up hill. His attention was directed to the vehicles in the carriage road, and this prevented him noticing what was doing on the foot-path.—The evidence of the Duke was corroborated by a Mr. Hall.—Mr. Hardwick, the magistrate, said it was evident the defendant was driving at a furious rate, and he should treat the case as one of assault, which was clearly proved. He should, therefore, fine him £4 or one month's imprisonment. The defendant was then locked up.

A MAN CHARGED WITH ATTEMPTING TO MURDER HIS WIFE.—At SOUTHWARK Police Office, on Tuesday, Evelyn Naughton, a carpenter, a man of dissipated appearance, was charged with committing a desperate assault on Hannah, his wife, by striking her on the head with a poker, by which her life is considered in danger. It appeared that the poor woman (not more than thirty years of age) had been separated from her husband, who had been confined in Horsemonger lane prison for assaulting her, and from whence he had been discharged only a few days, was placed by her sister in a small way of business, with a view to obtain a livelihood, at No. 114½, Blackfriars-road, occupying a shop and parlour only, where she sold cigars and other trifles. The husband, finding this out, and, it is believed, knowing of the absence of the sister, who had gone to visit some friends near Judd street, went to the shop about nine o'clock on Monday night, and, entering the parlour, seized a poker, and commenced his murderous attack, striking her violently over the temple and back part of the head with such force as to bend the poker nearly double. In his victim's efforts to defend herself the bones of her arms and fingers were broken, besides other injuries inflicted. The cries of "Murder!" and "Oh, save me!" having been heard by a person who was passing, he rushed in and grappled with the assailant, and other persons assisted to remove the woman, who had become insensible. It was found that she had sustained such severe injuries as to render the case not only highly dangerous, but almost hopeless, and Mr Smith, a surgeon, directed her immediate removal to Guy's Hospital. Mr. Traill asked the prisoner if he wished to say anything on the subject of the charge, that his wife was in such a dangerous state, owing to the outrageous nature of the assault, that she was unable to attend to give her evidence. The prisoner, who seemed to be very much depressed on hearing the dangerous condition of his wife, and stood trembling at the bar, said that at present he had no desire to make any defence. He was remanded.

CHARGE OF ATTEMPTED MURDER.—At BOW-STREET on Tuesday a labouring man, named Martin Connor, somewhat advanced in years, was charged with cutting the throat of Jane Kelly by means of a razor, with intent to kill her. The prosecutrix and the prisoner lived together, in Charles-street, Drury-lane, and had gone home drunk at a late hour on Monday night. The policeman on the beat (25 F) was directed by a woman to enter their lodgings at about half-past one, and on doing so he saw the woman lying on the bed, with her throat cut and bleeding profusely—the man being by her side. On seeing the constable the prisoner said, "If I have done it, I'll die for it;" but he subsequently declared that she had inflicted the wound herself in a fit of drunkenness. The woman spoke in an excited manner, desiring the officer to take the man away for he had done it. The prisoner was taken into custody accordingly, and the wretched woman was conveyed to St. Giles's workhouse.—Mr. Bennet, medical officer of the Union, described the wounds, which were two in number, one of them being an inch and a half in length, close to the wind pipe, but escaping the important vessels.—A lodger in the house proved that the man and woman reached home very drunk. He heard a noise with them, and was asked by the prisoner to go into the room, as she (the prosecutrix) was endeavouring to cut his throat.—Mr. Jardine thought it desirable to defer the inquiry until the woman was able to attend and give evidence. He therefore remanded the prisoner.

MR. HENRY BETTY.—This gentleman re-appeared at Worcester, on Monday, in Othello. He appears to be a great favourite in that city. The Worcestershire Chronicle says, "Mr. Betty's conception of the character was truthful and vigorous, holding a mean between the rather outré Shakspeareism of Macready, and the monotonous conventionalism of Charles Kean. His drawing was elaborate and minute; the characteristics of his execution were finish and delicacy. The brief soliloquy in the murder scene, beginning, 'It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul,' was admirably delivered."

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The arrivals of English wheat up to our market this week having been again very moderate, the show of samples of that grain here to-day was small. Selected qualities commanded a steady sale, at fully Monday's quotations; but the middling and inferior kinds were a slow inquiry. In fine foreign wheat rather more business was transacted, at extreme quotations. The best parcels of barley moved off steadily, other kinds slowly, at late rates. Malt was a dull sale, yet prices were generally supported. Oats, beans, peas, and flour were quite as dear.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 3850; barley, 1310; oats, 2330 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 10,950 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 3790; barley, 4410; oats, 13,400 quarters. Flour, 4560 sacks; malt, 3360 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 47s to 54s; ditto, white, 49s to 57s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s to 54s; ditto, white, 52s to 56s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distilling, 26s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 56s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s, potatoe ditto, 23s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 33s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Town made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk, Stockton, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 28 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 38s to 43s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 24s, oats, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s; beans, 24s to 29s; peas, 28s to 32s, per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to —; Baltic, 18s to— per barrel

Seed Market.—We have had a very inactive demand for all kinds of seeds since our last report, and prices have been with difficulty supported.

Linseed, English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 45s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 44s. Hempseed 35s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 18s per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 12s to 14s. Tares, 6s 6d to 7s 6d per bushel. English Rapeseed, £24 to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s; ditto, foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover seed, red, 45s to 50s: extra, 52s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5d to 6½d, per 4lb loaf

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 45s 9d; barley, 30s 1d; oats, 21s 11d; rye, 31s 0d; beans, 37s 5d; peas, 37s 4d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 45s 10d; barley, 30s 10d; oats, 21s 6d; rye, 30s 8d; beans, 36s 5d; peas, 36s 8d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 8s; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 6s 6d; peas, 6s 6d.

Tea.—Since our last, about 18,000 packages of tea have been imported into London On the whole, rather more firmness is apparent in the private contract market, and prices are steadily supported.

Sugar.—We have had a better demand for West India sugars, at an impovement on previous rates of quite 6d. per cwt., and this too, notwithstanding the large supplies in warehouse. Mauritius has sold readily, at 6d to 1s per cwt more money; while the value of Bengal has been supported in every instance. The market had been nearly cleared of refined goods, at 69s 6d to 70s for brown, and 70s to 71s. for standard lumps. The imports are on a liberal scale.

Coffee.—In West India, a fair business is doing, at full prices, while Ceylon has sold readily, at 1s per cwt. more money, good ordinary having sold at 46s to 47s per cwt. Foreign coffee has moved off slowly, yet we can notice no material alteration in value.

Provisions.—We have to report a very steady demand for foreign butter, at an advance of from 2s to 4s per cwt. Fine Friesland is now selling at from 98s to 100s, and Kiel, 94s to 98s per cwt. Several parcels of new Irish butter have been received, and sold as follows:—Waterford, 94s to 96s; Limerick, 94s to 95s; and Cork, 75s to 92s per cwt. A large business has been doing in bacon, at fully previous rates. Prime Waterford sizeable, is selling at 44s to 46s, and heavy, 40s to 43s per cwt. Other kinds of provisions rule about stationary.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 10s; useful ditto, £4 12s to £5 3s; fine upland ditto, £5 4s to £5 10s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6 6s; oat straw, £1 18s to £2; wheat straw, £2 to £2 3s per load.

Coals.—Carr's Hartley, 18s; Hasting's Hartley, 18s; Holywell Main, 16s 6d: Eden Main, 16s 9d; Belmont, 17s 3d; Haswell, 18s 9d; Pemberton, 17s; Tees, 17s 6d per ton.

Hops (Friday).—Although the plantation accounts may be considered tolerably favourable, there is rather more business doing in this market, and last week's prices are steadily supported:—Sussex pockets, £7 0s to £8 0s; Wealds, £7 8s to £8 10s; Mid Kents, £7 7s to £8 15s; East Kents, £9 9s to £11 0s; Choice ditto, £11 11s to £13 0s; Mid Kent bags, £7 15s to £8 15s; East Kent ditto, £10 10s to £12 0s.

Wool.—The public sales of wool have passed off remarkably well, nearly the whole of the parcels offered having found buyers, at about previous rates. Several vessels have come in this week from New South Wales.

Potatoes.—Such is the abundance of the supply of potatoes here, that some thousands of tons have been sold to the cow keepers, at from 20s to 30s per ton. All kinds are very dull, at lower figures.

Smithfield (Friday).—The supply of beasts on sale here this morning being rather extensive, we have to report rather a sluggish demand for beef. The primest qualities, however, sold at Monday's prices; but most kinds were 2d per 8lbs lower. There were, in the market, 500 Scots from Scotland, and 90 oxen and cows from Holland. The numbers of sheep were only moderate, while the mutton trade was steady, and previous rates were generally supported. In lambs, a fair average business was doing at late advances; but calves and pigs—though not cheaper—were a dull inquiry. Milch cows sold freely, at from £16 to £19 5s each.

Per 8lbs. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s 0d to 3s 4d; second quality ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime large oxen, 3s 10d to 4s 2d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 4d to 4s 6d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 6d to 4s 0d; second quality ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime coarse woolled sheep, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime Southdowns ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 0d; large coarse calves, 4s 0d to 4s 8d; prime small ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 2d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; neat small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 2d; lambs, 5s 0d to 6s 0d. Suckling calves, 18s 0d to 30s 0d; and quarter old store pigs, 16s 0d to 20s 0d each. Beasts, 834; cows, 116; sheep and lambs, 8360; calves, 351; pigs, 300.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a steady demand here to-day, on the following terms:—

Per 8lbs. by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; middling ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime large ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime small ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; large pork, 2s 10d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; middling ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 4d; prime ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 10d; veal, 4s 0d to 5s 0d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 5s 0d to 6s 0d. ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English Market was dull at the beginning of the week, the closing price of Consols being only 98⅛ for Money. Some uneasines prevails upon the position of affairs in Morocco; the non-ratification of the commercial treaty having affected the price of the French Rentes, as well as depressed the English Market. The Consol Settlement, which took place on Wednesday, was unusually heavy, and Money fetched ⅜ per Cent for Continuations. Prices, at present, do not betray any symptoms of improvement, with the exception of Exchequer Bills, which close at 61s to 63s prem. Bank Stock is 209½; Reduced Three per Cents, 98⅛; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents, 101⅛; Consols for Money, 98⅛; for Account, 99⅛.

The Foreign Market has been flat during the week, with a very limited amount of transactions. The only variation of importance has been in Spanish Five per Cents, which receded to 29 to ⅜ on Tuesday, but have since partially rallied, and close at 29¾. Very little has been done in the Three per Cents, which are about 41⅜ to ⅝. Columbian remains at 15⅜. Mexican on Tuesday quoted 37⅞ to 38⅛, but have since declined to 37⅛. Belgian Four-and-a-Half per Cents are 99. Dutch Two and-a-Half per Cents, 63¾. Four per Cents Certificates, 98¾.

The Share Market betrayed some slight animation at the commencement of the week, from the rejection of the Northumberland Railway and the approval of the Newcastle and Berwick line. The shares in the latter immediately rose 3 per cent.; but, sellers appearing, a reaction of about ¾ per cent. occurred. The Manchester, Buxton, and Ambergate Scrip was sold in the Market for the first time on Tuesday, as well as the Shrewsbury and Trent Valley Union Railway's Scrip: the former was about 4 premium, the latter 1½ to 2. As the settling approaches, business usually becomes more limited, purchases being generally deferred until the new Account. The absence of business for the last day or two has consequently made the Market heavy; and the prices from Paris being reported worse, caused the French lines to slightly suffer. Considerable improvement has again occurred in Great North of England Shares, which closed at 255. The Prospectus of a Railway from Nottingham to Boston has excited considerable attention in the Market, from its intrinsic merits. Boston is the nearest seaport to Nottingham; and a glance at the map will at once point it out as the natural outlet and inlet for the Midland Counties. The arm of the sea that communicates with the centre of the town has recently been deepened and widened, affording unusual facilities for landing and embarking goods with perfect security. Towards the close of the week prices became more brisk, and the last quotations are, Aberdeens, 3⅜; Armagh, Coleraine, and Portrush, 2½; Birmingham and Gloucester, 136; Bristol and Exeter (new), 8¼; Caledonian, 8⅞; Cambridge and Lincoln, 7; Chester and Holyhead, 16½; Churnet Valley, 5½; Direct Northern, 3⅛; Dublin and Galway, 3⅝; Dublin and Mullingar, 4; Eastern Counties, 18; Eastern Counties (new), 4½; Great Western 192; Guildford, Farnham, and Portsmouth, 5¾; Harwich 1¼; Lancaster and Carlisle, 40¾; Birmingham Stock, 248; Croydon, 1-½, Brighton, 64¼; London and York, 3⅞; London, Salisbury, and Yeovil, 2⅞, Manchester and Leeds, 171; Midlands, 188; Newcastle and Berwick, 17½; North British, 23; Norwich and Brandon, 18½; Rugbys, 4⅜; Scottish Midlands, 2; Shrewsburys, &c., 4⅛; South Devon, 22; Dovers, 42¼; Trent Valley and Holyhead Junction, 2½; York and North Midland, 107; Boulogne and Amiens, 8¾; Bordeaux and Toulouse, 2⅜; Do. and Cette, 2⅜; Dijon and Mulhouse, 2¾; Great North of France, 5⅝; Louvain and Jemappe, 4½; Namur and Liege, 5⅛; Orleans and Bordeaux, 10⅝; Paris and Lyons (Lafitte's), 2⅞; Do. (Ganneron's), 2⅝; Strasbourg and Bale, 10½; Paris and Rouen, 42⅜.

SATURDAY MORNING.—The settling in the Share Market progressed tolerably well yesterday. Caledonians rallied a trifle, closing at 9½. In the Consol Market and Foreign House no alteration of consequence has occurred.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, MAY 27.

BANKRUPTS.—R. LEWIS, Ashford, Kent, carman. W. POOLE, sen., Horton Lock, Buckinghamshire, shopkeeper. J. J. BROWN, Bury St. Edmund's, grocer. J. TAYLOR, Bromley, Middlesex, maltster. T. HERNE, Cardiff, draper. G. C. BURNS, Devizes, upholsterer. L. BARNES, Bury, Lancashire, provision-dealer. W. DAVIS, Tentenhall, Staffordshire, butcher.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—R WEBSTER, Edinburgh, solicitor. J. CRAWFORD Port Glasgow, flesher. D. KAY, Leith, merchant. T. THOMSON, Glasgow, clothier. J. OGILVY, Lerwick, merchant. S. M. ROSS, jun., Edinburgh, cattle dealer.

FRIDAY, MAY 30.

WAR-OFFICE, MAY 30.—2nd Regiment of Dragoon Guards: Capt. H. B. Head to be Paymaster, vice W. N. Custance.

1st Regiment of Foot: Lieut. W. K. Allix to be Adjutant, vice Gordon; Assistant Staff Surgeon J. Mee, to be Assistant Surgeon, vice Matthew. 13th: Lieut. F. G. Christie to be Captain, vice Stehelin; Ensign C. W. Hinxman to be Lieutenant, vice Christie; E. Lynch to be Ensign, vice Hinxman. 15th: Captain J. Hay, to be Captain, vice Head. 23rd: Second Lieutenant C. E. Hopton to be First Lieutenant, vice Ellis; A. F. Lord Greenock to be Second Lieutenant, vice Hopton 36th: Major C. Ashmore to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Maxwell; Captain E. R. King to be Major, vice Ashmore; Lieutenant J. Pratt to be Captain, vice King; Cadet H. J. Maclean to be Ensign. 46th: Assistant-Surgeon W. L. Langley, M.D., to be Assistant Surgeon, vice M'Bean. 54th: Cadet W. H. Poulett to be Ensign, vice Coates. 60th: Lieutenant H. F. Williams to be Lieutenant, vice Bailie. 71st: Lieut. W. Hope to be Captain, vice Speer: Ensign F. J. C. Halkett to be Lieutenant, vice Hope; C. F. Smith to be Ensign, vice Halkett. 73d: Capt. E. Ricard to be Captain, vice Freer; Assist.-Surg. J. A. D M'Bean, to be Surg. vice J. Foster, M.D. 75th: Captain D. G. Freer to be Captain, vice Ricard. 79th: Ensign W Forrest to be Lieutenant, vice Hamilton; W. M'Cormick Fairrie to be Ensign, vice Forrest. 81st: Assist.-Surg. G. Taylor to be Surgeon, vice C. Dealy. 87th: Lieut. J. Bailie to be Lieutenant, vice Williams. 92nd: Lieut. A. H. Tatnall to be Adjutant, vice Gleig. 93rd: Assistant Staff Surg. W. G. Swan, M.D., to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Taylor.

HOSPITAL STAFF.—Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals J. Davy, M.D., to be Inspector General of Hospitals in the Windward and Leeward Islands only, vice Hugh Bone, M.D.; Assistant Staff-Surgeon T. Alexander to be Staff Surgeon of the Second Class, vice M'Bride; Assistant-Surgeon J. A Bostock, M.D., to be Assistant-Surgeon to the Forces, vice Alexander; Assistant-Surgeon T P. Matthew to be Assistant-Surgeon to the Forces, vice Mee; W. F. T. Ivey to be Assistant-Surgeon to the Forces, vice Swan.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, May 28.—Royal Regiment of Artillery: Second Captain G. W Bingham to be Captain, vice Berners; First Lieut. G. R. Barker to be Second Captain, vice Bingham; Second Lieut. R. K Freeth to be First Lieutenant, vice Barker.

Corps of Royal Engineers: Capt. and Brevet-Major H J. Savage to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Kelsall; Second Capt. B. S. Stehelin to be Captain, vice Savage; First Lieut. W. G. Hamley to be Second Captain, vice Stehelin; Second Lieut. H. W. Montagu to be First Lieutenant, vice Hamley.

BANKRUPTS.—S. HARRIS and D. REEVE, Minories, London, linen-drapeas. S. W. SCARLE, Upper Gloucester-place, Chelsea, cheesemonger. T. WENHAM, Birmingham, merchant. W. M'ALPINE, Liverpool, tailor.

BIRTHS.

On the 24th inst., the wife of the Rev. Richard Hodgson, of a son.——At Bangor, on the 22nd inst., the lady of E P. Griffiths, Esq., of a son.——On the 27th inst., in Tavistock-square Mrs. Schroder, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At Cleland-house, Lanarkshire, John Dick Lauder, Esq., to Anne, second daughter of North Dalrymple, Esq.——The Rev. Charles Vansittart, to Rosalie Frances, daughter of Hans Busk, Esq.,——The Rev. P. P. Gilbert, to Sophia, daughter of Charles Dumergue, Esq., of Yorkplace, Portman-square.——At Little Portland-street Chapel, Thomas Price, Esq., youngest son of the late Sir Rose Price, Bart., to Anna, second daughter of the late Frederick Hayes Macnamara, Esq.——At Aycliffe, Durham, the Rev. Henry Chaytor, to Sarah, daughter of the late John Stamper, Esq.——Married at Burbage, Wilts, Elizabeth Prime, the daughter of William Bartlett, surgeon, to James Lidderdale, Esq., of Great Bedwyn.——On the 28th of May, at Trinity Church, Southport, Lancashire, the Rev. J. H. Titcombe, M.A., Incumbent of St. Andrews the Less, Cambridge, to Sarah, eldest daughter of John Wood, Esq.

DEATHS.

At Geneva, on the 2nd inst., Captain Richard Harward, R.N., son-in-law of the late Lord Viscount Exmouth.——In Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, Thomas Henry Call, Esq.——On the 23rd inst., in Billiter-street, in the 84th year of his age, Thomas Gillespy, Esq.——Sir Arthur Brooke Falkner, M.D., at Evington near Cheltenham.——At Birmingham, in her 91st year, Mary Capper, a member of the Society of Friends.——At his house, Gloucester-terrace, Regent's-park, David Chambers, Esq., Commander in the Royal Navy.——At 8, Eccleston-street, Sophia, daughter of the late Admiral Sir George Montagu, G.C.B.——In Kennington-lane, Jane, the widow of the late Abraham Young, Esq.——Mrs Mary Anne Mivart, of Lower Brook-street, Grosvenor-square.——In Sussex-square, Hyde-park, George Frederick Arthur Walker, of her Majesty's 43rd Light Infantry.——In New South Wales, Major Frederic Hovenden, formerly of her Majesty's 34th Regiment.——At Dundalk, Lady Emily Straton, in her 72nd year.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF SCOTLAND.

Many of our readers may not be aware that the government of the Church of Scotland resides, first, in "Kirk Sessions," composed of ministers and elders, who meet weekly for the management of parishes; next, of more important meetings of the same officers, to conduct the business of "Presbyteries," or collections of parishes (generally about four); thirdly, in quarterly meetings, known as "Synods;" and, fourthly, in delegates of ministers and elders to the "General Assembly," which meets in Edinburgh during the month of May, in every year, and forms, what may be designated, an Ecclesiastical Parliament.

The Queen being the head of the Scottish, as well as of the English Church, is represented, on these occasions, by some influential nobleman, whom she makes her "Lord High Commissioner;" and ever since the present Administration held office, the Marquis of Bute has been appointed to that distinguished office. As the representative of the Crown, the Lord High Commissioner is surrounded by every attribute of Royalty; and honours are paid to him, by the local authorities, of precisely the same kind as if the Queen herself were present. He holds a court at Holyrood House, where a small establishment of regal officers is still maintained. That over, he goes in state to hear a sermon at the High Church, and afterwards proceeds to the Assembly Hall, to open "the House;" this he does by delivering a letter from her Majesty, which is read by the Clerk of Assembly. He afterwards presides during the discussions, to perform functions not very dissimilar to those of the Speaker of the House of Commons, or the Lord Chancellor in the House of Peers.

These preliminary hints are, perhaps, necessary to a better understanding of the interesting proceedings which commenced in Edinburgh on Wednesday, 21st of May. On that day the Lord High Commissioner arrived at Holyrood, and in the afternoon the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council, proceeded thither in their carriages, for the purpose of presenting the keys of the city to his Grace the Lord High Commissioner, according to ancient custom. They were received in the Throne-room, where the ceremony invariably takes place. This is, however, always a mere preface to the more imposing ceremonies of the morrow. At eleven o'clock on Thursday, the Court was opened but long before that hour, the space before the Palace was filled with carriages bringing the numerous noblemen, gentlemen, ministers, and civil and military officers, who were desirous of being presented. A guard of honour, formed by a company of the 87th Regiment of Royal Irish Fusiliers, and a detachment of the Scots Greys were also in attendance. The entrance of the building was lined with halberdiers in their ancient costume, and servants in state liveries. Within the quadrangle of the Palace, the Fusiliers' band enlivened the scene by playing several favourite pieces of music.

Though, as may be expected, the ceremony of presentation is much less formal than that to actual Royalty, yet it is very similar. Mounting the Grand Staircase, the presentee gives one of his cards to a servant at the door of the Throne-room. This entered, he finds the Lord High Commissioner—not on the throne, but standing within an enclosure, and attended by his Purse-bearer, and two pages, attired in dresses of the olden time. He then gives another card to a Gentleman in Waiting, who announces his name; he then walks forward, bowing to his Lordship, and passes on.

One practice is followed which must be regarded as a decided improvement upon that of other Courts; the Purse-bearer invites every gentleman who has been presented, to dinner.

This ceremony was concluded at about 12 o'clock, when the representative of Royalty descended to his carriage, where he was received with a flourish, performed by the Scottish band of Crown trumpeters. As the band of the Scots Greys struck up "God Save the Queen" at the same moment, a confusion of sounds was created, far less harmonious than loyal. The state-coach, drawn by six horses, and guarded by a number of cavalry soldiers, now moved off, forming the grand attraction of a procession which included other vehicles, containing the Lord Provost, all the city officers, Sir Neil Douglas (Commander of her Majesty's Forces in Scotland) and Staff, headed by the band of the Greys, and accompanied by a number of heralds, halberdiers, town-officers, and policemen. The streets were lined with foot and horse soldiers to keep off the crowd, which extended along the whole line taken by the procession. The following glowing account of the scene is quoted from the Edinburgh Advertiser :—

"At the Waterloo-bridge, in front of the Register Office, North Bridge-street, and the High-street especially, the crowd fully exceeded that of last year, while the balconies, terraces, and every available eminence, that could command a view of the pageant, was thickly studded by well-dressed parties of both sexes. When the cavalcade entered the High-street, the scene was particularly beautiful. The lofty ancient buildings on each side, with their windows filled with gay [illegible] dense mass of people [illegible] reet, [illegible]ng about, [illegible] on to w[illegible] [illegible] the f[illegible] Cross, with their prancing steeds, and shining armour, sparkling in the uninterrupted brilliancy of the [illegible]—together with the exhilarating [illegible] sounds of the military band for the [illegible]ng cortège —all combined to [illegible] once varied, [illegible], and grand.

His Grace arrived at the High Church at half-past twelve o'clock. The Very Rev. Principal Lee, Moderator of last General Assembly, preached from Isaiah, chap. xxxiii., verse 20—"Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities," &c. The eloquent and impressive sermon of the Rev. Principal was attentively listened to by a large assemblage.

Divine Service having been concluded, his Grace proceeded in his state carriage, to the New Assembly, Hall : this is situated higher up the hill on which the High-street stands, and at the head of that part of it called the Lawn-market. It is a fine building, recently erected —indeed, this is the first occasion on which it has been put to its destined use. The Lord High Commissioner having taken his seat on the throne, a prayer was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Lee, Principal of the Edinburgh University, after which the [illegible] Psalm was sung. The [illegible] business was now proceeded with, and began by electing the "moderator," or Chairman, the choice falling upon Dr. Alexander [illegible], Professor of Divinity in the College of the University. The High Commissioner then produced the Queen's letter—a [illegible] with the [illegible] affairs of the Church of Scotland; and corresponding, in many respects, to her Majesty's speech [illegible] the Queen's Legislature. [illegible] of the Church Assembly [illegible] following morning at eleven o'clock, and will continue to [illegible] evening [illegible], a short [illegible] can conveniently be found [illegible] enough to go through such kirk business as may have accumulated during the past year. It then breaks up, to meet again in the May following.

Not the least [illegible] day's proceedings [illegible]. At six o'clock, [illegible] missioner received [illegible] ner, in the Great Gallery at Holyrood, celebrated for being hung with portraits of 111 Scottish Kings ; most of whom, historians tell us, had no other existence than the painter (De Witt) gave to them on the walls of this lengthy apartment. In this room, the sixteen Representative Peers of Scotland are elected, at the summoning of every new Parliament. On the present occasion, it was covered with dining apparatus sufficient for the accommodation of 200 guests; but only about 160 attended. The bill of fare was ample, with the names of the French dishes curiously translated into English, for the benefit, we suppose, of the baillies and country gentlemen of the old school. With the dessert came the usual toasts, all of which were drank seated, (except that of "The Queen," when the company rose,) and in silence; this custom being thought, perhaps, better suited to the grave and reverend characters of the majority of the guests than the more cheerful and noisy mode. At the end of the evening, however, a bit of enthusiasm burst forth, which assuredly could not have been repressed in the chilliest assembly. The noble Marquis who presided has recently entered the bonds of Hymen, having married the Lady Hastings, sister of the late much-lamented Lady Flora. On the health of the Marchioness being proposed, the company rose en masse, and, from their long-sealed lips, there burst forth a full complement of cheers. His Lordship returned thanks in the only speech of the evening, and that was short, though pithy and elegant. This concluded the "festivities" and the day's proceedings, at the sober hour of nine o'clock.

The expenses incurred by the Lord High Commissioner at each General Assembly are provided for by the Crown—£2000 per annum being allowed him to cover them.

"LIGHT."—PAINTED BY JENKINS—FROM THE NEW WATER-COLOUR SOCIETY'S EXHIBITION.

LIGHT.

BY JOSEPH J. JENKINS.

FROM THE NEW WATER-COLOUR EXHIBITION.

One of the best pictures in the New Water-Colour Exhibition, in Pall Mall, is a picture called "Light," by Joseph J. Jenkins, with a motto from Moore :—

At dawn, [illegible]
Droops with a [illegible] its head

But this de[illegible] is equally capricious and [illegible]. The picture [illegible] a [illegible] girl.—her [illegible], [illegible] her [illegible], [illegible] brushing [illegible] away." She is [illegible], in dress, a line in [illegible] Jonson's exquisite [illegible] poems:—

Hair loosely flowing—robes as free; and may be said, without any great licence of meaning, to illustrate, by her looks and action, a pretty sentiment in one of Shenstone's ballads:—

She [illegible] bade me adieu,
But [illegible] she bade me return.

Mr. Jenkins may have had some such meaning in his mind ; he has certainly painted a very charming picture.

THE LORD HIGH COMMISSIONER ENTERING THE NEW ASSEMBLY HALL.

PRESENTATION OF THE KEYS, AT HOLYROOD.

RBY."—DRAWN BY LEECH.

COUNTRY NEWS.

MEETING OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION AT CAMBRIDGE.—The forthcoming meeting of this association at Cambridge, in June, will, there is no doubt, be a very brilliant and attractive one. The attendance of foreigners of distinction, will, it is said, be larger than on any previous occasion. On Wednesday, the 18th of June, the general committee will meet at one o'clock, for the election of sectional officers, &c. From Thursday, the 19th, to Wednesday, the 25th of June inclusive, the committees of sections will meet daily, at ten precisely; and the sections will meet from Thursday to Tuesday, at eleven precisely. General evening meetings will be held on Thursday, the 19th, and Wednesday, the 25th, at eight o'clock. A room will be provided for the reception of philosophical apparatus, and specimens of natural and artificial products, which may be brought for the purpose of illustrating particular communications, or for exhibition to the members generally.

CATHOLIC PROCESSION AND FESTIVAL IN NOTTINGHAM.—On Sunday Nottingham presented one of the most novel spectacles which the annals of this country afford. This was none other than the celebration of the festival of Corpus Christi by the Catholic body, in their new and splendid edifice of Saint Barnabas, with all the pomp and display which the highest prosperity of the Catholic ascendancy records. The interest it excited, the thronging crowds who hurried to view the spectacle, the various forms and ceremonies adopted, the immense expense which had been incurred, the decorations, the gorgeous dresses, the splendid banners, the magnificent trimmings of the altar, and the unequalled pomp of the pageant in any religious celebration of late, produced a very strong sensation.

CURIOUS ELOPEMENT AT NORWICH.—Last week a case which excited great interest was brought before the magistrates at the Guildhall, Norwich. Charles Fiddiment Wells, a groom, lately in the service of the Hon. and Rev. R. Wilson, of Ashwelthorp, was charged with having obtained a license, under false pretences, by virtue of which he had married Miss Sheppard, a ward in Chancery, a girl of 15, heiress to a large fortune, and the daughter of Mrs. Wilson, of Ashwelthorpe, by a former husband, who had served the office of High Sheriff of Suffolk, and died suddenly, during his year of office. It appeared that on the previous Friday defendant obtained a license in Norwich, and engaged a post chaise, to convey himself and the young lady from Ashwelthorpe. Early on Sunday morning Miss Sheppard left her parent's residence, taking with her only a bundle of clothes, and, by appointment, met the defendant, a young man 23 years of age, and drove off with him to the Two Quarts public house, Norwich, where they arrived about six o'clock in the morning. They were married by the Rev. Mr. Goodwin, at St. Benedict's church, before nine o'clock. In the meantime the young lady had been missed by her governess, and information being given to Mr. Harvey, one of the Hon. and Rev. R. Wilson's tenants, he soon traced the fugitives, the same morning, to the very public house where they were. The young lady positively refused to leave her husband, but the latter was apprehended, and, after a long hearing of the case, remanded. On Tuesday the Hon. and Rev. R. Wilson, who appeared to be strongly affected, stated that he declined to prosecute further under the warrant, defendant having been served with a citation from the Court of Chancery to appear before that Court, to answer for his conduct. He was then discharged.—[The young man Wells was brought before Vice Chancellor Wigram on Thursday, in obedience to an order of Court, which had been made on an ex-parte statement, alleging that he had abducted Miss Agnes Sheppard, of Ashwelthorpe, Norfolk, an infant under the age of 16, and a ward of Chancery. Wells's counsel read an affidavit which he had made in answer to the statements upon which the order had been granted. He therein denied that he had been guilty of the abduction of the young lady, but declared that the overtures of love had been made by Miss Sheppard herself. His Honour referred the matter to the Master, and Wells was removed in the custody of one of the tipstaffs of the court.]

THE LATE DUEL AT GOSPORT.—Mr. Seton, the gentleman who was wounded in the duel near Portsmouth, is not yet considered out of danger. It is said the appearance of the wound has not been quite so satisfactory; still the surgeons have great hopes of his ultimate recovery. Mr. Pym, Second Lieutenant of Marines, who was the friend of Lieutenant Hawkey, is only 21 years of age; his father is now a lieutenant, commanding the Spider, 6 (schooner), on the coast of South America. These parties, as well as Lieut. Rowles, the other second, are said to be on the Continent.

PROVIDENT CLERKS' ASSOCIATION.—The first election of two annuitants to partake of the benefits of this newly established excellent institution took place on Wednesday morning, and the event was celebrated in the evening by a public dinner at the London Tavern. Upwards of 250 gentlemen sat down to dinner. Mr. Martin T. Smith presided, his brother, Abel Smith, Esq., M.P., being, through illness, prevented from taking upon himself the duties of the chair. The dinner having been discussed, the usual loyal and patriotic toasts were proposed and duly honoured. The chairman proposed, "Success to the Provident Clerks' Mutual Benefit Association." The toast was received with loud acclamations. Other toasts followed, which were duly honoured. A list of subscriptions was read, amounting to upwards of £1000.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE. — Proprietor and Manager, Mr. WM BATTY.—Crowded Audiences.—Confirmed Success of the New Spectacle, in which the performance of the Arab Horse, trained by Mons. Tournaire, is pronounced the greatest wonder of the age.—On MONDAY NEXT, and During the Week, the New Grand Spectacle of THE ARABIAN GODOLPHIN, or the Race Horse of the Desert. SCENES IN THE CIRCLE, by Mons. Tournaire's French Troupe of Equestrians. To conclude with a favourite Farce.—A GRAND MORNING PERFORMANCE on THURSDAY, 5, and THURSDAY, 12th of JUNE.—Box-office open from Eleven till Five.

COLOSSEUM. LONDON BY NIGHT, pronounced by the Press, and every Visitor, as the most marvellous and extraordinary Triumph of Art that has ever been achieved in this or any other country. "It is a new era in Art!" "'Tis not a Picture; it is Nature!"—This most novel Exhibition has been projected and carried out by Mr. Wm. Bradwell, and painted by Mr. Danson and Mr. Telbin. Admittance, 5s.; Children, under Twelve, Half-price; which will include the Stalactite Caverns at Adelsberg; the Chalet, with the sublime effect of Mont Blanc, and real Mountain Torrent, by Night; the Glyptotheca and Refreshment Saloon most brilliantly Illuminated, forming a Promenade perfectly unique. Open from Nine till Eleven every Evening. Entrance in Albany-street only, through the splendid new Corridor, lighted by twenty-six colossal tripods.

COLOSSEUM, REGENT'S PARK.—Under the Patronage of Her Most Gracious MAJESTY and His Royal Highness PRINCE ALBERT.—Six Exhibitions in One, pronounced by the Press and every Visitor, to be the most magnificent and perfect Chef-d'œuvre ever presented to the world. The wonders at this gigantic Establishment consist of the Glyptotheca, or Museum of Sculpture, filled with works of some of the finest artists; Mont Blanc, Mer de Glace (painted by Mr. Danson), and real Mountain Torrent, superb Conservatories, and gorgeous Gothic Aviary, External Promenades, Classic Ruins, and Fountains; the Panorama of London, repainted by Mr. E. T. Paris.—Open from Ten till Six o'clock. Admittance, 3s. Children under 12, Half-price The Stalactite Caverns at Adelsberg ("the most magnificent of all the temples which Nature has built for herself in the regions of night"), 1s. extra. The whole Exhibition designed and remodelled by Mr. Wm Bradwell.

M. JULLIEN'S CONCERT MONSTRE.—On FRIDAY, JUNE 20, 1845, at the ROYAL SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.—Mons. JULLIEN has the honour to announce that he will give a CONCERT MONSTRE, on the same scale of grandeur as those conducted by him in Paris, at the Jardin Turc, Casino, and Champs Elysees, at the Fete of Louis Philippe, and other great occasions. The Orchestra will consist of 300 Instrumental Performers, comprising the principal English and Foreign Artistes in the Metropolis, and presenting the greatest Congres Musical ever assembled in this country. A Colossal Orchestra will be erected for the occasion, at the southern extremity of the Gardens, where an extensive Promenade has recently been opened, capable of accommodating ten thousand persons. Further particulars duly announced. Tickets to be had at the Gardens; the principal Libraries, Musicsellers, and of M JULLIEN, Depot General de Musique Dansante, 214, Regent-street.—Tickets obtained previous to the 13th, 2s. 6d.; entrance at the doors, 5s.

PANORAMA OF NANKING.—Just opened, at the PANORAMA ROYAL, Leicester-square, a VIEW OF NANKING, the Ancient Capital of the Celestial Empire, with its unrivalled PORCELAIN TOWER. Comprising also the Yang-Tse-Keang River, with her Majesty's Ships at Anchor; the various Bridges and Canals, the adjacent Heights, Temples, and Josse Houses, with portraits of Sir H. Pottinger, Lord Saltoun, Sir H. Gough, and other Officers, in friendly communication with Eleppo, Ke-Ling, and Nien Thien, the three Chinese Commissioners, and various native groups around. The View of Naples by Moonlight is now Open, but Baden-Baden will shortly be closed.

SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The FORTY-FIRST ANNUAL EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, at their Gallery, 5, Pall-Mall East, each day, from Nine till Dusk. Admittance, One Shilling. Catalogue, Sixpence. J. W. WRIGHT, Secretary.

THE NEW SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS. The ELEVENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, at their Gallery, 53, PALL-MALL, next the British Institution, from Nine o'Clock till Dusk.—Admission, One Shilling; Catalogues, 6d. JAMES FAHEY, Secretary.

MAGNIFICENT and UNEQUALLED COURT COSTUMES. —MADAME TUSSAUD and SONS, anxious to give the Middle Classes an idea of the splendour of the Court, have entirely redressed their Female Figures in a style never before attempted. They respectfully request an early visit, as the exposure to the air must soon tarnish their beauty. The group of the House of Brunswick may challenge all former efforts. Admittance, 1s. Napoleon Rooms, 6d. Open from Eleven till Ten. Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square.

HIS R. H. the PRINCE of WALES, by gracious permission of her Majesty, from the picture of Winterhalter at Windsor Castle. The HOUSE of BRUNSWICK at ONE VIEW; George I., George II., George III., George IV., William IV., Queen Charlotte, Queen Caroline, Princess Charlotte, Coburg, Dukes of York, Kent, Cambridge, Sussex, &c., the Robes of George IV., restored, the British Orders of the Garter, Bath, Thistle, St. Patrick. The National Group, Mr. Cobden, and Tom Thumb. "This is one of the best sights in the metropolis."—The Times. Open from 11 till 10 at night.—Admittance One Shilling; Napoleon Rooms, Sixpence.—MADAME TUSSAUD and SON'S Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION. — The ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY exhibited by a WORKING MODEL, having a power to carry visitors. A CURIOUS MECHANICAL HAND on a person who has lost his natural hand. Dr. RYAN'S LECTURES on the CHEMISTRY of DOMESTIC LIFE, Daily, at a quarter past Three, and on Wednesday and Friday evenings at a quarter to Nine. Professor BACHOFFNER'S VARIED LECTURES, with brilliant Experiments. LECTURES on CHARACTER, with MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS, by Mr. J. RUSSELL, accompanied by Dr. Wallis on the Pianoforte, on the evenings of Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday, at Eight o'Clock New and beautiful objects in the CHROMATROPE, PHYSIOSCOPE, PROTEOSCOPE, &c. NEW DISSOLVING VIEWS. SUBMARINE EXPERIMENTS by the DIVER and DIVING BELL. WORKING MODELS described Daily.—Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE. — BENEFIT and LAST APPEARANCE BUT ONE of the DANSEUSES VIENNOISES.—The Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public, are respectfully informed that the BENEFIT of the DANSEUSES VIENNOISES (their Last Appearance but One) will take place on THURSDAY NEXT, JUNE 5th, 1845, when will be performed Rossini's Opera, IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA. Rosina, Mdme. Grisi; Il Conte d'Almaviva, Sign. Mario; Bartolo, Sign. Lablache; Basilio, Sign. F. Lablache; and Figaro, Sign. Fornasari. The DANSEUSES VIENNOISES will appear in some of their most Favourite Dances. Their Performances this Evening will include the celebrated PAS DES MIROIRS; the PAS DES MOISSONNEURS; and, for the first time, a New Divertissement, entitled "POT POURRI," comprising a resume of the following of their admired Dances:—Hornpipe, by Mdlles. Koch and Weber; Schweitzer Tanz, by Mdlles. Fanny Praegher and Hankel; Tarantelle, by Mdlles. Rorarius and Sperl; Tyroler Tanz, by Mdlles. Florianschutz (sisters); Cracovienne, by Mdlles. Mina and Werner; Mazus, by Sixteen; Linzer Tanz, by Mdlles. Kock and Weber; Polonaise, by Mdlles. Prager and Henckel; Polka, by Four; Hongroise. by Mdlles. Florianschutz (sisters); Taleo de Xerxes, by Sperl and Franz Weiss; Coda, by all the Danseuses Viennoises. With a MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENT, combining the talents of Mdme. Castellan, Mdlle. Brambilla, and Sign. Moriani. To be followed by VARIOUS NOVELTIES in the BALLET DEPARTMENT, in which will appear Mdlle. Cerito, Mdlle. Lucille Grahn, and Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi, Mdlles. Demelisse, Cassan, &c.; M. Perrot, and M. St. Leon. Applications for Boxes, Pit Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven; the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven.

WANTED.—Wanted to RENT or PURCHASE, a GOOD FAMILY HOUSE, in the neighbourhood of Wimbledon or Wandsworth Common, near the Railway Station, with Six or Eight good Bed-rooms, Stables, Garden, Paddock, &c.—Particulars to be addressed to M., 198, Strand.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

KINAHAN'S "LL." WHISKY (seven years old), 20s. per Gallon. This pure, wholesome, and delicious spirit is universally preferred to Cognac Brandy.—Choice Old Wines, Foreign Spirits, XX. Dublin Stout, Bass' Pale India Ale, Burton and Scotch Ales, in fine condition.—Sealed Sample Bottles of the "LL." Whisky can be obtained at most respectable houses.—KINAHAN & Co's Stores, 25, King William-street, Strand.

BRITISH and FOREIGN INSTITUTE, 13, George-street, Hanover-square.—The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Members will be held on SATURDAY, the 31st of May.—The chair will be taken at two o'clock precisely, by the President, the Right Hon. the Earl of DEVON. The third year of the Institute will commence on the 1st of June, and the Eleventh Soiree of the session will be given on Monday June 2, at Eight o'Clock. JAMES S. BUCKINGHAM, Resident Directoor.

THE HAIR.—LYON'S BRITISH FLUID DYE.—This unequalled Preparation for changing the colour of the Hair from Red or Grey to a beautiful Auburn, Brown, or Black, is now perfected in one chemical liquid. The operation can be finished at once, without loss of time, and the Dye is quite free from any unpleasant odour, and does not injure the Skin or Hair in its application. Sold in cases, 5s. each, by PRATT and Co., Chemists, 29, Lower Newport-street, Soho.

INDIA and COLONIAL and LADIES' WEDDING ORDERS, &c., prepared with particular attention as to quality, fashion, and economy, and executed to any extent, on the shortest notice, by POPE and PLANTE, General Outfitters, and Manufacturers of every description of the best Hosiery for family use.—4, Waterloo-place, Pall-Mall. The Ladies' Department conducted by experienced female assistants.—Lists and Patterns forwarded.

LESSONS IN MILLINERY AND DRESSMAKING.—Mrs. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, sole inventress of teaching the art of Dressmaking in a series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of cutting, fitting, and executing, in the most finished style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to pupils. Apprentices and Improvers Wanted.—Millinery and Dress Rooms.

TEA ESTABLISHMENT, 221, Oxford-street.—Families and large consumers are invited to avail themselves of the advantages ready money commands, in purchasing the really fine and useful descriptions of TEA and COFFEE at this Establishment. The saving here effected by cash payments is at least 10 or 20 per cent. Price lists forwarded on application, and goods delivered within three miles free of expense.—STRUGNELL and Co., Tea and Coffee Dealers, 221, Oxford-street, corner of Portman-street, London.

ASCOT RACES.—ROYAL HOTEL, SLOUGH STATION.—CHARLES DOTESIO most respectfully begs to acquaint his Friends, the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, that he has still disengaged for the Ascot Race Week some of the best Apartments at the Royal Hotel, and to prevent disappointment begs to be favoured with their earliest commands; as also for Post Horses and Carriage, by special request. C. Dotesio will provide a good Table d' Hote on the Cup Day at Seven o'clock.
N.B. Parties intending to dine in Private Rooms at the Royal Hotel are requested to give their orders in time to insure them.

VOLUNTARY TESTIMONIAL.—"Sir, I feel pleasure in saying your Auxiliar is the best thing ever discovered for the Hair. I was nearly bald, and quite grey, for some years, through illness. Nothing had the least effect but your Auxiliar, which has restored it within six months. It is now beautifully luxuriant." From S. Monckton, Brixton, to R. Dawson, Lower Clapton. 3s. 6d., 7s., 10s. 6d., and 21s. per bottle. DAWSON'S DEPILATORY is warranted to remove, in a few minutes, unsightly hairs from any part of the Skin, without the least unpleasantness, leaving the Skin perfectly fair and soft, 3s. 6d. and 6s. per packet. Sold as above, and by Sanger, 150, Hannay, 63, Oxford-street Prout, 229, Strand; Barclay, Farringdon-street; Johnston, 68, Cornhill, and others in the Kingdom. Orders by post promptly forwarded.

TO THE CARPET TRADE.—THE ROYAL PATENT VICTORIA FELT CARPETING, made without spinning and weaving, having successfully overcome the prejudice created by competitors in other descriptions of Carpeting, and being now honoured with the patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty for its use in the Royal Palaces, the Patent Woollen Cloth Company, who are the sole manufacturers, inform the Trade that their new and beautiful Patterns in Carpetings for the present season are now ready for inspection at the Company's Warehouses, 8, Love-lane, Wood-street, Cheapside, where the Company have also a large assortment of elegantly-printed and embossed Table Covers, Window Curtains, Cloths for Coach-linings, Waistcoatings, Thick Felt for Polishing and Gun Waddings, D'Oyleys, &c. &c., manufactured by the same process. The public, in patronising the Felt Carpeting, will obtain, and for one half the price, an article superior in strength and durability to either Kidderminster or Brussels.—Manufactories—Elmwood Mills, Leeds; and Boroughroad, London.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED, without Springs, Clasps, or Wires; Loose Teeth Fastened; and Filling Decayed Teeth with Mineral Marmoratum.—Mons. LE DRAY and SON, SURGEON DENTISTS, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street, continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated Mineral Marmoratum, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the Toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary They also Fasten Loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of calomel, or diseases of the gums. Incorrodible Artificial or Natural Teeth, of surpassing beauty, to match in colour and shape those left in the mouth, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following charges:—A single tooth, 10s.; a set, £5 5s. Arranged on the most approved principles, and restoring perfect articulation and mastication. At home from Ten till Six.—Mons. Le Dray's "Treatise on the Diseases of the Gums and Teeth" may be had free, on application at their residence, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

SUPERIOR SHIRTS AT MODERATE PRICES

Strong Cotton and Long Cloth Shirts	1s 6d and 2s 0d
Long Cloth Shirts, with fine Linen Full Fronts, Collars, and Wristbands (well made)	2s 6d and 3s 6d
Superior Long Cloth Shirts, extra super Linen Fronts, Collars, and Wristbands (beautifully made)	4s 6d and 5s 6d

Fine Linen Collars 4½d., or 4s. 3d. per Dozen. Extra Superfine, 6d., or 5s. 6d. per Dozen.
A large assortment of Shirts of every description, including some of the most approved fabrics in all Linen Shirts, and the finest qualities in India Long Cloth, kept washed and ready for immediate use.
Boys' Shirts in all sizes. Shirts and Hosiery made to order.
Gentlemen and Families waited upon with patterns and specimens of superior workmanship. Country orders faithfully executed, and forwarded to all parts of the United Kingdom.
RODGERS and Co., Shirt Makers, Hosiers, Manufacturers, and Outfitters (Successors to the late Mr. KIPLING), 59, St. Martin's-lane, and 29, New-street, Covent-garden, the premises being at the corner of New-street. Established half a century.

THE NEW PATENT FOR THE PREVENTION OF ACCIDENTS BY FIRE.—BLACKWELL AND WILLIAMS'S PARAGON MATCH, a cheap, safe, and useful substitute for the dangerous congreve or lucifer, approved of by the most eminent chemists, and recommended by the Fire Insurance Companies. The following testimonial (from among many others) will convey a faint idea of its merits.

"Polytechnic Institution.

"This is to certify that I have examined the Paragon Match, patented by Messrs. Blackwell and Williams, and find it to be a great improvement upon all that have been brought into the market. The Lucifer Matches hitherto sold, are very liable to take fire from a very small amount of friction, and also from the application of a comparatively small degree of heat, while the Paragon Matches will not ignite under a temperature of between 300 and 400 deg, Fahr. The risk of accidental fires is thus very much diminished."

(Signed and Sealed) "John Ryan, M.D., L.L.D.

"309, Regent-street, April, 1845." "Robert Longbottom, Sec."

Manufactured solely by the Patentees, Blackwell and Williams, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel, London, without whose signature on each box, none are genuine.

PATRONISED BY THE QUEEN AND ROYAL FAMILY OF GREAT BRITAIN, AND THE SEVERAL SOVEREIGNS AND COURTS OF EUROPE.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.—This ELEGANT, FRAGRANT, and TRANSPARENT OIL, in its preservative, restorative, and beautifying qualities, for the Human Hair, is unequalled throughout the whole world. For Children, it is especially recommended as forming the basis of A Beautiful Head of Hair!!! Price 3s. 6d., 7s., Family Bottles (equal to four small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s.
CAUTION.—Each genuine bottle has the words ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL engraved in two lines on the Wrapper; and on the back of the Wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,028 letters.
ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, a fragrant white powder, prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue for preserving and beautifying the TEETH and strengthening the GUMS. It eradicates tartar from the teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, imparting the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; and gives sweetness and perfume to the breath Scurvy is by its means eradicated from the gums, and a healthy action and redness are induced, so that the teeth, if loose, are thus rendered firm in their sockets. Price 2s 9d. per box.
CAUTION.—As a protection from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of Stamps have directed the Proprietors' name and address, thus—A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden—to be engraved on the Government Stamp, which is affixed on each box.  All other articles under the same names are Fraudulent Imitations.

SAVING OF SILVER AND LABOUR.

FOR CLEANING GOLD and SILVER PLATE INSTANTANEOUSLY, without wearing the precious metals in the slightest degree.—JONES'S SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, a new chemical discovery, recommended by the eminent Chemist, Andrew Ure, M.D., F.R.S., &c., and sold in half pint, pint, and quart bottles, at 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s.
The following Letters at once establish the usefulness of this new discovery:—
"I have examined the preparation invented by Messrs. JONES, for cleaning silver, called SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, and find it to be safe, effectual, and instantaneous in its operation. Being founded on chemical principles, it merely removes the tarnish on plate, and restores the white silver lustre without abrading or wearing the precious metal itself in the slightest degree. "ANDREW URE, M.D., F.R.S, &c.
"Professor of Chemistry and Analytical Chemist.
"London, 13, Charlotte-street, Bedford-square, March 8th, 1845."
"Gentlemen—We have now given your valuable discovery a fair trial, and have no hesitation in saying it is the best compound we have ever tried for cleaning Gold and Silver WITHOUT FRICTION OR WEARING AWAY THE METAL, and shall accept the agency for its sale with great pleasure. (Signed) "RIPPON and BURTON, Furnishing Ironmongers.
"Oxford-street, May 22nd, 1845."
Caution.—Every genuine Bottle of this Compound is protected by the Stamp and Address of the only Inventors and Makers, "JONES and CO., LIGHT HOUSE, 201, Strand, London." Sold wholesale by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Sutton and Co., and Edwards and Co., London; and retail by Sanger, Oxford-street; Johnson, Cornhill; Jones and Co. 201, Strand; and Rippon and Burton, Oxford-street.

THE POPULAR RECORD OF MODERN SCIENCE, a Journal of Philosophy and General Information.—Published every week at the Office, 344, Strand; and at all Booksellers or Newsvenders. Price, unstamped, 2d.; Stamped, 3d.

THE GO-A-HEAD JOURNAL for JUNE, full of splendid Engravings!! and price only Twopence, contains:—Going-a-Head at Epsom, Saturday Night at Sea, Great Eight-Oared Cutter Match, The Boulogne Packet, Illustrated, &c. &c. Office, 17, Warwick-lane, Paternoster-row, and all Booksellers.

THE EDINBURGH TALES.—Part V., Contains THE ELVES, from the German of Tieck, by THOMAS CARLYLE; and WEST COUNTRY EXCLUSIVES, by Mrs. JOHNSTONE.—Price Sevenpence. Parts 1 to 4 are reprinted.
CHAPMAN and HALL, London; W. TAIT, Edinburgh; J. CUMMING, Dublin.

FIELD'S JUVENILE and GENERAL BOOK WAREHOUSE, 65, QUADRANT, corner of Air-street. The Stock consists of upwards of 20,000 volumes at very reduced prices, comprising Histories, Voyages, Travels, Biography, Poetry, Fiction, Bibles, Prayer Books, Church Services, and the best Juvenile Works; also a Select stock of elegantly bound volumes for presents.

THE ILLUSTRATED FAMILY JOURNAL; a Magazine of Romance, Essay, Poetry, Science, and Travel, by the first writers of the day; with Original Designs by Archer, Franklin, Tilbert, Leech, Kenny Meadows, Scott, &c. &c. Engraved by W. J. Linton—Part III., price 9d., containing 64 pages of closely-printed matter, and 40 engravings, is now ready.—J. CLAYTON, 320, Strand.

ASTOUNDING NOVELTY. — "JOE MILLER THE YOUNGER," aided by GALVANISM, Electrifies everybody with his Splendid Comic Engravings. He will go-a-head in his Swell Drag to Epsom, and report all the Fun and Racy Frolics of the Derby and Oaks, on Saturday Next.—Price 1½d.; Stamped, to go free by post, 2½d.; or 10s. 6d. per Annum. The Monthly Part, I., Now Ready, Price 7d. Sold by all Booksellers and Newsmen.—Office, 1, Crane-court, Fleet-street, London.

Now Ready, with Plans, the Concluding Part o.
THE CONQUEST OF SCINDE, containing the Military Operations and Battles of Major-General Sir Charles Lawes Napier, to the Completion of the Conquest. By Major-General W. NAPIER, Author of "History of the War in the Peninsula." 6 vols., 8vo.—T. and W. BOONE, 29, New Bond-street; OLIVER and BOYD, Edinburgh; J. CUMMING, Dublin.

EXTRAORDINARY GAZETTE.—QUEEN'S BALL.—THE LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION for JUNE, price 1s., post free 1s. 6d., contains the correct Costumes, and Portraits of the Queen, Albert, and the Queen of Belgium, as they are to appear; also double the number of Summer Fashions given in any other work; a Superb Plate of Children's Dresses, and Novelties in endless variety; 4 Plates, 70 Figures, 100 Patterns, 30 Walking Dresses, 50 Bonnets, &c. Descriptions, Tales, Poetry, two complete pieces of Music, &c.—G. BERGER, Holywell-street, Strand; and all Booksellers.

Published this day,
ILLUSTRATIONS of the ROCK-CUT TEMPLES of INDIA. By JAMES FURGUSSON, Esq. In Imperial folio, very fine Lithograph Plates, with tints, in extra half-morocco binding, price £2 2s. Text, descriptive of the Temples, in 8vo., with 10 plates, price 5s. 6d., in cloth boards. Also, Just Ready,
AIDE MEMOIRE to the MILITARY SCIENCES. Framed from Contributions of Officers of the Different Services. Part I., Royal 8vo., with 89 Engravings and 40 Wood-cuts, price, in extra cloth boards, 14s.—JOHN WEALE, 59, High-Holborn.

FRASER'S MAGAZINE for JUNE, Price 2s. 6d., contains:—1. Contemporary Orators. No. II. Lord John Russell. 2. A Night in the Champ de Mars. 3. Lives of Men of Letters and Science who Flourished in the time of George III. 4. The Curate's Volume of Poems. Chap. VI. 5. Early English Actresses. 6. The Duke of Marlborough. No. I. 7. An Inquiry into the State of Girls' Fashionable Schools. 8. Picture Gossip; in a Letter from Michael Angelo Titmarsh, All illustrissimo Signor, Il mio Signor colendissimo, Augusto Ha Arve, Pittore in Roma. 9. The Sister Angels. 10. Mr. Benjamin Disraeli, M.P. 11. To My Daughter. 12. Of the Italian Opera. By Morgan Rattler, Esq. 13. A Soul's Wanderings. 14. Index.
G. W. NICKISSON, 215, Regent-street, London.

FIELD'S CHEAP STATIONERY and BOOK WAREHOUSE, 65, Quadrant, Corner of Air-street.—Stamped Envelopes, 1s. per doz.; Plain Envelopes, 4d. per 100; Superfine ditto, 6d. per 100; Satin ditto, 9d. per 100. Note Paper, 5 quires, 6d.; Albert and Queen's Note, 1s and 1s. 6d. 5 quires; Superfine Bath Post, 2s. and 2s. 6d. the 5 quires; outsides ditto, 3d. and 4d. per quire. Wax of the finest quality, 10 sticks, 1s. Superfine Foolscap, 6d. per quire. Bibles, 1s.; Testaments, 6d.; Prayer-books, 9d., Church Services, 2 vols, in case, 3s. 6d.; a large and elegant stock, varying in price up to 3 Guineas. Mourning Envelopes, 1s. per 100; and every description of Stationery at prices not to be equalled by any other house.—65, QUADRANT.

THE JUNE NUMBER OF
COLBURN'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE AND HUMORIST,
Contains the following Interesting Articles:—
1. Costume and Characters of the Court of George II. By Miss Strickland.
2. The Brothers of Birchington: A Lay of St. Thomas A'Becket. By Thomas Ingoldsby
3. Literary and Familiar Reminiscences of Thomas Campbell.
4. Cheulier's Love Dream. By the Hon. G. Sydney Smythe.
5. A Sketch of the Lives of Lords Stowell and Eldon; with some Remarks on Mr. Twiss' "Life of Lord Eldon."
6. A Peep into the Royal Academy.
7. Mr. Disraeli's "Sybil."
8. The Carnival at Cologne.
9. The Steeple-Chaser. By the Author of "Peter Priggins."
10. Miss Strickland's "Lives of the Queens of England."
11. Lights and Shades in the Life of a Gentleman on Half-Pay. By W. H. Maxwell, Esq.
12. The Robertsees on their Travels. By Mrs. Trollope. Chapters 37, 38, and 39.
13. An Excursion up the Oronooko, and Ramble through Venezuela (concluded).
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

CIRCULATING LIBRARY. — FIVE HUNDRED AND FIFTY VOLUMES of MODERN NOVELS and ROMANCES, in good condition, to be DISPOSED OF for only TWENTY-FIVE POUNDS, including the Works of Sir Walter Scott, Dickens, James, Marryat, Cooper, Ainsworth, and many very recent Works; well worth the attention of any person about adding to, or commencing a Circulating Library.—The books may be seen and a list obtained at J. GARMESON'S Magazine Warehouse, 9, Temple-street, bottom of Whitefriars-street, Fleet-street.

LOGIER'S ACADEMY, for Instruction on the PIANOFORTE, PLAYING in CONCERT, the THEORY of MUSIC, and PRACTICAL COMPOSITION.—Six pupils in each class; Meeting, Twice in each Week; Two Hours each Lesson. Terms, 3 Guineas per Quarter. Classes for Adults. Private Instruction to Teachers, Governesses, and Parents.—N.B. A New Edition of LOGIER'S SYSTEM of the SCIENCE of MUSIC is now in progress. 6 Parts already out, price 2s. 6d. each.—Dumb Pianos, of every size. By J. GREEN, 33, Soho-square.

TO RENDER THE COMPLEXION BEAUTIFUL AND CLEAR, USE HALFORD'S COSMETIC.—This delightfully refreshing preparation, recommended by the late Sir Henry Halford (Physician to the Royal Family), for eradicating all eruptions of the skin, and rendering the complexion beautiful and clear, and for removing the unpleasant odour of perspiration, is sold, Wholesale and Retail, by HUGH CUNNINGHAM, 193, Strand, London: and Retail by all respectable Perfumers, Chemists, and Booksellers throughout the Kingdom, in Packets at 2s. 9d. each, and Half-pint Bottles 4s. each.—The Packets transmitted post free, on receipt of 33 Postage labels.

SHIRTS.—W. E. WHITELOCK, 166, Strand, (Established 20 Years) solicits the attention of Gentlemen to the Shirts he supplies for 6s. 6d. each, including washing. They are made from Marsland's Patent Shirting, with fine linen fronts, collars, and wrists, the very best work, and latest fashion. and are superior to those usually sold for 8s. 6d. Also, all fine linen, 10s. 6d., usual price, 13s. 6d A sample shirt of either sent pre-paid per post, upon receipt of the amount, with 1s. in addition. The measure is the neck, chest, and wrist, tight. All sizes kept ready for wear, from boys, upwards. Good shirts for outfits supplied at 42s. per dozen, ready for use. The new patent shirt collar, for appearance and comfort in wear, immeasurably surpassing anything hitherto made, 3s. 6d. per dozen. Gentlemen waited upon in any part of London.

A FRIGHTFUL CASE OF A BAD LEG CURED BY HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS! Mr. Thomas Clarke, a retired Captain from the South Sea Trade, residing in Globe-lane, Mile-end, had had a bad leg for Five Years. There were about twenty holes in it. Several pieces of bone had come away. The limb was often the size of a child's body. It frequently caused the most excruciating pain. The Captain was told that his leg must be amputated, but he, like hundreds at others, has just got it soundly healed by means of these surprising remedies, which are infallible in the Cure of all Wounds, Sores, and Ulcers.—Sold at PROFESSOR HOLLOWAY'S Establishment, 244, Strand (where advice may be had gratis), and by all respectable Vendors of Medicine throughout the Civilised World.

MOURNING — Court, Family, and Complimentary. — The Proprietors of the London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249, Regent-street, beg respectfully to remind families requiring mourning attire, that every article of the very best description, requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning, may be procured from this Establishment at a moment's notice. Widows' and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note particularizing the mourning required, will insure immediate attention either in town or country. Ladies requiring Silks or Velvets for Dresses, Manties, Cloaks, &c., are particularly invited to a trial of the new Corbeau Silks and Velvets introduced at this house. They will be found not only more durable, but the colour very superior, unaffected by the strongest acid, or even sea-water. Black and Grey, and Fancy Mourning Silks, Cashmeres, Plaids, and Merinoes, of every description. The Show Rooms are replete with every novelty for Mourning in millinery, flowers, Tulle and Nett Sleeves, Collars, Berthes, Head-dresses, trimmings, &c. &c.—W. C. JAY and Co.

SELF MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION
The following Directions will ensure an exact Fit, and will be found a most convenient accommodation. The measure may be taken with a piece of tape, and reduced into inches stating the height of person, and if any peculiarity in figure; also whether taken over a Coat.

COATS, VESTS, &c.	Inches	TROUSERS.	Inches
From Neck seam, not Including Collar, to Hip Buttons		From top of Trousers to bottom
From Hip Buttons to Bottom of Skirt		From under the Legs to bottom of Trousers
From centre of Back to Elbow joint Continued to length of Sleeve at Wrist		Size round top of Thigh (tight)
Size round top of Arm		Size round Calf
Size round Chest under the Coat		Ditto Waist
Size round Waist under the Coat		Ditto Hips
		HAT. Measure size round the Head

| READY

ROYAL EXCHANGE HANDKERCHIEFS. — A Beautiful Engraving on Copper upon a large scale, showing the Clock Tower, &c., printed upon the best Silk Handkerchief, from a Drawing done expressly for that purpose, 5s. 6d. each, or by post, 6s.—To be had of W. TENT, Hosier, &c., No. 21, Royal Exchange, London.

ALE! ALE! ALE!—Best, brightest, purest, and most in esteem by Connoisseurs, to be had in Eighteen or Nine Gallon Casks, at One Shilling per Gallon, by addressing to the JOHN BULL BREWERY. Office, 20, Philpot-lane, City. Conveyed, free, to any part of London.

SEVENTEEN SHILLINGS are now charged by the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY for 6lbs. of good sound TEA. This is the lowest possible price at which Tea can be supplied with credit to the merchant and advantage to the consumer. 6lbs. of COFFEE for 5s. Offices, No 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street.

THE MINARET PARASOL. CAUTION.—Ladies are particularly requested to observe that the Silver Runner of the Parasol is Stamped with the word "MINARET." This Caution is necessary, as other parasols have been sold for the Minaret which are not so. This elegant Novelty can be had at all the respectable Drapers in the Kingdom.

BED FEATHERS, Duty Free:—

Best White Dantzic	2s. 10d.	Best Foreign Greys	2s. 0d.
Irish Whites	2s. 0d.	Irish Greys	1s. 6d.
Best ditto	2s 6d.	Best ditto	1s. 9d.

HEAL and SON, 196, Tottenham-court-road, opposite the Chapel.

DANCING.—LESSONS in the MAZURKA, CELLARIUS VALSE, POLKA, and VALSE a DEUX TEMPS, as taught by Cellarius), by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons at all hours to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age, wishing privacy and expedition An Evening Class on Mondays and Fridays. Terms may be had on application as above.

TO LADIES.—PETT'S POUDRE des DAMES, or Depilatory, justly esteemed as the only preparation for effectually removing superfluous Hairs in eight minutes. Its great recommendation is the simplicity in applying it, and the ingredients of which it is composed being perfectly innocent, leaving a pleasing softness on the skin. Price 4s. 6d. Prepared solely by J. PETT, Perfumer to the Royal Family, 243, Regent street, and sold by every respectable dealer in Perfumery.

RICHARD and JOHN SLACK earnestly solicit an inspection of their select and varied STOCK of FURNISHING IRONMONGERY, consisting of Bronzed and Steel Fenders, Fire Irons, warranted Table Cutlery, Nickel Silver Wares, Paper and Japan Tea-trays, Shower and other Baths, &c &c.; every article of which is marked in plain figures, at the same low prices for which their House has been celebrated for upwards of a quarter of a century. Their terms being cash, enables them to offer them at prices which will be found 30 per cent. under any other house. Richard and John Slack, 336, Strand, opposite Somerset House. Their Book, containing drawings and prices of every article, may be had gratis, or sent to any part, post-free.—Established 1818.

PROSPECTUS.

NOTTINGHAM AND BOSTON RAILWAY,
(REGISTERED PROVISIONALLY.)
CAPITAL £750,000,
In 30,000 Shares of £25 each.—Deposit £1 10s. per Share.
Subscribers will not be answerable beyond the Amount of their respective Shares.

PROVISIONAL COMMITTEE.

John Rawson, Esq., Mayor of Boston
Sir James Duke, Knt., M.P.
Thomas Gee, Esq., Banker, Boston
Sir George Lefevre, M.D., 60, Brook-street, Grosvenor-square—Director of the Wells and Dereham Railway Company
John Oldrid, Esq., Magistrate, Boston
Thomas Spalding, Esq., London
Charles Wright, Esq., Alderman, Boston
Thomas Wise, Jun., Esq., Banker, Boston
William Porter, Esq., Rochford Tower, Boston
Robert William Stainbank, Esq., Magistrate, Boston
John Noble, Esq., Boston
John Churchill, Esq., Bayswater, London—Director of the Manchester and Birmingham Continuation and Welch Junction Railway Company
Herbert Ingram, Esq., 198, Strand, London
Thomas Reginald Kemp, Esq., Abchurch-lane, London—Director of the Shrewsbury, Hereford, North Wales, &c., Railway Companies
Nathaniel Wedd, Esq., Merchant, Boston
Sir John Hare, 11, Langham-place, London—Director of the London and Windsor Railway Company
William Mann, Esq., Banker, Boston
Robert Palmer, Esq., Kennington, near London
John Burness, Esq., Boroughreeve Manchester
Captain Douglas Kinnaird Pulteney, 4, Parliament-street, Whitehall
John Elsam, Esq., Magistrate, Boston
Daniel Jackson, Esq., Boston
Charles Wright, Jun., Esq., Merchant, Boston.
Nathaniel Cooke, Esq., Sherwood Cottage, Bayswater
John Sturdy, Esq., Magistrate, Boston
James Edward Tuxford, Esq., Magistrate, Boston
William Little, Esq., Eye, near Peterborough
George Bacon, Esq., Nottingham
William Hannay, Esq., Nottingham
Thomas Foster Gimson, Esq., Nottingham
William Bridges Adams, Esq., Adam-street, Adelphi

With power to add to their number.

BANKERS.

Messrs. Glyn, Halifax, and Co., Lombard-street, London
Messrs. Garfit, Claypous, and Co., Boston
Messrs. Hardy, Walkington, and Hardy, Grantham
The Stamford, Spalding, and Boston Banking Company, Boston
Messrs. Henry and Thomas Gee and Co., Boston
Messrs. Moore and Robinson, Nottingham
The National Provincial Bank of England, Boston
Liverpool and Manchester District Bank

ENGINEER.—Sir John Rennie.
ASSISTANT ENGINEER.—William Lewin, Esq., Boston.
SECRETARY, PRO. TEM.—William Little, Esq., Jun.
STANDING COUNSEL.W. H. Adams, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Middle Temple.
SOLICITORS.

Messrs. Hopkins and Rice, Boston
Thomas and Moore, 7, South-square, Gray's Inn, London
Messrs. Freeth and Rawson, Nottingham.
T. Winter, Esq., Grantham

OFFICE OF THE COMPANY, 14, BIRCHIN-LANE, LOMBARD-STREET, LONDON.

The formation of a Railway from Nottingham to Boston is, unquestionably, of the greatest importance to the whole of the Districts and Towns which it will connect, and will prove highly advantageous to the Manufacturing and Agricultural Interests. By reference to the Map of England, it will be seen that Boston is only about 48 miles from Nottingham, while all other Sea-ports, on the East Coast, are from 70 to 130 miles distant from Nottingham; clearly showing that Boston is the natural Sea-port of the Manufacturing Towns of the whole of the Midland, North Midland, and North Western Counties. An immense traffic already exists between Boston and Nottingham, which must be increased almost to an incalculable amount when the facilities of railway transit are completed. The very difficult and dilatory mode of conveyance now used is by the River Witham, Canal, and River Trent: on an average, upwards of 150,000 quarters of grain are carried annually, at a cost of 2s. per quarter, which, by the Railway, could be carried at 1s. per quarter, being a saving of 50 per cent. to the producers and consumers. The export trade from Boston is now comparatively limited, by the want of means of conveyance from the Manufacturing Districts, which a Railroad will supply.

Boston is situated in the midst of the finest land in the Kingdom; and this part of Lincolnshire may be justly termed the GARDEN of the MANUFACTURING DISTRICT of ENGLAND. The produce of the whole district, particularly its wheat, is consumed in the large manufacturing towns; and the carriage of corn and cattle to the great centres of population, will alone furnish a constant and certain source of revenue. In addition, the growth of potatoes in this locality is so extensive as to supply an important trade.

The time occupied in travelling from Nottingham to Boston, by fast trains, will not be more than one hour and 20 minutes; whereas the journey, as at present performed by coach alone, occupies eight hours. The conveyance of heavy goods by Railway will occupy about two hours; by the existing means of conveyance, goods are from 7 to 14 days before they reach their destination.

In addition to this, a large Traffic will be carried along the Line in Manufactured Goods, and in Coal and Lime from the Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire Coal Fields, to rural districts through which it passes, and to the shore of the German Ocean; the latter traffic is yet to be developed, and with the cheap transit provided by this Line, the important article of Coal will compete at a great advantage to the consumer with the present supply, which is now brought by Sea from Newcastle.

A very considerable amount of the vast staple produce of Nottingham, Derby, Loughborough, Leicester, and the neighbourhood, which is exported to Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Germany, and all other parts of the Baltic, is now conveyed by a circuitous and expensive route to Hull and London, and thence, after repeated removals by ship or steamer, to its destination; whereas, on the completion of this line, it would be transmitted direct to Boston, and thence to the before-mentioned places, in much less time, and at a much less expense.

Boston is not only the nearest Seaport town to Nottingham, but is also the most convenient, safest, and best situated on the Eastern Coast, for the shipment and transhipment of merchandise. By recent improvements the river, or arm of the sea, which runs through the centre of the town, has been widened and deepened, thus affording means for vessels of from three to four hundred tons burthen, to take in and discharge their cargoes at the wharf-side, without risk or damage, an object of importance not only in point of security to the goods, but also in the saving of expense usually incurred for lighter charges.

A short detail of the present amount of traffic on a small part of the proposed Line will prove that the expectations of high remuneration are well founded. Between Grantham and Nottingham alone, there are annually conveyed more than 60,000 tons of Goods, consisting of Corn, Coal, Malt, Flour, Oil, Linseed-cake, Timber, &c.; there is also a considerable road traffic by waggons and carts. The above estimate is founded on returns which give the following detail of the quantities:—Wheat, Barley, and Beans, 12,000 tons; Malt, 3500; Flour, 5000; Coal, 33,000; Coke, 5000; Timber, 1500; General Merchandise, 10,000; giving a total of 62,000 tons. The present charge for this large traffic is, in Canal dues, 4s. 4½d. per ton; Trent charge, 2d. per ton; freight to boatmen, 3s. 6d. per ton; making 8s. per ton, for a distance by water of 36 miles. By Railway, this freight could be conveyed for the same distance for less than one-third the present cost, at a fair profit to the undertaking, and a great saving to the Public. It must be remembered that this is the present amount of traffic; but experience has proved that wherever a railroad has been carried, the consequent cheapness and rapidity of conveyance have trebled it.

To the above items of traffic may be added a large and important trade in Fish, between the sea-coast and the populous Inland Districts, when the means of communication are established; and Fish being caught in large quantities on the whole East Coast, and sold at a low price, to this supply of food the Railway will give the inhabitants of the manufacturing towns a ready access. There are many other important results, which may be anticipated from bringing the Eastern Coast of the Midland Counties into easy communication with the Manufacturing Towns of the North and West.

The nature of the country through which the line will pass is most favourable in its facilities for construction; it is nearly all a Dead Level, passing along the Valley of the Witham and the Vale of Belvoir; and the expensive tunnelling, excavations, and embankments, which have caused so large an outlay on other Lines, will not be necessary on this. The cost of construction will be as low as that of any Line in the Kingdom; and the Company will not have to encounter the opposition of the Owners of the Land and Estates through which the Line will pass, they being, as far as can be ascertained, most favourably disposed towards the undertaking.

It will be seen that the proposed Line combines all the elements of a profitable Railway: it has a Sea-coast and Sea-port Town as one of the Termini; it passes through a rich and productive Agricultural District, to the great seats of manufacture and consumption, each being a certain source of traffic; and it affords ready communication with the Southern, Northern, and Midland Counties.

As the Act cannot be applied for till next Session, there will be ample time to make all the surveys and estimates, and to comply with all the Standing Orders, without that precipitancy, haste, and consequent imperfection, which have caused the miscarriage of so many bills in the present Session, to the great expense and loss of the Shareholders.

The exact Map of the intended Line will be published as soon as the Great Northern Trunk Line has been decided on by Parliament.

Power is intended to be reserved in the Act to allow 4 per cent. interest upon deposits, until the completion of the Line. No further calls will be made until the Act of Parliament is obtained, and the future calls will not be more than £2 on each Share.

Tables are now preparing, which will give an exact statement of the Passengers and all other traffic on the Line; they will appear in an amended Prospectus.

Applications for Shares may be made on the subjoined form, addressed to THE PROVISIONAL COMMITTEE, at the Office of the Company, 14, BIRCHIN-LANE, LOMBARD-STREET, LONDON, or to the Solicitors for the Company, at Nottingham, Boston, and Grantham.

 No person need apply for Shares, unless the application is accompanied by an unexceptionable reference. A certain number of Shares will be reserved for owners of land on the Line, and for parties resident in the locality through which the Line will pass.

FORM OF APPLICATION.

TO THE PROVISIONAL COMMITTEE OF THE NOTTINGHAM AND BOSTON RAILWAY.

Gentlemen,—

I request that you will allot me Shares, of Twenty-five Pounds each, in the above undertaking; and I agree to accept the same, or any smaller number that may be allotted to me, and to pay the deposit thereon, and sign the Parliamentary Contract and Subscribers' Agreement when required.

I am, Gentlemen,
Your obedient Servant,

Name
Residence
Profession
Date
Reference

EDWARDS' PATENT FIREWOOD WHEELS—the Cheapest and Quickest mode of Lighting Fires ever offered to the Public. A certain fire in a few minutes—Sold by every Oilman and Grocer in or near London, Four for a Penny; or for Spiller's Bachelor's Kettle, Three for a Penny.—Manufactory, 18, Wharf-road, City-road.

EDUCATION.—There are VACANCIES in a LADIES' ESTABLISHMENT, in the most salubrious part of Clifton, in Gloucestershire, for TWO PARLOUR BOARDERS, where comfort and agreeable society are combined with the advantages of Education, under the superintendence of resident Ladies; if preferred, Masters, of the first eminence. The School has been established twenty years. The first references can be given, and required Address, Mrs. SMITH, Post-office, Clifton, Gloucestershire.

LEGHORNS, MILLINERY, and STRAW BONNETS. BRIGHT'S, 12, Ludgate-street (two doors above Everington's).—M. BRIGHT begs to announce her return from Paris, supplied with every Novelty. Fine Leghorns, 20s; Fashionable Millinery Bonnets, 21s.; Fancy Straws, an immense variety: Dunstable Straws of every kind. Children's Bonnets; Leghorn, Tuscan, and Straw Hats of every size. The Largest Assortment in London, all bearing a fixed Ready Money Price at the Lowest Scale of Profit.

DINNER SERVICES, TABLE GLASS, &c.—SANDER and Co., 319, Holborn, corner of Southampton Buildings, opposite Gray's Inn Gate, have on view the largest Stock in London of Table Glass, Dinner, Dessert, and Tea Services, Ornamental China, Chandeliers, Lustres, Lamps, Hall Lanterns, &c. N.B. A considerable number of Dinner, Dessert, and Tea Services at a great reduction in price; these patterns are not those of the present year, but the ware is of the best quality, and they will be found worthy of attention; some of the Dinner Services in question, are porcelain, in addition to which, there are a few suspending Drawing Room Lamps; Lustres, and Hall Lanterns.

SCHWEPPE'S SODA and other ALKALINE WATERS continue to be manufactured as usual, upon the largest scale, at their several establishments, and to maintain their supremacy over all others. Each bottle has its proper proportion of alkali; but, to prevent imposition, consumers are earnestly requested to ascertain that a label with their NAME is over the cork of each bottle of soda water, and a label on each bottle of lemonade and potass water. Schweppe's Liquid Magnesia is of the finest quality, and is strongly recommended as a cure for gout, acidity of the stomach, &c., by the first London Physicians.—51, Berners-street, London.

BERDOE'S SUMMER WATERPROOF OVER-COATS, FROCKS, &c.—These well-known and gentlemanly garments will be found light and most agreeable substitutes for any other outside coat. They are made in the best manner, and are thoroughly respectable—equally free from vulgarity and singularity; are guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and no untried novelty, having been in extensive use among the respectable classes more than six years. A Large Stock of First-rate Garments, in Llama Cloths and other new and greatly admired materials (manufactured expressly for W. B.) now ready, of which an inspection is confidently invited.—Made only by W. BERDOE, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill.

PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS.—JOHNSON and CO., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street, Hatters to the Queen and Royal Family, Inventors and Patentees.—From the construction of the PATENT FLEXIBLE HATS the unpleasant pressure on the forehead is entirely removed, and by their extreme elasticity they are capable of accommodating themselves perfectly to the shape of the head; the crown, moreover, being ventilated, and the perspiration prevented from appearing on the outside of the hat, are additional advantages. As Ladies' Riding Hats they are light and elastic, and will retain their position on the head without the least discomfort.—JOHNSON and CO., 113 Regent-street, and GRIFFITHS and JOHNSON, 2, Old Bond-street.

MORE CURES of CONSUMPTION by Dr. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—"Dec. 5, 1844.—Gentlemen,—I can speak of your Wafers myself with the greatest confidence, having recommended them in many cases of Pulmonary Consumption, and they have always afforded relief when everything else has failed; and the patients, having been surfeited with medicine, are delighted to meet with so efficient a remedy having such an agreeable taste, &c. (Signed) "JNO. MAWSON, Surgeon.
"13, Mosley-street, Newcastle upon-Tyne."

Dr. LOCOCK'S WAFERS give instant relief, and a rapid Cure of Asthma, Coughs, and all disorders of the breath and lungs. To singers and public speakers they are invaluable, for clearing and strengthening the voice; they have a most pleasant taste. Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 11s. per box.—Agents: DA SILVA and Co., 1, Bride-lane, Fleet-street, London; sold by all Medicine Venders.

ITALIAN BLUE.—This Blue, so justly esteemed by LAUNDRESSES on account of the beautiful and permanent whiteness which it imparts to the Linen, and from the fact of its having no sediment, may now be bought Retail at the following Italian Warehouses:—

Acton and Sons, 66, Farringdon street
Adnam, 126, High Holborn
Atkinson, 43, Red Lion-street, Holborn
Chew, 25, Crawford-street
Durieu, 23, Drury-lane.
Fox, 50, Old Compton-street.
Gurney and Co, 2, Davis-street, Oxford-street
Hart and Co., High-street, Deptford
Hopkins, Blackman-street, Borough
Langdon, 24, Bridge-road, Lambeth
Neale, 64, Minories
Thursfield, 21, Oxford-street
Vice, Bermondsey-square
Vezey, 122, Edgware-road,

And Wholesale of the Patentee, ALFRED BEVINGTON, Neckinger-road, Bermondsey.

THE ATRAPILATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE; the only dye that really answers for all colours, and does not require re-doing, but as the hair grows, as it never fades or acquires that unnatural red or purple tint common to all other dyes. ROSS and SONS can, with the greatest confidence, recommend the above dye as infallible, if done at their establishment; and ladies or gentlemen requiring it, are requested to bring a friend, or servant with them, to see how it is used, which will enable them to do it afterwards without the chance of failure. Several private apartments devoted entirely to the above purpose, and some of their establishment having used it, the effect produced can be at once seen. They think it necessary to add, that by attending strictly to the instructions given with each bottle of dye, numerous persons have succeeded equally well without coming to them. Address Ross and Sons, 119 and 120, Bishopsgate-street, the celebrated Perruquiers, Perfumers, Hair-cutters, and Hair-dyers. N.B. Parties attended at their own residences, whatever the distance.

SANATORIUM, or HOME IN SICKNESS.—The lease of the house hitherto occupied by this Institution having expired, and the house itself being unfitted, by its want of accommodation, for the purposes of the Institution, the Committee have long sought in vain for some suitable mansion which they might rent until sufficient funds could be raised for building. Unsuccessful in this attempt, they have been reluctantly compelled to close the establishment for the present. Convinced, however, from the experience they have had, that, if convenient premises could be purchased or built, the Institution would not only support itself, but also afford the means of greatly extending its usefulness, the Committee have determined to exert themselves to procure the necessary funds for this purpose. So soon as these shall be obtained, the institution will be re-opened.—Further information may be had, and subscriptions paid to the Secretary, at the Office of F. W. Pott, Esq., 13, Godliman-street, Doctors' Commons; and Messrs. Jones, Loyd, and Co., Bankers, Lothbury. HENRY S. SMYTH, Secretary.

GREAT SAVING IN SOAP AND LABOUR.
Royal Letters Patent, granted March 4, 1844.

WARD'S PATENT WASHING and CLEANSING POWDER, manufactured at the Oldbury Alkali Works, near Birmingham. One great advantage which this powder possesses over others consists in its not injuring the hands of the persons using it. Other Washing Powders contain carbonate of soda in its free state, which, by acting upon the skin, inflames the hands and renders them sore and wrinkled. Other advantages peculiar to this powder may be stated as follows, viz.:—A saving of at least one-half of the soap which is necessary when soda is used. A great saving in the labour of washing. The colour of linen and other fabrics turns out far superior in whiteness to that which is given by any other means From the wear and tear caused by the rubbing and maiding being diminished, the durability of the clothes is increased.

This Powder will be found very valuable in Scouring Greasy Floors and Tables, in Cleansing Brass, Tin, and other Utensils of domestic use, and also Publicans' Pewter Pots.

 Warranted not to injure articles, though made of the finest materials.

Sold in packets, at 1d., 2d., 3d., and 6d. each, with directions for using. Be particular in asking for WARD'S WASHING POWDER, as no other possesses the same qualities.—To be had of all Druggists, Grocers, Oilmen, &c., or wholesale from the Manufacturers by application to Mr. P. WARD, at the Works as above, or in London, to Mr. JOHN MACARTNEY, 2, Coleman-street Buildings.

THE LATE THOMAS HOOD.—This distinguished writer, who has for upwards of twenty years entertained the public with a constant succession of comic and humouristic works, in the whole range of which not a single line of immoral tendency, or calculated to pain an individual, can be pointed out; whose poems and serious writings rank amongst the noblest modern contributions to our national literature; and whose pen was ever the ready and efficient advocate of the unfortunate and the oppressed (as recently, for instance, in the admirable "Song of the Shirt," which gave so remarkable an impulse to the movement on behalf of the distressed needlewomen)—has left a widow and two children in straitened and precarious circumstances, with no other means of subsistence than a small pension, terminable on the failure of the widow's life, barely sufficient to supply a family of three with common necessaries, and totally inadequate for the education and advancement of the orphan children. Even this scanty resource has been, of necessity, forestalled to a considerable extent during the last five months, in order to meet the heavy sick-room and funeral expenses. Under these circumstances, a Subscription for the family has been set on foot. The admirers of Thomas Hood throughout the country will, it is hoped, take this opportunity of publicly testifying their recognition of his genius, and their sense of his personal worth.

COMMITTEE.

Marquess of Northampton
Marquess of Normanby
Sir E. Bulwer Lytton, Bart,
Sir John Hanmer, M.P.
R. Monckton Milnes, Esq., M.P
David Salomons, Esq.
W. Harrison Ainsworth, Esq
R. A Slaney, Esq.
Dr. William Elliot
Joseph Toynbee, Esq.
Thomas Reseigh, Esq.
Lord Francis Egerton, M.P.
Lord John Manners, M.P.
Baron M. de Rothschild
Mr. Sergeant Talfourd
John Rolt, Esq.
A. Spottiswoode, Esq.
John Britton, Esq.
Samuel Phillips, Esq.
T. Landseer, Esq.
William Harvey, Esq.
F. O. Ward, Esq.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Lord F. Egerton, M.P.	50	0	0	Mr. Sergeant Talfourd	5	5	0
Baron Meyer de Rothschild	21	0	0	"Song of the Shirt"	1	0	0
W. J. Denison, Esq., M.P.	21	0	0	C. Wood, Esq., M.P.	1	0	0
David Salomons, Esq.	21	0	0	Wilson Patten, Esq., M.P.	1	0	0
R. Monckton Milnes, Esq., M.P.	10	0	0	E. B. Hall, Esq., M.P.	5	0	0
Andrew Spottiswoode, Esq.,	10	0	0	Right Hon. Sydney Herbert M.P.	5	0	0
A. W. Kinglake, Esq.	10	0	0	Sir John Walsh, M.P.	5	0	0
D. W. Elliott	10	0	0	Sir W. James, M.P.	5	0	0
John Rolt, Esq.	5	5	0	Hon. W. Cowper	5	0	0
W. Harrison Ainsworth, Esq.	5	5	0	Right Hon. Bingham Baring	10	0	0
John P. Heywood, Esq.	5	0	0	G. Tomline, Esq.	10	0	0
John P. Kennard, Esq.	5	0	0	W. H.	10	0	0
Henry H. Kennard, Esq.	5	0	0	V. P.	1	0	0
H. Vincent, Esq., Queen's Remembrancer	5	0	0	Mr. Umpelby	1	0	0
Eliot Warburton, Esq.	5	0	0	Miss Umpelby	0	5	0
R. A. Slaney, Esq.	5	0	0	Mrs. J. P. Heywood	1	0	0
F. O. Ward, Esq.	5	5	0	John Harris, Esq.	20	0	0
Hon. W. L. Melville	3	3	0	Oliver Latham, Esq.	2	0	0
Hon. Stuart Wortley	2	0	0	Marquis of Northampton	20	0	0
Joseph Toynbee, Esq.	2	2	0	Lord Ashley	2	0	0
T. Reseigh	3	0	0	W. J. Burton, Esq.	1	1	0
Anonymous, per ditto	2	0	0	S. C. Hall, Esq, F.S.A.	1	1	0
L. H. Haslewood, Esq.	1	1	0	Mrs. S. C. Hall	1	1	0
W. Harvey, Esq.	1	1	0	John Britton, Esq.	5	0	0
Jacob Bell, Esq.	1	1	0	One who remembers the "Comic Annual" from childhood, and always with delight	0	10	0
George Waugh, Esq.	1	1	0	Jacob Waley, jun., Esq.	1	1	0
Andrew Winter, Esq.	1	1	0	Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, Bart.	10	0	0
Robert Monteith, Esq.	1	0	0	James Clay, Esq.	5	0	0
A Lady	0	10	0	W. Broderip, Esq.	5	0	0
H. Renshaw, Esq.	1	1	0	Henry Collen, Esq.	2	12	6
Mr. T. Ford	0	10	6	John Greenall, Esq.	0	10	0
Mr J. Bailey	0	10	0	George Crosfield, Esq.	0	10	0
Mr. W. P. Nichols	0	5	0	Joseph Stubs, Esq.	0	10	0
Viscount Jocelyn	2	0	0	J. F. Marsh, Esq.	0	10	0
Earl St. Germains	5	0	0	M. William Wagstaff, Esq.	0	10	0
Capt. Bernal Osborne	5	0	0	R. Stuart Norris, Esq.	0	5	0
His Excellency the Danish Minister	2	0	0	S. Z. De Symons, Esq	2	2	0
J. E. Tennent, Esq., M.P.	5	5	0	A Contributor to "Hood's Own"	0	10	0
J. Forster, Esq.	3	3	0	W. Camps, Esq.	1	1	0
D. Maclise, Esq.	2	2	0	T. H. King, Esq.	1	0	0
E. Cardwell, Esq.	2	2	0	Mauley Hopkins, Esq.	5	0	0
J. M'Cullock, Esq.	2	2	0	Miss Pratt	1	1	0
G. P. R James, Esq.	5	0	0	A Friend	1	1	0
S. Phillips, Esq.	2	2	0

Subscriptions received by any member of the Committee, or may be paid to the account of David Salomons, Esq. (who has kindly consented to act as treasurer), at the London and Westminster Bank, or any of its branches.

12, Cork-street, Burlington-gardens. F. O. WARD Hon. Sec.

HARE ON SPINAL DISEASE.—This day is published, price 2s. 6d.,
CASES AND OBSERVATIONS illustrative of the Beneficial Results which may be obtained by close attention and perseverance, in some of the most unpromising Instances of Spinal Deformity. By SAMUEL HARE, Surgeon.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, and may be had of all booksellers.

NEW TALE BY MISS BREMER.—AUTHORIZED EDITION.
LIFE IN DALECARLIA.—THE PARSONAGE OF MORA. By FREDRIKA BREMER. Translated by WILLIAM HOWITT. 1 vol., small 8vo. 5s., in an Ornamental Cover.—In a few days.
CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand.

DISEASES of the CHEST.—Dr. MADDOCK on a Simple, Safe, and Efficacious Mode of Treating Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Chronic Cough, and Affections of the Heart. The work is made intelligible to all classes of readers. Second Edition, now ready, price 5s. 6d.—SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row.—Gratuitous Advice by the Author, to the Poor, at the Dispensary, 80, Judd-street, New-road.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,
WHAT to EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic
By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.
SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; CARVALHO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

FRENCH NEWSPAPER. Edited by JEAN BAPTISTE DESPLACE. Now publishing, L'OBSERVATEUR FRANCAIS, containing, besides all the Political, Literary, Scientific, and Artistical news of the Week, a Commercial Bulletin, a Guide for the Traveller in London, Fashion, Table-Talk, &c. "Le Juif Errant" and "l'Histoire du Consulat," to be continued every Week.—Published every Saturday, by Alexandre de Lizy, at the Office, 344, Strand; to be had, also, of all Newsmen and Booksellers, in the United Kingdom.

COMPANION TO "THE EXHIBITION."
THE ART-UNION, Monthly Journal, for JUNE, contains a Critical Notice of the Exhibition of the Royal Academy, with Remarks on between four and five hundred of the Works of Art therein contained, and serving as a Guide to the Visitor.
May be obtained of the Publishers, CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand; S. CLARKE, 13, Pall-mall East, opposite the Royal Academy; or, by order, of any Bookseller.

The Second Edition, enlarged, price 2s., of
AIRD'S SELF-INSTRUCTING FRENCH GRAMMAR.—"Aird's 'Self-Instructing French Grammar,' is decidedly a work of merit."—Illustrated London News. Also, Now Ready, price 1s. 9d.,
SYNTAX MADE EASY; or, How to Speak and Write French Correctly: A Sequel to "Aird's Self Instructing French Grammar."—"Mr. Aird, in the fullest sense of the term, has made the acquisition of French Syntax a matter of no difficulty."—The Atlas.
London: HUGH CUNNINGHAM, 193, Strand, and all Booksellers.

SUMMER FASHIONS FOR SIXPENCE!!—A GIANT PLATE, size 187 Square Inches, and another half the size, will be given in CUNNINGHAM'S LADIES' BOOK OF FASHION, for JUNE. Price SIXPENCE!!! Also, a Splendid Engraving of WILKIES' BLIND FIDDLER.
 This work contains the greatest variety of Dress, and is superior in brilliancy of colouring to any other Fashion Book. In giving your orders to your Bookseller, ask for "Cunningham's Ladies' Book of Fashion," price 6d., by post, free, 10d.
London: Published by HUGH CUNNINGHAM, 193, Strand.

RODRIGUES' Cheap STATIONERY and BOOK WAREHOUSE, 21, PICCADILLY.—Envelopes, 6d. per 100; superfine Bath post, 4d. per quire, 6s. per ream; note, 3d. per quire, 4s. per ream; best foolscap, 10d. per quire; Albert and Queen's note, 1s. and 1s. 6d. per packet of five quires; quills, 2s. per 100; best sealing-wax, 10 sticks for a shilling; bibles, 1s 6d; prayers, 1s.; testaments, 6d.; church services, two vols, in case complete, 3s. 6d Name plate, elegantly engraved and 100 superfine cards, 4s. 6d. Account Books, Ledgers, &c., made to order at manufacturers' prices, and every description of Stationery full 30 per cent. lower than any other house in London at H. RODRIGUES' 21, Piccadilly.

THE DUBLIN UNIVERSITY MAGAZINE for JUNE, price 2s. 6d., contains:—India—Elphinstone's and Wilson's Histories. The Maiden's Home. Hunt's Imagination and Fancy. The Devil's Ladder; a Tale of the Rhine. Personal Recollections of Thomas Campbell, Esq.—No. II. Lord Brougham's Lives of Men of Letters and Science. The Nevilles of Garretstown; a Tale of 1760.—Conclusion. Stanzas, by Robert Gilfillan. Sonnets from Spain. Protestant Conversions in Ireland. Index
Dublin: WILLIAM CURRY jun. and Co.; W. S. ORR and Co, London; and all Booksellers. Of whom may be had,
THE O'DONOGHUE. By HARRY LORREQUER. No. VI. Continued Monthly, with Illustrations by PHIZ. Price 1s.

In one thick vol., a new Edition, being the Ninth, much enlarged, price 16s.
MODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE; A POPULAR TREATISE, exhibiting the Symptoms, Causes, and most efficacious Treatment of Diseases; with a collection of approved Prescriptions, Management of Children, Doses of Medicines, &c. Forming a comprehensive Medical Guide for the Clergy, Families, and Invalids. By T. J. GRAHAM, M.D. &c. "It is evidently the result of great professional talent, experience, and judgment; the author every where appears conscientious and candid. One object is prominently evident—a sincere desire to benefit his suffering fellow-creatures. To recommend a work like the present to our readers, is only to manifest a proper regard for their welfare."—Literary Journal, Feb. 1843. "It is altogether deserving of permanent popularity."—London Weekly Review. SIMPKIN and Co., Paternoster Row; HATCHARDS, 187, Piccadilly; and TEGG, 73, Cheapside. Sold by all Booksellers.

THE ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE, for JUNE; a Bijou Novelty in Periodical Literature, contains:—

The Sorrows of Fitzboozle: (with an Etching by PHIZ)
Chapter I.—The Benefactor
Chapter II.—Gratitude
Chapter III.—Matrimony
The Curate of Kirkstill
The Black Velvet Collar: by Miss Louisa Stuart Costello
Our Tenants Daughter: An Old Bachelor's Story: by Mrs. Caroline White
The Inspiration of Genius: by James Smith
Stories of Advertisements: by Mr. Hunt
Sonnet
The Past, Present, and the Possible; or, Passages in the Life of a Cosmopolite:—Tropical Emigration
The Poor Passenger: by Richard Brinsley Knowles
The Heiress of the Mine: by Frances Brown
The Leisure Hours of a Modern Philosopher: By Charles Rosenbury, Esq.
Sea-Side Sketches: by Angus B. Reach
Luckless (From the German of Uhland): by Lewis Filmore
The League Bazaar
Royal Academy
Lines, suggested by Sir R. Peel's Donation of £50 to the Fund for the Relief of the late Mr. Hood's Family: by J. C.
New Books
Santa Fortunula
I Would That Thou Wert Happy
A Bohemian of the Fifteenth Century

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.
Sold by all Booksellers. Perfect Sets of the Old Series may still be obtained.
Office, 1, Crane-court, Fleet-street.

HER MAJESTY'S COSTUME BALL.

We resume our anticipatory glimpses of the Costume to be worn at the approaching Royal Fête; our illustration showing groups of distinguished characters, engraved from prints and other authorities of the period.

Square-cut coats and long-flapped waistcoats, with pockets in them the latter nearly meeting the stockings, still drawn up over the knee so high as almost to conceal the breeches; large hanging cuffs and lace ruffles; the skirts of the coats stiffened out with wire or buckram, from beneath which peeped the hilt of the sword; blue or scarlet silk stockings; lace neckcloths; square-toed short-quartered shoes, with high red heels and small buckles; riding-wigs, bag-wigs, nightcap-wigs, tie-wigs, and bob-wigs; small three-cornered hats, laced with gold or silver galloon, and sometimes trimmed with feathers, composed the habit of the noblemen and gentlemen of the period.

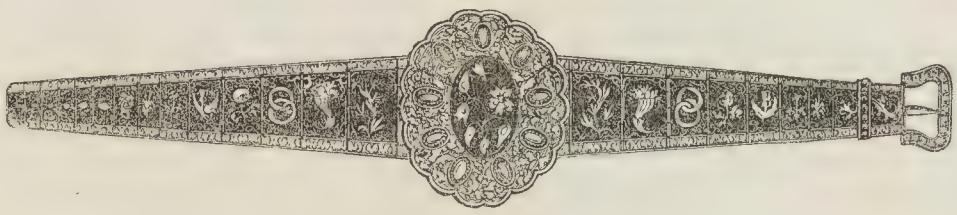
The dress of a beau is thus described in a contemporary novel:—"He was dressed in the extremity of fashion, and wore a light blue velvet coat, with immense cuffs, richly embroidered with silver

COSTUME OF 1740 AND 1750.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

PRESENTATION OF JEWELLERY, BY THE ARTISANS OF BIRMINGHAM, TO HER MAJESTY AND PRINCE ALBERT.

On Wednesday, a Deputation from the Operatives of the Fancy Trades of Birmingham, waited, by appointment, upon his Royal Highness Prince Albert, for the purpose of presenting to her Majesty and his Royal Highness some beautiful specimens of Birmingham Jewellery. The Deputation consisted of Messrs. Nicklin and Stinton, who were accompanied by Messrs Muntz and Spooner, the members for Birmingham, and by Mr. James Bourne, the High Bailiff of the town. The party arrived at the Palace at three o'clock, and were most graciously received by Prince Albert, attended by his Royal Highness's Secretary, Mr. G. E. Anson.

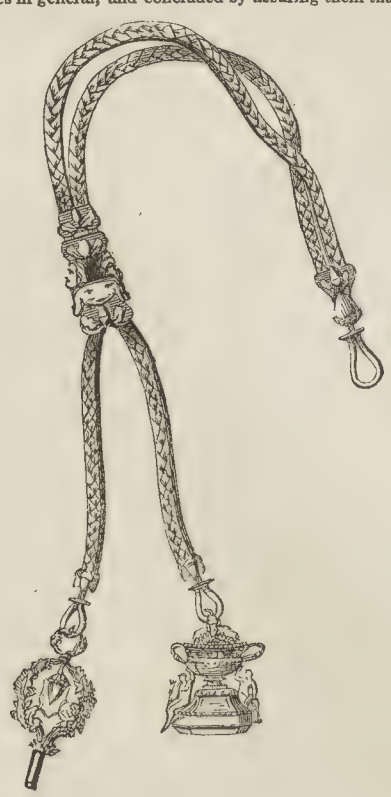
BROOCH.



EAR-RING.

Mr. Muntz then read to the Prince a memorial, explanatory of the motives of the artisans, and appealing, through his Royal Highness, to her Majesty, to take into gracious consideration the present depressed condition of the operative jewellers of Birmingham, and entreating the Queen and the Prince Consort "to set the example of wearing British jewellery on such occasions and to such an extent as may meet the Royal approval;" the memorialists being convinced that such a benevolent and well-timed example would be productive of the happiest effects, not only to the loyal artisans of Birmingham, but also to thousands of their fellow-subjects, employed in the manufacture of articles similar to the specimens, in different parts of the British Empire. The memorialists, in conclusion, particularly directed the Royal attention to the fact, that, in the execution of these jewellery ornaments, no less than twenty two trades or callings have been engaged; whilst the individuals who execute the respective portions of such like articles, from the rough stages to the finished state, amount, in Birmingham alone, to five thousand families, comprising above twenty thousand souls; and in London, in Sheffield, in Derby, and other towns, a proportionate numerical amount of persons are also engaged in the same manufacture. The memorial was read by Mr. Muntz with impressive effect, and was listened to with marked attention by his Royal Highness.

BUCKLE.



The jewellery was contained in caskets, which were then opened, and the specimens were displayed to his Royal Highness, who at once expressed his admiration of the ingenuity, taste, and skill exhibited in the designing and manufacture of each separate article; and at the same time inquired how it was that fashion could perversely persist in going abroad or articles of bijouterie when it could command so admirable and exquisite a manufacture of them at home. His Royal Highness entered into a lengthened and animated conversation with the deputation upon the subject of Birmingham manufactures in general, and concluded by assuring them that he knew her Majesty the Queen would fully share his own admiration of the costly presents with which the loyal and ingenious artisans of Birmingham had favoured them.

BRACELET.

The deputation withdrew, much gratified with their reception.

We have engraved the several articles, though much smaller than their actual size. The specimens intended for the Queen consist of the following articles:—An armlet, a brooch, a pair of ear-rings, and a buckle for the waist. The centre of the armlet, which is allowed by the first judges of jewellery in Birmingham to be the most splendid thing ever produced in the town, displays a diamond sprig upon blue enamel, surrounded with nine splendid pearls in blue enamel settings, each setting surrounded with an oak leaf, the leaf and the acorn gracefully and uniquely forming the border. The band part of the armlet consists of blue and gold enamel, with the emblems "Peace, plenty, for ever!" the rose, thistle, shamrock, and leek filling up the different compartments. Each compartment moves upon a flexible joint; and diamonds and rubies form the tout ensemble of the clasp. The other specimens are in exquisite keeping with the armlet. The presentation to the Prince consists of a watch-chain, seal, and key. The design of the seal is the Warwick vase, standing on a pedestal supported by Mercury and Ceres. Grapes spring from the top of the seal, the tendrils of the vine gracefully forming the loop. The key is in tasteful keeping with the seal; the vine and the oak are represented as springing from the same soil, the foliage of each being perfectly developed. A pendant acorn chastely forms the termination of the hanging foliage in the centre of the key.

WATCH-CHAIN, SEAL, AND KEY.

The memorial is a fine specimen of penmanship, and was written by a gentleman engaged in the establishment of Mr. Gillott, the celebrated steel-penmaker; the jewel cases are of themselves exceedingly beautiful, being made of papier maché, and chastely, but richly inlaid with enamel and gold. These were manufactured by Mr. Thomas Lane, of Great Hampton-street—Mr. Cobley, of Great Charles-street, having fitted up the inside of the cases. The armlet, brooch, and ear-rings for her Majesty, and the chain and key for the Prince, were executed at the establishment of Mr. Thomas Aston, of Regent place, Caroline-street; the buckle for the Queen, and the seal for the Prince, in that of Mr. Baleny, of St. Paul's-square.

The value of these elegant presents, we are assured, exceeds 400 guineas. It may be remembered that, soon after the arrival of Prince Albert in England, the button-makers of Birmingham presented to his Royal Highness several beautiful specimens of their manufactures; they were graciously adopted by the Prince. The result has been a permanent revival of the button trade; which good fortune we hope may be extended to the fancy trades.

CHESS.

To Correspondents.—"B. M. P.," Bognor.—Mate cannot be forced in six moves, if the best defence is given to Black.

The solutions by "J. H.," Woolwich; "J. B.," Berwick-on-Tweed; "J. C.," Cecil-street; "H. P.," Newcastle; "T. R.," "H. B.," "Philo-Chess," are right.

"A. B. C."—You can claim a Queen, if you please, for every pawn advanced to the adverse royal line, and have two or three, or even eight, Queens on the board at once.

"E. C. R. F."—Two Knights alone cannot give checkmate, if the adverse party plays correctly.

"Bessy.—We cannot understand the question.

"W. F. H.," City.—You may claim a second Queen, or any other piece, and have that and all the original pieces on the board at the same time.

"F. V. E.," W. Rectory, Yorkshire, is cordially thanked for his interesting communication. He will perhaps favour us with an accurate sketch of the curious old relic of bygone Chess battles to which he alludes.

"M. V. T.," Salisbury.—The five volumes already published of "The Chess Player's Chronicle" may be obtained of the publisher; and any bookseller in town or country will supply you with the current monthly numbers, 1s. each.

"J. T. S."—You should join the excellent Chess Club, in Cavendish-square, or the old London, in the City. The subscription to either is not more than three guineas per annum.

"Exchequer."—Apply for the Chess work named by Mr. Goode, Chess Divan, Ludgate-hill.

"J. C."—The regulations quoted as to the Castling of the King are perfectly correct, and you have quite mistaken our reply to your previous inquiry. We were never guilty of the absurdity of saying the King could Castle while in check, but that he could do so "had he been checked" fifty times, provided he had not been moved. In a word, the King, when checked, cannot escape that check by Castling, but if he interpose a piece, the circumstance of his having been checked does not prevent his Castling subsequently.

"E. D. R.," Bideford.—See the Laws of Chess, in "Chess Player's Chronicle," Lewis's works, or any other modern work on Chess.

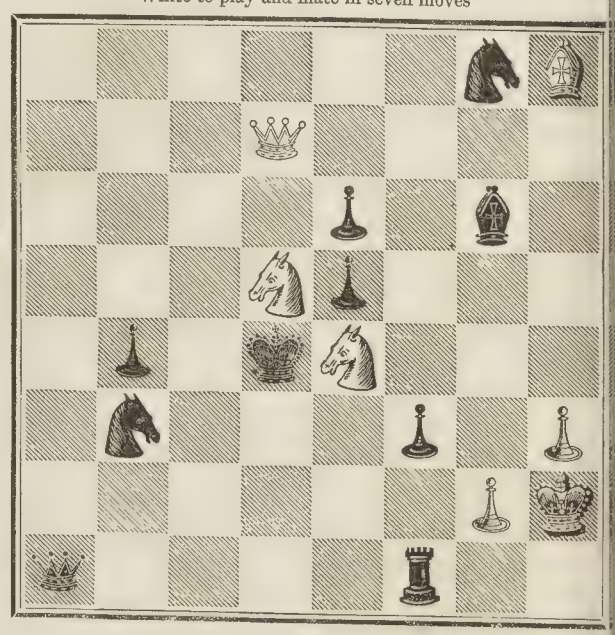
Solution to Problem No. 72.

White.	Black.
1. Q to Q B 5th	P takes Kt, (this is the only move by which he can prevent immediate mate.)
2. Q takes R (ch)	K to R 2nd
3. Q to B 5th (ch)	Kt P one or *
4. R to Q's 7th (ch)	K to R's 3rd (best)
5. Q to her B 8th (ch)	K to R 4th
6. R to Q R 7th (ch)	K to Q Kt 5th
7. Q to her B's 3rd (checkmate.)



* 3. K to R's 3rd. (It is obvious that if the K is played back, the Rook mates at once.)

4. R to Q's 6th (ch)	K to R 4th (best)
5. Q to R's 7th (ch)	K to Kt 5th
6. R to Q's 4th (checkmate.)

Problem No. 73.

By Mr. S. R. C.

White to play and mate in seven moves

WHITE.

Game No. 12.

Between MM. Heydebrant and Mayet, two of the leading players in Germany)

White (Von H.)	Black (M. M—t.)	White (Von H.)	Black (M. M—t.)
1. K P two	K P two	14. Q P one	Q Kt to his 5th
2. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	15. Q R P one	Q Kt to Q R 3rd
3. K B to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 4th	16. Q to K R 5th(ch)	K to Kt's sq
4. Castles	K Kt to B 3rd	17. Q Kt to B 3rd	Q B P one
5. Q Kt's P two	B takes Q Kt's P	18. K P one	K B to his 3rd
6. Q B P one	K B to K 2nd	19. K R to B 3rd	P takes P
7. Q P two	Q P one	20. Q to B 7th (ch)	K to R 2nd
8. K Kt to his 5th	Castles	21. Kt takes P *	B takes R
9. K B P two	K P takes Q P	22. K P one	Q to her 2nd †
10. P takes P	K R P one	23. K B P one	Q Kt to B 2nd
11. Kt takes K B P	R takes Kt	24. R to his third
12. B takes R (ch)	K takes B	And wins.
13. K P one	Kt to K sq

* The end of this game is cleverly played by M. Heydebrant.

† Had he moved the Q elsewhere he must have lost his Kt.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, May 31, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 162.—Vol. VI.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 1845. [Sixpence.

REPRINT.

MERIT AND REWARD.

Mr. HUME has appeared this week in rather a novel position—he has proposed a grant of a pension. The great pruner of these financial excrescences on the regular expenses of the State, has for once laid down the knife; the voice that has so often carried dismay to the hearts of sinecurists and holders of offices, known only to the Treasury and the Red Book, has tuned its accents in the opposite key; and the House, if not the Minister, being "i' the vein," Mr. Hume succeeded, and Sir Henry Pottinger, the able negotiator of the Chinese treaty, will receive some national reward, more substantial than a ribbon.

The only thing we have to object to in this case is, first, that such an acknowledgment of eminent services was not made long ago; and next, that it should have been left to Mr. Hume to propose it. With how much more grace would the compliment have come from the Government itself, if made sooner and without prompting, than it does now, when the act appears forced on it by the House of Commons, at the instance of a member not remarkable for being too generous with the money of the public?

In the recognition of public services, it is the fault of all English Governments—with respect to every kind of merit but one—to be "slowly wise and meanly just." On some principle, the utility or justice of which it is difficult to perceive, our rulers have deprived of all honorary reward every kind of public merit except prowess in arms. If a campaign is opened with bravery and skill, though it may be as unjustifiable in policy, and as disastrous in its results, as that of Affghanistan, a peerage, a pension for three lives, and the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, await the fortunate leader. But if a negotiator concludes a treaty that opens a third part of the population of the world to our commerce, terminates an irritating if not a dangerous war, restores the property of our merchants, and procures an indemnity that brings millions into our treasury—who does all this in the face of the accumulated difficulties of years—for him there is nothing but his pay, and a secondary order—a Grand Cross or the Bath, perhaps; but he cannot receive the thanks of Parliament—it is contrary to precedent; he has no peerage conferred upon him—it is not usual; nor does the Government make up for these slights by any more substantial token of national gratitude to a benefactor, till driven to do it by a motion of one of its most determined political opponents.

The Executive for the time being might surely take the initiative in these cases—might dispense those honorary distinctions which have been called the "cheap defence of nations" a little less exclusively, and bestow more substantial favours with a more liberal hand. We have neglected too much the question of fit rewards for different kinds of merit, and might in this respect follow the examples of Continental Governments without imitating them. We need not make our Orders of Knighthood as common as that of the Legion of Honour in France, nor encourage the love of titles to that childish extent to which it prevails in Germany, making the people the ridicule of foreigners, and of the more reasonable and clear-headed among themselves. But, on the other hand, we ought not to allow any of the few honorary distinctions we possess to be perverted from their intention, nor deny a public distinction to all but one kind of ability. At present we do both.

When it was proposed, two years ago, to vote the thanks of the House of Commons to Sir Henry Pottinger, it was resisted by Sir Robert Peel, on the mere ground of its being "unusual" to confer such an honour on persons engaged in the civil service of the country; it would be establishing, he said, an inconvenient precedent. We should like to know the exact time when it became the established practice to confine the thanks of the House of Commons to commanders of the military and naval services? We believe the Journals of the House contain many instances of public thanks having been given to persons of very different professions; in more than one instance, we think clergymen have been so "thanked," for particular sermons preached before the House, the doctrines being, of course, agreeable to the existing tone of opinion in that Assembly. It would be impossible to revive all the customs of that body; and services of an exclusively party or sectarian kind could not now be so recognised. But services, the merit of which no one doubts, in the benefits of which the whole nation shares, might surely be very properly acknowledged by the national representatives. Gradually the honour—for, doubtless, it is one—has been restricted to "war and the great in war;" but, because our practice has, for a long period, been bad, there is no reason we should not, when an opportunity offers, change it for the better. The fear of establishing "a precedent" is often a very blind one. Such services as those of Sir H. Pottinger are not frequently required. A century may pass ere any treaty of half the importance of that with China will be concluded by any man. The "thanks of the House" would not, by the admission of the precedent in this case, be likely to degenerate into a mere form of courtesy like the acknowledgment of a toast at a public dinner. As to our Orders of Knighthood, the highest of them, the Order of the Garter, has been perverted from the object for which it was founded: it is not accessible even to the highest military renown. When it was established, and for centuries afterwards, brave and able men were admitted into it from among all ranks of the Nobility, even down to Knights. It has now become a mere bait to tempt Dukes to political apostacy; the "vacant Garter" buys off the political opposition of a powerful Peer, or at least purchases his silence; high rank, and a mind open to conviction on certain points as to the policy of a Minister, is the qualification for the Order of the Garter. But it was never given to Nelson, nor Picton, nor Collingwood, nor the many brave men whose names give to our National History so much of its glory.

Of the other Orders, which are less restricted as to the rank of those on whom they are conferred, they are by far too exclusively given for Military and Naval service; if they are established solely for the purpose of distinguishing martial merit, nothing could be said about it; but even this would prove that civil services are neglected, by there being no similar Order of as high a standing for them also; the better plan would be to make these distinctions, marks of merit for both.

In the present case, however, the greatest omission has been the express exclusion of Sir Henry Pottinger from the vote of thanks, which the Commons of England would certainly have given him, if the Minister would have permitted it, and the reluctance to make up for that denial of honour, by anything more substantial. Sir Robert Peel's notion of the fittest mode of rewarding such eminent talents, is one of the most singular ever broached, and applied exclusively, be it observed, to diplomatists and negotiators—to what are called civil services. When a man greatly distinguishes himself by ability, and does an extraordinary service to his country, Sir Robert says, the best way of rewarding him is—to keep him in employment! As if employing a man, whose services a Government can hardly do without, was a great favour to him! Apply the same rule to the soldier: a General exhibits great military genius, and gains victory after victory, is it considered a sufficient reward to him to tell him he has received the pay of his rank, with the exemplary punctuality peculiar to the British Treasury, and that, as a further reward, he shall be employed wherever a service of difficulty and danger can be found? Doubtless it is his duty to obey the call of his country; but would he consider mere employment all he was entitled to? Would the nation consider its debt of gratitude to him discharged? When Wellington had taken up his position at Waterloo, it was his duty to win the battle if he could; and he did win it. Imagine the campaign continuing, and the Government telling its commander that, really, he gained that battle very creditably, and, as a reward, they would condescend to continue in their "employment" the skill to which they were so much indebted! Why, in cases of this rare kind, where great talents make themselves so evident by actions, the "employment," so far from being a favour to the individual concerned, is an absolute necessity on the State itself. A great honour the Duke of Wellington would have thought it, after his last great victory, to have received from the War-office an assurance that he "should be continued" in his command! And a great compliment Sir Henry Pottinger must think it, after concluding such a treaty, to be told, since the country found his services so advantageous, that it would continue to avail itself of them! No; this is not enough. The respectable mediocrity that abounds in all professions, barely performing its duties, and at best only escaping failure, may look on "employment" as a gain—a something beyond what it could reasonably expect. But genius and talent, decided and unmistakeable, which produce great results—events that occur once and no more in the annals of a nation—deserve that HONOUR which is the best reward of high deeds. From no sordid or material motive do such men act; not merely material should be their recompense. We regret that our Governments are so very niggard of their praise, and cold in their recognition, of those who serve them so ably; but we rejoice that the representatives of the people have more appreciation, and can, though somewhat tardily, compel an Executive to be just, that, of itself, showed no inclination to be generous. Sir Henry Pottinger has been denied the "thanks of Parliament," for the sake of preserving a "precedent;" he will receive the present vote as conveying to him the feeling both of the House and the nation, in the most effective form.

THAMES YACHT CLUB MATCH.—PRIMA DONNA ROUNDING THE BUOY AT ILEH.—DRAWN BY N. M. CONDY, ESQ.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

ROYAL THAMES YACHT CLUB MATCH.

On Saturday last, Mr. Alderman John Johnson gave a beautifully chased, and richly gilt silver cup and cover, to be sailed for by the first-class yachts, belonging to members of the Royal Thames Club. In addition to the many beneficent acts of the worthy Alderman, he has been, for many years, a liberal patron and an ardent admirer of yachting; and, delighted, as it would appear, with the spirit of emulation existing among the members of the Royal Thames Club, and the really national objects those noblemen and gentlemen had in view by the promotion and furtherance of yacht sailing, the worthy Alderman expressed his intention of presenting a prize of the value of 50 guineas, to be contended for in whatever manner the Club should deem proper. It was consequently decided that it should be thrown open to all vessels not exceeding 25 tons, the maximum tonnage allowed by the laws of the society. The really splendid prize was exhibited in the usual way on board the Red Rover, and much admired. Instead of being of the value of 50 guineas, it appeared that the liberal donor had exceeded that amount by at least twenty guineas.

Ten yachts were originally entered to start, but previously to the hour fixed for the match six were withdrawn. The match was to have been over the course, or down the river from Erith to the Nore and back again; but, owing to the total want of wind, was shortened, the yachts only going as far as the Holy-head and back to Erith. At one period of the time, the Marquis of Anglesey came on board the Red Rover, and a consultation was held whether or not the match should be postponed to a future day; the wind, however, at that time freshened for a brief space, and the match was sailed or floated out. The yachts that started were, the Belvidere, of 25 tons, the property of Lord A. Paget; the Blue Belle, 25 tons, the property of Mr. Twisden Hodges; the Vixen, 25 tons, the property of Messrs. J. and J. Heighington; and the Prima Donna, 25 tons, the property of Mr. C. R. Tatham.

A very animated part of the match was between the Blue Belle and Prima Donna, in Gravesend Reach, the latter having far overhauled the leading yacht. The doubts as to which should lead was decided in St. Clements, the Donna going in advance through the lee of her iron antagonist. The most exciting struggle for victory, however, was yet to come. After the Blue Belle had shifted jibs and set another topsail, she evidently drew upon the Donna; but the latter, on reaching over towards the flag buoy off Erith, was still so much ahead as to make success appear certain. There was very little wind at the time, and, in trying to fetch the goal without a board, she failed, and was consequently compelled to tack. Her subsequent position was an extremely annoying one to her crew, for she came broadside on to the tide, and thus remained, with not a breath of wind in her sails. While in this state, the Blue Belle went about a second time, and was reaching so admirably up to her opponent, that it was the general opinion she would go in advance of her before she could drift by the flag-buoy; but, fortunately for the owner, the Prima Donna's stem was slightly brought round, and she passed the winning point only one or two seconds ahead of the Belle. These vessels arrived at Erith at 46 minutes past six, the Belvidere at 51 minutes past six, and the Vixen at 56½ minutes past six.

The company invited to see the sport, were taken down the river in the Red Rover steamer. At the close of the match, the Commodore presented the prize to Mr. Tatham; and the health of Alderman Johnson having been proposed and enthusiastically drunk, the steamer proceeded on her course to London Bridge, and landed the company shortly after nine o'clock. In the course of the day the Pearl was taken in tow by the Red Rover, her gallant owner, the Marquis of Anglesey, visiting the steamer, and expressing his approbation of the Cup and Cover, and the motives which had induced Alderman Johnson to present so valuable a prize for competition.

EXECUTION OF CONNOR.—Joseph Connor, the young man convicted at the Central Criminal Court, of the murder of Mary Brothers, otherwise Tape, of St. Giles's, was executed on Monday morning, at Newgate. The crowd was not so great as is usual on such occasions, although a great number of persons had assembled before seven o'clock. A document was written by Connor on Sunday, in which he fully confessed the murder, and attributed the crime to neglect of religious duties and bad company.

DISASTROUS FIRE AND LOSS OF TWO LIVES.—Last Sunday morning, soon after one o'clock, a fire broke out in the lower part of the spacious range of premises in the occupancy of Messrs. Satchell and Robertson, hatters, situate at No. 158, Fenchurch-street, adjoining the Fenchurch Chambers. This occurrence, we are sorry to say, caused the death of the wife and infant child of Mr. Satchell.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

We are happy to find by our latest accounts from Paris that M. Guizot is perfectly convalescent. On Tuesday he resumed his ordinary duties at the Foreign-Office.

The new treaty between England and France for the suppression of the slave trade forms a fertile source for discussion in the French papers, and the most respectable of them congratulate both countries upon the mode in which the vexed question of the right of search has been disposed of.

It is believed that Don Carlos will not be allowed to leave France until the consent of the English Government has been obtained. He wishes to go to Italy.

The Courrier Français states that Prince Jerome Bonaparte, son of the Prince de Montfort, has obtained permission from the French Government to visit his cousin, Louis Napoleon, the prisoner of Ham. It is added, that the object of the Prince's visit to Ham is to make a proposal to the Prince Louis Napoleon, on the part of the French Government, which, if acceded to, will entitle him to the benefit of an amnesty.

The Chamber of Peers has rejected, by a majority of 118 to 28, the proposition for converting the Five per Cent. Stock.

The Minister of Public Works presented to the Chamber of Deputies on Monday three new railroad bills; namely—1st, The one for executing the line from Dijon to Mulhausen: 2nd, An embranchment from Dieppe and Fécamp to the Rouen and Havre Railway; 3rd, An embranchment to Aix from the Avignon and Marseilles line.

One of the Paris journals announces the approaching marriage of the Duke de Bordeaux with a daughter of the Duke de Modena.

SPAIN.

Our letters from Madrid speak of the excitement caused in that city by the arbitrary arrest of two editors of the Clamor Publico, Senors Corradi and Perez Calvo. They were arrested without any warrant, by the mere verbal order of Narvaez. It was on the day following the publication of the reformed constitution that this most flagrant violation of two of its principal articles was perpetrated. The motive assigned for the arrest, was the publication of an article headed "A Chapter of the History of the Hero of Ardoz" (General Narvaez). At twelve o'clock at night the prisoners were informed that they were to be transported without trial to Manilla, and at three o'clock in the morning they were on the road to Cadiz, under a strong escort of cavalry and civil guards. M. Corradi was not even permitted to take leave of his wife and children.

On the 24th ult., the Queen, accompanied by her mother and sister, left Madrid for Barcelona. They reached Aranjuez at seven o'clock p.m. Her Majesty was to leave that residence on the 26th ult., but would not pass through Quintanar, because the small-pox was raging in the town. Prince de Carini, the Neapolitan Minister, was the only member of the Corps Diplomatique who accompanied her Majesty.

SYRIA.

Accounts from Beyrout, of the 17th May, give a most deplorable description of the state of Syria. One letter says:—"A civil war, and one of extermination, reigns at this moment in the Mountain between the Druses and the Christians, and during the last fifteen days the horrors we have seen perpetrated around us are dreadful. On every side the sounds of battle are heard, and nothing is seen but fire and flames—houses, villages, churches, and convents being reciprocally a prey to the flames. We have now before us the appalling spectacle of no less than eleven villages, and a number of Maronite churches and convents in flames; and what is worse, when the Christians are victorious, they enter the Druse villages, putting to the edge of the sword, men, women, and children; the Druses following the example when they are victorious. All the silk-worms of both parties, the sole support of the Syrian population, have been burned. The convents of Maronites and Catholics have not been spared; they have been burned, and the bodies of their priests, after death. have been burned by the Druses."

The Malta Times corroborates this startling picture, and adds:—"We have seen letters from Beyrout to the 14th May, which give a horrible account of Syria in general, and Mount Lebanon in particular. For fifteen days previous wholesale murder, burning, and every possible crime was committed, while the Government would put no check to them. The greater part of the villages and towns in the high lands are in ashes; the Catholic clergy have been murdered. Colonel Rose, our Consul General, made a regular sortie, with a small body of troops formed in haste, and succeeded in saving from destruction about 700 of our fellow Christians. The mania for blood has spread to Palestine. The districts near Jerusalem are in arms, and several European travellers have been murdered. Heaven only knows how this terrible tragedy will end."

UNITED STATES.

The Hibernia has arrived at Liverpool with New York papers to the 18th of May. We are glad to say that their contents are calculated to allay the apprehension which had begun to be felt in England that some inconsiderate conduct on the part of the United States would lead to war. The tone of these papers is entirely pacific. The negotiation on the subject of the Oregon territory is to be resumed. A special Minister is to be sent to England to negotiate. Mr. Calhoun was talked of by some; others point to Mr. Van Buren; but the appointment has not yet taken place.

At Montreal, a smart shock of earthquake had been experienced. The concussion lasted only about a second, but was sufficiently strong to cause the houses to vibrate sensibly. The shock was much more violent than that which occurred in November last.

THE WEST INDIES.

The Thames Royal Mail steamer has arrived with the usual mails from the West Indies, Mexico, &c. Her passage from Bermuda was only of thirteen days and thirteen hours' duration, being, in fact, the quickest yet made by any of the Royal Mail steamers.

The Jamaica papers state that, at Kingston, the most pleasing accounts had been received from the sugar districts. In some parts, the planters were sanguine of producing double the quantity of sugar that was shipped last year, while in every parish a considerable increase was expected. Railways proceed apace. The valuation of land in the parish of St. Catharine's had taken place.

ARRIVAL OF THE OVERLAND MAIL.

INDIA AND CHINA.

The usual Monthly Overland Mail has arrived, bringing accounts to the 1st of May from Bombay, the 21st of April from Delhi, the 22nd from Calcutta, the 23rd from Agra, and the 24th from Madras. The news is of a negative character, no new incident having arisen. It is, nevertheless, satisfactory to know that complete tranquillity continues to pervade British India. The rebellion in the Southern Mahratta country and Suwant Warree has died away; the whole of the rebel chiefs have either been captured by us or are in the hands of the Portuguese authorities at Goa, the latter having guaranteed their safe custody, while the question of their final surrender to us is settled by the Cabinets of Lisbon and London. Scinde continues tranquil, and comparatively healthy.

Sir Charles Napier has returned from the excursion against the hill tribes, in which, at the date of our last letters, he was engaged, and has received high encomiums from the Governor-General.

All the chiefs, save one, are now under the surveillance of the Chief of Khyrpore.

The unsettled state of our north-west frontier, and the internal dissensions of the Sikhs, appear to give uneasiness to the Indian Government.

The news from China is to the 8th of March, but is of little interest. Governor Davis, while on a visit at Macao, had been attacked by some Chinese footpads, who got him down, and were proceeding to strip him, when they were scared away by the appearance of some Portuguese gentlemen of the place.

ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL, CITY-ROAD.—We are happy to find that the sum of £300 has been voted to this ancient and useful Charity, by the Corporation of London, at their sitting on Tuesday last, in aid of the Fund for the Erection of the New Building at Haverstock Hill, for the Reception of 240 Orphan and Destitute Children. The sum required is above £14,000, of which not more than £3500 is raised. We notice that the venerable Member for Middlesex, George Byng, Esq., is a contributor of £105: and that £50 has been contributed, anonymously, during the past month.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

THE MAYNOOTH COLLEGE BILL.

The house was much crowded to-day, in consequence of its being fixed for the discussion of the Government measure for increasing the grant to Maynooth.

The Duke of WELLINGTON moved the second reading of the bill. He traced the origin of the Institution, and did not deny that the proposed measure was inconsistent with the laws by which the Reformation was established; but he contended that it was not inconsistent with the religious principles of the Reformation.

While the Duke of Wellington was proceeding, some sensation was caused in the house by the rising of the Duke of NEWCASTLE to order. He asked the Duke of Wellington if he had the Queen's permission to make this communication to the house?

Lord BROUGHAM: I must say, my lords, it is a most disorderly proceeding thus to interrupt the speech of the noble duke (cheers), instead of waiting until the noble duke had concluded his statement. (Cheers.)

The Duke of NEWCASTLE: My lords, considering the situation which the noble duke occupies in relation to the Sovereign, I deem it a necessary question to put, and one which the noble duke, I conceive, ought to answer. ("No, no," and cries of "Order.")

Lord BROUGHAM, with vehemence: My Lords, I never will sit here to allow any man to stifle or close the discussions of this house upon any measures brought under consideration, on the plea that they cannot be discussed by your lordships without the leave of the Crown. (Cheers.) There is, in fact, but one case in which the leave of the Crown is requisite, and that is a question of taxation connected with matrimonial arrangements. (Hear, hear.)

The Duke of NEWCASTLE: My lords, I felt it my duty to interrupt the noble duke, as I think this is a most improper discussion. (Order, order.)

The Duke of WELLINGTON proceeded. His grace gave no direct answer to the Duke of Newcastle, but said he should have no objection to answer any question which was not put to him in a disorderly manner. He then strongly defended the grant, referred to the state of Ireland, and said it was absolutely hopeless and impossible to carry any measure by violence and tumult in Ireland against the wishes of the Government and Parliament of this country. The Duke of Wellington concluded in these terms:—"Look at our situation of strength at present, and see whether, having maintained this Institution as you have done for fifty years, it would not seem a little like persecution—('hear, hear,' and cheers)—if you were now to turn round and say—"We are aware of the necessity of its continuance, but we will not let it go on any longer.' (Hear, hear.) Would it not look, I ask, a little ike persecuting that party? (Hear, hear.) I say that if you are strong it is your duty not to persecute the people; and, further, it is your duty not even to appear to persecute the people. (Hear, hear.) And I entreat your Lordships to stand by me in enforcing that principle, and to give your unanimous assent to the bill, of which I have now the honour to move the second reading."

The Duke of CAMBRIDGE seconded the motion for the second reading of the bill. He looked upon it, he said, not as a religious, but a political question. He thought it was one of the most conciliatory measures that had been proposed for some time, and he complimented the Government for introducing it.

The Earl of RODEN moved, as an amendment, that the bill should be referred to a Select Committee up-stairs, to inquire into the instruction given in Maynooth. He entered into various details, to prove that the course of education at Maynooth was dangerous to Protestantism.

The Bishop of LONDON supported the amendment, because he thought a case had been made out that rendered an inquiry desirable; and opposed the bill, because it involved a violation of one of the fundamental principles that justified a state in endowing a religious establishment, and because it held out no prospect of accomplishing the end it professed to have in view. He could not consent to a measure which contributed to the support and extension of what he believed, as a Protestant, to be dangerous, if not deadly errors.

The Earl of St. GERMANS supported the bill.

The Duke of MANCHESTER opposed it.

Lord BEAUMONT spoke in favour of the bill.

The Bishop of CASHEL spoke against it.

At one o'clock the debate was adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE COLLEGES (IRELAND) BILL.

The adjourned debate on this bill was resumed by Mr. M. MILNES, who spoke in favour of the measure.

Lord J. RUSSELL gave credit to the Government for wishing to do good by the bill; but condemned the bill itself as lamentably defective and inefficient. His chief objection to it was, that it had not met with the approval of the Roman Catholic Bishops. Lord J. Russell, however, said he should not oppose the second reading of the bill, hoping that it might be so amended in committee as to suit the views of the Roman Catholic Prelates.

Mr. A. B. HOPE spoke against the bill.

Mr. V. Stuart, Mr. G. A. Hamilton, and Mr. B. Osborne, gave a qualified support to it.

Mr. GLADSTONE spoke in defence of the bill.

Mr. Wyse, Mr. Acland, Mr. M. O'Ferrall, Sir R. Peel, Mr. M. J. O'Connell, Mr. Shaw, and Sir V. Blake, addressed the House; but the discussion was not of sufficient interest to deserve analysing.

At a late hour the House divided. The numbers were—

For the second reading	311
For Lord J. Manners's amendment	46
Majority	—265

The bill was therefore read a second time.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

THE ADJOURNED DEBATE.

The Earl of HARDWICKE commenced the adjourned debate on the Maynooth College Bill, with a speech in its favour.

It was also supported by the Earl of CARNARVON.

The Earl of WINCHILSEA opposed it very energetically. He denounced the bill as an inroad upon, and injury to, Protestantism; and said, he should regard its enactment as a national sin. The noble earl warmly denounced the course of instruction at Maynooth. "So help him God," he said, "he verily believed that their Lordships and the Government of this country would fairly expose themselves to the charge of labouring under a mental delusion if ever they should give their sanction to principles of such a character."

The Marquis of NORMANBY supported the bill, as did also the Archbishop of DUBLIN.

The next speaker was Lord DE ROS, in favour of the bill.

The Bishop of EXETER spoke against it. He argued that the doctrines inculcated at Maynooth College taught belief in the dispensing power of the Roman Catholic Church; in the power of deposing temporal Sovereigns; and in the justification of deceiving magistrates, by the committal of gross perjury. To endow this "perjury-teaching College," the Bishop of Exeter said he would be no party. But he was willing to grant education to Ireland. If the Government chose, they might do so in connection with the bill now before the other House of Parliament.

Lord BROUGHAM admitted that very bad doctrine was to be found in the books read at Maynooth; but, if they were raked up, very bad doctrine also might be found in the books read by the divines of the Established Church. As to doctrines of persecution, of burning for heresy, &c., the greatest preacher of persecution that ever lived was John Calvin, who was not only a preacher, but a practiser of it—and a murderer. He contended that the cry that the proposed grant was the first endowment was perfectly absurd, because the preambles of former Acts declared the grant to be an "endowment" in express terms.

At one o'clock in the morning the debate was adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

GRANT TO SIR HENRY POTTINGER.—Mr. HUME moved an address to her Majesty, to grant a pension to Sir H. Pottinger.—Sir R. PEEL said the Crown had already conferred on Sir H. Pottinger all the honorary distinctions it could bestow. With regard to the pension prayed for, the Crown had no power to grant it, owing to a resolution of the House pressed on it by Mr. Hume himself, which prohibited any grant for diplomatic services, unless the recipient had been engaged ten years in active service. Nevertheless, as this was an extraordinary case, he was ready to take the responsibility on himself of advising her Majesty to make the proposed provision for Sir H. Pottinger. The motion was agreed to unanimously.

BURDENS UPON LAND.

Mr. Ward renewed his motion of last year for a Select Committee, to inquire whether there are any peculiar burdens affecting the landed interest of this country, or any peculiar exemptions enjoyed by that interest, and to ascertain their nature and extent. He went over many of his former arguments, denying that there were any peculiar burdens upon land, and insisted that the agriculturists enjoyed several exemptions from taxation.

The motion was opposed by Mr. S. Herbert.

Mr. Corden supported it, and said it was quite ridiculous to talk of the peculiar burdens upon land.

Mr. Newdegate spoke against the motion, and Mr. V. Smith in its favour.

Sir J. Tyrell said that last year he had great confidence in the consistency of her Majesty's Government, and would have gone into the committee if they chose it ; but things had altered since, and he could not now agree to the motion.

After a speech from Dr. Bowring in favour of the motion, the House divided, and the numbers were :—

For the motion	...	...	...	109
Against it	...	...	...	182
Majority	...	...	...	—73

Adjourned at a quarter to one o'clock,

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Wednesday.

RESULT OF THE DEBATE ON THE MAYNOOTH COLLEGE BILL.

The Earl of Clancarty recommenced the debate. He opposed the bill because he could not consent to lend himself in any way to the establishment of a church whose doctrines he abhorred.

The Duke of Cleveland regretted being obliged to differ from many of those with whom he had been in the habit of usually acting, but he felt himself called upon by a sense of duty to support the bill, which recognised no new principle whatever.

Earl Spencer cordially supported the bill, which, however, he did not seem to think went far enough, as he expressed a hope that it would be the precursor of ulterior measures of a similar kind.

The Bishop of Norwich said the measure had his cordial and sincere approbation, considering it as a religious measure, associated with justice and equity, and a Christian measure as carrying out the principle of doing to others as we should wish that others should do unto us.

The Earl of Mornington thought this bill the first step of all that could be adopted with the view of conciliating the great Catholic body of Ireland.

Lord Colchester opposed the bill on the ground that it was not right that the funds of a Protestant State should be applied to the maintenance of such an institution as that of Maynooth.

Lord Monteagle supported the bill, which he pronounced as the wisest and the best that could have been proposed by the Government.

The Bishop of St. David's likewise supported the bill. He asserted that unfair means had been taken to bias public opinion on this question. As to the proposed inquiry into the doctrines taught at Maynooth, he thought such an inquiry unnecessary; but, admitting it to be necessary, he contended that it did not go far enough, and that it ought to take a wider range.

The Earl of Charleville opposed the bill.

Lord Stanley wound up the debate with a defence of the bill. He contended that an inquiry into the system of education at Maynooth would not only be useless, but it would lead to an incessant and daily increasing acerbity of religious animosities among different classes of the Irish people. If he believed this measure likely to injure the Irish Protestant Church, either in its temporalities or spiritual influence, he would not only have refused his assent to it, but have been the first to denounce and resist it to the uttermost. He believed if this measure had any effect at all on the religion of the Roman Catholics, it would be not to make more, but better, Catholics. No new principle was involved in this bill, and the sum they were called on to pay was inconsiderable in comparison with the magnitude of the objects to be gained. If those noble lords who believed that the bill would promulgate error said that it went against their consciences, he could not object to that statement, but he could not allow their consciences to regulate his. (Loud cheers.) If they were not to do anything, on the principle that they were not to promulgate error, they ought not to stop at this bill on this occasion (cheers), for they had been propagating error for the last fifty years by annual votes. Their lordships then divided, and the numbers were :—

For Earl Roden's amendment—
Contents present	...	...	...	165
Non contents present	...	...	...	59
Majority	...	...	...	—106
The house then divided on the original motion :—
For the second reading—
Contents present	...	...	...	144
Proxies ...	...	...	...	82
Total		...	...	— 226
Non-contents present	...	...	...	55
Proxies ...	...	...	...	14
Total		...	...	— 69
Majority for the second reading			...	157

The bill was then read a second time, and their Lordships adjourned at a quarter past four o'clock on Thursday morning.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

Forty members not being present at four o'clock, an adjournment of course took place till Thursday.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

A great many petitions were presented against the Maynooth Grant.

The Debtors and Creditors Act Amendment Bill.—This bill was read a second time.—The House rose at seven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

Railways.—Mr. Labouchere moved for a select committee to consider the best mode of preventing parties presenting railway bills, which could not be passed this session, from being subjected to any unnecessary expense or delay. He dwelt upon the necessity of resorting to some measure to meet the press of railway business, which could only be done by obviating the delays which under the existing system it appeared to be impossible to avoid. It appeared that 243 railway projects had been submitted to the consideration of the House, of which only 103 had been reported to the House, while 140 were still before the various committees at the present day, the 5th of June.—Sir G. Clerk said that Government had turned its attention to the subject, but he did not think the House could well come to any resolution on the subject, pledging them to a particular course of action. Instead of this, he would prefer referring the whole subject to the investigation of a committee, to inquire into the progress of railway business, and its probable future duration, and to report to the House what course it might be desirable to pursue. The right hon. Baronet concluded by moving an amendment to that effect.—Mr. Labouchere assented to the amendment of Sir G. Clerk.

Scotch Banking Bill.—The order of the day was moved for going into Committee on the Scotch Banking Bill. A lengthened discussion ensued on the merits of the Bill; after which the House went into Committee, passed several clauses, and then adjourned at a quarter-past one.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

Their Lordships met at five o'clock. Messengers from the House of Commons brought up the Great North of England and Richmond Railway Bill, the Norwich and Brandon Railway Bill, and several other bills, which were laid on the table.

Earl Fitzhardinge presented petitions from Halifax and other places against any further grant to the College of Maynooth.

The Earl of Powis presented petitions from Montgomeryshire to the same effect.

Their Lordships then adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

Railway Bills.—The Edinburgh and Hawick Railway Bill was read a third time and passed: also, the Great North of England and Richmond Railway Bill, the Yarmouth and Norwich Railway Bill, and the North British Railway Bill.

Lunatics Bill.—Lord Ashley moved for leave to bring in two bills for the regulation of the care and treatment of insane persons in England and Wales. He proposed to repeal the existing law, and to go much further in endeavouring to mitigate by legislation the evils to which lunatics were exposed. He also proposed the establishment of a permanent commission, and to place hospitals for lunatics under proper regulations, in order to ensure that no person should be deprived of his liberty without proper authority, and that, if legally confined, every attention should be paid to his wants and comforts. A power should also be given to prevent the improper detention of pauper lunatics. The noble Lord then stated the rules and regulations which he proposed to enforce in respect to houses in which lunatics were confined.—Sir J. Graham said he had great satisfaction in seconding the motion, and, on the part of the Government, expressed concurrence with the measure. He paid a high compliment to Lord Ashley.—Several hon. members expressed their approval of the course taken by Lord Ashley. Leave was given to bring in the bill; and, at seven o'clock, the House adjourned till Monday.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

The Royal Family.—The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Prince of Leiningen, and attended by the Countess of Gainsborough and the Honourable Calvert Grey, visited the Floricultural Show at the Gardens in the Regent's Park on Wednesday morning. Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, accompanied by the Princess Mary, also visited the floral exhibition. The Royal Family were taken airings in the Royal Gardens of Buckingham Palace. The Royal dinner party at Buckingham Palace included her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, and their Highnesses the Duke and Duchess de Nemours.

The Queen Dowager.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager has recovered from her recent slight indisposition, and since Monday has daily taken carriage airings in the parks. Her Majesty will leave Marlborough House on Monday next for Bushy Park.

Arrival of the Duke and Duchess de Nemours.—The Duke and Duchess de Nemours, attended by La Baronne de Finguerlin and M. Borel de Bretizel, left Boulogne at half past eight o'clock on Wednesday morning, and were conveyed across the Channel in the Queen of the Belgians steam-packet to Folkestone. Their Royal Highnesses travelled to town by a special train on the South-Eastern Railway, and on arriving at the Bricklayers' Arms Station, were received by the Marquis of Ormonde, Lord in Waiting on the Queen, and Captain Francis Seymour, Groom in Waiting on Prince Albert. The illustrious party entered two of the Queen's carriages and four, which were in readiness at the station, and proceeded to Buckingham Palace, where they arrived at twenty minutes past two o'clock. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent paid a visit to the illustrious visitors soon after their arrival at the Palace.

Death of the Dowager Lady Arundel.—We have to announce the demise of the above noble lady, at Loughborough, Leicester, on Monday. Her ladyship was only daughter of the first Marquis of Buckingham, and sister to the late Duke and to Lord Nugent. Her Ladyship married the late Lord Arundel of Wardour, by whom she has left no issue.

Election of Prince Albert as Governor of Bethlehem Hospital.—On Monday Prince Albert was elected as Governor of Bethlehem Hospital, with the usual ceremonies. His Royal Highness was conducted up the Great Hall by the Lord Mayor and Sir P. Laurie, followed by the Aldermen bearing green staves. On the Prince taking his seat, Sir P. Laurie addressed his Royal Highness, and then presented him with a staff, as an emblem of office, and also a copy of the rules and regulations of the Hospital. His Royal Highness then shook hands with the Lord Mayor, Sir P. Laurie, and the mover and seconder of the address upon the occasion. The other Aldermen were presented to the Prince, after which his Royal Highness inspected the magnificent pictures which decorate the splendid hall.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Death on the Wedding Day.—The following melancholy occurrence took place on Monday week, at Glossop, Derbyshire :—Mr. John Rusley, an independent gentleman of Glossop, verging on the allotted period of "threescore years and ten," and wearied with single blessedness, accompanied by a blushing bride who numbered sixty summers, repaired with a gay wedding party, consisting of the bride's fair daughter, Mrs. Hurst, to Manchester, in order to be joined together in holy matrimony. The vows were registered at the altar, and the nuptial knot tied, and all went "merry as a marriage bell." The bride and bridegroom, after spending a day of bliss at Manchester, returned home to Glossop, where they arrived with the shades of evening. On Mr. Rusley retiring to rest, he complained of a severe pain in the head, and continued to grow worse, and, some alarming symptoms appearing, two surgeons were immediately sent for ; but, alas! medical assistance was of no avail; Death had summoned the bridegroom to the narrow bed appointed for all the living; he expired in a few hours.

Public Parks in Manchester.—The Park Committee of Manchester have, within the last seven weeks, purchased sites for three public parks. For the last purchase, which consists of 31 acres of freehold land, in the township of Bradford, the price was £6200, or about 10d. per square yard. The two sites previously purchased (Endham hall and Lark-hall estates), cost, the former, £7250, and the latter, £7000. As upwards of £31,000 have been collected, the committee have still a considerable sum at their disposal.

The Late Duel at Gosport.—Death of Mr. Seton.—We regret to announce the death of Mr. Seton. He suffered a painful operation last Saturday, and appeared to be going on very comfortably until Sunday night, or rather Monday morning, about two o'clock, when a decided change for the worse took place. About five o'clock on Monday morning some medicine was administered by Dr. Stewart, who had remained with Mr. Seton, the whole of the previous night, but the patient was very ill. It soon became evident that he could not long survive, and about seven o'clock on Monday evening Mrs. Seton took leave of him, as did also his sister and mother. He appeared quite sensible until within five minutes of his death, which took place without a struggle at twenty-five minutes to eight o'clock on that evening. An inquest was commenced on the body on Tuesday, at the Guildhall. There are a great many witnesses to examine, and it is thought the proceedings will last several days. On Tuesday, the only evidence bearing particularly on the occurrence was that of Mr. Hollingsworth, one of the proprietors of the King's Rooms, Southsea, where the ball took place. That gentleman said, in the course of his evidence, that he was not aware of any dispute having taken place on the evening in question. He added, I did not observe anything more in the conduct of Mr. Seton and Mr. Hawkey than in any other gentlemen who were present that evening. —Coroner: What grounds had you for believing Mr. Hawkey and Mr. Seton were on friendly terms on leaving the card-room?—Witness: On leaving the card-room, Mr. Hawkey and Mr. Seton went into the ball-room together. Mr. Seton crossed the ball-room to where Mrs. Hawkey was seated, and brought her to her husband (Mr. Hawkey), who remained near my table. They all entered into conversation together, and appeared to me to be laughing. When you come out of the card-room door there is a slight recess you have to pass to the ball-room. The whole of them went from my table to the ball-room. This was a little after eleven o'clock.—By the Jury: Mrs. Hawkey did not go into the card-room on that evening.—On Wednesday, the Jury were principally occupied in hearing the evidence of the surgeon as to the nature of the injuries received. The proceedings were adjourned till Thursday.

THE GALAGO.

In the above Sketch we present our readers with a portrait from the life, of a most singular and interesting rarity which has just reached our shores, being the first of his race that has been seen alive in Europe. It belongs to the genus Galago, a group of Mammalia of which our knowledge is extremely limited, all its species being found only in the barbarous and little-known countries that border the eastern coast of Africa. They are all arboreal, and of strictly nocturnal habits, never venturing from their retreats while the faintest gleam of daylight is visible ; but at the approach of night they become exceedingly active, springing from tree to tree with the quickness and much of the action of squirrels : the day is spent in the hollow of decayed trees. They feed on gum and pulpy fruits, to which there is some reason to believe, insects may be added. They are closely allied to the Lemurs, and the genus has been named by Illiger, the French naturalist, Otolicnus.

The present specimen was brought from Zanguebar (frequently confounded with Zanzibar, a neighbouring island), in the latitude of about 2 deg. 50 m. S.—one of the hottest regions on the face of the globe. The animal is, consequently, very sensitive to the sudden changes of our northern climate, and requires much care to preserve it from their baneful effects. Its remarkable characters are the large, bare, patulous ears, the great size of the orbits, and prominence of the eyes, which at once enable us to decide upon its nocturnal characteristics. The anterior extremities are short and slender, compared with the posterior, which are long, and somewhat robust. They are terminated with four well-separated fingers, and an opposable thumb, which give that power of grasping an object with precision, and retaining it with force, that distinguish the other quadrumana. It is particularly tame and frolicsome, and does not seem quite happy unless when being fondled and petted. During the night it delights in active motion, climbing and leaping with surprising agility, and uttering a loud clucking noise, which ends with a sharp, shrill call, of astonishing volume, as proceeding from so small an animal.

It is in the possession of Mr. Warwick, the naturalist, to whom we are indebted for the substance of the foregoing particulars. Some important information in a hitherto obscure department of zoological science will, probably, result from the observation of this interesting specimen.

CHIMPANZEE AT THE GARDENS OF THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY, REGENT'S PARK.

This fine female Chimpanzee arrived at the Zoological Gardens on the 10th of May ; having been purchased by the Society, of Messrs. Coleman, Frokhart, and Co., for £300. She was brought to England in the Nunez, (belonging to Foster, Smith, and Co.), from Rio Nunez, near Sierra Leone, where she had been kept by Mr. Campbell, for more than three years and a half, running at liberty. She has had the fever ; and, while on board ship, it is said she had an inveterate dislike to the black men, with whom she would fight lustily.

It is singular that she resists every attempt to correct her, fighting with the utmost determination ; every other animal, even the Ourang, fears its keeper. The first day of the Chimpanzee's arrival at the Gardens, she tore out three of the strong iron bars of her cage, which have been since strengthened. A temporary nail was driven about half its length, into a piece of wood, about 6 inches long and 3½ square ; she held the wood between her feet, and doubling the nail backwards and forwards, broke it short off. When in a passion, she tears her hair, and rolls herself on the ground violently. Her table is supplied from the keeper's, and she shares in everything and anything he has ; she eats her egg with a spoon, takes her grog daily, and 'tis said, that when on board ship, she mixed the latter herself. She will lock and unlock a door, or drawer, will thread any needle ; she cannot be taken in by the same trick twice, and will imitate almost anything that is done before her. She is considered by Professor Owen to be about nine years old, which well agrees with all accounts of her previous life. She weighs 52 lbs. ; measures 2 feet 2 inches round the chest, and is 3 feet 2 inches high ; or, as she will not stand upright to be measured, probably her height is nearly 3 feet 6 inches.

CINCINNATI.

By the packet Hibernia some interesting intelligence has just been received from "the Queen of the West," as the flourishing city of Cincinnati is justly styled. A Correspondent of the New York Daily Tribune writes :—"Cincinnati is advancing with giant strides to opulence and greatness ; and a strong hope is entertained that some great good will yet be done in Kentucky, which will reflect honour on her character, and give prosperity to her people. I allude, of course, to the movements of the yet-to be-greater C. M. Clay ! We have lately been favoured with a visit from a distinguished stranger in our waters—not a "long, low, black schooner," but an exquisitely-modelled and highly-finished bark, built at Marietta, somewhere up the river"

This same vessel was among the recent arrivals at Liverpool, and is quoted as a very novel and remarkable feature of the enterprise of the Western States. The account states that—"An American ship, called the Muskingham, Captain Wells, of 350 tons, built at Marietta, seventy miles above Cincinnati, and no less than 1700 miles from Salt Water, arrived direct from Cincinnati with a cargo of oil-cake and Ohio provisions. Here we may have a direct communication opened up, in one bottom, as the nautical phrase is, between the rich plains of the Ohio, in the "Far West," and our manufacturing districts. But what extraordinary reflections arise, when we think that, in reading the political news from America, we find that the Western States are always reckoned upon as those which exhibit the strongest anti-English feeling ! A ship passing from Cincinnati to Liverpool seems to overleap all ideas of custom-houses."

Our Illustration, from an original drawing, shows this fine city, the largest town in Ohio, upon the north bank of the Ohio, and twenty miles above the mouth of the Great Miami. With the exception of New Orleans, Cincinnati is now the largest town in the United States, west of the Alleghany Mountains. The town is situated partly on the first and partly on the second bank of the river, and is surrounded by a range of finely-wooded hills. It is the seat of numerous manufacturing establishments ; and its great trade is chiefly carried on by steam-vessels. Mr. Dickens thus characterises the place in his "American Notes" :—

"Cincinnati is a beautiful city; cheerful, thriving, and animated. I have not often seen a place that commends itself so favourably and pleasantly to a stranger at the first glance as this does; with its clean houses of red and white, its well-paved roads, and footways of bright tile. Nor does it become less prepossessing on a closer acquaintance The streets are broad and airy, the shops extremely good, the private residences remarkable for their elegance and neatness. There is something of invention and fancy in the varying styles of these latter erections, which, after the dull company of the steam-boat, is perfectly delightful, as conveying an assurance that there are such qualities still in existence. The disposition to ornament these pretty villas and render them attractive, leads to the culture of trees and flowers, and the laying out of well-kept gardens, the sight of which, to those who walk along the streets, is inexpressibly refreshing and agreeable. I was quite charmed with the appearance of the town, and its adjoining suburb of Mount Auburn; from which the city, lying in an amphitheatre of hills, forms a picture of remarkable beauty, and is seen to great advantage.

"Cincinnati is honourably famous for its free-schools, of which it has so many, that no person's child among its population can, by possibility, want the means of education, which are extended, upon an average, to four thousand pupils, annually.

"As in every other place I visited, the Judges here were gentlemen of high character and attainments. I was in one of the courts for a few minutes, and found it like those to which I have already referred. A nuisance cause was trying; there were not many spectators ; and the witnesses, counsel, and jury, formed a sort of family circle, sufficiently jocose and snug. The society with which I mingled was intelligent, courteous, and agreeable. The inhabitants of Cincinnati are proud of their city, as one of the most interesting in America: and with good reason: for beautiful and thriving as it is now, and containing, as it does, a population of fifty thousand souls, but two-and-fifty years have passed away since the ground on which it stands (bought at that time for a few dollars) was a wild wood, and its citizens were but a handful of dwellers in scattered log huts upon the river's shore."

THE PERTH "INCHES."

The inhabitants of the "fair citie" of Perth were some few months since thrown into consternation by a threatened invasion of one of their most cherished rights. It was proposed that the beautiful playing, drying, and promenading grounds, known as the North and South Inches,—which are the boast of Perth, the envy of the other Scottish cities, and the admiration of every stranger who ascends the flowing Tay—should be cut up by certain railroad termini. The gude folk were naturally much shocked at this proposition, and made a sturdy opposition to its being carried into effect. They met, made speeches, and, not content with merely taking, sent up an active agent to the "D.D." Committee in Parliament, to put their ban on such a desecration of their beautiful meadows. They so far succeeded in their object that the Committee have decided to restrain the Scottish Central Railway Company from executing that portion of its works which was designed to cross the "Inch," until it shall have been ascertained, by due inquiry, that no other site, affording equally favourable levels, can be found, as a common terminus for this, and the several other railways about to centre in Perth. So far, the "public" of Perth have gained their point; but time will show whether they will be able to hold their own picturesque play-ground in all its verdure and rurality as heretofore, the decision being far from final.

CINCINNATI.—FROM AN ORIGINAL DRAWING.

The uninitiated will require to be told that "Inch" is another word for island; the two fine pieces of ground which lie south and north of Perth, therefore, derive their name from having been anciently isolated by little channels or runlets from the Tay, though these have been filled up for centuries. Through the South Inch runs the great road from Edinburgh and the South of Britain, and is bordered by a beautiful avenue of trees; with which, indeed, the entire space is plentifully furnished. The North Inch, on the contrary, is perfectly bare; but it has all the charm which is generally attached to a fine green sward stretching along the edge of a noble river. Historical associations are, moreover, more copiously connected with it than with the South Inch. After the rebellion of 1745, a body of the Hessian troops were called over to keep the Highlanders in order; and, for a long time, they encamped on this spot, leaving traces of their campaigning, which have not yet been obliterated. But that which has given by far the greatest interest to Perth and its environs was the romantic combat which took place on the North Inch during the reign of Robert the Third, and which furnished Sir Walter Scott with the incident on which he founded his popular tale of "The Fair Maid of Perth." The historical circumstances (which those who have read the novel will perceive were but little departed from) are simply these:—An old and deadly feud existed between the two clans of the Mac Kays and the Mac Intoshes, which both parties at length agreed to decide by a personal combat of thirty picked men.

CHIMPANZEE, AT THE ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

GALAGO.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

The King, hoping that this fight would prevent further brawling and bloodshed, not only consented to the combat, but determined to preside at it, and appointed the North Inch of Perth as the battle field. "There was erected," says Sir Walter Scott, with historical truth, "a strong palisade, enclosing on three sides a space of 150 yards in length, and 74 in width; the fourth side of the lists was sufficiently fenced by the river. An amphitheatre, for the accommodation of spectators, surrounded the palisade, leaving a large space free, to be occupied by armed men on foot and horseback, and for the more ordinary class of spectators. At the extremity of the lists which was nearest to the city, there was a range of elevated galleries, for the King and his courtiers, so highly decorated with rustic treillage, intermingled with golden ornaments, that the spot retains to this day the name of the Golden or Gilded Arbour." History supplies us with the rest of the story:—

"The mountain minstrelsy sounded the pibrochs or battle tunes of the rival clans; but when the sixty combatants appeared, the bagpipes were silenced by an order from the King. All was ready; the belligerents were arrayed; when it was discovered that instead of thirty, only twenty-nine Mac Intoshes had mustered; one of them having basely absconded, from fear. Proceedings were stayed, and it was proposed that one of the Mac Kays should withdraw, so as to make the numbers equal. Not one of them would, however, leave the ground, nor would the rest fight till the sides were made equal. In this dilemma, a Perth saddler, named Harry Wynde, offered to take the place of the absentee for the fee of half a French dollar. The terms were accepted. The battle was commenced, and carried on with great fury on both sides; at length, twenty-nine of the Mac Kays were slain, whilst Harry Wynde and ten of the Mac Intoshes remained on the field. The last of the Mac Kays, seeing his case hopeless against such odds, jumped into the Tay, swam across it, and escaped, leaving the Mac Intoshes completely victorious."

THE INCH OF PERTH.

It will be seen by our engraving that one of the purposes to which the Inches are now put, is of a far less romantic character than their ancient uses. That part of the Inch seen in our engraving, is the public drying and bleaching ground: upon it the good housewives spread their linen, which is watched to prevent abstraction. Such convenient "greens" are common to every town in Scotland. Though, in the olden time, chiefly devoted to martial exercises, it was not often that these beautiful spots were the scenes of such barbarous exhibitions as that which we have described. Indeed, the principal use to which they have always been devoted, has been healthful games and recreations; the "Royal" game of golf still retaining its ascendancy amongst the worthy burghers. It would, therefore, be a sad pity at this time—when every effort is being made to provide open spaces for the recreation of the hard-working populations of other towns—if the city of Perth were to have such a long-enjoyed privilege curtailed by railway encroachments.

"REFRACTION," THE WINNER OF "THE OAKS."—DRAWN BY HERRING.

THE "WINNER OF THE OAKS."

We present to our readers a Portrait of "Refraction," the winner of "the Oaks." She is the property of the Duke of Richmond; and, at Epsom, was ridden by the Bell, brother of F. Bell, who piloted the winner of "the Derby."

SHREWSBURY SHOW.

The fine old town of Shrewsbury has been, "tyme out of mynde," celebrated for its pageants and festal shows; but, that called, par excellence, "Shrewsbury Show," is stated by a local historian, Mr. Henry Pidgeon, to be perhaps, with the exception of Coventry, the only one of the kind in the kingdom. It originated in the celebration of the splendid festival of Corpus Christi, in the Church of Rome, which was observed with much pomp and solemnity by the masters and wardens of the different trading companies, the members of the Corporation, the parochial clergy, and the religious fraternities of the town.

The procession, so far back as the 27th of Henry VI. appears to have been "tyme out of mynde," and which several of the guilds were obliged to support. This is apparent from their "compositions," or by-laws, containing regulations to that effect. That of the Weavers (anno 1444) provides that certain fines shall be applied to the "sustentacon and encreece of the lyghte of the seyd craft of wev's at the feast of Corpus X p'i daye." The composition of the Mercers, Ironmongers, and Goldsmiths, directs that they shall provide "300 mede of wax yearly, to be burnt in the p'cession of the feast of Corpus X p'i."

After the Reformation, the religious part of the ceremony was set aside; and, as a substitute, the second Monday after Trinity Sunday adopted as a day of recreation and feasting, on Kingsland, where each company had a small inclosure, within which was a building, called "an arbour," surrounded by trees, and where refreshment was accustomed to be liberally provided by the respective trades.

The Show is continued; but times are changed; and, as the spectacle, was shorn of its religious beams by the Reformation, so the "Reform" of our own time has stripped the pageant of its civil splendour. The Mayor and Corporation no longer grace the Show with their presence, nor do they contribute towards the expenses of the Exhibition; the cost being entirely defrayed by the junior members of the various trades; and, with all these drawbacks, we are happy to record that the affair is still an interesting and attractive memorial of the olden time, and affords an annual treat of hospitality and good cheer.

Monday week (the 26th ult.) was the day of this year's commemoration. The Salopians were up and stirring at an early hour and the good people of Shrewsbury were aroused by the firing of cannon, and by the ringing of the bells of the various churches; whilst thousands of spectators poured into the town to witness the day's spectacle. About mid-day, the several Companies were marshalled in the market-place previous to their procession to their several arbours at Kingsland; when the numerous bands, the waving flags, and the presence of so many dignitaries on horseback, in front of the ancient town-hall, presented a very imposing scene. The Companies having ranged themselves, the procession advanced in the order represented in the Engraving, from a sketch made by our artist on the spot; the costumes and other items being subsequently perfected.

SHREWSBURY SHOW.—THE PROCESSION

SHOEMAKERS' COMPANY.

Banners and Flags. Arms of the Town and Company.

Fig. 1 and 2, Crispin and Crispianus. Crispin wore the costume of a cavalier of the reign of Charles I., in buff jerkin, large boots, and high crowned hat, and he bore in his hand a large semicircular cutting-knife. Crispianus wore a military uniform of the reign of George, long tail, huge jack-boots, cocked hat, &c.

BUTCHERS' COMPANY.

Banners and Flags.

Fig. 3. The King of the Company on horseback, wearing a glittering crown, surmounted by plumes of variously-coloured feathers; and bearing in his hand a golden cleaver, emblazoned with the Crest of the Company.

MASONS' AND BUILDERS' COMPANY.

Banners and Flags.

Fig. 4. King Henry the Eighth arranged in the glory of the Field of the Cloth of Gold, and bearing a baton; dress, white, red, and gold

BARBERS' COMPANY.

Banners and Flags.

Fig. 5. The Queen of England on a white palfrey: her Majesty wore a dress of white satin, trimmed with flowers, a crimson velvet robe; and wore the sceptre and mound.

FLAX-DRESSERS' COMPANY.

Banners and Flags.

Fig. 6. St. Catherine on horseback, wearing a white satin robe, crimson velvet, mantle fastened at the shoulder, gold tiara, and long lace veil; and bearing in her hand a wheel and distaff, with white flax tied with blue ribbon.

PAINTERS' AND BOOKSELLERS' COMPANY.

Banners and Flags.

Fig. 7. Peter Paul Rubens, on horseback, in costume as painted by himself; bearing a golden palette and maul-stick in one hand, and a roll of paper in the other; but these incumbrances did not prevent him "witching the world with noble horsemanship," and his gaily-caparisoned steed curvetted to the great delight of the spectators.

CARPENTERS' AND CABINET-MAKERS' COMPANY.

Banners and Flags.

Fig. 8. A Moorish Prince, javelin in hand, gorgeously attired.

The procession advanced down Pride Hill, to the Market-square, where they formed a tableau, while the National Anthem was played. They then marched down Mardol to Kingsland; and, on arriving there, they filed to their different arbours to partake of the substantial viands which had been prepared for them, and where each Quaff'd the invigorating cheer.

The whole proceeding was conducted with the greatest decorum, and will be long remembered as one of the pleasantest shows they had enjoyed for many years.

The children of the different schools were feasted in the greater moral safety and security of retirement; the vicar of St. Chad's generously treating 400 children of the schools of the parish with refreshments, at his own cost.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 1845.

As we anticipated would be the case, the Maynooth College Bill has been carried through the House of Peers, with less opposition than it met in the Commons. The debate, with the unusual circumstance of two adjournments, did not terminate till four o'clock on Thursday morning, when the light of a summer's dawn blending with the beams of almost expiring tapers, fell on a crowded, exhausted, and yet anxious assembly. No question that has been discussed in the Peers since the accession of the present Ministry to power, has excited such interest. The body of the House was crowded each night with Peers; the galleries were filled to excess with strangers, appearing determined to sit out the debate, but thinning off towards midnight—we suppose as approaching slumber impaired their power of attention, and gave a sort of drowsiness to what at an earlier hour might have seemed eloquence. Many Members of Parliament, several Dissenting Ministers and Clergymen, and a few Catholic Priests, were present on the different evenings, and one or two Peeresses occupied seats for a few hours in the reporters' gallery, but left early, probably for more pleasant engagements elsewhere. In short, the discussion was felt to be a most important one. The speeches bore, of course, a general resemblance on each side to those delivered during the discussion in the Lower House. The most interest was felt in the addresses expected from the Bishops. The Right Reverend Prelates who spoke were equally divided; the Bishop of London, the Bishop of Exeter, and the Bishop of Cashel opposed the measure: the Archbishop of Dublin, the Bishop of Saint David's, and the Bishop of Norwich supported it. In theological zeal, and fervent assertion of Protestant principle, the Prelates were far exceeded by the Lay Lords, Earls Roden and Winchilsea; and if their speeches were compared, the Bishops might almost be accused of luke-warmness. Having touched on the merits of the question on former occasions, it would be superfluous to go again into the arguments here. The debate received additional interest from the re-appearance, as a speaker, of Earl Spencer, the Lord Althorp of the palmy days of the Whigs, after a silence of, we may say, some years. The Majority in favour of the Second Reading was 157.

We are glad to see that, in deference to public opinion, Sir James Graham has issued instructions to the governor of every gaol in the country, through the Magistrates, regulating the conduct on those points in which, in some recent cases, decency, humanity, and religion, were so outraged. The last paragraph of the instructions refers to what was so generally censured by the press, the admittance of the public as to a show, to the condemned sermon; it says:—

No person except the proper authorities, the prison officers, and the police on duty, shall be admitted into the interior of the prison on the day of an execution, nor on occasion of a condemned sermon, nor during the performance of divine service after sentence of death has been pronounced. Provided that this rule shall not be interpreted to exclude a minister of a religious persuasion differing from that of the Established Church from attending, at his own request, a convict of such persuasion.

We hope this order will be rigorously acted on, and that the exclusion of those Mr. Sheriff Sidney calls the "emissaries of the press," will be strictly enforced. What right have the Sheriffs to expect this class of persons to assist them in their duty—that of receiving any last declarations or requests from the criminal? Yet the order, reasonable and proper as it is, seems to have annoyed these functionaries. At a Meeting of the Court of Aldermen on Wednesday, Mr. Sheriff Sidney persisted in contending that the "public press" ought to be present on such occasions; for this exquisite reason—that, from its exclusion at Tawell's execution, "an impression got abroad that the murderer was not executed at all!" Really, if the public cannot believe its own eyes, when an occurrence takes place in the presence of thousands of witnesses, we do not see how it is to be convinced when it only reads of that occurrence in a journal. But the Alderman is peculiarly happy on this repulsive subject; he has yet another reason even more absurd than the first:—

It happened that Hocker, upon being pinioned, fainted, and was with much difficulty recovered from his exhausted condition. If he had died at that moment of excitement, it would have been hard, in all probability, to induce the public to think that the negligence of the public officers had not supplied the convict with an opportunity of destroying himself, if the reporters of the public press had not been present to witness what took place.

So the press is to attend as checks on the integrity of the "public officers," the Sheriffs we suppose included! We congratulate the press on its accession of dignity. The Sheriffs are the sworn witnesses of the execution, and are bound to attend to everything connected with it. We hope the character of those who fill the office will always be a guarantee to the public that no such connivance is practised; but they must not under any pretence be allowed to shuffle a part of their disagreeable duties on the "press." Mr. Sheriff Sidney seems inexhaustible; he has yet another reason:—

He did not think that an ancient law, which had been found to be a good one, the law of public executions, ought to be set aside upon a mere recommendation of a man in office.

Publicity is not to be "set aside" at all; the people will not be defrauded of the horrid and demoralising spectacle; but the disgusting details of the last moments of a criminal, which are useless for all the purposes of justice, and which render the public act still more brutalising by the circulation they obtain through the whole empire, will no longer be given. Between the suppression of the practice of gratifying a diseased curiosity, and making executions "private," there is a wide difference, which we trust the Court of Aldermen will not overlook.

THE QUEEN'S COSTUME BALL.

The Queen gave a Bal Costumé yesterday (Friday) evening, at Buckingham Palace, at which all the guests appeared in the costume of the period between 1740 and 1750. The company numbered about twelve hundred, and included the diplomatic corps and the principal foreigners of distinction at present in the metropolis, all of whom adopted the foreign costumes of that date, appearing in the uniform of their respective nations. The nobility and gentry present in numerous cases adopted the costumes of members of their families living at that period, the dresses being copied from family portraits with the greatest exactness. Every possible variety of colour, texture, and material, and the greatest magnificence of embroidery and jewelled decoration consistent with propriety, were brought to bear on this quaint and antiquated costume, and the result was a harmony and unity of effect perfectly surprising.

Most of the gentlemen appeared in velvet coats—crimson, black, or blue—most richly embroidered with gold or silver, or trimmed with gold lace; powdered wigs were universal, and the style of coiffure was so complete as to render recognition, except among intimate friends, difficult. Gentlemen holding military commissions in her Majesty's service appeared as nearly as possible, in the corresponding uniforms of their respective services at the period selected for the fête. Thus, the Duke of Wellington appeared in the uniform of the Duke of Cumberland of that day; the Earl of Cardigan in the uniform of the 11th Dragoons at the battle of Culloden, and the Marquis of Londonderry in the dress of a cavalry officer, of the time; Lord Forester appeared in the dress of captain of the honourable corps of Gentlemen Pensioners; the Duke of Rutland was dressed in the full costume of a Knight of the Garter a century back; the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the dress of his predecessor in office of the period; Mr. Curzon in a very curious Venetian costume; the Duke of Beaufort, the Earl of Wilton, Earl Fitzhardinge, Lord Shelburne, Mr. Nugent Vaughan, Lord Morpeth, Lord Stanley, and Viscount Alford were distinguished by the richness of their costumes. The Earl of Liverpool, the Earl Delawarr, and Lord Ernest Bruce, the great officers of the household, appeared in the dress of their respective offices, and were distinguished by the extraordinary magnificence of their apparel.

Many Scottish gentlemen wore the Highland costume of the time, which, though retaining all its peculiarity, yet was sufficiently identified with the age, in the coat and high heeled shoe, so as to harmonise completely with the rest. Among the most beautiful Scottish dresses were those of the Marquis of Breadalbane, the Master of Strathallan, and Capt. A. Gordon Cumming. The officers who wore infantry dresses displayed the long white gaiters which remained in vogue even up to the reign of George IV. The cavalry all wore high military boots, and some of them the crimson silk sword belt fringed with gold, which gave them very much the appearance of a modern Grand Cross of the Bath. The cavalry were also distinguished by the three-cornered hat, while the infantry displayed the old-fashioned high-peaked Grenadier cap. The dresses of the ladies did not display an equal variety with those of the gentlemen; the style of all was the same, the only difference being in the costliness of the material, the taste in the choice of colours, and the display of jewels in decorations. A few appeared in little velvet hats, with one or two feathers, but they were exceptions. The general head-dress was the hair powdered, a ridge of curls round the forehead and face, and the hair falling back with curls on the shoulders, or else wigs which came still closer to the fashion of the day.

Some of the ladies made a difference in the fashion of wearing their trains; instead of starting from the waist, it fell at once from the shoulders, not being confined at all at the waist, but descending at once to the bottom of the skirt. The material of which these were composed was generally old brocaded silks and satins, many of them embroidered in gold and silver, or worked in needlework; the trains were looped up with golden clasps, bunches of flowers, and bouquets of brilliants and precious stones, displaying dresses of old point, Valenciennes, or Guipure lace, not too long to conceal the high-heeled, sharp-pointed, and diamond-ornamented white satin shoe.

The ladies wore hoops, which very much extended the dress on each side, without adding to the rotundity of the figure. The effect of powder rendered the complexion of the younger ladies much more brilliant, and added not a little to the effect of this magnificent fête.

Among the dresses distinguished for their splendour were those of the Duchess of Sutherland, the Marchioness of Ailesbury, the Marchioness of Douro, and Miss Burdett Coutts.

The pages of honour were dressed in the complete costume of the period, in miniature, and having a large white satin bow, or shoulder knot, on the right shoulder.

Among the earlier arrivals were those of Sir R. Peel, the Earl of Aberdeen, Sir James Graham, Marquis of Abercorn, Sir Edward Codrington, the French Ambassador, the Duchess of Sutherland, Marquis and Marchioness of Lorn, Marquis and Marchioness Clanricarde, Mr. William Rose, Lord Ebrington, Lord and Lady Wharncliffe, Earl and Countess of Zetland, Earl and Countess Listowel, Miss Wyndham, the American Minister, Earl and Countess Kinnoul, Viscount Dupplin, the Duke of Beaufort, Lord and Lady Stanley, Countess of Verulam, Earl of Clare, Lord and Lady Kinnaird, Lord Foley, Sir John Hobhouse, Right Hon. Sidney Herbert, Lord Rivers, Lord Saltoun, the Lord-Chancellor and Lady Lyndhurst, the Master of the Rolls and Lady Langdale, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram and the Misses Wigram, the Speaker, Mrs. Shaw Lefevre and the Misses Lefevre, Lord and Lady John Russell, Honourable Miss Lister, Mr. Heary Hallam, Lord and Lady Lyttelton. Marquis and Marchioness of Douro, Sir George Cockburn, the Right Hon. Thomas Pemberton Leigh; Sir Augustus, Lady, and Misses Clifford, Viscount and Lady Marianne Alford, Mr. Nugent Vaughan, Viscountess Forbes, Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston, Duke and Duchess of Bedford, Viscount and Lady Sarah Ingestre, Lords Adolphus and Frederick Fitzclarence, Marquis of Salisbury, Marquis of Lansdowne, the Duke of Wellington, the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk, Hon. W. Cowper, Mr. C. Wood, the Marquis of Breadalbane, Viscount and Viscountess Maynard, Lord and Lady Claud Hamilton, Lord and Lady John Churchill; Mr., Lady C., and Miss Sanford; Marquis of Abercorn, Colonel and Lady Alice Peel, Lord and Lady Ashley, Duke and Duchess of Buckingham, Sir Watkin W. Wynn, the Earl of Euston, the Earl and Countess of Lincoln, Marquis of Northampton, Lord Stavordale, the Earl and Countess of Malmesbury, Marquis and Marchioness of Westminster, Lady Elizabeth Grosvenor, Sir R. and Lady Gardiner, Earl and Countess of Verulam, Lady Jane Grimston, Lady Fanny Howard, Mdlle. d'Este, Earl and Countess of Carnarvon, Major and Mrs. Weymouth, Lord and Lady Southampton, Lord and Lady Norreys, Earl of Mansfield, Lord and Lady Cremorne, Garter King of Arms, Earl Fitzwilliam, Ladies Fitzwilliam (2), Marquis of Londonderry, Viscount and Viscountess Newport, Lord and Lady Wenlock, Hon. Miss Lawley, Viscount Clive, Lord and Lady Dalmeny, Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Percival, Earl and Countess of Antrim, Earl and Countess Powis, Ladies C. and Lucy Herbert, Lord and Lady Carrington, Lord and Lady Denman, Marquis of Worcester, Duke and Duchess of Cleveland, Baroness and Miss de Rothschild, Countess of Rosebery, the Ladies Primrose, Lord and Lady John Russell, Earl and Countess of Rosslyn, Earl and Countess of Arundel and Surrey, Mr. and Mrs. Forbes Mackenzie, Earl and Countess Listowel, Earl and Countess of Zetland, Lord and Lady Ashburton, Lord and Lady Byron, Mr. Edward and Lady Emily Foley, Marquis of Granby, the Misses Baring, Earl and Countess Cadogan, the Ladies Cadogan, Countess Delawarr, Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter, Lady Mary Sackville West, Viscount Morpeth, Lord Foley, the Duke and Duchess of Richmond, the Marquis of Winchester, the Countess of Pembroke, the Earl and Countess of Disart, Viscount Goderich, Lord John Manners, Lord and Lady Portman, Sir James Clark, Lord and Lady Worsley, Dowager Countess of Essex, Mr. and Miss Holford, the Earl of Mexborough, Lady Sarah Saville, Earl and Countess Aboyne, Sir Josiah and Lady Charlotte Guest, Earl and Countess of March, &c. &c.

The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by their illustrious guests, the Duke and Duchess of Nemours, by the members of the Royal Family, and attended by the Ladies in Waiting, and, as usual, the Officers of State, left the Drawing-Room at half-past ten o'clock, and passed through the saloon to the Ball-Room, where they received the company.

Her Majesty and the Royal Family having taken their usual stations at the platform, the dancing commenced with a Polonaise, danced by the Queen and Prince Albert, the Duke and Duchess de Nemours, followed by their distinguished guests.

The dance extended through all the state apartments, all the bands striking up the same tune. After this dance the assembled company passed slowly before the Queen.

Her Majesty then left the Ball-Room, and proceeded to the Throne-Room. The first minuet was then formed, consisting of:—

The Queen	Prince George
Duchess de Nemours	Prince Albert
Lady Douro	Prince Edward
Lady Mount Edgcumbe	Prince Leiningen
Duchess of Roxburgh	Duke of Beaufort
Duchess of Buccleuch	Lord Leveson
Lady Waterford	Lord Exeter
Lady Sydney	Lord Douro

After the minuet followed a quadrille.

The company, who had arrived in the interim, then passed before the Queen.

The second minuet was then danced by:—

The Queen	Prince Albert
Lady Ailesbury	Prince George
Lady Dalmeny	Prince Edward
Duchess of Buccleuch	Lord Exeter
Lady Seymour	Lord Clanricarde
Lady Blandford	Lord Granby
Lady Canning	Lord Douglas
Lady Villiers	Lord Abercorn

At the conclusion of this dance the Royal party returned to the Ball-Room.

The Countess of Jersey's minuet was then for ed and danced.

This was followed by the Marchioness of Bu dalbane's Strathspey.

The Countess of Chesterfield's minuet was the st dance before supper.

At twelve o'clock the Queen and her illustrious guests passed to supper, which was served, as usual, in the Great Dining-Room, in a style of Royal splendour.

The Ball was concluded by the old English country dance, known as "Sir Roger de Coverley," in which both her Majesty and the Prince took part. This was danced in the Picture Gallery.

In the Polonaise her Majesty was preceded by the Vice-Chamberlain, the Treasurer, and Comptroller of the Household, with two gentlemen ushers to clear the way; the great officers of state and others joining in the Polonaise.

Collinet's band, including Messrs. Nadaud, Auguste Tolbecque, Deloffre, Pillet, Bourotte, Jacquin, Mellon, the celebrated cornet à piston performer, Arban, and other artists of first-rate talent, was stationed in the Ball Room, and performed "God save the Queen."

On the Royal party passing from the Saloon to the Ball Room, the Polonaise was played for the first dance, composed, by command of the Queen, by Musard for the occasion. This was followed by an andante. The Minuet d'Exaudet was danced by the Countess of Jersey's party, and again by the Countess of Chesterfield's party.

In the Throne Room M. Musard, with his orchestra, was stationed, and in this apartment the Queen danced the Minuet de la Cour, Musard's new quadrille and Polonaise, both composed, by command of her Majesty, for the occasion. The quadrille is entitled "Quadrille de 1845 de la Cour d'Angleterre, ou Sovenir de 1740 et 50." Also a morçeau, arranged expressly by Musard for the Royal fête, from an air of Glück's opera, "Iphigenia."

M. Weippert's band attended in the Picture Gallery, and performed, during the evening, La Polonaise, Minuet de la Cour, Minuet d'Exaudet, Bal Costumé Quadrilles (composed expressly from airs of the period, 1740-1750), Desert Quadrilles, At Home Quadrilles.

Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, and his Royal Highness Prince George, entered the Palace by the garden entrance, and from thence were conducted to the Yellow Drawing Room, where her Majesty received her illustrious guests. The Marquis and Marchioness of Douglas, and those of the Nobility and Gentry who formed part of the Queen's minuets, were also admitted at this entrance.

The Diplomatic Corps, and the principal Ministers of State and Officers of the Royal Household, entered the Palace by the Equerry's entrance, in Pimlico.

In the strathspey dance the tunes played by her Majesty's piper, were, "Miss Drummond of Perth," "Tullochgorum," and "The Marquis of Huntley's Highland Fling." The Yeomen of the Guard lined the Grand Hall and Staircase, wearing their coronation costume, and commanded by Captain Sadler, the Exon in Waiting; Sir George Philip Lee, the Lieutenant; Sir George Houlton, the Ensign; and Mr. Ellerthorp, the Adjutant of the Corps, attended.

A military band was stationed in the Grand Hall.

The Guard Chamber was again brilliantly illuminated by the handsome cut glass lustre, upon Professor Faraday's ingenious invention for the perfect ventilation of the lights, producing a striking effect upon the splendour of the scene.

Nothing could exceed the coup d'œil. The illustrious characters of the prescribed period, brought once more on the stage with all the accessories of the richest costumes, infinitely varied and almost critically correct; the blaze of light reflected from innumerable diamonds; the most precious embroidery; a sea of plumes waving over that rare lace to which elaborate workmanship and venerable antiquity combine to give a value so great as to be almost incredible; magnificent and raised velvets; tissues of gold and silver—all gave a character to the scene that those only who witnessed it can really appreciate.

Among the gentlemen, the civilians were the most successful; the military dress of 1740 to 50 was so utterly wanting in the picturesque that no advantages of mien could overcome it. Even the Duke of Wellington, who has conquered everything else, did not come off victorious over the quaintness of his habiliments last night; and some few of the foreign uniforms were the only exception to our remark.

The following were among the costumes worn on the occasion:—

DUCHESS OF NEMOURS.—Rose-coloured Chinese damask dress, richly trimmed with gold blonde and pearls and silver fringes. Under-dress of point d'Alençon lace, having a deep border of silver, with large silver rosettes. In front were silver lapels. The stomacher was composed of large brilliants and pearls, and on the left shoulder was a beautiful nosegay, with diamond wheat-ears intermixed. Shoes of purple satin, embroidered with fleur-de-lis in gold and diamonds. Gloves embroidered in gold, with the fleur-de-lis to correspond.

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUCHESS OF KENT.—White satin slip trimmed with handsome black lace and red ribbon. The front of the dress was decorated with elegant ornaments composed of diamonds and pearls, with a stomacher of diamonds. The train was very magnificent, being formed of the richest brocade, embroidered with gold, and having alternate stripes of red, white, and gold. The head-dress was splendidly adorned with diamonds and emeralds. The necklace and earrings were composed of brilliants.

THE DUCHESS OF GLOUCESTER.—Dress of the richest black silk, having a pattern of flowers, trimmed with handsome white point lace, looped up. Down the front (which was ornamented with diamonds) were two borders of white point lace. Stomacher of diamonds and head-dress of black lace and diamonds. Petticoat of the same materials as the dress.

DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND.—The Duchess of Sutherland was attired in a magnificent costume, in which the fashions of the Court of Louis the Fifteenth were adhered to with the most scrupulous exactitude. The petticoat was of rich white satin, embroidered with bouquets of flowers, and garnished along the skirt with roses of various hues, surrounded by rich antique lace, and looped with lilies of white velvet. The dress was of Chinese silver brocade, and the tour of blue and silver tissue, garnished with antique lace, roses, and lilies, like the petticoat. The back of the dress a sac; the peruque, the train, in short, all the accessories of her Grace's costume, were strictly accurate, and the theme of general admiration.

THE DUCHESS OF NORFOLK.—Dress of brocade, the skirt of white silk, richly ornamented with amethysts.

LADY DALMENY.—Costume of green and silver brocade, looped up with bouquets of white, pink, and red roses, and trimmed with old point lace and cherry-coloured ribbons. Petticoat of white satin, with a broad lace flounce, trimmed with festoons and knots of cherry-coloured ribbons. Head-dress, black velvet hat, with two cerise feathers, and a knot of ribbons, looped up with roses, and an aigrette of diamonds. Necklace and stomacher also of diamonds. Shoes of white satin, with red heels and rosettes of red ribbon.

LADY MARY FITZALAN HOWARD.—Dress of cherry-coloured brocade, the skirt of grey satin, ornamented with pearls and diamonds.

THE MARCHIONESS OF DOURO.—The petticoat of white brocade with gold; flounce of old and most valuable point lace, formerly belonging to one of the Popes of Rome. The dress of splendid brocade with silver, the front being open, and ornamented with silver bullion and rosettes of diamonds. The stomacher most superbly covered with diamonds. Each sleeve ornamented with diamonds in the form of coronets, and trimmed with point lace to match the flounce. Head-dress, a coronet of diamonds and rubies. Shoes of white satin, trimmed with red ribbon, a rosette on each, with a large diamond in the centre. Her ladyship carried a magnificent antique fan, decorated with rubies. The value of the diamonds and jewels worn by her ladyship amounted to £60,000. The necklace was of pearls, with rubies and diamonds fastened on black velvet, with bracelets to match.

THE MARCHIONESS OF WATERFORD.—A gold brocade dress, embroidered with roses, and laced with violet velvet ribbon; ruffles of old point lace. Ornaments of pearls and diamonds. Petticoat of the same splendid material. The sleeves were bordered with rich lace, and were ornamented with gold, as was also the bottom of the dress.

THE DUCHESS OF BEAUFORT.—Hat of black velvet, ornamented with ribbons, edged with the largest brilliants, with a splendid ornament of diamonds and turquoise in the centre. Pink feathers. Dress of beautiful white figured satin, with splendid lace, and artificial flowers on each side. The stomacher of green satin, covered with diamonds. The petticoat of green satin, trimmed with a double border of the richest lace.

THE MARCHIONESS OF AYLESBURY.—A most magnificent costume of cerise velvet, embroidered with gold. The under petticoat of white satin, very richly ornamented with lama and gold blonde. A most brilliant stomacher of diamonds. Head-dress of diamonds.

LADY SEYMOUR.—Dress of the richest gold brocade, elegantly ornamented with flowers, looped up and trimmed with blue ribbons and roses. Stomacher of cherry-coloured satin, splendidly ornamented with diamonds. A garland of roses extend round the top of the dress, looped on one shoulder by a large diamond, and fastened on the opposite side by a large bow of blue ribbon. The slip was of cherry-coloured satin, with a very deep and handsome flounce of guipure lace. The head-dress was a small black velvet hat, ornamented with diamonds and pearls, and having a blue and a cherry-coloured feather; over the forehead was a small wreath of blue feathers. The necklace was of black velvet, studded with diamonds and turquoises, with a very large brilliant in the centre. Shoes of cherry-coloured satin, with white satin heels. Fan, with a large bow of cherry-coloured ribbons.

THE MARCHIONESS OF BLANDFORD.—A white satin slip, with two very deep flounces of lace, trimmed with red satin and red roses. The dress of red velvet, trimmed with white satin and red roses, and ornamented with diamonds. A diamond stomacher, with red velvet bows. The train trimmed with pearls and red roses. Hat of red velvet with three feathers of the same colour, ornamented with diamonds and pearls. Bouquet on the right shoulder, composed of roses with leaves of diamonds.

VISCOUNTESS CANNING.—The dress of deep blue silver tissue, open in front, and bordered on each side by the richest silver lace; the sleeves trimmed with handsome point lace. The petticoat was of white silk, elegantly and profusely embroidered with flowers. The stomacher consisted of diamonds, and the dress itself was also ornamented with diamonds.

LADY ERNEST BRUCE.—Slip of terre velvet, richly trimmed with guipure. The dress of white brocaded satin, watered with silver, and ornamented with flowers, being open in front, looped up at the skirt with garlands of flowers, and trimmed with white and red ribbon and silver cord. The stomacher of velvet, splendidly covered with diamonds and opals. Sleeves trimmed with guipure. Hat of red velvet, with red and white feathers, and diamond ornaments.

LADY LEVESON.—Petticoat of white damask, with a deep flounce of handsome lace. Dress of Turkish green satin, embroidered with velvet flowers. A very splendid stomacher of diamonds. Hat of black velvet, with red feathers and diamonds.

THE HON. MRS. G. E. ANSON.—The dress of rich brocade, wrought in silver with a magnificent pattern of gold and flowers, elaborately executed. The stomacher of diamonds and rubies. On each shoulder a diamond cross. The front of the dress bordered with gold lace, and the sleeves were trimmed with the same material. Petticoat of the same rich material, trimmed at the bottom with broad gold lace. Head-dress of diamonds, with a single red feather. Shoes of white satin, with red rosettes, and a diamond in the centre.

THE HON. MISS STANLEY.—The dress of rich cerise and white brocade, trimmed with lace and roses. Petticoat of blue poult de soie. Ornaments, turquoises and diamonds.

LADY PORTMAN.—The dress of blue silk, brocaded with silver, being a very handsome family dress of the year 1750. The under dress of white silk, brocaded with silver, and trimmed with point lace. The stomacher composed of diamonds, and trimmed with white lace. Head dress, a hat of black velvet, with blue and white feathers, ornamented with diamonds.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE GEORGE OF CAMBRIDGE.—A scarlet cloth General of Cavalry's uniform suit, richly trimmed with gold lace.

PRINCE LIEVEN.—Costume of garnet-coloured velvet, richly embroidered in gold; waistcoat of Pompadour satin.

HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH.—Coat of Royal blue rich velvet, most elaborately embroidered with gold in an ancient style, the workmanship and design of which never was surpassed, if ever equalled; lined with rich white satin and buttons of gold work; on the breast a splendid star and Order of the Garter, and sword studded with diamonds. Waistcoat, of rich and delicately white satin, most ingeniously and superbly embroidered in gold; in the design the thistle is very appropriately introduced; gold buttons. Breeches, of the same velvet as the coat, with embroidered button-holes, and buttons of gold, as on the waistcoat.

HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF ST. ALBANS (as Grand Falconer).—Coat of very rich Emerald green velvet, trimmed with extremely rich and wide gold lace with scolloped edges, with the oak-leaf introduced, and made expressly for this coat, lined with rich white satin, and buttons of gold work. On the left breast "The Hawk," suspended by the neck, from a massive gold chain. Waistcoat of richly brocaded gold on white satin, and buttons to match with those on the coat. Culotte of the same velvet as the coat, with buttons of gold work at the knee.

DUKE OF LEEDS.—Costume of Thomas, fourth Duke of Leeds. Coat of puce-coloured velvet, lined with white satin, and trimmed with gold lace; diamond buttons; white satin waistcoat, embroidered in gold; culotte of puce-coloured satin, and diamond buckles.

DUKE OF BEAUFORT.—A rich blue velvet suit, superbly embroidered in gold, magnificently trimmed with gold Brandenburghs, and lined with buff satin, with point lace ruffles of great value; the vest of buff satin, richly embroidered in gold, to correspond; remarkable for the accuracy and taste displayed in its selection.

MARQUIS OF EXETER.—A rich maroon-colour velvet suit, elegantly trimmed with gold Brandenburghs, and massive bullion tassels, adorned with superb jewel buttons, and lined with white satin; the vest of rich tissue, trimmed en suite.

MARQUIS OF WATERFORD.—A superb black velvet suit, trimmed with rich gold gimp Brandenburghs, and tassels edged with gold lace, ornamented with rich gold pearl buttons, and lined with white satin; the vest of similar tissue, trimmed in a similar manner.

MARQUIS OF LORN.—A superb sable velvet Highland jacket, beautifully trimmed with silver lace, green cuffs, and lined with green, ornamented with solid silver salmun, the various ornaments in every respect unique and of exquisite delineation; the Sutherland Chief tartan belted plaid, and kilt.

MARQUIS OF BREADALBANE.—A rich blue velvet Highland jacket, handsomely embroidered in gold, and slashed with yellow satin; rich gold satin tissue waistcoat, Breadalbane Tartan kilt, and satin belted plaid rich gold lace belts, with solid gold mountings and precious stones. The above costume taken from a valuable painting in his Lordship's possession.

MARQUIS OF HEADFORT.—A rich claret-coloured velvet suit, trimmed with gold lace, the cuffs of gold tissue, and ornamented with superb jewel buttons; the vest of silver tissue, trimmed to correspond.

MARQUIS OF WORCESTER.—A rich blue velvet suit, elegantly embroidered in silver, trimmed with rich silver Brandenburghs, and lined with white satin; the vest of scarlet satin, and richly embroidered in silver.

HIS EXCELLENCY COUNT KIELMANSEGGE.—Coat of green velvet, richly trimmed with gold lace, and lined with white satin, gold buttons; waistcoat of white satin, embroidered in gold, the buttons corresponding with those on the coat; culotte of green velvet, trimmed with gold; diamond knee-buckles; ruffles, &c., of point d'Alençon.

COUNT A. ESTERHAZY.—A white cloth Austrian General's uniform, coat edged and trimmed with gold lace, and scarlet cuffs; scarlet vest, and breeches trimmed to match.

BARON BRENNER AND COUNT POTOSKI.—The same as Count Esterhazy's.

THE BARON DE FOLZOGA.—Coat of very rich emerald-green, with gold loops, buttons and frogs down the fronts, trimmed with rich gold lace, and lined with rich white satin. Waistcoat of richly brocaded gold on white satin, trimmed with gold lace and gold buttons. Culotte of velvet same as the coat, with gold button holes, and buttons at the knee.

BARON KOLLER.—Uniform of an Austrian Colonel of Dragoons; coat of green cassimerr, with facings of amaranth; culotte of doeskin chamois; ruffles of point lace.

HIS EXCELLENCY THOMAS MURPHY (the Mexican Minister).—Coat of very rich royal blue velvet, lined through with rich white satin, trimmed with very rich gold lace, and buttons of gold work. Waistcoat of richly brocaded gold, and blue figures on white satin, and trimmed with gold lace; buttons to match those on the coat. Culotte of the same velvet as the coat, with gold lace garters, and gold knee buckles.

EARL OF CHESTERFIELD.—Coat of crimson velvet, embroidered in silver, and lined with white satin, diamond buttons; waistcoat of white satin, richly embroidered in silver, buttons set with diamonds; culotte of crimson velvet, and diamond knee buckles; jabot, cravat, and ruffles, of point lace.

EARL OF CRAVEN.—Coat of violet-coloured velvet, richly embroidered in gold, and lined with white satin; nœud d'epaule of violet-coloured satin, fringed with gold; waistcoat of white satin, embroidered in gold; culotte of violet-coloured satin, and diamond knee buckles.

EARL OF ROSSLYN.—Coat of brown fancy velvet, embroidered in gold; lining of straw-coloured satin; buttons, enamel and diamonds; culotte of brown satin, with diamond buckles.

THE EARL DELAWARR.—A rich crimson velvet suit, trimmed with rich gold Brandenburghs and pearl buttons, lined with white satin, and edged with ermine: white satin and gold tissue vest, richly trimmed with gold lace and Brandenburghs.

EARL OF ABERDOUR.—A black velvet Highland dress.

EARL OF ORKNEY.—A black velvet Highland jacket, with scarlet cuffs, trimmed with rich silver lace, and ornamented with handsome cairn-gorum stone buttons; the kilt and plaid of Royal tartan, and scarlet vest; the ornaments of rich chased silver, and unique.

THE EARL OF HADDINGTON.—A very rich blue velvet suit, elaborately trimmed with silver lace, Brandenburghs, and rich pearl buttons, lined with white satin: the vest of white figured silk, richly trimmed with silver Brandenburghs and pearl buttons.

THE EARL OF BECTIVE.—A superb cerise velvet suit, richly trimmed with gold lace, lined with white satin, blue satin cuffs, and adorned with splendid buttons; the vest of blue satin, covered with rich Brussels point lace.

VISCOUNT CANNING.—A superb gold and blue tissue coat, elegantly trimmed with gold Brandenburghs, and lined with green satin; the vest of rich gold tissue, trimmed with gold Brandenburghs, edged with gold lace and fringe.

VISCOUNT PALMERSTON.—A rich ruby-coloured velvet suit, trimmed with gold lace, and lined with white satin; the vest of flowered silk, trimmed to correspond.

LORD JOHN CHICHESTER.—Coat of sky-blue velvet, richly embroidered in gold, and lined with white satin; waistcoat of white satin, embroidered in gold; blue satin culotte, with diamond buckles; jabot, cravat, and ruffles of superb point lace.

LORD MAIDSTONE.—Cerise coloured velvet coat, embroidered in gold, and lined with white satin; gold buttons; waistcoat of white satin, trimmed with cerise ribbon; culotte of cerise velvet: nœud d'epaule of cerise satin and gold.

LORD M'DONALD AND CAPTAIN JAMES M'DONALD.—Rich cerise coloured velvet jacket, trimmed with silver lace; silver tissue waistcoat; Lord of the Isles tartan kilt and plaid.

LORD FITZROY SOMERSET.—A scarlet cloth General's uniform; coat with blue cuffs and facings, richly trimmed with gold lace, lined with white silk; white vest and breeches.

LORD FREDERICK FITZCLARENCE (a General's Uniform).—Coat of superfine scarlet cloth, trimmed with extremely rich and wide gold lace of the oak leaf pattern; on the breast the Hanoverian Guelphic Order, richly studded with precious stones. Waistcoat of white cassimere, trimmed with rich gold lace to match the coat. Breeches of scarlet cassimere.

THE BARON LIONEL ROTHSCHILD.—Coat of very rich velvet (peach blossom), richly embroidered in silver, lined through with rich white satin, and large diamond buttons. Waistcoat of richly-brocaded silver on a rich white satin, with diamond buttons. Culotte of velvet same as the coat, with diamond buttons at the knees.

THE BARON MEYER ROTHSCHILD.—Coat of very rich light blue velvet, splendidly embroidered in silver, lined with rich white satin, and buttons of silver work. Waistcoat of richly-brocaded silver on rich white satin, and buttons of silver work. Culotte of the same velvet as the coat, and the buttons to match with the waistcoat.

GENERAL LORD DOWNS.—A scarlet cloth uniform, with blue facings, trimmed with rich gold lace and Brandenburghs.

GENERAL LORD BERESFORD.—A scarlet uniform coat of the 16th Foot, with buff facings, and trimmed with silver lace; white vest, and scarlet breeches.

GENERAL SIR JOHN MACDONALD.—A scarlet cloth Highland jacket, with yellow cuffs and facings, trimmed with rich gold vellum lace, the belts and ornaments of the most unique order, and shoulder brooch of matchless value; the vest of scarlet, and trimmed to correspond; the 42nd tartan plaid and kilt, worn as Colonel in command of the 42nd Regiment.

COLONEL FITZGIBBON (A Uniform of Lord Ligonier).—Coat of light blue superfine cloth, with scarlet facings and turnbacks, trimmed with gold lace; a rich silk scarf, with gold tassels, and a gold aiguilette. Waistcoat of buff cassimere, trimmed with gold lace. Culotte of white cassimere.

COLONEL ANSON.—Costume of a General of the Guards in the reign of George II. White and red uniform coat; pantalooons of white cassimere.

CAPTAIN DE ——.—Velvet coat of Marie Louise blue, lined with satin; waistcoat of white satin lame argent; culotte of blue satin; nœud d'epaule of white satin and gold.

CAPTAIN EDMUND MILDMAY.—Black velvet coat, laced with gold, and ornamented with gold Brandenburghs, lining of blue satin; nœud d'epaule of blue satin and gold; culotte of black velvet.

HON. CAPTAIN F. VILLIERS.—Coat of blue fancy velvet, embroidered in silver, and lined with white satin; buttons, blue enamel, set with diamonds; white satin waistcoat, embroidered in silver; nœud d'epaule of white satin and silver.

CAPTAIN BATESON.—A scarlet Dragoon uniform, with green cuffs, trimmed with gold lace, and lined with white silk; buff vest, and white breeches trimmed to correspond.

CAPTAIN A. P. GORDON CUMMING.—A black velvet Highland jacket with green cuffs, trimmed with gala lace; scarlet waistcoat.

SIR HORACE B. SEYMOUR.—A scarlet cloth Horse Guards' uniform, trimmed with gold lace.

The undermentioned in the uniform of the Guards:—General Sir H. T. Wheatley, Colonel Henry Bentinck, Captain P. G. H. Somerset, Earl of Caledon, Colonel Dixon, Colonel Thornton. Captain Purves, Viscount Mandeville, the Hon. M. West, H. F. Ponsonby, Captain S. Graham, Captain E. Goulburn, Lieutenant-Colonel Angerstein, Captain Francis Seymour, Lord Brownlow Cecil, Charles Seymour, Esq., Captain Boyle.

THE RIGHT HON. GEORGE BYNG (a British Cavalry Uniform).—Coat of superfine scarlet cloth, with light blue facings and turnbacks, trimmed with gold lace; a rich crimson silk scarf, with gold tassels. Waistcoat of buff cassimere, trimmed with gold lace. Culotte of white cassimere.

HON. ADOLPHUS LIDDLE.—Coat of Pompadour silk, lined with blue satin, and trimmed with silver lace; buttons of silver; waistcoat and culotte to correspond.

HON. MR. LEVESON GOWER.—Uniform of a French Musquetaire. White cloth coat, faced with amaranth; gold Brandenburgh buttons; waistcoat and culotte of white cassimere; shoulder-knot of amaranth and gold.

A. MONTGOMERY, ESQ.—Scarlet velvet coat, embroidered in gold, and lined with satin; waistcoat of white satin lameor; culotte of white gros d'Afrique; jabot and ruffles of point de Paris.

MR. D——.—Blue velvet coat, with gold embroidery and buttons; white satin lining; waistcoat of white satin, and culotte of blue velvet.

JAMES DUFF, ESQ.—A very rich green velvet Highland jacket, elaborately trimmed with silver lace and rich silver buttons, with scarlet cuffs, and lined with crimson satin; the ornaments of superb chased silver, enriched with precious stones, peculiar to the seventeenth century. McDuff tartan kilt and plaid; the brooch an immense cairngorum, richly mounted in silver.

HUGH SEYMOUR, ESQ.—A blue velvet coat.

WILLIAM BECKETT, ESQ.—A rich puce velvet dress, with gold lace.

GEORGE HARVEY CAVENDISH, ESQ.—A velvet dress, trimmed with gold.

LIEUT. C. T. WEMYSS, 3rd Guards.—A plaid Highland suit, trimmed with silver lace, and figured braid, ornamented with costly and massive silver fringe; the belt and other ornaments of ancient order, and strictly in accordance with the costume of the time of the Pretender's entry into Edinburgh.

JOHN CAMPBELL, ESQ., YOUNGER, OF ISLAY.—A blue velvet jacket, richly trimmed with gold, and scarlet vest to correspond; Campbell tartan kilt and plaid.

HENRY UNWIN ADDINGTON, ESQ.—A brown velvet suit, with gold lace.

ASSHETON SMITH, ESQ.—A rich light blue velvet coat, trimmed with gold lace.

THE MASTERS BYNG AND GORDON (State Pages to her Majesty).—Coats of scarlet superfine cloth, trimmed with gold lace, lined with rich white satin, and large white satin shoulder-knots. Waistcoats of rich white satin, trimmed with gold lace. Culottes of white cassimere.

THE LATE FATAL DUEL.—The inquest was resumed yesterday (Friday), and is not yet concluded. The evidence, yesterday, went to prove that Lieutenant Hawkey went to practice shooting at a shooting gallery before the duel. On Thursday, the remains of the unfortunate deceased were removed from the Quebec Hotel to the residence of the widow, at Southsea, whence they will be removed on Tuesday to the family vault at Fordingbridge, about 20 miles from Southampton. Neither Lieutenant Hawkey nor the seconds have been heard of at present.

THE LATE FIRE IN DOVER-STREET.—The remains of Ann Jones, the nurse of Lord Hastings, were interred on Sunday, in St. John's-wood burial-ground, the service being performed by the Rev. Mr. Hastings. On Monday, the remains of Mr. Raggett and his daughter were interred at Kensal-green Cemetery. Numbers of persons were present on both mournful occasions. We are sorry to hear that the late Mr. Raggett has left three sons and three unmarried daughters totally unprovided for. He had through a long and labourious life been struggling against adverse circumstances, and for many years rented this furnished hotel in Dover-street. The little property he possessed in the house was not insured. Thus his widow and family are left in a state of utter destitution, and have not one shilling of their own for food, clothing, lodging, or even for the interment of their unfortunate relatives. A subscription has been opened for their relief, to which we beg to direct the attention of the charitable.

HER MAJESTY'S COSTUME BALL.

COSTUMES OF HER MAJESTY AND H. R. H. PRINCE ALBERT.

The announcement of her Majesty's intention of giving another Bal Costumé, is only one other evidence of the benificence of her Royal nature. Innumerable are the gratifying results which must emanate from the Royal fête; for not only are the highest in the realm by its means brought into more intimate union in scenes of recreation fitting their rank, but the hearts of the poor are made to rejoice, the wealthy are amused, and the humblest are benefited. Scarce an handicraftsman whose skill and ingenuity is not brought into profitable action, and will meet with a correspondent reward. It is only the frivolous who deem such scenes frivolous. There is in such Regal festivals more, much more, than is seen on the surface—they indicate a period of prosperity; an universal amnesty of supposed wrongs. For the time being civil heartburnings and political differences are merged in one wide sea of pleasurable emotion, and this feeling sheds its kindly rays and penetrates even unto the domestic hearth.

The Queen of a free country invites the titled and the intellectual of her broad realms to share in the festal splendour of her Palace. Not one of the nobles of the land but yields willingly to industry the price of its labour, whilst he pays due homage to the fair ruler who has been called by a Divine Providence to reign over the myriad subjects which cover two-thirds of the earth's broad surface. The stolid utilitarian, whose ken reaches not beyond the thrift of the moment and the narrow present, alone finds in such a meeting the reflection of a vacant mind and a purposeless object—such as these vainly seek for the great good and and the measureless benefits which result from such meetings, the cheerfulness of spirit which they elicit, and the universal kindliness they create, independent of the impulse they give to industry and ingenuity, to the arts and even to literature. In all ages of the world, the most revered of earth's rulers have manifested the genial spirit, which, like divine charity, is doubly blessed—giving and receiving; and honour and glory be given to our Island Queen for evoking the mirthful spirit and the social feeling. Let the prosaic grumbler grumble on, and the apathetic eye refuse to glance on aught save the dark side of humanity. With a Quaker spirit, they would dye the bright world an universal grey. Such as these would banish the daisies from the field, the blue from the skies, and the prismatic hues from the rainbow; but the reflecting spirit will find subject for grave but pleasing thought in such gatherings. It is a subject fraught with interest to the philosopher, the antiquary, the historian, and the poet; each may find matter abundant and worthy his lucubration.

Such sources of recreation have been contemplated from the period when the light of history is lost in the mythes of an unknown antiquity—when indented rocks and engraved pillars were the only chronicles of a past stage of society; when rolls of papyrus were scrawled with symbols which the learned might vainly essay to decipher, and the tablets of Egypt's temples bore the hieroglyphics of the silent priests of Osyris. Even now, in the débris of past ages, the curious may trace the religious gatherings and festal pleasures.

But, to leave the very ancient authorities, come we to comparatively modern times, when Royalty gave masques, and the highest of the land joined personally in the mimic sport; when the Kings of France and their Courts deemed a minuet not unworthy a Monarch; when masques were not thought beneath the study of England's brightest poets. What sums were expended in the mere machinery, when Inigo Jones was the mechanist, and Ben Jonson, the poet, was, in 1621, by letters patent of King James, installed into the office of Master of the Revels, in reversion after the death of Sir James Buc and Sir John Astley. Regularly on Twelfth Night did the poet contribute his masque to the Royal amusements. His salary was £100 per annum, which, upon the poet's petition, was enlarged to a tierce of canary for life.

In a small ballet introduced in the "Masque of Hymen," for which the most lovely of the Court ladies were selected as the ballerines, the author quaintly remarks, that they danced forth a most neat and curious measure, full of subtlety and device, which was so excellently performed, as it seemed to take away that spirit from the invention, which the invention gave to it, and left it doubtful whether the forms flowed more perfectly from the author's brains or their feet. The dresses of the male actors in this masque were a mixed mode, made up from antique Greek statues, with modern additions; a more barbarous affair we cannot well imagine. On their heads they wore Persic crowns, wreathed with carnation and silver net, intermingled with rubies, and other jewels. The boddices were of carnation cloth of silver, richly wrought and cut to express the naked, in manner of the Greek thorax. Their mantles were of several coloured silks, embroidered with O's, and between every rank of leaves a silver race. Upon their legs they wore silver greaves. The ladies' attire consisted of a gown, the upper part of white cloth of silver, wrought with buds and fruit; a loose under-garment of carnation, striped with silver, and parted with a golden zone. Beneath that another flowing garment of Watchet cloth of silver, laced with gold. Their hair was bound under the circle of a rare and rich coronet, from the top of which flowed a transparent veil down to the ground. Their shoes were azure and gold, set with rubies and diamonds. All this was doubtless gorgeous, but marked by a positively barbarian taste, riches being substituted for taste, and splendour for grace; but the times and the fancy have changed. The dramatis personæ were:—

The Duke of Lennox,
Earl of Arundel,
Earl of Pembroke,
Earl of Montgomery,
Lord D'Aubigny,
Lord of Walden,
Lord Hay,

COSTUMES OF THE HON. W. COWPER, AND MR. G. E. ANSON.

COSTUME OF LADY CUST.

Lord Sankre,
Sir R. Riche,
Sir John Kenneshie.

The dances were made by Thomas Giles, and the music was composed by Ferrabosco.

In the Mercure rancais, of which Cardinal Richelieu was the editor, we read that the Comte Soissons danced in a new ballet, on Sunday, at the Louvre—hat four thousand persons of mark were present. After the ballet, the Count danced with the Queen, and the Duc de Longueville with the Princess of Conde; they danced from eight o'clock of the same evening till the same hour the next morning—a strong example of the Royal danso-mania. Louis XIII., determining at a Court revel to outshine all his lieges, issued a sumptuary regulation forbidding any of the guests to wear embroidery or precious stones; and so stringent was the Monarch, that a foreign Prince was obliged to remove his embroidered gloves before he was admitted to the Royal circle. Louis XIV., on the contrary, stimulated his nobles to the display of the utmost splendour. It was part of his Minister's policy—the continuation of the idea of Richelieu, who had levelled the Feudatories of the Crown—but with the axe—to drive the great factious nobles into lavish expense, and reduce them to brilliant dependant satellites of despotic power. The "Grand Monarque" was educated for the part he had to play; the external graces of body were those he first displayed, and his début in public was as a dancer; and he danced on for many years, until a random shaft of satire unwittingly aimed at him by Racine, stopped him in his career of balleto-mania, in which his jettés batties, glissades, pirouettes were considered as the main attractions, although Lully, Benserade, and Molière, contributed their music and their verse. However, all the Sovereigns before and after him were as eager in the pursuit of this recreation. Who has not heard of the Ball at Milan given to Louis XII., in which Cardinals danced? Even the most grave theologians and doctors of divinity, dancing at the festivities which were a prelude to the opening of one of the Holy Councils of Christendom in Italy. As far back as the eleventh century, we behold a gentleman of Lombardy, named Botta, imagining a sort of masque combined of poetry, music, and dramatic episodes, to celebrate the entrance in Tartano of Galeasso, Duke of Milan, and his bride, Isabel of Arragon. This ballet was entitled "The Conquest of the Golden Fleece." From this first example arose numberless imitations in successive ages. Those magnificent and powerful Sovereigns, the Dukes of Burgundy, had most splendid masques represented at their Courts in the earlier periods of French history. Catherine of Medicis introduced the ballets in their improved form, at the same time with the Ialian opera, into France.

COSTUME OF HER GRACE THE DUCHESS OF ST. ALBAN'S.

Masques, or masked balls, have been the scenes of the greatest political intrigues, and of political incidents that have involved the fates of whole nations. It was at a ball that Charles VI. represented the part of a wild Indian, set fire to himself, went mad, and ruined France. It was at a masked ball that Gustavus of Sweden was assassinated, and those intrigues set afloat which ultimately terminated in the deposition of a dynasty of Royal heroes. With the addition of the mask, the mania for such réunions increased so prodigiously, that, at last, entire nations spent their whole time, from year's end to year's end, in mask and domino. Witness the Venetians, whose habits and costume were such until those brutal mock republicans of France came, in the last years of the past century, to sweep away all institutions, the free as well as the oligarchic and despotic.

It is thus seen that a differently modified form of this recreation, from age to age, continued to increase in vogue; and universal was the eagerness for such meetings, where Royalty and the best blood of the realm, and chivalrous knights and lovely dames would assemble to exhibit their splendour. Each age had its peculiar dance, and costume, and etiquette; as these were more special, in the same ratio became the consequence of the possessor. It was, in some measure, by such means that the isolated state of the middle ages became socialized—the mailed habits of the wandering knight became softened by the amenities of the hall—the valour in the joust and tournament was rewarded by the smiles of beauty while gliding through the stately dance. Families separated by wide space now became associated by the kindliness which pleasurable collision generates; and hence the beneficial acts of neighbourhood, and the benevolence of citizenship, grew out of the brilliancy of the Regal fête. Still, in the halls of Royalty, few but those who were closely allied by family ties, or political importance, were admitted to bask in the rays of courtly splendour—the full tide of nobility were excluded—and of gentry (in its modern acceptation) there were none.* Our own gracious Queen is the only Monarch that has thrown open the portals of her residence to all that are distinguished by hereditary title, military honours, or civic renown. Party, in its worst sense, is banished the Royal precincts; and, like the sun in the heavens, the warm smile of Royal welcome sheds its beams on all. The last Bal Costumé given by her Majesty was confined to no symbolic costume; it was a masquerade sine the mask. The characteristics of all periods might be seen mingling in "most admired disorder;" the mailed Christian knight was seen to tread a measure with a Moslem maid; the mighty Norman Baron of John of England, was the vis-à-vis to an Elizabethan maid of honour; the Emir, with his sacred turban, bowed kindly to the infidel Giaour; and the courtly dame of the middle age smiled kindly, and would request an ice from the willing service of a courtier of Louis XIV. The meeting was one mighty anachronism, redolent with beauty and diamonds, radiant with youth and splendour; but the charm of unity was wanting, and thence occurred an inherent want of repose—so necessary to impart dignity

* The strictness of etiquette formerly enforced, the distance at which subjects were kept, were most striking. On the occasion of the Queen Caroline's private visits to the favourite and most powerful Minister, Sir Robert Walpole, at Chelsea, she sat down to dinner with Lady Walpole, the lady in waiting, and such members of the Royal Family as accompanied her. Sir Robert always stood behind her chair, and handed her the first plate; after which, he retired to another apartment, and sat down to dinner with the Royal household.

COSTUMES OF COLONEL DAWSON DAMER AND THE PRINCE OF LEININGEN.

COSTUME OF LADY TIGHE.

to a concourse, however ennobled by rank, or magnificently arrayed.

We have glanced at the regalities and masques of our far-back ancestors; come we now to a later period, which may be deemed the transition state of manners, as well as Costume. The period selected by Queen Victoria for the present Bal Costumé is 1740 and 1750. We have seen it stated in various journals that no time could have been worse chosen for the setting off female charms to advantage, or less becoming to the dignity of the male form. So far from this being an anti-poetical period—in which bag wigs, square cut coats, powdered toupées, pomatumed curls, and wide-spreading hoops, were predominant—there is scarcely a period of history in which the Costume can be so varied, according to the taste of the wearer. Caroline of Anspach, the consort of George II., was the gayest and most brilliant woman of the period, and had ameliorated the circumference of the huge hoops, which had been the invention of the gloomy Court of Charles V., and was denominated, from its purposes, Guarda Infanta. The power of Spain, and its influence on the German Courts, rendered its fashion popular among those Royal Families who were either positively or collaterally allied with them. The Hoop—or, as it was originally called, the Spanish Farthingale—was introduced into England by Catharine of Braganza. Its advent excited ridicule and disgust: it was the mark for fashionable scorn to point its slow and unmoving finger at; even its intellectual wearer, though fearful to entirely throw it aside, moderated its monstrosity, and ultimately adopted the graceful costume so exquisitely illustrated by the celebrated Sir Peter Lely. In accordance with the costume of the period, powder is not stringently required: the flowing locks, gathering on the right shoulder, with the long single curl waving on the left, was the ruling fashion of the young élégante of the period. The varying fashions of the English and French Courts are exemplified in the portrait of Queen Caroline, which hangs in Guildhall, and the costume of the Queen of Louis XV., in the Gallery at Versailles painted by Vanloo. Queen Caroline is painted bien poudrée. The tresses of the French Queen wave naturally, "untricked and uncrisped by barber's art and thick pomade." The English Queen is literally cased, in compliment to her Dutch alliance, in stiff brocade, velvet, and ermine; her "hoops of ceremony" reached beyond ten yards in circumference. This, however, was the mere substratum; what a fine breadth must she have displayed when this was amply covered with a wilderness of thrice-piled Utrecht velvet. It was only after 1740 that these violent appendages increased into monstrosity, and that coloured powders, and built-up castles of hair, plastered into heavy consistency, became the disfiguring mode; and these, we have no doubt, were invented and originally introduced for the purpose of concealing the form shrunken by age, and the hair grown grey by time. The fairest females of the day, distinguished by rank, talent, or beauty, have left their portraits to posterity denuded of powder or hoop. The "pictures in little" of the famous Mary Bellenden, who smote the heart of the Second George, and her rival, the "bright Lepel," who was married to Pope's Hervey, are free from these tasteless nuisances; the hair is combed back à la Chinoise, crowned by a tasteful cap, ornamented with ribbons. Richardson, the author of "Pamela," has given a perfect description of Lady Gainsborough, the original of Clarissa; and, as it is well-known that Richardson was the "pet of the Peeresses," his account may be considered as legitimate and recherché:—"Her head-dress was a Brussels lace cap, with a sky-blue ribbon; hair, in natural curls, without powder, falling round the throat and bosom, from under the cap. Her gown (open, to show the rich satin petticoat, of a different colour and texture) was a primrose Paduasoy, the cuffs and robings curiously embroidered in a running pattern of violets and their leaves; the light in the flowers, silver; gold in the leaves; a pair of diamond snaps in her ears. For full dress, a quilted white satin petticoat, seen by the opening of the robe; blue satin shoes, braided with the same colour, or with gold lace, with diamond buckles; the sleeves of the gown tight to the elbows, with long Brussels lace ruffles; black velvet mits." These were graceful costumes, and well adapted to display, not to conceal, the bountiful gifts of Nature.

No sooner was the Regal fiat made public that the Bal Costumé was finally to take place, and the period of 1740 and 50 settled, than the glad intelligence ran like Greek fire, or like the electric telegraph, through the heart and veins of the haute volée—modistes, embroiderers, florists, librarians, and all that were informed, with the spirit of research, sought for authorities wherewith to illustrate the celebrities of the period chosen. The plan of her Majesty's Ball was not confined alone to "Merry England," but every country of Europe had its representative form arrayed in its special livery. France, Hungary, bonnie Scotland's Highlands and Lowlands, with kilt, sporran, and broad claymore, were seen in conjunction with the elaborated perruque and brilliant buckle. The diamond snuff-box and cairn-gorm mounted mull, had their several owners. The stately minuet and the graceful gavotte, with the livelier courante, and the characteristic dances of all nations, yielded variety to the picturesque groups. To give a truthful aspect to the "dazzling infinity," the very age and pressure of the time were observed. The fan, the sceptre of the salon, had its infinite variety of motion, which to the initiated has its intelligence, as the floral love-letter of the Persian—while the wrist supported clouded cane had its significance. The costumes of the Ladies of Honour were uniform thin coiffures, stringently alike. The lighter materials not being invented at the period, satins and brocades, gold volants, and the thousand-and-one inventions of fashion were made available to give an additional grace to beauty. Antique jewellery attained an adventitious value; one sword-hilt alone, worn by a nobleman of fashion, cost £2500. The following distinguished personages were selected to assist in the minuets danced by her Majesty:—Her Majesty the Queen, her Majesty the Queen of the Belgians, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Nemours, the Duchess of Buccleuch, the Marchioness of Douro, the Countess of Gainsborough, the Countess of Mount Edgecumbe, the Countess of Wilton, Viscountess Jocelyn, Viscountess Canning, Viscountess Villiers, Lady Caroline Cox, Miss Liddell, Hon. Miss Matilda Paget; his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the King of the Belgians, Prince Leiningen, Marquis of Clanricarde, Marquis of Exeter, Marquis of Granby, Earl of Delawarr, Lord Ernest Bruce, Lord Charles Wellesley, Lord George Lennox, Hon. Sir George Anson, Mr. George Edward Anson, and Colonel Wemyss. Independently of the above, we may add Prince George of Cambridge, Duchess of Roxburgh, Duchess of Norfolk, Earl and Countess of Chesterfield, Viscount Canning, Duchess of Saxe Weimar, Marquis and Marchioness of Douglas (Princess of Baden).

We shall report the fête itself in a later edition; and next week we shall illustrate the ball extensively, and describe it minutely. Our sources of information are full, and may be entirely depended upon; and our description of the Royal Fête may serve as a faithful medium for the acquirement of every nuance of costume worn on this splendid occasion.

THE COSTUMES.

The several Costumes engraved upon the preceding pages have been most carefully drawn: we proceed to their details.

HER MAJESTY.

The following is the costume worn by her Gracious Majesty:—A boddice and tunic, in cloth of woven gold and silver, with a running sky-blue pattern, brocaded with bouquets of Marguerittes and poppies; the boddice square and tight, with stomacher of silver cloth: the whole covered with lace, and trimmed with quilled ribbons—tight sleeves, with three rows of ruffles in point lace; the tunic looped up with scarlet ribbons. The skirt of the dress is made in silver cloth, trimmed with two flounces of magnificent point lace, headed by quillings of scarlet ribbon, in festoons and rosettes, which are all surrounded with diamonds. Her Majesty wore her hair powdered; diamond tiara and crown; white satin shoes, with high heels, and scarlet rosettes, ornamented in the centre with diamonds. Her Majesty also wore the Ribbon and Order of the Garter.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT.

Coat, of very rich crimson velvet, edged with small gold braid, lined with rich white satin, and buttons worked in gold; on the left breast, a splendid star, Order of the Garter, shoulder straps, and sword inlaid and studded with the richest diamonds; also the Order of the Golden Fleece; very beautiful: waistcoat of extremely rich gold, brocaded on white satin (manufactured at Spitalfields, expressly for the occasion, by his Royal Highness' command); the buttons to match with those on the coat: breeches, of crimson velvet, and gold buttons, as on the coat, and button-holes underneath.

HIS SERENE HIGHNESS PRINCE LEININGEN.

(A Bavarian Uniform.)

Coat, of superfine white cloth, with light blue facings and turnbacks, trimmed with rich silver lace; on the breast, a splendid star, and the Order of the Garter, studded with the richest diamonds; waistcoat of buff cassimere, trimmed with rich silver lace; breeches, of buff cassimere.

THE LADIES CUST.

The costumes of the Ladies Cust consist of a tight boddice and tunic in silk, striped with ponceau pink and green; the tunic looped up with bunches of pink and ponceau roses, with leaves; the stomacher of white silk, covered with antique jewellery; tight sleeves, with Brussels point ruffles in three rows; a white silk skirt, trimmed with two flounces of the same material, and fastened by pink and ponceau roses.

THE DUCHESS OF ST. ALBANS.

The Duchess of St. Albans wore a boddice and tunic of violet satin, brocaded in brilliant silver flowers; the tunic looped up with garlands of red and white roses; the boddice square and tight-fitting, and the stomacher of white satin, covered with silver point lace; three rows of ruffles of similar lace on the sleeves; an upper skirt of white satin, trimmed with a flounce of silver Point de Bayeux, looped up in festoons, with rosettes of a deep rose-colour. The under skirt is of rose-coloured satin, trimmed with magnificent flounces of silver lace, and headed by quillings of rose-coloured ribbon; a little green velvet Pompadour hat, with rose-coloured feathers, and a tiara of diamonds; the hair powdered and dressed in ringlets, à la Louis XV., and ornamented with pearls and diamonds; diamond stomacher and necklace; the hawk on the left shoulder.

LADY LOUISA TIGHE.

The costume of Lady Louisa Tighe consists of a tight corsage and tunic in sky-blue Pompadour brocade, with bouquets of natural flowers; the tunic looped up with ponceau ribbons and rosettes; the stomacher of white satin brocade, and fastened with diamonds, the skirt of white satin, bordered in brocade; diamond comb and ear-rings, and a little chapeau Pompadour.

THE HONOURABLE WILLIAM COWPER.

Coat, of rich light blue velvet, trimmed with very rich gold lace; waistcoat, of richly brocaded gold on white satin, and trimmed with gold lace; breeches, of blue velvet, same as the coat.

COLONEL THE RIGHT HONOURABLE DAWSON DAMER, COMPTROLLER OF HER MAJESTY'S HOUSEHOLD.

A Uniform of the 1st Dragoon Guards; coat of superfine scarlet cloth with blue facings and turnbacks, trimmed with gold lace; waistcoat, of buff cassimere, trimmed with gold lace; breeches, of buff cassimere, same as the waistcoat.

G. E. ANSON, ESQ., SECRETARY TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT.

Coat, of very rich black velvet with gold loops, buttons and frogs down the fronts, trimmed with rich gold lace, lined with rich white silk, and buttons of gold work; waistcoat, of gold brocade with a spray of blue, introduced on a rich white satin and gold buttons; breeches, of black velvet, the same as the coat, with gold lace garters and gold buttons.

SUMMARY OF RAILWAY FACTS.

The Northampton and Peterborough Railway, a branch of the London and Birmingham Railway, was opened on Saturday last. The junction takes place about half a mile beyond the Blisworth Station, 62½ miles from London. The distance between London and Birmingham was lately performed in 1 hour and 45 minutes. 110 miles in 105 minutes!

It appears, from an official account, of the number of presented Railways before Parliament, that the Railways of which plans and sections have been deposited with the Railway Department of the Board of Trade, amount in length, for Great Britain and Ireland, to no less than eight thousand and eighty miles, being thus nearly twenty-four times the length of England itself!

Two important decisions have been given by Railway Committees. They have decided that the preambles of the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway Bill, and of the Oxford and Rugby Bill (both promoted by the Great Western), are proved. Also, that the preamble of the Tring and South Staffordshire (promoted by the Birmingham Railway Company) is not proved. This having been a contest between the wide gauge and narrow gauge, the result is of much importance, more particularly as the decision of the committee is in direct opposition to that of the Board of Trade.

The Committee on the London, Chatham, and North Kent Railway, having stopped Mr. Sergeant Wrangham, in his reply on behalf of the Company, by saying that "there appeared to the Committee to be no objection to the line," a gentleman who had been for some days observed as an eager member of the antagonistic group, said hastily to a friend, "We lose £100,000 by that."

Her Majesty and her Royal Consort have conferred their patronage on the English National Schools, established on the Rouen and Havre Railway.

The Committee on Group P, on Thursday, resumed their inquiries into the merits of the Newport and Pontypool Railway. The Committee ultimately declared the preamble of the bill to have been proved.

The proposed Dorking and Reigate Atmospheric Railway has been abandoned for the present.

The Ely and Huntingdon Railway Bill and the Kendal and Windermere Railway Bill have been read a third time and passed in the Commons. Also, the Glasgow and Edinburgh Railway Bill, the Great Grimsby and Sheffield Junction Railway, the Chester Improvement, the Midland Railways, and the Syston and Peterborough Railway Bills.

BLAGROVE'S CONCERT-ROOM, MORTIMER-STREET.—Messrs. J. and H. Winterbottom, two promising performers—one on the flute, the other on the bassoon—gave a concert, on Tuesday evening, at the above Rooms. The principal singers were—Mesdames Connor, Lanza, Williams; Messrs. Corri, Calkin, Weiss, and John Parry, who gave his "Cinderella." The Concert was well attended.

The King of Prussia left Berlin on the 27th ult., for the provinces, and, according to a rumour in the capital, will visit Strettin, Copenhagen, and Stockholm, before his return.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

I care not, Fortune, what you me deny;
You cannot rob me of free Nature's grace;
You cannot shut the windows of the sky,
Through which Aurora shows her brightening face;
You cannot bar my constant feet to trace
The woods and lawns. BEATTIE.

Neither canst thou bestow upon Satiety in silk and brocade, the elixir of life that circles and sparkles beneath the dowlas which covers the "manly heart." The flights of fancy have been wild enough even to the imagination of transmuting dust into fine gold, but it never entered the hope of the visionary to win health from sloth; or a fresh free spirit from wassail and chambering. Let Pomp and Circumstance labour to uphold their pretensions, still air and exercise, the common dowry of mankind, are the only true recipes for happiness. Let State sit down to six courses—with a toe that Excess has placed in a vice to which Gout is giving the finishing turn—and who envies it its feast? From the early stages of society we find Governments fostering a taste for athletic exercises by conferring honours on those who excelled in them, and making exhibitions of feats of prowess and activity the most honourable portions of the public games and festivals. Now-a-days, the patients have learnt the wisdom of ministering in such matters to themselves; and, instead of coming under the head of public spectacles and performances, exercise is provided for in this country by the most wholesome and characteristic of all contrivances, a series of national sports and pastimes. If Hygeia were applied to (with the philosopher's stone for a fee), what course of treatment could she prescribe for a disease or blue devils like a season's yachting here and there interspersed with a regatta? Would a universe of cathartics deal with a dull digestion like taking fox-hunting or cricket for six months regularly? Even the worst of cases, matrimony misconstructed, or a large or small family, may be alleviated by occasional recourse to Epsom, Ascot, Goodwood, and Doncaster. There is no ill that flesh is heir to, for which the pharmacopœia of our rural sports does not offer remedy or relief . . . . Apropos of yachting—only conceive a clipper of the R.T.Y.C.

Where is the vessel? Shining through the light,
Like the white sea-fowl's horizontal flight;
Yonder she wings and skims and cleaves her way,
Through refluent foam and iridescent spray.

Thus might ye have seen her on Saturday, the 31st ult., on the occasion of a certain match between craft of that sporting club, sailed from the picturesque bay of Erith. Behoves it, however, to say that there was less foam and spray than might conveniently have been introduced, because, probably, Zephyr was paying his homage to the Queen of May, who, on that day, held her first court of the season.

But four cutters, all of the maximum size of 25 tons, raced, and, after a series of soul-tempting calms, the prize, given by Alderman Johnson, fell to the chance of the Blue Belle, by a bowsprit's length. It was, in fact, a drifting match, a trial of sailing in which a haystack would beat the Flying Dutchman.

On Tuesday, Ascot Heath Races commence, and, as usual, the interval between them and Epsom has been barren of turf business. There was no racing of any account in the present week, but matter of much moment to the racing public transpired during the last four days.

The Racing Calendar of Wednesday last contained certain resolutions passed by the Stewards of the Jockey Club, relative to a conspiracy charged to have been got up for the purpose of "making safe" Mr. Gully's Old England for the Derby. They were to the intent that persons of the names of Stebbings, Bloodsworth, and William Day—a son of the trainer of that name—consorted together to prevent that horse winning, and that they are therefore warned off the Newmarket Race-course, and such other places as the Jockey Club have control over; a similar sentence being recommended to other proprietors and stewards of courses.

Treading on the kibes of the Ratan affair, also concocted in a public training stable, it will probably go far to damage the popularity of such establishments. There can be no doubt of the facilities for fraud which they afford. These two "affairs" have come out; how many two hundreds like them have been kept snug? It is no secret among sporting men that sums of money are constantly offered to the officials of those places to "nobble" horses in one way or other.

Probably, if the history of the favourites in Derbys not long past, won by extreme outsiders, were made known, those victories would not seem quite so unaccountable. And whence do we trace the origin of ALL these robberies? To the Legs—and yet gentlemen continue to countenance these persons: Who are most to blame?

The match at Lord's, between the Marylebone Club and the County of Sussex, was the only feature of interest in Cricket during the current week. In Aquatics, the Henley Regatta stood foremost; it is yet in process while we are at press.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—Comparing balances, preparatory to the settling on Tuesday, occupied the whole of the afternoon. Not a bet was laid on future events. "The Old England affair" was touched upon, but nothing came out to show what view the Stewards are disposed to take of it. Folks wonder why Messrs. Stebbing and Hargraves should be called upon to cover, when others, who are known to have betted heavily against Old England, were not even glanced at? Who were they representing?

On Tuesday the important finale to the Races, of paying and receiving, took place at the Corner. For a wonder it was brought to a conclusion without a wrangle, and, in the opinion of every betting man in the room, was the most satisfactory settling ever known. One or two "little men" are not forthcoming, but their deficits are so small as scarcely to be felt.

IRELAND.

CONFLICT BETWEEN THE POLICE AND THE PEASANTRY.—The following letter, dated Mohill, Saturday evening, describes a fearful conflict with the police in the county Leitrim. The writer says:—"A dreadful affray has just taken place in the vicinity of this town, which, unfortunately, fully bears out the description of the condition of this part of the country, given a few nights since in the House of Commons, by Lord Clements, during the debate on Lord John Russell's motion. A party of police, having gone in search of some delinquents, observed a number of men ('Molly Maguires') armed in a field. The constable in command sent into the station for a reinforcement, and on their arrival the police rushed forward. The 'Molly Maguires' fired at the police, who returned the fire, shooting one man through the heart, and wounding others. The 'Molly Maguires' fled, and the police gave chase, but the country people got out of their reach. The police subsequently returned to the field, and were taking away the body of the man shot, for the purpose of identification, when the country people, greatly reinforced, came up and attacked them, rescued the body of their fallen companion, and put the police to flight. The second onslaught, I am told, was desperate. The police, who were greatly inferior in number, found it impossible to cope with their assailants. Mr. Veevers, the stipendary magistrate, was pelted with stones when he interposed. This lamentable affair has produced a deep sensation and much alarm in this part of the county of Leitrim."

A RAMBLE IN THE REALMS OF CHAT.

A pleasant month is June to hold converse in with all the merry family of mankind. It is a great anniversary time, too, for our pretty little counties of "England;" moreover, the very first day of it reminding us of the splendid naval victory of Lord Howe, and keeping alive in our hearts the ancient glory of our wooden walls. And it is worthy of remark, that the last Sabbath, which ushered in the month, was the fiftieth anniversary of the battle, which was fought on Sunday just half a century before, and made imperishable within the heart of posterity—the name and memory of the "glorious first of June."

Seventeen days after in the month, and twenty years in the annual progress of time, we had the land prowess of Waterloo to reflect back the lustre of our ocean heroism; and in another June, the great day of Wellington, decided the establishment of that splendid peace, which has been to us a greater glory still; which has quenched slavery, fostered genius, promoted literature, improved art, and spread the arms of commerce and the wings of science to the uttermost ends of the earth.

So that, with her national voices both of war and peace, England may welcome the arrival of her month of June; and, for ourselves, we admit that, independent of its historical associations, it warms us with its summer influences into very pleasant sensations of kindling mirth. The reserve melts away, and taste for social merriment is quickened in the bosom of society; and people get less political and more prepared for fun, and the world wears its sunshine for the happiness of its more smiling denizens.

Tant mieux; let us look out on the sunny side of life's way then! And, surely, the month has come in at the tail of two very important events in the history of pleasure; the first being that very spirited "Derby" to which we last week gave such vigorous illustration; and the second, that unprecedented episode of "unroyal Royalty," which found its varied record in all the morning journals of the 2d inst. We speak of the the "Uncrowned Monarch of Ireland," the history of whose "Repeal Levee" forms the first feature of this month of June. We must take a glance at this Court.

COURT OF KING O'CONNELL,

THE REPEAL LEVEE.

A little while back,
When the time were slack,
And a theme was wanted for talk,
Dan got up a glorious meeting like fun!
A mighty and mountain, and "monster one!"
On the wide plains of Dundalk.

And then, while his eloquence deep was stirr'd;
As the people hurra'd him at every word!
He talked and talked for hours;
Till his glory at last made him feel like a King!
So he up and he told 'em that very same thing!
"I am one of the RULING POWERS!"

Ay! that, "by the Powers!" King yez be,
Cried a million Repealers instantly!
And a King yez shall be too.
So, glibly the multitude caught up the word;
And nothing but "Ruling Powers" was heard!
Till the Heavens look'd quite blue!

Away it travelled to Dublin town,
Echoing up hill, and rolling down,
All over the city fair!
Till it got to the Club of the Eighty-two,
Who quick decided what Dan should do—
"He should hold a levee there!"

Not in the Club-house, and not in the Hall;
That wasn't what they were meaning at all!
The palace where he should the fun do
Was pleasantly situate just at the top
Of Sackville-street, near a confectioner's shop,
And was known as the "Rotundo!"

There should the Uncrown'd Monarch be seen
On an emerald throne in a garment of green
And gold—looking rather puffy!
And gasping, perhaps, if the weather were hot,
With Tierney and Gray of the martyr lot,
Son John, and Barrett, and Duffy!

While poor Tom Steel, with his ardent face;
And his new green coat, in that blue one's place!
Which so long he had worn in pride!
Was not let in to the Regal display;
But was set to the task in a shabbyish way,
Of keeping the peace outside!

Poor Tom! so devoted! 'Twas nothing but fair
He should share in the fanciful Royalty there,
In the warmth of his generous "natur!"
But, perhaps, 'twas himself that would not be mock-king;
Believing it far a more glorious thing
To be a real Pay-cificator!

So the Court it was held in the manner proposed,
And into the Palace the mad people closed,
With a force that would knock down a wicket;
And the clever Rent-Chancellors hit on a plan
To let in the ladies to gaze upon Dan,
At the rate of a Shilling a Ticket!

Thus a great deal of glory of course was displayed,
While it's fair to presume that some money was made,
With an eye to more crowns than Repeal ones;
While the ladies, who paid and looked on with delight,
Complained—not of paying, but, after the sight,
The boards which they sat on were deal ones!

At last Dan set off for his Merrion-square,
With the Temperance bands, and the trades, and that 'ere,
Who escorted him all of the way,
For the sake of his balcony speech, and no less.
When he went to bed, pretty well tired, we guess,
At having been KING FOR A DAY!

The whole affair seems to be quite as good, and far more numerously attended than a London Lord Mayor's Show; and the various descriptions of it—more copious and occasionally more graphic than that we have ventured upon in verse—would, if time could be found for their perusal, afford no little entertainment to our readers.

All the Foreign Chit Chat promises well. India is going on well enough in the sunshine of Napier's victories; and Texas is treating with Mexico, and repudiates annexation. She is beginning to refuse to Polk.

In the Commons, our friend Hume has converted consistency into generosity, and actually, in his own person, and by an act of voluntaryism, proposed a pension for a public man. The gentleman, Sir Henry Pottinger, was every way worthy—and the grant to Pottinger went off with an unanimity that might well create a jealousy in the grant to Maynooth. The Lords have been hammering pretty hard at the question—and some of the old features of our religious controversial debates have been new revived in our house of aristocracy.

There is no other news except, perhaps, a little in anticipation of the great POWDER DANCE in such magnificent preparation at Buckingham Palace. We have been considerably astonished at the ignorance which has pretended to ridicule the adoption of an old costume, and the use of powder at this Regal dance—for Ever since artillery's birth,

No truth's been stated louder
Than this—that not a ball on earth
Goes off well—without powder!

We may admit that cartridge wigs
Men may look rather odd in;
And women queer in petticoats,
If stuffed with too much wadding.

When bustle wadding ram the gun,
Wig cartridges and all well,
Then powder, with explosive fun,
Will carry off the ball well!

The only wonder is, that there should be a Wig fête during a Conservative administration.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Advices from Beyrout, dated April 4, state that "Mount Lebanon was again in arms, the Maronites and Druses fighting furiously against each other, and blood flowing on all sides. The Ottoman stepped forward to prevent this, but the Maronites would not listen to reason; and as they continued to fall upon the Druses, the Turks were obliged to side with the latter, to preserve them from extermination." This new difficulty caused a meeting of European Ambassadors at the residence of Sir Stratford Canning.

On the 13th of May a most exciting horse-race (four miles and repeat) was run on Long Island, opposite the City of New York. The amount of money pending was immense. The horses were, Fashion, aged 8 years, carrying 123lb., and Peytowa, aged 6 years, carrying 118lb. The race was won by Peytowa. The first mile was done in 1 minute 52 seconds, the second mile in 1 minute 55 seconds, the third mile in 1 minute 56 seconds, and the fourth mile in 1 minute 57 seconds.

The Buenos Ayres papers of the 22nd of March, state that a skirmish has occurred at Moldana between the contending forces, in which Cabral, one of the Monte Videan leaders, is reported to have fallen. The victory is claimed by the followers of Rosas. If all be true, the trade of Monte Video is fast decreasing under the blockade now established.

A letter from Warsaw, dated May 21, says, his Majesty the Emperor arrived from Petersburg the day before yesterday, at the fortress of New Georgiewsk, only a few leagues from Warsaw; and yesterday, at two o'clock he arrived here, accompanied by Prince Emilius of Hesse, and Prince Paskewitch. The city was splendidly illuminated in the evening.

The recently discovered autograph of Shakspeare was sold by auction on Saturday to Mr. Pickering, of Piccadilly, for 21 guineas. About three months ago, a gentleman bought the book for one shilling at a stall, when for the first time the signature of "William Shakspere" was observed upon it; two lines were written above the name, but their purport could not be discovered.

Last week a man, named Duncan M'Calman, died at Dell, in the parish of Kilmeny, in the island of Skye, at the advanced age of 109 years. He retained all his faculties to the last, and was only ill for a few days. He walked six miles across a rough moor last summer, and could take his glass of whiskey with any young man of the parish.

Letters from Vienna repeat a rumour to the effect that the reigning Prince of Saxe Coburg, accompanied by Baron Stockmar, were shortly expected, and that their visit had reference to a project of marriage between Prince Leopold of Coburg and the Queen of Spain.

Henry Wood, the driver of a Fulham cart, who, as we stated last week, was committed to prison for furious driving, by which the life of the Duke of Wellington was endangered, has been liberated, the Duke himself, as it is said, having paid the fine, through the medium of a friend.

Letters from Syria announce a fatal catastrophe which took place a few days ago in the Channel of Chesma. A Greek vessel returning from Jaffa, with seventy or eighty passengers, Greek pilgrims from the Holy Land, was capsized during the night, and all hands perished, except seven.

The annual report of commerce of the United States for the year ending the 30th of June, 1844, shows the value of domestic exports to have been 99,715,175 dollars, the value for the ten months ending June, 1843, having been 77,793,783 dollars. The head of foreign exports gives 11,484,867 dollars for 1844, the amount for the ten months of 1843 being 6,552,697 dollars. The amounts of foreign imports for similar periods are 108,135,035 dollars and 64,753,799 dollars.

A letter from Constantinople, of the 17th ult., says that the Government has ordered the fleet to return to the Dardanelles, to be prepared against a collision with Greece.

On the 29th ult. a great number of the prisoners taken at Lucerne on December 8, were released without trial, the authorities feeling that to proceed against them all would be endless. The trial of the free corps, however, will be more easy, as their participation in the attack was self-evident.

The Journal des Débats publishes a letter from St. Petersburgh of the 17th ult., which states, "that preparations on an extensive scale are being made to reinforce the Russian army in the Caucasus. The amount of troops to be employed during the next campaign in Circassia is estimated at 150,000 men, the greatest Russian army ever collected in that country."

The latest accounts from Mexico brought by the West India Mail, are favourable. The private letters from both that city and Vera Cruz state with confidence that before Mr. Elliot left the capital to proceed to Texas, he was fully empowered to mention that the Mexican Government had acknowledged the independence of Texas without reservation. There is no secret made of the fact that this course of conduct has been alike warmly urged by the French and British Governments as the best policy that could be pursued by the Government of Mexico.

In the case of Howard v. Gossett, there is some difficulty as to issuing the writ of fi. fa., in consequence of the action having been brought in Middlesex, and the Sergeant-at-Arms having no residence in that county: Sir William Gossett's private residence is in Surrey. The difficulty which exists is, as to whether the writ should be directed to the Sheriff of Middlesex or the Sheriff of Surrey. It is expected an application to the Court of Queen's Bench will be made on the subject.

A Liverpool paper speaks thus of the wheat crops:—"We regret to say that we hear from our correspondents in all quarters that the prospects of the wheat crops are most unpromising. In many places in the eastern and midland counties, the wire worm has done immense mischief; and in others, the plant has suffered so much from the long frosts and cold weather, that hundreds of acres are being ploughed up altogether."

We have already given the particulars of an earthquake which occurred at Mexico on the 7th of April. There was a repetition of this awful disaster in the capital on the 10th of April. It occurred about ten o'clock A.M., and lasted forty seconds; it overthrew many new buildings, and many others that had escaped the former visitation; most of the inhabitants, stricken with terror, left their homes, and took refuge in the open fields and public squares, passing the night without shelter and in the utmost consternation.

We learn from Rome that Cardinal Mezzofanti has been appointed to treat with M. Rossi on the affair of the Jesuits. M. Rossi has had an audience of the Pope on the subject, but there has been no exchange of notes with the Papal Government.

The Court of Common Council adopted on Tuesday the report of the City Police Committee, which recommended "the raising of an additional number of constables, not exceeding 50, to be under the superintendence of the Commissioner, and to be employed exclusively in watching particular spots and premises, on application duly made for their services from the owners of such premises, who were also to bear all expenses."

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST.—On Friday, the Annual Court of Governors of this Charity was held at the board room in Great Marlborough-street, to receive the usual reports, and for the dispatch of other business. Captain Gordon in the chair. From the report read by the secretary, it appeared, that since the opening of the Hospital in September, 1842, no less than 214 patients had received the benefits of in-door treatment, while 3316 out-door recipients had been most beneficially relieved.

ARTESIAN WELLS IN TRAFALGAR-SQUARE.—During the past week, the water from these wells has been laid on to the New Houses of Parliament and most of the Government offices in Parliament-street and Whitehall, the supply from the Chelsea water-works having been discontinued. The remainder will be supplied before the 24th inst. Four different mains have been opened for the supply of water for watering the streets, two being placed in St. James's Park, one at the Horse Guards, and the other in Great George-street. The water to the Government offices is supplied from the upper cistern at the engine-house in Orange-street to the upper mains, by which, in case of fire, they can at once be inundated.

NEW HOSPITAL.—His Royal Highness Prince Albert has fixed Saturday, the 28th instant, at three o'clock in the afternoon, for laying the foundation stone of the new Hospital for Marylebone and Paddington.

MORTALITY IN THE METROPOLIS.—The total number of deaths registered in the metropolitan districts, during the week ending Saturday, May 31, was 905, an amount something above the vernal, though considerably less than the annual averages, in which the numbers are respectively 888 and 963.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

DEATH OF LIEUTENANT-GENERAL LORD HARRIS.—This gallant officer died last week at Belmont, his seat near Faversham, Kent, after a short illness. The deceased, William George Harris, was eldest son of General Lord Harris, who rendered such distinguished service at the taking of Seringapatam. The deceased nobleman, like his father, was brought up to the army, and joined the 76th Regiment in India, in 1797, being at that time Lieutenant.

ARMY AND NAVY CORPORAL PUNISHMENTS.—According to documents just laid before Parliament, it appears that no fewer than 3355 soldiers, received corporal punishment between the first day of 1839 and the 31st of December, 1843. These corporal punishments consisted of a number of lashes, varying in each instance from fifty to two hundred. Two hundred lashes for one offence! Upwards of 400 of these offenders had been lashed twice, 92 three times, 14 four times, 6 five times. and 1 six times! One man of the number had been similarly punished twelve times! In the Navy, the number of men who received corporal punishments in 1837 was 2,007; and in each of the three following years the number of such cases increased.

MURDER OF AN OFFICER AND EIGHT MEN BY THE CREW OF A SLAVER.—A most distressing circumstance has occurred in the African squadron The Wasp, 18, Commander S. H. Usher, took a prize, which was sent to Sierra Leone to be condemned. On her way, this prize fell in with and took another slaver; the Lieutenant in command, still keeping charge of the first vessel, put a midshipman, named Harmer, with eight men, into the other. The vessels then separated. Unfortunately, Mr. Harmer allowed a strong party of the slave crew to remain out of irons, and at night they rose and murdered every Englishman on board; and, when daylight broke, exchanged signals with and fired at the other prize, and then bore away. In a day or two afterwards, she fell in with the Star, 6, Commander Dunlop, who took her, and brought the whole of her murderous piratical crew to Ascension. The villains will shortly be sent to England.

WAKEFIELD, PONTEFRACT, AND GOOLE RAILWAY.—After a protracted struggle of three weeks between the two great companies of the Manchester and Leeds and York and North Midland, the preamble of this line of railway, which connnects the east and west coast of England, was yesterday declared to be proved, and the line promoted by the York and North Midland was thrown out.

ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

CONCLUDING NOTICE.

The works of the two great anti-Academicians, Martin and Haydon, are hung together in the West Room; and both have found their subjects in the great epic poet of our nation. Mr. Martin we have criticised before. Mr. Haydon's subject is from the third book of "Paradise Lost," and is called "Uriel and Satan." Uriel as the Angel of Light—

The same whom John saw also in the sun—

and Satan, as a stripling cherub, plunging in victory and joy in search of the Earth that Uriel has told him of. Mr. Haydon, in this picture, has studied Fuseli to some purpose. In the figure of the "stripling cherub" he has had his eye on the old masters; but his picture (and he will thank us for our criticism) is altogether out of place in the present Exhibition. "How hard it is upon us," was the remark of a great painter who had studied his art more deeply than many of his brethren, "the better fitted we become for the company of the great masters, the less fitted are we for the walls of a modern exhibition."

Mr. Haydon is said to be a martyr to the highest branches of his art. He paints on great principles, and aims at nothing but what is Epic and exalted. We wish his success was commensurate with his endeavours. He is often feeble, too often exaggerated; but his conceptions are not unfrequently very fine. We would direct attention to his "Napoleon at St. Helena," in the possession of Sir Robert Peel. It is an indicative picture, with indifferent execution, but the sentiment is everything Napoleon has his back towards you—you see, in short, nothing but his back, his folded arms, a barren rock, a boundless sea, and a sail at a distance. It is, in a word, the history of Napoleon, with a fine moral at the end.

In the cell set apart for the exhibition of Sculpture, we find this year one hundred and forty-six works of art, of every degree of excellence, from very pretty and clever, down to what is passable and poor. Our artists have long been disheartened by the dark hole they are doomed to appear in, and we are told to attribute the absence of Sir Richard Westmacott and Mr. Gibson to their unwillingness to work for a crowded hole with a cellar light; and told, at the same time, to deal leniently with men who have no other place to court approbation in than an excrescence of a room as ill-fitted for its purposes as if it had been contrived to exhibit sculpture to a serious disadvantage.

Four Portrait Statues of "Queen Victoria," the late "Sir Sydney Smith," the late "Marquis Wellesley," and the late "Dr. Goodall," would appear to command attention, in the first place, from their conspicuous positions in the cell they are in, and the celebrated places they are designed to adorn. The "Queen Victoria," by Mr. Lough, is to stand, we are told, in the centre of the New Royal Exchange. We would recommend to the Gresham Committee the adoption of a somewhat lofty pedestal for its reception. Our out-door pedestals have hitherto been too low for the purposes of true art.

The "Sir Sydney Smith," by Mr. Kirk, (we are sorry to have to write the late Mr. Kirk), is by far the finest portrait-statue in the room. It is as bold and manly in conception as the mere mechanism of the execution is poor and indifferent. It bears the impress and character of Sir Sydney's mind; and is fearless, active, and determined. It is just as fine, to our thinking, as Sir Joshua Reynolds's "Lord Heathfield Grasping the Keys of the Fortress of Gibraltar." Sir Sydney is seen on the parapet wall of a modern fortification, directing, with extended arm and pointed finger, to the place of attack. The dangerous position he is in is happily indicated by a cannon-ball sunk in the parapet beneath his feet. This is a fine touch of poetry; indeed, the statue itself is very finely imagined, and will serve to awaken in the minds of many the chivalric actions of Sir Sydney Smith. This is a Government statue, and will stand in the Painted Hall of Greenwich Hospital.

URIEL AND SATAN.—PAINTED BY HAYDON.—FROM THE EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

Mr. Weekes's "Marquis Wellesley" is a statue of a very different character from Mr. Kirk's "Sir Sydney Smith." Here the conception is indifferent, the execution everything. There is little to mark the Governor-General of India in the days of Hyder Ali and Tippoo Saib; nothing to recal the siege of Seringapatam, or the field of Assaye—Sir David Baird or Sir Arthur Wellesley; yet the statue is far from being devoid of merit; it is nicely draped, and carved, as it appears to us, with consummate skill.

The Wellesley and Goodall statues were entrusted to Sir Francis Chantrey, in the last year of his life. He did not live, however, to do anything with them; and they were made over to Mr. Weekes, at Chantrey's death, by the kind interposition of Allan Cunningham. There is much to make us regret that Chantrey did not live to put the particular seal of his genius upon them, and little to justify the friendly interference of Allan Cunnigham. But portrait-statues have become, since Chantrey's death, mere loads of unmanageable marble licked into human shapes, without character and without expression. Mr. Kirk, had he lived, would have done something towards what we must call the revival of the art. His loss is much to be regretted.

In the long array of busts, tier rising upon tier, we see little to call for observation or remark. Young people miss Chantrey—people of older standing, both Nollekens and Chantrey. There is a sad absence everywhere of original treatment, and of the innermost man. A mere map of the features seems the perfection of the present style: there is nothing to remind us of the "Dr. Johnson" of Nollekens, or the "Sir Walter Scott" of Sir Francis Chantrey.

The head of poor Tom Hood, by Mr. Davis, has merit, however, of an uncommon kind; and the bust of Professor Wilson, by Fillans, an unshackled desire about it to rise above the dead level of ordinary art.

The monuments to Southey, the poet, by Mr. Lough, and to Allan Cunningham, by Mr. M. L. Watson, are alike in nothing; yet they will still bear comparison. Mr. Lough supplies a recumbent figure of the late Laureate; Mr. Watson, a bas-relief of Literature—a female figure, seated, with her several attributes about her. We cannot say much for the Southey monument: it is poor—nay, more, it is unlike. The figure of Literature is much in Flaxman's manner, and, in the higher qualities required for sculpture, perhaps, the finest work in the room.

Fairly sickened as we have been, for years past, with classic crudities from the Eternal City, it is pleasant to observe and to say more than a word in favour of the "Paul and Virginia" of Mr. Marshall, and the "Lady Macbeth" of Mr. Lough. Here we miss the old dishes of Greece and Rome, new heated and new set forth. Here are two artists who have originated something for themselves, and succeeded in what they have done. We can pardon Mr. Lough a good deal for the tragic solemnity—that other-world look—which he has given to Lady Macbeth. Her thoughts are not our thoughts; they are dark and unfathomable, telling of deeds without a name.

ST. KLYNE'S WELL.

The Paul, in Mr. Marshall's group, is better than the Virginia—she is too unwieldy a load. But the group is a fine one, and has been bought, we are told, by the Duke of Sutherland. Lord Francis Egerton and Earl de Grey were both after it—such encouragement has true art when it appears among us.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

THE WELL OF ST. KEYNE.

This well, situate about three miles from the town of Liskeard, and within a short distance of the parish church of St. Keyne, is the most celebrated spring in Cornwall. The only thing at all striking in the locality is the five large trees (two oak, two ash, and one elm), growing as if from one root, immediately above the well.

The chief attraction of the well lies in the supposed magic quality of its water; and this has always made it a place of great resort to all lovers of the marvellous, who flock to drink the pure and limpid stream, hoping thereby to obtain that power it is supposed capable of conferring. It has often been made the subject of verse; and the late Poet Laureate wrote a humorous tale, founded on its imaginary virtues. As some lines explain the good qualities of the water, they are here given, for the information of any reader, who, having entered the holy state of matrimony, may journey that way, and feel desirous of quaffing a bumper to the memory of St. Keyne and his own success.

If the husband of this gifted well
Shall drink before his wife,
A happy man henceforth is he,
For he shall be master for life.

But, if the wife should drink of it first,
God help the husband then.

* * * * * *

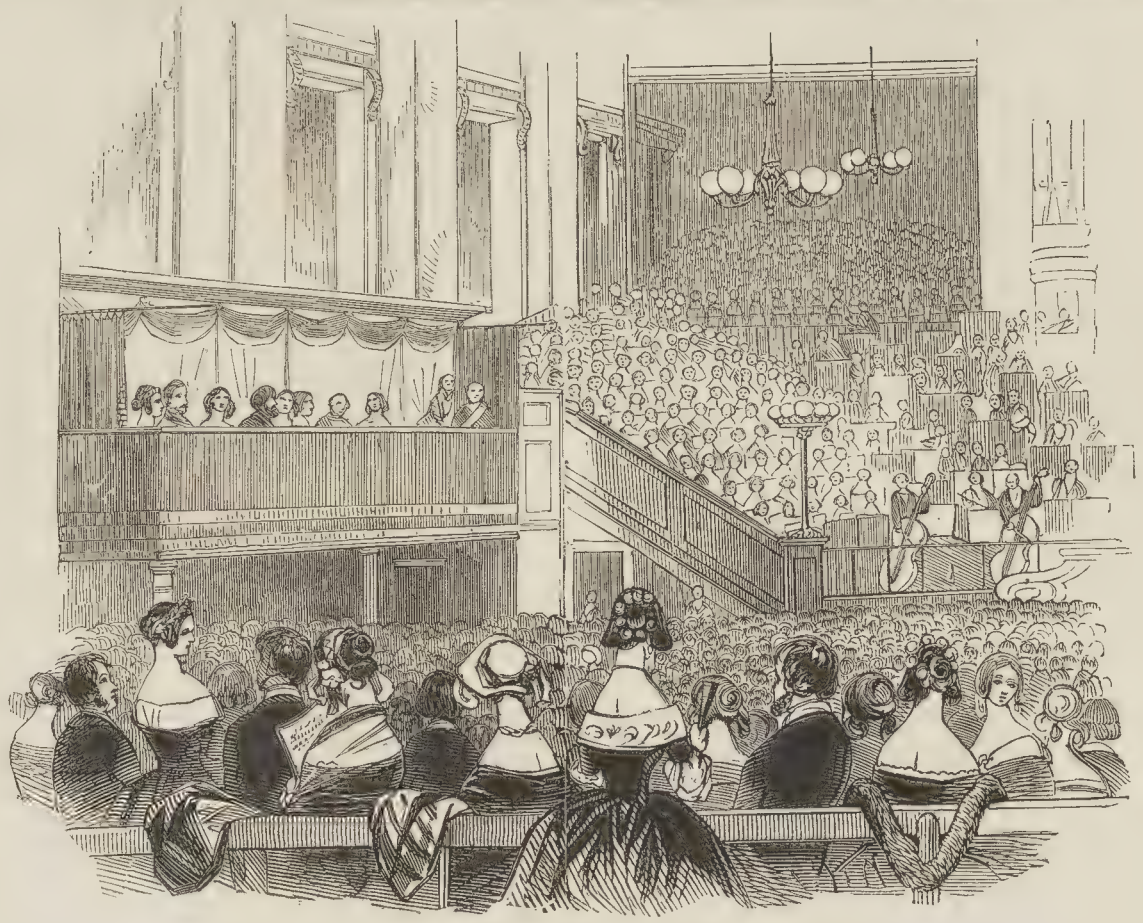
The Rev. Mr. Whittaker says, that "not one husband in Cornwall has been known for a century past to take advantage of the quality, and to secure his sovereignty for ever; the advantage is generously resigned up to our wives, and the daughters of St. Keyne reign in every family."

The locality is much resorted to at this season by holiday parties; and, a few days since, there was held here a "tea-drink" of the children of the Sunday School of the parish.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

LA CONTEMPORAINE; IDA DE ST. ELME.

"Les Memoires d'une Contemporaine, ou Souvenirs d'une femme sur les Principaux Personages de la République, du Consulat, de l'Empire &c." Such was the title of a book which, some five-and-twenty years ago, appeared in Paris, and excited a universal sensation. The work was indeed strange and novel. It represented a woman of high birth, great beauty, and extraordinary talent and fascination, as a follower of the French armies, and the companion of the heroes who led them. Intimately associated with Moreau and Ney, and with other commanders of the Republican and Imperial hosts, La Contemporaine tells of their affairs, warlike and domestic; she describes events passing before and behind the scenes of the great military drama. Her history, however, goes beyond the mere armed circle, and is a record of the numerous intrigues, and public and secret transactions of the period in France. "I have," said she, in her title and preface, "been present at the victories of the Republic; I have passed through the saturnalia of the Directory; I have seen the glory of the Consulate; and the greatness of the Empire, without ever having affected to possess strength or sentiments unsuited to my sex. I have, in fact, at a distance of twenty-three years between them, witnessed the fame of Valmy and the result of funereal Waterloo." And who was La Contemporaine? With many her existence was as much a matter of doubt as the truth of her extraordinary narrative. "The Memoirs are a fable written by a masculine hand," was the general but incorrect remark. La Contemporaine was a real living person, and her story, though mixed up with a quantity of falsehood, had something of truth for its foundation. In her Memoirs she gives the following account of her birth, parentage, and youth —



["LA CONTEMPORAINE."

Her father, Leopold Ferdinand de Tolstoy, the son of Leopold, Duke of Cremnitz, inherited an ancestral seignory and chateau at Krastova, in Hungary. These possessions he lost through the treacherous conduct of his maternal uncle, an Austrian officer, whom, in revenge, he slew in a duel. Being imprisoned for this offence in the citadel of Presburg, he contrived to escape through the assistance of the Governor's niece; and, after a series of romantic adventures, married at the Hague, in 1774, Mdlle. Van Ayl, the rich heiress of a noble Dutch family. La Contemporaine was the sole issue of this union. When eleven years old, she lost her father, who died in consequence of a fever caught in saving a servant from drowning; and, in two years afterwards, she married a Dutch gentleman of family and fortune living near Amsterdam. Unable to endure domestic life, she subsequently fled from him to rove in perfect independence with t e army. This is her own story; and we, of course, leave the continuation to those who are able to recollect, or willing to peruse, her voluminous recital. Suffice it here to state, that she published sequels to her book entitled, "La Contemporaine en Egypte," "Mes Derniers Indiscretions;"—that, in 1836, she brought out in London a quarto pamphlet, called, "Album de la Correspondance d'un Prince Emigré," which, if true, would destroy the character of Louis Philippe, but which, though causing a momentary interest, fell into speedy oblivion, for want of corroboration—and that she ended her days in the extreme of poverty.

She was personally known by the name of Madame de St. Elme. She came to London a short time ago with numerous literary schemes, but could not succeed in bringing them to light. One eminent London foreign publisher, though latterly deaf to her plans, showed her much kindness, and afforded her assistance in her distress. Madame de Saint Elme died at an hospital in Brussels, on the 24th ultimo, thus terminating, in her seventy-first year, her very remarkable and very miserable career. The portrait of her attached to this notice was taken long after the days of her youth and beauty. It is, however, the only one that can be relied on as a true resemblance.

TRIAL OF A MONSTER GUN.—Last week a trial was made at Liverpool of a "monster gun," which had been manufactured for the American war-steamer, Princeton. The gun was firmly embedded in the sand, and the muzzle, which was pointed out to sea, was slightly elevated in a line above the surface of the water. The first ball, weighing 219lbs., was then "driven home," the gun being charged with 30lbs. of powder, and the first shot was fired at ten, in the presence of about 500 spectators. The result was most satisfactory. The report was distinctly heard nine miles off. At the distance of about three miles, as nearly as could be judged, the ball was seen bounding on the surface of the water, occasionally dipping and springing up again, until at length it became wholly lost to view. The second was the trial shot. Two balls, each weighing 219lbs., were "driven home," 45lbs. of powder being the charge. This shot was equally satisfactory. The report, of course, was terrific, but the gun withstood the shock, and thereby proved that it had been manufactured on a principle and with a material which render "bursting" almost, if not altogether, an impossibility.

HER MAJESTY AT EXETER HALL, ON MONDAY LAST.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO EXETER HALL.

On Monday evening, the Sacred Harmonic Socity performed Mendelssohn's Grand Oratorio of "St. Paul," in Exeter Hall, by desire of the Queen, who honoured the Society with her presence. The large Hall was filled in every part; and, the audience being in full dress, had a more brilliant appearance than usual at these concerts. The arrangements for the reception of her Majesty were very complete; the gallery for the Sovereign, on the side of the Hall opposite the principal entrance, was fitted up with crimson and white drapery, and gold-coloured trimmings; and, on the opposite side of the Hall, was a smaller gallery, similarly prepared for the Royal suite.

The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Prince of Leiningen, arrived at Exeter Hall soon after seven o'clock, and alighted at the Exeter-street entrance; where her Majesty was received by Mr. Harrison, the President of the Sacred Harmonic Society; Messrs. Brewer and Bowley, the Secretary and Librarian of the Society; and other Members of the Committee, who had the honour of conducting the illustrious visitors to the Royal gallery prepared for the occasion. The Royal suite included the Duchess of Buccleuch, the Countess of Mount Edgecumbe, the Hon. Miss Murray, the Hon. Miss Kerr, Lord Byron, Lord George Lennox, Captain the Hon. A. Duncombe, Sir George Anson, Colonel the Hon. Charles Grey, and Major-General Sir Edward Bowater.

Immediately on the entrance of her Majesty into the gallery, the whole audience rose, and the applause was very enthusiastic. "God save the Queen" was performed by the immense orchestra and chorus (500 in number) with true grandeur of effect; and the Queen and the Prince Consort most graciously acknowledged these heartfelt demonstrations of loyalty. Her Majesty was elegantly attired in white, and wore the blue ribbon, a magnificent suit of diamonds, and around the hair an elegant wreath of flowers.

Her Majesty took her seat at the extreme end of the gallery, with Prince Albert on her left; so that the Queen was seen from every part of the Hall. Books of the Oratorio, superbly bound in crimson, were handed to the Royal party, and the performance commenced. The solo parts were by Mr. Manvers (tenor), Mr. A. Novello and Mr. Bodda (basses). Herr Staudigl (bass), Miss Birch (soprano), and Miss Dolby (mezzo-soprano). We have not space for any detailed remarks upon the performance; the solo singers, with the exception of Staudigl, were not very successful; but the performance of the mass of amateurs was admirable. "Stone him to Death" was very original and vivid; and "How Lovely are the Messengers" was extremely beautiful; still, the chorales were the happiest portions of the performance, though occasionally marred by false emphasis.

The Royal party appeared much interested in the performance, and remained till its close (half-past ten o'clock), when the Royal party retired; her Majesty and the Prince Consort being again loudly cheered, and the demonstrations terminating in one enthusiastic shout.

SCENE FROM THE NEW BALLET OF "ROSIDA," AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The Royal visitors were then conducted to their carriages with the same ceremony as was observed on their arrival.

Our Artist has sketched the Royal gallery during the performance. Upon two previous occasions, we have engraved the Hall itself.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

"Don Pasquale," "Il Barbiere," and "Il Pirata," have been the lyrical treats offered to the Opera votaries since our last week's record. The two first operas, inimitable as they are with their present cast, are too generally known and appreciated to need any further comment. To our former report of "Il Pirata," we have only to add our increased admiration of Fornasari's performance in this opera. The character of the fierce and haughty Duke is one specially calculated for the display of his dramatic powers, while he invests Donizetti's poor music with a nerve, a breadth, and an energy not its own. The duet with Grisi, in the second act, was admirably given, and elicited much applause, despite its singular inappropriateness to the scene and circumstance. In another portion of the opera this great lyrical actor inrroduced an air from Mercadante's "Zaire," which, by varying the monotony of the music, produced an excellent effect.

The absorbing point of interest for the moment, however, is the new ballet of "Rosida," which possesses, in more than one respect, the character of novelty. In addition to the originality and freshness of the pas introduced, &c., this, though only a Ballet divertissement, is pre-eminent in one very essential point—striking and peculiar scenic effect. Nothing can be more novel and brilliantly effective than the first scene, where the stage is supposed to be transformed into the deck of a ship, crowded with peasants and sailors, clad in the brightest and warmest colours—the masts hung with garlands—the blue waters of the Mediterranean seen beyond. But the last scene, in variety of grouping, colouring, and motion, is a triumph of pictorial art. It represents the port, with vessels lying at anchor, crowds of people of different nations on shore, and devotees come to offer up their vows to the Madonna and sea.

Cerito, apparently determined to give her own composition its fullest effect, excels herself in this ballet. She appeared to display even more graceful animation and suppleness of motion than usual, while she shows a poetic conception and dramatic feeling, which, a year or two back, she would hardly have been suspected of possessing. The most remarkable point in her acting in this ballet is at the moment when Rosida has lost her sight. Her movements and gestures under this supposed bereavement were touchingly truthful. Her pas throughout—both alone, and in combination with St. Leon—are charming. Amongst them, we must notice specially "La Sicilliennes," a dance which somewhat partakes of the character of the "Tarantella," with a reminiscence of those Boleros of which La Nena, not long since, gave us such singular and characteristic specimens: the accompaniment of castanets forming a species of chorus to the dance, is highly peculiar and effective.

The merits we have just enumerated, and, above all, the grace and fascination of the fair composer, disarm our criticism; and, in fact we have no defect to balance against them; but one, which this ballet possesses, in common with almost all those composed from the days of Louis XIV. to our own times—the want of sufficient unity and dramatic interest in the plot; a point frequently considered to be one of very small importance, but which impedes the development of that intellectuality of character of which the art of dancing is susceptible. Another great recommendation of this ballet is an important one—it is not too long.

"Don Giovanni" will be repeated next Thursday at her Majesty's Theatre, for the last time this season. Moriani, the only great artist of the troupe not included in the matchless cast of this magnificent work, will appear in a selection from Mercadante's charming opera, "Elena di Feltre." The variety of the entertainments in the ballet department will be extraordinary. By general desire, and for the last time, will be repeated the "Minuet de la Cour and Gavotte," in which Mdlle. Lucile Grahn appears to such advantage as a Cavalier of the Court of Louis XIV., and Mdlle. Cerito no less so as a Lady of the same Court. There will also be selections from "Esmeralda," with Carlotta Grisi; from "Eoline," with Lucile Grahn; and from "Rosida," the new and charming ballet, with its fair authoress, Cerito.

FRENCH PLAYS.

M. Achard is a very great favourite in London as well as in Paris; and it is no wonder that his rentrée, at the St. James's Theatre, on Monday evening, drew together a very large and fashionable audience. This excellent comedian is a native of Lyons, and was destined to follow his father's trade of a silk-weaver; but, having always a taste for the stage, he made his début at the theatre of that town one evening, on the occasion of a principal performer being taken ill, in the characters of Frontin in "Frontin Mari Garçon," and Ledru in "Les Deux Precepteurs." His acting was so good that he was earnestly recommended to follow the stage as a profession, and accordingly accepted an engagement at Lons-le-Saulnier, playing afterwards at Bordeaux, where Dejazet met him by chance, and, immediately perceiving his talents, persuaded him to come to Paris, where his career has been one series of triumphs As an actor, Achard is full of nature and spirits, almost ensuring the success of any character entrusted to him; as a singer, he is remarkable for his taste and feeling, and has before this gained the prize for singing at the Conservatory.

The characters in which he appeared on Monday night are already well known to the audiences at the St. James's Theatre. Guillaume de Mongeron is one of his favourite rôles. The piece itself—"Trianon"—is familiar to English playgoers, in its adapted form, as Mr. Planché's "Who's Your Friend? or, the Queensbury Fête," played a season or two back at the Haymarket; and M. Achard's character is that whilom filled by Mr. Charles Matthews. A great attraction in the present performance is the appearance of a bevy of pretty actresses in peasants' costumes, which are admirable and very becoming. The piece went off with great spirit, and may be repeated with advantage.

We strongly recommend our readers to go and see M. Philippe's performances at this house on the off nights of the French Plays. His deceptions are very novel, and very astonishing; some of them, indeed, are entirely beyond conjecture as to the method in which they are accomplished. It is very fortunate that he did not follow his calling in the middle ages; had he done so, he would assuredly have been burned at the stake, as an accomplice of the Evil One.

HAYMARKET.

A very droll farce, called "The King and I," was produced at this house on Wednesday evening, and with unqualified success, keeping the audience in a roar of laughter from the commencement to the fall of the curtain, when it was promised for repetition amidst renewed cheering. We believe it is by Mr. J. M. Morton and, if so, is a fair specimen of that gentleman's productions, depending chiefly upon brisk action and a rapid succession of situations, which, although often improbable, produce such constant merriment that the audience have no time to find this out. The chief weight of the piece, in the present instance, rests upon Buckstone, who, as Perkin Pyefinch, mistakes a suspected rebel, Sir William Melrose (Holl), for King William the Third; and, in hopes of future aggrandizement, rushes into most enthusiastic sacrifices; giving up his house to him, lending him a thousand pounds, and at last, as a coup, not knowing that he is a rival, putting him en train to marry the very girl. Jesse Donald (Miss Julia Bennett), he is in love with - There was an excruciating comicality in Buckstone's acting that we never saw equalled. He convulsed the house with laughter; and when he appealed to the audience, at the end of the farce, was as heartily applauded. The other parts were well played by Mr. James Bland and Mr. Tilbury. It speaks well for the energy of a management when a constant succession of novelties is produced, even whilst attractive pieces are drawing good houses by themselves. The greatest error a manager can fall into is to repose quietly on the oars after making a hit, and wear the piece threadbare, without backing it up by some fresh production. We could mention two or three instances lately, at various establishments, where fortunate pieces have been alone relied upon to bring good houses, without anything being done to support them when their attraction began to go off; and then, like overtasked animal powers, their career has finished in not much more than half the time they would have lived had a little assistance been afforded them.

ADELPHI.

We know of but one sailor in the world, and that is Mr. T. P. Cooke. If we have chanced to go down to the sea, and on board large ships, and have encountered sailors who differed from him in manner, costume, or characteristics, we did not believe in them, but looked upon them as imposters. No—the Baitish tar is alone represented by the gentleman we have just alluded to. Who will deny it, after having witnessed the facility with which he can shlver his timbers and dowse his toplights? Who, having heard him talk of taking a reef out of a best bower anchor—we believe there is such an operation, but we confess to not being very well up in nautical terms—boxing the bowsprit, or putting the stunsail binnacle hard-a-port; who, having heard of all this, can listen afterwards with any degree of confidence to the language of common mariners? Mr. T. P. Cooke alone can call crying "running over at the lee scuppers;" with him only is a lawyer a "land shark;" he only, at the longest odds, can make the enemies of England belay and avast heaving; and when he says, "My dear eyes," every body has the greatest confidence in him, and knows that at the risk of his life, he will protect the female in distress. He has done quite as much for the navy as ever Dibdin did. He has warmed our seamen to emulate his courage in fighting six at once, by showing them such a contest is perfectly practicable, especially if the leaders of the opposition be Frenchmen; and we are convinced that had the Prince de Joinville witnessed but three pieces from his repertoire he would never have written his pamphlet. Mr. Cooke has been engaged at the Adelphi, and has appeared in Mr. Buckstone's drama of "Poor Jack," which was performed lately upon the occasion of Mrs. Yates's benefit. The piece is, if we mistake not, founded on a tale which appeared in one of the annuals. It contains some capital situations, and was admirably played, the cast being unusually strong, and comprising Messrs. Wright, Bedford, and O. Smith; with Mrs. Yates, Mrs. Edwin Yarnold (from the Haymarket) and Miss Woolgar. Its success was complete. Mr. Selby's pleasant farce of "The Irish Dragoon" followed; and the comedy of "Paul Pry," in which Wright is amusingly droll, made up an attractive programme. A typographical error last week gave the composition of the serenade in the farce to Mr. Munyard; it should have been Mr. Mellon, the clever leader of the Adelphi orchestra.

A new five-act play, called "The Florentines," was produced at SADLER'S WELLS on Monday evening. We shall notice it at length next week, merely stating, at present, that it was completely successful, and has been since repeated every evening.

The musical season is now at its height; two, three, and even four concerts taking place every day. Mr. John Parry's, on Friday evening, was crowded; indeed, we scarcely believed that the Hanover-square Rooms could hold so many people, until we saw the gratifying compliment to the public abilities and private worth of the talented entrepreneur. He introduced two new songs upon the occasion—a "revolutionary scena," called "Massaniello," and a musical definition of "Young England." They were both loudly encored. He was assisted by Madame Dorus Gras, Misses Birch, Dolby, Rainforth, and M. B. Hawes; Madame Dulcken and Mr. Godefroid, and MM. Benedick and Negri conducted in turn. On Tuesday, Miss Dolby assembled an equal number of her friends in the same rooms; and was raptuously applauded in the selection she had made for displaying her exquisite voice and sound musical knowledge. She first sang an aria from "Il Crociato;" then two German songs, by Mendelssohn and Curschman; and, lastly, a Scotch ballad; proving herself a perfect mistress of the three styles. Amongst the most celebrated artistes whose names appeared in the programme were Madame Eugenia Garcia, Misses Birch and Rainforth, Messrs. Vieuxtemps, Sterndale Bennett, John Parry, &c. Besides these meetings, we had the Queen at Exeter Hall on Monday, and Mr. Hullah's classes there on Wednesday; Leopold de Meyer's concert on Tuesday morning, and Mr. Moscheles's Second Matinée on Wednesday; the Ancient Concerts on the evening of the same day; and half-a-dozen more in the week, given by Madame Dulcken, Hausmann, C. Potter, Blagrove, &c., &c. Who shall say we are not a musical people?

A delightful réunion of gentlemen well known in the musical, literary, and artistic world took place at the beginning of the week, at the residence of Mr. J. W. Davison, in Berners-street. A splendid musical treat was provided for the visitors, who were favoured with solos, duets, trios, &c., by Messrs. Sterndale Bennett, Osborne, Sivori, Vieuxtemps, Holmes, Wallace, Leopold de Meyer, Sainton, Rousselot, Drechsler, and the talented host himself. Nothing could go off better than the entire programme; the warm applause lavished on the performers by their brother artists being not the least gratifying portion of the meeting.

THE MARKETS.

CORN-EXCHANGE (Friday).—Since Monday, the arrivals of English wheat have been on a very moderate scale, they not having exceeded 3160 quarters; hence the show of samples of that article here, to-day, was small. Selected parcels commanded a steady inquiry, at fully previous rates; but all other kinds were a slow inquiry. In foreign wheat—free as well as in bond—very little was doing, yet the quotations were supported. Barley and malt moved off slowly, at late rates. There was a steady demand for oats, beans, and peas, at full prices.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 3160; barley, 690; oats, 140 quarters. Irish: wheat, ; barley, ; oats, 9080 quarters. Foreign, wheat, 7070; barley, 3510; oats, 7400 quarters. Flour, 2610 sacks. Malt, 1940 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 51s; ditto, white, 47s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 43s to 51s; ditto, white, 52s to 57s; rye, 34s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 29s; distilling, 28s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Chevalier, 00s to 00s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 56s to 60s; Hodgston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s to 00s. Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s; potato ditto, 23s to 24s. Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s. Tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s. Grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 33s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s per quarter. Town-made flour, 42s to s; Suffolk, 33s to 35s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Fine wheat, s to s; Dantzig, red, 38s to 48s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 24s. Oats, brew, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s. Beans, 24s to 29s. Peas, 28s to 32s per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to 00s; Baltic, 18s to 00s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—A very limited amount of business has been doing in this market since our last report, and prices have been hardly supported.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed, English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 45s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 44s. Hempseed, 35s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 18s per cwt. Brown mustard seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 12s to 14s 0d. Tares, 6s 6d to 7s 6d per bushel. English rapeseed, £24 to £26 per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 00s to £11 5s; ditto foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 0s per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra, 52s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5½d to 6½d for the 4lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 46s 3d; barley, 29s 5d; oats, 22s 5d; rye, 30s 1d; beans, 37s 2d; peas, 36s 7d.

Imperial Averages of Six Weeks which Govern Duty.—Wheat, 45s 11d; barley, 30s 5d; oats, 21s 8d; rye, 30s 4d; beans, 36s 10d, peas, 36s 9d per quarter.

Duty on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s 0d; barley, 8s 0d; oats, 6s 0d; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 6s 6d; peas, 6s 6d.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 10s; useful ditto, £4 12s to £5 3s; fine upland ditto, £5 4s to £5 8s; clover ditto, £4 10s to £6 6s; oat straw, £1 18s to £2 1s; wheat straw, £2 2s to £2 3s per load.

Coals.—Hollywell Main, 16s 3d; Old Pontop, 15s; Taylor's West Hartley, 18s; West Wylam, 15s 6d; Riddell's, 18s 3d; Adelaide, 20s; and Wharncliffe, 18s per ton.

Tallow.—We have to report an active demand for all kinds of tallow, at a further improvement in the quotations. P. Y. C. on the spot is selling at 39s 9d to 40s 6d, and for forward delivery 41s to 41s 3d per cwt. Town tallow is scarce, and quoted at 40s, net cash.

Hops (Friday).—The plantation accounts not being considered very favourable, we have to report a somewhat improved demand for most kinds of hops, at fully last week's quotations:—

Sussex pockets, £7 0s to £8 0s; Weald of Kent ditto, £7 8s to £7 10s; Mid Kent ditto, £7 7s to £8 12s; East Kent ditto, £9 9s to £11 0s; Choice ditto, £11 11s to £13 0s; Mid Kent Bags, £7 15s to £8 15s; East Kent ditto, £10 10s to £12 0s.

Smithfield (Friday).—The supply of beasts on sale here, to-day, was only moderate, while the beef trade was very steady at fully Monday's quotations. There were on offer 100 oxen and cows from Holland, and 300 Scots from Scotland. The numbers of sheep were rather limited, owing to which the sale for them was rather active at very full prices. Calves moved off firmly, at late rates. In pigs a fair business was doing. Milch cows sold freely, at from £16 to £19 10s each.

Per 8lbs., to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; second quality ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime large oxen, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 2d to 4s 4d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; second quality ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 0d; large coarse calves, 3s 10d to 4s 6d; prime small ditto, 4s 8d to 5s 0d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 8d; neat small porkers, 3s 10d to 4s 2d. Sucking calves, 18s to 30s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 20s each. Beasts, 683; cows, 114; sheep and lambs, 9740; calves, 362; pigs, 330.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a steady demand, to-day, for each kind of meat, at full prices:—

Per 8lbs., by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 6d to 3s 0d; middling ditto, 3s 2s to 3s 6d; prime large ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime small ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; large pork, 2s 10d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; middling ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 6d; prime ditto, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; veal, 4s 0d to 5s 0d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 2d; lamb, 4s 10d to 6s 0d.

ROBT. HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The Stock markets generally have displayed a marked improvement this week, in consequence of the peaceful character of the news received from the United States, by the packet Hibernia, which arrived on Sunday. Consols on Monday advanced to 100⅛ to ¼ for Money. This price has been since well maintained; but Tuesday being the day appointed for the closing of the Transfer books, until after the June dividend, our last quotation can only be given for Time. Exchequer Bills were a little flat the commencement of the week, but close at 63 prem. Bank Stock is 211½; Reduced, 99¼; New Three-and a-quarter per Cents., 102¼; Long Annuities, 11 7-16; Consols for the Opening, 99.

There has been more activity in the Foreign House during the week than has occurred for some time past. The news from Mexico, viâ the United States, gave an improved tone to that Stock, which closed at 38¼ to ⅜ on Monday. The arrival of a remittance by the Thames, of about 7000 dollars, had no effect in adding to this price—which has been barely sustained—the closing quotation being 38⅜. The Deferred Stock has risen to 21. Advices from Bogota, received on Wednesday, state that a further remittance of dollars has been despatched from thence to prepare for the dividend appointed to be paid on the 1st of July. The Committee of Bondholders, however, do not appear to know anything on the subject, and the question naturally arises, will Senor Mosquera pay over the amount of money he has in hand to assist in meeting this promised dividend? The Stock, however, improved to 16, but closed at 15⅜; Spanish advanced on Monday to 30½ to ¼ for the Active Stock and 42½ to ⅝ for the Three per Cents This price has since receded, and the Three per Cents. close at 41¾. Portuguese maintains its price, but the conversion is objected to by a very influential body of Stockholders, and with apparent justice; the closing quotation is 67¾; Belgian Four-and-a-Half per Cents. are 99⅛; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents., 63⅜; Four per Cent. Certificates, 98¾.

The impetus given to the Stock Market on Monday was more than shared by the Railway Securities. Eastern Counties, Great North of England, Midlands, Newcastle and Darlington, Brighton and Croydon, and Londonderry and Coleraine, all advanced considerably. Norwich and Brandon were also in great demand, at a rise of nearly three per cent., and Blackwalls are 10. The news of the rejection of the Rugby line, on Wednesday, which arrived just previously to the close of the Market, reduced the price of the Scrip about three per cent., and improved the value of the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Stock, to about three premium. Great Westerns have improved also, in consequence of this decision, which is so favourable to the "wide gauge:" the closing price of the latter is 206. Birminghams have receded from the same cause, quoting only 235. The closing prices are—Aberdeens, 4⅜; Armagh, Coleraine, and Portrush, 2; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 7; Bristol and Exeter, 87½; Caledonian, 12¼; Chester and Holyhead, 16⅜; Cuurne Valley, 5⅜; Direct Northern, 3⅜; Eastern Counties, 21¼; Ditto (New), 6½; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 65; Ely and Bedford, 2½; Great North of England, 245; Guildford, Farcham, and Portsmouth, 5⅜; Blackwall, 10: Brighton, 69⅜; Croydon, 19½; London and York, 3⅜; South Western, 84; London, Salisbury, and Yeovil, 2½; Londonderry and Coleraine, 5½; Manchester and Leeds, 165; Midlands, 185; Newcastle and Berwick, 18; Newry and Enniskillen, 5; Norwich and Brandon, 22½; Ditto (New), 5⅞ to ⅜; North British, 23⅜; Rugbys, 1⅜; Scottish Central, 6⅜; Ditto Midland, 3⅜: Shrewsburys, 5; South Devon, 27: South Easterns, 45¾; Trent Valley, 19½; Waterford and Kilkenny, 4; Welch Midland, 4; Yarmouth and Norwich, 30⅜; York and Carlisle, 4⅜; York and North Midland, 108; Boulogne and Amiens, 2⅜; Bordeaux and Toulouse, 2⅜; Great Northern of France (Lafitte's), 5⅜; Ditto Rosamel, 2⅜; Louvain and Jemappe, 4¼; Orleans and Bordeaux, 11¼; Paris and Lyons (Lafitte's), 3; North of Spain, 2; Sambre and Meuse, 11¼.

SATURDAY MORNING.—There was considerable animation in the Share Market yesterday; but some of the lines in which the late rise has been most marked suffered a reaction. Dovers, Brighton, and London and York were heavy.—There was no alteration of importance in the Foreign House.—Consols were flat at a slight reduction in price, closing at 98¾ for the Opening.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JUNE 3.

BANKRUPTCIES SUPERSEDED.

T. COOK, Leicester, glove manufacturer.
G. B. SCHOLES, Lostock Hall, Lancashire, muslin manufacturer.

BANKRUPTS.

J. P. and G. J. BRADLY, Great St. Helen's, wine merchants.
W. MATTHEWS, Lisson-grove, North, St. Marylebone, pianoforte maker.
W. CLARKSON, Redcross-street, boot manufacturer.
S. FAWCETT, Chiswell-street, linen-draper.
J. YATES, Lambeth, shipowner.
J. MOHON and R. SIMONS, Mincing-lane, City, wine and spirit merchants.
F. H. CHURCH, Southampton, surgeon.
W. ASTLE, Wolverhampton, Staffordshire, plumber.
L. PEARSON, Newcastle upon-Tyne, currier.
J. PITT, Plymouth, grocer.
J. C. DEMPSEY, Bristol stationer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATION.

J. BURNSIDE, Argyll-street, Glasgow, shoemaker.

FRIDAY, JUNE 6.

DECLARATION OF INSOLVENCY.

W. MOSSMAN, fancy stationer, Clark's-place, Islington.

BANKRUPTCY SUPERSEDED.

M. COFFEE, victualler, Liverpool.

BANKRUPTS.

C. GENT and G. MILLAR, commission-merchants, Bread-street, City.
F. A. DE WILDE, cabinet ironmonger, Wells-street, Oxford-street.
J. SMITH, ship and insurance broker, St. Dunstan's-hill, City.
J. SMITH, grocer, Reading, Berkshire.
W. WALTERS assistant warehouseman, Hercourt-street, Marylebone.
J. BURBURY, maltster, Leek Wootton, Warwickshire.
J. CRABB, hemp manufacturer, Castle-Stock, Cheshire.
J. DAVIS, chemist and druggist, St. Michael, Bristol.
E. T. JONES and H. M. CROSKILL, booksellers, Rochdale.
J. M. NELSON, general broker, Liverpool.
W. R. CARSCADEN, hosier, Leeds.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

We have the gratification of acknowledging our obligations to the leading London Journals for the very handsome and flattering manner in which they had thought proper to notice the exertions of the Proprietors of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, and we have also a similar duty to discharge towards our brethren of the provincial press and sister kingdon, from whom we have received an unanimous verdict of approval, couched in such terms that it really looks like egotism to quote their opinions. The sin of vanity, however, is much less heinous than that of ingratitude, and in this dilemma we cannot hesitate on which horn to impale ourselves. From all parts of the civilised globe, and from all parties, whatever their politcal shade or colour, have we received those flattering testimonials to our merits (which can only serve to stimulate as to future exertions); but our space precludes the possibility of quoting more than the few following, which may be taken as fairly indicative of the general tone with which our labours have been hailed :—

(From the Morning Herald).

It is with much satisfaction that we have observed the rapid progress which has been made in general estimation by a publication of an entirely novel and decidedly meritorious charactea. Thii publication is the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, a weekly newspapers which not only bids fair altogether to supersede many of its less worthy rivals, but has already made considerable progress towards effecting that desirable object. The weekly prints to which we allude have long enjoyed a factitious reputation, founded ostensibly upon their assuming to address themselves more particularly to the wants and wishes of the people at large,- but, in reality, working for the abasement of all moral feeling, subverting all religious principle, and widely extending opinions of the most disloyal and pernicious character. These publications had unhappily absorbed a large number of that class of readers who have only the opportunity of seeing a newspaper once a week, and to their evil influence may be attributed much of the discontent which has from time to time manifested itself among the working people.

The scope and tendency of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS are entirely the reverse of that which we have condemned: its purpose is to improve at the same time both the mind and the taste of the people: to elevate the moral tone of the weekly newspaper readers, and combine amusement with instruction. This end has been fully attained by the judicious management of those who conduct the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. It presents at once an epitome of all the intelligence which the labours of the daily press have accumulated, and adds to that information original articles of abiding merit, connected with the most important or interesting topics of the day—the whole illustrated in the fullest and most satisfactory manner by the ablest artists. The first volumes of this work now lie before us, richly embellished with the most attractive engravings, and replete with the most compendious information. Its cheapness would excite our wonder at the possibility of giving so much for so small a sum (the price being only sixpence) were we not assured, from good authority, that its circulation already nearly equals that of the most prominent among the Sunday papers. This is a natural result; for the attraction being as much for the eye as the understanding, the weekly purchaser will inevitably be led towards that which gives him pleasure to look at as well as to read. It is not to be inferred that the LONDON ILLUSTRATED NEWS has created a new class of readers—such a result is only the work of much time; but it has done even better, it has drawn within its vortex numbers of those who formerly read the only publications accessible to them, which added nothing to their information but a knowledge of vice or infidelity. At the same time, we are gratified to learn that the list of subscribers comprehends a large number of the well-informed and highly-educated.

To insure the complete success of the LONDON ILLUSTRATED NEWS, it has only to continue steadily in the career which it has so well begun.

(From the Morning Post.)

Of the marvels of the day, as far as decoration is concerned, the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS has, assuredly, a claim to the first rank, whether as regards the general excellence of its illustration and its profusion, or the cheapness with which it is tendered to the public. It is crowded with cuts, illustrative of all the passing events of the day, and giving, in addition, the usual letter-press of a weekly newspaper, at a rate which, but for the most extensive public patronage, could not by any possibility pay the proprietors for the liberality with which they have produced it. It is, without exception, the newspaper which is more calculated for a family, where the younger branches are more numerous, than any other of the periodical journals, from the utter absence of all matter which can offend the most delicate, and the varied nature of its contents. In addition to the news of the day, we have political characters, theatrical sketches, topographichal information, and graceful verses, all of pure literary merit, and adapted to give that useful kind of information, which is so often needed by young people or provincial readers, as a commentary upon the facts which the pages of the daily press bring before their view.

(From the Morning Advertiser.)

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—The fancy, facetiousness, spirit, and indeed elegance of this publication, place it without a rival as a newspaper candidate in families and among the young. Sparkling, amusive, attractive in the highest degree, from the variety of its letter-press and its unprecedented display of pictorial embellishments, it derives a further recommendation from the good taste with which it is conducted, and its studied avoidance of whatever should create a blush, or induce an impure sentiment. It is precisely the weekly periodical for the drawing-room table and "evenings at home." Its inexhaustible novelty is a perpetual charm, while its gaiety, its variety, its unexpected crowding of illustration, inevitably rivet the magination and the eye.

(From the Globe.)

The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS is unique in its character and design. The proprietors select the most interesting subjects connected with the passing events of the day, and supply a series of beautifully executed wood engravings, accompanied by letter-press descriptions, to illustrate and perpetuate their occurrence. In addition to the enterprise which marks the progress of this weekly publication, its proprietors have shown their sense of the patronage their undertaking has obtained from the public, by presenting their regular subscribers with a colossal engraving from a steel plate, the superior execution of which must have cost a very considerable sum: the value of each impression, on a moderate estimate, must go far to equal the sum of the entire cost of the journal from the publications of its first number. We draw attention to the journal as meriting unqualified approval.

(From the Derby Mercury.)

In an age like the present, remarkable for the abundant resources to which the intellectual and inquiring mind may have recourse for increasing knowledge and information, the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS must be acknowledged to be without a rival. Valuable as an historical record of her most gracious Majesty Queen Victoria's visit to Scotland, and a faithful delineation of the times in which we live, it abounds no less with spirit-stirring anecdote and affecting incident of every-day occurrence. The magnificence of its pictorial embellishments, alone, cannot but create the most pleasing interest in its favour in the general sentiments and opinions of its readers. We particularly recommend the volume for the past year, if appropriately bound, as admirably adapted for a Christmas present to the young of both sexes, certain that they will be delighted with its perusal, while, at the same time, it will form a useful and attractive addition to their libraries, and prove an entertaining companion in a lady's boudoir, or drawing-room.

(From the Liverpool Courier.)

Decidedly the most spirited literary effort of the day is the getting up of the above periodical, the plan of which is as novel as the execution is beautiful. The design, indeed, is one which would scarcely fail to be successful, combining, as it does, information on the passing topics of the day, with pictorial representations, and thereby appealing to two of the strongest of the popular appetites—curiosity, and the love of amusement. The only marvel is, how it can answer the purposes of the publishers, seeing the enormous expense they must be at, for a continued weekly succession of new cuts. By a most extended circulation alone can they possibly be remunerated; and we cannot doubt but in this they will not be disappointed. The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS is honourably distinguished from many of the popular periodicals of the metropolis, and may be safely admitted into any family, being not less unexceptionable in its tone than it is attractive in its aspect.

(From the Liverpool Chronicle.)

We suppose the paper appellated the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS is now known to everybody, and purchased by almost everybody; if not, we would advise a commencement at once, for everybody ought to be in possession of so rich a fund of art as it embodies. Unlike the generality of illustrated works, the subjects get better and better, both as regards finish and design. The Views of London given with the final number for 1842, are beautifully and correctly engraved, and are of themselves prodigies of art. We wish the proprietors of this spirited paper all the success they deserve, and feel assured that the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will outwing and outlast all the ephemera of the day.

(From the Liverpool Albion.)

We believe that all our readers have either seen or heard of this paper, which has recently been making such creditable efforts to gain public favour, that it has become popular throughout the three kingdoms, and we have even read its praises in the journals of the West Indies and of North America. All who have seen the numerous illustrations published in each number must be aware of their great excellence. The artists employed must be individuals of high ability, for the freedom, grace, and boldness displayed, are indications not only of long practice, but of great genius.

(From the Stirling Journal.)

The high excellence to which the art of engraving on wood has arrived, has been, during the last dozen years in particular, applied with much success to the illustration of many publications. But embellishments of first-rate excellence have been almost exclusively confined to publications, either not limited to appearance on a special day, or to such as are issued monthly. The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS is an exception. It is a regular weekly newspaper, of 16 large pages; and, from its careful and judicious selection, its low price (considering its size and the number and beauty of its illustrations), and withal the moderate tone of its politics, admirably suited for what is appropriately termed a family newspaper. The embellishments are in the finest style—such only as we have been accustomed to see illustrating the higher order of monthly and other publications. The expense attending a publication of this kind must be great. Here we have a newspaper of 48 columns, paper and typography of the best description, and the whole embellished in the way we have described, for the small sum of sixpence.

(From the Athlone Sentinel.)

The selected and original matter are right good, and to ladies who would be desirous of procuring materials for a scrap-book, the ILLUSTRATED NEWS will be invaluable. The proprietors have undertaken a mighty work, and must have secured men of the first-rate talent. They deserve encouragement, and will, we hope, succeed.

(From Mona's Herald.)

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—This is the title of a new journal published in London, and it is certainly as unprecedented a specimen of newspaper printing as it is an unique feature in the newspaper press. Here, for the small sum of sixpence, is an excellent summary of all the news of the week, original articles written with talent and judgment, and no less than thirty splendid wood-cut engravings of subjects of passing interest, in a style which, twenty years ago, could have been scarcely equalled on copper. Considering the enormous expense such a publication must involve, our only wonder is, how it can be sold for the money. It is indeed a splendid proof of the proficiency in the arts in the nineteenth century, and we hope such an important undertaking will be duly patronised by the friends of taste, intellect, and the fine arts.

(From the Kelso Chronicle.)

As an amusing record of passing events, addressed not only to the mind by its letter-press, but the senses by its broad and palpable delineations of character and scenery, we hail the happy idea, and heartily recommend it, especially to families, as an agreeable pastime for the young, or as fitted to adorn the drawing-room table. We wish it every success.

(From the Leamington Chronicle.)

The ILLUSTRATED NEWS will doubtless have an extensive sale in every town throughout the United Kingdom; and such indeed must be requisite to reimburse the liberal proprietor for the expenses of his national undertaking.

(From the Guernsey Star.)

This paper, which is a miscellany of politics, arts, and literature, consists of sixteen folio pages, embellished with upwards of thirty excellent engravings, most of which are illustrative of some event of present interest. The literary department of the paper displays talent in every way correspondent with its pictorial merits; the editorial articles bear the stamp of cultivated taste and sound judgment, and the selection of matter is made with that proper attention to instruction and good morals which, if the same line of management is adhered to, must make the paper an acceptable and useful acquisition to families. The mechanical execution of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS is equally entitled to praise; the typography is excellent, and the composition is singularly free from errors. Upon the whole, we can warmly recommend the paper to the patronage of the public, and, in so doing, we consider we are but doing justice to one of the most spirited undertakings that we have ever seen attempted. The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS is to be published every Saturday, and, although it abounds in beautiful engravings, costs but sixpence. We can scarcely pronounce an opinion on the politics of the paper, but it professes "an unconquerable aversion to the very name of party," and declares that it is determined to test all measures "by a reference to their practical utility." We suspect, however, that its affections lean towards that which we consider the better side—namely, that which is guided by those principles of Whiggism upon which the British Constitution is founded.

(From the Ulster Times.)

Some time since, a weekly newspaper was established in London, called the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, which presented, or, rather, at its commencement promised to present, the rare attraction of combining pictorial illustrations of public events and of the scenes of their occurrence. We confess we were anything but sanguine of its success when looking over the prospectus, and still less so when we obtained the first Number, as the literary matter was excellent, well selected, and well arranged, and the illustrations really admirable. We could not even conceive how the proprietor would contrive to remunerate himself for the immense outlay of capital which was evidently required to support weekly the talent which the first Number displayed. In fact, we concluded that it was merely a gudgeon thrown out to catch while, and that each succeeding publication would be inferior to its predecessor, until eventually it would die a natural death. From a feeling of curiosity, we continued to purchase the paper, and we were as much pleased as astonished to observe that, instead of diminishing, it was weekly increasing in beauty and strength. Every subject of popular interest for the time we found illustrated in a manner which would do credit to works of a very ambitious class; and not those alone, but foreign scenery, metropolitan churches, public characters, Nooks and Corners of Old England, came from the hands of the artist with surprising accuracy and delicacy of finish. We feel gratified in having it in our power to recommend this agreeable and unique newspaper to public attention, as well on account of its literature as of the variety and beauty of its illustrations.

(From the Drogheda Argus.)

We took occasion, in May of the past year, to notice a weekly paper, then newly published, under the title of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. Since then this periodical has been progressing in public favour, and very deservedly so. The tendency of the NEWS is to improve at the same time the mind and the taste of the people, which object it carries out by well-written original articles, and by beautiful engravings, illustrating all the interesting occurrences of the day. We notice it now chiefly on account of a magnificent plate presented to its subscribers in the opening of the new year. It is a tableau monstre of London, in two parts, a north and south view, taken by the Daguerréotype from the summit of the York Column. The picture must be correct, since it was delineated by the glorious Sun himself. All the prominent features of London can be at once recognised by any one who knows that city, and, for those who do not, the ILLUSTRATED NEWS contains an index. To give some idea of the difficulty of preparing this enormous print, which is four feet six inches by three feet, we may mention that the Daguerréotype impression was first taken upon small plates of silver from the sun's rays; then copied, and the deficiencies filled in from nature; then engraved upon wood; to effect which, a perfect plane was formed of a number of small blocks of four or five inches square. This plane had to be formed without line, speck or flaw. The drawing upon the wood was the next step, and this was followed by the engraving. To effect this, eighteen artists were employed for two months, night and day, at the different departments. It was finally stereotyped, to guard against accidents of the press, and then launched to the public.

(From the Sheffield Iris.)

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—We believe all our readers have either seen or heard of this paper, which has recently been making such creditable efforts to gain public favour, that it has become popular throughout the three kingdoms, and we have even read its praises in the journals of the West Indies and of North America. All who have seen the numerous illustrations published in each number, must be aware of their great excellence. The artists employed must be individuals of high ability, for the freedom, grace, and boldness displayed are indications not only of long practice, but of great genius. In addition to the lavish embellishments given in each number, the proprietors have recently presented their subscribers with two superb views of "The Great Metropolis of England," which ought to be preserved with extreme care, as they are certainly extraordinary specimens of art.

(From the Newcastle Courant.)

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—The embellishments of this admirable publication appear to become more numerous and excellent with each succeeding week. The first volume has just been completed; and the supplementary part is literally filled with pictorial illustrations, while the index affords a key to the social and political history of the world during the last six months. The most surprising effort of the proprietors is an enormous plate, entitled "London in 1842," and presented to the subscribers on the occasion of the new year. It represents a bird's-eye view of the great city from the Duke of York's Column, and, as a work of art, is really surprising, having been taken by the Daguerréotype process of M. Claudet. The effect is very striking: every object of interest is clearly discernible, and the neatness of execution and finish honourable to the artists of the country.

(From the Dundee Herald.)

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS is a most admirable family paper, and gives, for sixpence, an excellent summary of the news of the week—a rich fund of literary matter—and, what is its chief attraction, a number of beautiful pictorial illustrations of objects of interest.

(From the Cork Southern Reporter.)

The proprietors of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS are entitled to the warmest support of every patron of art and literature. The illustrations in every number are numerous, the subjects well chosen, and the execution, in every instance, highly creditable to the artists. There is also a quantity of well selected and original matter contained in each publication, and it has this peculiar recommendation, that its object is to elevate the moral tone of that class who form the greater portion of the readers of Weekly Newspapers, while everything objectionable is carefully excluded from its columns. We cordially wish it every success.

(From the Preston Pilot.)

The proprietor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS has nobly redeemed his promise of providing a weekly newspaper that should do honour to the age in which it was produced; and whilst he has so faithfully performed his part, we trust that he has not been disappointed in receiving that ample support which his unexampled endeavours have so well entitled him to expect.

(From the Kilkenny Journal.)

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—We have already expressed our opinion of the merits of this extremely interesting paper. But the fact of the spirited proprietors having made a present to their subscribers of a magnificent print, entitled "London in 1842," calls for a fresh meed of approbation. These splendid views of London have been taken by the Daguerréotype process of M. Claudet—one is northern, and the other southern. They are executed in the highest style of art, and are contained in one immense sheet. If anything were wanting to complete the popularity of this elegant and admirable journal, it is now supplied by that chef-d'œuvre, "London in 1842."

(From the Kent Herald.)

LONDON IN 1842.—Under this title the proprietors of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS have published a print, gratuitously presented to the subscribers, of unequalled magnitude and excellence. It is a view of London, taken from the summit of the Duke of York's Column, looking to the south over St. Jame's Park, and to the north toward's Regent's Quadrant, embracing almost every object of architectural interest in this vast expanse—Buckingham Palace, Westminster Abbey, Regent-street, the Athenæum, St. Martin's Church, the Reform and the United Service Club-houses, the Horse Guards, Whitehall, the Parks, St. Paul's Cathedral, &c. &c. It probably the largest wood engraving ever undertaken, and could only be executed by the application of modern science, under the direction of first-rate artistical talent, and a very large pecuniary outlay. The views were first taken separately by the Daguerreotype, combined by skilful draughtsmen, and then transferred to sixty of the largest slabs of box-wood that could be procured. The junction of these, and the obtaining from the whole an engraving of uniform excellence, is among the miracles of modern art. We understand that it has occasioned quite a se sation in the metropolis; and will, no doubt, contribute to increase the already extensive popularity of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

SPLENDID SILVER FOUNTAIN FOR THE PASHA OF EGYPT.

MAGNIFICENT PRESENT TO THE PASHA OF EGYPT.

The Court of Directors of the East India Company are about to acknowledge the friendly deportment of the Pasha of Egypt towards our country, "in a manner worthy of the greatest political and military power of the East." A silver fountain, of extraordinary magnitude and exquisite workmanship, intended as a present to Mohammed Ali, from the Company, has been designed, modelled, and manufactured, on the premises of Mr. Smith, at Duke-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, where it has been inspected by many hundred visitors.

This truly magnificent fountain is upwards of 10 feet high, and contains 10,400 ounces (about 7¾ cwts.) of silver. From the top, water is thrown by a jet, by means of an arrangement in the interior; the machinery consists of a force-pump, and a weighted plunger working in an air-tight vessel; and the water, being thus thrown up, falls into three successive basins, in the form of the pyramid, and returns, through the centre of the lowermost basin, into the reservoir, whence it is again taken up and used, on the pump being set in motion. It will play for nearly two hours, after being pumped for six or seven minutes, by means of a handle inserted in one corner of the base.

This base is of quadrangular form, resting on a slab of black marble; it is 4 feet in diameter, and terminates in fluted claws; presenting, altogether, the appearance of a massive and enriched pedestal. In its centre rises a sort of altar, or column, also quadrangular; whence springs a shaft, sustaining the first and largest of the basins: within and around its edges, undulates a wreath of oak-leaves and acorns, twisted and banded together with excellent effect: the overhanging portions are characteristically festal. The design of the two upper basins need not be described. At each of the four corners of the basement rests a vase, of elegant design, containing a bouquet of flowers in frosted silver; and falling from the scrolls of the upper table, or altar, towards these vases, are cornucopiæ, filled with fruit and flowers; their execution is extremely beautiful, and artistically accurate. It may here be mentioned, that the likeness of beast, bird, or fish, is scrupulously avoided throughout the ornaments, in deference to the feelings of good Mahomedans, among whom the permanent resting-place of the fountain is cast.

The style of ornament throughout is that of Louis Quatorze. On each side of the base is a convex shield bearing the inscription that follows—on each side in a different language:—

To His Highness
MOHAMMED ALI,
PASHA OF EGYPT;
Presented by
THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.
London. A.D. 1845.

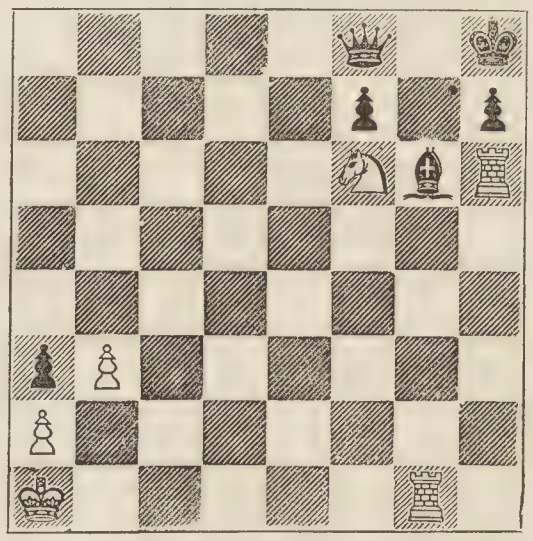
The other languages are Turkish, Arabic, and Latin.

The cost of this magnificent work is £7000. It has occupied somewhat more than seven months in the actual manufacture; and is, we believe, the largest silver work ever executed in this country It is, in every respect, a most superb triumph of English art.

TURKISH MARRIAGE.—The Courier of Constantinople contains a long description of the ceremony of the betrothal of Mehemet Ali Pacha with the Sultana Adile, the youngest sister of the Sultan. The enumeration of the presents sent by the Pacha to his bride, appears to have been borrowed from a chapter in the "Arabian Nights." The procession, escorted by a large body of troops, followed by numerous officers and generals, amongst whom is to be noted the Grand Vizier, Riza Pacha, marched in the following order:—130 Cavas, bearing on their heads 130 baskets filled with sweetmeats; two carriages, each drawn by four horses, bearing a chest ornamented with velvet and chiselled silver, containing the most valuable perfumes. Then followed 20 Cavas, bearing as many massive silver baskets, containing the richest stuffs, together with the utensils for a bath, enriched with precious stones. A pair of sandals, ornamented with large brilliants of the purest water, were particularly admired. Five Cavas followed, bearing, in magnificent baskets of massive silver, 500,000 piastres in gold, enclosed in bags of red satin The procession arrived in the same order at the Palace of Tcheragan, where all the presents were laid at the feet of the bride.

CHESS.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, No. 73.



WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to K B 4th (ch)	K takes Kt (best)
2. Q to her 3rd (ch)	K takes Kt
3. K Kt P one (ch)	K to Kt 4th
4. Q to K 3rd (ch)	K to R 4th
5. K Kt P one (ch)	K to R 5th
6. Q to R 6th (ch)	Kt takes Q
7. B mates.

PROBLEM, No. 74.

This beautiful position, by the Rev. H. Bolton, is taken from Lewis's "New Treatise on the Game of Chess."

White having to having to play mates in four moves.

BLACK.

WHITE.

GAME No. 13.

BETWEEN MM. HEYDEBRANT AND MEYET OF BERLIN.

WHITE (Von. H.)	BLACK (M. M.)	WHITE (Von H.)	BLACK (M. M.)
1. K P two	K P two	14. Q B to Q 2d	Q takes K B
2. K Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	15. Q to K Kt 4th (ch)	K takes P *
3. K B to Q B 4th	K Kt to B 3d	16. K B P two	K to Q 5th †
4. K Kt to his 5th	Q P two	17. Q B P one (ch)	Kt takes P
5. P takes P	Kt takes P	18. B takes Kt (ch)	K takes Kt
6. Kt takes K B P	K takes Kt	19. K B P one (discovering ch)	K to Q 4th
7. Q to K B 3rd (ch)	K to his 3d	20. Castles on Q side (ch)	K to Q B 4th
8. Q Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to K 2d	21. Q B P two (ch)	K to Q Kt 4th
9. Q P two	Q Kt P two	22. Q R P two ch)	K takes R P
10. Kt takes P	Q B P one	23. Q takes Q	Kt to Q 4th
11. Kt to Q B 3d	Q to her Kt 3d	24. K to Kt 2d and wins.
12. Q P takes P	Q B to Kt 2d
13. K Kt to K 4th	Q to her Kt 5th (ch)

* Had the King been played to B 2d, White would have mated him in two moves.

† By taking the Kt with his K, or the P with Kt, he must have been mated in about four moves; e. g.—

	16. K takes Kt
17. Q to K 6th (ch)	K to Q 5th
18. B to K 3d (ch)	Kt takes B
19. Q to K 5th (mate)
Or,
	16. Kt takes K B P
17. B takes Kt (ch)	K takes Kt (best)
18. B to Q 6th (disc ch)	K to his 6th (best)
19. Q to K B 3d (ch)	K to Q 5th
20. Q R to Q sq (ch) &c.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex. by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 163.—Vol. VI. FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1845. [Sixpence.

THE ABDICATION OF DON CARLOS.

THOSE who believe that war will ultimately cease to be waged between civilised nations, can point to many facts, which, though not altogether conclusive, tend to confirm their views. The wars of succession that so long convulsed Europe and devastated kingdoms in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, would now be rendered impossible, by the indifference of the Powers in possession of their thrones to the fall of those who are hurled from them. There have been many events within the last few years which, but for this feeling, would have sufficed to have thrown the world into confusion. France deposed the eldest branch of the Bourbons, and elected the Duke of Orleans: Europe accepted, and by its acceptation approved, the change. Belgium expelled the King of Holland and elected Leopold, with the same result. In Spain, the descent of the crown of Ferdinand in the male line was interrupted, and the Royal power vested in the hands of an infant, and a female, rather than it should be entrusted to an unpopular Prince. A civil war ensued, but the question was left pretty much for the Spaniards to settle among themselves. England and France did not, as they would of old, spend their blood and treasure in the quarrel; and now the contest, like our own war of the Roses, is to be ended by a marriage between the representatives of the two parties, Don Carlos having resigned a throne he never ascended in favour of his son, who even now may never possess it.

Portugal rejected Don Miguel, and the Prince is shooting snipes at Rome instead of his subjects at Lisbon. Again the European Powers troubled themselves not about the matter, but hailed Don Pedro first, and then Donna Maria as the de facto sovereigns. Were similar changes to take place again in any one of these monarchies to-morrow, provided a governing body was appointed which could preserve the land from internal anarchy, and restrain the people from aggression on its neighbours, other countries—our own included—would look on calmly enough. The day for coercing other nations into accepting a dynasty that is rejected by the bulk of the people is gone by; that the people may sometimes be mistaken, or afterwards repent—that they may occasionally depose a King Log, and get a King Stork in his place—does not affect the question; it is the rule of modern statesmanship that all faits accomplis are to be accepted. So if a political revolution takes place, the party which finds itself uppermost at the close of it, is accepted, treated with, and recognised, and the intercourse between nation and nation goes on much as before; whether the change is for the better or worse to the particular people who bring it about, is a matter for their own decision. England was formerly remarkable for its tendency to interfere with the Governments of other countries; but she indulged it at a fearful expense; and the many hundred millions of her national debt now make her pause when she sees these changes going on, and ask herself the sensible question whether she is quite in the position to judge correctly of the wants of others; whether in fact, each nation—though it may manage its affairs but badly—do not on the whole manage better themselves, than we could do for them?

The latest example of the utter indifference with which statesmen view the claims of a legitimate, but rejected Prince, is found in the little notice taken of the abdication of Don Carlos. It excited neither interest nor remark, and was passed over as lightly as the most ordinary, every-day occurrence. He transferred all his rights to the Throne of Spain to the Prince of Asturias, and formally gave up a claim, the assertion of which failed long since in the appeal to arms.

There are now, therefore, two young Princes in Europe in a painfully similar situation. The Duc de Bordeaux and the Prince of Asturias are the direct representatives of the Royalties of two great kingdoms; they are both exiles, expiating in obscurity the follies and crimes of their progenitors, who held and abused the actual power of which they inherit nothing but the memory and the regret. Few conditions in life can be more sad and disastrous; the successor to an empty claim finds in it a fatal legacy,—still more fatal when that claim is to departed sovereignty. Their assumed rank is perpetually at variance with their actual position; fate places a "barren sceptre in their gripe," and the visionary crown they chase must cause more anxiety than the weight of the actual diadem on the brows that bear it in their stead. They become the centres of plots and schemes, and the instruments or victims of desperate men, whose only object is, at all hazards, to overturn the order of things at present established. They cannot descend to the ranks of the people; they do not mingle on perfectly equal terms with the aristocracy—there is a something that draws a line of distinction between them; and, from diplomatic reasons, they are not recognised for what they claim to be, by Courts and Governments It would be far better for them to give up their abstract right altogether, and claim nothing that could not be fully accorded them. But this is rarely done. Two rebellions, and both disastrous, scarcely sufficed to convince the descendants of James the Second that England had renounced the Line of the Stuarts for ever; the feverish dream of Royal rights haunted even the last degraded representative of the race. It is the same in the present instance. Don Carlos does not abandon the claim; he merely transfers it to his son; in him it may have all the chances of all the success it can ever obtain—but that will be far short of what Carlos aspired to. His son may be the Husband of the Queen, but the Constitutional party is too strong to permit him to be King of Spain.

HER MAJESTY'S COSTUME BALL AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE

But, however this may be, it is certain that these changes in the Royal Houses of Europe, are now regarded with a composure that renders war with other Powers on account of them, out of the question The strength and resources of civilised nations are so well known to each other, and their capacity of doing mutual mischief so well ascertained, that rulers are no longer desirous "greatly to find quarrel in a straw." Taking their naval and military strength together, England and France command the greatest amount of destructive force in Europe. It is the perfect knowledge of the fact that restrains them from fomenting every difference into a quarrel, though in France there is a party—we hope decreasing in influence—willing enough to do so. Changes of Dynasties are quietly accepted, and delicate questions like those of the Right of Search, or Disputed Boundaries, which have been the root of past wars, are referred to negotiators, and settled by treaties. It is evident that civilised nations, as they approach equality to each other, are compelled to a mutual respect; the wars of modern times are those of civilisation against barbarism, and on this point public morality in all countries is not very elevated. We are continually engaged in hostilities, or are on the verge of them, in India. The French colony of Algiers is only held by fighting, or readiness to fight. But the feelings that made "wars of succession" for the support of the "Family Compact," and the preservation of the "balance of power" possible, have passed away. A "thirty years' war" in Europe, to decide who should govern the Palatinate, is not to be placed among the probabilities. Nations have come to a sort of understandiug among themselves as to the retaining or rejection of rulers; and thus dethronements and abdications which would once have convulsed society, pass by almost unregarded.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The late treaty for the suppression of the slave trade is much discussed by the Paris papers. The news they contain is rather meagre. The Chamber of Deputies has voted the Paris and Lyons and the Lyons and Avignon Railroad Bills by a majority of 230 to 4. The duration of the concession of this latter line was fixed at fifty years. The company will have to execute at its own expense a branch to Grenoble.

M. Jorrand, formerly member of the National Convention and of the Council of Five Hundred, lately died at Ahnn, in the Department of the Creuse, in the 89th year of his age.

The Revue de Paris announces that Rear-Admiral Dupetit Thouars would be appointed Commander of the naval division about to be stationed on the coast of Africa in virtue of the convention signed by Dr Lushington and the Duke de Broglie. M. Dupetit Thouars would hoist his flag in a 50 gun frigate, and have for his deputy commander, Captain Bouet Wuillaumez, who has resigned the government of Senegal

In the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday, after the introduction by the Minister of Finance of a bill of mere local interest, the Minister of Marine presented one for increasing the navy, and maintaining twenty-six ships of war on the coast of Africa, in pursuance of the treaty just concluded in London for the repression of the slave trade. Some satisfaction was evinced on this bill being presented. At the moment Admiral de Mackau was laying on the table the said treaty, and the instructions drawn up for the guidance of the superior officers who are to be employed on the African station, M Guizot entered the hall, and was received with the warmest congratulations by a large number of members who surrounded his seat on the ministerial bench. M. Thiers then rose, and reminded the Chamber of the vote they had come to three weeks before as regarded the execution of the laws against the Jesuits, and declared that the said vote ought to be followed by a prompt "solution." The Keeper of the Seals replied that no fresh occurrence had taken place which rendered it necessary that the Government should resort to the execution of the laws just mentioned. M. Martin added that the Government were sensible of the importance of the question, and of the discussion that had taken place, and that he again engaged to act as soon as circumstances should require it. After some more words on the subject, exchanged between M. Dupin and the Keeper of the Seals, the debate was resumed on the budget for 1846; the several first chapters of the budget of the Cuetas were successively adopted, and the budget of the department of foreign affairs came under discussion.

SPAIN.

It appears by our accounts from Madrid that the crusade against the press is proceeding. The editor of the Esperanza having announced to his readers that he would publish, in a supplement, the official documents relative to the abdication of Don Carlos, the Political Chief ordered the seizure of that paper before its publication. The Heraldo blames that proceeding, and observes that "he might have allowed them to circulate without any danger to the public peace" "The object of this farce of an abdication," it adds, "is evidently to endeavour to facilitate the conclusion of a marriage between the Pretender and the Queen, a project to which the national interest, the dignity of the throne, high and powerful state reasons, the blood of thousands of victims, justice and right, are now as strongly opposed as ever."

A rumour was in circulation at Madrid that an insurrection would break out at Barcelona upon the arrival of the Queen.

BUENOS AYRES.

Important news has been received from Buenos Ayres to the 5th April. The particulars are contained in the following extract from a letter to a mercantile house.

"We have to inform you that official despatches have been received from General Oribe, dated the 29th ult, advising the complete defeat of General Rivera, at a place called the India Muerta, ninety miles north of Monte Video, with the loss of all his infantry, artillery, and baggage, on the 27th inst., after an action of two hours with the division of General Urquiza One thousand men are said to be killed and five hundred prisoners taken, including a great many officers. General Rivera is reported to have escaped with eight men. Great rejoicings have taken place here on account of this triumph.

The blockade of Monte Video is not yet formally acknowledged by the French.

MINISTERIAL CHANGES.—It is rumoured that Mr. Milnes Gaskell, now a Lord of the Treasury, will be made Secretary to the Board of Control, in the place of Mr. Emerson Tennent, who goes out to be Colonial Secretary in Ceylon; and that Sir Charles Douglas, M.P. for Warwick, will succeed Mr. Milnes Gaskell.

SUMMARY OF RAILWAY FACTS.—During the first five months of the present year, the increase on the aggregate revenue of railways over the corresponding period of last year is nearly half a million sterling. This increase, at 5 per cent., represents an increase of 20 millions in the value of the railway property of the country. The total receipts of above 1700 miles, comprising all the great lines, up to the end of May, has exceeded £2,250,000.——The total number of accidents on railways, reported to the Railway Department of the Board of Trade, for the quarter ending April 1, 1845, was 39; being 22 deaths and 17 injuries.——In the case of the Cambridge and Lincoln line of Railway, the Committee have decided, that "whenever the proper time should arrive, it would report to the House that the preamble of the Bill for that line had not been proved." The decision of the Committee was accompanied by the declaration, that the promoters of the line might, after the Report, submit the Cambridge and Lincoln scheme to the Committee as a project, and that the counsel for the promoters might, if they thought proper, proceed with evidence in the case as upon a project, but that this could not be done until the Committee had reported against it as a Bill.—— Mr. Mackenzie, the secretary of the Brighton line, has just vacated his post. The most perfect cordiality subsists between Mr. Mackenzie and the Board of Directors. Mr. Buckton succeeds to the office.——The Belfast and Ballymena Railway Bill has been read a third time and passed in the House of Commons.——It is calculated that the Orleans and Tours Railroad will be opened, at the latest, by the 1st of October.——The line of railway from Bishop's Stortford to Cambridge will be formally opened on the 1st of August. ——The Committees have declared the preambles of the following bills to be proved:—The Blackburn, Burnley, Accrington, and Colne Extension Railway; the Richmond Railway; the West London Thames Extension Railway; the Middlesborough and Redcorn Railway.——The London and Greenwich Railway Bill and the Newcastle and Berwick Railway Bill have been read a third time and passed.——Mr. Cubitt, the chief engineer of the Amiens and Boulogne Railroad, has calculated that the whole line will be much easier to execute and less expensive than has been estimated, inasmuch as out of 31 leagues not a single tunnel will be required.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

COMPENSATION TO IRISH TENANTS.—Lord STANLEY introduced a bill founded on the report of the Irish Landlord and Tenant Commission, for the purpose of securing to the occupying tenant in that country compensation for any improvements he may have effected on his holding. In explaining the views of the Government, Lord Stanley denied that the evils of Ireland could be adequately met by compulsory emigration; and contended, that in proportion to the extent of waste lands the country was not over-peopled. Contrasting the condition of the Irish with the English tenant, he argued for the necessity of some measure which might have the effect of inducing the former to expend capital on the improvement of the soil. With this view the bill proposed to grant compensation to tenants for three classes of improvements—buildings, drainage, and the levelling of fences. There had been hitherto attempts to enforce regulations between landlord and tenant; but those attempts had failed, owing to the expensive nature of the process for enforcing them. In order to obviate this difficulty, and establish an inexpensive method of equitably adjusting claims, he proposed that there should be an office in Dublin, with a salaried officer at its head, to be called "The Commissioner of Improvements."—Some opposition was expressed to the details of the bill, but it was read a first time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

PORTUGAL.—In answer to a question from Mr. S. WORTLEY, Sir R. PEEL said there was no foundation for the report that further negotiations were pending with Portugal, with a view to a commercial treaty.

BANKING IN IRELAND AND SCOTLAND.—The night was passed in discussing in committee the clauses of the new Banking Bills for Ireland and Scotland, and at one o'clock the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

THE MAYNOOTH COLLEGE BILL.—The Duke of Wellington having moved that the House should go into Committee on this bill, the Duke of LEINSTER took the opportuuity of stating that he had resided near and watched the College of Maynooth for thirty-two years, and had not observed the slightest misconduct on the part of the students. He had the honour of being acquainted with three of the presidents of the College, and he considered them most worthy men. He fully approved of the principle of the bill, and hoped it would pass into a law.—Lord CLANCARTY denounced the bill as an invasion of the principles of Protestantism. At present the Protestant people of England, Scotland, and Ireland, were as one man opposed to it. He could not conceive a moment more unpropitious than the present for this so called message of peace to Ireland. With these views, he moved, as an amendment, that the committee on the bill be deferred till that day six months.—The Earl of WICKLOW thanked the Government for the bill. He intimated, however, that it could not stop short with this measure, but that it must hereafter propose the endowment of the Catholic Church. The noble Earl suggested the mode in which he thought this ought to be done. He objected to a grant from the Consolidated Fund, and said the only just way was by placing a rent charge upon the land of the country.—Earl FITZWILLIAM agreed with Earl Wicklow's opinions in regard to an endowment of the Catholic Church.—Lord WHARNCLIFFE disclaimed the idea that the Government intended this bill to pave the way to an endowment of the Catholic Church. At present there were so many difficulties in the way, that he could not see how anybody could conceive that Government had any intention of proposing such a measure. Before they did so, they must watch how the feeling of the country tended. At present, all they said was, that they proposed the present measure as an important one, and as an earnest to the people of Ireland that everything which the Government could do to soothe their feelings would be done. (Hear, hear.)—The Marquis of BREADALBANE said he believed the people of England were not gulled by the present measure, and that they did not look upon it as an isolated one. (Hear, hear.) They looked upon it as one that got in the large end of the wedge, and they knew that the small end would soon follow. (Laughter.) They knew that the endowment of the Roman Catholic clergy would soon follow the present measure (hear, hear); but the people of this country would bear in mind that such a measure was intimately connected with the fundamental principles of the Constitution, and with the safeguard of the liberties of the country established at the Revolution, an endeavour to invade which had never till now been attempted. (Cheers.)—The amendment was then negatived without a division, and the house went into committee.—The bill passed through committee without any alteration or amendment, the report was brought up, and the bill ordered to be read a third time on Monday next.—The house, at eight o'clock, adjourned till Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

THE CORN LAWS.—Mr. VILLIERS made his usual annual oration upon the Corn laws. His speech consisted chiefly of the arguments before used by him against protection. He contended that the Corn-laws were wholly unsuited to the present condition of the country—that they never had a laudable object in view—that at times they had proved most injurious to the labouring classes—and that the sooner they were abolished the better. The object of them originally was to make land dear; and that object had been consistently pursued in all the legislation which had been adopted since. After dwelling upon these points, Mr. Villiers moved—

That the house resolve itself into a committee of the whole house, for the purpose of considering the following resolutions:—

That the Corn-law restricts the supply of food and prevents the free exchange of the products of labour

That it is therefore prejudicial to the welfare of the country, especially to that of the working classes, and has proved delusive to those for whose benefit the law was designed; and

That it is expedient that all restrictions on corn should be now abolished.

Mr. OSWALD seconded the resolutions —Mr. CHRISTOPHER and Mr. BUCK opposed them, and they were supported by Mr. MITCHELL and Mr. M PHILIPS.—Sir J. GRAHAM admitted that, by prudent measures, they might bring the Corn-laws in a nearer relation to the sound principles of commercial legislation, but that no sudden step ought to be taken. At once to throw open the trade in corn would be inconsistent with the general welfare, and would give such a shock to the agricultural interest as necessarily must convulse all the other branches of national industry. The question was as to the best means of providing a supply of corn for a population rapidly increasing; and, if he thought that this would be best effected by free trade, no other consideration would prevent him from supporting the doctrine. He was convinced, however, that a free importation of corn would bring the price down permanently to 35s., a price which would render it necessary to throw much land out of cultivation, and the injury thus inflicted on large districts of England, and on the whole of Ireland, would be so great as not to be compensated for by any benefit likely to accrue from a free trade in corn.—Mr. BRIGHT followed Sir James Graham, whom he accused of dealing in fallacies. He alluded to the proceedings at the free trade bazaar at Covent Garden Theatre as a proof of the interest taken upon the subject of free trade. The amount received at the door and from the sales was more than £20,000; the unsolicited subscriptions sent up from the country were about £4000 or £5000, and the unsold goods would make the total amount to nearly £30,000. Some hon. members opposite had witnessed bazaars presided over by duchesses and ladies of rank, but he believed that none of them had ever been at a bazaar the proceeds of which amounted to the one-tenth of the sum raised by that of the League. There were ladies at that bazaar—(Much laughter)—many of whom, when at home, lived just as sumptuously, as independently, and every way as respectably as the bulk of hon. members opposite, and yet so firmly persuaded were they of the truth of the principles which the League held, and which hon. gentlemen opposite affected to despise but dare not, that they (the ladies) came up to the metropolis, and for three weeks submitted to the arduous undertaking of attending to that bazaar. (Laughter.) It was easy to sneer at those things, but there was one member opposite who would not sneer at them. That member was the right hon. baronet who led them (the Conservative gentlemen) and who knew better than to sneer at the middle classes of the country.—Mr. S. O'BRIEN opposed the resolutions.—Dr. BOWRING and Mr. CAVENDISH supported them.—Lord EBRINGTON said he had formerly opposed the motion of Mr. Villiers, because he hoped that a fixed duty would have formed a compromise between the two great interests of the country. He now, however, despaired of any such compromise, and would, therefore, give his hearty support to the resolutions.—Mr. COBDEN said the question was, whether the house could in justice pass a law to restrict the food of the people, and that the question had not been met, and he might venture to predict never would be met, fairly by argument in that house. The condition of the unskilled labouring class of this country was a disgrace to the country.—Mr. BANKES replied to the arguments of Mr. Villiers and Mr. Cobden, endeavouring to show that they had fallen into several historical errors, materially bearing on the question before the house.—Lord J. RUSSELL quite agreed in the two first resolutions of Mr. Villiers, and would vote for going into committee with a view to see in what way the law should be relaxed, or to what extent. The noble lord then contended for the necessity of a revision of the existing law, which added to the incomes of the legislators, while those legislators failed in proving that it was beneficial to the rest of the community.—Sir R. PEEL said he had last year opposed a similar motion, by Mr. Villiers, which motion was nearly identical with the present, and which was, nevertheless, opposed on that occasion by the noble lord, who now, it appeared, was prepared to support it. He could not follow the noble lord in this course; but, while voting against the motion, he could not agree in all the arguments adduced against it. He could not agree that a high price of corn necessarily implied high wages; nor could he agree with those who contended that the condition of the people was much deteriorated, as compared with what it was some few months back. The right hon. baronet then explained that his object was to reconcile a gradual approach to sound principles, with a cautious attention to the interests which had grown up under a different system.—Lord HOWICK supported the resolutions.—Mr. VILLIERS replied, and a division then took place, the result of which was as follows:—

For Mr. Villiers's proposal	122
Against it	254
Majority against the resolutions	—132

The House sat till half-past two o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

DOG STEALING.—Mr. LIDDELL moved the second reading of this Bill, the object of which was to make dog stealing a misdemeanour, and to visit the second offence with transportation for seven years.—Mr. HUME objected to several provisions of the Bill, as opening the door to great oppression. He moved that the Bill be read a second time that day six months.—Some little discussion ensued; in the course of which, Sir J. GRAHAM said dog-stealing was carried on to a great extent in the metropolis, and, although he could not support all the enactments of the Bill, he should vote for its second reading.—Some Members thought dogs were sufficiently protected, while Mr. BRIGHT suggested that similar protection should be extended to cats.—Upon a division, the numbers were—

For the second reading	67
Against it	23
Majority for the second reading	—44

The House went into committee on the Smoke Prohibition Bill; and, while some remarks were being made upon the subject, it was proposed that the House be counted, and only 39 Members being present, an adjournment took place at half-past seven.

HOUSE OF LORDS —THURSDAY.

TENANTS' COMPENSATION BILL.—Lord PORTMAN presented a Bill "On the subject of the expediency of providing compensation to tenants of lands for improvements thereon in certain cases." The noble lord explained the object of the bill, which was read a first time, and the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

On the motion of Mr. YOUNG, a new writ was ordered for the county of Edinburgh, Mr. Ramsay having accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

RAILWAYS.—The Caledonian Railway Bill, the Dundee and Perth Railway Bill, and the Clydesdale Junction Railway Bill, were read a third time and passed.

The Scotch Banking Bill was read a third time and passed.

POOR-LAW AMENDMENT (SCOTLAND) BILL.—The LORD ADVOCATE moved the second reading of this bill. One of the leading principles of the measure was that a Board of Supervision should be established. If a poor man considered that the means of sustenance with which he was supplied were not adequate, he must first make out a case before the Board of Supervision.—Mr. FOX MAULE moved that it be referred to a select committee, to inquire into the merits of the measure.—After a long discussion the motion was negatived without a division, and the bill read a second time.

The Irish Banking Bill went through committee,

The house adjourned at half-past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

PENSION TO SIR H. POTTINGER.—The Earl of ABERDEEN brought down a Message from the Queen, stating that her Majesty was desirous of granting a pension of £1500 per annum to Sir H. Pottinger. The message was ordered to be taken into consideration on Monday.

A desultory conversation arose upon the state of Ireland, and the house adjourned at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

RAILWAYS.—The following bills were read a third time and passed:—The Dublin and Drogheda Railway Bill, the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway Bill, the Aberdeen Railway Bill, the Leeds and Thirsk Railway bill, and the York and North Midland Railway Bill (Harrogate Branch).

SIR H. POTTINGER.—A Message from the Queen, similar to that brought up in the Lords, was brought up by Sir R. Peel.

THE COLLEGES (IRELAND) BILL.—On the question for going into committee upon the Colleges (Ireland) Bill, Mr. S. O'BRIEN opposed the bill, and made some personal remarks upon Mr. Roebuck—Mr. ROEBUCK replied, and said Mr. O'Brien had attacked the House in Conciliation Hall. Mr. O'Brien, he said, had "spit his venom" at Conciliation Hall, and now he repeated the trash.—Mr. O'BRIEN rose to answer Mr. Roebuck, but was called to order. After some discussion the house resolved itself into committee. Sir J. GRAHAM moved that a sum not exceeding £100,000 be granted out of the Consolidated Fund to establish new colleges in Ireland; and also an annual sum of £21,000 to pay the stipends, prizes, exhibitions, and other expenses of these colleges.—Mr. O'BRIEN was then allowed to defend himself. He expressed his contempt for Mr. Roebuck.—Sir R. INGLIS again rose to order, and Mr. S. O'BRIEN then vindicated the language used at Conciliation Hall, and repeated that the bill, in its present form, was an attempt to corrupt the intellect of the people of Ireland.—The resolution of Sir J. Graham was agreed to. Upon the question of going into Supply a discussion arose upon the fisheries of Ireland.—Sir C. NAPIER insisted upon the necessity of forming harbours of refuge, and of placing our frontier towns in a complete state of defence.—Sir R. PEEL thought they ought to take advantage of a time of peace; but, at the same time, the Government would take every reasonable precaution against war. This was the course the Government had taken.—Lord PALMERSTON urged the necessity of being prepared for sudden attack, as the extension of steam navigation, and the increase of railways, had almost deprived England of the advantages of her insular position.

The house was occupied for a long time in miscellaneous discussion, without going into Committee of Supply, which it only did at last formally, and did not adjourn till past one o'clock this (Saturday) morning.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

MAJOR-GENERAL OGILVIE, C.B.—We regret to have to announce the death of this distinguished officer at Banff on the 2nd instant.

DEATH OF MAJOR-GENERAL ROBERT PYM, C.B., R.A.—This distinguished officer, who held the rank of major-general in the corps of Royal Artillery, expired in London on Sunday last, after a short illness, having removed to the metropolis from Woolwich a few days since, to be near his physician. The deceased had seen considerable service, having been in the corps upwards of half a century.

POST CAPTAIN.—Commander the Hon. Swynfen T. Carnegie (1838), son of the late distinguished admiral, the Earl of Northesk, and M P. for the county of Stafford, has been promoted to the rank of post captain DEATH OF MAJOR-GENERAL SIR J. BRYANT, C.B.—We have to announce the demise of the above gallant officer, a Director of the East India Company.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK AND THE "SATIRIST."—On Monday in the Court of QUEEN'S BENCH, sentence was pronounced upon Mr. Barnard Gregory, late proprietor of the Satirist, for a number of libels, published in that paper, on the Duke of Brunswick. Mr. Justice Patteson addresed the defendant, stating that he had been found guilty of eleven libels upon his Serene Highness the Duke of Brunswick, published during the interval from the 14th November, 1841, to the 21st August, 1842, couched in such terms as were scurrilous in the extreme; and calculated, in the eyes of those who would condescend to read such abusive nonsense to hold up the Duke to ridicule, if not to contempt. He continued for months to publish these disgusting and scurrilous paragraphs. The Court was now prepared to take into its consideration the imprisonment for four months which the defendant had endured for a former libel on the Duke, the eight months being for a libel not on him but on another person, together with other circumstances stated in extenuation; and, taking into consideration all that had been stated, it now sentenced the defendant to be imprisoned in the prison of the Queen's Bench for the space of six calendar months on each count of the indictment —the time of such imprisonment to begin upon each count simultaneously.

THE POWER OF CORONERS.—On Monday, in the same court, Mr. Kelly applied for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up from Newgate the body of Daniel John Cock, who now stood committed to that prison upon a charge of killing one Hannah Moore.—Mr. Kelly stated the circumstances of the case, which have appeared in our paper, and argued that the prisoner ought to be taken before the Coroner's Jury.—Lord Denman said that he had the greatest respect for the very ancient office of Coroner, and for the very valuable services which Coroners' Inquests rendered in protecting the lives of the Queen's subjects; but he felt much difficulty in acceding to this application. The law had been successfully called in aid to secure his person, and to put him upon his defence. The Coroner's Inquest could have no object to do more. There did not, therefore, seem any purpose now to be answered by bringing up the body of the prisoner.—The other Judges concurred, and the application was therefore refused.

THE CASE OF THE REV. MR. OAKELEY.—In the ARCHES COURT, on Tuesday, the proceedings against Mr. Oakeley were commenced, and occupied a long time. The suit was instituted by the Bishop of London, in the name of his lordship's secretary, against the Rev. Frederick Oakeley, minister of St. Margaret's Chapel, for having published a letter or pamphlet containing doctrines repugnant to the tenets of the Protestant Established Church, of which he was a member. Mr. Oakeley did not appear to defend the suit. After the Court had taken cognizance of the various documents, it intimated that, as the case was very important, it must take time to consider its judgment. Possibly it might prove not to be the least important as a question of practice. The question was not quo animo Mr. Oakeley subscribed the articles, nor with what mental reservation, but merely whether the doctrines of that gentleman's pamphlet were repugnant to the canons and articles of the Church of England, and which question would necessarily require the deliberate consideration of the Court.

MR. WARD AND THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.—On Tuesday, in this court, the Solicitor-General, referring to the above case, which was a rule for a mandamus to the University of Oxford to restore Mr. Ward to his degree in that University, said that he had considered the matter, and thought that, in all probability, the Court would not upon motion decide the question thus raised, and he had therefore determined to allow the rule to be made absolute without opposition, that the question might be raised on the return.

NEW BARRACKS IN THE TOWER—LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE.—It having been for some time decided upon to erect grand barracks in the Tower, on the site of the storehouse destroyed by fire some years since, and this morning being appointed for laying the foundation stone by the Duke of Wellington (Constable of the Tower), a great crowd collected in the neighbourhood at an early hour, but no one was admitted within the walls without producing a ticket from the proper authorities. The noble duke arrived at half-past eleven o'clock, and was loudly and enthusiastically cheered. It was expected Prince Albert would have witnessed the ceremony, but his Royal Highness was not present. The stone was laid with the usual ceremonies, attended with military honours; after which, the numerous and distinguished party who had received cards of admission took their departure.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

It would be absurd, in the present day, to affect to pronounce any eulogy upon sporting. Even those who are not sportsmen admit that the pleasures of the field are, of all excitements, the most healthy and innocent; and the universal favour in which they have been held, from the earliest ages to the present, is no slight testimony in their behalf.—BLAINE.

The aquatic season has now set in with great éclat, and all who exercise their pleasure in the water are in their element—from Cowes, with its fleet of gorgeous galleys, to the Baths of Holborn, with their floating fry of Ojibway Indians. Last week closed with the Henley Regatta—a most accountable festival for the amateurs of oar and scull. Saturday wound up the various contests, in the victory of Cambridge over Oxford for the Grand Challenge Cup, by three lengths. Woe! woe! for Isis! Cambridge also sent two champions, who wrested the Silver Wherries from two brave sons of Thames. The racing was very good, though the time was bad; the sport not being over till near nine. Moreover, it rained at intervals, with great want of consideration. On Monday, at Lord's, came on the match between the Marylebone Club and the Undergraduates of Cambridge—and into operation the alteration in the laws of cricket, as revised by the members of the Marylebone Club. These are to the following effect:—Amendment of the 10th law—"The ball must be bowled, not thrown or jerked, and the hand must not be above the shoulder at the time of delivery; and whenever the bowler shall so closely infringe on this rule as to make it difficult for the umpire to judge whether the ball has been delivered within the true intent and meaning of this rule, the umpire shall call 'no ball.'" In the 12th law—"If the bowler shall toss the ball over the striker's head, or bowl it so wide as not to be fairly within reach of the batsman, the umpire shall adjudge one run to the party receiving the innings, and such ball shall not be reckoned as one of the four balls; but if the batsman can bring himself within reach of the ball, the run shall not be adjudged." The Club is just now in force: it beat the Eton Collegians on Friday week by twenty-five runs, to say nothing of its decisive victory over imperious Sussex three days previously. In sailing, the week has not been productive of material: it is fit we state, however (which we do with extreme satisfaction), that the breeze in the R. T. Y. C. has blown over harmlessly. The lion of the last four days was the Royal meeting on Ascot Heath. Like its near relative, Epsom, it is a wonder-worker, achieving, among others, the miracle of inducing fashion to forsake St. James's during the season, and tolerate the country while "the bloom is on the rye."

The last was a most goodly anniversary—the part elsewhere given being taken as a fair—albeit, a somewhat flattering—sample of the whole. And seeing that the turf is so right noble a pastime, what pity that it should be made a toil to ensnare the sanguine and confiding! That such is the respect in which it has long been regarded by a class of desperate scoundrels, is past peradventure: every season of latter years has produced its instance of racing robbery—the agents, on every occasion, being those who make it a profession; while the cases are treated as exceptions, and not consequences, of the rule. With the return of each Derby, the "ring" loses a "leg" or two; and yet it is as well supported as ever. How "can such things be?" A fellow without a farthing in his pocket, or metal of any sort belonging to him, except the brass in his face, sets up a racing stud as he would a chandler's shop—for the ostensible purpose of getting an honest livelihood. Noblemen and gentlemen engaged in racing are painfully aware that a turf establishment is more expensive than any of the adjuncts of pleasure; and yet they see a "leg" keeping his race horses without suspicion. The pretence that a stud is to be kept on its legitimate resources, is about as sound as that an opera box (or an opera anything else) can be maintained upon the notes with which it furnishes the setter up. The biographies of several sporting characters who have been living upon nothing for long periods—besides laying by something handsome out of it also—are likely soon to be published in the columns of the "Racing Calendar." The information they will afford may not prove very amusing; but should profit come of them, they will not have been written in vain. . . . . Tuesday—a day of golden summer—drew a distinguished party to the Royal Course, including her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Duke and Duchess de Nemours, and a brilliant Court. There never was a more propitious commencement of a meeting. the list consisted of eight races, among the nominations being many of the animals to which public interest attached, in consequence of the singular results of the late Derby. The Vase was won by Sweetmeat, a three-year-old, distinguished for honest running early in the spring. Of course, this put the prophets "in the hole"—a place they have occupied pretty constantly during the season. Idas was beaten in a canter for the Ascot Derby: he has greatly receded from his Newmarket forms. The betting was not a shadow of its former self; the "legs" have had their day; it is now gone by. Nothing could be more satisfactory than the sport on the two by-days—Wednesday and Friday: the company was more select than numerous. Thirty horses ran for the Hunt Cup on the former day—the largest field ever seen at Ascot. Moreover, the meeting of the current week was by far the most brilliant ever known there: "May its shadow never be less!"

THE ASCOT CUP DAY.

"Palmam qui meruit ferat."

No institution for the promotion of a defined object, was ever so treacherously abused as the British turf. It was originally established with a view to enlist popular emulation into the improvement of the national breed of horses, by rewarding the best with public prizes of account, and to afford the people a wholesome and harmless recreation. Human ingenuity could not have devised means so certain to frustrate these purposes, as those adopted in the direction of its details — more especially during the last few years. To give a death blow to the former, the system of handicapping was introduced, whereby the worst horse in a race is afforded the best chance of winning; and the best is allotted to carry a weight that may cripple them for life; while to taint and impregnate with danger its character as a popular amusement, the ring was made an integral part of it: the "ring" being neither more nor less than a society of disreputable paupers, who live by their pencils as highwaymen were wont by their pistols. Not content with such a chance as falls to the lot of few communities, the "legs" set about dealing with their customers as the boy did with the goose that laid the golden eggs. For the last ten years, at all events, a grievous professional robbery has been done upon the chief races of the season, the Derby and St. Leger in particular. There is, however, reason to hope that the crisis of this crying abomination has arrived.

The investigation at present in progress with reference to long past cases of delinquency, when made public, must, at the least, put an end to all betting with professional gentlemen. This will be one move towards the decline of the handicap—the grand point d'appui of the ring. Shall not the noble example set the patrons of the turf this day by a foreign Sovereign help the good cause still further? The Emperor of Russia's Cup (the richest prize given on the English turf—proh pudor!) is a weight for age race, and will command the nomination of the best horses in training, from three years old upwards. And is it not a monstrous thing that the owner of a second Eclipse, till its institution, had not a race in which to engage him worth one half so much "public money?" Except for the "Market," or Trials, latterly no racer—as a racer—on our turf, after three years old, was worth £1000. . . . . .

Thursday last was, by many degrees, the most glorious Cup Day ever known at Ascot: the railways, perhaps, robbed it of the blaze of equipage we have seen in former years—Zinganee's, for instance; but, in the matter of people, it never had an equal. The Queen, with her Royal Consort, the Duke and Duchess de Nemours, and a brilliant Court, came on the heath precisely at half-past one, and were received with extraordinary enthusiasm.

The weather was the perfection of summer, and the scene such as the round world could not furnish elsewhere. With the general racing we do not concern ourselves here—the returns will give all that is required about that—save the Cup. Here was an event for which twenty-six of the best horses in England were entered, and for which but four came to the post—Foigh-a-Ballagh, Alice, Hawthorn, Cowl, and the Emperor—the former backed at six and seven to four on him against the field. After each horse had been exhibited to the Royal visitors the race commenced; and, at bad speed, the Emperor, winner of the Cup last year, won it; the finish being only a canter to him. Who shall henceforth say—"What's in a name?" Cowl broke down, Foigh-a-Ballagh was too full, and Alice too empty. At the conclusion of the event the Court left the course; and soon after five the general move took place, after such a day as don't fall to a man's lot to enjoy often in his life. The universal subject of congratulation was, a gentleman here won it. In this we join cordially—"palmam qui meruit ferat"—no nobleman deserves the olive better than Lord Albemarle.

MONDAY.—The speculative took a very wide field this afternoon, all the principal betting races at Ascot, and those staple events, the St. Leger and Derby, having been more or less brought into notice. So small were the investments, however, and so utterly without any exciting feature, that we may safely follow the example of our morning contemporaries, and leave the odds to speak for themselves.

THE QUEEN'S VASE.

2 to 1 agst Mr. Hill's lot (t)	7 to 2 agst Zanoni (t)	7 to 1 agst Ironmaster
3 to 1 —— Alice Hawthorn	7 to 2 —— Sweetmeat

ASCOT STAKES.—FIRST CLASS.

9 to 2 agst Inheritess	6 to 1 agst Best Bower	10 to 1 agst Yardley (t)
5 to 1 —— Perkin Warbeck	8 to 1 —— Wee Pet

ASCOT STAKES.—SECOND CLASS.

3 to 1 agst Annandale (t)	7 to 1 agst Lydia Languish	8 to 2 agst Poor Soldier
5 to 1 —— Subduer

THE EMPEROR'S CUP.

5 to 4 agst Foigh-a-Ballagh,t	5 to 1 agst Cowl	8 to 1 agst The Emperor (t)

NORTHUMBERLAND PLATE.

12 to 1 agst Godfrey	15 to 1 agst Northumberland	15 to 1 agst What

ST. LEGER.

6 to 1 on The field	12 to 1 agst Old England	20 to 1 agst The Baron
10 to 1 agst Annandale	17 to 1 —— Mentor	50 to 1 —— John Davis (t)

THE DERBY.

45 to 1 agst Brocardo (t)	45 to 1 agst Sombrero (t)	50 to 1 agst Cambaules
45 to 1 —— Tug Net (t)	45 to 1 —— Sting	50 to 1 —— Hoorrah (t)

THURSDAY was a dies non.

ASCOT RACES.

These races commenced on Tuesday with—

The Trial Stakes of 5 sovs each, 50 added. New Mile. 11 subs.

Mr. A. W. Hill's The Libel, 3 yrs.	.. ..	(Arthur) 1
Lord Chesterfield's Knight of the Whistle, aged	..	(Nat) 2
Mr. John Day's The Hero, 2 yrs	.. ..	(Donaldson) 3

7 to 4 against the Knight of the Whistle. Won in a common canter by two lengths.

The Ascot Derby Stakes of 50 sovs each, h ft. 10 subs.

Lord Exeter's Wood Pigeon	.. .. ..	(Mann) 1
Lord Stradbroke's Idas	.. .. ..	(Nat) 2
Mr. A. W. Hill's Salopian	.. .. ..	(Calloway) 3

7 to 4 agst Wood Pigeon. Won cleverly by a length.

The Ascot Stakes (in two classes) of 25 sovs each. 24 subs. to the first class, and 23 to the second.

First Class.

Duke of Richmond's Lothario, 5 yrs, 8st 11lb	.. ..	(Nat) 1
Mr. Meiklam's Inheritress, 5 yrs, 7st 10lb	.. ..	(Lye) 2

The Gold Vase, given by her Majesty, added to a Sweepstakes of 20 sovs each.

Mr. A. W. Hill's Sweetmeat, 3 yrs, 7st 3lb	..	(Whitehouse) 1
Mr. A. W. Hill's The Libel, 3 yrs, 7st 3lb	.. ..	(Arthur) 2

Alice Hawthorn and Foigh-a-Ballagh were declared not to start before the first race.

Sweepstakes of 200 sovs each.

Colonel Peel's c by Slane, out of Cobweb (allowed 3lb)	..	(Nat) 1
Lord Exeter's Tunick (3lb)	.. ..	(Mann) 2

The Ascot Stakes. Second Class.

Mr. Payne's Queen Mab, 6 yrs, 8st 7lb	.. .. ..	(Nat) 1
Mr. Johnstone's Annandale, 3 yrs, 6st 5lb	.. ..	(Riley) 2

The Welcome Stakes of 20 sovs each, with a bonus by an independent subscription of 5 sovs each

Mr. Gully's Weatherbit	.. ..	(John Day, jun.) 1
Lord Lonsdale's c by Jerry, out of Turquoise	..	(Bartholomew) 2
Duke of Richmond's Refraction, 6lbs extra	.. ..	(Nat) 3

Match, 200, h ft, both 2 yrs old. T.Y.C.

Mr. Payne's Collingwood	.. ..	(Nat) 1
Lord Chesterfield's Subscription	.. .. ..	(F. Butler) 2

WEDNESDAY.

The races, which were not finished until nearly six o'clock, commenced at half-past one o'clock, with—

The Coronation Stakes of 100 sovs each. 8 Subs.

Lord Chesterfield's ch f Stitch	.. .. ..	(Nat) 1
Lord Exeter's Topaz	.. ..	(Mann) 2

Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each. 4 Subs.

Lord Stradbroke's Idas	.. ..	(Nat) 1
Sir G. Heathcote's Gwalior	.. ..	(Chapple) 2

The Fern Hill Stakes of 15 sovs each, 5 ft., with 50 added. 17 Subs.

Lord G. Bentinck's Cherokee, 2 yrs	.. ..	(Abdale) 1
Mr. Ford's Fuzbos, 3 yrs	.. .. ..	(F. Butler) 2

The Royal Hunt Cup of 200 sovs, with 100 added.

Lord Stradbroke's Evenus, 5 yrs, 8st	.. .. ..	(Mann) 1
Mr. Thompson's Mongrel, 3 yrs, 5st 7lb	..	(A. Day) 2

Sweeps of 50 sovs each.

Sir G. Heathcote's Brother to Valentissimo	.. .. walked over

The Great Ascot Produce Stakes of 100 sovs each, h ft with 200 added.

Lord G. Bentinck's Cowl, 8st 4lb	.. .. ..	(Nat) 1
Mr. Wreford's Winchelsea, 8st 7lb	.. ..	(J. Day jun.) 2

The Albany Stakes of 50 sovs each.

Lord Chesterfield's Lady Wildair	.. .. ..	(Nat) 1
Lord Lonsdale's c by Jerry, out of Turquoise	.. ..	(Bartholomew) 2

THURSDAY.

Her Majesty' Plate of 100 Guineas.

Minotaur	 1

Dead heat for second between Pomare and ch f by Sir Hercules.

The New Stakes of 100 sovs each, with 100 added.

Jubilee colt	 1
Sting	 2

The St. James's Palace Stakes of 100 sovs each.

Idas	 1
Lyons	 2

The Emperor of Russia's Cup of 500 sovs, added to a sweepstakes of 20 sovs.

Emperor	 1
Foigh-a-Ballagh	 2
Alice Hawthorn	 3
Cowl	 4

The Visitors' Plate of 100 sovs (handicap).

The Libel	 1
Wee Pet	 2

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs each.

Javelin	 1
Tunick	 2

The Swinley Stakes of 25 sovs each, and 50 added, for three yrs old, &c.

Swinley Course.

Sweetmeat	.. .. walked over

FRIDAY.

The Chesterfield Stakes.

Lord Exeter's Wood Pigeon	 1
Sir R. W. Bulkeley's Cinizelli	 2

The Members' Plate.

Beaumont	 1
March First Filly	 2

Nine ran.

The Wokingham Stakes (First Class).

Lord G. Bentinck's Best Bower	 1
Lord Exeter's Wee Pet	 2

Several others ran.

Second Class of Wokingham Stakes.

Mr. Howe's Ratcatcher colt	 1
Lord Exeter's Jet	 2

Third Class of Wokingham Stakes.

Lord Stradbroke's Evenus	 1
Mr. Howe's Khorassan	 2

The Great Western Railway took down to Slough on Thursday upwards of 8000 passengers.

THE HENLEY REGATTA.

These races came off on Friday and on Saturday. On the first day the trial heats only were rowed for, and on Saturday the different contests were decided. The matches consisted of a race between the boat clubs of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, for the Grand Challenge Cup, the match for the District Challenge Cup, the final heat for the Diamond Sculls, the New Challenge Cup, the Town Challenge Cup, the Silver Wherries, and the Stewards' Challenge Cup. In the race for the Grand Challenge Cup, the Cambridge University boat came in a-head of the Oxford about three lengths. The District Challenge Cup by the Windsor and Henley Clubs was gained by the Henley. The Diamond Sculls by Mr. Wallace of the Leander Club, beating Mr. Bonant of St. John's, and Mr. Chapman of the Crescent Club. In this match Mr. Chapman came in first, but, having fouled Mr. Wallace during the race, the prize was decided by the umpires to be won by Mr. Wallace. The New Challenge Cup was carried off by the St. George's Club, of London, beating the Cambridge Black Prince and the Cambridge Lady Margaret. In the match for the Town Challenge Cup, the Henley Dreadnought Cutter Club was withdrawn, and the Henley Aquatic Club rowed over the course. The Silver Wherries Match was won by Messrs. Arnold and Mann, of Caius College, Cambridge, beating Messrs. Peacock and Chapman, of London. The last race was that for the Stewards' Challenge Cup, between the University Boat Club, Oxford, and the St. George's Club, London. This was an admirable race, and was decided by the umpire to be a dead heat.

ROYAL ACADEMY AND WAVERLEY BOAT-RACE.

This very interesting event, which has been the subject of much conversation in the aquatic clubs for some time past, came off on Wednesday evening. At about half-past six preparations were made for the start, and shortly afterwards the rival crews appeared at Putney Bridge to race to Mortlake Church, the same course as that chosen in the great Oxford and Cambridge struggle of last March.

ROYAL ACADEMY.	WAVERLEY.
1. H. M. Cooper	1. Green
2. A. D. Cooper	2. Webb
3. Howard	3. Bennett
4. Atkinson (stroke)	4. L. Strutton (stroke)
Smith (steerer)	E. Price (steerer)

The Waverley were close on their adversaries' stern all the way up, but could not pass them, and the Royal Academy won by about two lengths.

FOUR-OARED BOAT RACE.—On Monday, the annual four-oared boat race amongst the members of the Cambridge University for the silver medals took place, from Westminster to Putney, when the following crew, of four boats which contended, proved the victors:—C. Hill, Trinity College, stroke; C. T. Selwyn, Trinity College; J. Wilder, Magdalen College; G. W. Horton, Trinity College; A. F. Jackson, Caius College, steerer.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The arrivals of English wheat since our last report having been somewhat extensive, and the weather being favourable for the growing crops, the demand for that grain, to-day, was heavy, at almost nominal figures. Foreign wheat, free as well as in bond, was a mere drug. Grinding barley was quite as dear, but other kinds commanded very little attention. The malt trade was dull, and the rates had a downward tendency. Oats, beans, peas, and flour, were quite as dear.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 9480; barley, —; oats, 1510 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, — quarters. Foreign: wheat, 5510 barley, 3000 oats, 2270 quarters. Flour, 4010 sacks; malt, 4350 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 51s; ditto, white, 47s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s to 54s; ditto, white, 52s to 56s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distilling, 26s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 56s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 33s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Town made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk, Stockton, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 28 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 38s to 43s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 24s; oats, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s; beans, 24s to 29s; peas, 28s to 32s, per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to —; Baltic, 18s to — per barrel.

Seed Market.—For Canary we have had rather more inquiry; but all other kinds of seeds have met a very slow inquiry at barely previous quotations.

Linseed, English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 43s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 43s. Hempseed 35s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 13s per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 12s to 14s. Tares, 6s 6d to 7s 6d per bushel. English Rapeseed, £24 to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s; ditto, foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover seed, red, 42s to 50s; extra, 52s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s extra, 70s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5d to 6½d, per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 47s 7d; barley, 30s 2d; oats, 22s 2d; rye, 33s 0d; beans, 38s 0d; peas, 38s 1d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 46s 2d; barley, 30s 2d; oats, 21s 10d; rye, 30s 9d; beans, 37s 2d; peas, 37s 1d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 8s; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 5s 6d; peas 5s 6d.

Tea.—Several small public sales of tea have been brought forward since our last. The quantity actually disposed of thereat has been small, and prices have been with difficulty supported. Privately, a full average amount of business is doing at late rates.

Sugar.—West India sugar has been in good request at extreme rates, while the value of Mauritius has improved 6d per cwt. Bengal and foreign parcels have supported previous quotations. The refined market is firm at 71s to 71s 6d for brown grocery.

Coffee.—British Plantation coffee has met a very steady demand, at extreme currencies; while good ordinary Ceylons have sold at 47s 6d to 48s per cwt. Foreign and other coffees have supported late rates.

Oils.—There is a very steady business doing in linseed oil, at full prices. Also other kinds support last week's quotations.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £4 0s to £5 0s; useful ditto, £5 5s to £5 12s; fine upland ditto, £5 15s to £6 6s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6 0s; oat straw, £1 18s to £2 0s; wheat straw, £2 1s to £2 3s, per load.

Coals (Friday).—Holywell Main, 16s; Old Pontop, 14s; Old Tanfield, 14s; Killingworth, 16s; Wharncliffe, 16s; Lambton, 17s 6d; and Stewart's, 17s 6d per ton.

Provisions.—Owing to the prevailing fine weather, the demand for Irish butter continues very dull, at a further decline in the quotations of 2s per cwt. The same observations may be applied to English and foreign parcels. The best Dutch is selling at 82s to 86s per cwt. Dorset, 50s per firkin; and 12s per dozen for fresh. Bacon is in good request, at 1s per cwt more money. Prime sizeable Waterford is selling at 44s to 47s; inferior ditto, 41s to 43s; and heavy, 40s to 44s per cwt. Lard is quite as dear; while the value of other kinds of provisions is quite as dear.

Tallow.—Russian is in good demand at somewhat improved quotations. P. Y. C. on the spot has sold at 40s 3d to 40s 6d per cwt. The supply of Town tallow being scarce, that article is likely to be supported in value for some time hence.

Hops (Friday).—On the whole, there is rather more business doing in this market, especially in the finest qualities of hops, and last week's quotations are steadily supported. In the duty very little is doing. Sussex pockets, £7 0s to £8 0s; Wealds, £7 8s to £8 10s; Mid Kents, £7 7s to £8 15s; East Kents, £9 9s to £11 0s; Choice ditto, £11 11s to £13 0s; Mid Kent bags, £7 15s to £8 15s; East Kent ditto, £10 10s to £12 0s.

Wool.—The imports of wool continue very liberal, yet we have a steady private contract demand at fully, though at nothing beyond, previous quotations.

Smithfield (Friday).—In to-day's market the supply of beasts was—the time of year considered—tolerably good, but of very middling quality. The primest Scots found buyers at Monday's quotations; but all other breeds were a dull inquiry. We had on sale 130 beasts from Holland and 220 from Scotland. The numbers of sheep were tolerably good, but the demand for them was somewhat inactive, though previous rates were mostly supported. The lamb trade was steady at fully the rates previously paid. Both calves and pigs were very dull at barely late figures. Milch cows sold at from £16 to £19 10s each.

Per 8lbs. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s 2d to 3s 8d; second quality ditto 3s 10d to 4s 2d; prime large oxen, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 8d to 4s 10d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; second quality ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime coarse woolled sheep, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime Southdowns ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 0d; large coarse calves, 3s 10d to 4s 6d; prime small ditto, 4s 8d to 5s 0d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 8d; neat small porkers, 3s 10d to 4s 2d; lambs, 5s 0d to 6s 0d. Suckling calves, 18s 0d to 30s 0d; and quarter old store pigs, 16s 0d to 20s 0d each. Beasts, 917; cows, 120; sheep and lambs, 11,320; calves, 445; pigs, 310.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a very dull trade here to-day, and prices were with difficulty supported:—

Per 8lbs. by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; middling ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; prime large ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; large pork, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; middling ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 8d; veal, 4s 0d to 5s 0d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 4s 10d to 5s 10d.

ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English market was rather flat at the commencement of the week, but a better feeling predominated on Wednesday. The absence of business, however, on Thursday, from the attractions of Ascot races, tended to again render things flat, and some alarm with regard to the state of the harvest, afforded the speculators for a fall, an opportunity of depressing the market. Consols, at the close of the week, quoted 98⅞ to 99 for the opening; Reduced Three per Cents, 99½; New Three and a-Quarter-per Cents, 102½; India Bonds, 74; Exchequer Bills, 59 to 60, and 62 to 64; Bank Stock, 211 to 212.

The principal features of interest in the Foreign market have been the fluctuation in Spanish, and the rise in Columbian, and Mexican Spanish, which at the beginning of the week was flat, at a decline, rallied on Wednesday, quoting for the Actives, 28⅝; Three per Cents. 41 to ½. Passive Stock remains about 7½ to ⅝, the Deferred Stock having lately superseded it in the good opinion of the small speculators. An advertisement, emanating from M. Mosquera, appeared in the papers of Wednesday, announcing the agreeable fact that Messrs. Baring, brothers, and Company, had consented to act as the agents for the Grenada Government. New Bonds are to be issued for the Grenada portion of the Columbian debt, and this will leave the Ecuador portion (about 21½ per cent.) alone unprovided for. The Stock quotes at closing 17; Buenos Ayres closes at 43 to 44; Mexican is firm at the advanced price of 37⅝; Portuguese, 67¼; Spanish Actives, 28⅝ to 29; Passives, 7¼ to ⅜; Three per Cents., 41¼; Dutch Two-and-a-Quarte per Cents., 63¾; Four per Cent. Certificates, 98⅜.

The Share Market was very active at the commencement of the week, a considerable fall in the value of Cambridge and Lincoln occurring on Monday. The rejection of the line on Tuesday having been authentically pronounced, renewed the activity of the previous day, and the Shares fell to 2 pm., but afterwards rallied to 2¾. London and Yorks advanced to 1⅛ pm., and Eastern Counties declined. This excitement, however, abated on Wednesday, and on Thursday the attractions of Ascot left the Share Market nearly deserted. A demand has, however, arisen for Dovers, Brightons, Eastern Counties, and London and Birmingham, which quote improved prices. The following are the last prices of Shares most dealt in:—Aberdeen, 4; Armagh, Coleraine, and Portrush, 2½; Bristol and Exeter, 88, new, 9½; Caledonian, 11¼; Chester and Holyhead, 16¾; Churnet Valley, 5½; Coventry, Bedworth, and Nuneaton, 4½; Direct Northern, 3⅜; Dublin and Galway, 4⅛; Dublin and Mullingar, 5⅜; Eastern Counties, 20⅜; New, 7; Great North of England, 243; Great Western, 203½; Guildford, Farnham, and Portsmouth, 5; Birmingham Stock, 240; Blackwalls, 10; Brighton, 72; Croydon, 19½; South Western, 81½; London and York, 3⅜; Londonderry and Inniskillen, 5; Manchester and Leeds, 164; Midlands, 186; Newcastle and Darlington, 53; Newcastle and Berwick, 17½; Newark and Sheffield, 1⅜; North British, 6⅜; North Kent, 5¼; Oxford and Worcester, 5½; Richmond and West-end Junction, 4¼; Rugbys, 2⅜; Scottish Central, 6¼; Scottish Midland, 6¼; Shrewsbury and Trent Valley Union, 1¼; South-Eastern and Dover, 47¼; York and North Midland, 108; Boulogne and Amiens, 9¼; Bordeaux, Toulouse, and Cette, 2⅜; Great North of France, 5½; Ditto (Rosamel's), 2½; Louvain and Jemappe, 4¼; Paris and Lyons, 3; Ditto (Ganneron's), 2⅜; Tours and Nantes, 2⅜.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Consols were more buoyant yesterday, closing at 99¼ for the opening.—The Foreign Market was a shade worse.—The business of the Share Market was rather animated, and Cambridge and Lincoln improved, as well as Newark and Sheffield. The former closed at 4¼; the latter 2.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JUNE 10.

BANKRUPTCIES ANNULLED.—H. BENT, Brierly Hill, Staffordshire, chain-maker.—W. J. B. STAUNTON, Bishopsgate-street, City, wine-merchant.

BANKRUPTS.—G. ESTALL, Holywell-street, Westminster, plasterer. R. FISH, Ventnor, Isle of Wight, plumber and glazier. J. FISHER, Lynn, Norfolk, spirit-merchant. C. DALTON, Canal-bridge, Old Kent-road, Surrey, stone-mason. C. T. HICKS, Upper Thames-street, City, and Great Guildford-street, Southwark, Surrey, drug-grinder. T. PAYLER, Pudsey, Yorkshire, scribbling miller. G. BYFORD, Liverpool, wholesale grocer. G. GOODALL, Ashton-under-Lyne, licensed victualler. B. S. JONES, Wrockwardine Wood, Shropshire, grocer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—E. MOORE, Glasgow, draper. W. MILLER, Dalbeth, Glasgow, farmer.

FRIDAY, JUNE 13

WAR-OFFICE, JUNE 6.—MEMORANDUM.—Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to permit the 34th Regiment to bear upon its regimental colours the words "Arroyo dos Molinos," in commemoration of the gallant conduct of the second battalion of the Regiment in the operations at Arroyo dos Molinos, on the 28th of October, 1811.

WAR OFFICE, JUNE 13.—15th Foot: Lieut. G. Towell to be Lieutenant, vice Sewell; Ensign W. D. Hague to be Lieut., vice Towell; A. F. Warburton to be Ensign, vice Hague. 18th: Lieut. C. A. Coates to be Lieut., vice Mayo. 19th: Quartermaster R. Barrett to be Adjutant, with the rank of Ensign, vice Deacon. 24th: Ensign S. G. Carter to be Ensign, vice Lillypot. 37th: E. J. N. Burton to be Ensign, vice Gordon. 60th: Lieut. C. A. B Gordon to be Lieutenant, vice Vavasour. 65th: Ensign R. H. M'Gregor to be Lieutenant, vice Lambart; J. Barton to be Ensign, vice M'Gregor. 72d: Captain H. T. Bowen to be Captain, vice O'Brien. 74th: Lieut. J. P. Mayo to be Lieutenant, vice Coates. 86th: Capt. D O'Brien to be Captain, vice Bowen. 98th: Capt. W. Edie to be Major, vice Brevet Lieut. Col. Tripp; Lieut. J. Montresor to be Captain, vice Edie; Ensign C. A. B. Gordon to be Lieutenant, vice Montresor.

Royal Canadian Rifle Regiment: Cadet S. G. Carter, to be Ensign, vice Macdonnell; S. P. Jarvis, to be Ensign, vice Carter; Ensign R. Macdonnell, to be Adjutant, vice Bentley.

BANKRUPTS.—H. WOOD, Cheltenham, draper. J. HILL, Hammersmith, licensed victualler. J. MABBS, jun., Chichester, baker and corn dealer. G. H. and G. C. GREEN, Barge-yard, Bucklersbury, wholesale stationers. J. SQUIERS, Ipswich, fruiterer. W. WOOD and J. HOLMES, Maidstone, Kent, tea-dealers. T. CLIFTON, Barnard Castle Durham, printer. J. BRAITHWAITE, Morpeth, Northumberland, innkeeper. W. GIBBONS, Boardman-street, Manchester, licensed victualler

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATION.—A. FELL, Edinburgh, tailor.

BIRTHS.

At Ipswich, Mrs. Chevallier Cobbold of a daughter.——At Madeira, the lady of Archibald Colquhoun Ross, Esq., of a son.—At Romford Vicarage, the lady of the Rev Dr. Grant, of a son.——At Leicester, the wife of Thomas Macaulay, Esq., of a daughter.——The lady of Robert Samuel Palmer, Esq., of a son.——At Naples, Lady Parish of a daughter.——At the Rectory, the lady of the Rev. William S. Symonds, Rector of Pendock, Worcestershire, of a son and heir.

MARRIAGES.

At Kingswinford, Staffordshire, Vincent Hilbeche, Esq., to Emma, eldest daughter of Edward Addenbrooke, Esq.— Lo d Paget, to Sophia, second daughter of the late James Eversfield, Esq —— At St. George's, Bloomsbury, Arthur Ley Finch, Esq., to Mary, second daughter of the late Thomas Boon, Esq.—— At Clifton Church, Clifton, Henry Meade Hamilton, Esq., to Henrietta Mary, eldest daughter of Sir Erasmus Dixon Borrowes, Baronet.—— Captain Henry G. Hamilton, R.N., to Fanny Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the late Rev. Charles Towers.—At St. Pancras Church, Bernard Rathbone, Esq., to Mary Anne Curtis, fourth daughter—and, at the same time, Robert John Kell, Esq., to Amelia, fifth daughter—of J. G. Fearn, Esq.——At Battersea Church, Mr. George Douglas, to Eliza Catherine, third daughter of the late Mr. William Spooner.——At St. Giles's-in-the-Fields, John Hogg, Esq., M.D., to Miss John, of Dean's-court, Doctors' Commons.——At Alverstoke, Major W. H. Adams to Louisa Mary, eldest daughter of Rear-Admiral Sir Edward Ch tham, K.C.B. and K.C.H.—— At Brixton, Henry George Noyes, Esq., to Emma Anne, youngest daughter of the late William Taylor, Esq.——At Plumstead, the Rev. George W. Sandys to Emily, daughter of Colonel Cleveland.——At Kensington, Alexander Wight, jun., Esq., to Lucy Ann, eldest daughter of the late James Rixon Oliver, Esq.——At Brighton, Lucy Maria, second daughter of the late Rev. John Morgan Rice, to Edmond Elton, Esq., second son of Sir Charles Abraham Elton, Bart.

DEATH

Thomas Story

RUSSIAN DROSHKY, PRESENTED TO PRINCE ALBERT, BY THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA.

PRESENT FROM THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA TO PRINCE ALBERT.

His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia has just forwarded to this country, for presentation to the Prince Consort, a most magnificent gift, consisting of three Russian carriages and four superb horses of the purest Orloff breed. The valuable consignment arrived at Blackwall in the Camille steamer, from St. Petersburgh direct. The carriages—a double droshky, a single droshky, and a sledge—are respectively built in the most finished style. The first two equipages are of exclusively national construction, and afford a striking contrast to our English vehicles. Each of the carriages is intended to be drawn by one horse, which is attached in the Russian manner, having the picturesque Douga rising over the animal's head from the extremity of either shaft. The double droshky, which contains seats for two persons behind the driver, is of a brilliant sky-blue colour, edged with gold, the cushions being of a corresponding hue, with silver facings. The Imperial crown is mounted in gold on either panel. The colour of this carriage is understood to be in accordance with the taste of the Empress of Russia.

The single droshky is of a darker colour, and affords accommodation for one person only behind the driver. The sledge is very beautifully constructed: it is entirely of hazel-wood, the apron being formed of a magnificent bear skin. The horses are selected from the Emperor's private stud; their symmetrical form and great beauty are remarkable. One of the animals (an entire horse) is one of the deepest black, with a long flowing tail, and stands nearly 16 hands high; two others are grey geldings, almost equally beautiful; and the fourth is a black horse, with a tail extending to within an inch of the ground. It is, perhaps, not generally known that the Russian mode of driving differs very materially from our own. The coachman sits on a small dickey in front of the carriage, and holds a single rein in each hand, the snaffle-bit, which alone is used, being thus pressed against the horse's jaws. It is obvious that an English servant would feel himself a little at fault in adopting this novel mode of Jehuship, and the Emperor has accordingly sent over three of his own servants to instruct the Royal coachmen in their new duty. The harness and trappings are of the most superb description.

The whole of the carriages and horses were shortly after their arrival removed from Blackwall to the Russian Embassy, whence they were driven on Monday morning to Buckingham Palace: here they were driven in the grounds at the rear of the Palace. (See the Engraving.) They were then conveyed to Windsor, and on Tuesday morning, Prince Albert rode out in the single droshky; and the Duke de Nemours and the Prince of Leiningen in the double-seated droshky; each carriage being drawn by one horse, driven by a Russian groom. On the return of the Royal party to the Castle, their Royal Highnesses alighted, and the droshkies were driven several times at a rapid rate round the area of the Great Quadrangle. There were present also, the Master of the Horse, and Mr. Banister, Maitre d' Equipage, to whose care the horses sent by the Emperor of Russia were confided on their journey from St. Petersburg.

PENNY POSTAGE.—The usual Post-office returns have just been issued; they show results which must be highly gratifying to the friends of penny postage. The total number of letters delivered in the United Kingdom in the year 1844 was 242 millions, which is an increase of nearly 22 millions on the previous year. (The number before the reduction of the rate, it may be necessary to remind our readers, was 75 millions). But the most remarkable fact is the great increase in the London district, or old twopenny-post, the letters of which have more than doubled since the penny-rate was established.

LAUNCH OF "THE LADY OF THE LAKE" STEAMER, ON WINDERMERE.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

FISHER HOUSE, ISLINGTON.

This spacious mansion, called "Fisher House," in Lower-street, Islington, has just been taken down, with a view to the improvement of the locality. It was, probably, built by Sir Thomas Fisher, about the beginning of the 17th century. It bore in front, the Initials P. W. F.; and in the interior of the building, were the coats of Fowler, Bart., and of Fisher; impaling or, a lion rampant, gules. These were placed over opposite doors on the landing place of the large staircase. We are informed by Anthony Wood, that Ezekiel Tongue, author of several tracts against the Papists, and some treatises in Natural History, about the year 1660, kept an academy for teaching young ladies Latin and Greek, in a large gallery of a house at Islington, belonging to Sir Thomas Fisher. For upwards of 40 years, this old mansion has been appropriated to the reception of insane persons, and was latterly kept for that purpose by Dr. Sutherland, Physician to St. Luke's Hospital.

FISHER HOUSE, ISLINGTON.

A pamphlet, entitled "The Discovery, or the Mysterious Separation of Hugh Doherty and his Wife, 1807," contains some curious particulars respecting Fisher House. Brothers, the pretended prophet, was confined here for some time, until he was liberated by the authority of the Lord Chancellor Erskine, in 1806. The mansion had been uninhabited for some time previous to its demolition.

The adjoining grounds were very spacious, and at one time said to be beautifully laid out in lawns and shrubbery, flower-gardens, &c.

THE FIRST STEAMER ON LAKE WINDERMERE.

The launching of a steamer upon one of our northern lakes is not only a novelty in the lake district, but a circumstance wholly without precedent in any of the lakes, either of England or Ireland. Accordingly, on Saturday week, the day appointed for launching a steam-vessel on Windermere, the entire locality was a scene of holiday bustle. The vessel in question was built by Messrs. Ashburner, of Greenodd, for Messrs. Fell and Co., of the same place. She is 75 feet long in the keel, and of 49 tons burthen.

In the Westmoreland Gazette, the scene preparatory to the launch is described as very beautiful. Tents were erected for the accommodation of the visitors, flags were flying on the steamer, from boats moored on the lake, and from trees and buildings adjacent. At 11 o'clock, groups began to assemble to witness the spectacle: the Ulverston brass band was in attendance and played some lively airs. On the lake were two boats freighted with company, who attended in compliment to J. B. Fell, Esq.; and, having returned from Blakeholme, landed on the Quay, and orders were given to prepare for the launch. These arrangements being completed by Mr. Ashburner, the builder, the word was given, the bottle broken, and the vessel glided gracefully into the water, with the appropriate name of "The Lady of the Lake."

The launch was well-timed with the check-rope, which turned the vessel up and down the Lake with the greatest ease, the band playing, and the spectators cheering heartily. The pennant displaying the vessel's name, was then unfurled, and drew forth another loud cheer for the Lady of the Lake. She is a beautiful little vessel, and has a well-executed figure-head. When crowded with spectators, she only drew 16 inches water. Her cabin accommodation and her engines will speedily be fitted, and she will commence plying up and down the Lake on or about the 1st of July next.

After the launch, a dinner took place in honour of the occasion, John Wakefield, Esq., in the chair. About 50 carpenters and their friends also dined together at the same inn.

HER MAJESTY'S COSTUME BALL.

[We were enabled only to describe this magnificent Royal Fête in a portion of our last week's impression.]

The Queen gave a Bal Costumé on Friday evening, the 6th inst., at Buckingham Palace, at which all the guests appeared in the costume of the period between 1740 and 1750. The company numbered about twelve hundred, and included the diplomatic corps and the principal foreigners of distinction at present in the metropolis, all of whom adopted the foreign costumes of that date, appearing in the uniform of their respective nations. The nobility and gentry present in numerous cases adopted the costumes of members of their families living at that period, the dresses being copied from family portraits with the greatest exactness. Every possible variety of colour, texture, and material, and the greatest magnificence of embroidery and ewelled decoration consistent with propriety, were brought to bear on this quaint and antiquated costume, and the result was a harmony and unity of effect perfectly surprising.

Most of the gentlemen appeared in velvet coats—crimson, black, or blue—most richly embroidered with gold or silver, or trimmed with gold lace; powdered wigs were universal, and the style of coiffure was so complete as to render recognition, except among intimate friends, difficult. Gentlemen holding military commissions in her Majesty's service appeared, as nearly as possible, in the corresponding uniforms of their respective services at the period selected for the fête. Thus, the Duke of Wellington appeared in the uniform of the Duke of Cumberland of that day; the Earl of Cardigan in the uniform of the 11th Dragoons at the battle of Culloden; and the Marquis of Londonderry in the dress of a cavalry officer of the time; Lord Forester appeared in the dress of captain of the honourable corps of Gentlemen Pensioners; the Duke of Rutland was dressed in the full costume of a Knight of the Garter a century back; the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the dress of his predecessor in office of the period; Mr. Curzon in a very curious Venetian costume; the Duke of Beaufort, the Earl of Wilton, Earl Fitzhardinge, Lord Shelburne, Mr. Nugent Vaughan, Lord Morpeth, Lord Stanley, and Viscount Alford were distinguished by the richness of their costumes. The Earl of Liverpool, the Earl Delawarr, and Lord Ernest Bruce, the great officers of the household, appeared in the dress of their respective offices, and were distinguished by extraordinary magnificence.

Many Scottish gentlemen wore the Highland costume of the time, which, though retaining all its peculiarity, yet was sufficiently identified with the age, in the coat and high heeled shoe, so as to harmonise completely with the rest. Among the most beautiful Scottish dresses were those of the Marquis of Breadalbane, the Master of Strathallan, and Captain A. Gordon Cumming. The officers who wore infantry dresses displayed the long white gaiters which remained in vogue, even up to the reign of George IV. The cavalry all wore high military boots, and some of them the crimson silk sword belt fringed with gold, which gave them very much the appearance of a modern Grand Cross of the Bath. The cavalry were also distinguished by the three-cornered hat, while the infantry displayed the old-fashioned high-peaked Grenadier cap. The dresses of the ladies did not display an equal variety with those of the gentlemen; the style of all was the same, the only difference being in the costliness of the material, the taste in the choice of colours, and the display of jewels in decorations. A few appeared in little velvet hats, with one or two feathers, but they were exceptions. The general head-dress was the hair powdered, a ridge of curls round the forehead and face, and the hair falling back with curls on the shoulders, or wigs which came still closer to the fashion of the day

Some of the ladies made a difference in the fashion of wearing their trains; instead of starting from the waist, it fell at once from the shoulders, not being confined at all at the waist, but descending at once to the bottom of the skirt. The material of which these were composed was generally old brocaded silks and satins, many of them embroidered in gold and silver, or worked in needlework; the trains were looped up with golden clasps, bunches of flowers, and bouquets of brilliants and precious stones, displaying dresses of old point, Valenciennes, or Guipure lace, not too long to conceal the high-heeled, sharp-pointed, and diamond-ornamented white satin shoe. The ladies wore hoops, which very much extended the dress on each side, without adding to the rotundity of the figure. The effect of powder rendered the complexion of the younger ladies much more brilliant, and added not a little to the effect of this magnificent fête. Among the dresses distinguished for their splendour were those of the Duchess of Sutherland, the Marchioness of Ailesbury, the Marchioness of Douro, and Miss Burdett Coutts. The pages of honour were dressed in the complete costume of the period in miniature, each having a large white satin bow, or shoulder knot, on the right shoulder.

Among the earlier arrivals were those of Sir R. Peel, the Earl of Aberdeen, Sir J. Graham. Marquis of Abercorn, Sir Edward Codrington, the French Ambassador, the Duchess of Sutherland, Marquis and Marchioness of Lorn, Marquis and Marchioness Clanricarde, Mr. William Rose, Lord Ebrington, Lord and Lady Wharncliffe, Earl and Countess of Zetland, Earl and Countess Listowel, Miss Wyndham, the American Minister, Earl and Countess Kinnoul, Viscount Dupplin, the Duke of Beaufort, Lord and Lady Stanley, Countess of Verulam, Earl of Clare, Lord and Lady Kinnaird, Lord Foley, Sir John Hobhouse, Right Hon. Sidney Herbert, Lord Rivers, Lord Saltoun, the Lord Chancellor and Lady Lyndhurst, the Master of the Rolls and Lady Langdale, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram and the Misses Wigram, the Speaker, Mrs. Shaw Lefevre, and the Misses Lefevre Lord and Lady John Russell, Honourable Miss Lister, Mr. Henry Hallam, Lord and Lady Lyttelton, Marquis and Marchioness of Douro, Sir George Cockburn, the Right Hon. Thos. Pemberton Leigh, Sir Augustus, Lady, and Misses Clifford, Viscount and Lady Marianne Alford, Mr. Nugent Vaughan, Viscountess Forbes, Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston, the Duke and Duchess of Bedford, Viscount and Lady Sarah Ingestre, Lords Adolphus and Frederick Fitzclarence, Marquis of Salisbury, Marquis of Lansdowne, the Duke of Wellington, the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk, Honourable W. Cowper, Mr. C. Wood, the Marquis of Breadalbane, Viscount and Viscountess Maynard, Lord and Lady Claude Hamilton, Lord and Lady John Churchill, Mr., Lady C., and Miss Sanford; Marquis of Abercorn, Colonel and Lady Alice Peel, Lord and Lady Ashley, Duke and Duchess of Buckingham, Sir Watkin W. Wynn, the Earl of Euston, the Earl and Countess of Lincoln, Marquis of Northampton, Lord Stavordale, the Earl and Countess of Malmesbury, Marquis and Marchioness of Westminster, Lady Elizabeth Grosvenor, Sir Robert and Lady Gardiner, Earl and Countess of Verulam, Lady Jane Grimston, Lady Fanny Howard, Lord and Lady Beauvale, Mdlle. d'Este, Earl and Countess of Carnarvon, Major and Mrs. Weymouth, Lord and Lady Southampton, Lord and Lady Norreys, Earl of Mansfield, Lord and Lady Cremorne, Garter King of Arms, Earl Fitzwilliam, Ladies Fitzwilliam (2), Marquis of Londonderry, Viscount and Viscountess Newport, Lord and Lady Wenlock, Hon. Miss Lawley, Viscount Clive, Lord and Lady Dalmeny, Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Percival, Earl and Countess of Antrim, Earl and Countess Powis, Ladies C. and Lucy Herbert, Lord and Lady Carrington, Lord and Lady Denman, Marquis of Worcester, Duke and Duchess of Cleveland, Baroness and Miss de Rothschild, Countess of Rosebery, the Ladies Primrose, Lord and Lady John Russell, Earl and Countess of Rosslyn, Earl and

(Continued on page 376).

DUKE OF NORFOLK. DUCHESS OF GRAFTON. MARCHIONESS OF LONDONDERRY. VISCOUNT SYDNEY. COUNTESS OF JERSEY. LADY C. VILLIERS.

LORD MANDEVILLE. BARONESS ROTHSCHILD. EARL OF SURREY. MARCHIONESS OF ORMONDE. BELGIAN AMBASSADRESS. MARQUIS OF DONEGAL. MISS BURDETT COUTTS.

DUCHESS OF ST. ALBANS. VISCOUNT VILLIERS. DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND. VISCOUNT CASTLEREAGH LADY PEEL. DUKE OF ST. ALBANS.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 15.—Fourth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 16.—Duke of Marlborough died, 1722.
TUESDAY, 17.—John Wesley born, 1703.
WEDNESDAY, 18.—Battle of Waterloo, 1815.
THURSDAY, 19.—Inigo Jones died, 1652.
FRIDAY, 20.—Death of William IV., and Accession of Queen Victoria, 1837.
SATURDAY, 21.—Longest day. Income tax imposed, 1842.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending June 21.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m
10 16	10 48	11 21	11 51	0 0	0 22	0 49	1 17	1 42	2 10	2 36	3 2

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Subscriber," Dublin, is thanked for the following reply to "A Constant Reader," in explanation of the origin of the triple crown or tiara, worn by the Pope. The triple crown is indicative of the Pope's civil rank, as the keys are of his ecclesiastical jurisdiction; and on the death of a Pope, his arms are represented with the tiara alone, without the keys. The ancient tiara was a high round cap. Pope Damasius II. first caused himself to be crowned with a tiara, A.D. 1053. John XIX. was the first who encompassed the tiara with a crown, A.D 1276. Boniface VIII. added a second crown, A.D. 1295; and Benedict XII. formed the tiara or triple crown about the year 1334.

"L'Orient."—Macaws and other foreign birds are purchaseable at the Surrey Zoological Gardens.

"Wessex."—Canopus, in astronomy, is a bright star of the first magnitude in the rudder of Argo, a constellation of the southern hemisphere.

"Capt. G. H. B.," Bowness, is thanked for the sketch.

"J. W. W."—The sketch was not received in time.

"A Constant Subscriber," Peckham, should apply, with testimonials, to the secretary, G. P. O.

"J. D.," Manchester.—Lines to B. A. S., ineligible.

"A Subscriber," Manchester.—In 1831, a pigeon flew from London to Liskeard, in Cornwall, 226 miles distance, in six hours, about 37 miles per hour.

"A Constant Reader."—We have not room to explain the causes of the variations in the tides; but our correspondent may find them lucidly illustrated in "Murray's Encyclopædia of Geography," chap. 17.

"Φ. Ω."—In our calendar of last week, Friday, June 6, was stated to be the Festival of Corpus Christi, whereas it took place on May 22. Our correspondent will find the watches made by Barraud and Lund, Cornhill, to be excellent time keepers.

"Wilfred"—We do not answer impertinent questions as to a lady's age, or comparisons of talent, &c.

"J. C. W."—"The Soldier's Adieu" does not reach our standard of merit.

"Manfred," Cork.—Sir Humphry Davy's lines on Spinoza, if we mistake not, appeared in a magazine of the date at which they were written.

"G. T. N.," Liverpool, is thanked for his hint

"The Ladies"—Yes.

"J. G. F" is thanked for the sketches: but they reached us too late.

"A Subscriber," at Exeter, may receive our journal at £1 6s. per annum, by remitting the amount in advance, to our office.

"G. T., &c.," Yarmouth.—The value of the print depends on the state of the impression; probably, it is but trifling

"Diabolus," Truro.—A popular Manual of Pyrotechny is published by Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.; price, about 5s.

"Fides" is thanked: our illustrations generally take their complexion from the season.

"W. H. C.," York, should apply to Messrs. Dulau and Co., Soho-square.

"Tyrannus," West Clandon.—The museum is at the College, in Lincoln's Inn-fields.

"Inquisitive."—Enclose the letter, unsealed, to the Lord Chamberlain.

"C N," Chelsea.—The proof will be valid.

"Brevis"—The accent is on the second syllable.

"A Cornishman."—The lines on St. Keyne's Well will be found among Southey's Miscellaneous Poems.

"A Constant Reader" should address Sir Henry Ellis, British Museum.

"A Subscriber," Windermere, is thanked for the sketch.

"Tam o'Shanter" is right in his conjecture.

"A Philanthropist."—The subject shall not be lost sight of.

"E. R. E.," Wolverhampton.—The claim will be valid for the amount in sured.

"W. S.," Newington Causeway.—The brick used in England is made of clay mixed with sand, or with ashes, a d after being dried in the sun and air, is burned in a clamp, or b ked in a kiln.

"A Railway Contractor" should write to the editor of "The Builder."

"A Constant Reader," Chester, is thanked for the suggestion.

"Collett."—The price of Lord's "Popular Physiology" is 7s. 6d.

"G. W."—The price of our journal per quarter is 6s. 6d., paid in advance: subscription insures punctual delivery.

"J. F. F.," Kingsland.—The engravings of the interior of H. M. S. Collingwood will appear shortly.

"Administrator."—Windsor Castle will be re-opened to the public next week: the days, Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday. The winner of the Derby, last year, was Running Rein, but, owing to his disqualification the stakes were awarded to the owner of the second horse, Orlando.

"Champellus."—St. Paul's Cathedral is open for divine service at three-quarters past nine in the morning, and a quarter past three in the afternoon. We are not aware of the present position of the Ecole Polytechnique, at Paris.

"T. W."—The subject has been referred to our correspondent at Paris.

"R. J." should complain to the district surveyor.

"A Constant Subscriber," Cheltenham, should send his copy of the Bible to some dealer in second-hand books.

"Calliope."—Yes.

"A Subscriber," Cornhill.—"Jackson's Bookkeping," price 6s.

"D. C.," Huntly.—Probably, Messrs. Smith, the print-sellers, of Lisle-street, Leicester square, will give the requisite information.

"Nora."—Naval flags are usually made of bunting.

"Richard," Clifton, and an "Inquirer," Leicester, should apply to some agent for patents.

"Mars."—See our present number.

"T. T.," Taunton—The original shareholders will be liable.

"A Toweronian," and "Vaporiferus," Powick, are thanked for their hints.

"L.," Ambleside.—The address of the office for the sale of Parliamentary Papers is Great Turnstile, Holborn.

"W. P. M."—The striker can block at any distance from the wicket he chooses, provided his foot, or any part of it, be within his "ground." Surely, the club to which W. P. M. belongs possess the rules of the game?

"Equus" is informed that the price of "a Exmoor filly" depends altogether upon the quality: as to the breed which is reckoned the most fruitful, if Equus will give them a fair chance he will find all the Somersetshire fillies tolerably prolific: that is a property by no means confined to "the quality."

A Subscriber from the Commencement."—All arms, to be legally borne, must be registered in the Heralds' College, in some one of the Visitations, or in a subsequent grant from the Earl Marshal. Those who are able to deduce descent from an ancestor whose armorial bearings have been acknowledged in any of the Visitations, are entitled to carry those arms by right of inheritance. When, however, such a descent cannot be established, the party must prove his right as descending from some original grantee, or memorialise the Earl Marshal that he may become a grantee himself. A son does not inherit his mother's arms, unless the lady be an heiress or co-heiress. In the latter case, he does; and his descendants are entitled ever after to quarter them.

We have to thank several correspondents for hints on the appearance of the comet on Sunday last.

* A few answers are unavoidably deferred.*

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1845.

THE difference between year and year in the feeling which the state of things produces, and the effect of that feeling upon public discussions, was never more strikingly exemplified than in the debate of Tuesday last on Mr. Villiers's motion for the total Repeal of the Corn-Laws. The flush of comparative employment and prosperity is now on the country; work is abundant, and food, in consequence of two good harvests, not deficient; for the present the laws that affect the supply of that food so materially are of minor importance; no pressure is felt out of doors, and this is indicated clearly by the absence of anxiety within the walls of Parliament. When we recollect the same discussion in past years—in 1842, for instance—when large masses of the manufacturing population were unemployed; when there was starvation in the streets of some of our now busy towns; when Manchester was in a state approaching rebellion, and the railroad was used for the transit of troops: in the session of that year of difficulties the Corn-Law discussion was far more important than it has been now that home politics—religious and educational controversies set aside—have a more settled and contented appearance. Then the total repeal was pointed out as an indispensable remedy for present evils; now the fact of the evils having passed away can be brought as an argument against the assertion that such a remedy is the only one. The long and earnest debates at one period, and the short, and, through a great portion of it, languid discussion of the other, are each quite in the nature of things. With all the disposition in the world to urge particular opinions on the House, and a full and perfect belief in them, members cannot support them with such force now as when they spoke with famishing constituencies behind them, deepening to an indefinite extent the sense of their responsibilities. The attack being less formidable, the defence is less difficult; and though the whole question remains in principle the same in all seasons, in good as in bad, when employment is abundant as when work is scarce, still it is the nature of prosperity to render great efforts against a system more difficult; the absence of the spur of danger becomes manifest: members let old arguments go unanswered, and take no trouble to search for new ones; the Premier can paint the present with a pencil dipped in a few hues of brightness; his opponents find several of the darkest shades of the picture they were accustomed to draw vanished from the canvass; and the result is, that a motion for a repeal of the Corn-Laws is made, discussed, and rejected in a single sitting. It is, perhaps, the calamity of such a controversy, that the same question assumes a very different degree of importance at different times; at one period, terror and alarm perplex the public mind, and make it overrate the effect of the restrictive system; at another, the revival of business, activity of speculation, and a tolerably general, though by no means universal prosperity, dispose them to forget that such a system exists, or that it can have any bad effect at all.

THE "great difficulty" of interfering, by a law, with the management of private property, has repelled many successive Governments from grappling with the subject of the Occupation of Land in Ireland. The late Commission of Inquiry, of which the Earl of Devon was the head, revealed nothing that was not known before, and the measures the Report recommended were those obvious ones that no one who had ever thought on the subject at all could have overlooked. But, simple as the suggestions were, and beneficial as they would be ultimately to all parties, the question still remains—How are they to be carried into effect? The Government has just made an attempt to place the question in the way of solution. Lord Stanley has introduced a bill for securing to the tenant of land in Ireland a fair compensation for any outlay he may make on it in improvements. When we consider the terrible array of laws, enacted both by the Imperial and the old Irish Parliament, all giving and concentrating power in the hands of the landlord, it is gratifying to hear of a measure that is meant to secure the tenant. But certainly it is not a measure that will do much for him in the way of substantial benefit; it is a very negative protection on the part of the Legislature merely to tell a man that he shall not be robbed; yet this is actually all the bill pretends to do. If a tenant lays out a sum of money in improvements of a permanent kind, the act secures him a return of that outlay if he quits the land before he has had time to benefit by his money and labour. The inference from this is, that if a man made such improvements at present, and without such a law, it is possible he would suffer, and the landlord reap all the advantage of his loss; but as Irish farmers generally are, like their English brethren, too shrewd a race to risk much upon such doubtful security, practically we imagine they have not put themselves in a position to lose much in this manner. Both in England and Ireland, where such "landlord's" improvements have been made by a tenant, it may be taken for granted that the outlay is incurred on the security of a lease, or an agreement of some sort, quite as binding; and where such a security is not given, the improvements are not made at all. Even in England, where the practice of ages has established a much better understanding and closer connexion between the landlord and tenant than exist in Ireland, the want of leases has acted as a bar to improvements by the tenant. Men will risk a good deal for the chance of a large return, if it is a quick on; but the return on capital invested in improving land, is not large in the first place, and it is but slowly made in the second; the outlay can only be afforded on something which amounts to, or is little less than, a certainty. Where this security is given, Lord Stanley's bill is not required; and where it is not given, the measure will not be called into operation, and will be useless. Its good intention is all about it that can be commended. We cannot help thinking that to expect the improvement of the land of Ireland to come from the tenantry, as a body, is an anticipation that will not be fulfilled. The change for the better there must come from the other end of society; as a general rule, the landlords are rich—or, at leas, are in the receipt of large rents, whether they are bonâ fide theirs or not—and the tenants are poor. Lord Stanley, indeed, speaks of cases in which, like the miserable subjects of the Turkish Pachas, the Irish farmer hides his wealth, and assumes an ostentatious misery, for the same reason as the Mahomedan cultivator—that what he has may not be extorted from him; in one case by the simple process of the bastinado; in the other, by a raised rent or eviction, which is equivalent to starvation. A very small holder, under a very griping landlord, may do such a thing; it is even possible that such cases may be not infrequent; but to rely on them as the basis of legislative measure, partakes of the absurd. A tenant of anything like an extensive estate—a man of anything approaching the possession of capital—could not live on such terms; and it is by men of some capital only that the improvements contemplated by the present bill can be carried into effect. The measure is one of those ineffective harmless enactments that show a wish to remedy an evil, and a want of strength or boldness to go deep enough to obtain it. Indeed we doubt if legislation could do much in this matter. The gigantic evil is the intense competition in Ireland for the possession of land, which increases rather than lessens. In England that competition is moderated by the openings presented to the population by trade, commerce, and manufactures; and if the same diversion of energy from its one outlet—the soil—can be made in the sister kingdom, some progress will have been made towards a better state of things. But the growth of commerce and the development of manufactures are the work of time; in the meanwhile, a whole people must live; to live they must have land—hence competition and high rents, which no act of Parliament will be able to abate.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

RETURN OF THE ROYAL FAMILY TO WINDSOR.—On Monday the Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess de Nemours, and his Serene Highness the Prince of Leiningen, and the Royal children, returned to Windsor Castle, where they arrived at four o'clock in the afternoon.

WEDNESDAY.—The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by their illustrious guests, went this morning to inspect the troops stationed here, consisting of the Regiment of Royal Horse Guards and the Second Battalion of Coldstream Guards. Her Majesty, followed by the illustrious party, was conducted by the Lord Chamberlain, at ten o'clock, to the Royal entrance, where the Queen mounted a fine chesnut charger. Her Majesty wore a blue habit, with velvet collar, and small metal buttons, a field-marshal's aiguilette on the right shoulder, and the star of the Most Noble Order of the Garter over the left breast. Also a cap (resembling the undress military cap), bordered with wide gold lace, and having the peak in front edged with gold. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, his Royal Highness the Duke de Nemours, and most of the gentlemen, were on horseback. The Duchess of Buccleuch (Mistress of the Robes) attended the Queen on horsebback; the rest of the ladies were in carriages. His Royal Highness Prince Albert was habited in a Field Marshal's uniform, and wore the ensigns of the Order of the Garter and of the Golden Fleece, and the stars of the Legion of Honour and of the Order of the Bath. His Royal Highness the Duke de Nemours wore a French military uniform. The Royal and august party proceeded to the Great Park, where the Royal Horse Guards, commanded by Colonel Richardson, and the Second Battalion of Coldstream Guards, commanded by Colonel H Bentinck, were assembled, with the bands of both regiments, and received the Sovereign on her arrival with the usual honours. The Cavalry Regiment and the Infantry Battalion then passed in review; the Queen being in front, having the Duke de Nemours on her right, and Prince Albert on her left. A grand banquet was given by her Majesty in the evening, in St. George's Hall. The dinner-table was very tastefully decorated with a number of choice flowering shrubs, inserted in vases of silver gilt, copied from the Warwick vase, and also with several vases filled with fine growing strawberries—both flowers and fruit being the produce of the Royal gardens at Frogmore. The Prince of Wales's epergne was placed in the middle of the table, opposite the seats of her Majesty and her illustrious guests.

WINDSOR, Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess de Nemours, and several of the guests at the Castle, walked this morning across the private plantations in the Home Park, to the Queen's kennel and royal apiary. The infant Royal Family were taken for airings at the same time.

NEW MAID OF HONOUR TO THE QUEEN.—The Hon. Miss Clementina Hamilton, sister to Sir George Baillie Hamilton, Secretary of Legation at Berlin, has resigned her appointment at Court, as one of the Maids of Honour in Waiting on her Majesty, in consequence of her approaching marriage with the Bishop of Salisbury. The newly appointed Maid of Honour, in the room of Miss Hamilton, Miss Dawson, niece to the Right Hon G. L Dawson Damer, Comptroller of the Household, will shortly assume her functions.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

DINNER AT MERCHANT TAILORS' HALL.—A splendid entertainment was given on Wednesday by the Merchant Tailors' Company, at their magnificent hall, in Treadneedle-street, on the occasion of the annual election from their school of a scholar to St. John's College, Oxford; Mr. W. Gilpin, master, in the chair. The chairman was supported on the right by the Rev. Dr. Wynter, President of St. John's College; the two Senior Fellows of St. John's, the Earl of Eldon, Rear-Admiral Lord W. Fitzroy, Lord Ashley, the Hon. Leslie Melville, the Hon. W. Ashley, the Hon. Sir E. Cust, the Right Hon. the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir R. Inglis, Mr. Ashlin, Prime Warden of the Goldsmiths' Company; Mr. Somes, M.P.; and on the left, by Sir H. Pottinger, Bart., honorary member of the company; the Marquis of Londonderry, the Marquis of Granby, Earl Somers, the Bishop of Lincoln, Lord Kenyon, Lord Redesdale, Lord Sandys, Lord Faversham, the Vice Chancellor of England, the Lord Chief Baron, Mr. Justice Patteson, and Mr. Baron Platt. Many other distinguished individuals were present. In the course of the evening, the health of Sir Henry Pottinger having been given, the Hon. Baronet in returning thanks made an interesting statement upon the social improvement which had taken place in China. He rejoiced to say he had received assurances that everything was going on as well as could possibly be expected in that country. (Cheers.) The trade was flourishing, and the Emperor himself had admitted the free circulation of books on Christianity. (Cheers.) They taught the people virtue, and therefore the Emperor said they should not be prohibited, as heretofore. (Cheers.) This was a very important fact. (Cheers.) The High Commissioner, Keying, with whom he had negotiated the commercial treaty, had sent him his portrait. Within the last six weeks it had arrived in this country, having been sent through her Majesty's Consul at Canton, and the circumstance was not only curious, but most important as an historical fact. Five years ago if any one had anticipated such a thing he would have been thought fitter for Bethlehem than any other place. (Cheers.) He referred to this circumstance not as one only of personal gratification, but, as he had said, as a most satisfactory indication of the state of feeling in China towards this country. He had also lately received a very extraordinary paper—an edict, signed by the Governor of Shanghai, calling on the people to cultivate the mulberry tree, and pointing out the advantages of free trade. (Cheers.) He congratulated his fellow-countrymen not only on the possession of peace, but on the prospect which was opened up to them of making fortunes in a trade which would probably be almost unlimited. (Cheers.) The freedom of the Company was presented to Sir Henry.

NEW OXFORD-STREET.—On Tuesday the new line of road from Holborn to Oxford-street was thrown open for carriages. The old carriage-road through Holborn is for the pretent closed for repairs.

ANOTHER MONSTER FRAUD UPON THE EXCISE.—A seizure of almost unequalled magnitude has, within the last few days, been made by the officers of Excise on the premises of one of the largest tobacco manufacturers at the east end of London. From information received, several of the Surveying Examiners General of Excise proceeded to the premises, and seized the whole of the contents of an upper room, which included an immense quantity of tobacco, which they had reason to believe was greatly adulterated. Two officers have taken possession, and a strict charge of the premises is kept up, both day and night. The samples seized are now undergoing the process of analyzation. The affair has created the greatest interest throughout the trade, as the firm are in a very large way of business.

MORTALITY OF LONDON.—The total number of deaths in the metropolis [illegible] week ending last Saturday, as made up by the Registrar General, was 839, showing a more favourable state of the public health than at any other period of the present year. The weekly average number of deaths for the last five years has been 963, and for the last five springs 888.

COUNTRY NEWS.

EFFECT OF THE CHANGE OF WEATHER IN THE COUNTRY.—The Provincial papers notice the effects of the recent delightful change in the weather. The abundant rains and the mild temperature have produced a sudden burst of vegetation, which has covered the earth with fertility and the woods with beauty. The crops of all kinds have grown more during that time than they had grown during the whole month preceding, and there is now, happily, a most encouraging prospect of abundance of food both for man and beast, for another year. No crop has changed its appearance more, since the improvement of the weather, than that which supplies us with the staff of life. Wherever wheat was looking tolerably well at the end of May, it is now most luxuriant.

POISONING CASE AT CARLISLE.—A man named John Graham, was on Monday last apprehended and lodged in Carlisle Gaol, having been suspected of poisoning his aged father, Mr. John Graham, of Grinsdale, near Carlisle, on the 15th ult. He is also suspected of poisoning his own wife, who died very suddenly about six months ago. This report having been communicated to the Coroner, the disinterment took place on Sunday last, and, notwithstanding that Mrs. Graham had been so long buried, decomposition had made but little progress. An inquest was being held on the body on Tuesday before the same Coroner. From the evidence adduced, and the reports of the medical gentlemen who made the post mortem examination, and also an analyzation of the internal parts of the body, there can be little or no doubt but that Mrs. Graham died from the effects of some mineral poison. Graham, since his confinement in Carlisle Gaol, has manifested symptoms of great uneasiness, and when he was apprehended he was found walking on the banks of the Carlisle Canal, and it is strongly suspected that he intended to drown himself.

FATAL EXPLOSION AT DURHAM.—An explosion of a serious kind took place at Durham, on Monday last, in the shop of a respectable tradesman, named Steele. Mr. Steele was from home, and an apprentice, of about 14 years of age, was left in charge of the shop, in which and in the cellars underneath there was as much as 100lb. weight of gunpowder. It is supposed that the boy, having occasion to go to a part of the shop which was rather dark, had lighted a candle for that purpose, and incautiously placed it near a package containing between 30lb. and 40lb. of powder, and that a spark having fallen upon the paper caused it to ignite. The effects of the explosion were felt in every part of the city, and in its more immediate neighbourhood, and the shop windows of the tradesmen within thirty or forty yards were shattered to atoms. The house in which the explosion took place presented a singular appearance, the whole front and all the floors being blown into the street. The daughter of a Mr. Robson, who was in a room on the second floor, was precipitated, with the furniture it contained, into the street, and buried amongst the ruins, from which situation she was shortly afterwards released, but in such a condition that no hopes are entertained of her recovery; her collar-bone and several of her ribs being broken, besides being severely burnt. On searching the ruins, the boy who it is supposed had been the cause of the accident, was found on the steps leading to the cellar in a most deplorable condition, the hair being completely burnt off his head, and his face and body dreadfully scorched. Several persons who were passing at the time were severely cut and injured from the broken glass and other materials that were flying about the street in all directions. The premises were not insured.

THE LATE FATAL DUEL.—The inquest has been adjourned until Tuesday next, in order that further evidence as to the origin of the quarrel may be obtained. The funeral of Mr. Seton took place at Fording-bridge, on Tuesday afternoon. The hearse with the remains of the unfortunate gentleman, and four mourning coaches, reached Ringwood at three o'clock, where the funeral procession was joined by the neighbouring gentry, in ten private carriages. The shops in the town were closed, and the tradesmen, with a great portion of the inhabitants, went a mile on the road to meet the funeral cavalcade, which reached the church at five o'clock, where the funeral service was most impressively read by the Rev. C. Hatch, the vicar. The melancholy event excited the liveliest sympathy from the beginning, and the numbers that flocked round his funeral bier evince the high estimation in which the deceased was held by all classes.

DEPARTURE OF THE GREAT BRITAIN STEAM-SHIP.—This enormous steamship, after a stay of more than four months in the river at Blackwall, has taken her departure for Liverpool. On the last day for inspection, she was much crowded by visitors, who continued to flock on board of her until a late hour in the evening.

POSTSCRIPT.

SATURDAY EVENING.

RETURN OF THE COURT TO TOWN.—Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by the Royal Family, the Duke and Duchess de Nemours, &c., returned to town on Friday from Windsor.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The answer to inquiries at the residence of Sir William Follett, in Park-street, yesterday morning, was, "Sir William is rather better to-day."

CABINET COUNCIL.—A Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office to-day at three o'clock. All the Ministers were present.

THE NEW SHERIFFS.—Aldermen Hughes Hughes and Challis will be put in nomination at Guildhall, for Sheriffs, for the year ensuing, on Midsummer-day next, and no opposition is expected.

THE POLISH BALL.—The grand full and fancy dress ball, in aid of the funds for the distressed Poles, came off last night, and, from the brilliancy of the attendance, proved itself, with the exception of her Majesty's Bal Costumé, to be the most attractive and splendid ball of the season. The crowd was tremendous. Many of the costumes that were worn at her Majesty's Ball made their second appearance there, and were very much admired. M Jullien's band was in attendance, but the sultriness of the weather and the vast crowd made dancing neither very easy nor very agreeable: in fact, only a very small portion of the company could find room to dance; but the charms of the place were so great, and the happy persons assembled found themselves so mutually agreeable, that they remained together till a late hour.

ARRIVAL OF MR. POLK.—Colonel Polk, brother of the President of the United States, arrived at Liverpool, on Thursday evening, in the packet ship Yorkshire, Captain Bailey, from New York, en route to the Neapolitan Court, to which he has been appointed Ambassador.

RELEASE OF MR. CARUS WILSON.—C. C. Wilson, Esq., was unconditionally released from the Jersey prison on Wednesday last, after a consultation by the States. He was met and escorted from prison by a large multitude, who hailed him with enthusiastic plaudits.

CRICKET.—THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD V. THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE.—This match was resumed yesterday at Lord's. The whole innings amounted to ninety-six, thus putting Cambridge in for fifty one runs to win. The latter then went in, but lost four good wickets ere they could be declared the victors—a position they ultimately took, with six wickets to spare.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.—In the Chamber of Deputies, at the last sitting, M. Billault made a violent attack upon the foreign policy of the Government. M. Guizot energetically defended it. With regard to Tahiti, M. Guizot declared the French Protectorate to be fully established, and added that the treaty of 1842 would be completely executed. He denied that there was any connexion between the policy on which the Government had acted in regard to Texas, and the abolition of the right of search. If the Texans desired to renounce their independence, and join the American Union, they had an undoubted right so to do. France had no intention to protest against the annexation of Texas to the United States, nor engage in any struggle to prevent it. M. Guizot next justified the policy of his Government in Switzerland and Spain. With regard to the abdication of Don Carlos, it would occasion no change in the policy of France towards Spain. As to the marriage of the Queen, that he considered an exclusively Spanish question, and one which Spain herself could alone decide. He justified also the slowness with which the negotiations for the repeal of the right of search treaties had been conducted. Letters from Algiers of the 2nd instant state that Marshal Bugeaud had had an engagement with the Arabs near Orleansville, and defeated them, killing 50, and capturing 150 and a considerable quantity of cattle. The papers announce the death of the Countess Molé, which took place in Paris, on Wednesday morning. M. Villemain, the Minister of Public Instruction, who had given to his numerous friends and the admirers of his talent so much cause for uneasiness, is, we are happy to state, completely recovered.

SPAIN.—ARRIVAL OF THE QUEEN OF SPAIN AT BARCELONA.—Her Majesty Queen Isabella, accompanied by her mother, Queen Christina, and the Infanta Dona Louisa Fernando, made their public entrance into Barcelona on the 6th inst.

THE UNITED STATES.—ARRIVAL OF THE "BRITANNIA."—The Britannia has arrived, after a very rapid passage of twelve days from Boston. The news by this arrival is ten days later than before received, viz., New York to the 31st ult., Boston 1st, and Halifax the 3rd instant. The steamer Cambria arrived at Halifax on the 31st ult., after a voyage of ten days and a half. Nothing positive had transpired upon the Oregon question, but the general tone of the press was still very pacific. The affairs of Mexico and Texas had assumed a different position towards the United States, by its being made known that the Mexican Government had resolved to recognise the independence of Texas, coupled, it is said, with the condition that Texas should not be annexed to the United States. This resolve, which appears as a reply by the Executive of Texas to the Government of Mexico, is attributed to the secret machinations of Great Britain and France, and has sorely puzzled the American politicians. There has been another fire at Pittsburgh, which destroyed more than fifty dwellings. The entire loss is estimated at 30,000 dollars. California had declared itself independent of Mexico.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

For the first time this year, on Tuesday last we had an opportunity of hearing that most affective and dramatic of lyrical compositions—"Lucrezia Borgia." Full as is the drama from which the plot of this opera was taken, of all the exaggerated horrors in which Victor Hugo and the modern French dramatists rejoice, it must be confessed that, in its present form—softened in expression, and refined in sentiment, by its alliance with music—all the nicer shades of feeling elicited by the great artists who enact it at her Majesty's Theatre—this opera is not inferior in interest or attraction to any brought forth on the Italian operatic stage. Moriani's performance of Lucrezia's ill-starred son, is, from beginning to end, fraught with deep feeling, and profound dramatic conception. From the first, the subdued melancholy of his tones and gestures, even when surrounded by young and thoughtless companions, single him from the rest, and make him a being apart; whilst in his sadness, present sorrow, caused by the mystery of his parentage, seems mingled with the fore-shadowing of his coming fate. In the bursts of tenderness and love for his unknown mother, which, in that beautiful duet with Lucrezia—"L'Amo, si l'amo, e sembrami vederla inognioggetto"—overmaster every other feeling; in the fierce expression of his hatred to the Borgia; in his proud refusal to purchase his life by a falsehood; his agony at the overwhelming discovery that he, too, is a Borgia, and that she—the murderess of himself and his friends—is the mother so long loved and long wished for; in the struggle of his impetuous feelings with the slow approach of death—Moriani does more than justice to his part. He gives to the character of Gennaro a reality, a force, and a pathos, which carry away the imagination and enlists the sympathies of each hearer, as the silent and breathless interest of the whole audience, in the last scene, on Tuesday night, fully testified. As to Moriani's singing, it is so entirely incorporated with the action and the feeling of the moment, that it is impossible to separate one from the other. All the unreal effect, produced by a hero's venting his grief in trills and roulades, is quite done away with, by this consummate lyrical actor. In witnessing his performance, one forgets that song is not the ordinary and natural expression of feeling, so much does it appear to be the appropriate one.

The part of Lucrezia is one of those in which Grisi has always excelled, and one which becomes every year more and more adapted to her style and genius, even though, in some of her more youthful parts, we might be reminded of the lapse of uncourteous Time. In this opera she is truly the great lyrical tragedian, and on this ground stands unrivalled. Her commanding aspect, her flashing and vengeful look, are in perfect keeping with the character of Victor Hugo's dark heroine, and contrast beautifully with the outbursts of that maternal tenderness which is the only human feeling he has left her. Lablache, in this opera, is what he always is in tragedy or comedy, in the most insignificant as the most important parts—excellent.

These three artists rivalling each other in the splendid trio, "Gerai se ti sfugge un moto," produced an electrical effect, and, we need hardly say with what enthusiasm it was encored. We must not omit to render our homage to Brambilla, who took the part of Orseni, with her wonted ability, and was much applauded. She obtained a warm encore, in the pretty drinking song, "Il segreto per esser filui; though we could have wished that she gave to her reading of this air, more of the joyous reckless spirit, which was intended to characterise it.

COVENT GARDEN.

On Friday evening this theatre re-opened with the French Opera Company at Brussels; and, we think, with prospects of a successful season. "Les Huguenots" had been announced on the preceding Wednesday; but, we believe, the wish to produce that grand opera with every care led to its representation being postponed, "Guillaume Tell" being performed on the Friday. The whole of the artistes are strangers to us; people in general are not even acquainted with their names; and this may account for the state of the house on the opening night, which was by no means comfortably filled. We are glad to find, however, that the audiences are improving every evening, and will do so still more as this excellent troupe becomes more generally appreciated. There is a care and unity of excellence in the entire performance to be heartily commended; and nothing can exceed the admirable drilling of the band. We do not remember to have heard the overture to "Guillaume Tell" played with better effect than on Friday. M. Laborde, the principal tenor, has a voice of agreeable quality: he threw a great deal of energy in the part, both in his acting and singing, and would have proved no mean rival to Duprez, had they both been playing at the same time. The bass is an admirable actor—indeed, considerable histrionic talent distinguishes the entire corps. The opera was preceded by Adolphe Adams's "Chalet," in which Madame Guichard personated the saucy Swiss spinster (who determines to keep so, until she is frightened into marrying by her brother and his fellow-soldiers) with considerable effect. This pleasing operatta is familiar to us in its English dress, as "The Swiss Cottage." The soldiers' chorus, "Vive l'amour, les femmes, et le tabac," and the song "Liberté cherie," have always been popular. On Monday night, when Donizetti's "Favourite" was performed, the house was well filled. M. Laborde again appeared as Ferdinand; and a new singer, Madame Julien, was a very effective Leonor. Her voice is very powerful—if anything, at times too much so.

The repertoire of this excellent company, as published, embraces all the principal French operas, both grand and comic, and we shall be mistaken if they do not meet with warm support. At all events, they fully deserve it.

ST. JAMES'S.

M. Philippe has given a Matinée Mysterieuse at this theatre, and with the same success that has attended his evening performances. Even after seeing his tricks twice or thrice, we have come away perfectly bewildered with forming plans of the manner in which they are effected. The little Harlequin, who jumps out of a box, smokes a pipe, whistles to the orchestra, blows out a candle, gets in a rage, and puts himself in a dozen droll attitudes, is the most wonderful puppet we ever beheld: and the confectioner's shop, from which two little dolls bring out anything the company choose to call for, from liqueurs to bon bons, and those in lavish profusion, is equally surprising. But the grand trick of all, is that of producing the gold fish. M. Philippe stands on a platform perfectly insulated: he throws a large shawl, or light carpet in the air to show that it encloses nothing, and, catching it as it descends, wraps it round him. In an instant he withdraws it, and discovers at his feet a large glass globe, brimful of water, in which four gold fish are swimming. In half a minute the process is repeated, and another bowl, similarly filled, is produced. He then comes down to the platform between the stalls and the orchestra, and there discovers a third basin of fish, in the very centre of the spectators; and then, retiring back to the stage, without the least apparent communication with anything or anybody, brings to light, in the same manner, half-a-dozen live ducks; and finally two enormous geese, who walk gravely about the stage. In all the conjuring performances that we have hitherto witnessed, we have always been enabled to give some rationale, albeit a vague one, of the manner in which these were accomplished; but we confess M. Philippe defies all conjecture. We quitted the theatre with our self-esteem at a very low ebb, indeed, as regarded our perceptive faculties.

M. Achard's engagement for the French Plays is drawing to a close: his popularity continues undiminished. He will be succeeded by M. Arnal, whose repertoire comprises several characters we are acquainted with in their adapted dress, and of which he is the original representative. With the engagement of this gentleman the season will conclude. There is some talk in the theatrical circles of a species of partnership between Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Walter Lacy for producing English vaudevilles and ballets at the above house.

LYCEUM.

From some of the gay memoirs pertaining to the life and times of Louis Quatorze, have been selected the materials for an original and pleasant two act comedy, entitled, "Friends at Court; or, The Diplomatic Mission," produced here on Monday evening, and with success. At the commencement of the piece we find a young Gascon noble, Charles de Marillac (Mrs. Keeley), arrived at Paris, and in search of adventures, which begin by his defending Louise de Chemerant (Miss Fairbrother) from the Marquis de Lauzun (Mr. Wigan), who was carrying her off. Love at first sight is engendered by the rencontre. The King, however, Louis the Fourteenth (Mr. F. Vining) has seen Louise; and anxious that she should be near him at Court, desires his First Gentleman of the Bedchamber, the Marquis de Vardes (Mr. Diddear), to find a noble husband for her forthwith. The Marquis finds the Gascon, in love and in debt, at a tavern, and persuades him to go to Court and be married. From this moment Louis and De Lauzun each form their designs upon the honour of Louise, which being discovered by Maria d'Ossuna (Miss Villars), a maid of honour, and the Queen's confidante, are ingeniously counteracted; the play concluding with the chagrin of De Lauzun and Louis, who, however, presents De Marillac with some good appointment in the provinces, whither he retires with his fair bride.

We have seldom seen Mrs. Keeley to more advantage than as the dashing, youthful, impudent Charles de Marillac. It may be termed a "Dejazet part," being just such a one as would suit that admirable actress, the whole business of the piece lying on her shoulders.

SADLER'S WELLS.

The new tragedy of "The Florentines" produced at this theatre last week, has been repeated several times, and, judging from the approbation of the audience, with increased success. The idea from which it has been worked out is evidently taken from the old story—and a story in every sense of the word some of the chronicles maintain it to be—of "Fair Rosamond;" the scene of the denouement being laid in Tuscany instead of Oxfordshire. The plot of the present tragedy is highly dramatic, and abounds in effective situations. Some of these, it is true, are not made so much of as they might have been in the hands of a more practised dramatist; but, taken as a whole, the piece is a clever production, and far above mediocrity.

Still, with these drawbacks, "The Florentines" reflects credit on the author. He has a fair notion of conducting a plot; and his situations and effects are well chosen. A practical knowledge of the stage would enable him to do still better things; and such, we believe, he will accomplish. Every body who writes imagines that he can write a play; every body who imagines he can write a play flies at once to five-act tragedy. We opine that a succession of melodramas for the minor theatres, although the tragic dramatists might sneer at such productions, would afford the best school for attaining the knowledge we speak of, the want of which is so apparent in all these hitherto unacted dramas. The writers have capital ideas, but they do not turn them to the best account.

The analogy between the plot of "The Florentines" and our old romance of history will be directly seen, when we state that a certain Duke of Florence, Lorenzo (Mr. H. Marston), is wedded to a proud and jealous Duchess (Mrs. Warner). Overtaken by a storm, he takes refuge in the house of a Tuscan nobleman, Ferrando (Mr. Phelps), where he falls suddenly and desperately in love with his daughter Brancha (Miss Cooper), by whom his affection is returned. The father, pleased with his guest, subsequently offers the hand of his daughter to Lorenzo, who, being married, of course cannot accept it. This supposed affront breaks off the intimacy; but afterwards, through a union of untoward circumstances, Brancha elopes with Lorenzo, and is placed by him in concealment, as he imagines, near Florence. The Duchess contrives to discover the retreat of her rival, her suspicions having been excited: and there, after upbraiding the unfortunate girl, in the most bitter manner, compels her to swallow poison, and she expires as her father and Lorenzo arrive, but too late to save her.

We were much pleased with the careful and judicious manner in which Mr. Phelps enacted Ferrando, a part in every respect suited to him. Mrs. Warner's Duchess, although not the most prominent character, was made so by her powerful and effective declamation. Miss Cooper exhibited her usual good sense and quiet unassuming feeling as the hapless Branhca. There is a mannerism in the acting, and harshness in the voice of Mr. H. Marston, which we could, with pleasure, see remedied; elsewise he is a desirable adjunct to the corps. The piece was announced for repetition amidst loud applause and a call for the author.

POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.

Amongst the most attractive features of this establishment are the "Lectures on Character, with Vocal Illustrations," delivered by Mr. J. Russell, a gentleman who has for some years enjoyed a high reputation in the dramatic world. A lecture is usually considered a somewhat dull affair; but it is not so with Mr. Russell, who is a skilful lecturer; who not only points out prevailing errors, but suggests how they may be avoided, and illustrates his meaning by humorous, yet forcible examples. After remarking on the practice, common with many singers, of disregarding altogether the words of a song, Mr. R. sang a bravura, in which there was only one word—Pasticcio—which must have operated as a salutary lesson to such of his hearers as may heretofore have regarded a song merely as a collection of "crotchets and quavers," rather than "music married to immortal verse." Amongst Mr. Russell's most successful efforts may be named "The Widow Malone," which was given with an irresistible degree of comic power.

VIDOCQ'S EXHIBITION.

The exhibition just opened at the Cosmorama Rooms, Regent-street, by the celebrated Vidocq, for interest and singularity has no equal in London. The famous chef of the detective force of the French police is well known, by name, to the English public: his Memoirs, published some years ago, attracted great attention, for they are rich in personal experiences of the strangest kind. Not the least curious of his many adventures is that of his being among us—hale and hearty, and as active, at the age of 72, as most men who are a quarter of a century his juniors—in the character of a public exhibitor of things as full of a strange interest as himself. And he plays the part with an easy courtesy and frankness that removes all embarrassment from the visitor; there is none of the awkwardness of seeing and being seen; you are, for the time, the guest of a great man—one of the prominent names of the century—the Napoleon of his profession; and he makes you quite at home; this is no slight advantage.

The chief interest of the exhibition, of course, centres in Vidocq himself, and the accessories he has gathered around him, which are most characteristic, being connected either with his personal history and exploits, or his avocation during the twenty-nine years he was, as head of the most active department of the police, the terror and scourge of all the criminals of France. He had continually to cope with cunning the most astute, and ruffianism the most daring, and he met both by deeper art, and courage, strength, and skill, that were more than a match for the most desperate. Some of the means employed by him are here displayed; round a portion of the apartment, divided off by curtains, hang several of the costumes he wore on his expeditions, when in search of criminals of all grades he had to mix unsuspected with every rank of society. The garb of the priest hangs by the side of the rough carter's frock; the flour-begrimed dress of the miller is there, with the wrappers of the coachman; and the braided coat and jaunty cap of that busy being every one will recognise who has had to inquire about the starting of a French diligence, is in close contact with the red and yellow costume of the forcat.

The power Vidocq possesses of making his countenance exactly that of the character he was supporting for the time, is something extraordinary. He must be a great actor. Often has his own life depended on the perfection with which he played his part. What artist would undertake a character under the same fearful risk? He has a perfect mastery over his muscles; he can shorten his height by three inches without apparent effort; and his assumption of the look and bearing of a blind man would have mystified a veteran officer of the Mendicity, who had made the study of imposture his specialité. Besides these costumes, there is a table spread with relics and curiosities, resembling nothing so much as the museum of Jonathan Wild, described by Ainsworth. Some information may be gained from it, too. Those who wish to compare the details of the French convict system with our own, may test the weight of the manacles of the forcat of Toulon or Brest, and examine the instrument of punishment that in those dens of misery is in such frequent requisition; the cleverly contrived files and saws with which they sometimes rid themselves of their chains, are also there; all are classed and labelled with French clearness and method. Weapons of offence and defence, of all kinds, and of deadly effect, are shown; and various knives, daggers, and other reliques of the more famous, or rather infamous, of the criminals whom Vidocq in the course of his career has brought to [illegible]

In addition to these, there is a very curious series of imitations of Tropical Fruits and Foliage, made in the Isle of Bourbon, beautifully executed, and so faithful to nature, as to furnish a study to the Botanist. The exhibition is completed by a rather large collection of Paintings, containing specimens of the Vanderveldes, Berghem, Cuyp, Sneyders, Ostade, &c. A series of drawings, by Langendyk, a Dutch artist, of military scenes and events in Holland, will well repay examination; they are very spirited, and more than remind one of Callot. Altogether, the exhibition is unique, and, we should think, will attract a crowd of visitors.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE will be overflowing with attractions next Thursday: that consummate singer and actress Giulia Grisi takes her benefit on that night. Rossini's charming opera "Otello" is selected for the occasion, including, besides "La Diva" herself, Mario, Corelli, Fornasari, and Lablache. Later in the evening, Castellan, Rita Borio, and Moriani, will appear. The novelties in the ballet department will be numerous, including Lucile Grahn, Cerito, Carlotta Grisi, &c.

MASKED BALL AT VAUXHALL.—The proprietors of Vauxhall Gardens have taken advantage of the engagement of M. Musard at their establishment to make preparations for a series of grand masked balls al fresco, the first of which will take place on Monday next, the 16th instant. Musard will, on this occasion, conduct his own band of 100 performers; and the dances, costume, and general arrangements will, as far as possible, resemble those at her Majesty's Bal Costumé at Buckingham Palace, the musical arrangements of which were also under the immediate direction of M. Musard.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

According to the Manheim Journal, the negociations between Holland and the Zollverein for a reduction of the navigation duties on the Rhine and for the importation of German produce into Holland and its colonies, present now some prospect of a successful termination.

The works on the Maine and Neckar Railway are advancing with great activity on the Hesse-Darmstadt territory. The locomotives which have been ordered in England, will be partly delivered before the end of the year. The Diet of the Grand Duchy of Hesse will be shortly adjourned till autumn. A commercial treaty has been concluded between the above Duchy and Portugal.

Prince Henry, third son of William II., King of Holland, is at present at Edinburgh, where he intends to stay for a few days. His Royal Highness was born on the 13th June, 1820. Considerable attention has been paid to him.

We learn from Algiers that several persons are in custody there on charges of making or uttering false coin. It appears that the Kabyles have long had a manufactory for false coin in their mountains, and that in the time of the Turks, as well as at present, they carried their criminal industry to a great extent, and supplied the Arabs of different tribes, who passed the counterfeit coin in the various markets.

A letter from Haarlem, dated June 4, gives an account of an attempted murder and suicide in that part of Holland. On the previous day, one Joseph Bilmann, a dentist and barber, discharged a double-barrelled pistol in the public street at Mr. Van Titzvan Goudrian, president of the district tribunal in Haarlem, and immediately after killed himself with a third shot. It seems that the man who committed this wicked deed was condemned in April, 1843, by the above-mentioned tribunal (which sentence was confirmed by the provincial tribunal) to one month's imprisonment for maliciously cutting and wounding. It appears that he has ever since cherished a constantly increasing feeling of revenge, on account of this sentence. Mr. Titzvan Goudrian was, on the following day, doing well.

A Vienna letter of the 29th ult. says:—"One of our Archdukes will go to Gotha, to pay the compliments of the Court to the Queen of England on her arrival there; and it is said that the King of Prussia will have an interview with her Majesty, but it is not probable that this will take place at Berlin."

There are, by way of Sydney, advices of the 21st January from New Zealand. The natives had surprised nearly all the settlers at Matakana, a place distant 20 or 25 miles from Auckland, in the middle of the night, and after ill-treating them, carried off their flour and other articles, assigning as a reason that the Europeans had not paid for some land sold to them. The Governor, Captain Fitzroy, had offered a reward for the apprehension of the natives concerned.

Advices have been received from Tahiti, to the 29th of December. At that period Queen Pomaré was residing in a fortified place at Raiatea, refusing to hold any communication with the French. According to their own accounts, the French were going on quietly in the island.

A new coral rock has been discovered in the China seas. It stands high out of the water, almost as high as Pedro Branco, off the Straits of Singapore. From the southward a reef projects about a mile, at the end of which is a rock, which is partially covered at high water. From this a dangerous reef projects a long way out to the leeward, and is, probably, a continuation of Hutton's or the Diana Shoals. To the northward of the main rock there appears to be a safe passage.

The Augsburgh Gazette states from Constantinople, May 20, that the mountaineers of the Caucasus had commenced operations against the Russians in the interior of the Daghestan, and on the frontiers of Georgia, and obtained some advantages.

The restoration of the Temple of Augustus and Livia, at Vienne (Isère), which in the middle age was converted into a church, dedicated to Our Lady of Life, is going on with great activity. Some very fine pieces of Gothic sculpture have been lately found embedded among the Roman work.

The Phare of Bayonne states that there has been lately born at Ibos, in the Hautes Pyrénées, a child, having a wen on one of its shoulders, in which a pair of eyes are perfectly designed. [Perhaps the wen is all my eye.]

The Marquis of Westminster, it is said, has purchased the celebrated Fonthill estate, formerly the property of Mr. Beckford.

The Egyptian steamer Nile arrived at Marseilles on the 2nd inst., from Leghorn, where she had called in on her passage from Alexandria. Halim Bey, one of the sons of the Pasha of Egypt, came passenger in that vessel, with 23 young Egyptians, four of whom bore the title of Beys. Chosrew Bey, secretary to the Viceroy, and Gaetani Bey, his physician, accompanied the young prince.

The Memorial Bordelais announces the arrival in Bordeaux of the celebrated Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore from Bengal.

A Vienna letter of the 3rd inst. states that on the preceding day the Archduke Frederic, Commander-in Chief of the Austrian fleet, was solemnly installed as a Knight of the Order of St. John. The Empress Mother, the Queen of Saxony, the Archduke Francis Charles and his Consort, the parents of the young Admiral, and all the Princes and Princesses of the Imperial Family who were at Vienna, graced with their presence this imposing ceremony. Field-Marshal Khevenhaller gave the new Knight the accolade.

The Augsburgh Gazette states that preparations are being made for the reception of the Duchess of Kent in the palace of her brother, Duke Ferdinand of Saxe Coburg, at Vienna.

The Prussian Government has come to an agreement with that of Sweden regarding the construction of a canal between Helsinbourg and Landscrona, to unite the Baltic with the German Ocean, and thus to avoid the passage of the Sound, and the payment of the tribute that Denmark levies from all passing vessels.

A Madrid letter states that Queen Christina has made a present to the Pope of a tiara worth 100,000 francs. (£4000.)

The New Zurich Gazette states from Lucerne, June 5, that Dr. Steiger, from being confined in a damp cell, is suffering violent pains in his limbs, and that if he be not soon removed, he will probably fall a victim to this treatment. Another letter informs us that the father of Dr. Steiger, who lives at Sursee, with a blind daughter, was lately attacked as he was leaving church, by some soldiers of the Landwehr, and so cruelly treated, that his life would have been sacrificed if some persons had not come to his aid.

OPENING OF DUBLIN UNIVERSITY.—IMPORTANT DECISION.—A decision of considerable importance, connected with the opening of Trinity College, was pronounced on Tuesday in the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin. In the present term, Mr. O'Hagan, on behalf of Mr. D. C. Heron, a Roman Catholic student of Trinity College, moved the Court that a peremptory mandamus should go to the Visitors, the Primate, and the Archbishop of Dublin, requiring them to hear Mr. Heron's appeal against the decision of the Provost and Senior Fellows, who had refused him a scholarship, because he was a Roman Catholic and would not take the Sacramental Test. The case was argued at great length. The Chief Justice gave, on Tuesday, the unanimous decision of the Court, that the peremptory mandamus should go, notwithstanding the return of the Visitors.

DISTRESSING RAILWAY ACCIDENT.—A very lamentable accident occurred on the line of the Birmingham and Bristol Railway, about two miles on the Bristol side of the Berkeley station, on Thursday week. The express train, which leaves Bristol for Birmingham at four o'clock, was coming up the line with great rapidity, having obtained the maximum speed of about sixty miles an hour, when Mr. Slaughter (who was driving the engine at the time) saw a woman standing on the bank, as if about to cross the line; he instantly reversed the engine, and let off the steam, and the engine-driver, who was standing near him, blew the alarm whistle, but in an instant the train was upon and over the poor woman. As soon as possible the train was brought back, when a most shocking scene presented itself—the mangled remains of the woman lying along the rail, in all directions, for as much as forty yards from the spot where she was struck. The fragments of the body were picked up in a basket and a sack, and removed to a cottage near the spot. The poor woman proved to be an old person of the name of Elizabeth Nott, a widow, aged eighty-four, living at Stinchcombe, and who had been to see some friends at Woodford, and, at her return, was crossing a road (not a public one) at the time of the fatal occurrence. At the inquest a verdict was returned of "Accidental Death, with a deodand of one shilling on the engine." It is worthy of remark that the train had gone four or five hundred yards, after passing the spot of the accident, before it could be stopped, notwithstanding the engines had been reversed two hundred yards [illegible] to the place

HER MAJESTY'S COSTUME BALL.

BARONESS BRUNOW. DUCHESS OF KENT. VISCOUNT SYDNEY. DUKE OF NORFOLK. AUSTRIAN AMBASSADRESS.

(Continued from page 373).

Countess of Arundel and Surrey, Mr. and Mrs. Forbes Mackenzie, Earl and Countess Listowel, Earl and Countess of Zetland, Lord and Lady Ashburton, Lord and Lady Byron, Mr. Edward and Lady Emily Foley, Marquis of Granby, the Misses Baring, Earl and Countess Cadogan, the Ladies Cadogan, Countess Delawarr, Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter, Lady Mary Sackville West, Viscount Morpeth, Lord Foley, the Duke and Duchess of Richmond, the Marquis of Winchester, the Countess of Pembroke, the Earl and Countess of Desart, Viscount Goderich, Lord John Manners, Lord and Lady Portman, Sir James Clark, Lord and Lady Worsley, Dowager Countess of Essex, Mr. and Miss Holford, the Earl of Mexborough, Lady Sarah Savile, Earl and Countess Aboyne, Sir Josiah and Lady Charlotte Guest, Earl and Countess of March, &c.

The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by their illustrious guests, the Duke and Duchess of Nemours, by the members of the Royal Family, and attended by the Ladies in Waiting, and, as usual, the Officers of State, left the Drawing-room at half-past ten o'clock, and passed through the saloon to the Ball-room, where they received the company.

Her Majesty and the Royal Family having taken their usual stations at the platform, the dancing commenced with a Polonaise, danced by the Queen and Prince Albert, the Duke and Duchess de Nemours, followed by their distinguished guests.

The dance extended through all the state apartments, all the bands striking up the same air. After this dance, the assembled company passed slowly before the Queen.

Her Majesty then left the Ball-room, and proceeded to the Throne-room. The first minuet was then formed, consisting of:—

The Queen	Prince George	Duchess of Roxburgh	Duke of Beaufort
Duchess de Nemours	Prince Albert	Duchess of Buccleuch	Lord Leveson
Lady Douro	Prince Edward	Lady Waterford	Lord Exeter
Lady Mt. Edgecumbe	Prince of Leiningen	Lady Sydney	Lord Douro

After the minuet, followed a quadrille.

The company, who had arrived in the interim, then passed before the Queen.

The second minuet was then danced by:—

The Queen	Prince Albert	Lady Seymour	Lord Clanricarde
Lady Ailesbury	Prince George	Lady Blandford	Lord Granby
Lady Dalmeny	Prince Edward	Lady Canning	Lord Douglas
Duchess of Buccleuch	Lord Exeter	Lady Villiers	Lord Abercorn

After the Queen had danced her second Minuet in the Throne Room, her Majesty proceeded to the Ball Room, where the Countess of Jersy's "Minuet d'Evandi" was danced by the following:—

Lady Mary Howard	Lord Munster	Lady Clementina Villiers	Lord Euston
Lady Louisa Fitz Roy	Mr. O'Brien	Lady Adela Villiers	Baron de Talleyrand
Lady Blanche Somerset	Hon Mr Leveson
Lady Rachel Russell	Lord Brooke	Lady Lucy Herbert	Lord Mandeville
Lady Caroline Gower	Lord Cantilupe	Lady Charlotte Herbert	Hon. W. Cholmondeley
Lady Alexandrina Vane	Lord Neville
Lady Elizabeth de Burgh	Lord Lascelles	Miss Percy	Mr. Clive
Lady Elizabeth Grosvenor	Lord Keane	Miss Clive	Lord Dupplin

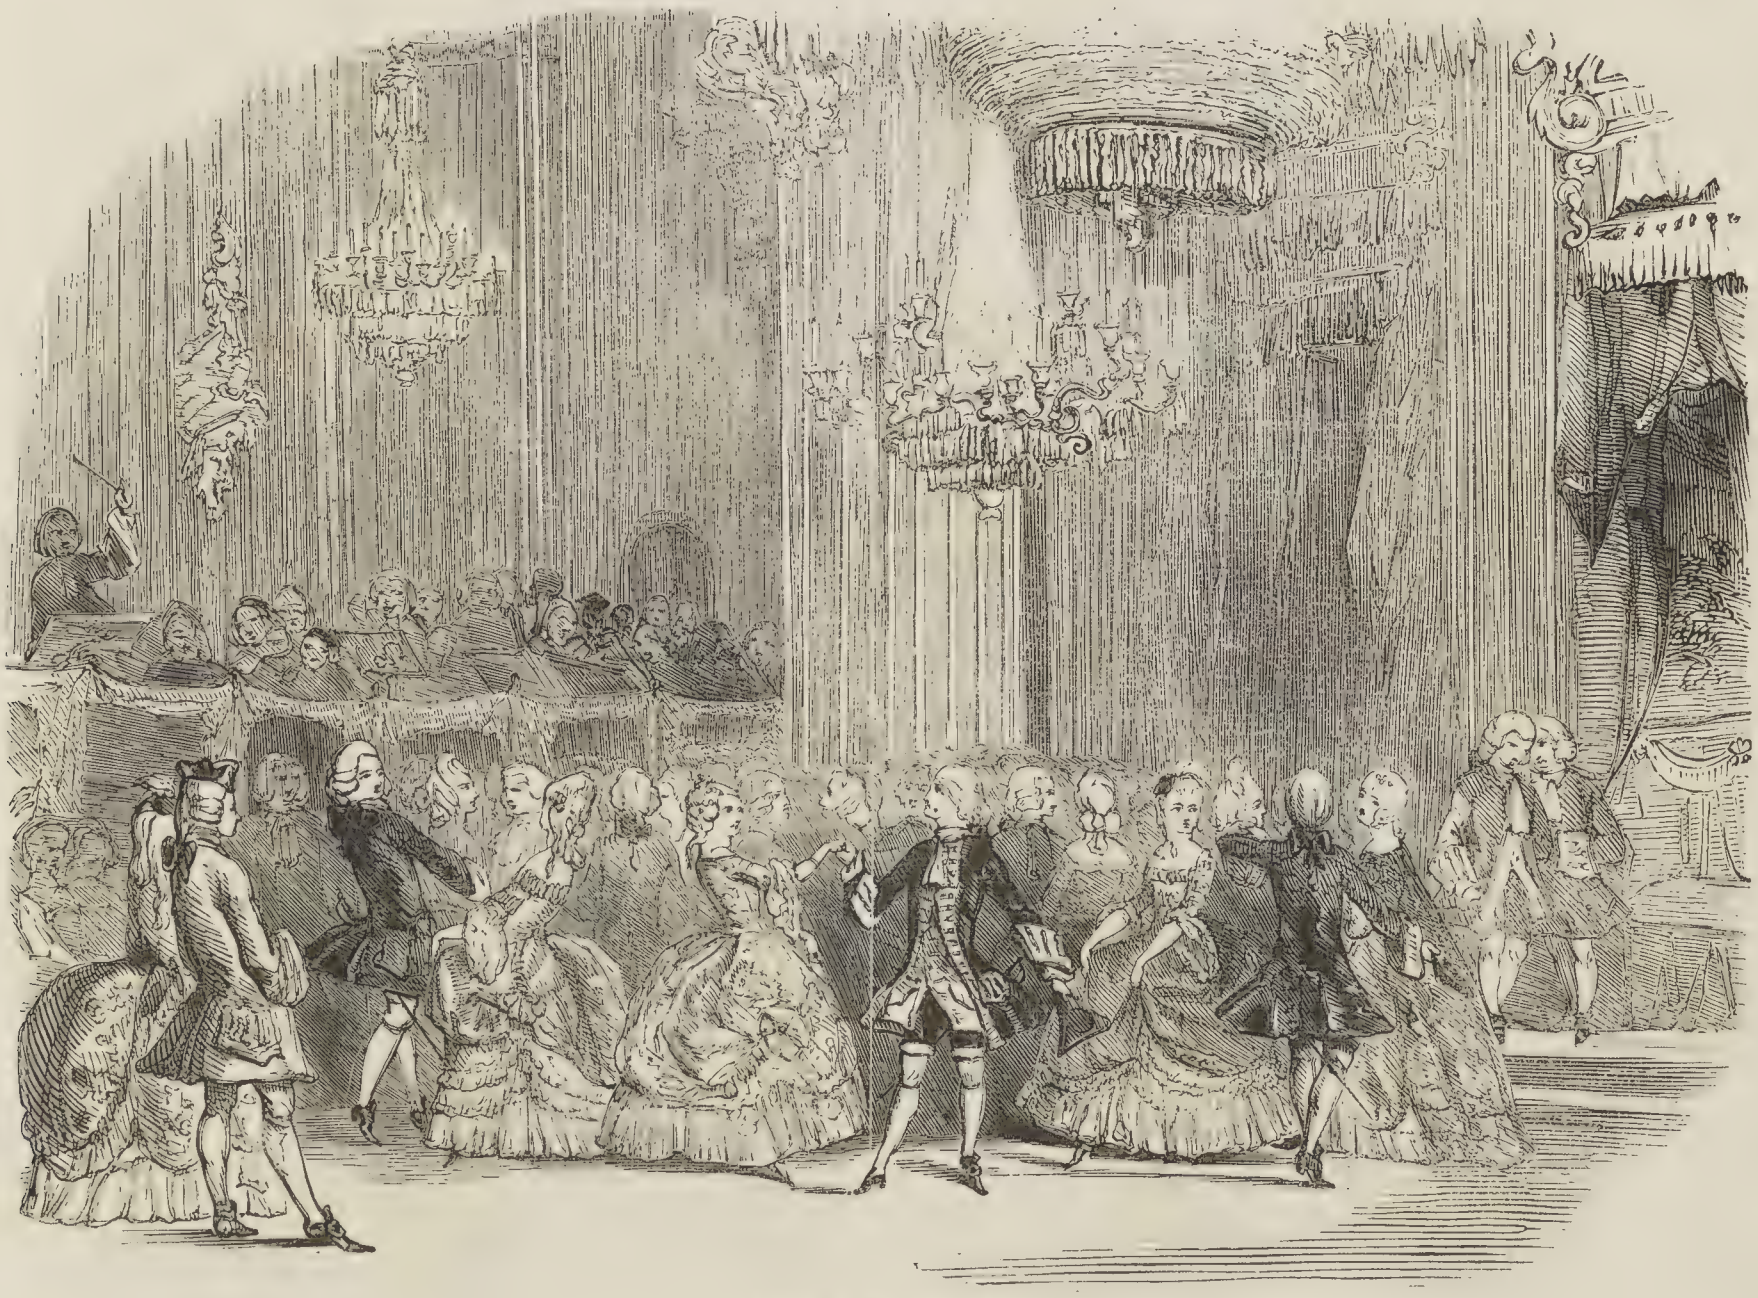
After her Majesty's third Minuet, the "Minuet de la Cour" was danced in the Throne Room, before the Queen, by

Lady Clementina Villiers	Lord Mandeville	Lady Adela Villiers	Baron Talleyrand
Lady Lucy Herbert	Mr. Clive	Lady Catherine Cust	Lord Cranley

The Marchioness of Breadalbane's Strathspey followed, in which the following ladies and gentlemen joined:—

Lady Caroline Gower	Mr. Grant	Miss Edith Campbell	Mr. Gordon Cumming
Hon Eleanor Stanley	Mr. Campbell, of Islay	Lady Jane Charteris	Earl of Gifford
Lady Mary Campbell	Mr. de Bathe	Miss Baillie	Mr Russell

The Countess of Chesterfield's Minuet was the next dance, and was danced by the following party:—



Countess of Chesterfield	Baron de Talleyrand	Mrs. John Stanley	Mr. Leveson
Lady Cremorne	Lord Cranley	Hon. Mrs. Anson	Earl of Wilton
Countess of Craven	Lord Cantilupe	Lady Newport	Prince Lieven

The three preceding dances were witnessed by her Majesty, who, at the

THE SUPPER IN THE GREAT DINING-ROOM.

MINUET IN THE THRONE ROOM.

close of the Countess of Chesterfield's Minuet, proceeded, accompanied by her Royal and noble guests, to the supper-room

After the return of her Majesty and Prince Albert and the illustrious party from Supper, the Queen's third Minuet was formed in the Throne-room, and was danced by—

The Queen	Duke de Nemours	Lady Ernest Bruce	Marquis of Douro
Duchess of Beaufort	Prince Albert	Countess Bruce	Viscount Sydney
Duchess de Nemours	Prince of Leiningen	Lady Leveson	Earl Bruce
Marchioness of Douro	Earl of Shelburne	Viscountess Canning	Marquis of Douglas
Countess of Wilton	Earl of Wilton	Duchess of Buccleuch	Marquis of Exeter

The old English country dance, "Sir Roger de Coverley," was next danced in the Picture Gallery, her Majesty leading off with Prince Albert.

The Royal party subsequently returned to the Throne Room, where a quadrille was formed, in which the Queen danced with the Duke de Nemours.

The concluding dance in the Throne Room was a Minuet (the fourth during the evening) danced by

The Queen	Prince of Leiningen	Duchess of Buccleuch	Marquis of Douglas
Countess of Wilton	Prince Albert	Lady Cremorne	Earl of Wilton
Duchess de Nemours	Prince George	Duchess of Roxburgh	Marquis of Granby
Marchioness of Douro	Prince Edward	And two other couples.

Collinet's band, including Messrs. Nadaud, Auguste Tolbecque, Deloffre, Pillet, Bourotte, Jacquin, Mellon, the celebrated cornet à piston performer Arban, and other artists of first-rate talent, was stationed in the Ball-room, and performed "God save the Queen." On the Royal party passing from the Saloon to the Ball-room, the Polonaise was played for the first dance, composed by command of the Queen, by Musard, for the occasion. This was followed by an andante.

In the Throne-room, M. Musard, with his orchestra, was stationed, and in this apartment the Queen danced the Minuet de la Cour, Musard's new quadrille and Polonaise, both composed by command of her Majesty for the occasion. The quadrille is entitled "Quadrille de 1845 de la Cour d'Angleterre, ou Souvenir de 1740 et 50." Also a morceau arranged expressly by Musard for the Royal fête, from an air of Gluck's opera, Iphigenia.

M. Weippert's band attended in the Picture Gallery, and performed, during the evening, La Polonaise, Minuet de la Cour, Minuet d' Exaudé, Bal Costumé Quadrilles (composed expressly from airs of the period, 1740-1750) Desert Quadrilles, At Home Quadrilles.

Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, and his Royal Highness Prince George, entered the Palace by the garden entrance, and from thence were conducted to the Yellow Drawing-room, where her Majesty received her illustrious guests. The Marquis and Marchioness of Douglas, and those of the nobility and gentry who formed part of the Queen's minuets, were also admitted at this entrance.

The Diplomatic Corps, and the principal Ministers of State and Officers of the Royal Household, entered the Palace by the Equerry's entrance.

In the strathspey dance, the tunes played by her Majesty's piper, were, "Miss Drummond of Perth," Tullochgorum," and "The Marquis of Huntley's Highland Fling." The Yeomen of the Guard lined the Grand Hall and Staircase, wearing their coronation costume, and commanded by Captain Sadler, the Exon in Waiting; Sir George Philip Lee, the Lieutenant; Sir George Houlton, the Ensign; and Mr. Ellerthorp, the Adjutant of the Corps, attended.

A military band was stationed in the Grand Hall.

The Guard Chamber was again brilliantly illuminated by the handsome cut glass lustre, upon Professor Faraday's ingenious invention for the perfect ventilation of the lights, producing a striking effect upon the splendour of the scene.

Nothing could exceed the coup d'œil. The illustrious characters of the prescribed period, brought once more on the stage with all the accessories of the richest costumes, infinitely varied and almost all critically correct; the blaze of light reflected from innumerable diamonds; the most precious embroidery; a sea of plumes waving over that rare lace to which elaborate workmanship and venerable antiquity combine to give a value so great as to be almost incredible; magnificent and raised velvets; tissues of gold and silver—all gave a character to the scene that those only who witnessed it can really appreciate.

Among the gentlemen, the civilians were the most successful; the military dress of 1740 to 50 was so utterly wanting in the picturesque that no advantages of mien could overcome it.

SOUVENIRS, SKETCHES, AND ANECDOTES.

(By a Correspondent.)

The Royal Masque has passed away, and never has so little been known of any fête. Last week, although many imagined descriptions have been published, no journal could afford a real account, from want of time, and from the fact that none of those who generally reflect and perpetuate such scenes with their pens were allowed to reach further than the vestibule—in spite of the Lord Chamberlain's order. What alone has been generally known has been that this fête, upon which so much time, money, and ingenuity have been bestowed, has, contrary to all precedent, surpassed all expectation. Such being the real state of the case, we must proceed to describe, from private sources, the scenes at the Palace. The best description, however, is that by the limner—illustrations! For such fêtes carry art as well as history in their train.

From the days of the fête given to Galeasso, Duke of Milan, and his bride Isabella, to those of the magnificent tournament and Bal Costumé at the Congress of Vienna, painters were always employed before-hand A Bal Costumé is essentially pictorial, whilst a masquerade is adapted to the vagaries of thought, word, and imagination. The same recourse to art was resorted to on the occasion of the ball given some years back by the unfortunate Duchess de Berri. The draughtsmen were still more actively engaged in limning the last masque of the King of Prussia, in which a great period in German annals was poetically as well as pictorially revived. Gherard, the French sculptor, was employed last year to perpetuate, by diminutive models the forms of the knights and ladies who figured at the mimic joust, or passage of arms, in the Imperial capital of Germany.

A clever foreign painter, if we mistake not at present in London, was employed by that most amiable and august lady, the Empress of Russia, to place on record with his brush the masque her Majesty gave on the occasion of the marriages of the Grand Duchess Olga and her cousin with the heir to the throne of Denmark and with the reigning Duke of Nassau. The labour of the painter was a labour of love, and proceeded with all possible dispatch compatible with the number and perfection of designs demanded of him. Amongst his "counterfeir presentments" of the magnificent scene, the two youthful, lovely, and all-accomplished Princesses were, of course, the ruling figures; but within a year they both died, at the same dread hour of trial, in the same manner, of the same death! leaving their Imperial parents a legacy of twofold sorrow. It was an irrecoverable blow to the peace of the Empress, and a natural interruption to the labours of the painter; for, as the great Italian poet has so truly observed, "there is no greater sorrow than to be reminded in adversity of hours of happiness." and the pageantry of the Royal ball-room contrasts awfully with the trappings of the grave. In England, artists were employed to design the costumes of the celebrated Bal Costumé of Lady Londonderry, which pourtrayed to the life the characters of a novel of Walter Scott, as had been done previously at Vienna. But after-records of the pencil or brush there were none worth any remembrance. Her Majesty's magnificent masque three years since, which revived the most romantic personages in history, and the most picturesque of bygone costumes, employed a still greater number of artists in the devising of costumes for the Royal guests. The Queen, desirous of perpetuating in a suitable manner the present fête, commanded the presence, during the festive scene, of that admirable draughtsman and painter, Mr. Haghe, who was employed during the course of the night in catching glimpses and remembrances of the graceful flitting forms in the "Menuet de la Cour." Her Majesty likewise commanded a portrait of her Royal parent on this occasion. These designs are destined, no doubt, worthily to adorn the boudoir of her Majesty, and no doubt designs will be multiplied, with all the addition of gay trickery of colour; but we question whether ours will not be in the multiplied form the truest index for the many. At all events, we do not doubt that it is to us that it belongs to convey the memory of these scenes to future ages, as well as to "the Million" of our days. Ours is the true vivid picture-history of the times.

The period chosen for her Majesty's Ball to represent—as regards costume—was one of transition: with a little retrospective tendency, it approached the decided costume, so inimitably great, of Louis XIV; with a little tendency forward, it touched that epoch to which all female fashions have whelmed within the two or three last years, leaping over the epoch of the vilest taste—that of George III.

The costume thus arranged, we could but enjoy the amusing comparison which presented itself betwixt the company below and the heroes and heroines on the walls of the Palace, many of them ancestors of the noble and illustrious personages present. The sides of the rooms are covered with pictures—the Watteaux, the Bouchers, the Mieris, the Knellers, &c.; and, above all, the Vandermeulens, representing Louis XIV's Progresses, surrounded by his Court, offered singular objects of comparison. We expected every moment some outburst of anger at this derision of their epoch, by some of the starched, envious looking ladies, or some of the awfully-beperuked Grandees frowning on the walls; or that some spectre Cavalier should perform the feat of the White Lord in Horace Walpole's Strawberry-hill Gallery—descend from his frame, and offer his post obit love and homage to one of the panting high-born beauties below. Such an approximation, such a comparison, was a very trying test of the propriety of the costume of the favoured guests. Add to this, that the epoch more particularly chosen, and more decidedly enforced by the Royal command (1740 to 1750), was in the highest degree unfavourable to the outward man. Fortunately, the dresses first made, and that served as models, by desire of her Majesty, were designed by M. Vouillon, a gentleman of remarkable natural taste and acumen, improved by literary habits and historical research, and who had acquired great experience, having devised the costumes and accessories of the great masque of the Marchioness of Londonderry, many years since; and still further improved by practice in the still more remarkable fête of this description three years since, in the same exalted precincts as the last. The period chosen was certainly one of the least favourable in past annals, but it was adopted because it called into play the industry of the greatest number of artisans. We know, on positive authority, that there were other similar views, of more permanent effect, of her Gracious Majesty connected with this choice. Nothing can be more striking than the departure from characteristic costume and befitting luxury of rank amongst the highest orders of society in England. Although noble men may maintain the same characteristic high breeding, dressed in that miserable costume the Franks substituted for the Roman toga and the flowing robes and bright tunics of the Eastern world, and that it may be more convenient to be dragged about by a single struggling horse in the low poised Brougham, than in the chariot and four-wheeled vis à vis and landaus of former days—all these changes are as destructive to industry as they are unsightly to the eye of the painter. The Queen is desirous of returning, at least, to a costume which fulfils the excellent object, as regards art and industry, now lost sight of; and as a recurrence to a dress of a long-elapsed age might meet with more resistance, the rich costume the nearest to our period has been revived, in the hope of a modification "pour le mieux" of present dress being adopted.

The manner in which the general directions were followed by the several parties engaged, produced great contrasts. The Scotch nobility and gentry appeared mostly in Highland costume, adopting the fashions of those canny Scotchmen who, at the epoch revived, found more profit in the air of the Court of St. James' than in the blue ether of Ben Lomond—in a party on the Thames to Ranelagh than on Loch Tay to a rendezvous of deer stalking. They wore powder in their hair, whilst several of the most distinguished noblemen of Scotland wore no powder at all, with a court costume—Lord Aberdeen, for example, whose wig was as black as jet. It must be confessed that no small number of the Royal guests looked wofully "not at home" in their costumes, particularly some of those most burdened with finery; but the immense majority of those present appeared quite at ease in their new dresses. In spite of the ponderous bewildering wig and powder, of the court swords set at a tangent in the pockets of the gentlemen, and the high-heeled shoes on which the ladies equilibrated, with dresses of such protuberant form, we did not see one of the guests lose for a moment the habitual a plomb of high company. One or two ladies fainted, but Louis XV. himself experienced this mishap one day from the load and pressure of a costume of unprecedented magnificence he had put on to win the heart of a new favourite. No one had to complain of the costume chosen. Her Majesty and the Royal consort had to bear more than the ordinary share of the ordeal; their dresses, particularly that of her Majesty, being of course one of the weightiest from its richness and ornamental accessories. The Royal pair evidenced most strikingly how the habits of the higher sphere enables those "native and to the manner born," to move with ease, grace, and commanding mein under ever obstacle; barring stature, her Majesty recalled the Queen of the epoch chosen. The Royal heroine, whose radiance cast such a lustre on one of the kings in our history who most needed it, Queen Caroline, is represented as having been extremely handsome; her hand and arm are described as models of perfect symmetry; her carriage was dignified; her countenance wore an expression of majesty or mildness, as the occasion suited; her eyes were penetrating and expressive, and her voice soft and musical. Queen Caroline was the good genius of a sovereign whose star was the most fortunate of any on record in history unto the very hour of his death. "What an enviable death," said Walpole, "was that of George II. In the greatest period of the glory of this country, and of his reign; in perfect tranquillity at home, at 77, growing blind and deaf, to die without a pang, before any reverse of fortune, or any distasteful peace; nay, but two days before a ship load of bad news, could he have such another moment." The preceding picture of his Royal consort is, we repeat, a portrait of Queen Victoria—particularly as regards the play of her features, and still more as regard the air of majesty and command—that imposing dignity of mien, and decision of manner, which struck with such astonishment the Lords, at the first Council after her Majesty's advent to the throne, when the Royal maiden, brought up in retirement, and totally unused to affairs of State, suddenly revealed the lion nature of her race, which required no support but its high aspirations and intrinsic greatness of soul. The most striking moment was when—the Great Officers of State preceding—the Queen, with the Royal Consort, promenaded. Then the whole company present—their distinction of looks and manners resplendently set off by every resource of art, and every accessory of grandeur—formed into two ranks, and the Royal cortège moved amidst the obeisances of their gratified subjects. As you looked down the vista of human faces and forms, in such unusual and remarkable costume, the effect was extremely and singularly striking. Prince Albert surpassed all the Nobles present; and we are happy to say that her Majesty's Royal Consort recalled no English Prince of the epoch; George II. was totally dissimilar.

So magnificent a result is not astonishing—the announcement of the fête came early, and was seconded by a higher motive besides pleasure. From the moment that the Royal fiat received its publicity, each temple of fashion, from the show room of the Marchande de Modes to the sacred recesses of the satined boudoir—from the worker in jewels to the adapter of what Chaucer calls the "foote case," gave delightful note of preparation. Thousands of wishing hearts, palpitating with hopes and fears, were there, who tremblingly looked forward to the fond consummation of being included among the favoured of Royalty. Not to be among the glittering throng would brand them as the Pariahs of the world of fashion. Lingeringly, and flushed with expectation, would hundreds of fair ones await each knock at their portals for the reception of the "regal command," that was to confer happiness; and from the moment the "broad card" would meet their anxious gaze, then the brain would whirl with fierce delight, and fancy would evoke a thousand forms of the by-gone day. Rapidly would steaming horses carry them to Laure and Vonillon, and other priests of the Iris shrine, to conjure up "dresses to adorn their bodies," and give to beauty added grace and brilliancy. Well, the hopes and fears, the panting hearts and flushed cheeks, are now at quiet, and memory must live in the past. Yet what a host of reminiscences will be from time to time conjured up—how many hours to come will this one Royal night make bright with description—it will stand forth in grand relief, "unmixed with baser matter." Like the Fifth Harry's Feast of St. Crispin, each participant of the Royal fête will leave its splendours as an heir-loom to their families, and at each annual recurrence will it form aliment for the gathering together of pleasant memories—the scene, and its marvellous splendours, will be brought to the mind's-eye, and the stately minuet, and the lively strathspey, will be danced again.

From an early hour on Friday, the western part of the metropolis seemed moved as with some portent—all was busy activity—mounted horsemen were seen careering in all directions—each broad street was filled with huge cartons—fashionists were in a state of high fever—and the haute volée, were wild with despair at the non arrival of one of the thousand and one requisites that were vitally important to the completion of the selected costume. There was all the denotement of a regal carnival. Every issue to Buckingham Palace was crowded by gaping sight-seers; and, as night approached, the parks became filled with groups, fresh landed from the various railway stations. The first glimmering lamp which shed its small ray from Buckingham Palace, was greeted with all the enthusiasm of Persian Fire-worshippers — and the distant rumbling of a carriage wheel, filled each bosom with the devotion of an Indian Faquir at the approach of the car of Juggernaut. But soon lights appeared at the several windows of the Palace, and the arrival of carriages were thick and continuous The crowds would rush to catch a glimpse of the powdered and jewelled tenants, as they vanished through the Marble Arch, and galloped round to the middle entrance of the façade. Lines of liveried lacqueys awaited the arrival of the guests, to usher them into the Marble Hall, where the Lord High Steward of the Household and the chief dignitaries of the Palace were marshalled in "state ceremonious," and the white-wanded officials in the rich state-liveries, and the gentlemen at arms with their bright emblazoning, formed a "rich and rare" coup d'œil. The Grand Library was devoted to the uncloaking, and to the restoration of the toilette, which the crowded collision had discomposed. Hence masters of ceremonies would usher the panting belles, flushed from weight of jewels, and suffering from the inconvenience of a loaded costume, to the marble staircase—the golden balustrades were relieved by an affluence of floral exotics, which came upon the senses like the sweet south over banks of violets. As each fair votary passed up the polished steps, illumined by myriad lights, playing upon and scintillating the diamonds, which gave and received lustre from the fair wearers—the powdered head—and the gorgeous habits of the attendant beaux—it seemed like the quaint vision produced by a fairy spell.

After passing through the Green Drawing Room, which was appropriated to refreshments—and even here the fine taste of her Majesty was strikingly exemplified—the craving necessities of vulgar appetite were concealed behind colossal nosegays and plateaux of rarest Dresden. The Picture Gallery, adorned with the inspired canvasses of the immortal contributors to picture art in past ages was upon this occasion dedicated to the promenade, and hence the serried ranks of the aristocracy wended their progress to the Roman Drawing Room, and waited to recover their energies, ere they approached the Yellow Room, serving as the Presence Chamber—the mirrored panels of which reflected a thousand-fold the gorgeous forms; the jewelled tiaras and ornaments corruscating in sparks of fire brilliant as the diamond mines of famed Golconda, and glittering like the opal halls of the blessed of the Eastern tale teller. And here sat the presiding genius of the fête—our gracious Queen Victoria—the Island Queen—"the fair Monarch throned in the West"—smiling a bright welcome on her lieges; acknowledging with grateful smiles of recognition each worthy subject, as they moved in glittering array before her, while her flushed brow spoke eloquently the regal pride felt at the view of the inestimable wealth, and the unrivalled beauty, of her country women.

As we have before observed, in spite of the stiff brocade and its unbending rigidity, and the unusual height of her jewelled shoes, her Majesty had attained a perfection of bearing and graceful case, as though she had been accustomed from infancy to bear the ponderous grandeur. Surrounded by her illustrious relatives, she shone the presiding luminary, shedding her benignant beams around; with queenly dignity smiling on all, but her eyes still tenderly resting with a wife's love on the Prince Consort, who stood at her side—arrayed with gorgeous splendour, but regulated with historical accuracy and refined taste. The Regal groupe was, of course, the cynosure of neighbouring eyes; and surely it was composed of all the elements which give to Royalty its truest prestige—kindliness of heart and affability of manners, universal love of its kind, and a yearning for the lasting happiness of the people over whom it has been called not only to rule but to exert the mighty power and impetus of national morality.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, was placed near her "crowned child," and benignly gazed with a mother's pride. And even this noble lady's costume bore out the thought; its splendour was subdued, and harmonised with the illustrious wearer's natural air of command, tempered by that genial spirit of universal kindness which is the ruling feeling of her nature. The entente cordiale surely was never more charmingly typified than in the lovely Duchess de Nemours; her transparent complexion, and exquisitely-formed hand,

"So pale and wan of hue,
You might have seen the moon shine through;"

and her luxuriant hair, Pompadoured and studded with gems of priceless worth, while the reflection of her rose coloured damask dress reflected its tints, and mantled her fair cheeks with a kindred glow.

To select for special admiration any one of the costumed beauties from the myriad throng were vain, for each was symbolised by some bright speciality; yet, the inquiring eye would rest admiringly on some bright and particular lady, rich either in beauty or marked by some excelling brilliancy, like the Princess of Baden (now allied to the proud house of "the Douglas"), and the pensive Lady Chesterfield, with her sweet sister, the Lady Newport; and the superb Baroness de Brunnow, arrayed in all the splendid material which formed the characteristic of the gorgeous Court of Catherina the Czarina; Miss Burdett Coutts, bearing the historic "collier" so fraught with melancholy memories of Marie Antoinette, the fair subject of Burke's phillipic against the extinct chivalry of the age; and the unity of costume of the Ladies of Honour all harmonised, though varying like the bright hues of the prism.

At no moment of the night did the guests and the Royal hosts themselves excite so much interest and admiration as in the dance. In no respect did the revived epoch display the superiority of the age in external habits of society than in the dances. There was the majestic Minuet, on the one hand, displaying all the elegance of attire and the grace of form, absolutely demanding that study of carriage, which is the most ornamental of all acquired qualities of form; and, on the other hand, we beheld once more the good old dance of our ancestors, in the days of Merry England—the "Roger de Coverley"—danced by all—by the Lord of the Manor, as well as his tenants, in days of real joyousness and rejoicing—when the frost work of ceremony was broken by a hearty feeling of mutual kindliness. The unsightly Polkas were for once banished; and the Quadrilles danced appeared so vapid and inane, that we are inclined to believe they received, at her Majesty's Ball, their death-blow.

Our readers will feel how inadequate must be our description of such a fête. We have compared our notes with the observations of the most elegant and the most gifted of her Majesty's favoured guests, and all have been as inadequate to convey in words a characteristic impression. The fact is, that the Queen's Fête produced only an "effet d'ensemble;" magnificent indeed, but with little contrast. Although splendid and admirable in some respects, particularly as compared to ours, the costume of the age offered but few contrasts; all Europe, at the epoch revived, was abiding under the tyranny of the almost universally reigning absurdities of artificial hair, powder, and hoops, concealing the human form, and redeemed only by the grace of bearing and elegance of manner they absolutely demanded. The costumes of the few foreign nations who had escaped the mania were not sufficiently invoked. The heroes of the age were not many, and the costumes but of two or three of them were recalled, and that very imperfectly. The consequence was, there was an absence of those contrasts upon which the chronicler and the painter have always relied for description.

COSTUMES.

In addition to the Costumes published in our Journal of last week, the following were among the most striking:—

DUCHESS OF NEMOURS.—Rose-coloured Chinese damask dress, richly trimmed with gold blonde and pearls and silver fringes. Under-dress of point d'Alençon lace, having a deep border of silver, with large silver rosettes. In front were silver lapels. The stomacher was composed of large brilliants and pearls, and on the left shoulder was a beautiful nosegay with diamond wheat-ears intermixed. Shoes of purple satin, embroidered with fleur-de lis in gold and diamonds. Gloves embroidered in gold, with the fleur-de-lis to correspond.

THE DUCHESS OF GLOUCESTER.—Dress of the richest black silk, having a pattern of flowers, trimmed with handsome white point lace, looped up. Down the front (which was ornamented with diamonds) were two borders of white point lace. Stomacher of diamonds and head-dress of black lace and diamonds Petticoat of the same materials as the dress.

THE DUCHESS OF NORFOLK.—Dress of brocade, the skirt of white silk, richly ornamented with amethysts.

LADY DALMENY.—Costume of green and silver brocade, looped up with bouquets of white, pink, and red roses, and trimmed with old point lace and cherry-coloured ribbons. Petticoat of white satin, with a broad lace flounce, trimmed with festoons and knots of cherry-coloured ribbons. Head-dress, black velvet hat, with two cerise feathers, and a knot of ribbons, looped up with roses and an aigrette of diamonds. Necklace and stomacher also of diamonds. Shoes of white satin, with red heels and rosettes of red ribbon.

LADY MARY FITZALAN HOWARD.—Dress of cherry-coloured brocade, the skirt of grey satin, ornamented with pearls and diamonds.

THE MARCHIONESS OF DOURO.—The petticoat of white brocade with gold; flounce of old and most valuable point lace, formerly belonging to one of the Popes of Rome. The dress of splendid brocade with silver, the front being open, and ornamented with silver bullion and rosettes of diamonds. The stomacher most superbly covered with diamonds. Each sleeve ornamented with diamonds in the form of coronets, and trimmed with point lace to match the flounce. Head-dress, a coronet of diamonds and rubies. Shoes of white satin, trimmed with red ribbon, a rosette on each, with a large diamond in the centre. Her ladyship carried a magnificent antique fan, decorated with rubies. The value of the diamonds and jewels worn by her ladyship amounted to £60,000. The necklace was of pearls, with rubies and diamonds fastened on black velvet, with bracelets to match.

THE MARCHIONESS OF WATERFORD.—A gold brocade dress, embroidered with roses, and laced with violet velvet ribbon; ruffles of old point lace. Ornaments of pearls and diamonds. Petticoats of the same splendid material. The sleeves were bordered with rich lace, and were ornamented with gold, as was also the bottom of the dress.

THE DUCHESS OF BEAUFORT.—Hat of black velvet, ornamented with ribbons, edged with the largest brilliants, with a splendid ornament of diamonds and turquoise in the centre. Pink feathers. Dress of beautiful white figured satin, with splendid lace, and artificial flowers on each side. The stomacher of green satin, covered with diamonds. The petticoat of green satin, trimmed with a double border of the richest lace

THE MARCHIONESS OF AYLESBURY.—A most magnificent costume of cerise velvet, embroidered with gold. The under petticoat of white satin, very richly ornamented with lama and gold blonde. A most brilliant stomacher of diamonds. Head-dress of diamonds.

LADY SEYMOUR.—Dress of the richest gold brocade, elegantly ornamented with flowers, looped up and trimmed with blue ribbons and roses. Stomacher of cherry-coloured satin, splendidly ornamented with diamonds. A garland of roses extend round the top of the dress, looped on one shoulder by a large diamond, and fastened on the opposite side by a large bow of blue ribbon. The slip was of cherry-coloured satin, with a very deep and handsome flounce of guipure lace. The head-dress was a small black velvet hat, ornamented with diamonds and pearls, and having a blue and a cherry-coloured feather; over the forehead was a small wreath of blue feathers. The necklace was of black velvet, studded with diamonds and turquoises, with a very large brilliant in the centre. Shoes of cherry-coloured satin, with white satin heels. Fan, with a large bow of cherry-coloured ribbons.

THE MARCHIONESS OF BLANDFORD.—A white satin slip, with two very deep flounces of lace, trimmed with red satin and red roses. The dress of red velvet, trimmed with white satin and red roses, and ornamented with diamonds. A diamond stomacher, with red velvet bows. The train trimmed with pearls and red roses. Hat of red velvet with three feathers of the same colour, ornamented with diamonds and pearls, Bouquet on the right shoulder, composed of roses with leaves of diamonds.

VISCOUNTESS CANNING.—The dress of deep blue silver tissue, open in front, and bordered on each side by the richest silver lace; the sleeves trimmed with handsome point lace. The petticoat was of white silk, elegantly and profusely embroidered with flowers The stomacher consisted of diamonds, and the dress itself was also ornamented with diamonds.

LADY ERNEST BRUCE.—Slip of terre velvet, richly trimmed with guipure. The dress of white brocaded satin, watered with silver, and ornamented with flowers, being open in front, looped up at the skirt with garlands of flowers, and trimmed with white and red ribbon and silver cord. The stomacher of velvet, splendidly covered with diamonds and opals. Sleeves trimmed with guipure. Hat of red velvet, with red and white feathers, and diamond ornaments.

LADY LEVESON.—Petticoat of white damask, with a deep flounce of handsome lace Dress of Turkish green satin, embroidered with velvet flowers. A very splendid stomacher of diamonds. Hat of black velvet, with red feathers and diamonds.

THE HON MRS. G. E. ANSON.—The dress of rich brocade, wrought in silver with a magnificent pattern of gold and flowers, elaborately executed. The stomacher of diamonds and rubies. On each shoulder a diamond cross. The front of the dress bordered with gold lace, and the sleeves were trimmed with the same material. Petticoat of the same rich material, trimmed at the bottom with broad gold lace. Head-dress of diamonds, with a single red feather. Shoes of white satin, with red rosettes, and a diamond in the centre.

THE HON MISS STANLEY.—The dress of rich cerise and white brocade, trimmed with lace and roses Petticoat of blue ponit de soie. Ornaments, turquoises and diamonds.

LADY PORTMAN.—The dress of blue silk, brocaded with silver, being a very handsome family dress of the year 1750. The under dress of white silk, brocaded with silver, and trimmed with point lace. The stomacher composed of diamonds, and trimmed with white lace. Head dress, a hat of black velvet, with blue and white feathers, ornamented with diamonds.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE GEORGE OF CAMBRIDGE.—A scarlet cloth General of Cavalry's uniform suit, richly trimmed with gold lace.

PRINCE LIEVEN.—Costume of garnet-coloured velvet, richly embroidered in gold; waistcoat of Pompadour satin.

HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH.—Coat of Royal blue rich velvet, most elaborately embroidered with gold in an ancient style, the workmanship and design of which never was surpassed, if ever equalled; lined with rich white satin and buttons of gold work; on the breast a splendid star and Order of the Garter, and sword studded with diamonds. Waistcoat, of rich and delicately white satin, most ingeniously and superbly embroidered in gold; in the design the thistle is very appropriately introduced; gold buttons. Breeches, of these ne velvet as the coat, with embroidered button-holes, and buttons of gold, as on the waistcoat.

DUKE OF WELLINGTON.—Scarlet coat, richly laced with broad gold lace, with splendid gold bullion buttons and frogs, gold aiguilette on right shoulder, brilliant star on breast and ribbon of the Order of the Garter over left shoulder, with the Order of the Golden Fleece, &c., lined with embossed scarlet satin; waistcoat, scarlet cashmere, splendidly covered with gold lace, elaborately embroidered gold bullion buttons and frogs, with massive gold bullion fringe, all round; breeches, scarlet kerseymere, richly embroidered with gold lace and gold buckles, white silk stockings, high heeled shoes, cocked hat, laced with broad gold lace, rich sword, studded with rose diamonds and brilliant emeralds. The Duke's dress is after the Field Marshal's dress costume of George II.

DUKE OF DEVONSHIAR.—Coat of rich maroon velvet, edged with a very exquisite gold embroidery, and lined with white satin; the buttons worked in gold. On the left breast the noble Duke wore the St. George and star of the Order of the Garter, set in most superb diamonds the shoulder-knot of white satin fastened with magnificent diamonds, and the sword inlaid with the same jewels; waistcoat of the richest figured satin, the gold embroidery and buttons en suite with the coat; breeches of maroon velvet, with gold buttons; frill and ruffles of Brussels point-lace: three-cornered hat, with white feathers and splendid diamond ornaments black velvet shoes, with red morocco heels and diamond buckles. His Grace also wore the Order of St Andrew of Russia.

DUKE OF LEEDS.—Costume of Thomas, fourth Duke of Leeds. Coat of puce-coloured velvet, lined with white satin, and trimmed with gold lace; diamond buttons; white satin waistcoat, embroidered in gold; culotte of puce-coloured satin, and diamond buckles.

DUKE OF BEAUFORT.—A rich blue velvet suit, superbly embroidered in gold, magnificently trimmed with gold Brandenburghs, and lined with buff satin, with point lace ruffles of great value; the vest of buff satin, richly embroidered in gold, to correspond; remarkable for the accuracy and taste displayed in its selection.

MARQUIS OF EXETER.—A rich maroon colour velvet suit, elegantly trimmed with gold Brandenburghs, and massive bullion tassels, adorned with superb jewel buttons, and lined with white satin: the vest of rich tissue, trimmed en suite.

MARQUIS OF WATERFORD.—A superb black velvet suit, trimmed with rich gold gimp Brandenburghs, and tassels edged with gold lace, ornamented with rich gold pearl buttons and lined with white satin; the vest of silver tissue, trimmed in a similar manner.

MARQUIS OF LORN.—A superb sable velvet Highland jacket, beautifully trimmed with silver lace, green cuffs, and lined with green, ornamented with solid silver salmon, the various ornaments in every respect unique and of exquisite delineation; the Sutherland Chief tartan belted plaid, and kilt.

MARQUIS OF BREADALBANE.—A rich blue velvet Highland jacket, handsomely embroidered in gold, and slashed with yellow satin; rich gold satin tissue waistcoat, Breadalbane Tartan kilt, and satin belted plaid rich gold lace belts, with solid gold mountings and precious stones The above costume taken from a valuable painting in his lordship's possession.

MARQUIS OF HEADFORT.—A rich claret-coloured velvet suit, trimmed with gold lace, the cuffs of gold tissue, and ornamented with superb jewel buttons; the vest of silver tissue trimmed to correspond.

MARQUIS OF WORCESTER.—A rich blue velvet suit, elegantly embroidered in silver, trimmed with rich silver Brandenburghs, and lined with white satin; the vest of scarlet satin, and richly embroidered in silver.

His Excellency Count Kielmansegge.—Coat of green velvet, richly trimmed with gold lace, and lined with white satin, gold buttons; waistcoat of white satin, embroidered in gold, the buttons corresponding with those on the boat; culotte of green velvet, trimmed with gold; diamond knee buckles; ruffles, &c., of point d'Alencon.

Count A. Esterhazy.—A white cloth Austrian General's uniform, coat edged and trimmed with gold lace, and scarlet cuffs; scarlet vest, and breeches trimmed to match.

Baron Brenner and Count Po oski.—The same as Count Esterhazy's.

The Baron de Folgoza.—Coat of very rich emerald-green velvet, with gold loops, buttons and frogs down the fronts, trimmed with rich gold lace, and lined with rich white satin. Waistcoat of richly brocaded gold on white satin trimmed with gold lace, and gold buttons. Culotte of velvet same as the coat, with gold button holes, and buttons at the knee.

Baron Koller.—Uniform of an Austrian Colonel of Dragoons; coat of green casimir, with facings of amaranth; culotte of doeskin chamois; ruffles of point lace

His Excellency Thomas Murphy (the Mexican Minister).—Coat of very rich royal blue velvet, lined through with rich white satin, trimmed with very rich gold lace, and buttons of gold work. Waistcoat of richly brocaded gold, and blue figures on white satin, and trimmed with gold lace; buttons to match those on the coat. Culotte of the same velvet as the coat, with gold lace garters, and gold knee buckles.

Earl of Chesterfield.—Coat of crimson velvet, embroidered in silver, and lined with white satin, diamond buttons; waistcoat of white satin, richly embroidered in silver, buttons set with diamonds; culotte of crimson velvet, and diamond knee-buckles; jabot, cravat, and ruffles, of point lace.

Earl of Craven.—Coat of violet-coloured velvet, richly embroidered in gold, and lined with white satin; nœud d'epaule of violet-coloured satin, fringed with gold; waistcoat of white satin, embroidered in gold; culotte of violet-coloured satin, and diamond knee-buckles.

Earl of Rosslyn.—Coat of brown fancy velvet, embroidered in gold; lining of straw-coloured satin; buttons, enamel and diamonds; culotte of brown satin, with diamond buckles.

The Earl Delaware.—A rich crimson velvet suit, trimmed with rich gold Brandenburghs and pearl buttons, lined with white satin, and edged with ermine: white satin and gold tissue vest, richly trimmed with gold lace and Brandenburghs.

Earl of Orkney.—A black velvet Highland jacket, with scarlet cuffs, trimmed with rich silver lace, and ornamented with handsome cairn-gorum stone buttons; the kilt and plaid of royal tartan, and scarlet vest: the ornaments of rich chased silver, and unique.

The Earl of Haddington.—A very rich blue velvet suit, elaborately trimmed with silver lace, Brandenburghs, and rich pearl buttons, lined with white satin; the vest of white figured silk, richly trimmed with silver Brandenburghs and pearl buttons.

The Earl of Bective.—A superb cerise velvet suit, richly trimmed with gold lace, lined with white satin, blue satin cuffs, and adorned with splendid buttons; the vest of blue satin, covered with rich Brussels point lace.

Viscount Canning.—A superb gold and blue tissue coat, elegantly trimmed with gold Brandenburghs, and lined with green satin; the vest of rich gold tissue, trimmed with gold Brandenburghs, edged with gold lace and fringe.

Viscount Palmerston.—A rich ruby-coloured velvet suit, trimmed with gold lace, and lined with white satin; the vest of flowered silk, trimmed to correspond.

Lord John Chichester.—Coat of sky-blue velvet, richly embroidered in gold, and lined with white satin; waistcoat of white satin, embroidered in gold; blue satin culotte, with diamond buckles; jabot, cravat, and ruffles, of superb point lace.

Lord Maidstone.—Cerise coloured velvet coat, embroidered in gold, and lined with white satin; gold buttons; waistcoat of white satin, trimmed with cerise ribbon; culotte of cerise velvet; nœud d'epaule of cerise satin and gold.

Lord Foley.—Coat of violet-coloured fancy velvet, embroidered in gold, and lined with white satin; gold buttons; waistcoat of satin lame or; culotte of violet satin; nœud d'epaule of white satin and gold.

Lord M'Donald, and Captain James M'Donald.—Rich cerise coloured velvet jacket, trimmed with silver lace; silver tissue waistcoat; Lord of the Isles tartan kilt and plaid.

Lord Fitzroy Somerset.—A scarlet cloth General's uniform; coat with blue cuffs and facings, richly trimmed with gold lace, lined with white silk; white vest and breeches.

Lord Frederick Fitzclarence (a General's Uniform).—Coat of superfine scarlet cloth, trimmed with extremely rich and wide gold lace of the oak-leaf pattern; on the breast the Hanoverian Guelphic Order, richly studded with precious stones. Waistcoat of white cassimere, trimmed with rich gold lace to match the coat. Breeches of scarlet cassimere.

The Baron Lionel Rothschild.—Coat of very rich velvet (peach blossom), richly embroidered in silver, lined through with rich white satin, and large diamond buttons Waistcoat of richly brocaded silver on a rich white satin, with diamond buttons. Culotte of velvet same as the coat, with diamond buttons at the knees.

The Baron Meyer Rothschild.—Coat of very rich light blue velvet, splendidly embroidered in silver, lined with rich white satin, and buttons of silver work. Waistcoat of richly-brocaded silver on rich white satin, and buttons of silver work. Culotte of the same velvet as the coat, and the buttons to match with the waistcoat.

General Lord Downe.—A scarlet cloth uniform with blue facings, trimmed with rich gold lace and Brandenburghs.

General Lord Beresford.—A scarlet uniform coat of the 16th Foot, with buff facings, and trimmed with silver lace, white vest, and scarlet breeches.

General Sir John Macdonald.—A scarlet cloth Highland jacket, with yellow cuffs and facings, trimmed with rich gold vellum lace, the belts and ornaments of the most unique order, and shoulder brooch of matchless value; the vest of scarlet, and trimmed to correspond; the 42nd tartan plaid and kilt, worn as Colonel in command of the 42nd regiment.

Colonel FitzGibbon (a Uniform of Lord Ligonier).—Coat of light blue superfine cloth, with scarlet facings and turnbacks, trimmed with gold lace: a rich silk scarf, with gold tassels, and a gold aiguilette. Waistcoat of buff cassimere, trimmed with gold lace. Culotte of white cassimere.

Colonel Anson.—Costume of a General of the Guards in the reign of George II. White and red uniform coat; pantaloons of white casimir.

Captain de ——. Velvet coat of Marie Louise blue, lined with satin; waistcoat of white satin lame argent; culotte of blue satin; nœud d'epaule of white satin and gold.

Captain Edmund Mildmay.—Black velvet coat, laced with gold, and ornamented with gold Brandenburghs, lining of blue satin: nœud d'epaule of blue satin and gold; culotte of black velvet.

Hon. Captain F. Villiers.—Coat of blue fancy velvet, embroidered in silver, and lined with white satin; buttons, blue enamel, set with diamonds; white satin waistcoat, embroidered in silver; nœud d'epaule of white satin and silver.

Captain Bateson.—A scarlet Dragoon uniform, with green cuffs, trimmed with gold lace, and lined with white silk; buff vest, and white breeches, trimmed to correspond

Captain A. P Gordon Cumming.—A black velvet Highland jacket, with green cuffs, trimmed with gala lace; scarlet waistcoat.

Sir Horace B. Seymour.—A scarlet cloth Horse Guards' uniform, trimmed with gold lace

The undermentioned in the uniform of the Guards:—General Sir H. T. Wheatley, Colonel Henry Bentinck, Captain P. G H Somerset, Earl of Caledon, Colonel Dixon, Colonel Thornton, Captain Purves, Viscount Mandeville, the Hon M. West, H. F. Ponsonby, Captain S. Graham, Captain E. Goulburn, Lieutenant-Colonel Angerstein, Captain Francis Seymour, Lord Brownlow Cecil, Charles Seymour, Esq., Captain Boyle

The Right Hon. George Byng (a British Cavalry Uniform) —Coat of superfine scarlet cloth, with light blue facings and turnbacks, trimmed with gold lace; a rich crimson silk scarf, with gold tassels. Waistcoat of buff cassimere, trimmed with gold lace. Culotte of white cassimere.

Hon. Adolphus Liddel.—Coat of Pompadour silk, lined with blue satin, and trimmed with silver lace; buttons of silver; waistcoat and culotte to correspond.

Hon. Ma. Leveson Gower —Uniform of a French Musquetaire. White cloth coat, faced with amaranth; gold Brandenburgh buttons; waistcoat and culotte of white casimir; shoulder-knot of amaranth and gold

A. Montgomery, Esq.—Scarlet velvet coat, embroidered in gold, and lined with satin; waistcoat of white satin lame or; culotte of white gros d'Afrique; jabot and ruffles of point de Paris.

Hugh Seymour, Esq.—A blue velvet coat.

William Beckett, Esq.—A rich puce velvet dress, with gold lace.

George Harvey Cavendish, Esq —A velvet dress trimmed with gold

Lieut C. T Wemyss, 3rd Guards —A plaid Highland suit, trimmed with silver lace, and figured braid, ornamented with costly and massive silver fringe; the belt and other ornaments of ancient order, and strictly in accordance with the costume of the time of the Pretender's entry into Edinburgh.

John Campbell, Esq, younger, of Islay —A blue velvet jacket, richly trimmed with gold, and scarlet vest to correspond; Campbell tartan kilt and plaid.

Henry Unwin Addington, Esq —A brown velvet suit, with gold lace.

Assheton Smith, Esq.—A rich light blue velvet coat, trimmed with gold lace,

The Masters Byng and Gordon (State Pages to her Majesty).—Coats of scarlet superfine cloth, trimmed with gold lace, lined with rich white satin, and large white satin shoulder-knots. Waistcoats, of rich white satin, trimmed with gold lace. Culottes of white cassimere.

THE ENGRAVINGS

The Costume Portraits engraved are the following:—

Duke of Norfolk.—A very handsome costume of blue velvet and silver, with white and gold waistcoat. His Grace carried his gold baton as Earl Marshal of England.

Duchess of Grafton.—Train of red velvet, old lace border, looped with pearls; blue brocade slip; black hat and feathers

Marchioness of Londonderry.—

Viscount Sidney.—Crimson velvet coat, embroidered with gold, diamond buttons; white satin waistcoat, embroidered with gold, and diamond buttons; black satin breeches, shoes, and diamond buckles

Countess of Jersey.—A magnificent cherry and gold brocaded skirt, trimmed with two flounces of old point and pearls, looped up with cherry roses and diamond centre; the upper skirt of rich damask green and gold, trimmed all round with old point and cherry roses; stomacher of diamonds; necklace of diamonds; powdered hair, diamond ornaments, and red feathers.

Lady Clementina Villiers.—A splendid costume in the Watteau style. A beautiful pink taffetas dress, trimmed with deep flounces of lace with wreaths of pink roses and green leaves, the upper skirt of green taffetas glace, trimmed with pink satin ribbon lace and pearls, looped up with garlands of pink roses; stomacher of lace and pink satin bows, powdered hair, with pearls and flowers.

Miss Burdett Coutts.—Body juste au corps and sack of satin vert de Chine; the sack releve with bouquets of pink and ponceau roses, wide hanging ruffles of vieux point de France; skirt of white brocade rehausse with designs en or mat et brilliant; sack of damask brocaded in vert de Chine enriched with gold, on a scarlet ground, releve with bunches of pink and ponceau roses and fine gold braid; the stomacher, sleeves, and all round the edge of the sack were profusely ornamented with diamonds and precious stones of the greates beauty; the diadem surmounting the powdered hair, the girandoles, the superb neck lace, fastened on velvet, were the cachet de l'heureuse heritiere. It is well-known the diadem and necklace, de si triste memoire, now in the possession of Miss Coutts, were originally the property of the unfortunate Marie Antoinette Marquis of Donegal (Uniform of the Austrian Hussars, 1745.—Jacket of scarlet cloth, with broad gold lace and gold braid: pelisse, blue cloth, braided, and ornamented with gold lace; ermine cuffs, collars, &c., lined with blue satin. Pantaloons, blue cloth, with broad gold lace and embroidery. Yellow Morocco boots, trimmed with gold lace and tassels. Richly chased gold sword. Sable cap, with red cloth bag, silver bullion line, with black and white Egret plume.

Her Excellency Madame Van der Weyer.—A light bodice and mantle in Pompadour damask brocade, festooned with bouquets of natural flowers; stomacher in blue and silver cloth, covered with Brussels point and diamonds: the skirt in cloth of silver glace blue, with a blue running pattern, trimmed with garlands of mixed roses and bows and quillings of deep rose-coloured ribbon

Marchioness of Ormonde.—A tight bodice and sacque, in brilliant cloth of silver, brocaded with Pompadour flowers and sparkling gold; stomacher of white satin, covered with point; ruffles of three rows of point; the sacque festooned with wreaths and bouquets of roses; the skirt of white satin, trimmed with a deep and ample flounce of old point, and headed by lilac and white ribbons; a cap in silver point, with a wreath of roses and streaming ribbons.

The Earl of Surrey.—Crimson velvet coat, trimmed with gold lace; blue and silver brocade satin waistcoat; crimson velvet breeches; shoes, and gold buckles.

Baroness Rothschild.—Tight bodice and tunic in amaranth satin, brocaded in gold; stomacher in white satin, covered with old point lace, and bows of ribbon; ruffles in three rows of point lace; the skirt in white satin, with two flounces of magnificent point lace, looped up in festoons, with amaranth-coloured ribbons; a Pompadour hat in amaranth velvet, and white feathers.

Lord Mandeville.—Crimson velvet coat, with gold lace; embrodered white satin waistcoat; black breeches; shoes, and gold buckles.

The Duchess of St. Albans.—(See our Journal of last week.)

Duchess of Sutherland.—A magnificent costume of the Court of Louis XV., adhered to with the most scrupulous exactitude. The petticoat was of rich white satin, embroidered with bouquets of flowers, and garnished along the skirt with roses of various hues, surrounded by rich antique lace, and looped with lilies of white velvet. The dress was of Chinese silver brocade, and the tour of blue and silver tissue, garnished with antique lace, roses and lilies, like the petticoat. The back of the dress a sac, the perruque, the train, in short, all the accessories of her Grace's costume, were strictly accurate, and was the theme of general admiration.

Viscount Castlereagh.—A magnificent dress of violet velvet, embroidered with gold, a white waistcoat embroidered with gold, and a hat ornamented with feathers and gold; diamond-hilted sword; diamond buttons for the garters; and the whole dress ornamented with a profusion of jewels.

His Grace the Duke of St. Albans (as Grand Falconer).—Coat of very rich Emerald green velvet, trimmed with extremely rich and wide gold lace with scolloped edges, with the oak-leaf introduced, and made expressly for this coat, lined with rich white satin, and buttons of gold work. On the left breast "The Hawk," suspended by the neck, from a massive gold chain. Waistcoat of richly brocaded gold on white satin, and buttons to match with those on the coat. Culotte of the same velvet as the coat, with buttons of gold work at the knee.

Lady Peel.—A tight bodice and sacque of splendid Pompadour damask satin, brocaded with flowers; the sacque festooned with bouquets of cherry-coloured laurel flowers; stomacher of cherry-coloured silk, covered with old point; ruffles in three rows of point, looped up with deep rose-coloured ribbon; the skirt in deep rose-coloured silk, with a broad flounce of Brussels point, headed by quilled ribbon of the same colour as the skirt, and festooned with bouquets of variegated cherry-coloured laurels.

Baroness Brunnow.—A very handsome Russian costume of the time of Elizabeth II.; a magnificent short train of cerise velvet, trimmed with gold and Russian Zibeline fur, over a most costly dress of brocaded white silk, embroidered all over with gold and flowering; stomacher of diamonds and precious stones. Head-dress, a crown of precious stones, and diamonds and pearls

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent.—White satin slip trimmed with handsome black lace and red ribbon. The front of the dress was decorated with elegant ornaments composed of diamonds and pearls, with a stomacher of diamonds The train was very magnificent, being formed of the richest brocade, embroidered with gold, and having alternate stripes of red, white, and gold The head dress was splendidly adorned with diamonds and emeralds. The necklace and earrings were composed of brilliants.

The Austrian Ambassadress.—Bright green satin, with gold and white flowers; pink skirt, covered with lace, and trimmed with pink

In closing our detail, we must not fail to give that credit which is so justly due to the various artistes engaged in preparing the above costumes. Messrs Roth and Freeman, of Old Bond street, were entrusted with the costume of the Prince Consort; and we believe we are correct in stating that it was carried out in all its details to his Royal Highness's complete satisfaction. Our thanks are specially due to Messrs. Roth and Freeman's courtesy for access to sketch several costumes. We should add that Mr. Melton, of Regent-street, manufactured the hat worn by his Royal Highness; and his shoes were made by Mr. Thomas, of St. James's-street.

The pattern of the costume fixed upon to be worn by the officers of the Guards was prepared by Messrs. Willis, of St. James's street. The buttons were manufactured by Mr. Shaw, of the Opera Arcade, Pall Mall, from the dies used in the reign of George the Second. Mr. Shaw also manufactured several fancy buttons of the same period.

The Illustration on the front page shows one of the superbly-enriched doorways of the Palace, with portions of the Green and Yellow Drawing Rooms, and the Sovereign and the illustrious guests promenading.

The large Engraving at page 376 shows the Throne Room, with the orchestra led by Musard, during the dancing of one of the "Queen's Minuets"

The next Illustration (page 377) shows the guests leaving the supper-table in the Great Dining Room; the buffet of magnificent plate being shown in the distance.

Lastly, upon the same page, is the picturesque old English dance of "Sir Roger de Coverley," in the Picture Gallery.

THE COURT COSTUME BALL
OF THE JUNE OF 1845,
AT THE PALACE OF VICTORIA THE FIRST OF ENGLAND.

Now—in the golden summer days of June,
When the Poor look for sunshine, and the cot
May warm its lowly roof let in the blaze
Which pours a splendour through the noble's hall,
And catch, upon its humbler hearth, a gleam
Of the one glory that is shed from Heaven!—
'Tis well for those who have the wealth and strength
Of world-prosperity, to borrow, too,
That love example which beams down from God,
And, with the brightest smiles of brotherhood,
Shed some of their earth splendour on the poor!

There is a blessing in this privilege
That wins, in gratitude, its glory back
Unto the giver, and reflects a joy
More precious than his bounty, so that when
The rich and poor exchange their happiness,
They feel one common sunshine of the heart!

Yet, to dissevered ranks—too widely spread
Asunder—each, too little knowing each—
How teach this mutual charm? When Duty fails
To hark betimes, while Sorrow vainly calls,
When Wealth feels too far off from Poverty,
To try the cordial journey to its door,
When the hid Labour cannot meet its Lord,
How make one lightning and electric spark
Vibrate the frame of both—one thrill of love
Warm the proud bosom and the poor man's heart;
Achieve an interchange of just delight,
And with this genial sunshine spread the sky?

That "how?" were, sure, most beautiful solve
A happy secret to reveal, and one
To wreathe disclosing lips with rays of joy!

The purest Governments are never perfect;
And Senates, with their high imposing councils,
And Parliaments, with their most subtle wisdom,
Statesmen, alive to every phase of ruling,
Nay, the best Sovereigns, who have lived and cared
Still more to bless than sway—all these have failed
To make most virtuous theories good in practice,
To forge fair love links 'twist the people's ranks
And equalize—among unequal elements—
The dear un-jealous happiness of all!

This still may be the Patriot's fond design,
And still will be his disappointment too!
But there are Social works that may be wrought
With far more efficacy than by Law,
And pour on Social evils far more balm!
Some kindly soul,—combining will with power,—
May with one episode of fond device
One wise-warm legislation of the heart,
Effect, in its brief interval, more good
Than the full session of a Nation's Year!
Call parted ranks together—bid them learn
The luxury of giving good for good,
And as they, glad, obey the fine command
Reap a reward in their united smiles!

'Twas such a thought of joy illumined all
The high soul of our Lady of the West—
The youthful radiance of Britannia's throne—
The good Victoria!—when she gave the word—
Melodious mandate of the music voice
That sang for all her people—to prepare
A pageant of unpeered magnificence—
A grand and dazzling festival of Court;
And realise, amid its light, a dream
All visionfull of poetry and love!
That dream, to gather round her glorious throne
All her realm's splendour in it's costliest garb—
The diamond-glitter and the stream of gold!
But not until their shining rills had well'd
Among the huts and cots of humbler life!
Making poor hearts—as her crown jewels—bright,
And cheerful spirits dance—to glad her more
Than all the stately Ball around her throne!
And feeling sure of comfort at the board
Of working thousands—ere she grandly gave
The feast of Pleasure to her gorgeous throng!

In the fair thought of that Imperial Ball,
Two pictures still were painted on her heart;
In one the pride of Regal Dignity!
In one the loyalty of humble Love!

So all those rich equipments which adorned
The lordly-presenced courtiers and high dames
Of proud resplendent beauty—still opposed
The lowlier contrasts of domestic life
In the pure sight of that most gentle Queen!
Here were Prince, Duke, Earl, Marquis, Lord, and then
The handicraftsmen who had coined their gear!
Here galaxied the ladies of her isle
In all their starry splendour;—there she saw
The meek, industrious daughters of our Trades,
Glad with their fast employ—and well she felt
How willing Labour, so inspired by Wealth,
Is a contenting and a wholesome boon
To Rich and Poor alike!
How many subjects
Looked brighter on that grand night-holiday?
How many rushed to throng the wondering streets—
Peered in the dazzling equipage—or pressed
On the palatial threshold, to behold
That glory worn which they had helped to weave!
How many—for that England's nobles danced
In antique fashions of a former time,
And blazed that night in an unused array—
Had money in the pocket, mirth at heart,
With happy families and food at home!
How many treasured their enjoyments, too,
In humble guise; and took the sweet reward
Of their late skill at the much-welcomed labour!
How had the mine been dug—the woof been worked,
The loom stirred briskly, and the metal forged?
All arts, all trades, and all intelligences,
Quick with fresh life and busiest energy!
What fertile powers of Fancy—fair evoked—
What might, thought, genius in the art-design—
What lore called upward from a buried age,
To fix its illustration upon this!
How the costumist revelled at his task!
How the historian marked his episode!
How the quick poet called upon his muse!
And how the painter sought with eye of truth
To catch the reflex for his pictur'd theme—
While Music strung her joyous harp the while,
As with thrilled wonder, to the enlivening dance,
And swept harmonious cadence over all!

It was a grand—a good—a pure design,
Worthy her grandeur, goodness, purity,
Who first conceived it: and our virtuous Queen
Has every virtuous blessing for the thought!

And more—besides that it endowed the poor
With somewhat of the fortune of the rich;
That it forced treasure to be loosed, and flow
Over the common country; that it made
Pride vie with Pride, and haught Magnificence
Self-emulous for all the people's good;
Set Peers and Princes lavish of their wealth,
And fair imperious Beauty throw away
Her shining gold that she might shine the more,—
It still fulfilled the purposes of love
Better than those of pride, and royally
Confirmed the splendour of Victoria's throne
For at her charmed word—a though a spell
Touched every spirit, and thrill'd through the land—
All England's high nobility obeyed,
With an elated readiness of heart,
And will that spoke their joy and their respect,
Their loyalty, their homage, and their love!
A Peerage starr'd a Palace, and without
One disaffected thought in all its heart!—
Few Palaces might such a gathering hold!
Few Sovereigns dare to think of such a boast!
Even Party shrank back to its restless den,
And politician foes could meet as friends
Beneath the broidery of their gay attire.
This was a good to work—a friendliness
To find its sweet array through the generous heart
Over old tracks of malice and of war!

And all the cheerful spirit of the scene
Was as pure lustrous to the human heart,
As its most gorgeous splendour to the eye!
The cordial frankness of high natures shone
As brightly as the jewels glittering round!
Dear Beauty's orbs were still more starry all
Than the quick diamonds; for they sparkled more,
And sent their dazzle farther than the sight!
And still the Queen, beside her Princely Lord,
Seemed not more dear as Sovereign than as Wife!
Or where Kent's Duchess smiled with conscious love,
Less dear as Child than Mother!
Or where the honoured Royalty of France
Graced her Imperial Throne—less fair and fond
In Regal hospitality of heart,
Than in the Queenly mien that gave it grace!

No more! The Poet need not pause to tell
The old historic tales which now have rung
Thro' the wide Empire; nor essay to wake
His muse to eloquence, to paint the scenes
Which now have reflex on our page of Art—
True, brilliant reflex!—
But we may not leave
The lyre unstrung from this most grateful theme
Without those blessings on Victoria's name,
For love which prompts her to beguile the thrall
Of Courtly state, and crown the joy of all
With the "Great Good" of such a Festival!

CHESS.

To Correspondents.—"Launcelot."—The first position to which you allude originally appeared on the wrapper of the "Chess Player's Chronicle." It is the invention of Mr. Bolton, and acknowledged to be the best three-move problem known. Place the pieces thus—White: King at Q Kt's sq, Queen at K R's 3rd, Kt at K 5th, Kt at Q B's 5th, Pawns at K R's 4th, K Kt's 3rd, K's 3rd, Q's 5th, Q Kt's 2nd, and Q R's 2nd. Black: King at his B's 3rd, Queen at K B's sq, R at Q R's sq, R at Q R's 2nd, Kt at Q Kt's 2nd, Pawns at K Kt's 2nd, K's 5th, and Q's 2nd. White to play, and mate in three moves.—The other problem mentioned is by Anderssen, of Breslau, and was published in the "Aufgaben für Schachspieler." The men stand thus—White: King at his R's 2nd, Queen at her B's 4th, R at Q R's sq, Kt at K's 7th, Pawns at K R's 3rd, and Q's 5th. Black: King at Q R's sq, Queen at K R's 4th, R at Q B's sq, Kt at K B's 5th, Kt at K's 7th, Pawns at K B's 2nd, K's 3rd, Q B's 2nd, Q Kt's 3rd, and Q R's 2nd. White, playing first, engages to mate in five moves.

"A. M. B." is cordially thanked for his attention.

"B. M. P.," Bognor.—The position of Stamma's, to which our correspondent alludes, is familiar to most chess-players. We shall be pleased to receive the observations on Philidor's games.

"Kilburn."—See the solution of No. 74, in our present No.

"J. W. B.," Kingsland.—Your suggestion, we fear, is impracticable, although we concur in thinking the best test of any one's skill at Chess is the result of his play with some leading player. There is no likelihood of the Gascon coming "to the scratch."

"G. M. W."—We have no leisure for the examination at present. Consult Dr. Hyde's "De Ludis Orientalibus," Hon. Daines Barrington and Sir Fred-rick Madden, in the First Volume of the "Chess Player's Chronicle," Singer's "Researches into the History of Playing Cards," and Twiss's "Collections on the Game of Chess."

"H. R.," Norwich; "T. R.," Horncastle; "J. H.," Woolwich; "H. P.," Newcastle; "Alpha," Cambridge; "S. S.," Truro; "W. F. F.," Worthing; "X. Y.," Brighton; "W. H.," Bruton-street; "A. M. B.; "T. B;" "R. M. D.;" "Athenian."—The solutions are correct.

"Juvenis."—Next week.

"Corbelle."—"E. M."

"Bristol," Amateur.—Your solution is right. Study the Elementary Lessons in the "Chess Player's Chronicle," or get Lewis's "First Series of Lessons on Chess."

"Kate Clifford," Aberdeen.—Thanks. The solutions are both correct.

"C. M.," E——.—Your solution is true. We shall take care to notice the newly-established Chess Club in Edinburgh.

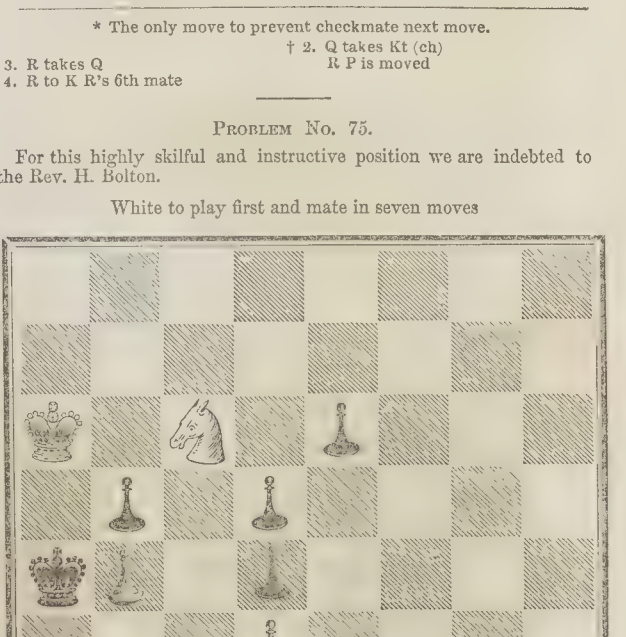
Solution to Problem No. 74.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R from K Kt sq takes B	Q to K Kt 2nd *
2. R to K Kt 5th sq	Q to K Kt 3rd or †
3. R from Kt 5th takes Q	P takes R
4. R takes K R P mate



* The only move to prevent checkmate next move.

† 2. Q takes Kt (ch)
3. R takes Q
R P is moved
4. R to K R's 6th mate

Problem No. 75.

For this highly skilful and instructive position we are indebted to the Rev. H. Bolton.

White to play first and mate in seven moves

WHITE.

OPENING OF THE NORTHAMPTON AND PETERBOROUGH RAILWAY.

THRAPSTON STATION.

OUNDLE STATION.

Last week, we were compelled, by pressure of other claims upon our illustration, to omit the promised engravings of this recently-opened line of Railway, which we now present to our readers.

This newly-constructed Branch Railway connects Peterborough with the main London and Birmingham Line at Blisworth. It was opened to the public on Monday, the 2nd instant, when a party of the Directors, accompanied by the Mayor, Corporation, and other inhabitants of Northampton, journeyed, in a train of fifteen first-class carriages, from Northampton to Peterborough (47¼ miles) in about two hours and a half, including stoppages of above 50 minutes. The progress of the train was a sort of spectacle for the people of the district through which the line passes; every station and village being crowded with wonder-struck gazers.

The prospective advantages of this Railway are stated to be of an important nature; and on this account, coupled with the architectural character of the principal stations, we have illustrated the line somewhat more copiously than usual. In the Northampton Mercury, we find the results of the Railway and the attractions of its locality thus glanced at:—

"Perhaps, few railways of similar length have effected a greater change than is likely to result from the Northampton and Peterborough branch. Peterborough has hitherto been less known to the inhabitants of the southern division of the county than places twice the distance in a different direction, and the strangeness is the consequence of the imperfect intercommunication. Yet Peterborough—to say nothing of it in the way of business—has attractions of no trifling order. Indeed, the entire line of country through which the Railway runs is an attractive one—a fertile, and, upon the whole, a favourable specimen of Northamptonshire scenery; while, to the archæologist, it would, perhaps, be impossible to point out a tract of country of the same extent equally abounding in objects of architectural interest. And if Peterborough, with its noble cathedral, Fotheringhay, with its memories of the unfortunate Queen of Scots, Oundle, Thrapston, Wellingborough, and the many intermediate villages whose spires and towers give character and beauty to the landscape, have attractions for the inhabitants of the county town, Northampton and its immediate neighbourhood can, in turn, boast of many objects to compensate for a visit from our brethren of the east. All parties, we do not doubt, will derive pleasure and benefit from the intercourse newly facilitated."

NORTHAMPTON STATION

The Northampton and Peterborough Railway branches from the main line about three quarters of a mile north of the Blisworth Station, and close to the Northampton branch of the Grand Junction Canal, which it crosses almost immediately. On the left, about a mile and a half distant, the first object worth notice is Gayton Church and Manor House; the latter reduced to the condition of a farm house, but still retaining the characteristics of the domestic architecture of Elizabeth and James I. Having crossed the canal, the railway is carried for a short distance along an embankment. On the right, Milton Church is a picturesque object against its rich back-ground of trees. It has a curious and very elegant circular window, and a low decorated spire. The Manor House is a picturesque specimen of Elizabethan architecture. On the left of the line as we approach the lock-house on the canal, may be seen, also amidst clustering trees, the very interesting saddle-backed tower of Rothersthorpe church: it possesses a campanile for a saint's bell, and a Norman font. Pursuing our route, on the right we see Huntsbury Hill, commonly known as the "Dane's Camp," but obviously an earth-work of a far more ancient date. On the left may be seen Upton Hall, bosomed in rich woods the tower of Dustan Church; and, directly before us, the town o. Northampton extending over the entire back-ground. Perhaps, the best view of the county town is gained just as we have swept round the curve below Huntsbury Hill, and approach the pretty little white canal bridge.

Beginning at the left of the panorama, we see the square tower of St. Andrew's; a little to the right rises the spire of St. Sepulchre; the green space between is the Castle Mound, below which is the West Bridge, spanning, with its many irregular arches, the Naseby branch of the Nen. Still a little further to the right, and on the horizon, a small turret is visible—the ventilator of the new Town Gaol. Lower down is the low square tower of St. Peter's; a little further on, the campanile of St. Katherine's; still to the right, rises the tower of All Saints'; and further on still, and against the horizon, is that of St. Giles. Descending the right hand slope, may be seen the upper part of the Infirmary, and in the extreme distance, in the same line, the Lunatic Asylum. The middle distance is occupied with the coal and corn warehouses, foundries, &c., on the banks of the river, and the river itself; and in the foreground lie rich meadows. We are now rapidly approaching the Northampton Station; and the only other objects to be noticed before we reach it, are two small tumuli on the left, and a building on the right, which, in its present modernised condition, would hardly attract attention, but which, a few months back, retained some very interesting architectural features. It was the old Manor House of Far Cotton, and the residence of the ancestors of the celebrated Hervey, who wrote the once popular "Meditations Among the Tombs." Nearly the whole of this section of the Railway, from its first departure from the main line till it crosses the Towcester road, and enters the premises of the Northampton Station, runs parallel with the canal.

LYNCH BRIDGE

NENE VIADUCT.

PETERBOROUGH STATION.

The Northampton Station is a very tasteful and commodious building. The booking offices are large and convenient, and the arrangements, interior and exterior, very complete. It is fitted up with engine-house, carriage and goods shed, cattle and sheep pens. To this Station there is a double line of rails; hence to Peterborough the line is a single one only.

Leaving the Northampton Station, the line runs along the rich meadows on the south bank of the Nen, having on the right the luxuriant woods of Delapré Abbey, and on the left, a south view of the town. Delapré, or as it was called, the Abbey of St. Mary de Pratis, was a religious house, founded in the reign of Stephen, by Simon de St. Liz, Earl of Northampton. It seems to have been a Nunnery 300 years; and, at the Dissolution, the Abbess and eight nuns had pensions assigned to them.

Following the course of the river, the line continues within sight of Great and Little Houghton. Clifford Hill is a conspicuous object on the left. It is a circular mound now crowned with trees, and encompassed by a wide and deep ditch; it is conjectured to be a Roman work, and to have been raised as a specula or watch-hill. Proceeding onward, Cooknoe mill on the left is a picturesque object; and the church of Cooknoe on the rising ground on the right, is a very interesting structure. Farther on, also on the hill, is Whiston Church, built in 1534, and an interesting specimen of late Ecclesiastical Architecture. Seven miles from Northampton, we reach a small station, at a place called White-mills, the communication with Castle Ashby, the embattled seat of the Marquis of Northampton, built in 1624, partly after designs by Inigo Jones. The beautiful tower of Earl's Barton Church on the left; then comes Doddington, and finally the Wellingborough (first class) station—another very tasteful structure abont a mile from the town. Between Wellingborough and Thrapston, a distance of 11 miles, there are 3 stations: Ditchford, booking-office; Higham Ferrers, and Ringstead. The spires of Stanwick, Higham Ferrers, and Raunds, are visible on the right; and on the left the Addingtons, Great and Little, add beauty to a beautiful landscape. Thrapston station stands in a very picturesque situation. Here again noble spires attract the eye, that of the neighbouring village of Islip especially.

Between Thrapston and Oundle, 7¾ miles, there are two stations, Thorpe and Barnwell. Aldwinckle All Saints, and Aldwinckle St. Peter's, which we now pass, are to be regarded with reverence, for the first had the honour of giving birth to the great John Dryden, the poet, and the latter was the birth-place of Thomas Fuller, the divine. The noble woods of Lilford Hall, the seat of Lord Lilford, are a little farther on the left. At Barnwell St. Andrew, which we pass soon afterwards on the right, are still the remains of a castle built in the reign of Henry I. Oundle, at which we have now arrived, is a first-class station, presenting the same tasteful aspect exhibited by the other principal stations on the line. Oundle Church, distinctly visible from the station, has a magnificent spire, and the town itself is spacious and striking. From Oundle to Peterborough, there are but two stations, Wansford and Overton. Here the country is rich in objects of archæological and historical interest. Fotheringhay, where the unhappy Mary, Queen of Scots, was beheaded, may be recognised by the mound on which once stood the castle. We now pass through the tunnel (¼ mile in length), the only one on the line. The Wansford Station, which is the station for Stamford, is an important one, and is fitted up with extensive cattle pens. The woods of Burleigh—are to be seen from it. Proceeding onward, we cross a neck of land in Huntingdonshire, and the Ermine-street. The line here takes rather a sharp curve. Castor, famous for its Roman remains; and the rich woods of Milton Park, the seat of Lord Fitzwilliam; attract the attention of the traveller, until finally, the glorious Cathedral of Peterborough indicates the termination of the journey. The Station here, which is in a very unfinished state, is not constructed by the London and Birmingham, but by the Eastern Counties Company.

"Burleigh House by Stamford town"—

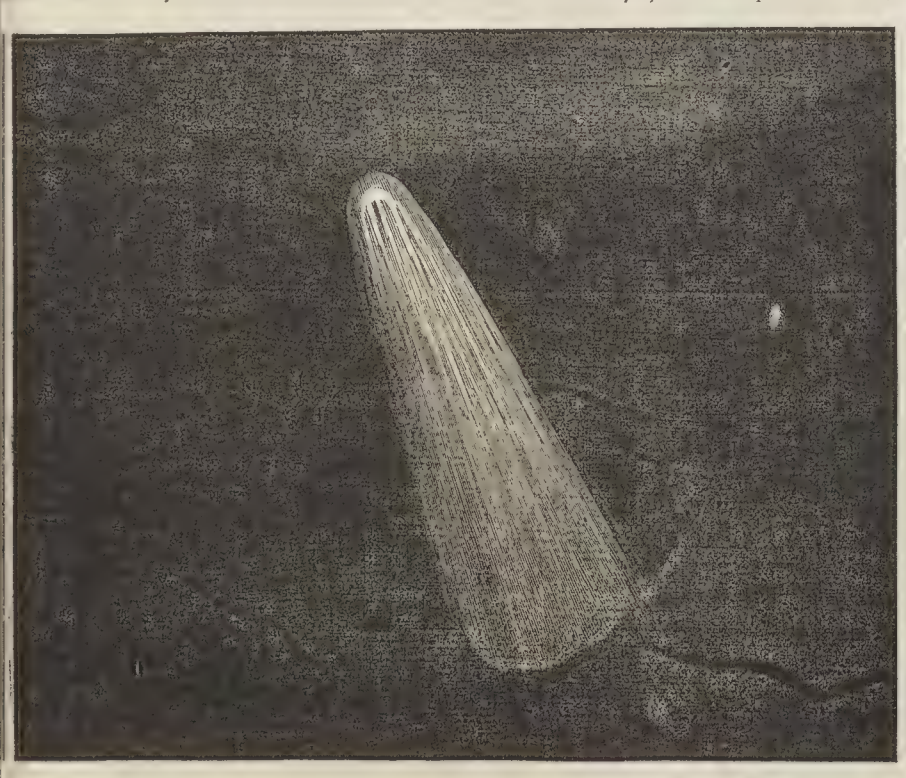
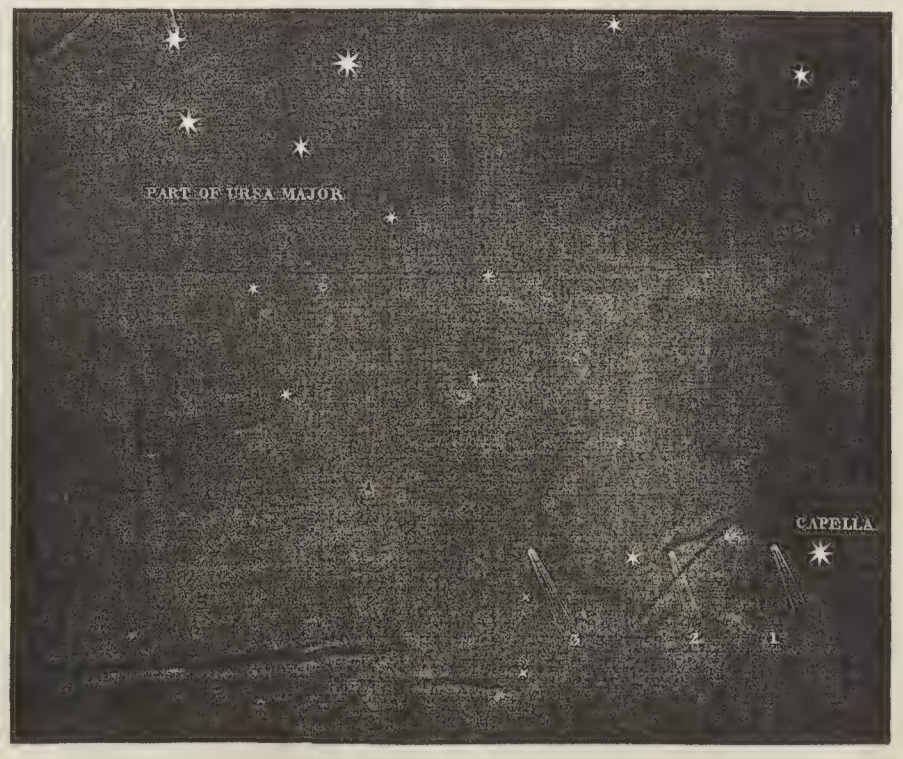
We need scarcely add to this glance at the line (abridged from the Northampton Mercury), that it abounds in picturesque variety; and we do not remember any line of equal interest to the archæological tourist.



Our Illustrations show—1. The Northampton Station, of pleasing design, in the old English style; the materials, red brick, with stone dressings. 2. and 3. The Oundle and Thrapston Stations: both are in the old English style; that at Thrapston is most embellished—the lower portion being stone, and the upper faced with ornamental plaster-work. 4. West View of Lynch Bridge, with Castor Bridge in the distance. 5. The Line crossing the River Nene. 6. The Station at Peterborough, completed.

MAGNIFICENT COMET.



A new Comet has just made its appearance in the heavens, and has been plainly visible to the naked eye. A gentleman named Jeays called the attention of Sir James South to this phenomenon at eleven o'clock on Sunday evening last. It was observed about the same hour by many persons in various parts of London; and Sir James South has received several letters, stating it to have been discovered as early as the Friday previous. It is a very fine comet; the nucleus being the brightest since that of the comet which appeared in 1825. To use the words of Sir J. South, "it looks like a golden spangle upon a lady's gauze dress." The tail is very long and widely spread, and of a pale misty blue; while the nucleus appears like burnished gold. It moves with extraordinary rapidity. When discovered, it was near the bright star Capella; but it is now several degrees westward of it. It will be found looking west of north, about eight or ten degrees above the horizon. At 31 minutes past eleven, on Sunday night, "its approximate right ascension was about 5 hours 18 minutes, and its north declination about 45 degrees 21 minutes;" at ten o'clock, it was west of north a few degrees; and at midnight was due north, its altitude about eight degrees.

As yet, little has been ascertained respecting this Comet: whether it is one which has made its periodical return, or whether it is its first appearance in our system, has not yet been decided. It is the opinion of the eminent astronomer, Sir J. South, that it is a new comet.

We have to record our thanks to Sir James for the very handsome manner in which he afforded our artist every facility for making the accompanying sketches by means of his very magnificent telescope, at his Observatory at Kensington.

THE COMET, AS IT APPEARED THROUGH THE TELESCOPE OF SIR J. SOUTH, ON THE NIGHT OF WEDNESDAY, JUNE 11TH.

THE POSITION OF THE COMET IN THE HEAVENS ON THE NIGHTS OF SUNDAY MONDAY, AND WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8TH, 9TH, AND 11TH.

IRELAND.

O'CONNELL DEMONSTRATION AT CORK.

The Cork Examiner contains a very long and animated account of the demonstration made when Mr. O'Connell entered that city on Sunday last. It is stated that half a million of persons were congregated on the occasion. The following statement is abridged from that journal:—

"About nine o'clock the various trades began to muster in their committee rooms, and then, preceded by bands and banners, they marched to the ground, formed into regular files, and kept that position, steady and unbroken, until the signal was given for moving. The head of the procession extended nearly two miles from the city on the western line of road, the last body being stationed on Patrick's-bridge.

"For miles the multitude pressed on in one dense stream, actually blocking up the roads.

"It is almost impossible to give any idea of the beauty and elegance of the triumphal car. Its extreme height was 20 feet, its length 12 feet, and its width 6 feet 6 inches. Its base presented the appearance of a large, handsome platform covered over with rich carpeting; and on the great platform, raised about four inches from its level, was a smaller platform for the gorgeous chair intended for the Liberator. Over the chair, and extending nearly the whole length and width of the car was raised a splendid canopy, supported by four allegorical figures—Justice holding the scales; Truth, with her mirror; Prudence and Fortitude. Immediately under each figure, and adorning the sides of the car, were handsomely carved and highly-ornamented scrolls. Under the figure of Fortitude the motto—'Eight millions—love of country will overcome everything.' Under Justice—'Self-government, and nothing less. We know our duty, and are resolved.' Under Truth—'English friendship—Carthaginian faith! It is the nature of man to hate whomsoever he has injured.' Prudence—'Agitation—formerly we conquered by these arms.' Immediately in front of the car was a large white scroll, with the following memorable inscription:—

"'A claim of any body of men than the King, Lords, and Commons of Ireland, to make laws to bind this kingdom, is unjust, illegal, and a grievance!

"'Dungannon, 15th Feb., 1782.'

"The procession filed past the car, and as each body passed along, the banners were lowered, hats were waved, cheers were given, and the band struck up a good Protestant tune, the 'Volunteers' March,' or 'See the Conquering Hero comes.' At length the long line, which commenced moving from the Cross at one o'clock, had passed, and it was not until after four o'clock that the car was put in motion. Every wall was crowded with gaily-dressed men and women, and as Mr. O'Connell appeared, the latter seemed to exceed their male companions in the excess of their enthusiasm.

"The scene on entering into Patrick-street surpassed in reality the utmost efforts of description. Walls, windows, balconies, house-tops, the rigging of the vessels lying next the bridge, every place which could afford a footing, however precarious, was crowded with myriads of human beings, presenting a sea of anxious faces, reaching from the level ground to the highest elevation within view. The Chamber of Commerce was thronged by the members, who cordially greeted Mr O'Connell from the windows, and commanded the cortège, so as to prevent stopping or interruption. The whole appearance of the city was striking in the extreme.

"The triumphal car having stopped at the entrance of the Commercial Buildings, a harper, surrounded by the chivalry and clothed in the costume of ancient Ireland, stood up under the shade of his native oak, and in a clear, distinct, and impressive tone, read from a parchment scroll, on which it was most beautifully inscribed, and embellished with the arms of Mr. O'Connell, an address in the vernacular tongue."

It was couched in very flowery language, as the following extracts will attest:—

"Yes, fearless son of the West, Dan of the hundred bloodless battles—strong as the emancipated eagle after an unjust imprisonment of 100 days in the cause of your country—firm in resolve as the rocks of Darrynane, thy mountain home—the true-hearted sons and daughters of Corcagia hail thee with a hundred thousand welcomes.

"May your days be happy and long numbered, and while your friends increase, and your enemies are confounded, may the ardent yearnings of your soul for Erin's welfare and regeneration be crowned with success. May the foul Union, conceived in crime, and achieved by bribery and blood for our enslavement and degradation, be blotted away; and while the young and the old, the prince and the peasant, the priest and the people, echo back the loud shout of Repeal, may the unsullied name of O'Connell, enshrined in the hearts of a happy and emancipated race, be handed down with éclat and glory to our children's children, as the talisman of success and the watchword of liberty."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—On MONDAY, JUNE 16, and during the Week, the Popular National Military Drama of the BATTLE OF WATERLOO, introducing the Double Company of French and English Artistes. The Emperor Napoleon, by Mr Gomersal, who is engaged expressly for this occasion. New Scenes in the Circle, presenting the first talent of British and Foreign Equestrians of the present day. To conclude with the new Grand Pantomimic Spectacle (which has proved so eminently successful) of the GREEK RENEGADE. By particular desire, a Grand MORNING PERFORMANCE on THURSDAY, JUNE 19, commencing at 2 o'clock, and terminating at 4 o'clock.

BAL MASQUE AT VAUXHALL GARDENS. — A GRAND MASQUERADE and CARNIVAL AL FRESCO, will take place at Vauxhall on MONDAY NEXT, the 16th inst., under the direction of the celebrated M. Musard, from Paris who had the honour of conducting her Majesty's Bal Costume at Buckingham Palace. The Band on this occasion will consist of One Hundred Performers; and the music, dances, and costume, will be the same as at the Queen's Ball. Gentlemen's tickets, 10s.; Ladies' tickets, 5s.; to be had of Mr. Nathan, costumier to the Gardens, Castle-street, Leicester square; at all the principal masquerade warehouses, libraries, and music sellers; and at the Gardens.—Doors open at Ten o'clock.

M. MUSARD at VAUXHALL GARDENS.—On MONDAY next, JUNE 16, a Grand Masquerade. On Wednesday, a Magnificent Gala in celebration of the Battle of Waterloo; and on Friday, a brilliant Fete in honour of her Majesty's Accession to the Throne.—PROMENADE CONCERTS, each Evening, under the direction of the celebrated M. Musard, from Paris.—Band of One Hundred Performers.—Extraordinary Illuminations! 20,000 lamps, and grand display of Fireworks. Vocal Concert—Re-engagement of Miss Louisa Lyons. A new Ballet—Golden Temple of Honan—Villa d'Este at Tivoli—Eruption of Mount Etna—Italian Walk—Joel II Diavoli's terrific descent with Fireworks.—Refreshments at Tavern prices.

Admission, 2s; Children, Half-price. Commence at Eight o'clock.—Admission to the Ball-room, 1s. Smoking strictly prohibited. Master of the Ceremonies, Mr. Widdicomb.

BENEDICT'S MORNING CONCERT, on MONDAY NEXT, the 16th of JUNE, when all the most eminent talent now in London will appear. The Programme is now ready. Doors open at a Quarter before One o'Clock; Concert to commence at Half-past One precisely. Early application for the few Reserved Seats and Tickets is respectfully solicited—at all the principal Musicsellers' and Libraries, and of M. Benedict, 2, Manchester-square.

ROYAL DISPENSARY FOR DISEASES OF THE EAR, Dean-street, Soho-square.

PATRON, THE QUEEN.

A GRAND FETE CHAMPETRE and MORNING CONCERT, under Distinguished Patronage, will be held, by kind permission, in the COUNTESS DE ZICHY FERRARI'S GROUNDS, REGENT'S PARK (formerly the late Marquis of Hertford's), on THURSDAY, the 19th of JUNE, 1845, in Aid of the Charity.

Tickets, 5s. each, may be had at the Dispensary, and at the principal Libraries and Musicsellers. On the day of the Fete the tickets will be charged 10s. each.

Royal Dispensary, June 11, 1845.

CREMORNE HOUSE AND GARDENS, King's-Road, Chelsea.—Mr. LITTLEJOHN, late of the Rosherville Gardens, Gravesend, and King William-street, City, has the honour to announce that he will open the Tavern, Park, and Gardens of Cremore, for the Season, with a THREE DAYS' FETE, entitled "The Feast of the Forest, a Sherwood Pic Nic," on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, June 23d, 24th, and 25th. Mr. Green will ascend in his Monster Nassau Balloon, accompanied by ten ladies and gentlemen. Admission, One Shilling. Cremorne House can be reached from any part of town by Omnibus for Sixpence, by Steam-boat for Fourpence. After the Fete the admission to the Gardens and Entertainments will be reduced to Sixpence.

Steam-boat Companies are respectfully informed that a safe and convenient Pier is in course of erection, and will be opened on the occasion of the Fete, for landing passengers at the river entrance to the Gardens.

SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The FORTY-FIRST ANNUAL EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, at their Gallery, 5, Pall Mall East, each day, from Nine till Dusk. Admittance, One Shilling. Catalogue, Sixpence. J. W. WRIGHT, Secretary.

CAPTAIN SIBORNE'S WATERLOO MODELS.—In a few days will be EXHIBITED, at the EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, Captain Siborne's Original LARGE MODEL of the BATTLE OF WATERLOO, representing, on a surface of 420 square feet, the entire Field, with the hostile Armies, as they were disposed and engaged at the moment when the illustrious Wellington, with his British troops, defeated Napoleon's Imperial Guard, and thereby gained one of the most splendid victories on record. This Model has not only been re painted, and otherwise renovated and improved, but has also been corrected, as regards the Prussian co-operation, so as to make it correspond in every particular with the description of the Battle given in Captain Siborne's "History of the Waterloo Campaign." The other Model, representing the Glorious CHARGE by the BRITISH CAVALRY, led by the Marquess of Anglesey, and the BRITISH INFANTRY, by Sir Thomas Picton, in the immediate presence of the Immortal Wellington, will continue as hitherto, that all admirers of British valour may behold this very faithful representation of one of the most brilliant actions recorded in history. Captain Siborne, finding that a desire has been expressed that those Models should be placed in some public institution, takes this opportunity of stating that he is willing to dispose of them; and, should it be desired, of those also (partly constructed) which are intended to illustrate the other prominent parts of the Battle, such as the Grand Charge on the British Squares, &c.

HIS R. H. the PRINCE of WALES, by gracious permission of her Majesty, from the picture of Winterhalter at Windsor Castle. The HOUSE of BRUNSWICK at ONE VIEW; George I., George II., George III., George IV., William IV., Queen Charlotte, Queen Caroline, Princess Charlotte, Coburg, Dukes of York, Kent, Cambridge, Sussex, &c., the Robes of George IV., restored, the British Orders of the Garter, Bath, Thistle, St. Patrick. The National Group, Mr. Cobden, and Tom Thumb. "This is one of the best sights in the metropolis."—The Times. Open from 11 till 10 at night.—Admittance One Shilling; Napoleon Rooms, Sixpence.—MADAME TUSSAUD and SON'S Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square.

ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, Daily at Work, carrying visitors, at the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—This interesting Model is Lectured on by Professor Bachoffner, at One o'Clock, Daily; also, on the Evenings of Wednesdays and Fridays, at Eight o'Clock; and on the Evenings of Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday, at nine o'clock. The Working of the Model always follows the Lecture. It is also worked at Four o'Clock, and at other convenient times.—The other interesting Works and Popular Lectures as usual. Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public are respectfully informed, that a renewed Engagement has been effected, by which the Talent of the DANSEUSES VIENNOISES will be secured by five more Representations, the first of which will take place on TUESDAY next, the 17th instant, and the second on THURSDAY, the 19th.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Madame GRISI has the honour to inform her Friends, the Subscribers to the Opera, and the Public, that her BENEFIT will take place on THURSDAY next, June 19, when will be performed Rossini's Opera Seria, OTELLO. Desdemona, Madame Grisi; and Emilia, Madame Bellina; Elmiro, Signor Lablache; Iago, Signor Fornasari; Rodrigo, Signor Corelli; Il Doge, Signor Dal Fiori; and Otello, Signor Mario. The Danseuses Viennoises, whose talent has been secured for five more nights, will appear in some of their most admired Pas. To be followed by a variety of attractive Entertainments, in which will appear Mdlle Cerito, Mdle. Lucile Grahn, Mdlle. Ferdinand, Mdlle. Moncelet, Mdlle. Cassin, Mdlle. Demelisse, and Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi (her last appearance but four); M. St. Leon, M Di Mattia, M. Gosselin, and M. Perrot.—Applications for Boxes, Pit Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera-colonnade.—Doors open at seven, and the Opera will commence at half-past seven o'clock.

M. JULLIEN'S CONCERT MONSTRE. — SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, FRIDAY, JUNE 20.—M. JULLIEN has the honour to announce to the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, that he intends giving a grand CONCERT MONSTRE, on FRIDAY, JUNE 20 (being the commemoration day of the Accession of her Majesty), on the same scale of grandeur as those given in Paris, at the Jardin Turc, Casino, and Champs Elysees, in celebration of the Fete of Louis Philippe, and other great occasions, as conducted by M. Jullien. The Orchestra will consist of 300 Instrumental Performers, embracing all the principal Instrumental English and Foreign Artistes at that moment in the Metropolis, forming an ensemble never before seen, and presenting the greatest Congress Musicale ever assembled, and never before heard in England. And, in order to give full effect to this grand Musical Entertainment, which M. Jullien trusts will be pronounced unequalled by anything of the kind ever attempted, he has decided to erect a Colossal Orchestra at the south extremity of the Gardens, where has been opened, this season, an extensive Promenade, which will enable 12,000 persons to hear this gigantic musical effect. The programme will be shortly published, and further particulars announced. Tickets taken previous to the 20th instant, 2s. 6d. Admission on the day to the Concert, 5s. Tickets to be obtained at the principal Libraries, Music-sellers, and of M. JULLIEN, Depot General de Musique Dansante, 214, Regent-street.

CHARITABLE and PROVIDENT SOCIETY for the DEAF and DUMB.—The NINTH ANNIVERSARY DINNER of the Subscribers and Friends of this Society will take place at the ALBION TAVERN, Aldersgate-street, on THURSDAY, the 17th of JUNE, 1845, at Six o'Clock, J. S. BUCKINGHAM, Esq., in the Chair.

J. P. MARGETTS, Assistant Secretary.

ST. MARY'S MARYLEBONE and PADDINGTON HOSPITAL.—The Acting Committee have the pleasure to announce to the Subscribers and Friends of the intended Hospital, that his ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT has fixed SATURDAY, the 28th Instant, at 3 o'clock P.M., to lay the FOUNDATION STONE.—Application for Tickets of Admission to the Ceremony to be made on or before the 20th inst., addressed to "The Committee of Arrangement," at the Committee-room, 21, Edgware-road.

6th June, 1845. W. TATHAM, Hon. Sec.

ALE! ALE! ALE!—Best, brightest, purest, and most in esteem by Connoisseurs, to be had in Eighteen or Nine Gallon Casks, at One Shilling per Gallon, by addressing to the JOHN BULL BREWERY. Office, 20, Philpot-lane, City. Conveyed, free, to any part of London.

NOTICE. BOLTON HOUSE, TURNHAM GREEN.—Mr. J. G. DYNE'S ANNUAL EXAMINATION of his PUPILS, at the MUSIC HALL STORE-STREET, RUSSELL SQUARE, is unavoidably POSTPONED from MONDAY, the 16th, to FRIDAY, the 20th inst.—Parties desirous of attending, are requested to address the Principal, as above.—Bolton House, June 8th, 1845.

DANCING.—LESSONS in the MAZURKA, CELLARIUS VALS., POLKA, and VALSE a DEUX TEMPS, as taught by Cellarius), by Mr WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons at all hours to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age, wishing privacy and expedition. An Evening Class on Mondays and Fridays. Terms may be had on application as above.

BED FEATHERS, Duty Free:—

Best White Dantzic	2s. 10d.	Best Foreign Greys	2s. 0d.
Irish Whites	2s. 0d	Irish Greys	1s. 6d.
Best ditto	2s 6d.	Best ditto	1s. 9d.

HEAL and SON, 196, Tottenham-court-road, opposite the Chapel.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d stamp

A SET of THREE PAPIER MACHE TEA TRAYS, 30s.—R. and J. SLACK, 336, Strand, opposite Somerset House, are now offering the most elegant assortment of Trays in London at prices 30 per Cent. under any other house. Their Book, containing drawings and prices of every article in Furnishing Ironmongery, may be had gratis, or sent to any part, post-free.—Established 1818

STUCCO FRONTED HOUSES THAT WANT PAINTING.—The only Paint expressly invented and adapted for this purpose is—JOHNS and CO.'S PATENT STONE COLOUR STUCCO PAINT: it is far better for Stucco Work than White Lead—is much more durable and less costly—its colour is that of pure Bath stone.—MANN and Co., Agents for the Patentees, 5, Maiden-lane, Queen-street, Cheapside.

WEST INDIA PINE-APPLES.—Messrs. J. and J. ADAM will SELL by AUCTION, at their Sale-room, 11, Pudding-lane, Lower Thames-street, on Monday 16th June, at 3 o'clock precisely, the First Importation this year of PINE-APPLES, viz., about 1000 New Providence Pines. In fine condition. Just landed, per the West India Mail Steamer "Thames," in 20 days from Nassau.—To be viewed on the morning of sale, and Catalogues had of J. and J. ADAM, Brokers, 11, Pudding-lane.

SCHWEPPE'S SODA and other ALKALINE WATERS continue to be manufactured as usual, upon the largest scale, at their several establishments, and to maintain their supremacy over all others. Each bottle has its proper proportion of alkali; but, to prevent imposition, consumers are earnestly requested to ascertain that a label with their NAME is over the cork of each bottle of soda water, and a label on each bottle of lemonade and potass water. Schweppe's Liquid Magnesia is of the finest quality, and is strongly recommended as a cure for gout, acidity of the stomach, &c., by the first London Physicians.—51, Berners-street, London.

TO RENDER THE COMPLEXION BEAUTIFUL AND CLEAR, USE HALFORD'S COSMETIC.—This delightfully refreshing preparation, recommended by the late Sir Henry Halford (Physician to the Royal Family), for eradicating all eruptions of the skin, and rendering the complexion beautiful and clear, and for removing the unpleasant odour of perspiration, is sold, Wholesale and Retail, by HUGH CUNNINGHAM, 193, Strand, London: and Retail by all respectable Perfumers, Chemists, and Booksellers throughout the Kingdom, in Packets at 2s 9d. each, and Half-pint Bottles 4s. each.—The Packets transmitted post free, on receipt of 33 Postage labels.

REAL and ECONOMICAL LUXURIES for WARM or HOT WEATHER.—The attention of those who feel the inconvenience and inconsistency of wearing the same clothing in the Hottest, as in the Coldest weather, is invited to BERDOE'S LIGHT SUMMER WATERPROOF FROCKS, OVER COATS, &c., to wear either with, or in lieu of, another coat, for which they will prove most agreeable substitutes. These well known and gentlemanly garments are made in the best manner—equally free from vulgarity and singularity; are guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and no untried novelty, having been in extensive use among the respectable classes more than six years. A Large Stock of First-rate Garments, in Llama Cloths and other new and greatly admired materials (manufactured expressly for W. B.) kept to select from, of which an inspection is confidently invited—Made only by W. BERDOE, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill, (North side)

OLD PATTERNS BRUSSELS CARPETS.—Ladies who do not object to purchase Carpets of last year's designs have now an opportunity of selecting from upwards of 1000 pieces of magnificent dining and drawing room BRUSSELS CARPETS, at a considerable reduction from the original prices. Thus the richest qualities, Comber patterns, original price 5s. 9d. and 6s. 6d per yard, will be sold at 3s. 9d. to 4s. 3d per yard; three-threads reduced from 4s. 9d. to 3s. 6d., and good medium Brussels, 2s. 4d. to 2s. 9d. per yard; several hundred pieces of velvet pile. Axminster and Kidderminster carpets; strong yard-wide carpets for common use, 2½d. per yard; tabarets, chintzes, satin, and washing damasks. The above goods are now for inspection at the National Linen Company's Warehouses, 105, Fleet-street, corner of Farringdon-street.

IMPOSTORS!—Rheumatic Pains, Weakness, Contractions of the Limbs, Deformity, and Spinal Affections.

CABBURN'S OIL having been so generally successful in the kingdom and various parts of the world, particularly in India (from whence reports have recently been made by persons of high distinction, as to the restoration of children and adults, even when given over by the faculty), has induced unprincipled persons not only to attempt depreciating, but some to counterfeit the same to prevent which, all his bottles are now sealed with the patent metallic capsules, with the words "Cabburn's Oil, for Rheumatism, &c," being on the top of the capsule, over the cork.

Cases of importance to the afflicted, as to cures, may be seen in the Dispatch, Bell's Life, Lloyd's, and the Sunday Times, June 1, 1845, and reports from Medical Dispensaries in Bradshaw's Railway Guide. A book of information to the afflicted will be forwarded (gratis) to any person sending two post stamps, to free the same, by directing to Mr. Cabburn's Dispensary No. 1, King's-cross, London.

N.B.—Ask for Cabburn's Oil, for the cure of Rheumatism; to be had of medicine vendors, in bottles, 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—Every description of assurance may be effected with this Society, and policies are granted on the lives of persons of all ages.

Table of Premiums for Assuring £100 on a Healthy Life.

Age.	For One Year only.			For Seven Years at an Annual Payment.			For 14 Years at an Annual Payment of
	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
25	1	1	0	1	2	2	1	3	8
30	1	2	1	1	4	1	1	6	1
35	1	5	2	1	7	2	1	9	3
40	1	8	9	1	10	4	1	13	6
45	1	12	2	1	14	8	2	1	0
50	1	16	11	2	3	10	2	13	11

The sum accumulated and invested, for the security and benefit of the assured, already exceeds half a million sterling; and the income, which is steadily increasing, is now £101,500 per annum.

Bonuses.—The two first divisions averaged £22 per cent. on the premiums paid. The third bonus, declared in January 1842, averaged £28 per cent.; and the future bonuses are expected to exceed that amount.

Further information may be obtained of GEORGE H. PINCKARD, Actuary, 73, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London; or of any of the Society's agents.

SAVING OF SILVER AND LABOUR.

FOR CLEANING GOLD and SILVER PLATE INSTANTANEOUSLY, without wearing the precious metals in the slightest degree.—JONES'S SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, a new chemical discovery, recommended by the eminent Chemist, Andrew Ure, M.D., F.R.S., &c., and sold in half pint, pint, and quart bottles, at 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s.

The following letters at once establish the usefulness of this new discovery:—

"I have examined the preparation invented by Messrs. JONES, for cleaning silver, called SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, and find it to be safe, effectual, and instantaneous in its operation. Being founded on chemical principles, it merely removes the tarnish on plate, and restores the white silver lustre without abrading or wearing the precious metal itself in the slightest degree. "ANDREW URE, M.D., F.R.S., &c.

"Professor of Chemistry and Analytical Chemist.

"London, 13, Charlotte-street, Bedford-square, March 8th, 1845."

"Gentlemen—We have now given your valuable discovery a fair trial, and have no hesitation in saying it is the best compound we have ever tried for cleaning Gold and Silver WITHOUT FRICTION OR WEARING AWAY THE METAL, and shall accept the agency for its sale with great pleasure. (Signed) "RIPPON and BURTON, Furnishing Ironmongers.

"Oxford-street, May 22nd, 1845."

Caution.—Every genuine Bottle of this Compound is protected by the Stamp and Address of the only Inventors and Makers, "JONES and CO., LIGHT HOUSE, 201, Strand, London." Sold wholesale by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Sutton and Co., and Edwards and Co., London; and retail by Sangar, Oxford-street; Johnson, Cornhill; Jones and Co. 201, Strand; and Rippon and Burton, Oxford-street.

Just published, the fourth edition, post 8vo., cloth, 7s. 6d.,

VESTIGES of the NATURAL HISTORY of CREATION. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

Just published, fcp., 8vo., cloth, 12s. 6d.

A MANUAL of CHYMISTRY, with numerous Illustrations on Wood. By GEORGE FOWNES, Ph.D., Lecturer on Chymistry at the Middlesex Hospital, &c. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes street, Soho.

Just published, post 8vo., cloth, 4s.,

PRACTICAL NOTES on INSANITY. BY JOHN BURDETT STEWARD, M.D., Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, &c. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes street, Soho.

Just published, the third edition, with much new matter, 8vo., cloth, 15s.,

CHYMISTRY, Meteorology, and the Function of Digestion, considered with reference to Natural Theology; being the Bridgewater Treatise. By WILLIAM PROUT, M.D., F.R.S.—London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

Just published, post 8vo., cloth, 9s.,

HUMAN MAGNETISM; its Claims to Dispassionate Inquiry. Being an attempt to show the utility of its application for the Relief of Human Suffering. By W. NEWNHAM, Esq., M.R.S.L. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

MR. MACILWAIN'S NEW WORK.—Just published, 8vo., cloth, 5s.,

ON TUMOURS; their General Nature and Treatment. By GEORGE MACILWAIN, Consulting Surgeon to the Finsbury Dispensary, &c. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes street, Soho.

Just published, 8vo., cloth, 6s.,

ON the NATURE and TREATMENT of TIC DOULOUREUX, Sciatica, and the other Neuralgic Disorders. By HENRY HUNT, M.D., Member of the Royal College of Physicians, London.—London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

Just published, post 8vo., cloth, 6s.,

ON THE DISEASES MOST FATAL TO CHILDREN. With Reference to the Propriety of Treating them as proceeding from Irritation and not from Inflammation. By PETER HOOD, General Practitioner in Medicine and Surgery. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

Just published, post 8vo., cloth, 4s.,

ON SOME EXHAUSTING DISEASES, particularly those incident to Women. By SIR JAMES EYRE, M.D., Physician at the St George's and St James's Dispensary, &c.—"We recommend an attentive perusal of this little essay."—Medical Gazette. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

Just published, illustrated with 300 Wood cuts, 2nd Edit., fcap. 8vo., cloth, 12s. 6d.,

ELEMENTS OF NATURAL PHILOSOPHY; being an Experimental Introduction to the Study of the Physical Sciences. By GOLDING BIRD, A.M., M.D., F.L.S., F.G.S.—London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

ACTONIAN PRIZE ESSAY.—Just published, post 8vo., cloth, 6s.,

CHYMISTRY, as Exemplifying the Wisdom and Beneficence of God. By GEORGE FOWNES, Ph.D., Lecturer on Chymistry in the Middlesex Hospital Medical School. This work obtained the Prize of 100 guineas awarded by the Committee of the Royal Institution of Great Britain. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

Just published, post 8vo., cloth, 8s. 6d.,

DR. MARSHALL HALL'S PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS and SUGGESTIONS in MEDICINE; embracing the Prevention of Sudden and Insidious Diseases of the Head, of Paralysis, of Hydrocephalus, of Phthisis, and other forms of Consumption, the Nervous System, Sterility, Caustica, Gout, Intestinal Irritation, &c. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

Just published, post 8vo., cloth, 5s. 6d.,

THE REMEDIAL INFLUENCE of OXYGEN, Nitrous Oxyde, and other Gases, Electricity, and Galvanism. This Work is consonant with Liebig's views of oxydizing the blood to prevent vitiated and restore healthy secretions of the liver and kidneys—functions of paralyzed parts, organs of sense, respiration, digestion—dispersion of obesity, gout, and rheumatism. By EVANS RIASDORE, M.D., F.L.S London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes street, Soho

Just published, second edition, in one thick volume of 800 pages, 8vo., cloth 14s.,

THE CYCLOPÆDIA of PRACTICAL RECEIPTS, and Collateral Information in the Arts, Manufactures, and Trades, including Medicine, Pharmacy, and Domestic Economy: designed as a compendious book of reference for the manufacturer, tradesman, amateur, and heads of families. By ARNOLD JAMES COOLEY. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes street, Soho.

Just published, 8vo., cloth, 8s.,

ON DISEASES of the HEART, and on ANEURISM; their Diagnosis, Prevention, and Treatment. By J. J. FURNIVALL, M.D., Member of the Royal College of Physicians in London, Physician to the Infirmary, Charter-house-square, &c. "It appears to us that few writers have appreciated so justly the real characters and tendencies of cordiac affections, and the rational plan upon which they should be treated."—Medical Gazette. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho

Just published, post 8vo., cloth, 7s. 6d., illustrated with a Map, geologically coloured,

THE CLIMATE of the SOUTH of DEVON, and its Influence upon Health; with Short Accounts of Exeter, Torquay, Teignmouth, Dawlish, Exmouth, Sidmouth, &c. By T. SHAPTER, M.D., Physician to the Exeter Dispensary, &c. "This volume is far more than a guide-book. It contains much statistical information, with very minute local details, that may be advantageously consulted by the medical man before he recommends any specific residence in Devonshire to his patient."—Athenæum. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

HARE ON SPINAL DISEASE.

This Day is Published, Price 2s. 6d.,

CASES and OBSERVATIONS illustrative of the Beneficial Results which may be obtained by close attention and perseverance, in some of the most Chronic and unpromising instances of Spinal Deformity. By SAMUEL HARE M.R.C.S.—London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street; and may be had of all Booksellers.,

Just published, Second Edition, enlarged, Price Six Shillings,

PULMONARY CONSUMPTION successfully treated with NAPHTHA, with Cases by other Medical Men in support of that treatment, &c. By JOHN HASTINGS, M.D., Senior Physician to the Blenheim-street Free Dispensary. "If experience proves the correctness of these statements, Dr. Hastings will be a benefactor to the human race."—Dr. Johnson's Medical Review. London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT to EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.

SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; CARVALHO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

FOR NOTHING.—A PAMPHLET on NERVOUSNESS, with Testimonials—The Nervous are respectfully invited to send to the Rev. Dr. WILLIS MOSELEY, 9, Bloomsbury street, Bedford-square, for the small pamphlet just published, on his most successful TREATMENT of NERVOUS or MIND COMPLAINTS, by which he cures these diseases as certainly as water quenches thirst, and which pamphlet he will return, if a stamp is sent, free of charge.

DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION OF HER MAJESTY, TO THE PRINCESS ROYAL,

FLOWERS of the MATIN and EVEN SONG; or, Thoughts for those who Rise Early. By MARY ROBERTS. Author of "Ruins and Old Trees," &c. With coloured Illustrations. Fcap.8vo., price 5s, cloth, gilt edges.

"This is a charming volume. Botanical characteristics, rural descriptions, English home feelings, poetry, anecdote, and story, are all agreeably intermingled. The subjects are those simple wild flowers that open in the morning and close towards the evening."—Spectator. GRANT and GRIFFITH, Successors to J. Harris, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

TO AMATEURS OF CHESS.

On the 1st of June was published, price 1s., No. 6, Volume 6, of

THE CHESS PLAYER'S CHRONICLE, containing original Games and Problems by the most distinguished Players of the day; a complete Report of the Anniversary Dinner of the Yorkshire Chess Players; an Account of the Great Chess Match between France and England, by T. J. Bryan, Esq.; an Article on the Chinese and Hindoo Methods of playing the Game: some particulars touching the late game of Chess by Telegraph, &c. &c. &c. The five volumes of this highly-popular and interesting Magazine, which have previously appeared, are acknowledged to contain by far the largest and most valuable collection of Chess varieties ever brought together. In addition to Articles by the best authorities illustrative of the History and Antiquities of the Game, Anecdotes and Biographical Notices of eminent Players, Miscellaneous Information of every description relative to Chess and its Votaries, there will be found in these volumes about 2000 Games and Problems the greater part of which have never before been published, by Philidor, Des Chappelles Mc Donnell, Lewis, La Bourdonnais, Cochrane, Staunton, Heydebrant, Bledow, Kieseritzki Ghulam, Kassim, Petroff, Jaenish, &c. &c. &c.

London: R. HASTINGS, 13, Carey-street, Lincoln's Inn; and of all Booksellers in Town and Country.

CHEAP VOLUME FOR POPULAR READING.

On the 20th of June will appear

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND MAGAZINE. Vol. XVIII., with Fifty-two Engravings, Imperial 8vo., Price 5s. 6d., Embossed Cloth. It contains Original SERMONS and other Papers by the Lord Bishop of Lincoln, the Ven. C. J. Hoare; the Rev. Henry Melvill, B.D.; Rev. H. Woodward, of Fethard; Canons Stevenson, Jacob, Townsend, Garbett; the Dean of Sarum; the Revs. T. Bissland, B. Addison, W. Buswell, J. Sandford, J. Scholefield, R. W Browne, &c. &c &c. Descriptions of Remarkable Places, with Views (24 Nos.) Sketches in Natural History, with numerous Illustrations on wood. Missionary Records. BIOGRAPHY:—Hugh Cressy, the Earl of Derby, Sir T. S. Raffles, Bishop Fox, &c. &c. Parochial Incidents. Juvenile Reading, Instructive Narratives, &c., for the Young (5 Nos.); with a large variety of Miscellaneous Pieces, Narratives, Poetry, Anecdotes, &c., suited for Sunday or week-day reading.—Part CIX., for July, commencing Vol. XIX., will appear on the 30th, and intending subscribers are requested to give their orders as soon as possible to their booksellers, as only a few copies are printed beyond the number required. The Proprietors think it right to say, that all the Sermons which appear in this work are printed from the MSS. of their respective authors.—Published for the Proprietors by EDWARDS and HUGHES, 12, Ave Maria-lane, London; and specimens may be seen at every bookseller's in town and country.

In Demy 4to., neatly bound in cloth, with Engravings and Diagrams, price 6s.,

THE HAND-BOOK TO THE PIANOFORTE, comprising an easy Rudimental Introduction to the Study of that Instrument and Music in General; the Art of Fingering, according to the Modes of the best Masters, exemplified in various Exercises, Scales, &c., in all the Major and Minor Keys; and interspersed by Relaxations from Study, consisting of Popular Melodies and Romances, and Selections from Pianoforte Compositions of some of the most celebrated Masters. Also, a Short and Easy Introduction to Harmony or Counterpoint, and a New Vocabulary of Terms. By J. AUGUSTINE WADE, Author of "The Dwellings of Fancy," "Songs of the Flowers," "The Two Houses of Grenada," an Opera; "The Prophecy," an Oratorio, &c. &c.

"From the first 'example' to the last 'exercise' everything is brought before the learner in the clearest manner, and the means of conquering each new difficulty as it arises literally placed at his fingers' ends. Indeed, after carefully digesting some sixty pages, and mastering the 'digital' and other exercises here given, he need not fear the thickest army of semi-demi-semis, or the most whimsically-noted passage of the most gifted manipulator of the key-board. The work comprises, in addition, a brief and excellent treatise on the elements of harmony, developing the laws of composition in a simple and sound manner; and we altogether warmly recommend the book to public favour." Literary Gazette, October 19.

"The book now before us is the most admirable instance we have ever met with of a man acknowledged as a poet and composer condescending to construct a threshold to harmony. Mr. Wade has written the best first-book we ever read."—Sunday Times.

"This is one of the best works of musical instruction which has been brought under our notice; the author unites an earnest love of music with sound knowledge of the art, and has, therefore, given a life and animation to his lessons, which relieve the dry and technical details of teaching."—The League, October 12.

"An ingenious and tasteful work, comprehending a large amount of information in a comparatively small space. The volume seems to us calculated to be very useful; and it is certainly ORNAMENTAL also, being handsomely printed and bound, and embellished with a striking portrait of the celebrated pianist, Franz Liszt."—Watchman, October

ONE THOUSAND VOLUMES OF NOVELS, ROMANCES, TRAVELS, BIOGRAPHIES, &c., TO BE SOLD CHEAP, either in one lot, or in smaller lots, selected to suit the convenience of purchasers.—London: HUGH CUNNINGHAM, 193, Strand.

Now Ready, in foolscap 8vo., cloth, gilt, with Illustrations, price 2s. 6d.,
GOING TO MAYNOOTH. A Tale. BY WM. CARLETON.
Also, by the same Author,
TRAITS AND STORIES OF THE IRISH PEASANTRY. New Pictorial Edition, Illustrated by Phiz, &c.. 2 vols., 8vo., cloth, gilt, reduced to 20s.
London: GEORGE ROUTLEDGE, 36, Soho-square; and all Booksellers.

THE ROYAL BAL COSTUME.—M. MUSARD most respectfully informs the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, that the whole of the Music he had the honour to compose, arrange, and perform by Gracious Command of her Majesty at the BAL COSTUME, will be published only by Messrs. R. COCKS and Co., New Burlington-street, London, Musicsellers to the Queen, i.e., Quadrille et Polonaise de 1845, de la Cour d'Angleterre ou Souvenir du 18eme siecle, 3s.; Menuet de la Cour, 1s.; Menuet d'Exaudets, 1s.; and Que de Grace que de Majestie, from Gluck's "Iphigine," 2s.—N.B. The two Minuets will be Autograph Copies, bearing the Signature of M. MUSARD. The whole will be ready for delivery on the 16th inst.

The Second Edition, enlarged, price 2s., of
AIRD'S SELF-INSTRUCTING FRENCH GRAMMAR.—"Aird's 'Self-Instructing French Grammar,' is decidedly a work of merit."—Illustrated London News. Also, Now Ready, price 1s. 9d.,
SYNTAX MADE EASY; or, How to Speak and Write French Correctly: A Sequel to "Aird's Self-Instructing French Grammar."—"Mr. Aird, in the fullest sense of the term, has made the acquisition of French Syntax a matter of no difficulty."—The Atlas.
London: HUGH CUNNINGHAM, 193, Strand, and all Booksellers.

RODRIGUES' Cheap STATIONERY and BOOK WAREHOUSE, 21, PICCADILLY.—Envelopes, 6d. per 100; superfine Bath post, 4d. per quire, 6s. per ream; note, 3d. per quire, 4s. per ream; best foolscap, 10d. per quire; Albert and Queen's note, 1s. and 1s. 6d. per packet of five quires; quills, 2s. per 100; best sealing-wax, 10 sticks for a shilling; bibles, 1s 6d; prayers, 1s.; testaments, 6d.; church services, two vols., in case complete, 3s. 6d Name plate, elegantly engraved and 100 superfine cards, 4s. 6d. Account Books, Ledgers, &c., made to order at manufacturers' prices, and every description of Stationery full 30 per cent. lower than any other house in London at H. RODRIGUES' 21, Piccadilly.

159, Fleet-street, London.
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—Subscribers are respectfully informed that they can be supplied with this Paper CAREFULLY FOLDED, and ENCLOSED in a LARGE WRAPPER, so as EFFECTUALLY TO PREVENT IT FROM INJURY in passing through the Post.

TERMS.	£ s. d.
Per Quarter	0 6 6
Half Year	0 13 0
Year	1 6 0

Sets completed. The Volumes bound in a superior style, with gilt edges, at 5s. each. Orders must be accompanied with a remittance, or by a reference for payment in town. All letters must be addressed thus:—"Mr. F. CLAPPERTON, 159, Fleet-street, London."

MUSIC by STEAM, from ENGRAVED PLATES!—The ROYAL VOCAL ALBUM, published every Saturday, is by this beautiful process. No. 2 (containing 3 Songs, with Pianoforte Accompaniments) Now Ready.
The ROYAL PIANOFORTE ALBUM (Piano Solos, Quadrilles, Polkas, &c.), also every Saturday, at 2d. No. 2 Now Ready.—Also,
PUNCH'S MELODIES, every Saturday, at 1d. No. 2 (Now Ready) contains 10 Melodies for a Penny.—Also,
PUNCH'S MUSICAL WORLD contains all the News and Fun in the Musical World, price 1d. No. 2 Now Ready.
Four Editions of each of these works were sold the first week.—Either work sent post-free, by inclosing 3 stamps, addressed to the Editor, 23, Paternoster-row.
SHERWOODS; TURNER, 19, Poultry; TEMPLEMAN, 6, Great Portland-street.

In one thick vol., a new Edition, being the Ninth, much enlarged, price 16s.
MODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE; A POPULAR TREATISE, exhibiting the Symptoms, Causes, and most efficacious Treatment of Diseases; with a collection of approved Prescriptions, Management of Children, Doses of Medicines, &c. Forming a comprehensive Medical Guide for the Clergy, Families, and Invalids. By T. J. GRAHAM, M.D. &c. "It is evidently the result of great professional talent, experience, and judgment; the author every where appears conscientious and candid. One object is prominently evident—a sincere desire to benefit his suffering fellow-creatures. To recommend a work like the present to our readers, is only to manifest a proper regard for their welfare"—Literary Journal, Feb. 1843. "It is altogether deserving of permanent popularity."—London Weekly Review. SIMPKIN and Co., Paternoster Row; HATCHARDS, 187, Piccadilly; and TEGG, 73, Cheapside. Sold by all Booksellers.

SYLPHIDE PARASOLS.—The CLAREMONT SYLPHIDE, AS WORN AT PARIS, and manufactured by the Patentees, is the most elegant form in which this admired Parasol has been offered to the public, and is about half the weight only of the usual description, which is so desirable in Parasols. Ladies are requested to observe that the parasols are all stamped "Sylphide Patent."—W. and J. SANGSTER, 140, Regent-street, and 10, Royal Exchange.

COMMERCIAL AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE, ANNUITY, FAMILY ENDOWMENT, AND LOAN ASSOCIATION,
112 and 113, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON.
Under Act of Parliament 7th and 8th Victoria, Cap. 110
HENRY GEORGE WARD, ESQ, M.P., CHAIRMAN.
EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE RISKS UNDERTAKEN. Premiums receivable Yearly, Half Yearly, or Quarterly. Credit given for half the Premiums during Life—at Five per Cent. Interest. Loans granted on Personal and other Securities—repayable by Instalments. Endowments for Children.—The whole sum paid in Returned if the Child dies. Annuities Immediate and Deferred. Prospectuses may be had on application to FREDERIC LAWRANCE, Resident Secretary, 112 and 113, Cheapside.

ANOTHER CURE of a FOURTEEN YEARS' ASTHMATIC COUGH, by DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS:—From Mr. Edward Preston, coal-merchant, Paragon street, Hull, dated April 6, 1845:—"Sir,—Grateful for the relief my wife has experienced by the use of Locock's Pulmonic Wafers, from a distressing Asthmatic Cough, with which she was afflicted for the last fourteen years, I feel a great desire that her surprising cure should be made known, for the benefit of those suffering as she did.
"Your's, &c., EDWARD PRESTON."
Dr. LOCOCK'S WAFERS give instant relief, and a rapid Cure of Asthma, Coughs, and all disorders of the breath and lungs. To singers and public speakers they are invaluable, for clearing and strengthening the voice; they have a most pleasant taste. Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d. and 11s. per box.—Agents: DA SILVA and Co., 1, Bride-lane, Fleet-street, London; sold by all Medicine Venders.

SUPERIOR SHIRTS AT MODERATE PRICES

Strong Cotton and Long Cloth Shirts	1s 6d and 2s 0d
Long Cloth Shirts, with fine Linen Full Fronts, Collars, and Wristbands (well made)	2s 6d and 3s 6d
Superior Long Cloth Shirts, extra super Linen Fronts, Collars, and Wristbands (beautirully made)	4s 6d and 5s 6d

Fine Linen Collars 4½d., or 4s. 3d. per Dozen. Extra Superfine, 6d., or 5s. 6d. per Dozen.
A large assortment of Shirts of every description, including some of the most approved fabrics in all Linen Shirts, and the finest qualities in India Long Cloth, kept washed and ready for immediate use. Hosiery at the lowest prices.
Boys' Shirts in all sizes. Shirts and Hosiery made to order.
Gentlemen and Families waited upon with patterns and specimens of superior workmanship. Country orders faithfully executed, and forwarded to all parts of the United Kingdom.
RODGERS and Co., Shirt Makers, Hosiers, and Manufacturing Outfitters (Successors to the late Mr. KIPLING), 59, St. Martin's-lane, and 29, New-street, Covent-garden, the premises being at the corner of New-street. Established half a century.

ROYAL FARMERS' and GENERAL FIRE, LIFE, and HAIL INSURANCE INSTITUTION.
Empowered by Special Act of Parliament. Capital, £500,000.
OFFICES, STRAND, LONDON.
DIRECTORS.
CHAIRMAN—Joseph Rogerson, Esq.
MANAGING DIRECTOR—W. Shaw Esq.

J. Blackstone, Esq.	J. R. Cooper, Esq.	Wm. Smeddle Esq.
S. Boydell, Esq.	John Hudson, Esq.	G. P. Tuxford, Esq.
Wm. Clutton, Esq.	R. M. Jaques, Esq.	J. Workman, Esq.
	W. Youatt, Esq.

MEDICAL OFFICERS—J. Blackstone, Esq.; and G. W. Blanch, Esq.
STANDING COUNSEL—C. W Johnston, Esq.; W. Shaw, Esq.
JOINT SOLICITORS—John Rogerson, Esq.; C. Boydell, Esq.
ASSISTANT MANAGER—W. Jenkinson, Esq.
SECRETARY—J. Hanson, Esq.
BANKERS—The London and Westminster Bank.
The Proprietary of this Company exceeds 1,960 in number, of whom 195 are County Directors
The share of public favour this Institution has obtained, proves the appreciation of its system by a numerous body of insurers.
Every kind of Life Insurance, of Deferred and Immediate Annuities, and of Endowments for Children, may be accomplished on terms as low as is consistent with security.
A dividend of Four per Cent. is now in course of payment to the Shareholders in this office
In the Fire Department, Insurances effected at the lowest rates.
HAIL INSURANCE.—Premium Sixpence per acre for Wheat, Barley, Turnips, and Peas; Fourpence per acre for Oats, Beans, and Potatoes. Glass in hothouses, greenhouses, or private houses, 20s. per Cent.
Prospectuses may be obtained at the office, or will be forwarded, post free, upon application.
The usual commission to Solicitors.
Agents are appointed in the Principal Towns in the Kingdom.
W SHAW, Managing Director.

SELF MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION.
The following Directions will ensure an exact Fit, and will be found a most convenient accommodation. The measure may be taken with a piece of tape, and reduced into inche stating the height of person, and if any peculiarity in figure; also whether taken over a Coat.

COATS, VESTS, &c.

	Inches
From Neck seam, not Including Collar, to Hip Buttons
From Hip Buttons to Bottom of Skirt
From centre of Back to Elbow joint Continued to length of Sleeve at Wrist
Size round top of Arm
Size round Chest under the Coat
Size round Waist under the Coat

TROUSERS.

	Inches
From top of Trousers to bottom
From under the Legs to bottom of Trousers
Size round top of Thigh (tight)
Size round Calf
Ditto Waist
Ditto Hips

HAT.

Measure size round the Head

READY MADE.	£ s d
Tweed Taglionis, from	0 7 6
Ditto, superior quality, with silk collar, cuffs, and facings	0 13 6
Codringtons and Chesterfields, in light and gentlemanly materials	0 18 6
Cachmerette Coats, in every style and make, including the registered veltoe	1 2 0
Holland Jean Grand Drill and Diagonal Blouses	0 3 6
Splendid Summer Vests, from	0 2 6
Cachmere and Persian ditto, in endless variety	0 4 6
Black and Fancy Satins	0 6 6
Cloth Trousers, from	0 9 0
Tweed ditto	0 4 6
Spring ditto (woollen)	0 5 0
Dress Coats	1 0 0
Frock ditto	1 3 0

MADE TO MEASURE.	£ s
Tweed Coats, trimmed with silk	0 12
Cachmerette ditto, in any shape, handsomely trimmed, made in the first style of fashion	1 5 0
Saxe Gotha ditto, handsomely trimmed	1 15 0
Quilting Vests, 6s. 6d., or 3 for	0 19 0
Cachmere ditto, in choice patterns	0 8 6
Satin ditto, plain or fancy	0 14 6
Spring Trousers in great variety	0 10 6
Tweed ditto, in choice patterns	0 13 6
Single Milled Albert and Plain Doe Trousers	0 19 0
Best quality Black or Dress ditto	1 6 0
Dress Coats	1 12 0
Ditto, ditto, best manufactured	2 15 0
Frock Coats	1 15 0
Ditto, ditto, best manufactured	3 3 0

MOURNING to any extent, at Five Minutes' notice.
IMPORTANT.—Any article purchased or ordered, if not approved of, exchanged, or the money returned.
OBSERVE.—E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Drapers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen.
CAUTION.—E. MOSES and SON are obliged to guard the public against imposition, having earned that the untradesman-like falsehood of being connected with them, or it is the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons. They have no connection with any other house in or out of London; and those who desire genuine Cheap Clothing, should (to prevent disappointments, &c) call at or send to, 154, Minories, or, 86, Aldgate, opposite the Church.
N B.—No business transacted at this Establishment, from Friday at sunset until sunset on Saturday, when business is resumed until twelve o'clock.

SAMUEL WEDDELL, late of Aldgate, in the City of London, Esquire, Deceased.—All Persons indebted to and having any claims on his Estate, are requested to forward the same to Messrs. Lawford, Drapers' Hall, Solicitors for the Executors.

ROYAL EXCHANGE HANDKERCHIEFS.—A Beautiful Engraving on Copper upon a large scale, showing the Clock Tower, &c., printed upon the best Silk Handkerchief, from a Drawing done expressly for that purpose, 5s. 6d. each, or by post, postage stamps enclosed, 6s.—To be had of W. TENT, the Publisher, No. 21, Royal Exchange, at his Hosiery and Outfitting Warehouse.

THE LARGEST STOCK IN EUROPE.—FURNISHING IRONMONGERY, Stove Grates, Kitchen Ranges, Fenders, Fire-Irons, Best Sheffield Plate, Ornamental Iron and Wire Work, Garden Engines, Rollers, &c.; Japan Tea Trays, Baths, &c.—PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS, adjoining Madame Tussaud's, 58, Baker-street, Portman-square.—N.B. Every article is marked in plain figures at the lowest cash prices.

THE MINARET PARASOL.—CAUTION.—Ladies are particularly requested to observe that the Silver Runner of the Parasol is Stamped with the word "MINARET." This Caution is necessary, as other parasols have been sold for the Minaret which are not so. This elegant Novelty can be had at all the respectable Drapers in the Kingdom.

DUTY OFF GLASS.—BASS and CO.'s PALE EAST INDIA ALE, in Bottle (so highly in repute with the Faculty), reduced in price, to Quarts 6s. 6d., and Pints 3s. 9d., by A. G. FAVENC and Co., Agents, who have also made a similar reduction on London and Dublin Stout.—Stores, 18, 'Change Alley (close to Garraway's); and at No. 3, Sherborne-lane, King William-street, City.

LEGHORNS, MILLINERY, and STRAW BONNETS. BRIGHT'S, 12, Ludgate-street (two doors above Everington's).—Beautifully fine Leghorns, 20s.; fashionable Millinery Bonnets of every description; Paille de Riz and Fancy Straws, and immense variety of the newest and richest designs. Leghorn Hats, Straw Bonnets. All bearing a fixed Ready Money Price, at the Lowest Scale of Profit.

TEA ESTABLISHMENT, 221, Oxford-street.—Families and large consumers are invited to avail themselves of the advantages ready money commands, in purchasing the really fine and useful descriptions of TEA and COFFEE at this Establishment. The saving here effected by cash payments is at least 10 or 20 per cent. Price lists forwarded on application, and goods delivered within three miles free of expense.—STRUGNELL and Co., Tea and Coffee Dealers, 221, Oxford-street, corner of Portman-street, London.

MAGASIN de MODES et NOUVEAUTES, 180, Regent-street. Madame THOMEL has the honour of announcing to the Nobility and Gentry, that she has again received from Paris a case of the most beautiful and fashionable Millinery, Bonnets, Caps, Turbans, Head Dresses, &c.; also some of the most elegantes embroideries in Collars, Pelerines of the Grande Duchesse Olga and Johanna Styles, which are so becoming and so much admired just now in Paris. 180, Regent-street. Plumes et Fleurs, Millinery, and Dressmaking, Embroideries, &c.

DINNER SERVICES, TABLE GLASS, &c.—SANDER and Co., 319, Holborn, corner of Southampton Buildings, opposite Gray's Inn Gate, have on view the largest Stock in London of Table Glass, Dinner, Dessert, and Tea Services, Ornamental China, Chandeliers, Lustres, Lamps, Hall Lanterns, &c. N.B. A considerable number of Dinner, Dessert, and Tea Services at a great reduction in price; these patterns are not those of the present year, but the ware is of the best quality, and they will be found worthy of attention; some of the Dinner Services in question, are porcelain, in addition to which, there are a few suspending Drawing Room Lamps; Lustres, and Hall Lanterns.

PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS.—JOHNSON AND CO., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street, Hatters to the Queen and Royal Family, Inventors and Patentees.—From the construction of the PATENT FLEXIBLE HATS the unpleasant pressure on the forehead is entirely removed, and by their extreme elasticity they are capable of accommodating themselves perfectly to the shape of the head; the crown, moreover, being ventilated, and the perspiration prevented from appearing on the outside of the hat, are additional advantages. As Ladies' Riding Hats they are light and elastic, and will retain their position on the head without the least discomfort.—JOHNSON and CO., 113 Regent-street, and GRIFFITHS and JOHNSON, 2, Old Bond-street.

HAY-MAKING SEASON.—Mrs. MARY WEDLAKE, widow of the late THOMAS WEDLAKE, of the Fairkytes Original Iron Works, Horn church, Essex, and 118, Fenchurch-street, opposite Mark-lane, London, begs to remind Agriculturists, she continues making that most useful Implement, for which her late husband obtained a Patent, and received a Silver Medal at the Derby Show, the DOUBLE-ACTION HAY-MAKER, so much admired; also, the HORSE HAY-RAKE. They may be inspected daily at the City Repository for Agricultural and Colonial Implements, 118, Fenchurch-street, opposite Mark lane, London N.B. To prevent disappointment at this season, an early application for these Implements is solicited.

ROSHERVILLE.—Messrs. WINCH and CALDER beg most respectfully to inform their Friends and the Public that the ROSHERVILLE HOTEL is now completed, and OPEN for the reception of visitors. Being contiguous to the Rosherville Gardens (which W. and C have also undertaken to supply with refreshments of every description), parties visiting that delightful place of amusement will find it of great advantage. Great pains have been taken to furnish the Hotel in the most approved style, comfort and elegance being everywhere combined. The Wines have been selected with the greatest care, and are of the finest quality. The Culinary department is under the management of a first-rate Chef de Cuisine: and that esteemed delicacy, Whitebait, so much in request, will be found in the highest perfection.

FOR THE RACES.—NICOLL'S REGISTERED PALETOT, 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 65; unlined, 30s.; 20 paces North of Quadrant, No. 114, Regent street An over-coat by many of our patrons called the Dust-ah, is, without encumbering free movement, well adapted for temporary defence against weather, heat, and dusty roads; prepared, and can only be made, by H. J. and D. NICOLL; is naturally repellant of water, yet porous. The test is to breathe through the material to the surface of a mirror. From its elastic softness it will readily fold into the small compass of the ordinary pocket. Price 30s.; is durable withal.—Twenty paces North of Quadrant, London.

NICOLL'S REGISTERED PALETOT, 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 65, made of Llama cloth, in light, dark, and mixed colours, two guineas, patronised by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, is, from the neatness of its form, adapted for the two purposes—as an over-coat, light in weight, a desirable advantage in our ever-variable climate; also, as a surtout, or summer frock coat, without other—a perfect luxury where heat is found oppressive. Unassumed plainness, the characteristic of a gentleman's attire, is fully sustained in the Paletot, being in its fashion neither trop prononce nor trop negligé.—"It speaks well for the working of the new act, which thus secures the profits of a good judgment and well-directed ingenuity to those to whom it is due."—See the "Times" of 4th April. "In the Registered Paletot there is a gentlemanly neatness and an absence of all unsightly vulgarity. It has met with the highest approbation in the Court circle."—See "Morning Post" of 19th April.—Paletots suitable to the habits and professions of all are ready for inspection at the extensive Warerooms, 114, Regent-street, 20 paces North of Quadrant.

LADIES, whether frequenting the crowded saloon, the close assembly, the rural ride or drive, the summer promenade, or the aquatic excursion, will find in ROWLAND'S KALYDOR a renovating and refreshing auxiliary, dispelling the cloud of langour from the complexion, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity of the Skin. The distressing and unsightly varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions, as well as Sunburns, Freckles, Discolorations, and Sallowness, yield to its specific qualities, and are succeeded by a clearness and softness of the skin truly grateful to its possessor. Its invaluable properties have obtained its selection by the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and those of the Continent of Europe, together with the whole elite of the aristocracy and haut ton. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d per bottle.—Ask for "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR," all others are fraudulent Counterfeits!

ROWLAND'S UNIQUE PREPARATIONS.—(Patronised by the several Sovereigns and Courts of Europe, and in general use in all Countries)
ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth, Preservation, and for Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 3s 6d., 7s.; Family Bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.
ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for Improving and Beautifying the Skin and Complexion, eradicates all Cutaneous Eruptions, Sun-burn, and Freckles, and renders the Skin Soft, Fair, and Blooming. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle
ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for Preserving and Beautifying the Teeth and Strengthening the Gums. Price 2s. 9d. per box.
CAUTION.—Beware of Spurious Compounds under the same names (some under the implied sanction of Royalty). The only Genuine Preparations have the word "ROWLAND'S" on the Wrappers.—Sold by the Proprietors, at 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

TO PERSONS FURNISHING.—The following quotations, submitted by L. WORMS and CO., 106 to 109, Whitechapel-road, will be found important to all economical purchasers. One Thousand Pieces of the best Brussels Carpeting (Comber patterns) registered, all at 3s 6d per yard, being a reduction from last year's prices of 1s 2d per yard. Same quality precisely, last year's patterns, 3s 2d; and others, not registered, 3s A large lot of very superior strong Brussels, manufactured in 1843, selling at 2s 9d. worth 3s 2d. All the new patte ns in yard wide Kidderminster, all wool, 2s 6d; ditto, the cheapest article ever produced, 2s per yard; lower quality, 1s 3d. Stair Carpeting, and Floor Cloths, of every width, at the lowest prices in the kingdom. Mahogany Dining-room Chairs, set of eight, 4 guineas; very elegant superior ditto, 5 guineas, to 5½ guineas; exquisitely elaborate styles in Spanish sweep back, 15s 6d to 1 guinea; chaste and elegant Drawing-room ditto, 7s 6d; Mahogany Bedsteads, 32s 6d; ditto, with cornice poles, rings, &c., complete, 4 guineas; Japan Bedsteads, 12s 6d; Wash Stands and Tables, 2s 6d, each; and every other article, surpassing all competitors in multitudinous variety, excellence, and cheapness. The Proprietors give a written warranty for an indefinite period; together with plans, drawings, lists, &c., Gratis. Goods delivered free of expense within twelve miles of London.—L. WORMS and Co., 106 to 109, Whitechapel-road; and 1, 2, 3, and 4, Thomas-street, opposite the London Hospital.

GERMAN HOSPITAL, to be established in London.—A PUBLIC MEETING of the FRIENDS of this Institution will be held on Wednesday, the 18th of June instant, at the City of London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, at which His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE will take the CHAIR, an One o'clock precisely.
The friendly feeling which, from various causes, exists between Great Britain and Germany, excites a confident hope that the exertions which are being made to establish a charitable asylum for sick natives of the latter-country will create a general sympathy, and meet with encouragement.
Of the vast number of industrious Germans in London, the majority are, from the nature of their occupation (sugar refining, skin-dressing, and skin-dying, &c.,) exposed to accidents and subjected to ailments that often reduce them to extreme want and deep misery.
The philanthropic generosity which opens the noble hospitals of this metropolis alike to the foreigner and the native, has proved inadequate to meet with due relief the innumerable applications of the afflicted. Peculiar difficulties must surround the poor German in his hour of calamitous illness. The inability of the sick man to express himself in English must prevent his profiting so fully as he might by the medical attendant's skill, impede very considerably the services of the nurse, and in too many cases exclude the patient from those highest consolations to be derived from his religious counsellor.
The sum of £5000 will be required to establish completely the proposed institution, and from £1200 to £1500 per annum will be needed to secure its efficient maintenance. From the liberal encouragement already received from the highest quarters, both in this country and abroad, the Provisional Committee have every reason to expect that, under the Divine blessing, their labours in this cause will be attended with a prosperous issue.
CHARLES WESLEY, D.D. } Honorary Secretaries.
ADOLPHUS WALBAUM }
PROVISIONAL COMMITTEE.
His Excellency Chevalier Bunsen, Prussian Ambassador.
His Excellency Baron de Cetto, Bavarian Ambassador.
His Excellency Count Reventlow, Danish Ambassador.
His Excellency Count Kielmansegge, Hanoverian Ambassador.
Lord Ashley, M.P.
Right Honourable Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P.

John Ball, Esq.	Rev. W. Kuper, D.D.
Dr. A. Bernays	William Kuper, Esq.
William Bird, Esq.	R. M. Phillipps, Esq.
Sir Benjamin Brodie, Bart., F.R.S.	C. A. Preller, Esq.
B. Bond Cabbell, Esq., F.R.S.	Rev. C. F. A. Steinkopff, D.D.
Rev. L. Cappel, Dr. Ph.	John Tattersall, Esq.
Sir James Clark, Bart., M.D.	Rev. J. G. Tiarks, Dr. Ph.
J. C. H. Freund, Esq., M.D.	Rev. Adolphus Walbaum
Frederick Huth, Esq.	George Walker, Esq.
Rev. James Jauch	D. H. Walne, Esq.
Robert Keate, Esq., F.R.S.	Rev. Charles Wesley, D.D.
C. Aston Key, Esq., F.R.S.	C. J. B. Williams, Esq., M.D.

Donations and subscriptions in aid of the funds of the Institution will be received by the members of the Provisional Committee; also by the following bankers—Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand; Messrs. Glyn, Hallifax, and Co., 67, Lombard-street; Messrs. Jones, Loyd, and Co., Lothbury; Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Smiths, No 1, Lombard-street: and by the following booksellers—Mr. Burns, No. 17, Portman-street, Portman-square; Messrs. Nisbet, and Co., 21, Berners-street; and Messrs. Bivington, 3, Waterloo-place.

THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.—R. SAYWELL'S Select CATALOGUE of valuable BOOKS, English and Foreign, in Divinity, Ecclesiastical History, &c., at very reduced prices, may be had, gratis, on application, or will be forwarded, postage free, to any address.—Featherstone Buildings, Bedford-row.

Just Published, Price One Shilling,
THE BOOK OF THE TOILET; or, the Secret of Beauty. An elegant illuminated little Gem, designed to promote the personal comfort and attraction of Youth, Beauty, and Age, of both Sexes.
London: SIMMONDS and WARD, 13, Cornhill.

WEEKLY FRENCH NEWSPAPER.
L'OBSERVATEUR FRANCAIS. Edited by JEAN BAPTISTE DESPLACE. A Journal of Politics, Literature, Science, Commerce, and the Fine Arts; Chronicle of the Fashionable World.
This Journal appeared from Saturday, the 24th of May, in its enlarged form, without increase of price, from 16 to 24 pages, containing 72 columns of closely printed matter; equal to the contents of two ordinary volumes. The proprietors have determined for some time on this step, in order to enable them to publish, without abridgment, the important History of Napoleon (L'HISTOIRE DU CONSULAT ET DE L'EMPIRE) by the late Secretary of Foreign Affairs in France, M THIERS, in addition to the JUIF ERRANT and the News of the Week. Price Sixpence stamped for post.
Orders received by ALEXANDRE DE LIZY, at the Office, 344, Strand, and by all Booksellers and Newsvendors in the United Kingdom.

MEMOIRS OF AN UMBRELLA; A New Comic Novel, by G. HERBERT RODWELL! highly illustrated with Engravings by Landells, from Designs by "PHIZ!" This Work will be published in Weekly Numbers, uniform with "Punch;" the readers of that admirable work are therefore requested to give immediate orders to their respective Booksellers and Newsmen, in order that they may receive the two works at the same time. The First Number will appear, Saturday, June 28. PRICE THREEPENCE.
Published by E. MACKENZIE, 111, Fleet-street; opposite the "Punch" Office

THE REGISTER of PATENTS.—THE CIVIL ENGINEER and ARCHITECTS' JOURNAL, price 1s. 6d.; or the Register of Patents, separately price 6d., contains a Monthly Abstract of all important specifications of Patents, as they are enrolled, with Engravings, and List of New Patents. Every information for procuring Patents, either in Great Britain or Foreign Countries, and Registering of Designs, may be obtained of Mr. SAXTON, at the Office for Patents, 145, Strand, near Somerset House. Printed instructions may be had Gratis.

THE PIANO. JUNE. Price 1s., or 1s. 4d. post-free, contains the beautiful pieces of Music usually sold at 20s.; including the celebrated Dresden Waltzes, by Reissenger, and performed at nearly every Concert. Oberon's Horn Waltz, composed by Andre, an especial favourite of her Majesty. Apollo Galope, by Schubert Kufner's Grand March, as performed by the Band of the Royal Horse Guards. Favourite Polonaise, by Czerny. "Most Beloved, my Greatest Treasure," composed by Bellini, and sung by Mr. Harrison; and a Popular Song sung by Miss P. Horton.
Published by DUNCOMBE, Middle-row, Holborn.

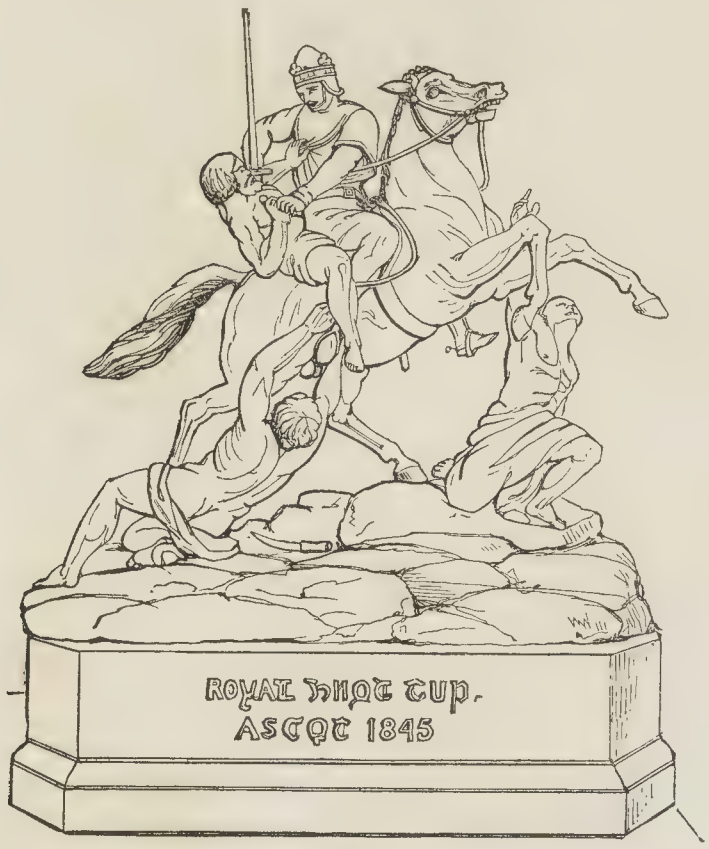
HAND-BOOK FOR WALES.
Just published, Price 5s., with a new coloured Map,
PANORAMA of the BEAUTIES, CURIOSITIES, and ANTIQUITIES of NORTH WALES, exhibited in its mountains, valleys, waterfalls, lakes, cities and towns, castles, ruins, &c.; intended as a Pocket Companion to the Tourist and Traveller. Fourth Edition, corrected and improved. By J. HEMINGWAY, author of "The History of Chester," &c., and late Editor of the "Chester Chronicle."
London: R. Groombridge; Simpkin, Marshall and Co.; Hamilton, Adams and Co.; Longman and Co., and Whittaker and Co.: W. Curry, jun., and Co., Dublin: and Seacombe and Prichard, Chester.

BURNS' FIRESIDE LIBRARY, with Illustrations.—Issues for JUNE:—1. Northern Minstrelsy, Select Specimens of Scottish Poetry and Song (17 Engravings), 2s. 2. Quentin Matsys, or the Black mith, by C. Pichler, 6d. 3 The Portrait of the Emperor, by Hauff, 1s. 4 Prasca Coupouloff, and other Tales from the French, 6d. 5 Wallenstein, or the Swedes in Prague, a Romance of the Thirty Years' War, by Pichler, 2s. 6. The Caravan and other Tales, by Hauff, 1s. 3d. Lists of the Volumes previously published, New Editions of several of which are just out, may be had Gratis.—"We can confidently recommend a small and cheap but elegant volume, 'Evenings with the Old Story Tellers'—a member of 'Burns' Fireside Library'—in which we find many excellent reprints and adaptations, prepared with remarkable taste and even elegance, notwithstanding their low price."—Chambers' Edinburgh Journal.—London: JAMES BURNS, 17, Portman-street.

THE AUTHOR'S EDITIONS.
OLLENDORFF'S METHOD OF LEARNING to READ, WRITE, and SPEAK a LANGUAGE in SIX MONTHS.
1. ADAPTED to the FRENCH. Written expressly for the English Student. By Dr H. G. OLLENDORFF. 8vo., price 16s. cloth.
2. ADAPTED to the GERMAN. Written expressly for the English Student. By Dr. H. G. OLLENDORFF. In two parts, price 16s. each, cloth. The parts sold separately.
3. KEYS to both FRENCH and GERMAN SYSTEMS, prepared by the Author. Price 7s. each, cloth lettered.
4. ADAPTED to the ITALIAN. Preparing by Dr. H. G. OLLENDORFF.
 It is necessary for those who desire to avail themselves of the present method to notice that these are the only English editions sanctioned by Dr. Ollendorff, and he deems any other totally inadequate for the purposes of English instruction, and for the elucidation of the method so strongly recommended by Captain Basil Hall and other eminent writers. They should be ordered with the publisher's name, and, to prevent errors, every copy of the author's edition is signed by himself.
London: WHITTAKER and Co, and DULAU and Co.; and to be had of any Bookseller.

GREAT AND GLORIOUS PARLIAMENTARY COSTUME DINNER, ILLUSTRATED
JOE MILLER THE YOUNGER.
CONTENTS OF No VII., NOW PUBLISHING:—

King Dan's Grand Levee	The Queen's Fancy Costume Ball: Illustrated
Anecdotes of Opium Eaters	Disastrous Intelligence for Parli-mentary Paupers
The Face an Index to the Mind Verified	A Repealer's Reason for a Wintry Day
Mr. Spooner, the Brummagem M.P.	Examinations at Apothecaries Hole
Pity	Groans of Grivois: (From our French Correspondent,) with many Comic Cuts
More Comfort for the British Drama; with an Illustration	Mr. Miller on Sussex Paganism
The Duke of Wellington and the Cart Driver	Law and its Metals
The Prince and the Artisan	Grist for the Young Miller
Joseph's Short Patent Sermon	The Mysteries of a Muff, &c., &c.
Miseries of An Acror
Lays of a Blue Bottle



GOING OFF SWIMMINGLY, a Close View of the Stage—Two Cuts.
Containing more Fun, Broad Grins, and Amusement than any other publication of the day.
Price only THREE HALFPENCE; Stamped, to go free by post, TWOPENCE HALFPENNY, WEEKLY. 10s. 6d. per Annum, paid in advance; Monthly Parts, 7d.
Office, 1, Crane-court, Fleet-street; and Sold by all Booksellers and Newsvenders.

THE FARMERS' MAGAZINE AND JOURNAL OF THE AGRICULTURAL INTEREST for JUNE, 1845, is embellished with splendid Steel Engravings of "BUCHAN HERO,"
A Short-horned Bull, the property of Sir Charles R Tempest, Bart., and PLAN OF FARM BUILDINGS.
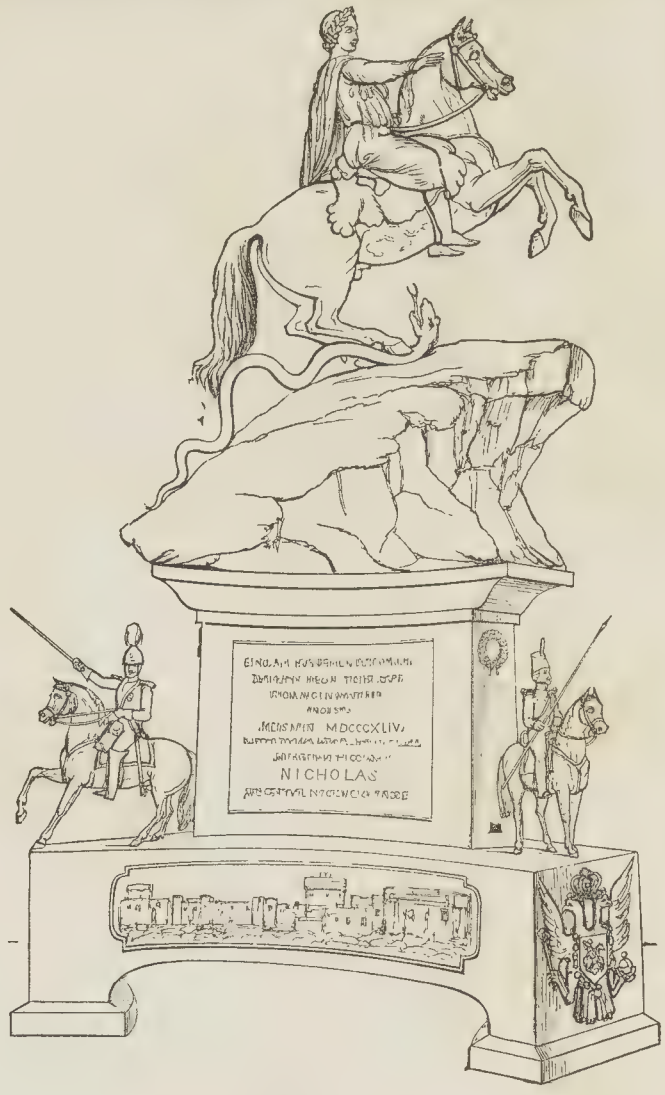
CONTENTS:—



On the Preparation of the Land for Drill Crops. By John Sproule	On the Cultivation of the Turnip. By T. Sullivan, Esq.
On Lucerne, and the Preparation of the Land. By J. Towers	Meeting of Members of the Farmers' Club.—Disadvantages of growing Hedgerow Timber on Farm Lands
On the Vine	Select Dressings for the "Agricultural Guide Plots"
On Soot as a Manure	Norton Farmers' Club
Monthly Meeting of the Rhins of Galloway and Stranraer Farmers' Club	Royal Agricultural Society of England
On Rent. By Cuthbert W. Johnson, Esq., F.R.S.	On Farm Buildings, with Observations on the State of Agriculture in Kent. By Viscount Torrington
Rowan's Registered Churn, as Manufactured by Mr. R. Robinson, Lisburn	Land Tax
Viscount Torrington's New Homestead at West Peckham	Foreign Cheese
Remarks on Ploughing. By T. Sullivan, Esq.	Khol Rabi, or Egyptian Kale
On Claying or Marling in Norfolk	Royal Orthopœdic Hospital, for the Cure of Club Foot, and other Contractions.
Remarks on Ploughs, &c. By J. Wilkie	On Liming Land
Report of the Thorough Draining Executed on the Estate of Edward Lucas, Esq., Castle Shane, Monaghan. By Fitzherbert Filgate, Esq.	The Wire Worm
Report of Experiments in Deep Ploughing. By J. M'Lean	On Wire Fencing
Destructiveness of Hail Storms	Self Manures
On the Importance and Advantages of an Improved Style of Architecture, as Applied to Farm Buildings, both in Economy and Convenience	Agricultural Queries
On Manures	Answers to Agricultural Queries
Feeding Farm Horses	Meteorological Diary
	Calendar of Horticulture
	Agricultural Reports
	Agricultural Int

is better treated by a different arrangement of the figures. The composition is perfect, and the spirit of the group is almost unsurpassable.

The third specimen, "The Queen's Vase" is a splendid piece of plate, designed by Mr. Cotterill, and executed in silver, by the Messrs. Gar-rard, of the Haymarket. It consists of an elegantly shaped vase, tastefully ornamented in the cinque-cento style. The cover is surmounted by a group representing the conversion of St. Hubert, the patron of huntsmen. The Royal arms of her Majesty and Prince Albert form a portion of the stem, which is composed entirely of rich alto-relievo ornaments. The chief beauty of the vase, however, consists in the elegant group which surmounts the lid. St. Hubert is on his knees in adoration, having dismounted on seeing, according to the legend, a noble stag, elevated on a rock, bearing a crucifix of light betwixt his antlers. The horse, as well as the hounds, appear unconscious of the mysterious presence of the miraculous stag; for the former is represented leisurely grazing, and the hounds are quietly resting at their master's feet. This group, though of small dimensions and very simple in its composition, is one of the most attractive ever executed by Mr. Cotterill. The horse is finely proportioned, and its lineaments, as well as those of the stag and hounds, are beautiful. The figure of St. Hubert is graceful; and the whole group is highly picturesque.

ROYAL HUNT CUP.

THE EMPEROR'S CUP

THE QUEEN'S VASE

ASCOT PRIZES 1845.

HER MAJESTY AND HER ILLUSTRIOUS VISITORS AND SUITE LEAVING WINDSOR CASTLE FOR ASCOT RACES.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 164.—Vol. VI.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1845. [Sixpence.

THE COLONIAL OFFICE.

A DEBATE on the conduct of the Colonial office, towards the settlers in New Zealand, which has so long hung threatening over the Government in general, and Lord Stanley in particular, has occupied the greater part of the week; concluding, after two adjournments, at 3 o'clock on Friday morning, by a majority on the division, in favour of the Government of fifty-one.

There is a certain kind of opposition that all Governments must be prepared to encounter; those who differ from a Ministry on principle are expected to be found opposing. It may sometimes happen, on isolated measures, that a Government finds itself at variance with its friends; in this respect no Ministry has ever been more unfortunate than that of Sir Robert Peel. The large strides he has made in various directions, in advance of his supporters, have called forth an opposition, from falling a sacrifice to which he was only rescued by the dexterously obtained support of his political foes. He has scarcely escaped from the storm raised against the Government on principle, before he has to encounter another formidable attack on a question of administration, one which involves a censure on the mere exercise of the powers entrusted to the head of the Colonial Departmant. In this censure, too, men of all parties out of doors, and many of the usual supporters of the Government in the House, entirely concur. It is no party question, and though, to some extent, it is certainly a personal one, the conduct of Lord Stanley being directly implicated, yet the main point at issue is the mischievous results of a system, which, existing under all Governments, is never a good one—a system we have before had occasion to allude to—the system of governing a "colony at the antipodes," by orders issued in Downing-street, by the head of a department, who may or may not be strongly prejudiced, or wholly ignorant; who is engrossed by the necessity of keeping his position as the leader of a political party; and who is certain to be tossed in or out of office with every change in the holders of political power. It is the Colonial Office system in the mass that is attacked; the head of it must, of necessity, whatever his talents or good wishes may be, discharge his duties imperfectly, in total ignorance in many cases; in others, on what is, perhaps, still worse, the interested and distorted information given by others, and the result is what we see now in New Zealand, what we have seen in many other colonies, and what we shall see in more, till the system is changed altogether.

The vice of it pervades the whole of its machinery; every officer in the colony, from the Governor downwards, is appointed through the office at home, and every situation is filled up by the operation of political and parliamentary influence. Fitness for the post is about the last thing considered in the appointment, and the most ordinary ability, if it is accidentally found in the fortunate individual, is hailed as something beyond what could be expected—a prize in the lottery of governors—for which the governed cannot be too thankful. And, in proportion to the badness of the selection, is invariably the obstinacy with which it is clung to, and the complaints of the sufferers disregarded. The case of Capt. Fitzroy is, perhaps, an extreme one, both for the utter incapacity of the man and the determination of the Colonial Office to defend him to the last; but though this arises from the violence Lord Stanley carries into his preferences and antipathies, beyond most men of his station, yet "the system" of itself leads to it. At last, after the Colony is ruined the Colonial Office is driven to do that which no amount of prayers, petitions, or entreaties, could induce it to do in time—to recall the unhappy Governor, who, by being raised to a post for which he was unfit, has merely brought about the double disaster of destroying the fortunes of thousands of his countrymen and his own reputation at the same time. At last too slowly and reluctantly wrung forth, we have the reasons given why the authority he has so misused is taken from him; in the present case Mr. Hope, the Under-Secretary, has been compelled to declare that Capt. Fitzroy is recalled, because the Government disapproves and disowns his financial policy—censures his conduct as to the land grants, in which he has not even observed his instructions—denounces the course he took with respect to the Militia Bill, and reproves his want of decision and firmness in his behaviour to the natives! We have here every one defect that can be combined to make a bad Governor of a distant settlement; ignorance of finance, disobedience or non-comprehension of instructions, imprudence in obstructing the measures the settlers took for self-defence, and want of "decision and firmness" in dealing with the savages—the two qualities most necessary, and which might almost, as a matter of course, be expected from an officer in her Majesty's service. But the failure only shows how a brave and estimable man in one sphere of life may be the most unfit to discharge the duties of another. The high-minded and gallant officer on the quarter deck, the staunch supporter of the back Treasury benches, the polished companion of the dinner-table, or the club, is snatched from his usual pursuits and invested with immense powers, which however badly used, cannot be resisted without incurring the guilt of rebellion; is placed among the people of an infant colony to which the free use of the limbs is essential for its healthy development; the Governor's experience is all of the coercive kind; and, having no idea of commanding but that of taking his own way in everything, he begins by tying a millstone round the neck of the yet struggling settlement, in the shape of a public debt, launching the new state in the mortgaged and overloaded condition of an old one. To enable the Colony to pay its incumbrance, he abolishes all the few sources of revenue which had been established; and when capital, scared by such insane conduct, is leaving the place, he creates a system of paper money as worthless as the assignats of the insolvent Government of revolutionized France. Holding the power of the Crown to confirm the settlers in their titles to the land purchased of the natives, he refuses to do so; stirs up and encourages the natives to claim back what they had sold; and when they murder and massacre our countrymen, the last find neither protection nor redress, but, on the contrary, the representative of the Sovereign shakes hands, and "conciliates" the savage Chief who had been guilty of the atrocity. Things go on from bad to worse, and the Governor is now, it appears, at last obliged to resort to force, in the use of which, as Lord Howick well observes, he will probably be as rash and intemperate as is usual for weak men to be in a desperate crisis. Amid all this, total and utter ruin has fallen on the most promising Colony ever founded, entirely from the refusal of the Colonial Office to listen to the remonstrances of the sufferers! What consolation is it to them to be told, that Lord Stanley's nominee is a perfect gentleman, a most honourable and upright man, who, though he has destroyed their fortunes, and sacrificed their lives, did it with the best intentions in the world?

GRAND REVIEW BY HER MAJESTY IN WINDSOR GREAT PARK.

The whole thing is so disastrous, that the history of the Colony of New Zealand, short as its existence has been, resembles the Prophet's roll that was written within and without with lamentation, mourning, and woe. The details it is impossible to examine here; but the clue through the maze of misfortunes to the grand cause of all them, seems to be this—that Lord Stanley, when he succeeded Lord John Russell, thought it his duty to do exactly the reverse of his predecessor; between him and the New Zealand Company "there was no great love at first, and it pleased Heaven to decrease it on better acquaintance." So he set to work with it as if he had indeed "an enemy to crush," and with that fierce spirit of antagonism which has made him so formidable in debate, so mischievous as an administrative functionary, he met it step by step at home with all the power of the Crown, and through his Governor in the Colony, fighting it by means of the natives, who would have been far better off without his protection. They were quietly blending with the European race; now the Colonial Office has raised a "blood feud" between both, which may descend unreconciled to whole generations. But the debate arising out of this policy will be the greatest blow the "system" has ever received; under the office in Downing-street, all successful Colonization will be seen to be impossible, and we shall be obliged to return to the plan of our forefathers, that by which the Colonies of North America were founded;—the ignorance and jobbing of the "office" must be escaped, by allowing our Colonies, as far as possible, consistently with their allegiance to the Crown, to govern themselves.

GRAND REVIEW IN WINDSOR GREAT PARK.

This stirring spectacle, depicted upon our front page, took place on the morning of Wednesday, the 11th instant, when the Royal Horse Guards (Blues) and the Coldstream Regiment of Foot Guards were reviewed in the Great Park, Windsor. Her Majesty, who was on horseback, and on either side of whom rode Prince Albert and the Duke de Nemours, was attended by a brilliant staff. Upon the Queen's arrival on the ground, the two regiments, which were formed in line, received the Sovereign with a Royal salute, their respective bands performing the National Anthem. Her Majesty, accompanied by those of her Royal and distinguished visitors who were on horseback, and attended by the staff, afterwards rode along the front of the line, returning by the rear, and then took up her position in front, near the carriage of the Duchess of Kent. The two regiments, which were under the command of Colonel Bentinck, of the Coldstream Guards, then went through the following evolutions:—The Blues walked past in squadrons, and the Coldstream in companies; the Blues afterwards walked past in troops and trotted past in squadrons, the Infantry following quick time, the band playing "The British Grenadier." The troops having formed in line, the Cavalry on the right, the Infantry threw their right back and formed line to the rear; formed column, quarter distance, right in front; advanced in column, and formed square. After some further cavalry and infantry movements, the Coldstream retired, wheeled to the left, and formed line on the left of the Cavalry, when both regiments advanced in line, and gave the general salute. Her Majesty, accompanied and attended as upon her arrival, then left the ground. The Queen, who rode her favourite charger, was attired in a riding-habit, en militaire, with a magnificently-ornamented gold aiguillette suspended from the right shoulder. Her Majesty also wore a military cap, with a deep gold band. It was expected that some firing would have taken place during the review, several rounds of ammunition having been served out to the troops. The Queen's horse, however, having become somewhat restive and skittish, on her Majesty taking up her position in front of the line, Mr. Meyers, the riding-master to the Queen, dismounted, and remained by its head during the whole time the review was proceeding. To this circumstance is to be attributed the absence of the firing.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. JUNE 14.

The next congregation for granting graces and conferring degrees will be holden on Thursday, the 26th instant. Messrs. E. T. W. and H. S Pole Hampton, Scholars of Pembroke College, have been elected Fellows of that Society on the Wightwick Foundation. W. H. Philpott, from Trinity College, Cambridge, has been elected a Scholar of Worcester College; and the Rev. H. Tripp, Scholar of Worcester College, has been elected a Fellow of that Society—both on the Eton Foundation. June 17.

This day, Mr. Edward Fox, Commoner of Worcester College, was admitted a Probationary Scholar of New College.

DEATH OF THE REV. R. H. BARHAM.—We regret to have to mention the death of the Rev. R. H. Barham, which took place at his residence, Amen Corner, St. Paul's, on Tuesday. Mr. Barham was one of the Canons of St. Paul's; and the literary world were well aware of his being the author of the very humorous poetical effusions, published under the name of "Thomas Ingoldsby." Some years ago he wrote a humorous poetical sketch, called "Valpurgis," which appeared in a weekly paper; and he was also the author of a very clever novel, "Cousin Nicholas." In private society he was very generally esteemed, and we are sure that his friends will sincerely regret his death. Mr. Barham had a fund of wit and humour; but he was also a man of learning and distinguished talent. Very few men ever united in so eminent a degree sparkling gaiety with the sterner attributes of scholastic knowledge. By the death of Mr. Barham, the rectory of St. Augustine and St. Faith, Watling-street, has become vacant. The canonry in St. Paul's is in the gift of the Lord Bishop of London; the rectory of St. Augustine is at the disposal of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. The rev. gentleman was also a priest of her Majesty's Chapel Royal.

SUMMARY OF RAILWAY FACTS.—The York and Scarborough line is to be opened on the 1st of July. The act was only got last session.——The new railway schemes for the past week were fourteen in number. They are the Limerick and Clare Union; the Charleroi and Erquelinnes; the Sambre and Meuse; Dublin and Armagh (inland); the City of London Junction, to connect at one station all the lines in the kingdom; the London and Oxford direct; the Great Central Sardinian; Great Hungarian; Ontario and Huron; Tean and Dewe Valley, and Eastern and Western Junction; Rugby, Market Harborough, and Cambridge; East and West of England Junction; Buckingham and London; and Birmingham, Edinburgh, and Peebles.——The Committee on the South Wales Railway Bill have come to the following decision—"The committee are of opinion that, although the preamble of the bill is proved, the success of the whole scheme of the South Wales Railway so entirely depends upon that part of the work to which the Admiralty objects, that they cannot consent to proceed with the investigation of a measure which the promoters have not the power of accomplishing."——The Court of Directors have appointed an experienced person as Surveyor of Railways in India, at a salary of £4000 a year for five years, and £500 for his passage, &c., out, and the same sum home.——The Committee on the Coventry, Bedworth, and Nuneaton Railway, have decided that the preamble of the bill is not proved.——The Committee on the Great Grimsby and Sheffield Railway, have decided that the preamble has been proved.——The Committee on the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth Railway have decided that the preamble had been proved, but that they considered it necessary to append to their report a special proviso, to the effect that so important an undertaking as a line from London to Falmouth should not be impeded by the passing of this bill.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

In the absence of concerts and balls, in which the aristocratic celebrities bore their part, nothing now meets the ear but handicaps, jockeys, and gentlemen riders; the jeu d'esprits that erewhile gave brilliancy to the salons, have fallen to the sayings and doings of the turf. To be sure, notwithstanding the absence of certain persons of consequence, there is still a sort of miniature Congress of Tilsit; we have amongst us the Prince de Saxe Weimar, the Prince of Syracuse, the Prince of Asturias, the Prince of Hesse Philipstahl, and last, though not least, the Prince de Montfort, nephew of Napoleon. The latter has taken up his residence at the hotel Demidoff; he has been fêted at M. de Vatry's, and M. Cremieux has come in for his share of the honour of playing the Amphytrion to the relation of the Man of St. Helena. Now a Parisian fête minus vocal celebrities, is deemed decidedly snobbish: you have the Italian singing-birds—the Opera Comique was acting—so recourse was had to the singers of the Academie, who attended, with the exception of Madame Stoltz, and the tenor Gardoni. At length, the son of Jerome is left to his repose, as, all the gods be thanked, are the races. The prize for the best trotter is the most useful of all description of racing for this country; as, without exception, Frenchmen are the worst riders in Europe, and any discoverable means of improvement is beneficial. Three gentlemen-riders started for a 500 franc purse—the gift of Mdlle. Ozy, who has recently quitted the Variétés for Mitchell's French Plays; and as, in old Rome, Flora gave holidays for the people, there is no earthly reason why an actress should not institute equestrian prizes. The great fashion has been to send forward the vehicles to the course in the morning, so that a grand circle may be formed of equipages. Armande, of the Café Anglais, and Arsene, of the Maison d' Or, both started phaetons with four horses—mains, tails, plaited with party-coloured ribbons—the actresses of the Variétés and the Palais Royale carried all before them.

A great sensation has been excited amongst all classes by a new invention of M. Daguerré. He has discovered a means by which he can produce, in three months, a young tree, with the same development which now takes three or four years to produce. Numberless essays have already perfectly succeeded. The invention consists in a sort of graft applied near the root of the tree. In cutting the tree, after this hasty growth, it is found that the fibres are as compact as those trees that have acquired their development in the usual time. The immense advantages which such a discovery must lead to may be easily conceived; there will be no future fear of disforesting, and the French people may laugh to scorn coal mines and Newcastle!

A most interesting paper has just been published, giving the statistics of the Religious, Civil, Military, and Financial Administration of France. I will send you the pamphlet. There is no country of Europe where so many official documents are published; but their general absence of method, and their slovenly classification of facts, neutralize their usefulness. The pamphlet is not a simple catalogue of gross amounts, but explains how each function is exercised. The receipts and the expences are so placed that one is enabled to seize at a single glance the resources and the expenditure of each department; the ordinary and extraordinary receipts and the outlay. The order of the items is the same as those established in the Budget of 1846. I will merely select a portion of the article on one class of religious worship—the Catholic. In the religious report France is divided into eighty dioceses, at the head of which are found eighty prelates.

1 Archbishop of Paris, 40,000 francs.
14 Archbishops, at 15,000f.—210,000f.
65 Bishops, at 10,000f.—650.000.

Independently of other large sums the Archbishop of Lyons and the Bishop of Arras receive in their quality of Cardinals a supplement of 10,000 francs. There are 170 Vicar-generals receiving 368,000f.; 661 Canons, 1,005,000f.; and 3301 Curates with 4,206,000f. These sums do not include innumerable indemnities; for instance 82,000f. for diocesan visits; for the establishment of dignitaries, 40,000f.; for expenses of Bulls and informations, 20,000f. The Hierarchy of all countries, from that of the Nile to that of infidel France, set up Mammon and the Golden Calf as the symbol of their idolatry. What a slice out of the income of the estate. A third of this sum devoted to charitable purposes, and the hearts of the poor would sing aloud and rejoice exceedingly.

FRANCE.

There is no news of importance in the Paris Papers, but a rumour prevailed in the capital that some unpleasant accounts had reached the Government from Morocco. A Cabinet Council, supposed to be upon this subject, was held on Tuesday, at which the King presided.

The Chamber of Deputies on Monday, after a warm debate, determined to discuss the following bills before the conclusion of the session:—The bill for establishing a correspondence by steamboats between France and the continent of America; the bill for completing the works for improving the harbour of Toulon and that of Port Vendres; the Paris and Strasbourg and Tours and Nantes Railroad bills; the bills for an embranchment from the Rouen and Havre Railroad to Dieppe and Fécamp, and a branch to Aix from the Marseilles and Avignon Railroad; the bill for establishing a branch of the Bank of France at Algiers; the bill for rescinding the 8th clause of the Railroad Bill passed on the 11th of June, 1842.

The budget of the War Department was also discussed on that day. Some reductions were suggested, but as the budget stands, the French army is to amount in 1846, to 340,000 men and above 81,000 horses, exclusive of the extraordinary forces always demanded for Algeria.

The Committee of the Chamber of Deputies on the Great Western Railroad met on Tuesday, and heard a proposition made by a new company, formed of those of Rouen, Versailles (Right Bank), and Versailles (Left Bank), to execute branch lines to Lisieux and to Alençon. Should the direction of Le Mans prevail, it was argued that the localities now demanding the postponement of the measure would be, by this arrangement, fully satisfied. The committee, in concert with the Minister of Public Works, has, it is said, accepted this offer, and the report is to be presented immediately.

The Peers assembled on Tuesday in their bureaux to examine the Paris and Lyons and the Lyons and Avignon Railroad Bill, and appoint a committee to report upon it, the members of which were all favourable to the bill.

The nuptials of the Duke de Glucksberg, First Secretary of the French Embassy at Madrid, with Mademoiselle Hochet, daughter of the former Secretary of the Council of State, were celebrated with extraordinary pomp at St. Thomas d'Aquin, Paris, on Monday. The young couple afterwards left for Decazeville, from which they will proceed to Madrid.

The sudden and extraordinary increase of temperature has been accompanied by storms in almost every part of France. The cities of Nantes, Angers, Tours, Bourges, Arras, and Laon, have been visited by violent storms, during which, particularly at Tours, loud claps of thunder were heard. At Nantes, the effects produced by the approaching storm were most extraordinary. The sky was covered with clouds, which descended to the earth, and cast a phosphoric hue over the city. The storm was everywhere accompanied or followed by torrents of rain, and by a tempestuous wind. Fortunately, there was but little injury sustained in consequence of the thunder, except in the neighbourhood of Tours.

The Moniteur Algerien of the 10th inst. brings accounts of more razzias performed by Marshal Bugeaud. On the 26th ult. the Marshal executed one on the territory of the Defeten, who bravely defended themselves, but were, of course, ultimately overpowered, and put to flight, with the loss of 55 killed, a number of prisoners, 3000 head of cattle, and a considerable booty. On the 1st of June the Governor-General surprised the Ouled-Bou-Selimans, made 180 prisoners, and captured 1500 head of cattle, besides a rich booty, which fell into the hands of the auxiliary Arabs. On the same day the djemmas of the Keraichs, Allouyas, Beni-Tigrins, and Defetens, presented themselves to the Marshal, who merely required them to give up their arms. It appears that Abd-el-Kader had been met at Ksar-Beida, near Taguine, 45 leagues to the south of Teneit-el-Had. Dellys and its neighbourhood were perfectly tranquil, and a partial revolt, raised by Bel-Kassem, former Aga of Abd el-Kader, among the Oulad-Bou-Khalifas, had been easily repressed by the native authorities.

BELGIUM.

Our intelligence from Belgium is important. The result of the elections for the partial renewal of the Chamber of Representatives having been rather unfavourable to the Ministers they had become apprehensive that they should not command a majority, and they consequently tendered en masse their resignation. This step has not been taken without due consideration, nor without a strenuous opposition at first on the part of two members of the Government, viz., M. Nothumb, Minister of the Interior; and M. Mercier, Minister of Finance. Both contended (particularly the former), at recent Cabinet Councils, presided over by the King, that a constitutional Cabinet should not retire because their candidates were defeated in two or more places, but should await the decision of the Chambers, and be guided by the expressed opinions of the majority. This opinion was not entertained by the other members of the Government, particularly by Count Goblet, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, who was the first to direct the attention of the King to the difficult position of the Administration, and the first to express the necessity of resigning. His Majesty, it appears, was at first disposed to coincide with the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Finance, but afterwards yielded to the arguments of Count Goblet. The Ministers themselves finally resolved, in order to leave the King free to accept or not the resignation of all or any of the members of the Cabinet, to tender their resignations, which they all accordingly did.

In consequence of this Ministerial crisis, the proposed visit of the King and the Queen of the Belgians to England is postponed for the present.

ARRIVAL OF THE OVERLAND MAIL.

INDIA AND CHINA.

The half monthly Overland Mail from India has arrived. It brings letters and papers from Bombay to the 12th of May.

The intelligence they contain is not of striking importance.

The chief subject of interest is the continuation of the intrigues at Lahore.

From Affghanistan we learn that an early invasion of Peshawur is still in contemplation, but that no actual measure of aggression has yet been ventured upon.—China news, reaching to the 16th of March, has been received but is chiefly of commercial interest. It is said that the Emperor has at length consented to tolerate the Christian religion.

In the interior of India tranquillity prevails. The death of old Chundoo Loll, Prime Minister of the Nizam, has taken place. The Mahratta country was quiet. The court-martial on Colonel Wallace had terminated, but the decision was not known.

Scinde was tranquil and healthful: one or more of the Bombay regiments were expected to leave before the rains began.

We are sorry to notice the death, at Calcutta, from cholera, of Major-General Sir T. Valiant, K.C.B., a veteran officer of distinction, well known and very highly esteemed in the Bombay Presidency.

There have been several frightful murders amongst the natives in Bombay.

No change of moment had occurred in the money market of Calcutta. There continued to be a considerable discrepancy in the rate of discount between the government paper and that of the private merchants even of the highest standing.

The news from China is to the end of March. The Emperor had received some favourable notices of Christianity, and was disposed to tolerate it. Lieutenant A. M'Donald, of her Majesty's 98th regiment, had been tried by a court-martial, for sending an insulting note to his superior officer: he was sentenced to be cashiered; but, on a revision, a milder punishment has been inflicted.

THE WATERLOO BANQUET.

On Wednesday evening the Duke of Wellington gave his annual banquet at Apsley House, in celebration of the battle of Waterloo, it being the 30th anniversary of that glorious achievement of British arms.

In the course of the day above 700 congratulatory visits were made to the Duke, the "hero of the fight," at Apsley House, including our Royal family, and the leading aristocracy of this country, as well as several of the foreign Ministers.

The guests began to arrive shortly after half-past six, and at a few minutes before seven his Royal Highness Prince Albert arrived.

As the Prince alighted from the Royal carriage he was accompanied by the full band of the Grenadier Guards (the duke's regiment), playing the National Anthem, a mark of respect observed also at his departure. His Royal Highness wore the full uniform of Colonel of the Scots Fusilier Guards. The Marquis of Exeter and his Royal Highness were the only exceptions to the whole of the guests being "Waterloo men."

The Duke of Wellington, who, on this occasion, was attired in the uniform of Field Marshal, received his Royal guest with every distinction.

The arrangements, as regarded the banquet, were precisely the same as those which have been observed for a succession of years past. It was served up in the splendid Picture Gallery, the walls of which are hung with a collection of the most valuable paintings of the Spanish, Italian, German, Flemish, and other schools. On the side-board at the north end of the gallery there was the customary gorgeous display of gold plate, presents from several of the continental Sovereigns, and gifts from the citizens of London, &c. The enormous gold shield, designed by Flaxman, illustrating the different battles and engagements in which the Duke and his brave companions in arms took part, was, perhaps, the most conspicuous from its large dimensions. The Saloon and adjoining Drawing-room were appropriated for the reception of the company, who, at quarter past seven, repaired to the Banquetting Gallery. Covers were laid, on this occasion, for 76.

The banquet was served up in a style of princely magnificence, and the repast, as may be imagined, consisted of all the choicest delicacies procurable, and the most recherché wines.

The Duke of Wellington was supported on the right by his Royal Highness Prince Albert and the Marquis of Anglesey, and on his left hand sat his Excellency Prince Castelcicala and his Excellency Count Kielmansegge, the Hanoverian Minister.

The full band of the Grenadier Guards, on the guests of his Grace becoming seated, removed from the inner hall to an ante-room immediately adjoining the gallery, and there performed, during dinner, a selection of music.

It was ten minutes past ten when the Royal Prince left the Banquetting Room, and in a quarter of an hour afterwards his Royal Highness took his departure for Buckingham Palace.

The Duke of Wellington subsequently honoured Lady Feversham with his company at her ladyship's ball, in Belgrave-square.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

"THE MORNING POST" AND THE LONDON REPEALERS.—In the Court of COMMON PLEAS, on Wednesday, an action was tried—O'Connell v. Payne and others, for a libel. The plaintiff is Mr. W. J. O'Connell, who is a cousin of Mr. Daniel O'Connell, and the defendants are the registered proprietors of the Morning Post. The libel complained of was a statement, professedly taken from a Repeal organ, to the effect that Mr. O'Connell could only be seen on Sundays, as he was afraid of an arrest. It went on to state that Mr. W. J. O'Connell had been entrusted with money by a lady named Moss, "to pay bills, to the tune of £200 or £300. He, instead of paying the bills, otherwise employed the cash. She therefore wishes to arrest him, in the hope that the Association will pay the money, and save him from disgrace." Mr. Sergeant Talfourd, on the part of the defendants, contended that they had no intention to injure the character of the plaintiff. Mr. Justice Erle, in summing up, gave this definition of a libel. He said, any party had undoubtedly a right to complain of a libel, if anything was published that was injurious to his reputation, or tended to bring him into hatred, ridicule, or contempt, except under certain circumstances, such as privileged communications as to the character of a servant, &c. No such peculiar circumstances, however, in his opinion, existed here to take the case out of the general rule. It would therefore be for them to say whether the article in question was such as to bring Mr. O'Connell into hatred, ridicule, or contempt; and, as far as his own impression went, there was no doubt that such was likely to be the effect of the libel upon which this action was founded. The jury retired for about twenty minutes; and, on their return, delivered a verdict for the plaintiff, damages £50.

THE SPA-FIELDS BURIAL GROUND.—In the Court of QUEEN'S BENCH, on Thursday, the Solicitor-General appeared to support the proceedings taken with a view to abate the nuisance complained of at the Spa fields Burial-Ground about four months ago, an account of which was given in our paper at the time. The practices with respect to the burial of the dead then excited, as will be recollected, considerable attention. The owners of the burial ground consented to plead guilty to the sixth count, and ultimately the following decision was agreed upon:—"That the defendants should plead guilty to the sixth count; that the residue of the indictment should be referred to the decision of Mr. Brannell, who is to direct in what manner the burial-ground is to be in future conducted. Judgment of the Court to be respited for one year; and if the directions of Mr. Brannell are complied with, no further proceedings to be taken—no costs on either side—no arrest of judgment or writ of error. The costs of arbitration to be paid by the prosecutors and defendants, each a moiety."

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

SUDDEN DEATH.—Mr. Ambrose Humphrys, Deputy Chairman of the Great Western Railway, died suddenly, at his residence, on Saturday last. He had attended, during the day, to his usual business, and had proposed an early dinner, with the intention of getting to the Opera, with his daughter, in good time. When at dinner he complained of illness, and retired to the sofa in the dining-room, and was a corpse in a few minutes. So sudden was his demise, that the family present thought it a fainting fit only. Drs. Wilson, Leicester, and Heaviside, were immediately called in, and they pronounced him dead.

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE GREAT NORTH OF ENGLAND RAILWAY.—On Friday evening week a fatal accident occurred at the Shipton station of the Great North of England Railway. It appears that a labouring man named Gibson, residing at Topcliffe-hall, had been visiting two daughters at Beningbrough-hall, where they were in service. In returning home, he was accompanied by one of them to the above station, for the purpose of taking the five o'clock mail train, and whilst there Gibson walked several times along and across the rails. Soon afterwards the train in question arrived, and the daughter was then the painful observer of her father's death, the engine knocking him down, and killing him on the spot.

SUSPECTED PARRICIDE AT CARLISLE.—The Carlisle Journal states that Mr. John Graham, an opulent turner, residing at Kirk Andrew, has been taken into custody on a charge of poisoning his wife and his father. The bodies have been exhumed, and the circumstances attending the death of each case are at present under investigation before the Coroner.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT DONCASTER.—On Sunday last nine young men got into a "float," and crossed the river Dun, for the purpose of walking about the fields. Here they continued for some time, and again got into the "float," for the purpose of returning home. When about half way across, one of the party, in a joking manner, gave his brother a slight push, the effect of which was to swamp the float, when the whole were precipitated into the water. Assistance was promptly rendered by those on shore, but, notwithstanding, three of the young men sank, and it was some time before they could be got out. Every means were taken to recover animation, but without effect.

A WIFE MURDERED BY HER HUSBAND, AT DURHAM.—Mr. Louis Henry Goulé, Superintendent of the County Police, has been lodged in Durham Gaol, on a charge of having shot his wife, and assaulted in a very grievous manner, Mr. Walter Scruton, a solicitor, and Deputy Clerk of the Peace for the county. Whilst in prison Goulé attempted suicide by cutting his throat with a penknife; fortunately, however, the wound was immediately sewed up, and he is now recovering. The alleged reason for the act is, that Mr. Scruton had been in the habit of visiting Mr. Goulé's wife during his absence from home, and it had been currently rumoured that Goulé actually caught Mr. Scruton in the house under suspicious circumstances; but there does not appear any ground for believing this to have been the case. The fatal occurrence took place on Tuesday week, and Mrs. Goulé died last Monday. At the inquest, the Jury returned a verdict of "Manslaughter" against the prisoner Goulé.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

THE PENSION TO SIR H. POTTINGER.—The Earl of ABERDEEN, after a becoming tribute to Sir Henry Pottinger, moved an address in answer to her Majesty's Message, assuring her Majesty that their lordships would cheerfully concur in measures to secure the pension of £1500 to Sir H. Pottinger for life.—The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH admitted the services of Sir H. Pottinger, but regretted that no public rewards had been conferred upon the officers of the army and navy engaged in the operations against China, particularly on Sir W. Parker, who conducted them with such extraordinary skill and success.—The Earl of HADDINGTON reminded the house that no time had been lost in conveying to the officers and men engaged in China the thanks of both Houses of Parliament. Sir W. Parker had also received the Grand Cross of the Bath, was created a baronet, and had recently been appointed to the command in the Mediterranean.—The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH explained that he had referred, not to honours, but pecuniary rewards, to which he thought Sir William Parker was eminently entitled, for his great public services.—The address was unanimously agreed to.

THIRD READING OF THE MAYNOOTH GRANT BILL.—The Duke of WELLINGTON having moved the third reading of this bill, Lord CAMPBELL strongly supported it, and expressed his earnest hope that the present Government might remain long in office, in order to carry out the course of policy upon which it had entered.—The Bishop of LLANDAFF opposed the measure, which was supported by the Earls of Ellenborough and Shrewsbury.—The Duke of NEWCASTLE argued at great length against the bill.—The Duke of WELLINGTON, in supporting the bill, said it was an isolated measure altogether, unconnected with any project for endowing the Roman Catholic priesthood, or any other measure of a similar nature.—The Earl of WICKLOW supported the bill, which was opposed strenuously by the Marquis of BREADALBANE.—The Earls of CHICHESTER and ROSSE supported the bill.—The Earl of CLANCARTY repeated his objections to the bill on religious grounds.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE strongly advocated it.—On a division there appeared, for the third reading—

Content—Present	104
Proxies	77	—181
Non content—Present	34
Proxies	16	— 50
Majority for the third reading		—131

The Earl of WINCHILSEA then proposed an amendment limiting the operation of the bill to three years, but the amendment was negatived without a division, and the bill was read a third time and passed.

The house adjourned at one o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

BREACH OF PRIVILEGE.—Mr. ROEBUCK complained of a letter which had been written to him by Mr. Somers, member for Sligo, in reference to some observations he (Mr. Roebuck) had made on Friday evening. In this letter Mr. Somers, after stating that he had been absent from the house at the time, went on to say, "I beg to ask whether the following words were used by you, or words to the same effect:—'This consideration might have led to what had been witnessed, and those who followed in the train of such a leader deserved little respect either for their position or their intellect.' If you used these words, the insult they convey to me, as a Repealer, is plain. My second question, therefore, is, are you prepared to justify them? The meaning of the word I have underlined you are, I am sure, too well read in the history of chivalry to misunderstand." (Laughter.) Mr. Roebuck stated, that, in his answer to Mr. Somers, he had told him he should refer the matter to the House of Commons, adding, "I am determined that the free expression of opinion shall not in my person be coerced or checked (hear, hear), and I shall, therefore, take the most stringent and effective means to punish your present menace and put down all future violence. I hope you are sufficiently well read in the laws of your country to understand this intimation." Mr. Roebuck went on to ridicule the idea that duelling proved that a man had courage, and said it was wiser to adopt the course he had done of throwing himself upon the protection of the house. Mr. Roebuck, in conclusion, moved that Mr. Somers was guilty of contempt, and of a breach of the privileges of the house.—Lord ASHLEY had great satisfaction in seconding the motion, and tendered to Mr. Roebuck his thanks, and he believed he might say, also, the thanks of the house and of the great mass of the public, who abhorred this disgusting practice, for the manly and courageous course he had pursued. (Great cheering.)—Mr. SOMERS said that, perceiving the feeling of the house, he was willing to withdraw that letter, in unaffected deference to its wishes. At the same time he must say that Mr. Roebuck was not very careful in the attacks he made on individuals.—A desultory conversation arose, and while Sir H. W. BARRON was addressing the house, Mr. O'Connell entered and took his seat, amidst great laughter and some cheering, caused by an allusion made at the moment by Sir H. W. Barron to Mr. O'Connell's vow registered in heaven.—Mr. Roebuck's motion was carried with the omission of the words, "contempt and."

SIR H. POTTINGER.—An address, similar to that moved in the House of Lords, was unanimously agreed to, enabling her Majesty to grant a pension of £1500 a-year to Sir H. Pottinger.

BANKING (IRELAND) BILL.—This bill was read a third time and passed.

The Report on the Colleges (Ireland) Bill was received, and the house adjourned at half-past ten.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

NATIONAL EDUCATION IN IRELAND.—The Bishop of CASHEL, in presenting some petitions from Ireland, complaining of practices that prevailed throughout that country of preventing scriptural education there, took the opportunity of reviewing the national system of education in Ireland, which he condemned as incomplete, and inadequate to its professed purpose, while injuriously interfering with the voluntary exertions of the friends of Scriptural education through the agency of the Established Church.—Earl St. GERMANS adduced documentary evidence in the defence of the national system from the attacks of the right reverend prelate, and contended that it worked most beneficially for the rising generation in Ireland.—A long discussion took place upon the subject, which was terminated by an exhortation from the Duke of WELLINGTON to the clergy. His Grace said—"He having acted upon those principles of concurrence in the law, advised, nay earnestly urged, the clergy of the church of Ireland—let their votes and speeches be what they would—to act as men professing religious opinions and acting upon Christian principles. He entreated them to do their duty as good subjects, and as men who were willing to obey the laws under which they lived."—The house adjourned at ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

THE COLONY OF NEW ZEALAND.—Mr. C. BULLER brought the case of the New Zealand Company against the Government under the consideration of the house, in a speech of great length. He said he should move that the house should resolve itself into a committee of the whole house to consider of a series of 18 resolutions, embodying the grievances complained of by the company. He commented severely upon the course which he said was pursued in order to obtain the signatures of the New Zealand chiefs to the treaty of Waitangi. A blanket, he said, was given to each chief for his signature, while in some instances a small quantity of tobacco, or a glass of rum, was thrown into the bargain. In fact the chiefs did not understand what they were doing, and they now alleged their ignorance of its purport as a reason for not acknowledging the treaty. Instead of relying upon the right of discovery, the Government had contrived to get the confederated chiefs to issue a decree of independence, in order that they might subsequently barter away that independence to the Crown of England. It was in his opinion an error, which had been productive of very injurious consequences, to have acknowledged a right of property on the part of the natives of New Zealand in all the wild lands of those islands after the sovereignty had been assumed by her Majesty. He was of opinion that the New Zealand Company was peculiarly entitled to the consideration of the Government, for had it not been for the proceedings of the company, it was the intention, as had been since declared, of Louis Philippe to have undertaken the colonisation of those islands. Mr. Charles Buller then entered at great length into the negociations carried on between Lord Stanley and the company, attributing much of the evil which had taken place to the pertinacity of the noble lord in the maintenance of his own views. The company had spent of their own capital no less than £300,000, and had spent another £300,000, which they had caused to be raised to carry on the business of emigration, and yet in consequence of all this they had not as yet got the grant of a single acre of land, and their whole capital was exhausted. Deplorable as this might be, the losses of the company were as nothing when compared to the condition to which the unfortunate settlers were reduced by the course pursued by the Colonial Office. All this mischief, too, had been inflicted without producing the slightest countervailing advantage to the natives.—Mr. BULLER devoted nearly four hours to his views upon the subject, and concluded by moving for a committee of the whole house to consider the state of New Zealand, and the case of the New Zealand Company.—Mr. M. MILNES seconded the motion.—Mr. HOPE entered at great length into the defence of the policy of Lord Stanley, which was in accordance with the provisions laid down by the Marquis of Normanby, when the sovereignty of the country was first assumed by this country. The Marquis of Normanby, as well as Lord John Russell, had issued instructions to the effect that the natives should be considered as owners of the soil, and that no purchases from them should be recognised as valid unless made by the Governor, on the part of her Majesty's Government. The company contended that the rights of the natives to any property in the waste lands should not be recognised—that they should be blotted out; but this was totally at variance with the principles laid down by the Marquis of Normanby and by Lord John Russell, upon which principles Lord Stanley had uniformly acted. With respect to Captain Fitzroy, he was not prepared to justify all that he had done, but he believed that that gallant officer had done himself great injustice in not sending home fuller information than he had done as to all the transactions in which he had been engaged. Mr. Hope objected most strongly to the resolutions proposed by Mr. C. Buller, and to the course which he proposed to pursue, as calculated at once to unite against this country the whole of the now scattered chiefs of New Zealand.

At half-past twelve o'clock, the debate was adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

THE ADJOURNED DEBATE.—The debate on Mr. C. Buller's motion relative to New Zealand was resumed by Captain ROUS, who went into a history of the proceedings of the New Zealand Company, which he commented upon in terms of unqualified condemnation, and defended Capt. Fitzroy.—Mr. AGLIONBY entered into a defence of the Company from the attacks of Captain Rous, which were, he contended, founded on misinformation. In order to enable the gallant officer to form a more correct judgment, he would be happy to place before him every document without reserve in the possession of the New Zealand Company.—Mr. BARKLEY, the new member for Leominster, said he was at all times desirous of supporting the policy of the Government, yet could not avoid voting against them in the present instance. He should be sorry, however, if his support of the motion of Mr. Buller should be construed into a want of confidence in the Government.—Sir R. H. INGLIS contended that this country had no right whatever to colonise New Zealand, especially after having recognised it as an independent state.—Mr. HAWES contended that all the evils of the colony were attributable to the course pursued by the Colonial Office, and that the remedies now proposed by the Government would not prove efficient.—Sir H. DOUGLAS strongly urged the necessity for maintaining inviolate the treaty of Waitangi. The failure of the Company was so signal that he hoped the Government would raise New Zealand into that higher description of colony which was governed by representation, as the only remedy for the existing evils arising from the errors of the Company.—Lord HOWICK agreed that the most likely remedy was to apply the principle of self-government to New Zealand. The policy hitherto adopted was faulty, and thus believing he would vote for going into committee, though he could not support the resolutions without very considerable qualification.—At half-past one o'clock the debate was again adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

THE SMALL DEBTS BILL.—Lord BROUGHAM introduced a Bill, the words objected to by the Commons being omitted, and it was read a first time.

THE BISHOPS' PATRONAGE (IRELAND) BILL.—The second reading of this Bill was carried after a division, by 35 to 19.

The house adjourned at half-past six, till Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE ADJOURNED DEBATE ON NEW ZEALAND.—Mr. ELLICE recommenced the adjourned debate on Mr. C. Buller's motion.—After a long discussion, which was closed by Sir R. PEEL, the house divided. The numbers were—

For the resolutions	172
Against	223
Majority against the resolutions		—51

The house adjourned at three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

RAILWAY BILLS.—The following bills were read a third time and passed:—the London and Brighton Railway Bill (Horsham Branch), the Londonderry and Coleraine Railway Bill, the Londonderry and Enniskillen Railway Bill, the North Wales Mineral Railway Bill, and the Eastern Union Railway Act Amendment Bill. On the order of the day for the further consideration of the Report on the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway Bill, Mr. COBDEN moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the practicability of establishing one uniform guage on railways now in the course of construction. A long and animated discussion arose in a very full house. On a division the numbers were—

For Receiving the Report	247
For Mr. Cobden's proposal	113
Majority for Receiving the Report		—134

OXFORD AND RUGBY RAILWAY.—On the question that the Report on the Oxford and Rugby Railway Bill be received, Mr. LOCKHART moved, as an amendment, that the Report be received that day six months. The discussion upon this subject occupied a considerable time. Ultimately the amendment was rejected, and the Report was received.

On the question that the house should resolve into Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. EDWARD BULLER moved for the repeal of the duty on tallow.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER opposed the proposition on financial grounds.—It was eventually withdrawn.

Nothing else of interest occurred up to the adjournment, which did not take place till past midnight.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.—LORDS.

BILLS READ A THIRD TIME.—The following bills have been read a third time and passed:—The Death by Accident Compensation Bill; the Deodands Bill; the Canal Companies Tolls Bill; the Dunstable and Birmingham Railway Bill; and the London, York, and Scarborough Deviation Railway Bill.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.—COMMONS.

RAILWAY BILLS.—The following railway bills have been read a third time and passed:—The Blackburn and Preston Railway Bill; the Newcastle and Darlington (Brandling Junction) Railway Bill; the Sheffield and Rotherham Railway Bill; the Taw Vale Railway and Dock Bill; the Glasgow, Garnkirk, and Coatbridge Railway Bill; the London and Enniskillen Railway Bill; the Manchester and Birmingham (Ashton Branch) Railway Bill; the North Wales Railway Bill; the North Woolwich Railway Bill; the Eastern Union and Bury St. Edmund's Railway (No. 2) Bill; the Dundalk and Enniskillen Railway Bill; the Waterford and Limerick Railway Bill; the Glasgow, Paisley, and Kilmarnock Railway Bill; and the Whitehaven and Furness Junction Railway Bill.

THE SMALL DEBTS BILL.—Lord Brougham's Bill to amend the Insolvent Act of last session has been introduced into the Commons, but it was withdrawn in consequence of the House of Lords having introduced a money clause. Another bill is to be prepared by Mr. F. Kelly.

THE LATE FATAL DUEL AT GOSPORT.

On Tuesday last the inquiry relative to the death of the late Mr. James Alexander Seton was resumed and concluded before the Coroner for the borough of Portsmouth, at the Guildhall, when, as on the former part of the inquiry, considerable interest was manifested, and a large number of naval and military officers were present.

Isabella Frances Hawkey was called, and sworn:—I knew Mr. Seton. The first time I saw him was in the month of April last. I was introduced to him in the month of May. He said to Mr. Hawkey that all his acquaintances had left the rooms, and he wished to be introduced to me. My husband did so, and I danced with him on that occasion. He went away then. He expressed a wish that I should call on Mrs. Seton. I saw him once afterwards, when I went to hear the band play, on a Monday. Shortly after I went with Mr. Hawkey to Gosport. I saw Mr. Seton. He said that he had called on me with his friend Mr. Pits. He said he had left a music-book for me at my house. He said he would come again in half an hour. My husband did not then go out for a ride, as he wished to be at home when Mr. Seton called. I called on Mr. Seton by engagement. As I was sitting on a chair by the sofa, about a week or a fortnight after the first introduction, he opened a desk, and showed me some dice. He showed me also a ring out of the desk. I stayed and spent the evening. As he handed me a glass of wine, he said something I have forgot. He asked me if I would be at home at twelve the next day, if he called and brought the book. I was always at home till two, when I used to walk out with Mr. Hawkey. Mr. Seton asked Mr. Hawkey to let me go with Mrs. Seton to see the drill next day. Mr. Hawkey consented, and told me to go. Mr. Seton called the next day about two o'clock. He remained at my house nearly an hour. That was on a Thursday. I forget the date. I made an observation as to Mrs. Seton waiting for me. He replied he did not care. I never took Mr. Seton's arm in my walk. It came on to rain. I went to Mr. Seton's, but not to the drill. They engaged me to dine with them on the next Saturday. He offered me his arm on that day. I declined it, and he said, "If one lady does it, another may—my wife is walking with Mr. Maugin." I said my husband did not like it. We went into Portsmouth that afternoon. I know Mr. Tattnell and Mr. Cleveland. Mr. Seton left me because there was not room for us all to walk together. He did not say anything. I saw him on the afternoon of the following day. He said that Mrs. Seton and Mr. Maugin had said to him that he ought not to be turned out by any one, much less a naval man. I think he said so, because I spoke to Mr. Tattnell. The day after the last transaction, Mr. Seton came to my house. On Monday, Mr. Seton called, and said he knew my husband was out. Mr. Tattnell came in, and Mr. Seton said he was not wanted there—he might go. My husband came in, when they both left. On the Sunday before, while going to church, we met Mr. Seton, who said something I have forgot. On Tuesday he called, and asked if my husband was going to Soberton races. I said yes. He said that he intended to go, but that if Mr. Hawkey went he should not go. He said he had a great deal to say to me, and would come again on that day. My husband did not go to drill on that day. I know Mr. Pym. He came to lunch with us on that day. Mr. Seton came in while my husband and Mr. Pym were in the room. He was not announced by the servants. Mr. Hawkey and Mr. Pym were sitting behind the door. I do not think he saw them when he first entered. He started back when he saw they were there. It attracted Mr. Pym's and Mr. Hawkey's notice. I saw Mr. Seton on the following Monday at the soirée. He made me a present of a bouquet of flowers, for which my husband thanked him. He danced with me several times. On one occasion he called on me when Mr. Hawkey was at drill. He said he knew Mr. Hawkey to be a quarrelsome fellow. He said he knew he should have to go out with Mr. Hawkey in the end, and that he should not go out on the common for nothing. If he gained his point he would not mind. I cannot tell the date of this conversation. There was a knock at the door at the time. He said, "Good God, here is Hawkey." He ran to the table for his hat, and said, "Can't you let me out?" It was Mr. Pym that came in. Mr. Hawkey noticed on that afternoon that I was silent, and asked if Mr. Seton had annoyed me? On another occasion he offered me something, and said if I did not accept what he offered he could not have any tie over me; and said, "Perhaps you do not think it of sufficient value." I told him not to insult me any more by such offers. He said place yourself in the positionof some one whose name I do not know, and with the colonel of our regiment, He said that Lord Cardigan had given that person £1000 worth of jewellery. He said, "Would that be any inducement to you?" I said "No." He said, "If those are your ideas a man has no chance." I remonstrated with him. and told him he was a married man. He said, "I don't care about her nor she about me—we both please ourselves." I forget whether Mr. Hawkey came in at that time. I did not relate the conversation to my husband at that time. I told Mr. Pym. I said, "If he continued to annoy me I should go home to my mother's at Rochester." He said he wished I would, it was all on his road to Maidstone. My husband is very tenacious, and therefore I did not tell him. I afterwards saw Mr. Seton, when Mrs. Seton was gone to London. It was at my own house the day his wife went to London. He told me he had just seen her off. There was a soirée on that evening. I went to it. Mr. Seton was there. He said to me he was very unhappy, and said if nothing else would make me like him, sympathy ought. I saw Mr. Seton two days after. He called with Mrs. Seton. I recollect going to the rooms with Mr. and Mrs. Seton. Mr. Pym and Mr. Hawkey joined us there. My husband said he was much displeased at seeing me with him. I did not know my husband was aware of Seton's attention to me until the Sunday before the duel. Mr. Hawkey on that day said he had something to say to me. I went to Anglesey with him in the afternoon, when he told me he was angry at my not telling him what I had told Mr. Pym, and that if I told him all he would not take any notice of it. I then told him several things about Mr. Seton's conduct to me. He did not say much, but did not seem at all pleased. I met Mr. Seton on Monday, the 19th of May. I bowed to him, but Mr. Hawkey would not let me stop. I afterwards saw him at the soirée the same evening. I had promised a week before to dance with him. When he asked me to do so, I said I could not. He said if I did not dance with him it must be Hawkey's fault, and that he would ask an explanation. I told him to do so, and that most likely he would give him one. I asked Mr. Hawkey what I should do? He said, "You may dance a quadrille." That was all I danced with him. H asked why I passed Mrs. Seton, and said, if you do not know her you do not know me." He said, on the same evening, 'Whatever your husband says to me I shall not go out with him; it is impossible for a cavalry man to mix himself up with an infantry man." My husband wished to sit down by me, but Mr. Seton would not move. My husband said to him, "May I have a private word with you?" Mr. Seton said, "An explanation I have long wished." They went into a private room. On coming out, Mr. Seton asked me to take his arm, and said, "For God's sake settle this matter, or there will be such an exposure!" I went away with Mr. Pym. On an occasion of the review of the 59th, Colonel Jones offered me his arm. Mr. Seton said, "This lady is under my protection." I said it was no such thing, and left the common and went home. Mr. Seton said he should like to drive me in a cab in London, and asked if there was a chance. My only object in not telling my husband was for fear of the consequences. Mr. Pym and Mr. Hawkey both requested that I would not dance the polka. Mr. Pym was a particular friend of my husband.

William Ellis, master of the royal yacht, living at Stoke Cottage, was next called and sworn. The Coroner having cautioned him as to any evidence he should give that was likely to criminate himself, he proceeded to state: I had no knowledge of the duel until it had taken place. I can say nothing about it. I had no reason to believe a duel had taken place. Mr. Hawkey and Mr. Pym came to my house on the 28th of May, between seven and eight o'clock in the evening. Mr. Pym wished me to see him in my private parlour. Mr. Hawkey was in my drawing-room, and came in without my knowing he was there. Mr. Pym told me an unfortunate affair had taken place between Mr. Hawkey and Mr. Seton, and that a gentleman was wounded, naming the place where he lay in Stokes Bay. Mr. Pym requested me to give any assistance I could. They had left persons with him. I went immediately down to the spot, and found no one there. I returned to my house, and remained there till half-past eleven. They were still there, when they retired to their lodgings at a short distance from my house. I saw no more of them till the next morning about half-past nine. They took breakfast with me and left the house I had known Mr. Pym from a child; that was the reason he came to my house. Mr. Pym said he had been the friend. I understood him to mean a second. He told me nothing of the circumstances.

Three other witnesses were examined, but the only additional evidence elicited from them was, that the place where the duel was fought was in the parish of Tichfield, and not in the parish of Alverstoke, as alleged.

The Coroner in summing up, after adverting to the law of the case, said there was a great deal of corroborative, presumptive, and circumstantial evidence. In the first place, there was the statement of Mrs. Stanmore, which proved that there really did exist some feeling of jealousy on the part of Mr. Hawkey towards Mr. Seton. They found that Mr. Hawkey suddenly left his lodgings on the day on which this duel was fought. Why did he so suddenly leave it? He never returned. Colonel Jones also proved the absence of Mr. Hawkey from parade on the 21st, and that he had not returned. Then there was the statement of Lieut. Savage, that Mr. Hawkey had received a message from Mr. Seton, through Mr. Rowles; that he had a friend, and that he was about to seek for pistols. The evidence of Mr. Sherwood stated that Mr. Pym was his friend. Mr. Hawkey's statement that he had chosen Mr. Pym for his friend was certainly not sufficient to make Mr. Pym an accomplice, and there was no other evidence against Mr. Pym; he thought they could not use that. They also had evidence that on the morning of the 20th ult., Mr. Hawkey went to Mr. Fisk's and purchased pistols, and then to Mr. Sherwood's shooting gallery and ordered bullets to be cast, and asked if he could have some shots; and then Mr. Hawkey went and practised, and although the witness who loaded the pistols in the gallery did not know Mr. Hawkey except from what he was told by a person there, Mr. Sherwood stated that there was no other person but Mr. Hawkey in the gallery at the time he practised there and fired shots. He also marked a pistol. All this was strong evidence of malice, and when taken into connection with his wish to fight at six paces, it showed that he sought the blood of his opponent. It was most decidedly evidence unequivocally of malice existing in the mind. They were then traced over the water, though Mr. Pym's servant told them that, between four and five o'clock in the afternoon of the 20th, he was ordered by his master to follow him. His master met Mr. Hawkey at the end of the High-street, and went over in a boat to Gosport. He had a parcel wrapped up in brown paper given him to carry, and they went out of Gosport, to beyond the Coast-guard station at Stokes Bay. There he was directed to remain on the shore; he did so, and after three-quarters of an hour, Mr. Pym ran towards him, and beckoned him, when he followed him to a spot where he saw another gentleman, and a wounded man upon the ground, bleeding very much; and then he went for a doctor, who found the wounded person to be Mr. Seton. From this it would appear that Mr. Pym was on the spot at the time. Mr. Ellis said he did not know of his own knowledge that there had been a duel. Mr. Pym, the next morning, told him that he had been Mr. Hawkey's friend, meaning by that, his second. Taking, then, the evidence of Marsh, and what Mr. Pym stated to Mr. Ellis, they could have no doubt in believing that Mr. Pym also was there. If the jury believed that Mr. Hawkey did inflict the wound, they must consider what was the amount of the offence in the eye of the law. All persons who, according to any preconcerted arrangement, go out for the purpose of fighting with deadly weapons after a quarrel, however grievous it might have been, are guilty of wilful murder. Evidence had been given there that day with the view of proving great provocation on the part of Mr. Seton, by his having used offensive words. That might have been, but it did not alter the features of the case. If they had fought immediately on the spot, it might have done so, and have been considered as manslaughter; but when they found that an arrangement was made early on the morning of the 20th, and that, after sufficient time had elapsed for the blood to cool, a person went to Stokes Bay, and there inflicted a wound of which an individual died, he is in the eye of the law guilty of wilful murder, and all persons with him aiding, abetting, or participating in the deed. If any were near for the purpose of watching or concealing, and not for giving the word to fire, their being present makes them in the eye of the law principals in the second degree. They, however, had only to do with the accessories before the fact, the principals, and the principals in the second degree. He did not consider that they had any evidence against any other persons. Others must have been engaged in the affair, but they had no evidence to warrant the implication of any other party. The jury would take into consideration the evidence placed before them. With respect to the practice of firing, the marking of the pistols, trying them at six paces, and his wish to fight at that distance, it was quite sufficient to show that malice did exist, even if it were necessary. But the fact of fighting with deadly weapons is of itself sufficient to prove that malice did exist.

The jury, after having been absent about half an hour, returned into the Guildhall, and, by their chairman, Mr. Grant, returned the following verdict:—

"We find that the immediate cause of Mr. Seton's death was the result of a surgical operation, rendered imperatively necessary by the imminent danger in which he was placed by the infliction of a gun-shot wound he received on the 20th of May last, in a duel with Henry Charles Morehead Hawkey, of the Royal Marines. We, therefore, find the said Lieutenant Hawkey and Lieutenant Edward Pym, as well as all the parties concerned in the said duel, GUILTY of WILFUL MURDER.

"The jury would further express their unanimous conviction that everything which the best professional skill, the greatest attention, and the utmost kindness could suggest, was rendered to Mr. Seton by his respective medical attendants."

COMMAND AT PORTSMOUTH.—Admiral Sir Charles Ogle, Bart., is now confidently named as the successor to Admiral Sir Charles Rowley, Bart., Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth.

THE MAYNOOTH GRANT.—The Queen was pleased to grant an audience to the Earl of Winchilsea on Monday afternoon, when he presented to her Majesty three hundred and forty-eight addresses and memorials against the endowment of Maynooth.

THE LATE MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT AT YARMOUTH.—The total loss of life arising from the late accident at Yarmouth is 79 (bodies found 77), and most providentially not one of that number had any person dependent on him or her. Only eight or ten of the deceased exceeded twenty-one years of age. Another bridge on piles has since been thrown over the river near the site of the former suspension-bridge, the platform of this latter being used to form the road-way of the present.

THE ALLEGED MURDER IN HATTON-GARDEN.—At the CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT, on Thursday, Daniel John Cock was tried for the murder of Hannah Moore. We recently stated the circumstances under which the deceased met her death. The evidence went to show that the deceased and the prisoner had agreed to take poison together from distress, in consequence of having been discharged from their situations. The surgeon who was called to see the deceased said the prisoner appeared in great distress at the death of the young woman, and said he only regretted that he had not died too. The Jury gave a verdict of "Acquittal."

NEW ZEALAND.

The important debate in Parliament during the past week on the affairs of this ill-fated country, has suggested the two annexed illustrations immediately associated with its colonization.

The first engraving shows the Great Seal, executed for the Colony by Mr. Wyon: the scene—Queen Victoria in treaty with a group of New Zealand chiefs.

The portrait presents a fine specimen of the native population—Perie, the son of a New Zealand chief, who has recently arrived in London to be instructed in the English language, and otherwise educated. A correspondent, who has seen this young New Zealander several times, states him to be very intelligent and quick at learning, when it is considered that, only two or three years ago, he was, in habits and ideas, nearly on a level with cannibals. His ideas of a First Cause appear still to be clouded, though he acknowledges his belief in the existence of one Great Creator of the Universe. In disposition, he is mild and tractable, and even inclined to politeness; he is fond of conversation, anxious to acquire information relative to this country, and ready to communicate what he knows of his own. Though mild in his manners, his feelings are soon worked up when he is questioned on subjects of his native warfare; his eyes then sparkle, and the fire of revenge appears to kindle within him.

PERIE, SON OF A NEW ZEALAND CHIEF.

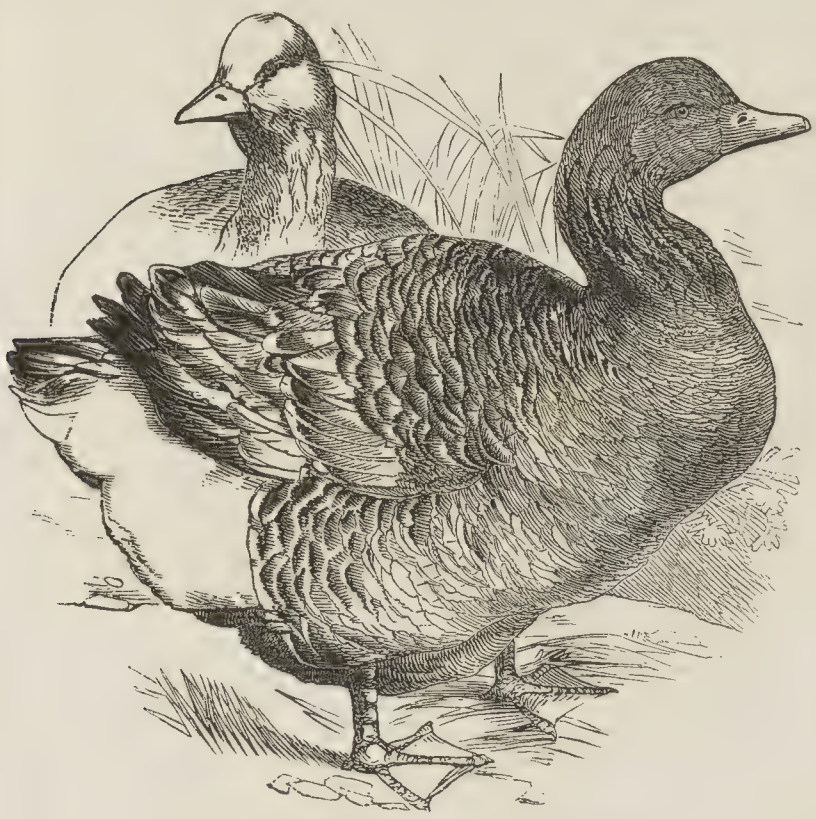
In stature, Perie is about 5 feet 6 inches; rather broad-built and muscular; of clear brown complexion, and handsome manly features; black woolly hair; his age about 24 years. The annexed portrait, in native costume, was sketched by Mr. E. Dalton, from a cast taken in wax from the life, and which was exhibited to the Society of Arts on the evening of their recent conversazione, when Perie himself was also present, and excited considerable interest among the company.

The arrival of Perie in this country has been especially fortunate for Mr. Dalton and his clever collaborateur, in their very laudable attempts to establish an Ethnographical Institution; and, a few weeks since, there was read to the Society of Arts a valuable paper by Mr. Dalton, on the Construction of Models for the Society's Museum; the object being to bring forward the best materials for forming fac similia of the different races of mankind throughout the globe. The Society has our best wishes; for, its pursuits are at once interesting and important; and in every respect "the proper study of mankind."

GREAT SEAL OF NEW ZEALAND.

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

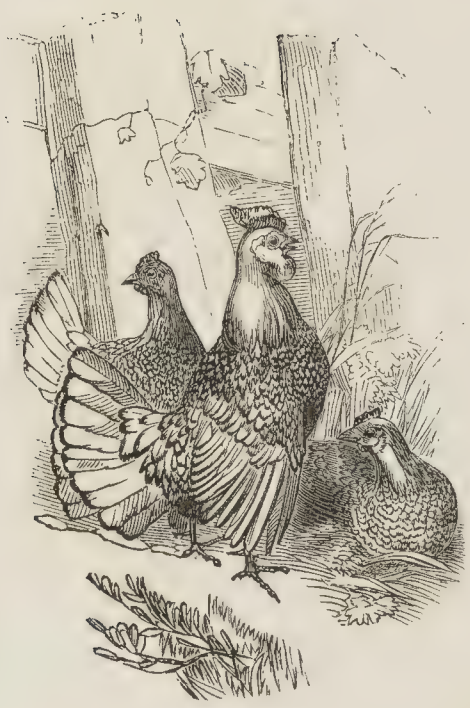
This establishment is the only one of the old trading companies that has continued, and still continues in active operation; and, in fact, the dispute with the United States, called "The Oregon Question," has principally arisen through jealousy of the success that has crowned the exertions of the Hudson's Bay Company. In 1669, Prince Rupert, cousin of Charles II., with seventeen persons of rank and distinction, sent out a ship to investigate the Bay as a source of commerce, and she returned with a good cargo of choice furs. In the following year a Company was formed and incorporated. The hunting-ground comprises a space of between two and three millions of square miles, extending from Hudson's Bay to the Pacific, and from the frontiers of the United States to the Arctic Sea. The hunters are bold, intrepid men, who delight in encountering the grisly bear, or trapping the wily beaver; and their adventures are peculiarly characteristic of the regions through which they range in search of their prey—exposed alike to the burning heat of summer, and the chilling frosts of winter. Great encouragement was at first held out to servants engaged in the employ, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie rose from a clerkship in the Company's service, and many other eminent men might be named.



A chain of forts, which may be styled "shelters," are placed at different intervals, to afford temporary repose to the hunters, and to receive their furs. From Fort William, on Lake Superior, to Cumberland House, on the main branch of the Saskatchewan River, is 1020 miles; from Cumberland House to Fort Chepewyan, on Lake Athabasca, is 840 miles; thence to Fort Resolution, on the Great Slave Lake, is 240 miles. The Mackenzie River flows out of this lake, and there are three forts on it. The first is Fort Simpson, 338 miles from Fort Resolution; Fort Norman, 236 miles lower down; and Fort Good Hope, 312 miles below Fort Norman, is the most northerly of the Company's establishments, being about 3800 miles from Montreal. The number of beaver skins exported from Canada in 1788 was 127,000; but, within the last twelve years, it has not exceeded an annual average of 100,000.

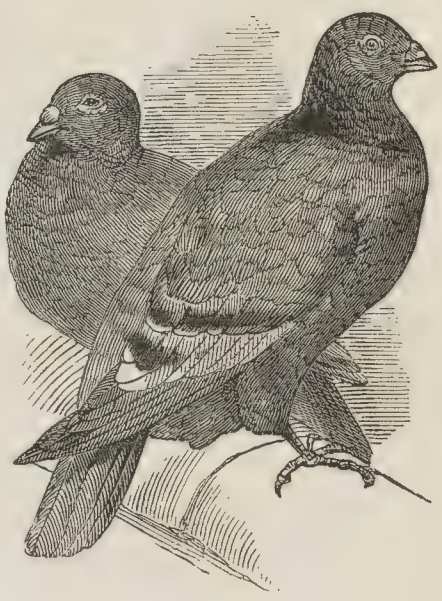
There are two great sales every year at the Company's Hall, in Fenchurch-street. One takes place about March or April, and the other in September or October. A great number of foreigners attend, particularly Germans. The beaver skins are principally used by the hat manufacturers in England, but great quantities of other skins are exported, and, being sold in foreign markets—Leipsic, Frankfort, &c.—become distributed over Europe, and extend even to China, where the finest furs are in much request among the Mandarins and exalted officials. To convey these last (the finest furs) from Hudson's Bay to England, two large barques, of between 300 and 400 tons each, are employed—the Prince Albert, Captain Royal, and the Prince Rupert, Captain Herd—the former bound to Moose factory; the latter, to York factory. These are the only ships of the Company that go to Hudson's Bay; and, after enjoying a splendid dinner ashore at Gravesend, on the 7th June, they sailed on the following day (the 8th June) for their destinations, where they will take in furs, and may be expected home again in October. All the Company's other vessels go to the north-west coast of America. We have given a correct engraving of the two barques (the Prince Albert and the Prince Rupert), with guns firing, and colours flying, taking their departure from Gravesend on the 8th June

SAILING OF THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S SHIPS, FROM GRAVESEND.



ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—PRIZE POULT

COMMON GOOSE—1ST. PRIZE: MR. NOLAN.



DUCKS—1ST. PRIZE: CROSS AYLESBURY AND ROUEN: MR. BAKER.

GOLD SPANGLED BANTAMS—1ST. PRIZE: CAPT. GREEN.

SPANGLED TURKEY—1ST. PRIZE: MR. BARTLETT.

ROMAN RUNTS—1ST. PRIZE: MR. NOLAN.

POLISH FOWLS—1ST. PRIZE: MR. TYLER.

FOWLS FROM CHINA—1ST. PRIZE: MR. BAKER.

SILVER-SPANGLED FOWLS—1ST. PRIZE: JOHN WHYTE, ESQ.

…LTRY, &c.

…Zoological Society of London," about eighte… …ain objects of the Institution was stated to be the In… …eeds of Domestic Poultry, &c. This has since been, more or …carried out by the Council; but, in the present year, the Society has largely furthered their original plan by establishing an Exhibition of Domestic Poultry, &c., at the Gardens, in the Regent's Park. They have also offered Medals with the option to the successful candidates of receiving £2 for the First Prizes, and £1 for the Second Prizes, for the several objects mentioned in the list below.

All persons, whether members or not, were at liberty to exhibit and compete for Prizes; but in case of any Prize being awarded to a member, he may receive, instead of Medal or Money, an Honorary Certificate only.

FIRST AND SECOND PRIZES GIVEN FROM CLASS I. TO CLASS VI., INCLUSIVE.

CLASS I.—DOMESTIC FOWLS, bred in 1844.—A Male and two Females to be exhibited.

A White, Speckled, or Grey Dorking.
B Surrey.
C Old Sussex or Kent.
D Gold or Silver Spangled every-day layers (Hamburgh).
E Spanish.
F Polish, Gold or Silver Spangled, Black, or White.
G Malay, or other Asiatic.
H Half-bred, cross of Asiatic with any other.
I Any other good variety.

CLASS II.—BANTAMS bred in 1844.—A Male and two Females to be exhibited.

K Gold or Silver Spangled.
L Black or White.
M Any other good variety.

CLASS III.—DUCKS bred in 1844.—A Drake and two Ducks to be exhibited.

N Aylesbury Ducks or any other White variety.
O Any other good and large variety.

CLASS IV.—GEESE bred in 1844.—In couples.

P Common Geese.
Q Asiatic or Knob Geese.
R Any other good species.

CLASS V.—PIGEONS bred in 1844.—In pairs.

S English Dove-cote Pigeons.
T Spanish, Leghorn, or Roman Runts, or crosses of the same.
V Any other good and large variety.

CLASS VI.—PHEASANTS.—A Male and Female.

W Gold Pheasants.
X Silver Pheasants.
Y Any other species, excepting the common Brown and Ring-necked.

FIRST PRIZES ONLY WILL BE GIVEN IN CLASSES VII. AND VIII.

CLASS VII.—TURKEYS bred in 1844.—Single Birds.

Z White Turkey (Male).
AA Turkey of any other colour (Male).
BB Turkey of any colour (Female).
CC Any species of Gallinaceous Birds not hitherto bred in this country.
DD Any species of Water-fowl not hitherto bred in this country.

The several specimens have been delivered at the Gardens: with each basket was a statement in writing of the name and address of the exhibitor, and of the letter under which it was to be exhibited, and the price demanded, should he wish to sell through the medium of the officers of the Society; and a full description in writing of the useful qualities of any specimens not generally known, particularly if intended for the prizes left open for unnamed sorts. Persons possessed of any rare or valuable specimens were also invited to send them for exhibition though not intended to compete for prizes.

The following is the adjudication of the prizes; the most striking specimens being engraved upon the preceding page:—

CLASS 1.—DOMESTIC FOWLS, BRED IN 1844.

A Speckled Dorking, Rev. G. C. Gillett, 1st prize.
B Surrey, Mr. Bartlett, 10, Little Russell street, 2nd prize.
C Kent, Miss Cooper, 81, Guildford-street, 1st prize.
H Hamburgh Gold Spangled, Messrs. Baker, Chelsea, 1st prize.
— Silver Spangled (called Bolton Gray), John Whyte, Esq., 1st prize.
E Black Spanish, Messrs. Baker, Chelsea, and 3, Half-moon-passage, 1st prize.
F Polish, Mr. Tyler, Surrey Zoological Gardens, 1st prize.
G Malay, Mr. Nolan, Bachelor's-walk, Dublin, 2nd prize.
— China, Messrs. Baker, Chelsea, 1st prize.
— Ditto, commended.
— Madeira (but Indian origin), Messrs. Baker, 2nd prize.
I Spangled Muffled Fowls, Lord Saye and Sele, 2nd prize.

CLASS 2.—BANTAMS.

K Gold Spangled, Captain Green, Buckden, 1st prize.
— Ditto, Mr. Redmond, Swiss Cottage, 2nd prize.
— Silver Spangled, Captain Green, 1st prize.
— Ditto, Messrs. Baker, Chelsea, 2nd prize.
L Black, Mr. Sims, 43, Lower Grosvenor-street, 2nd prize.
— Gold Hackled, Messrs. Baker, Chelsea, 2nd prize.
— Feather-legged, Messrs. Baker, Chelsea, 1st.

CLASS 3.—DUCKS.

N Aylesbury, Messrs. Baker, Chelsea, 2nd prize.
O Cross with Rouen, Messrs. Baker, 1st prize.
— Large Variety, called Essex, Rev. G. C. Gillett, 2nd prize.

CLASS 4.—GEESE.

P Common, and evidently derived from the Gray Lag Goose, a specimen of which is exhibited, Mr. Nolan, Dublin, 1st prize.
— Half-bred, Wild and Domestic, Mr. Bartlett, Little Russell-street, 2nd prize.
— A fine Gray Lag Goose (wild, Anser palustris, Heming, from India) Mr. Bartlett, 2nd prize.
R Barnacle, Lord Saye and Sele, 2nd prize.

CLASS 5.—PIGEONS.

T Roman Runts, Mr. Nolan, Dublin, 1st prize.
— Spanish Runts, Messrs. Baker, Chelsea, 2nd prize.

CLASS 6.—PHEASANTS.

None sent in.

CLASS 7.—TURKEYS.

AA Spangled Male, Mr. Bartlett, Little Russell-street, 1st prize.

61 Coops exhibited: 28 Rewards.—June 6, 1845.

(Signed) JOHN BAILY,
GEORGE FISHER,
WILLIAM YARRELL.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 22.—Fifth Sunday after Trinity.—Machiavelli died, 1527.—Trial of Queen Caroline commenced, 1820.—Battle of Vittoria, 1813.

MONDAY, 23.—Leibnitz born, 1646.—Akenside died, 1770.

TUESDAY, 24.—Midsummer Day.—Nativity of St. John Baptist.—John Hampden died, 1643.

WEDNESDAY, 25.—Battle of Bannockburn, 1324.—Quarter Sessions commence this week.

THURSDAY, 26.—London Docks commenced, 1802.—George IV. died, 1830.

FRIDAY, 27.—Dr. Dodd executed for Forgery, 1777.—Allan Cunningham died, 1840.

SATURDAY, 28.—Queen Victoria crowned at Westminster, 1838.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending June 28.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
4 15	4 40	5 5	5 29	5 54	6 18	6 44	7 8	7 35	8 3	8 32	9 8

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Subscriber," Dungarvon.—King Alfred was buried near Winchester (Winton), then the metropolis of England.
"S. [illegible] Constant Subscriber."—"A legal separation" can only be obtained by Act of Parliament, which is an expensive process.
"Amicus," Haworth, is thanked for the suggestion of the illustration of "Secret Orders" in this country which, however, we cannot, at present, entertain.
"B. C.," Birmingham.—By the statute the word "Game" includes neither wild-duck nor teal, but it imposes a penalty upon persons destroying the eggs of these birds, or knowingly having possession thereof.
"J. T."—The success of hair restoratives varies in different individuals.
"J. A. Z."—Declined.
"W. J.," Plymouth, is thanked for the sketch, which, however, arrived too late.
"Henriette" is recommended to submit the case to a solicitor.
"C. C.," Glasgow.—St. John is pronounced Sin-John in the line quoted from Pope.
"L. A. S.," Stoke.—The reversal of the tail of the comet, in our illustration last week, is explained by its being seen with the night telescope, which inverts the object.
"H. T.," Glasgow.—We have not room for the engraving of the new church.
"G. G.," Guernsey.—The Messrs. Child, Fleet-street, are the oldest bankers in London, being descendants of the first regular banker, Mr. Francis Child, goldsmith, who began business soon after the Restoration.
"Ficus."—The costume named is not full evening dress.
"Daphnis," Bromley.—"The Provoked Husband" is a comedy, not a farce; and the character of Tony Lumpkin is in Goldsmith's comedy of "She Stoops to Conquer." Either play may be had of any bookseller.
"H. H. P."—We have not room for "Mr. Pyke's Case and the Inns of Court," or the "Remarks" thereon.
"W. H.," New Hampton.—The illustrations of the Hampton Court tapestry are better adapted for a guide-book than for our journal.
"Les Deux Sœurs."—See "The Book of Shells," published by Parker, West Strand.
"J. B. H."—We are not aware of the Minister's intention as to the renewal of the Act for the Composition for Assessed Taxes.
"A Subscriber."—The information requested as to the flute music and the assessed tax acts, if given here, would subject us to advertisement duty: our correspondent should apply to a music-seller and a law publisher. The botanical notices, occasionally.
"R. S.," Haworth.—The weight of the new Great Tom of Lincoln is 12,090, of Great Tom of Oxford 17,000 lb.
"Scoticus," Glasgow, is thanked for the hint.
"Tam o' Shanter."—We do not intend to illustrate the picture model in question.
"G. R.," Merton, should complain to his newsman. The production of a journal in question is a work of leisure compared with newspaper publication.
"A Friend to the Distressed."—Address the Hon. Mr. Ashley, Marlborough House, Pall-mall.
"A Countryman."—"The Kentish Fire" is a peculiar volley of applause, so named from having been given at large public meetings in Kent.
"J. B. O.," Walsall.—We have not space.
"A Subscriber," Northampton, may, probably, obtain the portrait of Messrs. Evans, Printsellers, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields.
"Hibernus," Dublin.—The crescent is stated to have been adopted by the Byzantines, as the emblem of their city, from the sudden appearance of the moon having one night saved them from the attack of Philip of Macedon.
"An Ardent Admirer," Enniscorthy, is thanked for the offer of the sketches, but we cannot promise early insertion, in case of approval.
"W. E."—Messrs. Christie and Manson, Auctioneers, King-street, St. James's.
"R. W.," Worksop.—We have already engraved the Roche Abbey Festival.
"Alpha," Huddersfield.—There has not been any treaty between the two countries.
"B. B."—The "o" in "Isoceles" is pronounced soft.
"Juvenis Lector."—Perhaps.
"Honestus," and "A Subscriber from the First," are thanked for two communications on the origin of the Pope's tiara. They are too lengthy for insertion, but shall be forwarded to our correspondent at Dublin, if the latter will apprize us of his exact address.
"C. J. H.," a Scene Painter.—We have inquired into the matter, and believe that every one concerned in the work has been fairly treated.
"B. L. D.," Westminster.—The Gazetteer, published by Fullarton, Edinburgh.
"A Correspondent," Stony Stratford.—The nearest way from Euston-square to the Bank is by the New-road, City-road, Finsbury, and Moorgate-street.
"A Correspondent."—The President steam-ship was lost on her second return voyage.
"Legateius," Ambleside.—The office for the sale of Parliamentary papers is 6, Great-turnstile, Holborn.
"A Subscriber from the Commencement."—When the expression is too low for the subject it forms the bathos, or, as Martin Scriblerus terms it, "the Art of Sinking in Poetry." Thus, on a warrior:—

"And thou Dalhousie, the great god of war, Lieutenant-Colonel to the Earl of Mar."

"H. W. B."—The suspension bridge across the Thames, at Hammersmith, was constructed in the year 1827.
"A Constant Subsceiber."—Monday last was not the first occasion of the Times journal issuing a Double Supplement.
"S. S. M.," Goole.—Her Majesty returned in the Royal Yacht.
"An Adventurer," Hull, may receive the precise information from an army agent.
"One Entitled to Bear Arms."—If a gentleman, entitled to bear arms, die, leaving a son, his heir, and a daughter, the lady is entitled, as our correspondent correctly supposes, "to carry her father's arms in a lozenge, and, in the event of her marriage, her husband impales her arms with his own," but, at her death, the usage of her arms ceases, and her children and descendants do not take them at all. Had she been an heiress (and in heraldry all ladies are heiresses who have no brothers, or whose brothers have died without issue) her arms would have been borne by her husband on an escutcheon of pretence, and inherited as a quartering by her children.
"Obsolete."—The escutcheon of pretence, with the ensigns of Brunswick, was borne in the Royal Arms for the Germanic Dominions of the Sovereign, but, since the separation of Hanover from this country, it has, of course, been discontinued. "The imperial crown, pp., thereon a lion statant guardant, or, imperially crowned also, ppr.," is the crest of the Sovereign of England.
"H. S." has addressed to us what he calls a "few hasty remarks" upon two or three subjects. They are, indeed, so very hasty, that he is quite in error upon all the points on which he touches. Great pains are taken to give all the really interesting news of the week, and we do not think that any weekly journal presents a more perfect record of news, foreign and domestic. As to the inquest to which "H. S." alludes, as it was adjourned expressly in order that further evidence should be obtained, it was quite useless to give a long report of that which had been given, as it did not throw any further light upon the matter. Some of the news is necessarily given in a brief form, when not of particular interest, in order that there may be space for a miscellaneous record of passing events.
"B. F." is correct; the position of Capella was erroneously given in our engraving of the comet last week.
"An Old Subscriber," Ireland.—The investment named is the safest.
"K. U.," Coventry.—Admission to Christ's Hospital can only be obtained by presentation, in the gift of Governors and a few other persons.
"W. P. S.," Abergavenny.—By order of any bookseller of newsman.
"K. B. D.," Macclesfield, should apply to an accredited connoisseur in painting, or to a respectable picture dealer.
"A. B."—"A Key to Coningsby" is published.
Ineligible.—"Hurrah for the Briton;" "Love," by J. G.; "Lines," by P. A. B.
Chess is unavoidably omitted this week.

 ERRATUM.—In the engraving on the 16*th page of our journal of last week the postilions are erroneously placed by the draughtsman on the off-side instead of the near side horses.*

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1845.

THE House of Commons has more trouble with Mr. Roebuck than with any score of its most unruly members put together. Endowed with singular powers of sarcasm, he has the misfortune to possess a temper that is by no means averse to the abundant use of it. It must be allowed that in its application he is most impartial; it is impossible to name any party, or section of party, or any one public leader or public man, from Sir Robert Peel down to Feargus O'Connor—from Lord John Russell among the Whigs, to Mr. Smythe in the ranks of "Young England"—whom he has not held up to ridicule, or, worse—bitter contempt. There are other members in the House, gifted with as much wit, as great a command of language, and as strong a tendency to run into satire when speaking of men and measures of which they disapprove; no one ever heard Mr. Charles Buller speak, for instance, who did not recognise in him a master of this mode of attack; a more happy talent for satire was never possessed by any man in the House; but there are two great distinctions between his mode of using the power and that adopted by Mr. Roebuck. In the first place, he is not indiscriminate in pouring it out against everybody; and, in the second, it is so evidently good natured, that anger is one of the last feelings awakened by it: the victim of his pleasantry may join in the laugh against himself, but to feel any bitterness at the attack is impossible. His weapon is keen, and he wields it skilfully, but with judgment also; Mr. Roebuck puts venom on the blade, and plunges it at everyone within his reach; the consequence is, he has created more personal animosity towards himself than any other member, and is at this moment, though distinguished by ability, one of the most thoroughly unpopular men in the House. Such scenes as that in which he figured on Monday evening have been so frequent, and have involved him at different times with so many men of such different parties and creeds, that it is impossible to come to any conclusion but this—that Mr. Roebuck is the victim of a deplorable temper, which prevents him from remaining at peace with any party, any men, or any individual, who happens to be prominent enough to engage public attention. Even his speeches on general political questions exhibit his disagreement with every body; it is impossible to say which he has denounced most severely at different times—the Church or Dissent, Catholics or Protestants; he abuses the Tories, but has no praise for the Whigs; Sir Robert Peel escapes as little as Lord John Russell, and Sir Robert Inglis is as roughly handled as Mr. O'Connell. In politics he seems to have no preference for any party, but rather an antipathy to all; as to individuals he is quite as comprehensive in his aversions. With the editor of a Liberal journal he once, we believe, actually fought; the proprietor of a Conservative paper he recommended any one aggrieved by an article to horsewhip as the only remedy. He was challenged by Mr. Smythe, and made a "privilege" matter of it; he is again challenged by an Irish Repeal member, as opposite in opinions to Mr. Smythe as possible, and we have a "privilege" question again. We cannot think that all this arises from any peculiar pugnacity in men who differ so completely on all other subjects, directed specially against the member for Bath; we rather think the spirit of provocation is unfortunately violent in Mr. Roebuck; his hand, like that of Ishmael, being against every man, it is only too natural, as a consequence, to find the hand of every man against him. We are sorry to see him so often involved in these affairs. But we must also say we entirely approve of the practice of the House of Commons, on insisting, if appealed to, that there shall be no fighting between its members. Notwithstanding the many questions on which men who feel strongly, are strongly opposed—the disposition to resort to this barbarous practice to revenge offences received in debate, has greatly decreased of late years. No body of men ever assembled to debate a question in which more or less of passion and feeling was not excited; but we must say that, to the credit of the House of Commons, there exists a general desire to avoid giving personal offence, and if it is taken, a manly and generous explanation or apology removes all ill feeling. Mr. Roebuck is rather an exception; and the frequency with which he is involved in personal squabbles makes him unfortunately distinguished. In the present case, the House, on his appeal, could not do otherwise than extend its protection to him; but it should not have allowed him to give the provocation he did. In imputing "lowness of motives" to any body of members he decidedly transgressed the rules of debate. His escaping a call to "order" is only a proof that even a Speaker may sometimes nod. In granting him the shelter of "privilege," the House did not let him escape entirely without rebuke for his besetting sin—a bitterness of matter and manner towards everybody, which he has indulged so long, that amendment now is almost hopeless. We commend him for establishing the precedent of refusing a challenge, and heartily wish he did not so often provoke one. His indiscriminate invective, however smart and animated it may render a debate, is rapidly weakening his influence and lowering his position as a public man.

During the discussion on the above affair Mr. O'Connell entered the House, for the first time this Session. By an odd coincidence, Sir H. W. Barron was alluding, in connection with the question, to the case of the "honourable and learned member for Cork," when he appeared at the door. Every one present involuntarily applied a very familiar proverb to the incident, and a burst of laughter, mingled with slight cheering, ensued, which lasted for some moments, the laughter predominating. There was nothing approaching the reception he encountered in the same place during the State Trial last year. Mr. O'Connell took his usual seat, shaking hands with several members around him: he appeared to be in robust health. He spoke for a few minutes, during the evening, in opposition to the Irish Banking Act; but it is expected he will take a considerable part in the debate on the Irish Colleges Bill.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE ANTI-CORN-LAW LEAGUE.—The League held another of their meetings, on Wednesday night, in Covent-garden Theatre. It was by no means as well attended as usual. Shortly after seven o'clock, the leaders of the anti-corn-law movement, including Messrs. Cobden, Bright, M. Gibson, Villiers, Fox, &c., made their appearance on the stage, and were of course warmly greeted. The chair was taken by Mr. George Wilson, who commenced his speech by stating that the result of the Bazaar, which was recently held with the view of making up the £100,000 League Fund, was highly satisfactory. It was a truly national concern, for they had received contributions of various kinds from every part of the country. In money and the produce of sales, they had received from Cornwall, £136; from Northamptonshire, £141; from Wales, £163; from Nottinghamshire, £232; from Cheshire and Derbyshire, £172; from Gloucestershire, £240; from Staffordshire, £227; from fourteen agricultural counties, £252; from Sussex, £264; from Leicestershire, £192; from Northumberland and Durham, £323; from Warwickshire, £406; from Shropshire, £550; from London, £1959; from Scotland, £2084; from Yorkshire, £3891; from Manchester, £2208; from Lancashire, including Manchester, £6816; from a number of small stalls, £1724; received at the doors, £4815; making a total of £25,046 10s. 11d. There was also, he should observe, a quantity of contributions left unsold, which was greater than had ever been furnished for any similar purpose. It was a further source for congratulation, that a fund amounting to £116,687 13s. 4d. had been accumulated for the purposes of the League—a circumstance which, he said, exhibited an interest on the part of the people with regard to free-trade greater than had ever been exhibited in any other cause whatever. Mr. Cobden, Mr. Bright, and Mr. J.W. Fox then addressed the meeting upon the usual stale topics.

THE CHARITABLE AND PROVIDENT SOCIETY FOR THE AGED AND INFIRM DEAF AND DUMB.—The anniversary dinner of this Society, which has a very benevolent and praiseworthy object in view, was held at the Albion Tavern, on Tuesday. The chairman was J. S. Buckingham, Esq., who fulfilled his duties very efficiently. After the toast of "The Queen," which was received with due enthusiasm, the chairman, in proposing Prince Albert, paid a just tribute to the benevolence and general good qualities of his Royal Highness. He remarked upon his patronage of the fine arts, and of the happiness he enjoyed in his domestic circle. Mr. Buckingham's eloquent tribute to the Prince exeited general sympathy, and the toast was given with all the honours. The chairman also proposed "The Charity," in a very affecting speech, which seemed to excite much sympathy. The evening passed off very pleasantly. One of the objects of this Society is to grant small annual pensions to those persons among the poor, who were either born deaf, or lost their hearing before the age of ten years, and who shall have attained the age of sixty years, or who shall have become so infirm as to be incapable of obtaining their livelihood by following their occupations. And another object is to encourage industrious and provident habits among deaf and dumb workmen, by conferring further advantages on those who shall contribute periodical sums in support of this Society, such as the right of priority in receiving pensions, and the benefit of some yearly allowance upon their contributions, should the income of the Society permit. It is a most lamentable fact, that many of the Deaf and Dumb, from their inability to provide for themselves, and the poverty of their friends, are compelled to seek refuge in workhouses, which their peculiar infirmities render it desirable they should avoid, and to which, in common with other intelligent persons, they themselves express the strongest repugnance.

SHERIFFS' FUND SOCIETY.—The first dinner of the Sheriffs' Fund Society was held on Tuesday at the London Tavern, when upwards of 200 gentlemen assembled, presided over by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. The institution is a valuable one, and, therefore, deserving of public support. It would be impossible to recount all the claims made upon the Sheriffs, so numerous are they, and so varied in character. The cloth having been removed, the usual loyal toasts were proposed and duly responded to, as was also "Prosperity to the Institution," and a list of subscriptions was read, in which was included, from the chairman, £20; Sheriff Hunter, 10 guineas; Mrs. Hunter, £5; Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, and Co., 50 guineas; Alderman Johnson, 5 guineas; Mrs. Alderman Johnson, 5 guineas.

FIRE IN CHEAPSIDE.—On Sunday morning, a fire took place on the premises No. 94, Cheapside, near the western corner of King-street. They were divided into three compartments, occupied by Mr. Franklin, boot-maker, and Mr. Piper, stay-maker, who tenanted the shop partitioned off, the upper part of the premises being occupied by Messrs. Ponten and O'Brien, linen-drapers and hosiers. The fire appeared to have originated in the shop of Mr. Franklin, for when discovered the interior was entirely in flames, which, ere many minutes elapsed, ascended rapidly up the staircase, and fired every portion of the building. Several engines soon arrived, but before the fire could in any way be checked the back part of the premises were consumed, together with their contents, involving a sacrifice of upwards of £2000. Happily no lives were lost.

MORTALITY OF LONDON.—The total number of deaths in the metropolis, in the week ending last Saturday, was 845. The weekly average of deaths for the last five years has been 963, and of the last five springs 888. The number of births in the past week was 1203.

DEPARTURE OF THE DUCHESS OF KENT.—The Duchess of Kent, accompanied by the Prince of Leiningen, has left London for Germany.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS DE NEMOURS.—The Duke and Duchess de Nemours left London for the Continent on Monday, vid Dover. The Princess Mary steamer conveyed the Royal party to Ostend.

WAVERLEY BALL.—A Waverley Ball, it is rumoured, will certainly take place the beginning of next month. The arrangements necessary for ensuring success to this anticipated brilliant réunion are not yet completed.

Accounts from St. Petersburg, of the 31st ult., state that Andrew Anderson, the British sailor, convicted of the murder of a pilot, had been publicly flogged at Riga, and was to be transported to Siberia, with a convoy of malefactors about to depart for the mines of that country.

POSTSCRIPT.

SATURDAY EVENING.

HER MAJESTY'S ARRIVAL AT THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert, with the Royal infants, arrived at Cowes early on Thursday afternoon, in the Victoria and Albert steam yacht, Capt. Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence.

The Royal party reached Gosport station, per rail, at 51 minutes past eleven, having performed the journey in two hours and sixteen minutes. From the Clarence Yard the Royal party were conveyed to the Victoria and Albert Royal steam-yacht, which has been re-decorated since her Majesty was last on board, and presents a very chaste and elegant appearance.

When the Royal standard was displayed, indicating that her Majesty was afloat, the ships in the harbour (Victory, Hibernia, Excellent, Siren, &c.) saluted and manned their yachts; and as the yacht proceeded out of the harbour, she was saluted by the forts of the garrison. The parade and pier were crowded with spectators, who cheered her Majesty as she passed.

As the yacht proceeded on her course towards Spithead, the ships comprising the experimental squadron manned their yards, and fired a royal salute.

As the Royal yacht passed slowly between the lines, proceeding from east to west, the seamen on the yards, and the marines, who were drawn up in array on the decks of the Albion and Superb, which were the two eastern-most ships, loudly cheered her Majesty and her Royal Consort, who were on deck at the time. Her Majesty and the Prince acknowledged the enthusiastic greeting of the crews by repeatedly bowing.

It is rumoured that her Majesty intends to review the fleet. If so, it will be the first naval review since the time the Allied Sovereigns were in England, and visited Portsmouth.

After passing through the fleet, the yacht proceeded on towards Cowes; and, it being nearly high water, her Majesty was enabled to land at Mede's Hole, where the Royal carriages were in waiting to convey her Majesty and the Royal party to Osborne House. The Victoria and Albert, after landing her Majesty, returned to Portsmouth Harbour.

COWES, Friday Afternoon.

This morning, the Queen, accompanied by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and the Princess Royal, took an aquatic excursion in one of the Royal barges. The day was particularly favourable, and her Majesty remained some considerable time on the water.

On Monday it is understood that there is to be a grand naval review, in the presence of her Majesty, for which purpose the fleet will get under way, and proceed to sea, and her Majesty will accompany it in her yacht. This will be a spectacle worthy the attention of a British Queen. There can be no sight more interesting than the evolutions of a fleet of line-of-battle ships, especially when composed of such ships as those which form the fleet now at Spithead.

ANNIVERSARY OF HER MAJESTY'S ACCESSION TO THE THRONE.—Yesterday (Friday) being the anniversary of her Majesty's accession to the throne, the day was observed with the usual demonstrations of loyalty. At an early hour the bells of the metropolitan churches rang merry peals. At one o'clock the Park and Tower guns were fired, and in the evening her Majesty's tradesmen illuminated their houses.

THE DISPENSARY FOR DISEASES OF THE EAR.—The annual fête champêtre for the increase of the funds of this institution took place on Thursday, in the grounds of the Countess de Zichy Ferraris, in the Regent's-park, the residence of the late Marquis of Hertford. The attractions to the fête were numerous, and a large assemblage of visitors were present. The band of the 1st Regiment of Life Guards were in the grounds, and played some well-selected music. The grounds bore a very animated appearance, from the number of the company and the general gaiety of the scene.

CRICKET.—The match between the Marylebone Club and Ground v. the Western Counties, with Box, Pilch, and Adams, was brought to a conclusion on Wednesday evening, when Marylebone won by 84 runs.

ANOTHER ACCIDENT ON THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.—Yesterday afternoon, when the express train to Paddington, consisting of four passengers' carriages and a luggage van, had nearly reached Salt Hill, the engine-driver observed that the luggage-van was off the rail. He immediately slackened the speed, and stopped the train before it had proceeded a quarter of a mile farther, without causing the slightest alarm to the passengers. The driver then proceeded with the engine to Slough, and returned with the necessary assistance to replace the van, which was done in half an hour, and the train proceeded to town. Fortunately, the van was in the rear of the carriages, or the accident might have proved of serious consequence. The passengers, during the delay, did not leave the carriages.

ROBBERY AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.—Yesterday John Taylor, a cabinet maker, residing at 7, Gillingham-street, Vauxhall-road, was examined at Bow-street Police-court, and convicted on a charge of stealing a quantity of plate and other valuable property, from Buckingham Palace.

THE ALLEGED CASE OF SLAVE TRADING.—At the Central Criminal Court yesterday (Friday), Thomas Jennings surrendered on an indictment charging him with having been engaged in manning, equipping, and navigating the ship Augusta, for the purposes of the slave trade, contrary to the statute 5th George IV. It may be recollected that Mr. De Zulueta was tried at this Court in September, 1843, for fitting out the ship Augusta for the slave trade, and, after a protracted trial, acquitted. The prisoner in this case had been tried at Sierra Leone, and acquitted, but a fresh indictment having been drawn up against him, through the instrumentality of Sir George Stephens, attorney to the Anti-Slavery Society, a plea was put in of autrefois acquit. A demurrer to the plea was, however, put in, and the result was the trial of the prisoner this day. After a long investigation, the prisoner was acquitted.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.—In the Chamber of Deputies, on Wednesday, the debate on the budget was resumed, the chapters under consideration being those having reference to Algeria. M. de Lasteyrie contended, that, if the system which had been adopted in that country were persevered in, it would soon require 100,000 men to occupy the Regency. Marshal Soult admitted that partial revolts had taken place there; but denied that anything had occurred which was likely to compromise the sovereignty of France in Algeria.

ARRIVAL OF THE DUKE AND DUCHESS DE NEMOURS IN BRUSSELS.—The Duke and Duchess of Nemours arrived at Ostend on Tuesday, and immediately proceeded, in the Royal carriage, to Lacken. The Duke and Duchess were to set out, on Wednesday morning, for Valenciennes; and the Duchess of Kent, who had also arrived, for Germany. It seems certain that Lord Aberdeen will accompany Queen Victoria, next month, to Brussels, Coburg, Weimar, Dresden, and Gotha.

THE WEST INDIES.—The steamer Forth has arrived from the West Indies, by which we have received papers from Demerara of the 19th, Antigua the 20th, Barbadoes the 21st, St. Lucia and Dominica the 22d, Jamaica and St. Kitt's the 23rd, and St. Vincent's the 24th ult. The weather in most of the colonies was seasonable, and propitious for the crops. In many of the Jamaica parishes the yield of sugar would in some instances be likely to exceed that of last year by treble or quadruple, and another such season will re-establish the prosperity of the planters. One parish, that of St. Mary's, was an exception, the weather there having been too wet. The Forth brings 87 passengers, the largest number, we believe, that ever came over. The progress made in the first railway in Jamaica, and the prospect of its being speedily followed by other similar undertakings, had begun to exact a more general interest than the question had hitherto done, and there seems no doubt but they will soon be aided by investments from the resident proprietary. The locomotive engines and carriages, with the other machinery for the railway, had arrived, and were about to be landed; and it is positively affirmed that the company will be able to open the line on the 1st of August.

TAHITI.—Intelligence of a later date than any yet made public has been received from Tahiti, by which we learn that Queen Pomaré had retired to the island of Raiatea, but avoided sleeping in any of the towns or villages, for fear of being betrayed into the hands of the French. A project is in contemplation to raise among the Protestant churches of Europe a sum of money sufficient to remove the exiled Queen and her faithful subjects to an island of one of the neighbouring groups, where, placing themselves under the protection of some of the European powers, they may be secured in the quiet enjoyment of their property and their religion.

ALARMING ACCIDENT ON THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.

On Tuesday morning an accident of a very alarming kind took place on the Great Western Railway, near the Langley station, about two miles and a half on the London side of Slough.

The express train left Paddington for Exeter at three quarters past nine o'clock—the whole distance (194 miles), since this fast train has been established, being performed in four hours and a half. The train consisted of the engine and tender, a luggage van, two second class, and two first class carriages. Upon the arrival of the train at a point of the railway called Dog-kennel bridge, the passengers experienced an extraordinary undulatory sort of motion, and shortly afterwards the gravel and dust between the lines of rails were thrown up in clouds into both the first and second-class carriages, to the great alarm and dismay of the passengers; and before more than a few seconds had elapsed, the two first-class and one of the second class carriages were thrown with fearful violence off the line, down an embankment twelve or fifteen feet in depth, with a most alarming and dreadful crash. The screams of the passengers at this moment were most heart-rending. Indeed, it was imagined that scarcely one could have been preserved, so sudden, so fearful, and so dreadful was the lamentable catastrophe.

The first of the two second class carriages was dragged completely across the four lines of rails, which, having become disconnected from the luggage van, was there left in that position, while the engine with its tender and van proceeded onwards.

The whole of the carriages were nearly filled with passengers, there being upwards of one hundred and thirty second-class and between fifty and sixty first-class passengers. The only carriage having but four wheels was the luggage van. The weights of the respective vehicles, exclusive of luggage and passengers, were as follow:—The engine, 16 tons; tender, 10 tons; luggage van, 3 tons 10 cwt.; second-class carriages, each 7 tons; and the first-class carriages, each 7 tons 10 cwt.

Within a quarter of an hour after the accident had occurred, intelligence of the unfortunate catastrophe reached Slough. Monsieur Dotesio, of the Royal Hotel, immediately had upwards of a dozen of his carriages put into requisition to convey medical and other aid to the sufferers, and in less than half an hour several professional men were on the spot. In a short space of time all were extricated from their perilous positions; and it is most gratifying to be able to state, that amongst the mass of human beings thus hurled over an embankment fifteen feet in depth, travelling at such extraordinary speed, not one life was sacrificed! The first of the two second class carriages was completely across the lines of the rails; the other second class carriage, and the hindermost first class carriage, were thrown upon their sides at the bottom of the embankment, while the other first class carriage, which had turned twice over in the course of its descent, was lying upon its roof, with its wheels in the air, the passengers, thirty in number, more dead than alive with fright and alarm. The engine and tender still remained on the rails, while the luggage van, although off the line, continued attached to the tender, and in its upright position.

Amongst those who were in the carriages officially connected with the railway, were Mr. Brunel, the engineer-in-chief; Mr. Jones, in Mr. Brunel's establishment; and Mr. Seymour Clarke, the chief superintendent of the locomotive department, accompanied by Mrs. Clarke. All those parties providentially escaped with but trifling bruises. Messengers were dispatched up and down the line, to Drayton and Slough, to prevent the approach of any train. A special messenger was also sent to Mr. Howell, the superintendent at the Slough station, for an engine and carriages to be sent to the spot where the accident occurred, to convey the passengers from the disabled train. By this time the down train, which left Paddington at a quarter-past ten o'clock, had arrived at the Langley station; and also about the same moment, the train which had been dispatched by Mr. Howell from Slough.

The passengers who had fortunately entirely or partially escaped injury, proceeded on their route to Bristol, &c., in the train sent from Slough, while several returned back to London in the train which had arrived from Paddington; the other passengers (as the train could not pass by the spot where the accident took place) having been shifted and forwarded to their several places of destination. Upwards of forty persons, who were more or less injured, were taken to the Royal Hotel, at the Slough station, where they received the most kind and humane attention from Mons. and Madame Dotesio.

Amongst those who were injured, and who were taken for medical aid to the Royal Hotel, were Sir Richard Vyvyan, severely cut about the forehead: Dr. Strong, of Rose Cottage, Hereford (accompanied by Mrs. Strong, two children, and nursemaid, who escaped with slight injuries), dislocated knee; the Rev. Collingwood Hughes, of Avishays House, near Chard, and the family governess, the latter of whom received severe internal injuries; Mr. Bristow, from Haverfordwest, dislocated shoulder; and Mr. Colin Robertson, late of Honiton, who was proceeding to Plymouth, as the newly-appointed manager of the National Provincial Bank of England at that port, severe contusion under the eye.

Mrs. Davy, of Honiton, lace-maker to the Queen, was amongst the passengers who providentially escaped unhurt. The carriage in which she was seated was turned over partially on its side, but leaving a sufficient space to enable her to creep out of the window, which was but slightly raised from the ground, on to the bank against which the side of the carriage rested.

Mr. and Mrs. Schouls, who were proceeding to Gloucester, are detained at Slough with their servants, with serious contusions. One young lady, from the violence of the concussion, was actually thrown from one carriage into another, and escaped with a few slight bruises. A lady had one of the small bones of her nose displaced. Captain Blagg, of Brentford, was unable to proceed on his journey, from a severe injury on the arm and leg. Mr. Miles, M.P., received a violent bruise on the shoulder: other persons were more or less injured.

The up line was opened for carriages by one o'clock on Wednesday, within about three hours after the unfortunate event occurred. The down-line, the rails of which had to be newly laid down for a considerable distance, in consequence of the injuries they had sustained, was cleared and opened in time for the train, which left Paddington at five o'clock in the afternoon, to pass onwards to Bristol.

By dint of the extraordinary exertions of upwards of one hundred men, and a large number of horses, the second class carriage, and the two first-class carriages, which were lying in the field of Mr. John Nash, and the second-class carriage, which rested on the declivity, were dragged up the embankment, fifteen feet in height, and "righted" upon the rails by one o'clock on Wednesday morning. The wheels of the luggage van, which was the first carriage which got off the rails, and which caused the whole of the mischief, underwent a minute examination. No defects, however, prior to the accident, were discovered.

To the extraordinary strength of both the first and second-class carriages, which, though very much damaged and shattered, stood the shock so as to enable the passengers to move freely in them, may be attributed the preservation of the lives of the numerous passengers, which were placed in the most imminent peril.

The galvanic telegraph between Slough and Paddington, which had been damaged, and rendered for the time utterly useless, by the wires and posts having been severed and broken, was repaired during the night, and by nine o'clock next morning it was again in full operation.

To give some idea of the extraordinary speed at which the express train was proceeding at the moment of the upset of the carriages, it may be mentioned that the preceding mile was "timed" by Mr. Bristow (of Haverfordwest), and it was gone over in only fifty-two seconds, being at the rate of between sixty-nine and seventy miles per hour

Among the persons injured by the accident was Mr. William Chilver Boodle, of No. 33, Connaught-square; he sustained severe contusions about the neck and shoulders, though no bones are broken, and now lies at his house in a very helpless state. Hopes are entertained, however, that no serious results will ensue from the injuries received.

ATTEMPTED MURDER AND SUICIDE.—On Wednesday morning about 12 o'clock, the inhabitants of Nottingham-street, Bethnal-green, were alarmed by the screams of a female, and in a few seconds a woman rushed out of No. 5, deluged in blood, from a frightful wound in the throat, inflicted by her husband, with a shoemaker's knife. She was immediately taken to the surgery of Dr. Moore, and the wound dressed by his assistant. During the interval, the man, whose name is Warren, cut his own throat in so severe a manner that he was supposed to be dead; but, on examining him at the London Hospital, to which he was immediately taken, life was not found to be extinct. He now lies there in a hopeless state. Jealousy of his wife, who is 20 years of age, is stated to be the cause, and, from all that can be ascertained, without any foundation.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Os-ke-oau-mai, the wife of Little Wolf, one of the Ioway Indians, died last week in Paris, of an affection of the lungs, brought on by grief for the death of her young child in London. Her husband was unremitting in his endeavours to console her and restore her to the love of life, but she constantly replied—"No! no! My four children recall me. I see them by the side of the Great Spirit. They stretch out their arms to me, and are astonished that I do not join them."

The Austrian papers announce that a merchant of Venice has obtained permission to construct a railway from Verona to Bregenz, by way of Roerede, Trient, Bolzin, Meran, Landeck, and Feldkirch, to effect a close communication between the Austrian seaports. The plan is said to have been very favourably received at Vienna.

Athens papers of the 30th of May, give a very lamentable account of Greece, which is in a state of anarchy. The Rev. Henry D. Leeves, the chaplain of the English Embassy at Athens, died on the 27th of April at Beyrout.

A St. Petersburg letter, of the 1st, informs us that several Polish emigrants have recently received an amnesty, with permission to return to Poland. It is added that the Emperor intends to follow up this system of clemency in all cases where it is practicable with safety.

"The Duke of Bordeaux, who is preparing for a journey to the East, will," says the Presse, "travel in the same manner as Count Demidoff. The apparent chief of the expedition is the Duke de Blacas, who has engaged a painter named Guillemin, who is to have to his own share one half of all the sketches he makes, and is to receive at the end of the tour 8000 francs."

The romance of the Viscountess de St. Mars (Countess Dash) has not been of long duration. Scarcely had her marriage with Prince Stourdza been celebrated when it was broken. The head of the Greek Church assembled his Bishops and Council on May 9, and solemnly declered it to be null and void.

The comet, which was seen in Paris for the first time on the 5th inst., has been observed at Dusseldorf by M. Denzenberg, who estimates its dimensions differently from the account of the Paris astronomers. He calculates the length of the tail at 5 degrees. On the 9th the comet was in the constellation of Auriga. It was seen at Frankfort on the 10th. At Havre it was first seen on the 11th, and the journals describe it as exceedingly brilliant, and in its greatest splendour from eleven o'clock till midnight, the tail in a horizontal position, and not equally bright throughout its whole length.

A letter from Frankfort, dated June 12, says, Prince Metternich intends to visit his estate of Johannisberg about the end of July, and it is reported that while he resides there that distinguished statesman will be honoured with a visit from Queen Victoria.

Messrs. Foley, Marshall, and Bell, have been selected by the Commissioners of the Fine Arts in connexion with the new Houses of Parliament, to execute the statues of Hampden, Falkland, and Clarendon.

Sir M. A. Shee, in consequence of the state of his health, has resigned the office of President of the Royal Academy.

Constantinople letters of the 28th of May state, that "Sir Stratford Canning was still much displeased with the march of the Turkish Ministry but could hardly fail to bring them to reason."

Letters from Odessa of the 22nd ult., mention the receipt of news from Teflis, announcing that the expedition directed by Count Woronzoff in person against Chamil Bey had not been successful. After a warm engagement the Russian troops were compelled to retire, after sustaining a considerable loss. Chamil Bey had notified to all the Circassian Princes that he would treat as enemies those who did not take arms against Russia.

The Gazette of Carlsruhe states that the hereditary Grand Duke of Baden is quite recovered from his recent indisposition, and that he intends proceeding shortly to England, in order to take up his residence for a time in Hastings.

A singular and melancholy accident happened a few days ago at Aix. An inhabitant was coming out of his house, when his foot slipped, and he fell with such force that his tongue, having got between his upper and lower teeth, was completely severed at about half its length. His sufferings have been most agonising, and there is every reason to fear that he will be entirely deprived of the power of enunciation.

The East India and China Association have received a communication from the Government, stating that the Governor of Ceylon has been instructed, if he sees no objection to the measure, to direct the postmaster at Colombo to make up mails by way of Marseilles for transmission by the direct Calcutta line of packets.

A sturgeon, weighing 16½ pounds, was caught in the river Lea, near the Temple Mills, Hackney, on Wednesday. It is a singular fact that, during the past month, no fewer than four other fish of the same species have been caught near the same spot.

A letter from Alexandria, dated June 6, says that there is now no longer any talk of the railroad on the Suez desert, nor of the postal convention which Mr. Bourne was to have concluded with Mehemet Ali. That these two objects, so conducive to British interests, should not have been carried into effect, does not create surprise, when it is known that Artin Bey, the Viceroy's Prime Minister, is in the pay of the French Government, and is under French protection.

Letters from the Roman States of the 7th inst., announce that M. Rossi, the French Minister, had completely failed in his mission to the Pope. The Cardinal Legate of Bologna had lately visited the Milan and Venice Railroad, and returned quite pleased with what he had seen, and determined to exert his influence to obtain an embranchment from that line to Bologna.

By the returns kept by the authorities of the fire-brigade of the conflagrations that hourly occur in the metropolis, it appears that, during the year up to Wednesday evening, no fewer than 411 fires have happened in London and its suburbs.

TO THE FORGET-ME-NOT GROWING ON THE FIELD OF WATERLOO.

BY MISS SHERIDAN CAREY,

Authoress of "A Warning Cry." Vide "Times," Nov. 8, 1844.

Why bloom upon the honor'd grave
Of these the unforgotten Brave—
Why here thine azure blossoms wave,
Appealing flow'r!

This is no humble burial-place,
Dull refuge of a lowly race
Who, dust and ashes, leave no trace
That once they were:

No weary pilgrim tarries here;
No hapless orphan shelters near;
No wretch borne down by woes severe,
Here rests in peace.

The stripling son, the veteran sire;
The hand of steel, the brain of fire,
The heart that throbb'd with patriot ire,—
Commingle here,—

The Chivalry that rush'd to save
Imperial Freedom from the grave,
And sweeping on like wint'ry wave,
Charg'd, smote, and fell.

Sweet flow'r! what breast to valour true,
Thrills not at thought of WATERLOO,
And yearly consecrate anew
THE VICTOR-SLAIN.

Each daring deed, each gallant name,
Carv'd on the adamant of Fame,
An Empire's proud remembrance claim—
Nor vainly yet:

In England's grey cathedral aisles
The moonbeam sleeps on marble piles,
Meet records of the dauntless files
That slumber here;

In England's old ancestral halls
Deep, deep the shade of sadness falls
When pining memory recalls
Each perished trait.

Nor there alone! in many a cot,
By love and joy and hope forgot,
The widow'd matron marks her lot
In mute despair:

Yet will a bright, a fev'rish flush
Swift to those furrow'd temples rush,
And tears awhile forbear to gush
From grief's chill fount;

As the deep thunder of the gun
Bids her all hail! whose lion son
Woo'd high emprise with WELLINGTON,
In Glory's field.

And lo! as streams electric light
Upon the ebon pall of night,
A vision starts upon her sight,
In pomp array'd:

Banner and plume athwart the sky,
Flung to the breeze, majestic, fly,
And serried Hosts sweep proudly by
To clarion's peal:

One—only one—she sees, she hears!
Thick beats her heart with hopes and fears,—
The joy—the pride—the prop—of years,
Rides gaily there!

On—on! wild hoofs tear up the ground;
Drums roll, and madd'ning fifes resound,
Death shouts exultant at the sound,
Ha ha! Ha ha!

They charge—they meet—Earth reels aghast,—
They turn—they wheel—they thunder past:—
Oh! gallant hearts now look your last
On yon bright sun!

On! on! keen sabres leap on high;
Fierce, fierce ascends the battle-cry,
And hoarse the cannons' dread reply
As Ocean's roar

But hush'd the furious din at last,
Hark! hark! the trumpet's thrilling blast!
The strife is o'er—the conflict past—
But where is HE!

On stranger-lips she greets his name—
She reads in stranger-eyes his fame,
While deaf'ning bells the day proclaim
For ever dear.

One struggling sob!—erect her head,
And stern her glance, and haught her tread;
Yes—yes—she glories in the dead—
Her hero Boy!

And deeper glows the crimson tide
That speaks the Mother's quenchless pride,
As comes the kindling thought—He died
AT WATERLOO!

* * * *

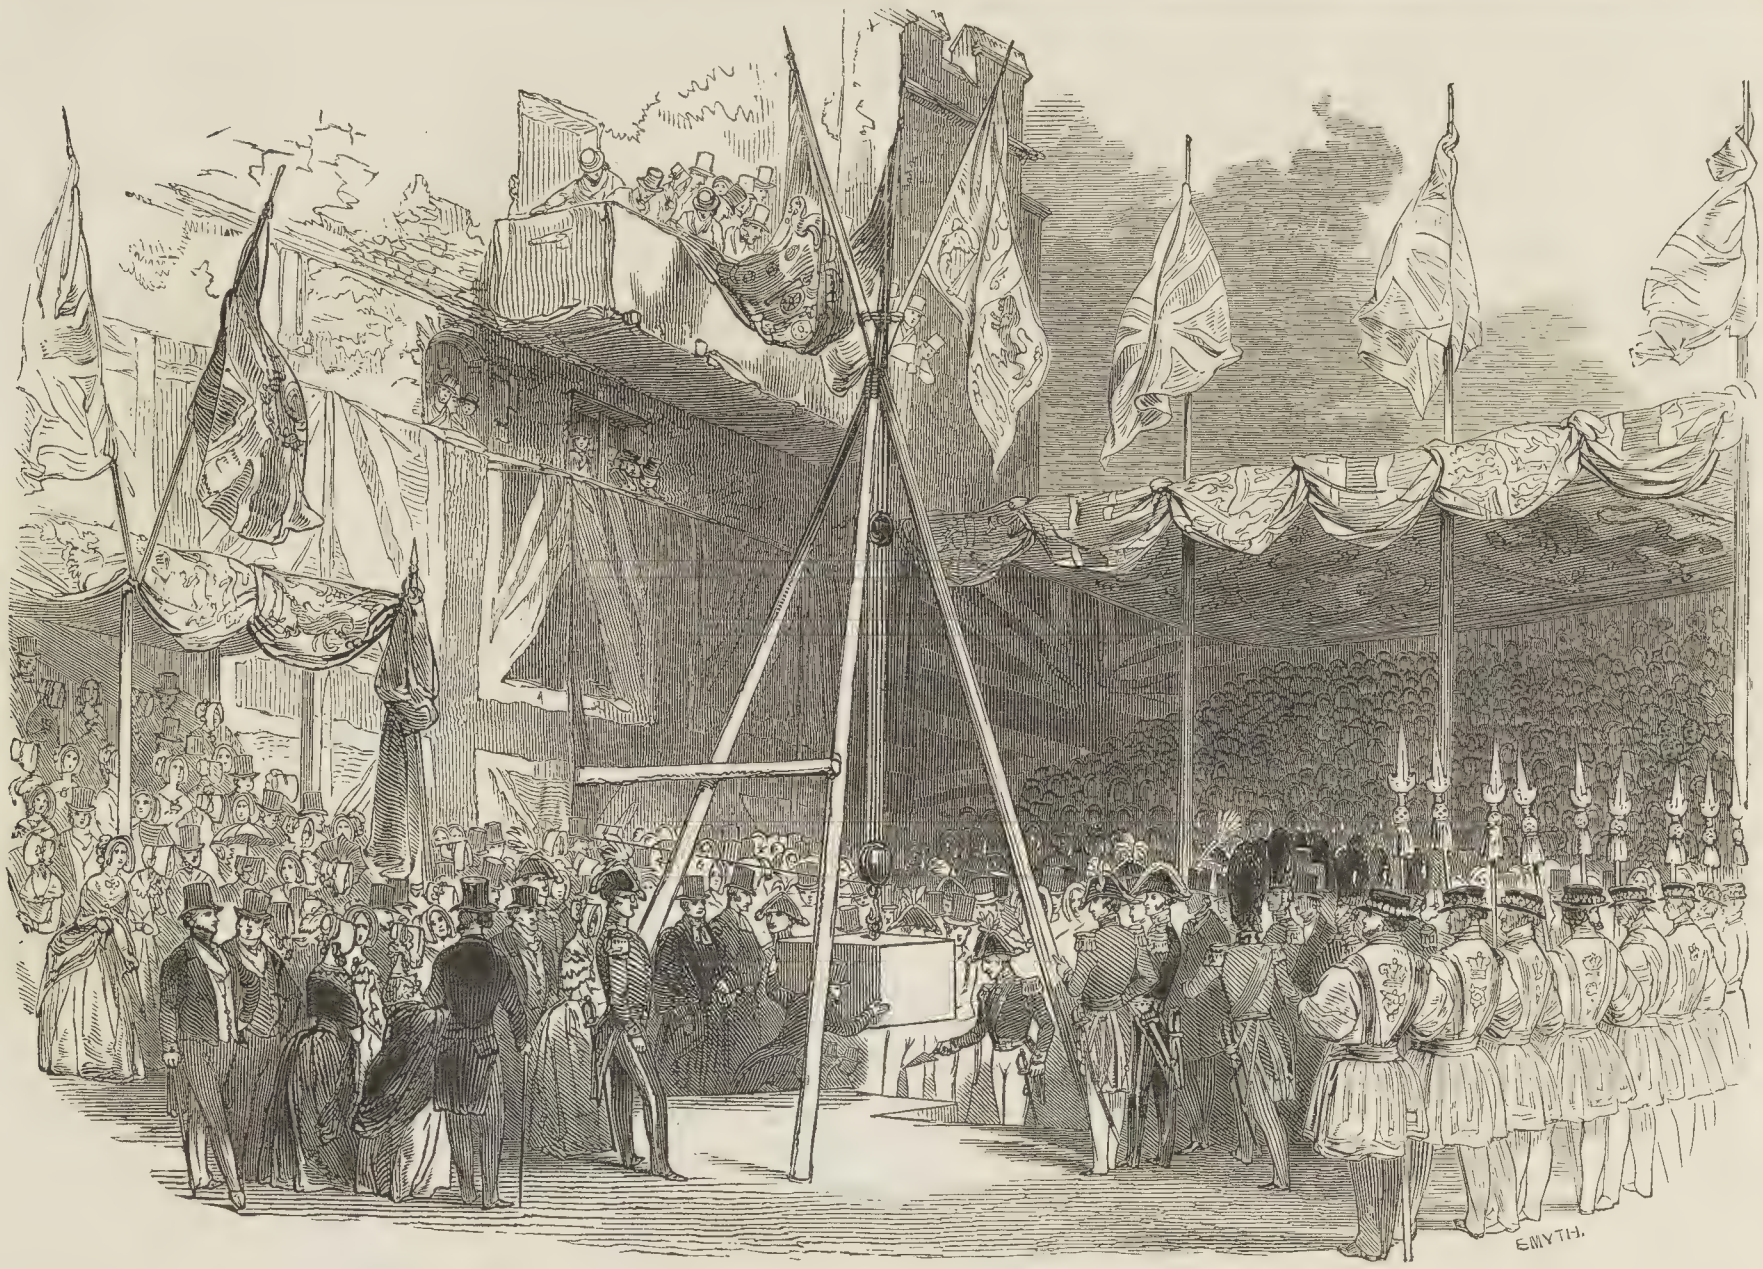
WHAT tho' beneath the cold grey sky,
In shroudless tombs, the warriors lie;
What tho' nor friend, nor kinsman nigh
Fresh wreaths to twine,—

FOR THEM, tears well from loving eyes,—
FOR THEM, lorn hearts heave bitter sighs,—
FOR THEM, a Nation's chants arise,—
Year after year.

Shall WATERLOO fleet like a spell—
Of WELLINGTON, no token tell!
Yea—when the Triton winds his shell
Where woods now wave.

Bloom not then simple flow'ret here—
The Dead that press this mighty bier,
Earth's generations shall revere
Till Time's no more!

Go—flourish o'er the fading clay
Where none consoling tribute pay,
There lift thine head, and, pleading, say,
FORGET-ME-NOT!



June 1845.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION-STONE OF THE NEW BARRACKS IN THE TOWER OF LONDON.

On Saturday, was laid, with interesting ceremony, the foundation-stone of the Grand Waterloo Barracks, to be erected on the site of the Storehouse, or Small Armoury, destroyed by the great fire, in 1841. Soon after ten o'clock, the whole of the troops quartered in the garrison, consisting of her Majesty's regiment of Grenadier Guards, and a company of the Royal Artillery, were drawn out on the parade fronting the Deputy-Governor's house, headed by the splendid band of the Guards. Precisely at the hour appointed—viz., half-past eleven—his Grace the Duke of Wellington, accompanied by Colonel Gurwood, arrived, and was received by a guard of honour. The Duke, who was attired in the uniform of the Chief Constable, or Governor of the Tower, on alighting from his barouche, mounted his horse and rode to Major Elrington's residence, the band striking up "See the Conquering Hero comes," the troops presenting arms. The model and the several drafts of the intended barracks were then laid before his Grace for inspection, and he expressed his entire satisfaction with the whole.

A procession was then formed across the parade, having the troops on the right, to the foundation of the barracks, and which proceeded in the following order:—The chief warder, Mr. Lund, in advance, followed by the whole of the Tower Yeomen of the Guard on duty, in their coronation dresses, bearing halberts, walking two abreast; Serjeant Major Howe, the master gunner of the Tower. Then came the Government contractor, Mr. Harrison, bearing the plummet, and also the clerk of the works with the mallet. Mr. Stacey and Mr. Barratt, of the Ordnance department, carrying the coins to be deposited beneath the stone. Next followed the officers of the Royal Artillery, and the Royal Sappers and Miners quartered in the fortress. Major Hall, the commander of the Royal Engineers, with the plans of the intended building, and the Clerk of the Board of Ordnance, Capt. Boldero, M.P., with the trowel. Officers of the Ordnance Department; officers of the garrison. Field Marshal his Grace the Duke of Wellington, accompanied by the Right Hon. Sir George Murray, M.P., Master General of the Ordnance. Major Elrington, Col. Gurwood, the Chaplain of the Garrison, and a staff of officers as a guard of honour, bringing up the rear.

On arriving at the western gate, leading to the site, the appearance around was exceedingly animating. Flags floated in all directions, and at the eastern extremity was erected a spacious gallery, decorated with colours of every nation, which was filled with a numerous circle of elegantly-dressed ladies. On the procession reaching the spot allotted for the foundation-stone, Captain Boldero handed the trowel to the Duke, who proceeded to lay the mortar. The Rev. H. Melvill, the Chaplain of the fortress, then offered up a most impressive prayer, at the conclusion of which, a number of coins, in a bottle, were deposited beneath the stone, and the signal being given, it was lowered into its position. His Grace then finished the ceremony by striking the mallet several times on the top of the stone, amidst the cheers of the company, the band playing "Rule Britannia." The procession then retired in the order it had arrived, to the Deputy-Governor's house, where a déjeuner had been provided.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON LAYING THE FIRST STONE OF THE WATERLOO BARRACKS, AT THE TOWER OF LONDON.

The stone bore the following inscription :—"The first stone of the Waterloo Barracks was laid by Field Marshal the Duke of Wellington, K.G., G.C.B., G.C.H., Constable of the Tower of London, and Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's Forces, on the 14th of June, 1845." The barracks will be 288 feet in length, 61 in breadth, and 70 in height; and it is expected the work will occupy two years. The entire structure is shown in the second Illustration.

THE WATERLOO BARRACKS,—FROM THE ARCHITECT'S DESIGN.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE.

CAMBRIDGE, June 18th.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The first day of this, the Fifteenth Meeting of this celebrated body, did not bid fair for a numerous attendance during the succeeding ones. It opened inauspiciously as regarded the weather, the rain commmencing at a very early hour, and continuing to descend in torrents till an advanced period of the afternoon. The Town Hall presented almost as melancholy an appearance as the streets and the College grounds, few being adventurous enough to venture out in such weather. Not many of the distinguished persons who were expected arrived during the day, this being looked upon more as one of preliminaries, than general business. The Council met on the previous night, on the subject of arrangements, and amongst these it was discussed whether or not Medical Science should in future be made subject of inquiry, or form a portion or section of the Institution. A pretty general feeling seemed to exist amongst the members that it would be better to leave it out altogether, for the reason—that such members of the medical profession as could give interesting papers were too much occupied with, and chained, as it were, to, their practice, to do so. It was left, however, an open question for the meeting of the General Committee to adjudicate upon, and no decision was pronounced by the Council.

The following is the authentic list of the new Officers of the Association:—

TRUSTEES, PERMANENT.
John Taylor, Esq., F.R.S, Treas. G. S.
Roderick Impey Murchison, Esq., F.R.S.
The Very Rev. George Peacock, D.D., F.R.S., Dean of Ely.

PRESIDENT.
Sir John F. W. Herschel, Bart., F.R.S.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.
The Earl of Hardwicke.
The Bishop of Norwich, President of the Linnean Society.
The Rev. J. Graham, D.D., Master of Christ's College.
The Rev. G. Ainslie, D.D., Master of Pembroke College.
G. B. Airy, Esq., F.R.S, Astronomer Royal.
Rev. A. Sedgwick, F.R.S., Woodwardian Professor of Geology.

GENERAL SECRETARIES.
Roderick Impey Murchison, Esq., F.R.S.
Lieut.-Col. Sabine, F.R.S.

ASSISTANT GENERAL SECRETARY.
Professor John Phillips, F R.S., York.

GENERAL TREASURER.
John Taylor, Esq., F.R.S., 2, Duke-street, Adelphi, London.

LOCAL SECRETARIES.
Wm. Hopkins, Esq, F.R.S.
Professor Ansted. F.R.S.

LOCAL TREASURER.
C. C. Babington, Esq., F.L S.

The Council Room in the Town Hall was appointed for the reception of members, and tables were placed on either side for the secretaries, officers, clerks, &c., with a temporary little post-office at the upper end, for the letters and communications addressed to the members. At about half-past two the General Committee met for the election of sectional officers, and other business, the Very Reverend the Dean of Ely, Professor Peacock, late President of the Association, in the chair. The Secretary read the report of the proceedings of the various committee meetings during the past year, which were confirmed. He then went into a statement concerning

THE RECEPTION ROOM, AT THE TOWN HALL.

REFERENCES.

A to G Section Rooms
H Reception Room, Town Hall
I Evening Meetings, Senate House
K Models and Works of Art, Perse School
L Horticultural Fête, Downing Grounds
M Ordinaries, Red Lion

1 University Library
2 Fitzwilliam Museum
3 Pitt Press
4 Anatomical Schools
5 Trinity College
6 St. John's College
7 Magdalene College
8 Jesus College
9 Sidney College
10 Caius College
11 Trinity Hall
12 Clare Hall
13 King's College
14 Catharine Hall
15 Corpus Christi College
16 Queen's College
17 Pembroke College
18 Peterhouse
19 Downing College
20 Emmanuel College
21 Christ College
22 Philosophical Society
23 Pythagoras School
24 Addenbrooke's Hospital
25 St Mary's Church
26 St. Michael's Church
27 St. Edward's Church
28 Trinity Church
29 All Saints' Church
30 Round Church
31 St. Clement's Church
32 St. Giles' Church
33 St. Peter's Church
34 Benet Church
35 St. Andrew's Church
36 Botolph Church
37 Little St. Mary's
38 Corn Exchange
39 Observatory Road
40 Post Office

PLAN OF CAMBRIDGE.

meteorological and magnetic observations, the importance of which, and especially as regarded terrestrial magnetism, induced the General Committee to invite several distinguished persons in these branches of science to visit the Cambridge Meeting, and report the result of their experience. The Report of the Committee then went on to the question as to whether or not Section E (Medical Science) should be very much modified, so as to include a more general range of subject.

Towards the evening, which turned out very fine, the arrival of company by the late coaches and other visitors, if not equal to general expectation, was far from being inconsiderable; and the ordinaries at the Hoop and the Lion Hotels, the former especially, were anything but thinly attended. The prices of beds and the usual meals at these and the various hotels throughout the town were very little, if any, above the ordinary prices, and these only as regards beds and dinners. The dinner and supper parties through out the various colleges were very numerous, and carried on according to the usually splendid scale of University hospitality. As might be expected, those portions of the creature comforts, called "the delicacies of the season," were at an increased price—peas for instance at from 4s. to 5s. a peck, and grapes at from 7s. to 8s. a pound. The chief attractions of the first day's proceedings, it must be confessed, were what Doctor O'Toole calls "the eating and the drinking," in which the Members of the Association consoled themselves for the unexpected dampness and dullness of the day.

In the evening, Professor Ansted, (of King's College, London,) gave a Soirée at Jesus College, which was very brilliantly attended.

THURSDAY.

Every thing about the town and the colleges this morning wore a cheerful and holiday air, the inauspicious state of the atmosphere on the previous day being succeeded by bright and glowing sunshine, without a threatening cloud to mar the promise of what June weather ought to be to give additional interest to the occasions.

The various sections, with the exception of that of Medicine, which seems already to have received its doom from the tendency of the General Committee's Report, held their sittings in the different halls and lecture-rooms apportioned to them, commencing at eleven and ending at three in the afternoon. They were, in general, not very well attended, with the exception of the Senate House, which was the chief point of attraction, and where Professor Sedgewick, one of the most eloquent and popular lecturers of the day, held forth on the Geology of the Vicinity of Cambridge to a numerous auditory, a goodly portion of which, although not the majority, consisted of ladies, whose gay and brilliant appearance formed a pleasing contrast to—viewing the living scene from the galleries, whilst to those below they appeared to harmonize agreeably with—the sable academics by which they were surrounded.

The first general meeting of the Association took place in the evening, in the Senate House. On the platform, on either side of and behind the chair, were seated the Marquis of Northampton, the Earl of Burlington, Mr. Everett (Minister of the United States), the Bishop of Norwich, Captain Sir James Ross, and many of the distinguished persons visiting Cambridge on the present interesting occasion.

The general body of the building was filled in every part with the Members of the Association and the ladies of their families. The latter being in full evening costume, gave a gay and brilliant appearance to the scene. At half-past eight o'clock the business of the meeting commenced, and some interesting speeches were made by the Dean of Ely (the President), Sir J. Herschell, Mr. Everett, and the Marquis of Northampton.

FRIDAY.

The Sections were in general better attended this morning than on yesterday; but the greatest scene of attraction was the Floral Fête in the grounds of Downing College, where thousands, especially of the fair sex, assembled to get a glimpse of the great lions of the scientific world. The grounds were laid out in the usually graceful and varied style on such festive occasions. Pavilions were erected in all directions for the display of the flowers, which were of the rarest description, according to their various tribes and families—Cambridgeshire being famous for its horticulture; and, in the midst of the grounds, an excellent band of music was in attendance.

SUMMER FASHIONS.

To what a sudden display of the lightest and airiest costumes has the fine weather at length given rise. The clear, transparent muslins and tarlatanes, the delicate barèges, now in full vogue, form, perhaps, the most becoming of all costumes; they give a sort of shadowiness and uncertainty to the figures of the fair wearers, which, when accompanied by charms of face and grace of person, make them look as if they hardly belonged to this "nether world." It is our duty, however, to restrict ourselves to the details of the costumes, which, when combined, produce such graceful effects; and, however matter-of-fact and common place such minutiæ may appear, we are well assured that they are not without interest to our fair readers. The materials most in vogue for the promenade costume are Smyrna muslins, embroidered tarlatanes, and gazes de soie; those more appropriate for the cold days, that even at this time of the year occasionally intervene, are Pompadours, shaded Pekins, and shot silks. The dresses of gazes de soie are usually in large shaded and striped patterns: these dresses, which are usually made with flounces, headed by quillings of ribbon, have a charming effect. The taffetas, with broad green stripes, separated by threads of violet, pink, and gold colour, have high and deserved vogue. They are frequently trimmed with large plaits of ribbon in pink, violet, and yellow satin, placed en echelle up the front of the dress, with bows of the same, shaded in these three colours. The poil de chevre (goat-hair tissue) is in high favour for promenade costume: this material is peculiarly graceful when made up en redingote, embroidered in round spots, and Brandebourgs with flounces. Those in ecru, or castor grey, embroidered in silk either of the same colour or shaded, and with trimmings of grey and pink ribbon, are of the highest elegance. Grenadines, with horizontal stripes lilac and white, are much in favour for the dinner dress; the skirts are generally trimmed with five rows of fringed ribbon shaded in white and lilac, placed at equal distances, the uppermost nearly reaching to the waist; the body tight, and trimmed in like manner with five rows of fringed ribbon; the sleeves long and tight, opening in the bend of the arm up to the elbow, and fastened at intervals by lilac silk buttons, over half-sleeves of white tulle, trimmed at the wrist with lace. The most fashionable bonnets are those in lace or gimp lined with satin, or those in lace and ribbon. Nothing, however, can be prettier than a paille de riz bonnet, lined with pink silk shot with rabbit grey; the edge of the bonnet trimmed with two folds of crape, shaded in these two colours; a waving feather, shaded pink and grey, ornamenting the bonnet, which is trimmed with ribbon of these shades. Another style of bonnet in high favour is in jonquil silk, covered with tulle of the same colour, ornamented by a fringed feather, shaded jonquil and white. The form of bonnets which has prevailed with so little alteration for so long a time seems destined to undergo an important change. It is certain that bonnets are daily worn more rounded at the ears and raised from the head in front, and it seems highly probable that our élégantes will finally return to the round Leghorn hat, surrounded by garlands of field flowers, which would certainly be a more picturesque coiffure than the present convenient, but certainly somewhat anomalous and ungainly, form of head-dress to which a lady in her out of-door excursions is condemned.

Evening dresses continue to be made in the same materials; and the double skirts are still generally worn. A slight change is visible in the berthes, which, instead of being of lace, are now frequently made in the same material as the dress in a cardinal shape, edged by a quilling either of the same material, of Brussels net, or ribbon surrounded by lace.

THE FINE ARTS.—Prince Albert presided on Tuesday afternoon at a meeting of the Commission for Promoting and Encouraging the Fine Arts, in the Rebuilding the Palace of Westminster. The Commissioners present were the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Lincoln, Lord Colborne, Sir Robert H. Inglis, Mr. Hallam, and Mr. Wyse. At half-past four o'clock his Royal Highness and the Commissioners, attended by Mr. Eastlake, the secretary, went to inspect the collection of statues which are shortly to be exhibited in Westminster Hall.

THE THEATRES.

The operatic performances at the two large houses have undergone no great change since last week. "The Enchantress" continues to draw at DRURY LANE—not indeed to any extraordinary degree, but still sufficient to prove Madame Anna Thillon's powers of attraction. The "off-nights," when "The Bohemian Girl,"—who, from her long career, must be beginning to verge on "The Bohemian Woman"—is performed, with some second rate ballet, are very badly attended; and for some weeks the house has been closed on Saturday evenings. The season, we presume, will terminate with Madame Thillon's engagement. We question whether it may be considered, on the whole, a successful one. A new ballet called "Natalie, ou La Laitiere Suisse," was produced on Monday evening. It was not a very brilliant affair, but may amuse the half-price visitors.

At COVENT GARDEN, the very excellent performances of the Brussels Operatic Corps are beginning to be appreciated, but not to that extent which they really deserve. The greatest care, with a most praiseworthy and painstaking spirit is observable in every department, down to the apparently most unimportant detail. The precision and extreme attention of the orchestra calls for the highest commendation. "Les Diamans de la Couronne" and "Robert le Diable" have been the most important operas produced. Madame Laborde has played, respectively, Catarina in the first, and Isabelle in the second. Both were admirable performances: but she may consider the Catarina as the greater triumph of the two from having produced so very favourable an impression in a rôle which the public imagined Madame Thillon had made completely her own. Madame Julien is an artiste of equal excellence, although her voice is not in such good condition as that of the other prima donna. She delivered the well-known and beautiful airs, "Va dit elle" and "Quand je quittais la Normandie," with great feeling and eloquence of expression. And Madame Guichard, who first appeared in the "Chalet," is entitled to a first-rate position in opera comique. We have already praised the male performers, but they deserve an extra word or two with regard to their acting, which is of no common order, and proves them all to have deeply studied their profession. M. Laborde, M. Quilleveri, and M. Coudere would all make admirable actors, leaving their vocalisation out of the question. There was a dash and enthusiasm about M. Laborde's Robert, which we have looked for in vain in other representatives of the character, native or foreign. We can sincerely recommend the performances of this excellent troupe to the notice of our musical and theatrical readers.

LYCEUM.

The very clever little children who came out in such bold opposition to the Danseuses Viennoises, and with such good effect, appeared in a new divertissement at this house on Monday evening, with the most triumphant success. It is called "Les Fées," and introduces the whole of the juvenile corps in a variety of novel and very effective tableaux; the concluding one, in which they build a species of fairy palace, being one of the prettiest combinations of dancing and mechanical ingenuity we ever witnessed. Four clever little boys have a pas comique, which they execute with remarkable precision and drollery; and some of these small people are so tiny—we may particularise a beautiful child who stands in front when they form the line—that their very appearance induces mirth, and almost tempts one to believe that, after all, the fairies are not those supernatural little Mrs. Harrises which science and education have taught us to look upon them as. The curtain fell amidst a tumult of approbation; and the "Danseuses Anglaises," with their intelligent teacher, Mr. Frampton, were loudly called for, when the cheering was renewed upon their appearance. Not the least pleasing part of their performance is the appearance of real enjoyment with which they evidently enter into the business of the various dances; no children at "Thread-my-needle" in their playground could look happier. We shall be mistaken if they do not prove a great source of entertainment to other little people home for the Midsummer vacation.

ADELPHI.

Both authors and managers display indefatigable energy in providing amusement for the patrons of this favourite theatre, and unvarying good luck attends their productions. In noticing Mr. Charles Selby's very droll interlude, "The Irish Dragoon," a week or two back, we spoke of him as the "safest" dramatic author we could point out in his particular line; and to back up our assertion we can now bring forward a new apropos farce, "Powder and Ball," from the prolific pen of the same ingenious playwright, acted for the first time on Monday, amidst the uproarious merriment of the audience from beginning to end. It is founded, as may be conceived, on her Majesty's late Bal Costumé; and its fun. construction, and allusions are too local and appropriate to let it lie under the imputation of being "adapted from the French." We believe it to be thoroughly native. Mrs. Montgomerie Tibbs (Mrs. Frank Matthews), "an elderly Giselle, deeply attached to the Mazourka and evening parties," has two daughters, Celestia and Anastasia. It is almost needless to quote the words of the bill and say they are pretty, when they are played by Miss Taylor and Miss Ellen Chaplin. In the absence of their papa, an eminent grocer, Mr. Montgomerie Tibbs (Mr. Lambert), they determine upon having a "Bal Poudré;" more especially as the young ladies have two admirers, Captain Kidglove (Mr. Selby) and Lord Snolts (Mr. Worrell). Sally Knobbs (Miss Woolgar), own maid to the Misses Tibbs, and her sweetheart, Jacob Gerkin (Mr. Wright), determine to join the party in masks, and the confusion at the ball becomes tolerably well confounded, when Mr. Tibbs suddenly returns home. He is about to be very angry, when he finds that, during the ball, Lord Snolts and Captain Kidglove have proposed to his girls, upon which all is made right, and the piece concludes with "Sir Roger de Coverley." It will be seen from this sketch, that there was not much in the plot: but there was a rampant extravagance about the whole burletta, that forced everybody to laugh, whatever mood they chanced to be in. How shall we describe Mr. Wright's costume? His wig was something between a gigantic pantaloon's, and the urn on the top of the Monument, whilst his coat stuck out like nothing else but half an umbrella, turned upside down. Viewed from behind, he was a perambulating inverted convolvulus. Miss Woolgar was equally effective; she sang, and danced, and played, all with the same spirit. This talented young actress is rapidly making her way to a high position in popular favour. Her versatility is of no ordinary character, and she will, if we are not mistaken, yet achieve greater successes than she has hitherto done. There is a good temper and quaint flow of spirits about her acting, which always carries the house with her. All the other parts were well played, more especially by Mrs. F. Matthews and Mr. Selby, whose costumes were à ravir. At the conclusion of the piece, after encoring "Sir Roger de Coverly" (during which inspiring dance the faces of the audience were not the least amusing subjects to watch), the applause was most uproarious; and Mr. Selby being loudly called for, appeared, and announced the piece for repetition every evening until further notice.

HAYMARKET.

A "dramatic sketch," in one act, called "The Old Soldier," was produced here on Wednesday evening—and, if its reception with the house be a criterion, with success; although in our own opinion it is remarkably dull. The author has evidently gone upon the models offered in Mr. Lemon's effective pieces of "Grandfather Whitehead" and "Old Parr;" but this sketch lacks the deep domestic interest of the first and the prestige of the second. The plot lies in a nutshell. Master Michael Cramp (Mr. Tilbury) having come to certain estates dishonourably, is about to compel his daughter Helen (Miss Telbin) to marry Sir Lionel Ruffler (Mr. Brindal), when Adam Lethersole (Mr. Farren), "the Old Soldier," brings forward certain papers which upset Cramp's claim to the estates; and Patience marries her own love, Master Harry Bowyer (Mr. Howe). There was little to notice in the acting except Mr. Farren's Adam; which was, of course, the part of the piece. It was an admirable performance. His endeavour to read the letter—going to the window of the hall for better light, and then complaining of his failing faculties—was most excellent, and heartily recognised by the house. Nobody else had much to do, but that little was done carefully; and the very capital manner in which the piece has been put upon the stage deserves all praise.

At the fall of the curtain, the applause was unqualified, and Mr. Farren was called before the curtain, when he announced the piece for repetition every evening. Mr. Jerrold's comedy commenced the programme of the evening's amusements, and Mr. Morton's very droll farce of "The King and I" concluded it The house was very well attended.

PRINCESS'.

The lessee has taken advantage of the prevalent George-the-Second costume epidemic to put his corps de ballet into powdered wigs and court suits, in order that they may give an imitation of the most popular dances at her Majesty's State Ball last week. To Mr. Gilbert, Miss Ballin, and Mr. and Miss Marshall, is entrusted the task of leading the dancers, and very well they do it. A production of this kind bespeaks energy on the part of the management, and fully deserved the applause with which it was greeted. Mr. Edward Loder's opera is still in rehearsal; we believe nothing is as yet definitively settled with respect to the prima donna; but Mademoselle Nau is now talked of.

THE FRENCH PLAYS.

The ST. JAMES'S THEATRE is decidedly the worst ventilated in London, and the present weather is more closely oppressive than any we ever recollect. It is, therefore, the greater compliment to the admirable acting of M. Achard that the audiences brave these inconveniences, and sit out the performances with evident satisfaction. The engagement of this incomparable artiste terminates with the present week, to the great regret, we should imagine, of all the habitués of the theatre. Our task of noticing the performances at this house has been almost wearying, as we before observed, from the uniformity of excellence submitted to our criticisms. A failure would have been most refreshing and acceptable, for all our panegyrics have been long exhausted.

It is to be regretted that the constant employment of our English actors and actresses has not allowed them to take a few lessons from the leading members of the French Company. Their finesse, intelligence, and perfect knowledge of stage business might furnish many a good hint to our native performers. The superiority of the Italian, French, and Belgian Companies now in London, in their respective lines, over anything we can accomplish—and this is the truth—is the best proof of the absurdity of the silly cant against "patronising foreigners," that can be brought forward. We believe John Bull, with all his faults, to be sturdily national enough not to countenance an alien, so long as he is convinced that any one of his own compatriots could do the same thing equally well.

THE COLOSSEUM.

An evening visit to this unique Temple of Art has realised all the anticipations we expressed at the period of the opening of the day exhibition. It is true that "soon as the evening shades prevail," the visitor loses the richly-dight Conservatories, and the delightful fragrance of their exotics, and he must retrace his steps from the wonder-fraught relics of the antique world to the mystic regions of the subterranean marvel—the stalactite caverns of Adelsburg; or, he may linger in the corridors, and there enjoy a foretaste of the artistical display that awaits him. At a stated hour, the Glyptotheca, or Museum of Sculpture, brilliantly illuminated, is thrown open, and you enter a saloon of truly palatial splendour; whilst its advantageous construction for exhibition purposes cannot be surpassed: here are assembled upwards of one hundred casts, of classic beauty. You then ascend to the new Panorama of London by Night, projected and carried out by Mr. Bradwell, and painted by Messrs. Danson and Telbin. It is a bright evening, and the moon is sailing proudly in the heavens, stars twinkle, and fleecy clouds float in the atmosphere, whilst the moving ripple of the river is silvered by the Queen of Night.

You turn from this scene of majestic nature to the "mighty heart," not yet "lying still," but the streets, or arteries, of the outspread city lit up with life-like fidelity. We have not, however, space for detail; but must mention the atmospheric effects, which are perfect illusion. This vast night picture, although parallel in design with the day panorama, is a distinct work, and is set and lighted within a very short time; in the execution of which, mechanical difficulties have been overcome, though by such skill as none but a master-mind could exercise. We were glad to see the Exhibition very numerously and fashionably attended.

TAGLIONI, that hitherto unrivalled danseuse, has arrived in this country to take her farewell of her old admirer, John Bull, and of the stage. She will make her first appearance next Thursday at her Majesty's Theatre, in that most poetical of ballets, "La Sylphide." Rossicaccia and Baroilhet, who make but a very short stay in this country, will make their second appearance in Donizetti's charming opera "Roberto Devereux"—the part of the Earl of Essex being taken by Moriani. The fairy-footed Viennese will also contribute their share to the overflowing amusements of the evening.

A RAMBLE IN THE REALMS OF CHAT.

Gossip galore! as they say in the land of Dan. Chat eternal! All the world agog after some excitement or other! The Maynooth Bill through the Lords! Winchilsea before the Queen, with a coal-porter burden of four hundred petitions! A bull-fight at Madrid! A race at Hampton! And no end of debate over the wrongs, the cannibalism, and the Company of New Zealand!

Out of these, by way of selection, we pick the Bull-fight. It is a theme of refinement worthy of the intellect and literature of a civilised age! The lion struggles of the ancient gladiators were on a par with it for their immediate savagery, only that they had more of terrible majesty in their spectacle—less of the bathos of modern chivalry (Heaven save the mark!) and not quite so copious an effluescence of blood! But at last we have from Spain—not always a country celebrated for its morality, but rather renowned for a cruelty that would give Dick Martin the shivers if he were above the earth—a fine moral lesson for the Royalty of Europe and the mankind of the world at large.

Fancy a great amphitheatre and a little Queen—a piccaninny Sovereign and a vast temple of slaughter—a young lady of fourteen, drinking with her eyes the life blood of dying horses, and applauding with her lips the knight-errantry that stabbed the bull! This was a fine intellectual feast, a graceful contemplation for the childish monarch—a lovely domestic scene of blood and carnage had in her own sweet presence, and ministering to the happiness of her people its pure and tender delights!

AND THERE WERE TWENTY FOUR HORSES KILLED UPON THE OCCASION!!—Pretty little episode of sporting butchery! Angelic Isabella! fair commissary of the dogs—gentle patroness of the knackers! Yes! a bull-fight is better than a boarding-school—more elevating, more accomplishing—it plays upon the heart instead of the piano—makes a map of blood for its geography—and teaches not the dead languages, but the language of the dead!

Oh sweet Queen! beautiful killer of horses! if we had you here in England you should have satin-stich, and dumbells, and Berlin wool; a boumerang skipping-rope, and cup and ball, play-ground polka, and the use of the globes; but not—oh fourteen-year old Royalty—to use of any part of the globe wherein to hold a bull-fight—not to see even brute sense goaded into madness—not men twisting the tortuous body in the amphitheatre of carnage, and horses screaming out their life upon the reeking floor of slaughter! For all Great Britain thou art welcome to the Prince of the Asturias—an English husband would scarcely advertise for such humanities in a wife!

And there was (when our express left—in disgust, of course!) to be another Bull Fight!

Another and another still succeeds! And what was to be the chivalry thereat displayed? An Ambassadorial competition! The members of the Diplomatic Corps running in full tilt of rivalry—between the horns of the dilemma, and at the os frontis of the bull. Spain has been quarrelling with the Vatican to some purpose. The Pope issues his Bull: it kills twenty-four horses in Madrid; and then up get the body of Ambassadors, with dire intent to slay! The Bull Tournament is on its way to glory! And who mingle in the fray? Report whispers:—

1. "Mr. Livingston, Secretary to the American Legation."

A representative of Lynch law, the Bowie knife, and the Kentucky rifle.

2. "The Duc de Glucksburgh, and M. De Mercier, of the French Embassy."

This can scarce be; the Duke is just married in Paris, and a bull-fight is not an amusement for a honeymoon.

3. "M. Beauvallon, of the Globe, who killed M. Dujarrier, of the Presse, in a duel in the French capital.

This may be. A man who would kill a man in a duel, would kill a bull in Madrid; and the last slaughter would be the least objectionable.

But Spain is a fine country. The Queen cheers on the slayers of bleeding bulls, and the Executive shuts up the editors! Our newspaper friend of the Patriota is safe in the barracks of the body guard, and allowed to communicate with his friends, but not with the public! The distinction is probably made to intimate that the public are not his friends!

The New Zealand debate has been swinging its way tediously through the house, and it has had the pleasant office of interpreter to a general blame. It has pitched into the Cannibals, into the Company, and into the Government alike. The rights of property have been discussed with a degree of vagueness which has greatly defied the acumen of persons accustomed to a literal understanding of meum and tuum—and a theory of Government has been evolved, which appears to have had in it the germs of a poison that was peculiarly disagreeable to natives, and didn't agree with emigrants at all! The best result of all the speechification at present has been the bringing out the hitherto unfledged talent of Mr. Barkley, the member for Leominster, and setting it fairly upon the wing. This honourable M.P. took the House by surprise, and has given promise of becoming an orator. This fact became the more refreshing from the fact of New Zealand not being looked upon as the sort of Spa to which a Demosthenes would resort, to drink the waters.

Hampton Court has been full—the races have progressed most enliveningly—the holiday folks have gone forth in swarms, and, to show what quips and quirks fortune "has upon the cards," a gentleman, with the lively name of "DEATH," won the Surrey and Middlesex Stakes, by a "Misdeal." The rider was "Wakefield," and sure enough he did wake all the field—that is to say, he made them look sharp, and still they weren't up to him. Misdeal was in at the "Death." The Sporting world, by the way, has been considerably agitated by the "Melody colt" enquiry.

Setting aside the oddity of so much melody creating so much discord, the excitement of the exposure is not to be despised. John Day may be considered as "expelled the turf" by the decision of the Jockey Club; and although the exposure is important and must be of use, yet the only joke we have heard about it declares it to be of no use at all. "They might just as well have kept it dark," said a turf slangsman in our hearing at Hampton, "for they 've done what's 'similar the same' by putting out the Day!"

The Corn-law League has put forth a really great triumph in a bazaar-balance sheet of twenty-five thousand pounds, and in a general account of no less than a hundred and sixteen. This is enough, one would think, as far as the Corn question is concerned, to make the Government give ear.

The India news is not very important; but, in the midst of our wonderful railway projects at home, it comes in with the blank intelligence that the Desert is not to be traversed by an iron route. That magnificent contemplation is abandoned. Talking of railways an odd crotchetty conundrum thrusts itself upon our brain:—

"Why are railway tunnels like Italics!"

And the reader answers—"Because they are under-lined!"

And, by the same token, "Why are the said Italics like a family whose milkman has charged too little in his bill?"

"Because they are under-scored!"

This has been a week of anniversary; Magna Charta and Waterloo have both turned up their celebations in it; only that we have no festival of the first, though we have of the latter. We might as well get up a feast of Magna Charta. A holiday dinner at Runnymede, with a few speeches about liberty — and that question, albeit, secured by the Barons, is never a barren one—would be a wholesome thing for the people. For the Waterloo, we are content with one national banquet, the gathering of the old soldiers in the victor's hall. When they and their chief—

"Drop off like feathers from the wings of Time," we may think about a more wide spread celebration, in which their memories shall be blended with the memories of the victories they achieved.

This passing thought of death reminds us that the Rev. Mr. Barham has passed into the tomb. He was a great writer and a good man. Unknown to the public by name, he evermore haunted them with his pen, and his genius was one which made mankind cheerful. He was the facetious Ingoldsby; penned the inimitable Legends; wrote that admirable "Cousin Nicholas," which so stirred the novel-reading world; and, over a period of some thirty years, diffused through the periodicals of literature some of the most brilliant of their gems. "Blackwood," "Bentley," and the "New Monthly" are all witnesses to his power and his worth. He has soon followed his friend Hook—a kindred genius—whom he often aided in the palmiest days of the then witty "John Bull." Kind thoughts survive them both!

MAGNIFICENT COMET.

(From another Correspondent.)

This comet, discovered by Mr. Joshua Jeays, of Green-street, Marlborough-road, Chelsea, on Sunday week, is the most beautiful one that has been visible for many years. Its head, or nucleus, is well defined, and has a planetary disk. It is very nearly circular, and very brilliant. The tail is also very splendid: that part of it in immediate connexion with the head is nearly as bright as the head itself; a very unusual circumstance, as far as our Correspondent has seen them. The apparent right side of it is brighter than the left side of it, and this gradually becomes less and less bright, till, at the distance of about 5 deg., it cannot be further traced. On the left side, it is uniformly less bright than on the right, and it cannot be traced for more than 3 deg. from the head. The diameter of the head is about 15 sec. The drawing shows the comet with its tail, as seen at Blackheath on Monday week, at about half-past eleven. At this time, it was visible to the naked eye, with its tail about 2 deg. in length, pointing nearly perpendicularly upwards.

THE COMET

The tail is directly from the sun, and changes its direction as the sun's position changes. On the night of Monday week, at ten o'clock, the tail, as viewed through the telescope, was inclined much to the left; at twelve o'clock it was nearly in the position as represented in the engraving, with a small star shining brightly in the tail; at two a.m. the tail was inclined much to the right.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Prigs, mace-coves, bullies, legs, levanters, Greeks,
Quake at "the ring's" decay, and damn the "beaks."
After Horace.

The bulk of the Metropolitan fun for the week, centred in Hampton Races—a Cockney tryst—excellent in the matter of situation, scenery, and so forth, and prodigious as to its popularity. Future naturalists will be bound to describe the love of horse-racing as an instinct of the English people. It must be part and parcel of their idiosyncracy, for dearly as John Bull dotes upon his money, under fascination of that charmed word, "turf," he suffers his pockets to be picked, not only with impunity, but helps those who make the essay, into its richest recesses. At the present moment, it is as plain to him as the nose on his face, that from the hour he first affected the race-course to this instant date, he has been swindled, robbed, and befooled without pity or remorse; yet he bears no malice, but goes on—to Hampton, Ascot, Epsom—as before; bets his little five-pound note, certain he shall lose it, and no questions asked.

During the week the sporting circles have been considerably interested with an affair, brought somehow "promiscuously" before the Jockey Club, touching an alleged attempt made in 1840 to bribe a jockey called young John Day to lose the Derby, so far as regarded a certain colt of Mr. Etwall's, ridden by him. This affair would of course never have been heard of but for an accidental collision between the stable represented by the jockey as aforesaid and somebody of the denounced individual's party—or probably with himself. Well, this was going on, with what result we shall see; while Moulsey Hurst Meeting was on the tapis—with what éclat is about being shown. Besides this, there was nothing of account during the week save the great river sailing match for the R. T. Y. C. Challenge Cup elsewhere described.

Hampton races commenced on Wednesday in their epitomised form. Though the morning was lowering, at noon it cleared, and the meeting had all the appliances of delicious weather. Like its predecessor, Ascot, in the affair of the cards and lists it was basely treated. A forgery was very generally circulated, which in effect was a robbery of all who bought it, inasmuch as it was good for nothing. This jac simile, headed "Lindsay's List of Hampton Races," and bearing his imprimetur, contained the name of a printer in Seven Dials stuck among the horses' names, in a type invisible to the naked eye. If this person was a party to this fraud, it is to be hoped that he may receive his reward—if otherwise, the sooner he disavows his connexion with it the better. To revert to the diversions of Moulsey. The attendance on the first day was indifferent, but the fields of horses the reverse in point of numbers. The prodigious supply sent to Ascot left plenty ready to show at this little go, and both the Cup and the Handicap brought strong lots to the post. The former produced a very spirited race in three heats, and the latter a very good race for the betters round; eight having been backed for it, the winner at 3 to 1.

Thursday—here, as at Ascot, the day—a glorious sample of Midsummer weather brought together a monster meeting on the classic hurst: monster merry-makings are the fashion in politics as well as pleasure assemblies. As nobody went for the sake of the racing, nobody will care to learn more of its details than the mere return of the running. Of this there was plenty—to say nothing of the quality. Looking at the way the course is kept, how grievous disasters do not accumulate seems miraculous: how jockeys are found to ride at undoubted risk of life or limb, at the least, is also past accounting for. The whole course, from one extremity to the other, on this occasion, was densely crowded, and there was no attempt at "keeping it," save in the vicinity of the chair. However, all went off moderately well—thanks to chance—and, though there was no rouge et noir, neither thimbles and peas, to help them out of their superfluous cash, people were quite satisfied with their day's amusement.

Among such persons as take interest in turf affairs, the subject of conversation was, of course, the decision of the Jockey Club on the Melody colt matter, made public in the course of the morning. The substance of it was to the effect that no substantive proof that Mr. Crommelin had suborned "young John Day" to make that animal safe for the Derby had been adduced before them, though the nature of the connexion between the gentleman and the jockey appeared to them to be discreditable to both. And furthermore, that "young John Day" having endeavoured, by wilful falsehood, to support a criminal charge before them, they direct that he shall be "warned off the course at Newmarket, and out of the Coffee-room yard there, and be not permitted to ride in any race at Newmarket."

So much was published on authority; while, among the on dits, it was stated that, arising out of some difference of opinion, a party, who takes a leading part in the ring and betting generally, told a noble lord, a prominent character in racing business, that he would not believe any statement that might come from his lordship—even on his oath. Thus stand the moral statistics of horse-racing at the present quotation—a category to which they have been brought by that system of professional betting, which we have ever denounced as a reproach to those men of condition and probity who have countenanced and practised it. Unless the ring, as now constituted, be purged of its professional members, the day when the turf shall cease to be the sport of gentlemen—of men of honour—is near at hand!

TATTERSALL'S.

The betting this week was confined to Monday, and having necessarily been preceded by the Ascot settling, was limited in amount; albeit, as our quotations will show, ranging over a tolerably extensive field. On Wednesday and Thursday the Hampton Races took place, and business at "the Corner" was consequently at a stand-still. The following are the latest prices:—

NORTHUMBERLAND PLATE.

6 to 1 agst Inheritress	12 to 1 agst Little John	17 to 1 agst Porto Bello
7 to 1 —— Lightning (t)	14 to 1 —— Coheiress	20 to 1 —— Pedometer
12 to 1 —— Pagan	16 to 1 —— What	20 to 1 —— Godfrey
12 to 1 —— Queen of Tyne	16 to 1 —— Northumberland	20 to 1 —— Brevity

GOODWOOD CUP.

20 to 1 agst Stomacher | 20 to 1 agst Golden Rule

ST. LEGER.

5 to 1 agst Forth's lot	10 to 1 agst Old England	25 to 1 agst Wood-Pigeon
6 to 1 —— Weatherbit	12 to 1 —— Mentor	25 to 1 —— Connaught Ranger
6 to 1 —— Merry Monarch	25 to 1 —— The Baron	28 to 1 —— Kedger
	33 to 1 agst Gothic

DERBY.

20 to 1 agst Sting	35 to 1 agst Hoorah (t)	50 to 1 agst Arkwright (t)
33 to 1 —— Brocardo (t)	45 to 1 —— Peri colt (t)	60 to 1 —— Guzman (t)
	1000 to 15 agst Cambaules (t)

THURSDAY.

THE NORTHUMBERLAND PLATE.

6 to 1 agst Inheritress (t)	8 to 1 agst Pagan (t)
8 to 1 —— Little John (t)	12 to 1 —— Coheiress (t)

GOODWOOD CUP.

20 to 1 agst Golden Rule (taken)

ST. LEGER.

20 to 1 agst Pantasa (t)	28 to 1 agst Kedger (t)
25 to 1 —— Connaught Ranger (t)	40 to 1 —— Idas (t)

1250 to 25 agst The Baron for this and the Liverpool St. Leger (t)

A thin attendance, and very little betting

ROYAL THAMES YACHT CLUB MATCH.

RACE FOR THE CHALLENGE CUP.

In the year 1840, certain members of this spirited Society subscribed the sum of one hundred guineas for the purchase of a cup, to be sailed for by all yachts not exceeding 25 tons: the conditions being, that it should be won by the same individual two successive years, to become his property. This has not yet been accomplished; and that it is not likely soon to be done may be inferred from the fact, that, at the conclusion of the late contest for it, a gallant captain of the navy offered to bet £1000 to £100 it did not occur in 1846. The race for this Challenge Cup took place on Monday last, over what may be called the old R. T. Y. C. course—from Greenwich to Coal House Point, below Gravesend. The new course is from Erith to the Nore; and the sooner it is adopted for all their matches the better. The day was well suited for a holiday occasion of the sort; it was fresh and withal breezy for June weather. The wager crews complained that there was not any wind; no doubt it was so for their vessels: but for the soul of us we can't see what they want, in craft built exclusively for speed in smooth water and summer weather, with spars suited to the North Seas, and, consequently, weight below, which requires half a gale to get it under way. Every thing about the Royal Thames boats is "too, too solid," except, indeed, those preposterous bustles stuck at their cruppers, called euphoniously raking-sterns. Out of two or three score qualified to start, but four came to the post; namely—

The Prima Donna	Mr. Tatham
The Vixen	Messrs. Heighington
The Blue Belle	Mr. Twisden Hodges
The Mystery	Viscount Seaham.

Lord Alfred Paget, the Vice Commodore of the Club, not being in attendance, the duty of marshalling the craft, and delivering the sailing orders, devolved upon the Commodore, and, of course, was done with that courtesy and good order for which Mr. Harrison is so justly celebrated and esteemed. The Red Rover—one of the best of the river steamers—bore his flag, and also a numerous company of the members and their friends. This practice is about to be adopted in the present season at the South Western Yacht Club Regatta. Southampton water is just the place where a steam-boat is required on such an occasion.

When the signal-gun fired to "let go moorings," the little fleet wore, and was soon before the wind, a slight case of fouling only interfering with its ship-shape character—the Prima Donna catching the Mystery's topping-lift. However, they were soon away in earnest, the Blue Belle having the first decided lead, the Mystery next her (and once before reaching Erith, leading), and the other pair, to all seeming, heartily beaten. As the puffs came fitfully over the land, one had a flattering lift, and then another, but they thus rounded the Coalhouse Point buoy:—at 17 minutes to 3, the Blue Belle; the Mystery a minute after her; the Prima Donna in three minutes more; and, last, the Vixen, but close up with her.

This manœuvre of rounding the buoy, as regarded the two leading yachts, candour obliges us to declare was not done in a very seaman-like fashion. There was yet a good deal of ebb to run out, and there was but little wind, and that, in most of the reaches, nearly dead on end. To make bad worse, the headmost vessels now were utterly deserted by the little there was, and drifted any how in the stark calm. The sternmost craft now, too, caught a good land puff, carried it up and passed the drifters, and anon went gallantly away from them.

From the moment Gravesend was passed the match was a hollow affair. Though the wind was light it still never wholly fell, and with it the leaders held their way, while the rearmost ships—especially the Mystery—seemed to drop more and more astern. The Prima Donna, though but a minute better than the Vixen round the Coal House buoy, beat her five minutes past the goal, which she rounded at 20 minutes past seven—the Vixen, 25 minutes past; the Blue Belle a minute after her, and the Mystery last! This clipper of 1844 has either lost her legs or her luck—she certainly seemed to sail unaccountably sluggish on Monday. The Cup, filled with wine, was presented with the accustomed honours to Mr. Tatham, and amid "moonlight music, love, and smiles," a most pleasant day was brought to a conclusion.

It is a ragged old axiom that of the race not being always to the swift—but it's hard to conceive any application of it more trying to mortal patience than when a man in a flying boat feels her, as it were, nailed to the soundings, while another in an old "resurrectionist"—a floating coffin—skims past him to windward like a swallow in the sunset; but then, "as fickle as the wind" is also a proverb. Everybody was sorry the Mystery lost; everybody likes Lord Seaham, and he well deserves his universal popularity. There is a vast difference between his unaffected good breeding and the de haute en bas style that some people deal out as courtesy. Perhaps too much twaddle has been written about the Royal Thames Yacht Club; but it must be admitted its star is in the ascendant. The Royal Squadron has outlived its popularity. Many of the members are enlisting under other flags; a new club is being formed at Ryde, which will drain more of its aristocracy; but the Thames is its most dangerous rival. Sons of Thames be true to yourselves, and you must one day be, as befits you, the greatest pleasure marine in the world. As a first step, open some prizes for vessels of lighter tonnage; several new yachts are about being laid down for your members, cutters of a hundred tons, and the like. Hold out encouragement for such progress: it is an omen too propitious to be overlooked.

HAMPTON RACES

Commenced on Wednesday, and the overflowing of the "monster" meeting at Ascot, having enabled the managers to come out with a remarkably strong bill, albeit, saving the handicap, of slender attractions to sporting men, drew a larger attendance than could have been expected from the gloomy and unpropitious state of the weather in the early part of the day. The first race was—

The Gold Cup, in specie, by subs of 5 sovs each, with 40 added. Heats.

Mr. Parr's Ninety One, 4 yrs	(Wakefield)	1
Mr. Ramsbottom's Brush, 4 yrs		2

The Surrey and Middlesex Stakes (handicap) of 20 sovs each.

Mr. Death's Misdeal, 6 yrs, 8st 3 lb	(Wakefield)	1
Mr. Ramsbottom's Pineapple, 5 yrs, 8st 10lb		2

The Corinthian Stakes of 10 sovs each, h ft, with 25 added.

Mr. Mostyn's Master Stepney, 3 yrs	(Mr. Berkeley)	1
Mr. Clifton's Mespelus, 4 yrs		2

The Strawberry-hill Stakes of 5 sovs each, with 25 added. Heats.

Mr. Matthew's Tub-Thumper, 6 yrs	(W. Balchin)	1
Mr. Mostyn's f by Glaucus, out of March First		2

THURSDAY.

The Hurst Cup of 30 sovs, added to a Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each. Heats.

Loadstone	1
Miss Wilfred	2

Seven started.

Her Majesty's Plate of 100 guineas. Heats.

What	1
Satyr	2

Won by a head. Seven started.

The Claremont Stakes of 10 sovs each, for two years old.

Astonishment	1
Anna Bullen	2

Four started.

ROYAL MERSEY YACHT CLUB SAILING MATCH.—The first sailing match of the Royal Mersey Yacht Club came off on Monday last, at Liverpool, and although the day was rather unfavourable, it excited much attention, and attracted large numbers of persons to the scene of action. Thirteen yachts were entered, all of which were gaily decked with their distinguishing flags, &c. The contest is described as being admirable, and evidenced the superior manner, skill, and tact, of their respective commanders. The result of the match was, that to the Phœbe, Thomas Moss, Esq., was awarded the first prize for the first class; to the Hebe, R. B. Preston, Esq., the second, for the third class; and to the Mermaid, John Grindrod, Esq., the third prize, for the second class.

RECEIPTS AT THE GRAND STAND AT ASCOT.—The number of persons who paid for admission to the Grand Stand, during the late races, at Ascot, was greater than upon any former occasion, the receipts exceeding, by several hundred pounds, the sums paid even last year, when her Majesty and the Prince Consort were accompanied to the course by the Emperor of Russia and the King of Saxony. On the first day the receipts were (for 3240 persons), £810; second day (for 464 persons), £116; third day, "the grand day" (for 3620 persons), £1810. On Thursday, it should be observed, the price of admission was 10s., while on the other three days it was only half that amount On the last day (Friday) the receipts were not more than about £50, making the amount received between £2750 and £2800. This is exclusive of a large sum paid for the rent of the refreshment rooms by Mr. Careless.

INCENDIARISM AND SUICIDE AT CAMBRIDGE.—On Wednesday night week a fire broke out in a wheat stack on Merton Farm, in the Oxford road, near Cambridge, the property of Messrs. Swann, the carriers of that town. The stack, which contained about 100 coombs, was destroyed before the town engines arrived. Suspicion fell upon a man of the name of Charles May, who was apprehended, and remanded by the magistrates, at the Town Hall, until the following Tuesday. The prisoner was in good spirits, and was locked up in his cell at six o'clock; but on opening the cell on Saturday morning the turnkey found him hanging by his neckerchief, from the small bars in the cell door, quite dead. The bars in the door to which the neckerchief was attached were but four feet three inches from the ground, and the legs of the deceased were extended on the ground, his body being within an inch or two of it. A Coroner's inquest was held, when the Jury returned a verdict of "Felo de se."

THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAM-SHIP.

Our illustration shows this leviathan steam-ship leaving Blackwall, on the afternoon of Thursday, the 12th inst. The hour named for her starting was three o'clock, but she did not cast off her moorings until full half-past four o'clock, when, a strong hawser from her starboard bow having been attached to the Ariel, Woolwich steam-boat, which had a large party on board, to accompany her as far as Sea Reach, she was towed clear of the huge mooring buoy, and then proceeded at a very steady pace in the middle of the stream down the river. On her several masts were hoisted the English white ensign, and the American, French, Belgian, and Russian colours; and as she slowly passed the Brunswick-pier, she was loudly cheered by the assembled multitude. On passing Woolwich, it seemed as if the whole population had turned out to behold her. The Dockyard was lined with the naval and military officers connected with that depôt, whose cheers were loud, long, and continued, and which were as heartily returned by the passengers and crew. Near Erith the tide turned, and the expanse of water being larger, her rate was increased considerably, and she passed Gravesend shortly after seven o'clock, with a strong tide that would carry her well out to sea. Throughout her whole progress down the river she was hailed in the most gratifying manner; and the rapid speed of her screw propeller, unaccompanid by any apparent agitation of the water, notwithstanding her huge dimensions, rendered her progress peculiarly interersting. She had on board about eighty passengers for a trip round the coast. She will startfrom Liverpool, on the 26th of July, on her first trip across the Atlantic. She reached Cowes on Friday, left at nine next morning, and entered Plymouth Sound at eight p.m. In the passage, her average speed was about 11 miles an hour. From London to Plymouth she was 33 hours under steam. During the whole of her voyage the weather was more or less hazy. From Blackwall, she conveyed about 75 passengers to Cowes. where 40 landed. At that port she took on board 20, and took in all about 60 to Plymouth. Her expected arrival here had long been an object of great interest to the inhabitants of Devon and Cornwall, and early in the forenoon the hills by the sea-side were studded with anxious spectators. Owing to the thickness of the weather, when first descried she was within the Mew-stone. The preconcerted signal of rigning St. Andrew's Church bells induced the inhabitants of this great naval port to rush in crowds towards the shores of the Sound. The Hoe was densely covered, and the western Hoe, veen to the edges of its precipitous limestone quarries, was deeply fringed with persons of both sexes and all ages, who heartily cheered the iron wonder.

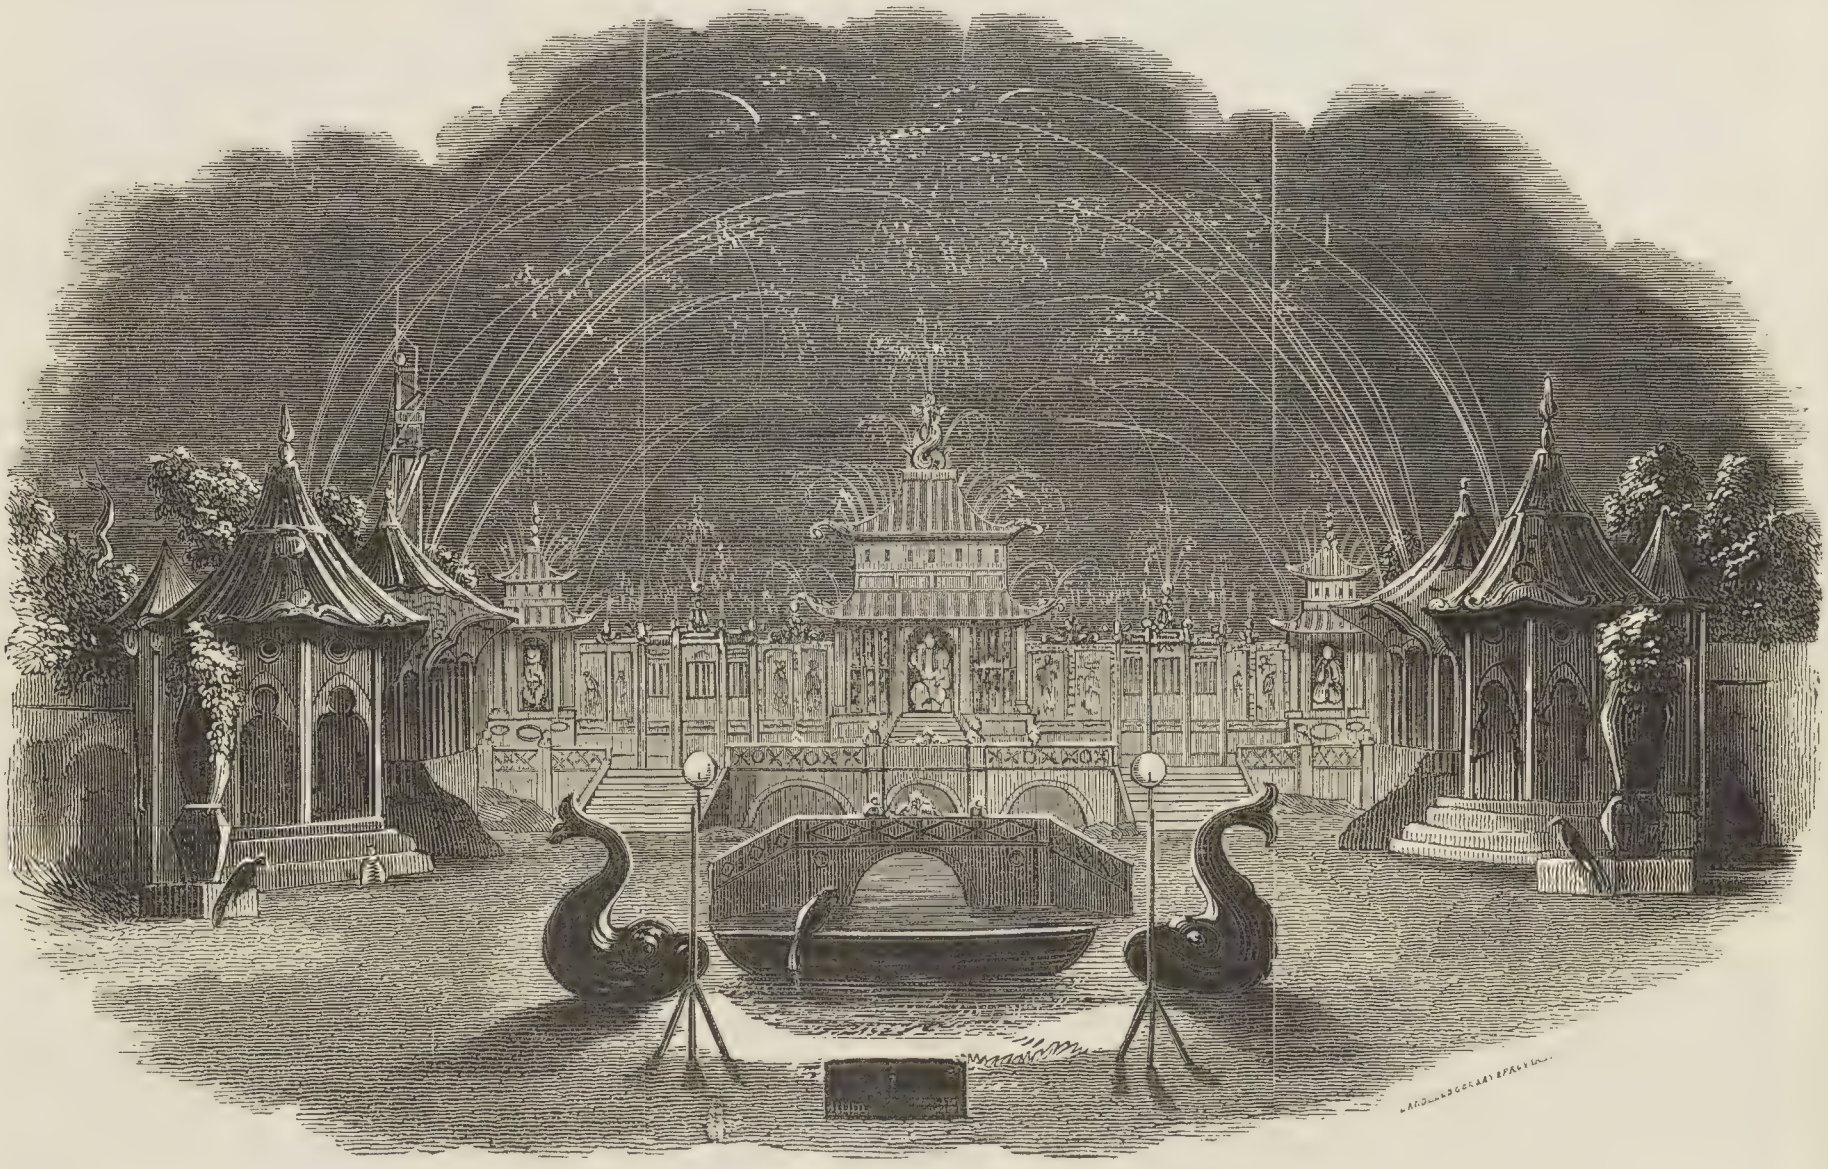
Outside the Breakwater she was boarded by Mr. W. Walker, the Queen's Harbour-master, who skilfully piloted her by the eastern channel into the Sound, through which she threaded her way among the numerous yachts, steam and sailing vessels, gigs, shore-boats, &c., attracted there by her arrival. Passing to the northward of Drake's Island, she entered Firestone Bay, and in about six minutes turned completely round, through Barnpool, and afterwards majestically entered Millbay.

The expectations of nautical men at Plymouth have been fully realised on seeing this extraordinary ship. When first observed, stem on, she did not appear so formidable, but, when presenting her broadside to view, all expressed their surprise at the symmetrical appearance of the great reality. The manner in which she answered her helm was a peculiar cause for admiration.

THE GREAT BRITAIN STEAM-SHIP, LEAVING BLACKWALL.

COSTUME BALL.—A well-arranged Ba Costumé was given at the Princess' Concert Room, on Tuesday evening, under the direction of Mr. Weippert, who, with his band, appeared in the powdered wigs worn at her Majesty's late party. Dancing commenced at 10 o'clock, and was continued with spirit until half-past three, concluding with Sir Roger de Coverley. The utmost propriety distinguished the meeting: and some of the dresses were very elegant. Mr. Corrie, the M. C. deserved the thanks of the company for his courtesy and attention to every one: and a feature in the arrangements of the evening, worthy of notice, was the extremely moderate price of the refreshments. All the visitors appeared most respectable—at least there was nothing in their outward demeanour to indicate to the contrary: and a very pleasant evening was the result.

VAUXHALL.



M. Musard held the first of his intended series of Masquerades at these gardens on Monday evening, when the extreme beauty of the evening drew together a very fair concourse of visitors; and if the entertainment was not altogether so brilliant as might have been anticipated, the fault certainly was with the guests, and not in the arrangements, which were first-rate. With very few exceptions, low, unmeaning riot, and, we had almost said, brutal coarsenes were the most prominent characteristics of the maskers. There were some excellent bands of music, who played all the most favourite quadrilles and polkas; but, as soon as a dance was formed, a gang of blackguards, as recruiting soldiers, or butchers, or dustmen, or something equally canaille, rushed along the walks, shouting, screaming, and yelling as they broke through the figures annoying every body in their way. In spite of the regulations, the ball-room was a cloud of tobacco-smoke, puffed continually in the faces of the company by the dreary "gents" who thronged it; and the attempts of a few wretched supernumeraries from the different theatres to be funny had a most dispiriting effect.

Apart from this scene of unmitigated vulgarity, Vauxhall is deserving of patronage. All pains have been taken to perfect the accommodation of the visitors, and the routine of amusements is attractive and liberal; in fact the dying glories of this favourite place of resort have been completely revived. But a masquerade must always prove a failure except some stringent regulations are introduced, with proper people to enforce them, in order that those who go to enjoy themselves may be protected from the low annoyances and senseless uproar of the vulgar mob, who, somehow or another, contrive to obtain admission.

Our artist has sketched two of the novel attractions of Vauxhall,—the Terrific Descent of Joel Il Diavolo on a Single Wire in the midst of Fireworks, and a picture model of the magnificent Buddha Temple of Honan of the Three Golden Isles, constructed by Messrs. Adams. In this Temple is celebrated the Buddha Feast of the New Year, on the First Day of the First Moon. The Temple itself is a superb structure; but our artist has represented it environed with its Vauxhall characteristics—splendid fireworks.

JOEL IL DIAVOLO'S DESCENT WITH FIREWORKS, AT VAUXHALL.

FIREWORK TEMPLE AT VAUXHALL.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The performance of the "Sonnambula" on Tuesday affords us another opportunity of paying our homage to the charming songstress, Castellan. The exquisite truthfulness of her impersonation of Amina—her strong feeling of the music, which seems, at times, to be almost too much for her strength—and the effect of her sweet, clear, and bell-like tones, renders this part one of the most delightful of her repertoire. It is to this order of characters that Madame Castellan is peculiarly fitted. It is but seldom one has an opportunity of seeing Lucia, Amina, Zerlina, enacted by singers who combine all the qualities of person and manner necessary to produce stage illusion, to such delightful freshness of voice and of style and such true musical feeling. On the other hand, it is also rare to find an artiste so well adapted by her striking person, her tragic power, and volume of voice, for such parts as Semiramide, Norma, and Lucrezia Borgia, as La Grisi. Another will shortly make up the trio of prime donne; one who combines the lighter and more delicate resources of the art, the power of vocalisation, and intricate fiorituri of the French school, to the depth of expression and dramatic feeling of a higher order of lyrical art. Such is, if report speaks true, Madame Rossi Caccia, who will ere long appear on the boards of Her Majesty's Theatre, having lately left Lisbon, where she produced the greatest sensation.

We were rejoiced to hear Signor Mario singing on Tuesday with more than his wonted energy and animation. He had need to bestir himself in preparation for the performance of Otello; it is a most arduous part in every respect; but last year, when he first undertook it, Signor Mario proved himself to be its equal, and in one respect, at least, to be superior to his predecessors; he gives to his impersonation more of that youthfulness and freshness of feeling, which is one of the most important, and yet most often neglected, characteristics of the jealous Moor.

Warm were the greetings which hailed the re-appearanc of the little Viennoises on Tuesday night. These charming children offer so fresh and pleasant a contrast to the artificial, and often insipid, routine of amusements of the pleasure-seekers of our metropolis, that, were not their combination and groupings often worthy the attention of the painter, they would still possess great attraction. Singularly do they throw into relief the inherent affectation of the second-rate ballerinæ, and the apparently irremediable awkwardness of a corps-de-ballet.

Let us hope, that the persevering management of her Majesty's Theatre may perfect that improvement which is already begun, that nothing may remain to clash with the poetic feeling of the ballets performed on these boards, on which La Taglioni herself will appear ere long, in combination with her sisters in art, Carlotta Grisi, Cerito, and Lucile Grahn. Apropos of Cerito, we are happy to say that the accident which so much alarmed the audience on Saturday night, was attended by no more serious consequences than some severe bruises.

The Illustration shows one of the finest scenes from "Lucrezia Borgia," repeated with undimmed effect on Saturday evening. Upon the transcendent merits of the entire performance we commented at some length in our journal of last week.

GRISI. LABLACHE. MORIANI.

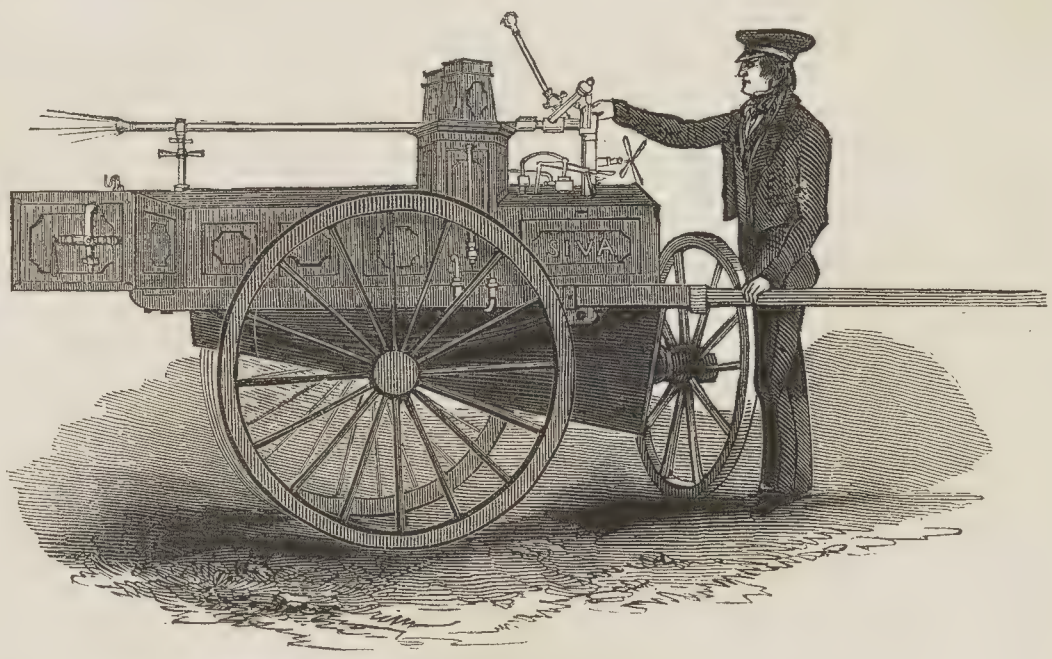
SCENE FROM THE OPERA OF LUCREZIA BORGIA, AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

THE ELECTRIC GUN.

Some very interesting experiments have, during the past week, been exhibited in Westminster with an electric gun, the invention of Mr. Beningfield, who has lately arrived in London from Jersey, where the gun was constructed. The gun, a barrel for discharging bullets or balls five-eighths of an inch in diameter, is placed over the body of the machine by which the propelling power is generated, and the whole runs upon a carriage with a pair of wheels, weighing altogether half-a-ton, and calculated to be drawn by one horse at the rate of eight or ten miles an hour; when in position, a third wheel is attached, by which it traverses with ease and steadiness. The engineer is enabled to take a true aim, the barrel having a sight similar to a rifle. The barrel is supplied with balls by two chambers, one fixed and the other moveable. This last may be made large enough to contain an immense number of balls. It is calculated that 1000 balls or more can be discharged a minute, the vollies being shot off in almost continuous or constant succession, the stationary chamber supplying the barrel.

The experiments fully carried out all that the inventor professed to do. The bullets were driven through a thick plank, and afterwards completely flattened on an iron target. Those directed against the target, without the intervention of the planking, were literally beaten to atoms, and in a manner plastered upon boards placed on the sides of the target, which received the fragments as they flew off at angles from the iron. The force far exceeded what can be done by any military engine of equal calibre, in which gunpowder is employed as the propelling power. A three-inch board, at twenty yards distance, was completely shattered through with the bullets, as if the centrebit and drill of a carpenter had been employed; and the rapidity and precision of aim were extraordinary. For clearing a breach, or sweeping a fosse such an engine must be most tremendously destructive. The cost of keeping this gun in repair, and for using it, is very much beneath the cost which must be employed to bring into operation any other equally efficacious mode of discharging thousands of balls.

The invention is not secured by patent, and, therefore, the inventor did not communicate the secret of the construction of his instrument, or the nature of the power employed. It may be said, however, that the propelling power is produced, not by steam, but by the application of gases exploded by galvanic electricity.



We are assured by the inventor that the Gun is not easily disarranged, or put out of working order; and that musket balls are not likely to derange it, except in large volleys.

The inventor is the person who proposed, a few days after the Warner experiment at Brighton, to perform a similar one in the Bay of St Aubin's, Jersey, for £100.

The Gun was exhibited on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday last, for six hours each day, to the entire satisfaction of many distinguished persons; upon which occasions it was shown that the balls could be discharged with diminished or increased force, at the will of the engineer—one ball shattering, and the next barely reaching, the target.

THE TARGET.

THE ELECTRIC GUN, "SIVA.

ARNOLD. TELL. FURST.

SCENE FROM THE OPERA OF "GUILLAUME TELL," AT COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

THE OPERATIC COMPANY OF BRUSSELS, AT COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE.

The scene of our Illustration is from Rossini's "Guillaume Tell," one of the most popular performances of the foreign company at Covent-Garden Theatre; Arnold being sustained by M. Laborde, a tenor, with a very good even voice, and excellent taste and expression. Tell is played by M. Laurent Quilleveri, an excellent bass singer, and a clever actor; and Walter Furst is filled by W. Zegler, who has a powerful organ. The scene is the magnificent trio. As in the German Companies who have played here, the performance is not mere starring; but the ensemble is excellent. The choruses are well-trained, and not only sing but act spiritedly; whilst the band is disciplined to a great degree of precision. The mise en scene, too, is admirable; and the company are performers of picturesque grouping. This high merit deserves success; and such it is fast gathering.

ACCIDENT TO THE HON. MR. GRIMSTON.—A serious accident occurred to the Hon. Mr. Grimston, of the Coldstream Regiment of Foot Guards, stationed at Windsor, while bathing in the Thames, in the immediate vicinity of that town, in company with the Earl of Caledon, on the morning of Saturday last. It appeared that the hon. gentleman in taking what is termed a "header" from off the bank (jumping head foremost into the water) struck his head with fearful violence against either a large stone or the rugged trunk of a tree at the bottom, rendering him apparently lifeless and totally helpless. The Earl of Caledon, perceiving that his friend, when he arose to the surface, was in a state of insensibility, lost no time in jumping into the river, and dragging him on shore. It was not until after the lapse of a quarter of an hour that he was restored to a state of consciousness. He was then conveyed to his apartments at the infantry barracks. Some alarming symptoms having shortly afterwards manifested themselves, it was judged expedient to send an express to Grosvenor-square, to summon the Earl of Verulam to Windsor. The electric telegraph from Slough to Paddington was immediately put into requisition, and in less than an hour and a half afterwards his lordship was by the bedside of his son. We are happy to say that a favourable change has taken place, and that the patient is now considered out of danger.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE.—(Friday.)—Since Monday the arrivals of wheat of home produce have been moderate, chiefly from Lincolnshire. The number of samples of foreign to-day was by no means large, yet the demand was in a sluggish state, at about stationary prices. Foreign wheat was extremely dull, but not cheaper. Grinding barley was quite as dear, but other kinds were a mere drug. In malt very little was doing, at late rates. Oats, beans, and peas moved off steadily, at stationary figures.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 4490; barley, 90; oats, 800 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 2710 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 2620; barley, 2520 oats, 14,450 quarters. Flour, 3660 sacks; malt, 3950 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 51s; ditto, white, 47s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s to 54s; ditto, white, 52s to 56s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distilling, 26s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 56s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 33s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Town made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk, Stockton, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 28 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 38s to 43s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 24s; oats, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s; beans, 24s to 29s; peas, 28s to 32s, per quarter. Flour. American, 19s to —; Baltic, 18s to — per barrel.

The Seed Market.—We have to report a very dull sale for all kinds of seeds, and prices have had a downward tendency.

Linseed, English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 43s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 44s. Hempseed 35s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 18s per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 12s to 14s. Tares, 6s 6d to 7s 6d per bushel. English Rapeseed, £24 to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s; ditto, foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover seed, red, 45s to 50s: extra, 52s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 70s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 8½d; of household ditto, 5d to 6½d, per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 48s 2d; barley, 30s 3½; oats, 22s 8½; rye, 31s 4d; beans, 38s 1d; peas, 37s 0½.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 46s 7d; barley, 30s 1d; oats, 22s 1d; rye, 31s 1d; beans, 37s 6d; peas, 37s 1d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 8s; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 5s 6d; peas, 5s 6d.

Tea.—There continues to be a very steady demand for nearly every description of tea, at full rates of currency. Common sound congou is selling at 9½d to 10d; common yellow leaf twankay, 1s 2d to 1s 2½d per lb.

Sugar.—A very large amount of business has been again transacted in West India sugar, and, in some instances, the rates have had an upward tendency. The private sales have amounted to 2900 hhds and tierces. All other kinds of raw sugar have sold briskly, at full prices. Refined goods have commanded 6d to 1s per cwt more money. Brown lumps have produced 72s 6d to 73s; and standard ditto, 73s 6d per cwt.

Coffee.—Only a moderate business has been doing in coffee since our last, yet prices may be considered about stationary. The stock in warehouse—though generally larger than at the same time last year—is not to say extensive. Good ordinary Ceylon is selling at 47s 6d to 48s 6d per cwt.

Rice.—Bengal is in good request, at full prices. Fine bold white is selling at 13s to 13s 6d per cwt. Cleaned rice in good request.

Provisions.—Owing to the favourable weather, the transactions in English butter since our last have been trifling in extent, at drooping currencies. Foreign butter has met a dull sale, at 2s per cwt less money—the best Friesland selling at 76s to 78s per cwt. Irish parcels have sold heavily, at 2s per cwt less money. Bacon is selling briskly, at an advance of from 1s to 2s per cwt. A few sales of Waterford have been effected as high as 48s per cwt. Irish lard steady, at 58s to 63s for Waterford bladdered. In all other kinds of provisions a steady business is doing, at late rates.

Oils.—Linseed and southern oils are in fair request. In other kinds very little is doing.

Tallow.—The demand for Russia tallow is somewhat inactive, owing to the prevailing warm weather, and the rates are a trifle easier. P. Y. C. on the spot is selling at 40s 6d to 41s; while, for forward delivery, the quotation is 41s 3d to 42s per cwt. Town tallow is very scarce, at 42s per cwt.

Coals (Friday).—Holywell Main, 15s 6d; Tanfield Moor, 16s; Townley, 14s; Bell and Brown, 14s 3d; Killingworth, 15s; Eden, 15s 6d; Belmont, 15s 9d; Hetton, 17s 3d; Caradoc, 17s; Adelaide, 16s 6d per ton.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 12s; useful ditto, £4 14s to £5 4s; fine upland ditto, £5 5s to £5 10s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6 0s; oat straw, £1 16s to £1 18s; wheat straw, £1 18s to £2 0s; per load.

Hops (Friday).—Our accounts from the plantations not being very favourable, the demand here, for most kinds of hops, is steady, and last week's quotations are well supported.—Sussex pockets, £7 0s to £8 0s; Wealds, £7 8s to £8 10s; Mid Kents, £7 7s to £8 0s 15s; East Kents, £9 9s to £11 0s; Choice ditto, £11 11s to £13 0s; Mid Kent bags, £7 15s to £8 15s; East Kent ditto, £10 10s to £12 0s.

Potatoes.—The best kinds of potatoes are in fair request, at full prices; but all other kinds are a mere drug. The present figures rule from 30s to 80s per ton.

Smithfield (Friday).—Although the supply of beasts here to-day was extensive, the beef trade was active, at an advance of 2d per 8lbs. We had on show 350 Scots from Scotland, and 60 beasts from Holland, mostly in good condition. The numbers of sheep were good, yet the inquiry for them was firm, and Monday's prices were readily supported. Lambs—the supply of which was but moderate—moved off readily, at full rates of currency. The veal trade was active, at an advance of from 2d to 4d per 8lbs. Pigs were in request at full prices. Milch cows sold at from £16 to £18 10s each, including their small calf.

Per 8lbs. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; second quality ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime large oxen, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 4d to 4s 6d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; second quality ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime coarse woolled sheep, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime Southdowns ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 0d; large coarse calves, 4s 0d to 4s 6d; prime small ditto, 4s 8d to 5s 0d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; neat small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 2d; lambs, 5s 0d to 6s 0d. Suckling calves, 18s 0d to 30s 0d; and quarter old store pigs, 16s 0d to 20s 0d each. Beasts, 914; cows, 108; sheep and lambs, 10,140; calves, 426; pigs, 305.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had only a moderate supply of meat on sale to-day. The demand was firm at full prices:—

Per 8lbs. by the carcase.—Interior beef, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; middling ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; prime large ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime small ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; large pork, 2s 10d to 3s 6d; interior mutton, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; middling ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; prime ditto, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; veal, 4s 0d to 5s 0d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 5s 0d to 6s 0d.

ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English Market, although rather inanimate, was well supported until the arrival of the Indian Mail, on Wednesday. Consols then receded to 99⅛, and have not since rallied, closing at that price for the Opening, and 99⅜ for the Account. Exchequer Bills have slightly receded, closing at 59 to 57. This, however, is no indication of any increase in the value of money, which at present does not command more than from two to two-and-a-quarter per cent. Reduced closes at 98⅜; Bank Stock, 209½ to 210½; Long Annuities, 11½; India Stock, 276.

The Foreign Market without any material improvement in prices, has been firmly supported during the week. Monday was account day, and the settling passed off favourably, although money was in considerable demand at very high prices. Columbian firmly maintains its improvement of last week, closing at 17⅜. Mexican has also been well supported, although it is asserted that Messrs. Lizardi and Co. have declined parting with the funds in their hands, not recognising the authority that directed them to transfer the amount to Messrs. Schneider and Co., the newly-appointed agents. The Active Stock closes at 37⅜ to ½; the Deferred, at the improved quotation of 20¾. Portuguese is rather flat, closing at 66¾. Spanish has not partaken of the stock-jobbing rise in Paris, but remains at 28¼ for the Actives; Three per Cents., 41⅜ to ¼; the Passive Stock continues about 7⅛ to ¼. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents. are 63⅜; Four per Cent. (certificates), 99¼. Belgian is slightly flat, from the resignation of the Belgian Ministry; the closing quotation is 99⅜.

The settlement of the account in the Railway Market has again been quietly adjusted, although the prices demanded for money were unprecedentedly high. Speculation in Scrip continues diminishing daily, and the chief business in it is confined to sales. The decision of the House of Commons not to set aside the standing orders on behalf of the Cambridge and Lincoln line, had no material effect upon the price of the scrip; but has rather tended to confirm the good opinion previously entertained of that undertaking, from the manner in which the proposal was advocated by usually opposing parties. Eastern Counties continue in good demand; the early opening of that portion of the line communicating with Norwich affording a prospect of adding to the steadily increasing revenue of the line. Foreign scrip has been, and continues flat; the French Chambers having decided that the Bordeaux and Cette, and the Dijon and Mulhausen lines should be postponed till next session. Towards the close of the week, South Easterns and Blackwalls were on demand; the latter close at 11¼, the former at 48. Aberdeens are 4; Armagh, Coleraine, and Portrush, 2½; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 4⅞; Bristol and Exeter (New), 10½; Caledonian, 11½; Cambridge and Lincoln, 4½; Chester and Holyhead, 16⅜; Cornwall, 4½; Dublin and Galway, 3¾; Dublin and Mullingar, 5½; Eastern Counties, 21; Do. (New), 7½; Edinburgh and Glasgow (Quarters), 17; Great North of England, 250; Great Western, 203; London and York, 4⅜; Lynn and Ely, 6; Manchester and Leeds, 168; Midlands, 186; Newcastle and Berwick, 18½; Newry and Enniskillen, 4⅞; Newark and Sheffield, 2⅞; North British, 25; North Kent, 4½; Oxford and Worcester, 5½; Rugby, 2½; Shrewsburys, 4½; South Devon, 26; South Wales, 6½; Trent Valley, 19; Welsh Midland, 4½; Yarmouth and Norwich, 29⅜; Norwich and Brandon (New), 5; York and North Midland (half shares), 54½; Boulogne and Amiens, 2; Bordeaux and Toulouse, 2¼; Bordeaux and Cette, 2¼; Great Northern of France (Lafitte's), 5¼; Ditto (Rosamel's), 2½; Louvain and Jemappe, 6; Orleans and Bordeaux, 10⅞; Paris and Lyons (Lafitte's), 3; Ditto (Ganneron's), 2⅜; Sambre and Meuse, 8⅞; Tours and Nantes, 2⅜; Verona and Ancona, 2¼.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Consols improved a turn yesterday, closing at 99⅛ to ¼. Spanish was flat, the previous day's prices being barely supported. The Railway Market was quiet. London and York closed at 3⅞; Cambridge and Lincoln at 4¼; and Rugby's 2⅝.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JUNE 17.

DUCHY OF CORNWALL, SOMERSET HOUSE, JUNE 10.—COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE LORD WARDEN OF THE STANNARIES.—Royal Cornwall and Devon Miners' Regiment: F. Howell, to be Second Lieutenant; H. H. Vivian, to be ditto.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORDS LIEUTENANT.—Tower Hamlets—The King's Own Light Infantry Regiment of Militia: F. F. Courtenay, Esq., to be Captain, vice Burrowes. 2nd Somerset Regiment of Militia: W. S. Farquharson, Esq., to be Captain.

WHITEHALL, JUNE 3.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Charles Kentish Probert, of Saffron Walden, in the county of Essex, Gent., to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

BANKRUPTS.—T. J. HILL, Retreat-place, Hackney, builder. J. PESTELL, Beeston, Bedfordshire, corn factor. G. SLATER, London-terrace, Hackney-road, grocer. A. TALLENT, sen., Ipswich, Suffolk, provision dealer. J. PETERS, Kent-street, Haggerston, fancy trimming manufacturer. C. D. WILSON, Saville-place, Mile-end, builder. J. BOND, Reading, grocer. S. THOMAS, Cornhill, bullion merchant. J. SIMONS, sen., Camden-town, coal-merchant. W. L. BROWN, Liverpool, merchant. M. SPENCE and W. W. SPENCE, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, woollendrapers.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. HAY, Edinburgh, spirit dealer. J. BONNAR, Edinburgh, painter. R. ALEXANDER and R. BRYCE, Edinburgh, curriers.

FRIDAY, JUNE 20.

WAR-OFFICE, June 20.—4th Light Dragoons: Ensign C. B. Molyneux to be Cornet, vice Colston. 11th: Lieut. O. J. C. Bridgeman to be Lieutenant, vice Hanson; Cornet W. G. Sutton to be Adjutant, vice Hanson. 15th: To be Cornets—Cornets E. Colston, vice Bernard; H. J. Wale, vice Lumsdaine.

10th Foot: Lieut. S. C. C. Galloway, to be Adjutant, vice Lysaght. 22d: To be Lieutenants—Lieut. R. Coote, vice Somerville; Lieut. J. H. Graham, vice Boileau. 43d: Cadet H. F. Hill to be Ensign, vice Molyneux. 59th: Lieut. A. Walsee to be Paymaster, vice R. C. Bamford. 66th: Brevet Major G. D. Rottenburgh, to be Captain, vice the Hon. F. J. R. Villiers. 69th: Ensign A. B. Hankey to be Lieutenant, vice K. Gore; G. Bagot to be Ensign, vice Hankey. 73d: Major-Gen. Sir R. H. Dick, K.C.B., to be Colonel, vice Lieut.-Gen. Lord Harris. 75th: Capt. R. Lane to be Captain, vice Baird Gray; Lieut. G. W. C. Stuart to be Captain, vice Lane; Ensign C. Couche to be Lieutenant, vice Stuart; H. Fitzgerald Mahoney to be Ensign, vice Couche. 92d: Ensign J. G. Hay to be Lieutenant, vice H. Johnstone; R. W. Duff to be Ensign, vice Hay. 98th: Lieut. H. Hancon to be Lieutenant, vice Bridgeman.

Ceylon Rifle Regiment: Major A. Montresor to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Fletcher; Brevet Major P. B. Reyne to be Major, vice Montresor; Lieut. F. B. Bayly to be Captain, vice Reyne; Second Lieut. C. C. Durnford to be First Lieutenant, vice Bayly; Cadet G. A. Tranchell to be Second Lieutenant, vice Durnford.

ADMIRALTY, JUNE 16.—Corps of Royal Marines: First Lieut. and Adj. W. M. Heriot to be Captain, vice C. R. Miller; Second Lieut. S. L. Wilson to be First Lieutenant, vice W. M. Heriot.

BANKRUPTS.—T. C. SMITH and R. HAYES, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, hotel-keepers. —T. THOMPSON, Northampton, bill-broker. H. KOHNE, Laurence-Pountney-lane, City, and Dorchester-place, New North-road, wholesale stay-manufacturer. W. CONNET, Exeter, cabinet-maker. E. SMITH, Regent-street, auctioneer. C. BROGDEN, Lincoln, Bookseller. J. CRABTREE and W. BURNLEY, Tunstead, Lancashire, woollen-manufacturers. J. COMMINS, Weymouth, Dorsetshire, bookseller. J. ISHERWOOD, Bolton, Lancashire, innkeeper. C. N. CUTLIFFE, Pilton, Devonshire, surgeon.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—P. THOMSON, Dundee, Manufacturer. J. COWAN and COMPANY, Fintry, distillers.

BIRTHS.

In Eaton-place, the Countess of Effingham, of a son.—At Wardour Castle, Lady Arundell, of a daughter.—In Hyde-park-gardens, Mrs. Patrick Cruikshank, of a son.—At Hillingdon, Mrs. Arthur Stilwell, of a son.—The lady of J. E. B. Curtis, Esq., of a son.—At Lewes, the lady of the Rev. R. Henry Killick, of Barkway, Herts, of twin sons.—On the 13th inst., Mrs. John George Smith, of a son.—At Escott, Devonshire, the lady of Sir John Kennaway, Bart., of a son.—At Poonah, the lady of Captain J. G. Hume, 10th Regt. Bombay Native Infantry, of a daughter.—At 13, Alfred-place, Bedford-square, the lady of John Hatherly, Esq., of a son.—At Briarley, Aigburth, near Liverpool, the lady of John A. Tinne, Esq., of a son.—At Paris, Lady William Hervey, of a son.—On the 8th inst., at Witton Grove, Witton-le-Wear, the lady of Francis Shippin, Esq., Physician-General, late of Bombay, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

At Linslade, Buckinghamshire, John Thomas Pilgrim, Esq., to Emily Jane, youngest daughter of John Osborn, Esq.—At Brighton, John Benjamin Nevill, Esq., to Miss Eliza Mary Mason, youngest daughter of the Rev. George Mason.—At Gloucester, Charles Edward Parke Gordon, Captain in 75th Regt., to Louisa, youngest daughter of Edward Day, Esq.—At Kensington, James, eldest son, of the late Lieutenant Thomas Kingston, to Sarah, eldest daughter of Mr. Edmund Henry Kent, of Kensington.—At Croydon, James Willis Brooks, Esq., to Marianne, youngest daughter of the late Colonel Edward Mac Dounell.—At Marylebone, William John Walter Baynes, Esq., eldest son of Sir William Baynes, Bart., to Margaret, third daughter of Daniel Stuart, Esq.—At Pentonville, Lieutenant C. D. Campbell, to Bower Caroline, youngest daughter of W. C. Mylne, Esq.—At Frankfort-on-the-Maine, Samuel Phillips, Esq., to Caroline, youngest daughter of Samuel Pratt, Esq.—Captain Harry Edgell, R N., to Miss Caroline Rossiter.—At Guildford, Silas S. Stedman, Esq., to Harriett, second daughter of James Stedman, Esq.—At St. Mary's Church, Paddington, Robert Hannah, Esq., to Emma Corry, daughter of J. C. Baxter, Esq.—At St. Clement's Church, Strand, Alfred Ormonde, Esq., to Miss Wavereley Scott, a lady of celebrity in the provincial theatres.

DEATHS.

In Burton-crescent, Peter Simon, Esq., in the 66th year of his age.—At Struan House, Haverstock-hill, Mrs. Samuel Boxill, aged 91.—At 22, Upper Wimpole-street, Ambrose Humphrys, Esq., in the 71st year of his age.—John Willis, Esq., of Kennington, in the 63th year of his age.—At the Rectory, Elsworth, Cambs, the Rev. Oliver Lodge, rector of that parish.—At North Brixton, Charles Tilly, Esq., Commander, R.N.—At Mornington-crescent, George Simpson, Esq., in the 83rd year of his age.—At Mousehold House, near Norwich, Maria, youngest daughter of Major-General Sir Robert Harvey, in the 25th year of her age.—At Colcorton Hall, Leicestershire, Sir George H. W. Beaumont, Bart., in the 46th year of his age.—The Hon. James Henry Lawrence Scarlett, youngest son of Lord Abinger, in the 16th year of his age.—At Bath, Robert Berkeley, Esq., in his 81st year.—At Bideford, William Smith, Esq., M.D., in his 85th year.—At Amen Corner, the Rev. Richard Harris Barham, B.A., minor canon of St. Paul's, rector of St. Augustin and St. Faith, and priest of Her Majesty's Chapels Royal.—At Great Ealing, Mary Ann, relict of James Lawson, Esq., in the 70th year of her age.—At Ringwood, the Rev. Samuel Berney Vince, M.A., aged 64.—At Margate, Mr. James Wright, aged 74.—In Lower Grosvenor-street, James Alexander Attwood, Esq., aged 52.—Emma, wife of John Collett, Esq., M.P., in the 47th year of her age.—At Kemp Town, Brighton, the Countess of Ailie.—Richard Caton, Esq. of Maryland, in the 80th year of his age. Mr. Caton was the father of three English Peeresses—the Marchioness of Wellesley, the Duchess of Leeds, and Lady Stafford.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—It is respectfully announced that Mdlle. TAGLIONI has been engaged for a Series of FIVE FAREWELL NIGHTS, in which she will take leave of the Subscribers and the Public. FIRST FAREWELL NIGHT of Mdlle. TAGLIONI. The Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public, are respectfully informed that there will be an EXTRA NIGHT (not included in the Subscription), on THURSDAY next, June 26th, when will be presented (first time these four years) Donizetti's Opera ROBERTO DEVEREUX. Queen Elizabeth, Madame Rossi Caccia (her second appearance in this country); Sarah, Duchess of Nottingham, Mdlle. Rosetti; Roberto Devereux, Earl of Essex, Signor Moriani; The Duke of Nottingham, Signor Borolihet. THE DANSEUSES VIENNOISES, under the direction of Madame Josephine Weiss, will appear in some of their most FAVOURITE DANCES. To be followed by VARIOUS ENTERTAINMENTS, in which Mdlle. Cerito, Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, and Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi, Mesdlles. Moncelet, Demelisse, Cassan, and Ferdinand, M. St. Leon, M. Di Mattia, M. Gosselin, and M. Perrot, will appear; and the celebrated Ballet, LA SYLPHIDE. La Sylphide, Mdlle. Taglioni, it being the First of her Five Farewell Nights.—Applications for Boxes, Pit Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven; the Opera to commence at half past Seven.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager Mr. W. BATTY. Crowded and delighted audiences. Two Grand Battle Spectacles! The Scenes in the Circle combine the most picturesque display of Female Equestrian Talent ever witnessed. On MONDAY, JUNE 23, and during the week, the Grand National Drama of the BATTLE OF WATERLOO; the Emperor Napoleon, by Mr. Gomersal. Scenes in the Circle by the French Company. To conclude with the highly successful Spectacle of the GREEK RENEGADE. Box-office open from eleven till four.

COLOSSEUM.—Patronised by H. M. G. MAJESTY and H. R. H. PRINCE ALBERT.—Open daily from 10 to 6. Pronounced by the Press, and confirmed by every Visitor, to be the most perfect triumph of Art in its various branches, both by Day and Night, that has ever been achieved. Equal to Six Exhibitions: the Glyptotheca containing Works of the first Artists, Mont Blanc and Mountain Torrent, Superb Conservatories, Gothic Aviary, Classic Ruins and Fountains, Panorama of London, repainted by Mr. Parris, &c. Admission, 3s; Children Half-price. The Stalactite Caverns, the most Magnificent of all the Temples which Nature has built for herself in the Regions of Night, 1s. extra.

EVENING EXHIBITION, open from 8 till 11, consists of an entirely New Panorama of London by Night, erected in front of the day picture; the largest in the world, comprising 46 000 square feet. Projected and carried out by Mr. William Bradwell, and painted by Mr. Danson and Mr. Telbin. The Caverns, Mont Blanc, and Torrent, by Night. The Glyptotheca and Refreshment Saloon brilliantly illuminated, forming a promenade perfectly unique. The whole Exhibition designed by Mr. W. Bradwell. Admission at the door 5s. each; Family Tickets, to admit four persons, at 4s. each, to be had at the North Lodge, Colosseum, from 10 till 6; of Messrs. Mitchell, Old Bond-street; Mr. Andrews, ditto; Mr. Sams, St. James's-street; Messrs. Duff and Hodgson, Oxford-street; and Messrs. Addison and Co., 7, Regent street.—Children under 12 years of age, Half price.

CAPTAIN SIBORNE'S ORIGINAL LARGE MODEL of the BATTLE of WATERLOO has just been OPENED for EXHIBITION. The surface of this Model is 420 square feet, and has the whole of the hostile armies as they were disposed and engaged. The NEW MODEL, representing the Glorious CHARGE of the BRITISH CAVALRY, led by the Marquis of Anglesey, and the INFANTRY, by Sir Thomas Picton, in the immediate presence of the immortal Wellington. EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly. Open from Eleven, Morning, till Nine, Evening. Admission to each Model, 1s.

HIS R. H. the PRINCE of WALES, by gracious permission of her Majesty, from the picture of Winterhalter at Windsor Castle. The HOUSE of BRUNSWICK at ONE VIEW; George I., George II., George III., George IV., William IV., Queen Charlotte, Queen Caroline, Princess Charlotte, Coburg, Dukes of York, Kent, Cambridge, Sussex, &c., the Robes of George IV., restored, the British Orders of the Garter, Bath, Thistle, St. Patrick. The National Group, Mr. Cobden, and Tom Thumb. "This is one of the best sights in the metropolis."—The Times. Open from 11 till 10 at night.—Admittance One Shilling; Napoleon Rooms, Sixpence.—MADAME TUSSAUD and SON'S Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square.

ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, Daily at Work, carrying visitors at the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—This interesting Model is Lectured on by Professor Bachoffner, at One o'Clock, Daily; also, on the Evenings of Wednesdays and Fridays, at Eight o'Clock; and on the Evenings of Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday, at nine o'clock. The Working of the Model always follows the Lecture. It is also worked at Four o'Clock, and at other convenient times.—The other interesting Works and Popular Lectures as usual. Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price.

DANCING.—LESSONS in the MAZURKA, CELLARIUS VALSE, POLKA, and VALSE a DEUX TEMPS, (as taught by Cellarius), by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons at all hours to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age, wishing privacy and expedition. Terms may be had on application as above.

MOURNING.—Court, Family, and Complimentary.—The Proprietors of the London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249, Regent-street, beg respectfully to remind families requiring mourning attire, that every article of the very best description, requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning, may be procured from this Establishment at a moment's notice. Widows' and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note particularizing the mourning required, will insure immediate attention either in town or country. Ladies requiring Silks or Velvets for Dresses, Mantles, Cloaks, &c., are particularly invited to a trial of the new Corbeau Silks and Velvets introduced at this house. They will be found not only more durable, but the colour very superior, unaffected by the strongest acid, or even sea-water. Black and Grey, and Fancy Mourning Silks, Cashmeres, Plaids, and Merinoes, of every description. The Show Rooms are replete with every novelty for Mourning in millinery, flowers, Tulle and Nett Sleeves, Collars, Berthes, Head-dresses, trimmings, &c. &c.—W. C. JAY and Co.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,
WHAT to EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic
By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.
SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; CARVALHO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

Now Ready, 2nd Edition, price 5s 6d., with Cases and Coloured Plates,
DR. MADDOCK'S POPULAR TREATISE on a SUCCESSFUL MODE of TREATING CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, and AFFECTIONS of the HEART. "It is impossible not to believe that the author's treatment is particularly applicable in these complaints."—John Bull.
SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row, and all Booksellers.

Ninth Edition, Enlarged and Corrected to the Present Time, price 2s. 6d., post free 8d. extra,
THE HAND-BOOK TO PARIS; or, Traveller's Guide to the French Capital, Boulogne, Calais, Havre, Rouen, &c. Among the contents will be found an accurate description of all the routes to Paris, with the modes of travelling with comfort and economy; public buildings, hotels, theatres, exhibitions, remedy for sea sickness, and every object of interest and attraction; with advice to visitors, &c.
W. STRANGE, 21, Paternoster-row, and all Booksellers.

THE ONLY GERMAN NEWSPAPER PUBLISHED in ENGLAND.—DEUTSCHE LONDONER ZEITUNG, Journal of English and Continental Intelligence, containing News of the Week, Politics, Musical and Theatrical Notices, and Criticisms, Commercial Intelligence, &c. A Supplement to each Number, comprising an Original Romance, Poetry, Reviews of Books and of the Arts and Sciences. This paper offers an eligible medium to advertisers, being extensively circulated in England and on the Continent.—Published every Friday evening at the Office of D. Cahn, No. 7, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields; and sold by all newsvenders.

On 28th June will be published, in large 8vo., price 4s 6d., handsomely bound in cloth, and gilt, Volume I. of
THE EDINBURGH TALES; containing NINETEEN STORIES or Novelettes, by Mrs. JOHNSTONE, (the Conductor,) Mrs. Fraser, Mrs. Gore, Miss Mitford, Mrs. Crowe, Miss Tytler, Mr. Howitt, Mr. Quinnan, Mr. Carlyle, Colonel Johnson, and Sir Thomas Dick Lauder: and an amount of letterpress equal to that of nine volumes of the ordinary novel size.
WILLIAM TAIT, Edinburgh; CHAPMAN and HALL, London; and JOHN CUMMING, Dublin.

Public Library, Conduit-street.
JOINT SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR NEW BOOKS—The New Plan, established at this Library, is found to be so preferable to the former mode of purchase, that Reading and Book Societies in every part of the country are now adopting it, and receiving their supplies regularly from this extensive and valuable Library. The leading features of this improved plan, which the rapid conveyance of railroads and steam-vessels renders universally applicable, are explained in a recent Publication, entitled, "Hints for Reading and Book Societies," which is forwarded, (gratis and post free,) to orders enclosing two stamps, addressed, Messrs. SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Public Library, Conduit-street.

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—Subscribers are respectfully informed that they can be supplied with this Paper CAREFULLY FOLDED, and ENCLOSED in a LARGE WRAPPER, so as EFFECTUALLY TO PREVENT IT FROM INJURY in passing through the Post.

TERMS.	£	s.	d.
Per Quarter	0	6	6
Half Year	0	13	0
Year	1	6	0

Sets completed. The Volumes bound in a superior style, with gilt edges, at 5s. each. Orders must be accompanied with a remittance, or by a reference for payment in town. All letters must be addressed thus:—"Mr. F. CLAPPERTON, 159, Fleet-street, London."

WEEKLY FRENCH PAPER, L'OBSERVATEUR FRANCAIS. Edited by JEAN BAPTISTE DESPLACES. This newspaper, the most complete ever produced in London, contains articles on English and French Politics, Political News from All Countries, Judicial Reports, "The Wandering Jew," and "The History of the Consulate and the Empire." A Review of Paris, Gossipings and Anecdotes of High English Society, Reports of Weekly Meetings of the French Scientific Academies, A Commercial Report, A Review of English and French Theatres, A Musical Review, Miscellanies.

The number enlarged in form, without increase of price, from 16 to 24 pages, containing 72 columns of closely-printed matter, equal to the contents of 288 pages, or 18 printed octavo sheets. Price 6d., stamped for post. Orders received at the Office, 344, Strand; and by all Booksellers and Newsvenders in the United Kingdom.

FOR AUTHORS PUBLISHING.
Now Ready, Fifth Edition, price 2s. 6d., cloth gilt, or 3s., post free,
THE AUTHOR'S PRINTING and PUBLISHING ASSISTANT. A Guide to the Printing, Correcting, and Publishing New Works, comprising Explanations of the Process of Printing; Preparation and Calculation of Manuscripts, Punctuation, Choice of Paper, Type, Binding, Illustrations, Publishing, Advertising, Estimates of Cost for Large or Small Editions, &c., with an Exemplification and Description of the Typographical Marks used in the Correction of the Press.
"Every one who has written, or who may write for the press, should possess this work."—Metropolitan.
Also, Price 2s. 6d., or 3s., post free,
PLANS for GENTLEMEN'S LIBRARIES, with Remarks on their Formation and Arrangement.
SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street.

IRELAND.—In the present crisis of Irish affairs, it is of the utmost importance to the British people to possess the means of accurate and impartial information respecting public feeling and political events in Ireland. The Irish Newspapers, with very few exceptions, are the biassed organs or mere agents of parties, political and religious; and it is, consequently, difficult to know from them the true character of parties, or the real merits of the important questions now agitating that country. THE NORTHERN WHIG, published in Belfast, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, at the office in Calender-street, has uniformly studied, in its advocacy of the rights and interests of all, to merit the character of being strictly impartial; and this character it has maintained during its whole course of upwards of twenty years. Those of the British public who wish to obtain a perfectly independent and true account of Irish affairs, can order this paper through the following Agents:—Messrs. BARKER and WHITE, 33, Fleet-street; WM. DAWSON and SON, 76, Cannon-street, City; NEWTON and Co., 2, Warwick-square; C. MITCHELL, Red Lion-court, Fleet-street.

TERMS:—Yearly Subscription, £2 10s.; Half-yearly, £1 5s.; Quarterly, 12s. 6d.; Single Paper, 4d.

Now Ready, 2 vols., 8vo., with Portraits, 28s., bound,
MEMOIRS OF SOPHIA DOROTHEA, CONSORT OF GEORGE I.,
Elector of Hanover and King of England:
Including HER DIARY of the Conversations of various Distinguished Personages of her Times, and Selections from her Correspondence, now first published from the Originals.
The story of the life and fate of Sophia Dorothea has hitherto been almost unknown in this country, in consequence of the strenuous endeavours of her persecutors to involve their chief incidents in an impenetrable mystery. Late discoveries in the Archives of the principal German Courts, and some private MS. collections have

Just published, in post 8vo., with Engravings, price 8s. 6d., hadsomely bound,

EVENINGS IN THE PYRENEES, comprising the Stories of Wanderers from many Lands. Edited and arranged by SELINA BUNBURY, Author of "Rides in the Pyrenees," Combe Abbey," "A Visit to my Birthplace," &c.
London: J. MASTERS, Aldersgate-street.

Just published, price Five Shillings, strongly bound,

SINNETT'S PICTURE OF PARIS AND ITS ENVIRONS, a Description of the Public Buildings, Parks, Churches, &c.; necessary information on starting; and Notices of the various Routes from the Coast. With a New Map, containing bird's eye Views of Public Buildings, and references to the principal Streets, Railway Stations, &c.
London: J. MASTERS, 33, Aldersgate-street; Paris: F. SINNETT.

FIELD'S JUVENILE BOOK WAREHOUSE, 65, QUADRANT, corner of Air-street.—The largest and best selected stock of Juvenile Volumes in London, comprising all the Works of the best Juvenile Writers, and an endless variety of Coloured Picture Books.—65, Quadrant.

FIELD'S CHEAP BOOK WAREHOUSE, 65, QUADRANT, REGENT-STREET.—Standard Novels, elegantly bound, reduced to 3s. 6d. each; comprising, among others, The Disowned, Devereux, Sayings and Doings (First, Second, and Third Series), Florence Macarthy, Tremaine, Brambletye House, Granby, Gurney Married, Pelham, Frank Mildmay, Chelsea Pensioners, Zillah, O'Donnell, Richelieu, &c. &c. All warranted new and perfect.—65, Quadrant.

FIELD'S CHEAP STATIONERY and BOOK WAREHOUSE, 65, Quadrant, Corner of Air-street.—Stamped Envelopes, 1s. per doz.; Plain Envelopes, 4d. per 100; Superfine ditto, 6d. per 100; Satin ditto, 9d. per 100. Note Paper, 5 quires, 6d.; Albert and Queen's Note, 1s. and 1s. 6d. 5 quires; Superfine Bath Post, 2s. and 2s. 6d. the 5 quires; outsides ditto, 3d. and 4d. per quire. Wax of the finest quality, 10 sticks, 1s. Superfine Foolscap, 6d. per quire. Bibles, 1s.; Testaments, 6d.; Prayer-books, 9d., Church Services, 2 vols, in case, 3s. 6d.; a large and elegant stock, varying in price up to 3 Guineas. Mourning Envelopes, 1s. per 100; and every description of Stationery at prices not to be equalled by any other house.—65, QUADRANT.

JOE MILLER THE YOUNGER.

CONTENTS OF NO IX:—

The Bal Masque at Vauxhall. Splendidly Illustrated
The Waterloo Banquet. With many Cuts and Slashes
Joe's Correspondence with the Pope, at Rome
A Night at the Surrey
A Patent Discourse upon Man and his Actions
Brougham, the Conveyancer
A Few Words upon Duelling, and the MURDER OF MR. SETON Ascot Heath
Railway Committee Rooms
Joe's Musical Budget
The Breaking Heart
Joe's Parliamentary Report
Report of the British Association
"SETTING HIS FACE AGAINST GOOD LIVING," Gal-vanicly Illustrated; &c., &c.

Containing more Fun, Broad Grins, and Amusement than any other publication of the day.
Price THREE HALFPENCE; STAMPED, TO GO FREE BY POST, TWOPENCE HALFPENNY. Subscriptions paid in advance—Half-Year, 5s. 3d.; Year, 10s. 6d.
All Communications to be addressed to Joe's New Office, 159, Fleet-street, London.

JUST PUBLISHED.

1.
MR. JAMES'S LAST NOVEL.
In 3 vols., post 8vo., price £1 11s. 6d.,
THE SMUGGLER. By G. P. R. JAMES, Esq.

2.
THOM'S POEMS.
In post 8vo., price 5s., with a portrait, the Second Edition, with Additions,
RHYMES AND RECOLLECTIONS OF A HAND-LOOM WEAVER. By WILLIAM THOM, of Inverury, Aberdeenshire.
An Edition on Large Paper, illustrated with Plates, will be published in a few months, price 20s.

3.
In post 8vo., price 9s., cloth, gilt,
THE NOTE BOOK OF A NATURALIST. By E. P. THOMPSON.

4.
In post 8vo., price 8s., cloth, with Map by Arrowsmith,
SYDNEY AND MELBOURNE. By C. J. BAKER, Esq.

5.
In post 8vo., cloth, with Map,
THE PUNJAUB. By Lieut.-Col. STEINBACH, late of the Lahore Service.

IN A FEW DAYS.
In demy 8vo., with Numerous Illustrative Diagrams,
AN INQUIRY into the NATURE and COURSE of STORMS in the INDIAN OCEAN SOUTH of the EQUATOR, with a view of Discovering their Origin, Extent, Rotative Character, and other Concomitant Phenomena. With Remarks on the Season, Winds, and State of the Atmosphere favourable to their Development; for the Practical Purpose of enabling Vessels to ascertain the proximity of a Hurricane, and their Relative Position to its Vortex. Also, Suggestions on the Best Means of Avoiding the Danger. By ALEXANDER THOM, Surgeon 86th Regiment.

On JULY 1st,
In medium 8vo., cloth, Illustrated, price 8s.,
The FIFTH VOLUME of the New Edition of the WORKS of G. P. R. JAMES, Esq., containing PHILIP AUGUSTUS; or, The BROTHERS IN ARMS.
London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., Cornhill.

GRATIS.—To Persons Visiting Paris.—The PROSPECTUS of the HOTEL VICTORIA, Rue Chauveau la Garde, No. 3, PARIS, contains much very useful information for Visitors to Paris, as to the Roads, Modes of Travelling, the Capital, &c. May be had gratis of W. STRANGE, 21, Paternoster row (who will forward it free, on receipt of 2 stamps); G. BIGGS, 421, Strand; or Mr. MOON, 10, Regent-street.

NOTTINGHAM AND BOSTON RAILWAY.—NOTICE is HEREBY GIVEN that no further APPLICATION for SHARES will be received after the 30th inst. By order of the Committee of Management, 14, Birchin-lane, London. B. BROUGH, Secretary.

THE LARGEST STOCK IN EUROPE.—FURNISHING IRONMONGERY, Stove Grates, Kitchen Ranges, Fenders, Fire-Irons, Best Sheffield Plate, Ornamental Iron and Wire Work, Garden Engines, Rollers, &c.; Japan Tea Trays, Baths, &c.—PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS, adjoining Madame Tussaud's, 53, Baker-street, Portman-square.—N.B. Every article is marked in plain figures at the lowest cash prices.

FURNISHING IRONMONGERY.—RICHARD and JOHN SLACK, 336, STRAND (opposite Somerset House) solicit an inspection of their extensive Assortment of Fenders, Fire-Irons, Nickel Silver Wares, Tea trays, Baths, &c., combining every novelty, at prices 30 per cent. under any other house where attention is paid to quality Their Book, containing Drawings and Prices of every article, may be had Gratis, or sent (per post) free to any part.—Established 1818.

SCHWEPPE'S SODA and other ALKALINE WATERS continue to be manufactured as usual, upon the largest scale, at their several establishments, and to maintain their supremacy over all others. Each bottle has its proper proportion of alkali; but, to prevent imposition, consumers are earnestly requested to ascertain that a label with their NAME is over the cork of each bottle of soda water, and a label on each bottle of lemonade and potass water. Schweppe's Liquid Magnesia is of the finest quality, and is strongly recommended as a cure for gout, acidity of the stomach, &c., by the first London Physicians.—51, Berners-street, London

AT a PUBLIC MEETING, held on the 18th June, 1845, for the purpose of ESTABLISHING a GERMAN HOSPITAL in LONDON, at the City of London Tavern,

His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE in the Chair,

1. Moved by Lord Ashley, M.P.; seconded by his Excellency Chevalier Bunsen,

It appearing that a large proportion of the foreigners living in London are natives of Germany; that most of them are industrious mechanics and labourers, whose occupations render them peculiarly liable to meet with many severe accidents, and suffer much from sickness; and it appearing from the evidence of many gentlemen of the greatest eminence in the medical profession, that it would be a great comfort to these poor persons, when in sickness, to be surrounded by their own countrymen, affording them the advantages of being able better to express their wishes and describe their ailings to medical gentlemen and nurses who speak their own language and know their habits, and also the great blessing of receiving the consolations of religion from German clergymen, who, with the best intentions, are unable to find out all their countrymen, and regularly and frequently visit them when dispersed through the different hospitals of this vast Metropolis,

Resolved,—That it is desirable that an Hospital should be established for the reception of all poor Germans, and others speaking the German language; that it be established accordingly, and called "The German Hospital in London."

2. Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen,
Her Majesty the Queen Dowager,
His Majesty the King of Prussia,
His Royal Highness the Prince Albert, having been graciously pleased to accept the protectorate of the Institution, and

His Majesty the King of Hanover,
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester,
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent,
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge,
His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge,
And the following Sovereigns and Princes:—
His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia,
His Majesty the King of Denmark,
His Majesty the King of Bavaria,
His Majesty the King of Saxony,
H. R. H. the Grand Duke of Hesse Darmstadt,
H. R. H. the Grand Duke of Saxe Weimar,
H. R. H. the Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz,
H. R. H. the Crown Prince of Wirtemburg, having been pleased to patronise the Institution;

Moved by the Most Noble the Marquis of Westminster; seconded by his Excellency the Baron de Cetto:—That the thanks of this Meeting be most respectfully offered to those illustrious personages.

3. Moved by Benjamin Bond Cabbell, Esq.; and seconded by his Excellency Count Kielmansegge:—That his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge be requested to be the President of the Institution.

4. Moved by the Very Rev the Dean of Hereford: and seconded by the Rev. Dr. Wesley:—That the following be requested to accept the office of Vice-Presidents of the Institution:—

The Representatives at this Court of those Sovereigns who are Patrons of the Institution.
H. S. H. Prince Biron Curland.
H. S. H. Prince Puckler Muskau.
His Grace the Duke of Northumberland, K.G.
His Grace the Duke of Wellington, K.G.
His Grace the Duke of Sutherland, K.G.
The Most Noble the Marquis of Lansdowne, K.G.
The Most Noble the Marquis of Westminster.
The Right Hon. the Earl of Albemarle.
The Right Hon. the Earl Stanhope,
The Right Hon. the Earl of Harrowby.
The Right Hon. Earl Howe.
Lord Ashley, M.P.
The Right Hon. Lord Robert Grosvenor.
Sir Thomas Dyke Acland, Bart, M.P.
Sir Robert H. Inglis, Bart, M.P.
Benjamin Bond Cabbell, Esq.
Samuel Gurney, Esq.
Frederick Huth, Esq

5. Moved by C. Cochrane, Esq.; seconded by W. Bird, Esq.; That Frederick Huth, Esq., be appointed Treasurer of the Institution.

6. Moved by S. Gurney, Esq; seconded by R. M. Phillips, Esq.: That a subscription be entered into forthwith for the purpose of providing the necessary funds for the establishment of the Hospital, and that the following bankers be requested to receive subscriptions:—Messrs. Glyn, Hallifax, and Co.; Messrs. Jones, Loyd, and Co.; Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Smiths; Messrs. Masterman and Co.; Messrs. Williams, Deacon, and Co.; Sir Claude Scott and Co.; Messrs. Coutts and Co.; Messrs. Herries, Farquhar, and Co.; Messrs. Drummonds and Co.

7. Moved by the Rev. Dr Kuper; seconded by Dr. Freund: That it is desirable that one or more Dispensaries in connexion with the Hospital be established in convenient localities.

8. Moved by his Excellency the Chevalier Bunsen; seconded by the Rev. Dr. M'Caul: That the proper steps be taken for the purpose of procuring, if possible, the assistance of one or more individuals from the Institution of Nursing Sisters, established in Prussia, in the capacity of matrons and nurses.

9. Moved by the Venerable Archdeacon Robinson; seconded by D. H. Waine, Esq.: That the thanks of the Meeting be offered to the Provisional Committee, for their exertions, and that they be requested to continue the same in carrying out the foregoing resolutions, with power to add to their number.

10 Moved by his Excellency the Chevalier Bunsen; seconded by the Rev. Dr. Kuper: That the grateful thanks of this Meeting be offered to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, for his condescension in taking the chair this day.

CHASTON'S INDIA RUBBER ELASTIC CORN PLASTERS, the only safe and sure remedy, may be had by sending free, 13 postage stamps to B. CHASTON, Chemist, Walton, Norfolk. They will be sent free to any part of the kingdom.

ALE! ALE! ALE!—Best, brightest, purest, and most in esteem by Connoisseurs, to be had in Eighteen or Nine Gallon Casks, at One Shilling per Gallon, by addressing to the JOHN BULL BREWERY. Office, 20, Philpot-lane, City. Conveyed, free, to any part of London.

LADIES' GOLD CHAINS, London-made.—Drawings of the various New Patterns are kept for the purpose of sending by post to any part of the country. For facility of reference, the weight is given by comparison with sovereigns; the quality of the gold is warranted equal to any that is worked into articles of this description T. COX SAVORY, Goldsmith, &c, 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

DUTY OFF GLASS.—BASS and CO.'s PALE EAST INDIA ALE, in Bottle (so highly in repute with the Faculty), reduced in price, to Quarts 6s. 6d., and Pints 3s. 9d., by A. G. FAVENC and Co., Agents, who have also made a similar reduction on London and Dublin Stout.—Stores, 18, 'Change Alley (close to Garraway's); and at No. 3, Sherborne-lane, King William-street, City.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

INGRAM'S MANUFACTORY, 29, CITY-ROAD.

CHILDREN'S and INVALIDS' CARRIAGES.—INVALIDS Wheel Chairs, from £3 to £35, with hoods; second-hand, as well as new. Spinal and Self-acting Chairs. Children's Chaises, Vis-a-vis Waggons, Phaetons, Barouches, &c &c, from Ten Shillings to Twenty Guineas. Immense and varied collections on sale or hire.

SYLPHIDE PARASOLS.—The CLAREMONT SYLPHIDE, AS WORN AT PARIS, and manufactured by the Patentees, is the most elegant form in which this admired Parasol has been offered to the public, and is about half the weight only of the usual description, which is so desirable a thing in Parasols. Ladies are requested to observe that the parasols are all stamped "Sylphide Patent."—W. and J. SANGSTER, 140, Regent-street, and 10, Royal Exchange.

MAGNIFICENT TABLE CLOTHS, five yards long, 15s. each; dinner napkins to match, 9s. 6d per dozen; damask slips, 1s. per yard; fish napkins, 2s. 6d. per dozen. Irish Linens, Sheetings, glass cloths, towellings, &c., with every description of goods suitable for household purposes; prices the same as charged at the factory, for cash only. Prospectuses, containing full particulars, with lists of the prices, can be had at the Warehouses, or by post. Address—"NATIONAL LINEN COMPANY, 105, Fleet-street, corner of Farringdon-street." Families living at a distance can have goods forwarded on approval, before payment.

PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS.—JOHNSON and CO., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street, Hatters to the Queen and Royal Family, Inventors and Patentees.—From the construction of the PATENT FLEXIBLE HATS the unpleasant pressure on the forehead is entirely removed, and by their extreme elasticity they are capable of accommodating themselves perfectly to the shape of the head; the crown, moreover, being ventilated, and the perspiration prevented from appearing on the outside of the hat, are additional advantages. As Ladies' Riding Hats they are light and elastic, and will retain their position on the head without the least discomfort.—JOHNSON and CO., 113 Regent-street, and GRIFFITHS and JOHNSON, 2, Old Bond-street.

FOR DUSTY ROADS.—NICOLL'S REGISTERED PALETOT 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 65; unlined, 30s.; 20 paces North of Quadrant, No. 114, Regent-street An over-coat by many of our patrons called the Dust-ah, is, without encumbering free movement, well adapted for temporary defence against weather, heat, and dusty roads; prepared, and can only be made, by H. J. and D. NICOLL; is naturally repellant of water, yet porous. The test is to breathe through the material to the surface of a mirror. From its elastic softness it will readily fold into the small compass of the ordinary pocket. Price 30s.; is durable withal.—Twenty paces North of Quadrant, London.

NICOLL'S REGISTERED PALETOT, 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 65, made of Llama cloth, in light, dark, and mixed colours, two guineas, patronised by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, is, from the neatness of its form, adapted for the two purposes —as an over-coat, light in weight, a desirable advantage in our ever-variable climate; also, as a surtout, or summer frock coat, without other—a perfect luxury where heat is found oppressive. Unassumed plainness, the characteristic of a gentleman's attire, is fully sustained in the Paletot, being in its fashion neither trop prononce nor trop neglige.—"It speaks well for the working of the new act, which thus secures the profits of a good judgment and well-directed ingenuity to those to whom it is due."—See the "Times" of 4th April. "In the Registered Paletot there is a gentlemanly neatness and an absence of all unsightly vulgarity. It has met with the highest approbation in the Court circle."—See "Morning Post" of 19th April.—Paletots suitable to the habits and professions of all are ready for inspection at the extensive Warerooms, 114, Regent-street, 20 paces North of Quadrant.

SHIRTS.—W. E. WHITELOCK, 166, STRAND, (established 20 years,) solicits attention to the Shirts he supplies for 6s 6d. each including washing. They are made of Marsland's Patent Shirting with fine linen fronts, &c., best work and latest fashion, and are superior to those usually sold for 8s. 6d. Also, all fine linen, 10s. 6d., usual price, 13s. 6d. A sample shirt of either sent pre-paid by post, upon receipt of the amount, and 1s. added as part payment of postage. The dimensions required are the tight measures of the neck, chest, and wrist. All sizes kept ready for wear, from boys, upwards. Good shirts for Dutfits, 42s per dozen, ready washed. New and improved shirt collars, for appearance and comfort in wear, surpassing anything hitherto made, 8s. 6d. per dozen. Gentlemen waited upon in any part of London.

ANOTHER WONDERFUL CURE of ASTHMA and COUGH of 20 years' standing, by DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—From Mr. Roles, Newsman, Steam Mill-street, Chester, dated March 2, 1845:—Sir—I suffered for nearly 20 years from an asthma and cough, which frequently prevented my attending to my business I never found benefit from anything until I tried Dr. Locock's Wafers which have perfectly cured me. (Signed) J. ROLES.

Dr. LOCOCK'S WAFERS give instant relief, and a rapid Cure of Asthma, Coughs, and all disorders of the breath and lungs. To singers and public speakers they are invaluable, for clearing and strengthening the voice; they have a most pleasant taste. Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 11s. per box.—Agents: DA SILVA and Co., 1, Bride-lane, Fleet-street, London; sold by all Medicine Venders.

SILKS.—GEORGE SMITH, 32, Ludgate-hill, invites the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, to inspect the magnificent collection of FOREIGN SILKS, which he is selling at little more than half-price. They are the richest Lyons manufacture, three-quarters wide, and varied in every hue and size of pattern. An eminent Paris house has submitted to this loss, in consequence of the ruinous effects of the winterly weather which prevailed through the late spring. System of business—Ladies are invited to inspect at their pleasure, but on no pretence solicited to purchase: no deviation from the prices, which are marked in plain figures, for ready money only. Shawls, silks, satins, velvets, dresses, cloaks, fancy goods, mourning, table linen, &c. &c.—GEORGE SMITH, late Graham and Smith, successors to Everington, now 32, Ludgate-hill, the premises lately occupied by Rundell and Bridge.

SCARBOROUGH.—CROWN HOTEL, ESPLANADE (Contiguous to the Saloon, Spa, and Cliff Bridge Pleasure-grounds).—JOHN F. SHARPIN respectfully informs the Nobility and Gentry that he has entered upon the above New and Extensive Establishment, which is now ready for the reception of Visitors.

The situation of the Hotel is exceedingly beautiful, embracing from the rooms, balcony, and adjoining pleasure-grounds, an extensive view of the ocean and the romantic scenery of the eastern coast. The number of apartments exceed 120, consisting of various suites of dining, sitting, and lodging-rooms, including a magnificent drawing-room, 60 feet long; the whole being fitted up in a superior manner with entirely new furniture.

The interior arrangements are very complete, and have been formed with the object of giving, as much as would be consistent with a public establishment—the convenience and comfort of a private residence. Hot, cold, and shower Baths have been fitted on the most approved plan, and can be had on the shortest notice—are easy of access, and will be available also to the visitors of the adjoining neighbourhood.

The Stabling is adapted for 60 horses, the lock-up houses for 40 carriages, and the minor accommodation of the court yard are in equal ratio.

With these advantages, a moderate rate of charges, and attentive services, J. S. hopes to attain the honour of a degree of patronage commensurate with the magnitude and costly nature of his arrangements.—Scarborough, May 15th, 1845.

BELLE VUE HOTEL, BOURNEMOUTH.—ANN ROBENS, late of the Greyhound Hotel, Blandford, begs respectfully to inform the Inhabitants of Bournemouth, its vicinity, and the Public in general, that she has succeeded Mrs. Slidle in the management of the above Establishment, and earnestly solicits a continuance of that support which has been so liberally bestowed upon her predecessor: assuring them that no exertions shall be wanting to render to all that comfort and accommodation which they may require: at the same time regulating the charges on the most moderate terms.

In arranging this Estab ishment to the notice of families and others visiting the coast, A. R. assures them that they will find this hotel delightfully situated close to the beach, in one of the best parts of Bournemouth. Each sitting-room faces the sea, with an uninterrupted view.

The house is fitted up with every regard to comfort and convenience; and the various alterations and improvements, and the addition of more spacious rooms, recently erected, give it more the character of a private dwelling than of an hotel. The Coffee Room is newly fitted up in the most approved manner.

The Wines and Spirits are of the first-rate quality. The Stables and lock-up Coach-houses are of the first-rate order. Carriages, &c., kept, with steady drivers. Families supplied with hay, corn, straw, &c.

N.B.—The Library is under the same roof, and the Baths close by. Persons wishing information relative to houses or lodgings, will have every information afforded them without charge.

SAVING OF SILVER AND LABOUR.

FOR CLEANING GOLD and SILVER PLATE INSTANTANEOUSLY, without wearing the precious metals in the slightest degree.—JONES'S SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, a new chemical discovery, recommended by the eminent Chemist, Andrew Ure, M.D., F.R.S., &c., and sold in half pint, pint, and quart bottles, at 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s.

The following Letters at once establish the usefulness of this new discovery:—

"I have examined the preparation invented by Messrs. JONES, for cleaning silver, called SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, and find it to be safe, effectual, and instantaneous in its operation. Being founded on chemical principles, it merely removes the tarnish on plate, and restores the white silver lustre without abrading or wearing the precious metal itself in the slightest degree. "ANDREW URE, M.D., F.R.S., &c.

"Professor of Chemistry and Analytical Chemist.

"London, 13, Charlotte-street, Bedford-square, March 8th, 1845."

"Gentlemen—We have now given your valuable discovery a fair trial, and have no hesitation in saying it is the best compound we have ever tried for cleaning Gold and Silver WITHOUT FRICTION OR WEARING AWAY THE METAL, and shall accept the agency for its sale with great pleasure. (Signed) "RIPPON and BURTON, Furnishing Ironmongers.

"Oxford-street, May 22nd, 1845."

Caution.—Every genuine Bottle of this Compound is protected by the Stamp and Address of the only Inventors and Makers, "JONES and CO., LIGHT HOUSE, 201, Strand, London." Sold wholesale by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Sutton and Co., and Edwards and Co., London; and retail by Sangar, Oxford-street; Johnson, Cornhill; Jones and Co. 201, Strand; and Rippon and Burton, Oxford-street.

WATCHES by WEBSTER and SON, Chronometer Makers to the Lords of the Admiralty and the East India Company.—Webster and Son's manufactory has continued in Cornhill 134 years, where may be selected, from one of the most extensive stocks in London, every description of superior manufacture in Chronometers, Watches, and Clocks, and at the lowest prices consistent with security for the maintenance of that reputation for superior workmanship which has distinguished their house for so many years. Compensated duplex and lever watches, to counteract the variations of temperature, upon the principle of their chronometers, to which Government awarded the prizes three years in succession; small elegant lever and horizontal watches in gold cases, engraved or engine-turned for ladies or gentlemen; small flat silver detached lever and horizontal watches, for youths, at very moderate prices. Superior workmen are employed upon the premises in the repairing department for English and foreign work. The utmost value allowed for old watches in exchange.—WEBSTER and SON'S Publication, with their Equation Table for the Present Year, will be sent free on the receipt of two postage stamps. A large selection of fine Second-hand Watches at very low prices.

THE ORTHOCHRONOGRAPH; an Instrument patented by WEBSTER and SON, and introduced by Dr. Robinson at the late meeting of the British Association. By this instrument true time may be obtained at any part of the world, for the correction of clocks, watches, and Chronometers, by the most inexperienced person, to a correctness not hitherto attained but by those accustomed to the use of astronomical instruments. Its simplicity, portability, and the ease with which the results are obtained, will enable persons to keep their clocks and watches to true time. Price £4 10s. each.

W. and SON beg leave to introduce the PATENT PEDOMETER, which is adjusted with great accuracy to the step of the wearer, and will inform him what distance he may have walked during any given time. Price £5 5s.—in silver.—WEBSTER and SON, 74, Cornhill.

ORNAMENTS for the DRAWING-ROOM, LIBRARY, and DINING-ROOM; consisting of an elegant assortment of Figures, Vases, Groups, Candlesticks, Inkstands, Obelisks, beautiful inlaid Tables, Paperweights, Watchstands, &c., imported and manufactured by J. TENNANT, late Mawe, 149, Strand, London.

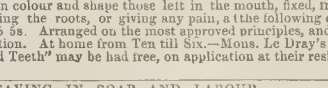
HEAL and SON'S LIST of BEDDING.—Containing a full description of weights, sizes, and prices, by which purchasers are enabled to judge the articles that are best suited to make a good set of Bedding, sent free by post.—HEAL and SON, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, Tottenham-court-road.

EDWARDS' PATENT FIREWOOD WHEELS—the Cheapest and Quickest mode of Lighting Fires ever offered to the Public A certain fire in a few minutes.—Sold by every Oilman and Grocer in or near London. Four for a Penny; or, for Spiller's Bachelor's Kettle, Three for a Penny.—Manufactory, 18, Wharf-road, City-road.

SPILLER'S Patent Self-acting BACHELOR'S KETTLES.—They will boil 3 pints of water in 6 minutes, at the low cost of a Farthing. (Use a wheel of Edwards' Patent firewood.) They are portable, safe, and cleanly—may be lighted in one second—require no coals—no attention—Price, 3 pint size, 6s. 6d; 3 quart do., 9s.—EDMUND SPILLER, Inventor and sole Proprietor, 98, Holborn-hill, London. Post-office orders attended to.

AIR-GUNS and AIR-CANES.—An entirely New and further Improved Assortment of these portable and silently-destructive weapons now on sale, adapted by REILLY, Jun., for killing Rabbits, Rooks, Sea-fowl, &c., with ball, small birds with shot, fish with harpoons, &c. &c. Prices, commencing at 55s. each, pump and apparatus complete.—Reilly, Gun-maker, 316, Holborn.

R. HOWSE'S (PARTRIDGE-EYE) CHAMPAGNE is pronounced by all who have tasted it this season, to be in every way equal to the first-class French Champagne: it is made from a very superior grape, cultivated at Mayence, on the Rhine, and is warranted always to keep in good condition. May be procured at all respectable British Wine Merchants in town, at 27s. per dozen; and in the country, at 30s. per dozen. Manufactory, 69, 70, and 70½, Strand, London.



HOBY'S IMPERIAL BLACKING has no unpleasant smell; its lasting polish equals patent leather; it softens the upper leather, prevents it breaking, and alleviates the pain of corns and tender feet.—Bottles, 1s 6d. and 1s. Paste, 6d. —London: 48, St. James's-street; Benefunk and Jones, 81, Cheapside; Dietrichsen and Co., 63, Oxford-street. Edinburgh: Duncan, 59, Princes-street. Dublin: Hodges and Son, 16, Westmoreland-street.—N.B. Especially recommended for Cleaning and Preserving Harness.

THE PIQUA PLANT, SOLD IN QUARTER POUND PACKAGES, at 3s. 6d. per lb., at the Depot, 115, Blackfriars-road.—Caution: Beware of imitations of the most deleterious character, a spurious compound endangering the health. It is therefore highly necessary to see that each package bears the words of "Evans's Piqua Plant." All others are fraudulent imitations, as Wm. Evans, Proprietor, and Elizth. Theobalds, Manager, are the only persons in possession of the original of the Piqua.—Agents are wanted in every town in England.

AN EXTRAORDINARY CURE of a DISORDERED LIVER and STOMACH by HOLLOWAY'S PILLS!—To Professor Holloway.—Sir,—Seeing that the Earl of Aldborough was cured of a Liver and Stomach Complaint by means of your Pills, I was induced to try them, and I have the satisfaction to inform you that your Pills have certainly, in a very short time, done wonders for me in a similar complaint, when calomel and other medicine at last failed to give me any relief. I send you my name and address, but would rather that you did not make them public.—N. B. This communication is from a counsellor or barrister of great eminence of the Inner Temple, whose letter would be shown to any respectable person. Sold (also Holloway's Ointment) at Professor Holloway's Establishment, 244, Strand, and by all Vendors of Medicine.

HAY-MAKING SEASON.—Mrs. MARY WEDLAKE, widow of the late THOMAS WEDLAKE, of the Fairkytes Original Iron Works, Hornchurch, Essex, and 118, Fenchurch-street, opposite Mark-lane, London, begs to remind Agriculturists, she continues making that most useful Implement, for which her late husband obtained a Patent, and received a Silver Medal at the Derby Show, the DOUBLE-ACTION HAY-MAKER, so much admired; also, the HORSE HAY-RAKE. They may be inspected daily at the City Repository for Agricultural and Colonial Implements, 118, Fenchurch-street, opposite Mark lane, London. N.B. To prevent disappointment at this season, an early application for these Implements is solicited.

COGAN and GILLO'S NOVARGENT or SILVER SOLUTION, re-silvers worn out Plated Articles, by instantly depositing a Coating of Pure Silver on the surface. It has been highly approved by Dr. Ryan, Professor of Chemistry to the Royal Polytechnic Institution. Sold wholesale by BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon-st., London; and JOSEPH RODGERS and SONS, 6, Norfolk-st., Sheffield; and to be had in bottles, with full directions, at 1s., or four in one 3s. each, of all the principal Chemists, Silversmiths, and Furnishing Ironmongers.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.—The Genuine are all signed on the wrapper, by the inventors,

ECONOMICAL LUXURIES for WARM or WET WEATHER.—The attention of those who feel the inconvenience and inconsistency of wearing the same clothing in the Hottest, as in the Coldest weather, is invited to BERDOE'S LIGHT SUMMER WATERPROOF FROCKS, OVER COATS, &c., to wear either with, or in lieu of, another coat, for which they will prove most agreeable substitutes. These well known and gentlemanly garments are made in the best manner—equally free from vulgarity and singularity; are guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and no untried novelty, having been in extensive use among the respectable classes more than six years. A Large Stock of First-rate Garments, in Llama Cloths and other new and greatly admired materials (manufactured expressly for W. B.) kept to select from, of which an inspection is confidently invited.—Made only by W. BERDOE, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill, (North side).

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED, without Springs, Clasps, or Wires; Loose Teeth Fastened; and Filling Decayed Teeth with Mineral Marmoratum.—Mons. LE DRAY and SON, SURGEON DENTISTS, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street, continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated Mineral Marmoratum, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the Toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary They also Fasten Loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of calomel, or diseases of the gums. Incorrodible Artificial or Natural Teeth, of surpassing beauty, to match in colour and shape those left in the mouth, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following charges.—A single tooth, 10s.; a set, £5 5s. Arranged on the most approved principles, and restoring perfect articulation and mastication. At home from Ten till Six.—Mons. Le Dray's "Treatise on the Diseases of the Gums and Teeth" may be had free, on application at their residence, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

GREAT SAVING IN SOAP AND LABOUR.
Royal Letters Patent, granted March 4, 1844

WARD'S PATENT WASHING and CLEANSING POWDER, manufactured at the Oldbury Alkali Works, near Birmingham. One great advantage which this powder possesses over others consists in its not injuring the hands of the persons using it. Other Washing Powders contain carbonate of soda in its free state, which, by acting upon the skin, inflames the hands and renders them sore and wrinkled. Other advantages peculiar to this powder may be stated as follows, viz:—A saving of at least one-half of the soap which is necessary when soda is used. A great saving in the labour of washing The colour of linen and other fabrics turns out far superior in whiteness to that which is given by any other means. From the wear and tear caused by the rubbing and maiding being diminished, the durability of the clothes is increased.

This Powder will be found very valuable in Scouring Greasy Floors and Tables, in Cleansing Brass, Tin, and other utensils of domestic use, and also Publicans' Pewter Pots.

 Warranted not to injure articles, though made of the finest materials.

Sold in packets, at 1d., 2d., 3d., and 6d. each, with directions for using. Be particular in asking for WARD'S WASHING POWDER, as no other possesses the same qualities.—To be had of all Druggists, Grocers, Oilmen, &c., or wholesale from the Manufacturers, by application to Mr. P. WARD, at the Works as above, or in London, to Mr. JOHN MACARTNEY, 2, Coleman-street Buildings.

ROYAL FARMERS' and GENERAL FIRE, LIFE, and HAIL INSURANCE INSTITUTION.
Empowered by Special Act of Parliament. Capital, £500,000.
OFFICES, STRAND, LONDON.

DIRECTORS.

CHAIRMAN—Joseph Rogerson, Esq.
MANAGING DIRECTOR—W. Shaw Esq

J. Blackstone, Esq. | J. R. Cooper, Esq. | Wm. Smeddle Esq.
S. Boydell, Esq. | John Hudson, Esq. | G. P. Tuxford, Esq.
Wm. Clutton, Esq. | R. M. Jaques, Esq. | J. Workman, Esq.
W. Youatt, Esq.

MEDICAL OFFICERS—J. Blackstone, Esq.; and G. W. Blanch, Esq.
STANDING COUNSEL—C. W Johnston, Esq.; W. Shaw, Esq.
JOINT SOLICITORS—John Rogerson, Esq.; C. Boydell, Esq.
ASSISTANT MANAGER—W. Jenkinson, Esq.
SECRETARY—J. Hanson, Esq.
BANKERS—The London and Westminster Bank.

The Proprietary of this Company exceeds 1,960 in number, of whom 195 are County Directors The share of public favour this Institution has obtained, proves the appreciation of its system by a numerous body of insurers.

Every kind of Life Insurance, of Deferred and Immediate Annuities, and of Endowments or Children, may be accomplished on terms as low as is consistent with security.

A dividend of Four per Cent. is now in course of payment to the Shareholders in this office

In the Fire Department, Insurances effected at the lowest rates.

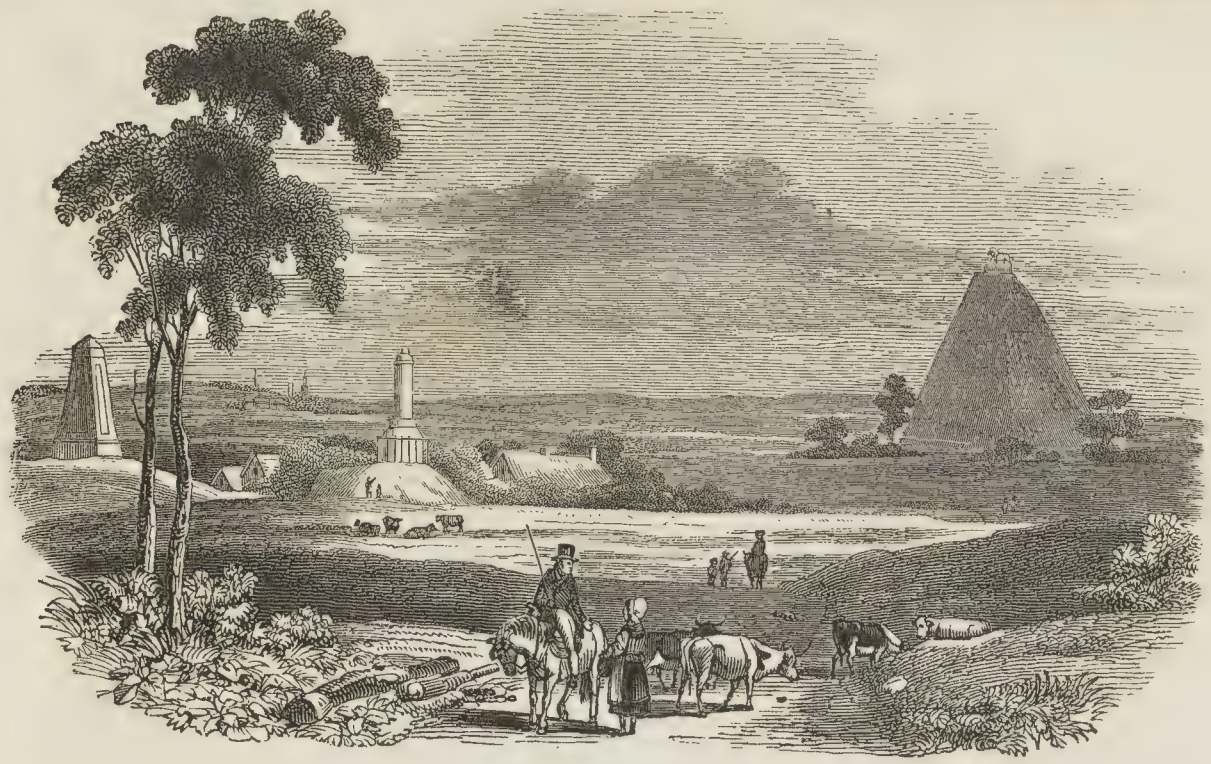
HAIL INSURANCE.—Premium Sixpence per acre for Wheat, Barley, Turnips, and Peas; Fourpence per acre for Oats, Beans, and Potatoes. Glass in hothouses, greenhouses, or private houses, 20s. per Cent.

Prospectuses may be obtained at the office, or will be forwarded, post free, upon application

The usual commission to Solicitors.

Agents are appointed in the Principal Towns in the Kingdom.

W SHAW, Managing Director.



SELF MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION. The following Directions will ensure an exact Fit, and will be found a most convenient accommodation. The measure may be taken with a piece of tape, and reduced into inches, stating the height of person, and if any peculiarity in figure; also whether taken over a Coat.

COATS, VESTS, &c.	Inches
From Neck seam, not Including Collar, to Hip Buttons
From Hip Buttons to Bottom of Skirt
From centre of Back to Elbow joint
Continued to length of Sleeve at Wrist
Size round top of Arm
Size round Chest under the Coat
Size round Waist under the Coat

TROUSERS.	Inches
From top of Trousers to bottom
From under the Legs to bottom of Trousers
Size round top of Thigh (tight)
Size round Calf
Ditto Waist
Ditto Hips

HAT.
Measure size round the Head

READY MADE.	£ s d
Tweed Taglionis, from	0 7 6
Ditto, superior quality, with silk collar, cuffs, and facings	0 13 6
Codringtons and Chesterfields, in light and gentlemanly materials	0 18 6
Cachmerette Coats, in every style and make, including the registered veltoe	1 2 0
Holland Jean Grand Drill and Diagonal Blouses	0 3 6
Splendid Summer Vests, from	0 2 6
Cachmere and Persian ditto, in endless variety	0 4

THE FIELD OF WATERLOO.

THE DAY OF WATERLOO.

"THE FIGHT AND THE FEAST OF VICTORY."

JUNE 18.

Waterloo is a substantial and considerable village of clean, good, and respectable houses. St. Jean is two miles beyond, and close to the celebrated field. It is fanciful to say that the Field of Waterloo seems marked out as the scene of a great action. It is very far from a strong position, though no doubt the best the country afforded. A gently rising ground, not steep enough in any part to prevent a rush of infantry at double quick time, except in the dell on the left of the road, near La Haie Sainte; and along the crest of the hill a scrubby hedge and low bank, fencing a narrow country road. This was all! excepting La Haie Sainte and immortal Hougoumont! That a general should have calmly and confidently waited on such a spot to receive the attack of a superior army, commanded by the conqueror of Europe, the great master and regenerator of modern warfare, amazingly out-numbering him in cavalry—for which arm the ground was most favourable—and with 90 guns more than his own! That he should have done this, is, perhaps, the greatest compliment that has ever yet been paid to any army."—Recent Tourist (Hot Water Cure).

Another Banquet! Thirty years of Peace
Have shed their halo round our feasts of War;
We quaff unto the Sickle, not the Sword—
And Wine is poured for Blood! The heart is drunk
No more with Victory—and the better light
Of Brotherhood is sheening all the fields
Where Glory drove her car

Even on this day
There's not a corn-ear yellowing in the Sun
—That spreads its summer lustre on the plains
Where Death once gleaned his harvest,—that shall start
To the old battle's echo!

Not a voice
From the far vineyards and tree-bosom'd farms,
That cleaves unto its Past of blood and fire!

Not in the sweet dreams of the Maiden's love,
Or still contentment of the Peasant's thought,
Stirs the fear-presence of the perish'd War!

With them,—and by the soil on which it grew—
The Earth that 'neath its desolation groaned—
The Sky that saw its crimson tinge the cloud—
The storm that swept that mighty Park of Battle,
And winged its triumph-thunders round the world
Is as a vanished terror—smoothed away
With its dark tracery, from the human heart,
By thirty smiling years of peaceful love!

So Waterloo is silent in the sun
Its fields have scarce a memory! but there be
Some deep-stirred haunts of Earth—some well-marked spots,
Into whose heart the very word is graved
With axe of diamond and with sword of fire!

Europe hath murmured blessings to that name
Which Peace hath sanctified; and as each year
Brings round the day which saw its glory dawn,
May murmur blessings still; nay, all the world
May see it flash across its memory,
One of the meteor-marvels of its life!

But for the earth-spots which its spirit haunts,
—Steeped in its gloom or starr'd with its renown
This day hath pageantry of double guise,
And wakes a grave or crowns a festival!
In France—deep shrined within its Gallic heart—
Under a splendid Hospital of War,
Temple of warriors' tombs!—swathed in the pomp
And gorgeousness of a proud land's last hommage!
Within a palace vault!—in mouldering state—
Lie the bleached bones of her dead Emperor!
The June sun of to-day has darted light
Electric through the regions of the dead;
And all Napoleon's earth-quaked spirit there
Is gazing on flame lettered Waterloo!

There is a roaring tempest in that tomb!
The blood is as a river on its floor!
Its marble heart is filled with flame and rage—
Hoarse thunder booms—and clashed swords blend with shrieks—
And as the vision swells its terrible strife,
The grave seems shattered by that burst of "Charge!"
Till there,—amid the ruins of his war,—
The madden'd Conqueror—conquered—shouts to die!
'Tis vain! the thought escaped his soul on earth,
And now it finds its palsy in the tomb!

His spirit may not die, but it lives back
Into its own survivance—to the time
When the chain'd Exile wore away a life
In sad inglorious fretfulness of heart,
Weaving a crust of canker for his soul,
Until the lonely Island where he stood
Felt the calm death-wind winging to her shores,
And, in her pity, grew the willow-mourner
That wept so long above Napoleon's clay!

So in that Isle, which was the grave of Glory,
And in that pomp-emblazoned vault of France,
Are two dark grieving places of the Earth,
That cannot bear the light of "Waterloo!"

The third mark'd spot is our immortal England,
Whose heart,—thrill'd wildly with a nation's joy—
Leaps to the proud memorials of her fame,
And in the lap of Peace enshrines the war
That gave it wings and welcome!

Well, she warms
Her lusty spirit in this Sun of June,
That in the dazzle of its glory bathes
The names of Wellington and Waterloo!

Now to her People and her Palaces
Loud she proclaims the cry of Festival!

Lo! where the first most honor'd feast is spread—
The Feast of Warriors!

In their Chieftain's home
The Heroes of his battle pledge the cup
That sparkles in the blaze of Victory!—
Here the brave living drink the "honoured dead,"
In the deep fervour of their memory-love!
Or rising all, stirred with the soldier's glow,
Enthusiastic still—as when they heard,
"Up guards and at 'em," echoeing thro' the ranks
The kindling thunder of their leader's voice—
Shout to that leader's "Health," and make the hall
Quake its vast frame of rich magnificence,
As tho' the thrill of all those human hearts
Had moved it with its electricity!

It is a banquet-gathering we would have
All England witness!—

Not a palace now
Of any Capital of all the world
Could match that festal hall—in which are shrined
Memorials of the world's great Victories!

Not Old Alhambra with its burning pomp!
The Sultan's Pride upon the Bosphorus!
The gorgeous home of the Imperial Czar!
The Vatican with its rich Roman splendor!
Fair Tuileries—or luxury-charm'd Versailles!
Nor the proud Castle crowning Windsor steep!
—From all the shrines of all their Royalty—
Could choose forth such a chamber—so inlaid
With the true burning glory of high deeds!
Trophied with gifts to virtue! and set round
Thick with the gems of immortality!

That shield! a silver sculpture for the world!—
That picture! part of the world's future life,
Evoked from its past history!—all that wealth
Which typifies the gratitude of kings,
And speaks of nations rescued!—all those cups,
Reflecting triumphs from their outward forms,
And then embalming them within their wine!—
The very plates from which those warriors make
The generous meal—are each a celebration;
Are each one painted with a victory!

Yes, in that hall of trophy England's eye
May well dilate with a majestic pride!
And wish a long life for her Wellington,
And bless the FIGHT AND FEAST OF WATERLOO!

SKETCH FROM THE GRAND POLISH BALL, AT WILLIS'S ROOMS.

GRAND POLISH BALL.

On Friday evening last, the grand Polish Fancy or Full Dress Ball in aid of the funds of the Literary Association of the friends of Poland, was held at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's. The whole suite of the spacious and elegant rooms, both on the ground and upper floors, was thrown open, and every accommodation given to the company that the extensive and well-arranged premises could afford; nevertheless, so numerous was the assemblage, that many had to content themselves with waiting an hour or two on the staircase, or in the avenues to the rooms, and getting an entry into them after much exertion of patience. The ball was one of the most brilliant that we ever remember to have seen on these occasions; the costumes were many of them the same in which ladies and their gallants figured a few nights previously at Buckingham Palace, on occasion of the Royal "bal costumé." There were the courtiers and colonels of the time of George II., the powdered and starched dames and maidens of a hundred years ago; and, in addition to these, there were Spanish costumes, the dresses of China and the Indies, a number of Highlanders with tartans of various clans, a multitude of military uniforms of various continental nations, and an equal number of English ones.

The whole scene was full of gaiety, and when room could be cleared for the dancers the various groups exhibited a general scene of strange yet very pleasing contrasts. Still, the great admixture of gentlemen in plain black coats of modern fashion, in a great degree deteriorated from the general effect, and the picturesqueness and poetry of the scene. The whole of the musical arrangements were intrusted to M. Jullien, who kept up the harmony, not only of the musical rank and file over whom he presided, but throughout the whole body of employés and visitors. The Polonaise was danced by the Ladies Patronesses present, room having been made for it with great difficulty; then followed the Duchess of Bedford's arrival, the Marchioness of Breadalbane's Strathspey, &c.; Lord James Stuart's Powder quadrille, Lady Caroline Lascelles' Polish quadrille, Lady Palmerston's quadrille, the Hon. Mrs. Dawson Damer's Mazurka, &c. In the lower room refreshments were served.

It was computed that at least 1300 persons were at the ball, but the probability is there were a greater number, for it is stated on authority that above 1400 vouchers had been issued by the Ladies Patronesses, all of which had been exchanged and paid for, and many of those were charged the double price. The Association, therefore, may be congratulated on the handsome addition thus obtained to their funds.

At one o'clock the ball may be said to have been at its height, though it was not until very long after that time that any visible abatement of the joyous scene could be observed. There were a number of foreigners present, and many of them of rank. We were able to recognise amongst the number of Ladies Patronesses present the Duchess of Hamilton, the Countess of Chesterfield, the Countess of Clarendon, the Countess of Shelborne, Lady M. Alfred, Lady Francis Egerton, Lady Ponsonby, Lady Ashley, Lady Norreys, Lady Dalmeney, Lady C. Townley, Lady Wilbraham, Lady Robert Grosvenor, Lady Dufferin, the Hon. Mrs. Wyndham. the Hon. Mrs. Dawson Damer, the Hon. Mrs. Abbott, Baroness de Rothschild, Lady Shelley, Lady Molesworth, Lady Parker, Lady Barron, Lady Webster, Mrs. Townshend, Mrs. J. Smith, Mrs. Beaumont, Mrs. M. Gibson, Mrs. Abdy, Mrs. Maberley, and several others. The whole ball was admirably arranged and conducted.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1845.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 165.—Vol. VI. FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JUNE 28, 1845. [Sixpence.

THE SLAVE TRADE.

IF WE judge ourselves by the efforts we make to assert principles by which we gain nothing, and enforce systems by which we lose a great deal, England is certainly the most chivalrous nation of the world. It is a peculiarity not to be expected from a people so imbued with the practical and gain-loving spirit of commerce, as to be called by its rivals a nation of shopkeepers; we have no objection to the title, for we are daily endeavouring to become more and more the workshop of the universe. But we are not wholly occupied by weaving and spinning, nor has all our energy been absorbed even by railways; we have something to spare for humanity and justice; we do much more for both than those who are not so busy, and would consider it a slight if they were denied the name of philanthropists and civilisers par excellence. As long as peace continues between the great European Powers, the greatest evil by which the human race is afflicted is the Slave Trade. It is not a natural evil, like plague or pestilence, to which mankind, though they suffer, must in silence submit; it is inflicted by man upon his fellow, with more waste of human life, a greater amount of human suffering, than follow even war, pestilence, or famine; while it is still more afflicting in this, that while war may end, pestilence be stayed, and famine relieved by abundance, the Slave Trade proceeds continually; the dark flood of horrors knows no retiring ebb, but flows right on, swallowing up very year more than the population of many states. It is, in fact, a perpetual warfare carried on by the strong against the weak, by the civilised man against the savage; and, worse than this, by the Christian, who is taught mercy and justice, against the Pagan, who ought to be made better by the Christian's faith; it is indeed, the war of blood and race on a large scale, and in its most fatal form, for the weakest side has not even a chance of resistance.

In this criminal traffic England for a long period openly engaged; she discontinued it earlier than other nations in obedience to the sooner awakened voice of public opinion; but it was long before she abolished the system of slavery, which was, and is, at the root of the evil. At last she abolished that also, by buying up the right of the slave-owner with an enormous sum, which, burdened as the people are, they never grudged. Then, with clean hands, she went forth as the Champion of Freedom among all other nations, exhorting them to cast it out from among them also; and being strong upon the ocean, she refused to allow its free bosom to be made the path of the slave merchant, and engaged with extraordinary vigour in the attempt to suppress the traffic altogether.

It was a generous and noble policy, and deserved to succeed; but the difficulties were immense, and, after the lapse of many years do not seem to decrease; it has now become a question whether our policy of suppression is possible; many who have examined the subject declare it very doubtful; and that it has caused a fearful increase in the amount of suffering endured by the kidnapped Africans, is, unhappily, but too certain.

We should not be carried away by our zeal so entirely, as not sometimes to pause, and scan calmly, the results of what we are doing. Two things are alleged against our policy; first, that it is utterly useless, as any increase in our rigour as Chief of the Police of the Ocean, only leads to more ingenious ways of evading it; and secondly, that the objects whom our exertions are intended to benefit, are only the worse for our interference. The subject has frequently been placed in this light before the House of Commons, but never more strongly and unequivocally than by Mr. Hutt on Tuesday evening. He deplores, as every one must, the existence of this horrid traffic, but denies that England alone is bound to undertake to crush it. He says:—

> I am no apologist for the slave trade; I regard it as an appalling crime; and I feel as much satisfaction as any man can do in contemplating our exertions against it, so long as they have been confined to our legitimate sphere of action. But I contend that we cannot, without culpable neglect of nearer and higher duties, assume the task of extirpating the crime from among all other people, or patrolling the world to put it down. I deny entirely that we are under any kind of moral obligation to attempt it. But giving that question up—suppose that it is the paramount duty of this country to put down, at any cost, at any risk of the consequence to ourselves, the frightful crimes which other nations are habitually perpetrating against the people of Africa; admit that instead of occupying ourselves with the welfare of our own suffering and neglected countrymen, we are right in expending our means and our exertions in warding off evil from the tribes of Africa—in extinguishing, in fact, the slave trade; are we extinguishing it? Here is the pith of the case. We have gone on for thirty years, not only assuming that a distant and barbarous people had more claims on our conscience than our own countrymen, but blindly and indolently assuming, also, that treaties, and commission-courts, and preventive squadrons, meant suppression of the slave trade. I think it is time to inquire whether our assumption be correct.

The result of the inquiry so made appears to be that the number of slaves annually deported from Africa is now above 200,000, or double what it was before we undertook to put the slave-trade down. This is disheartening enough, but it is not all; the greater number are carried in a mode that increases their sufferings to a frightful extent; the trader having a double object, one to preserve his cargo, the other to escape capture himself. In an emergency of course the cargo is sacrificed, and, at all times, it is packed into as small a space as possible. Such are the physical and numerical results of our suppressive policy. Under these circumstances the necessity of doing something has led us to do more in the same way, instead of trying something different. To obtain complete success in our present course, a perfect blockade of the greater portion of the west coast of Africa would be necessary, and this would be impossible. Lord John Russell long since acknowledged that the whole British navy employed at once would be insufficient for the purpose; and even now Sir Robert Peel admits that our efforts have not been successful; all he can do is to express a hope that recent measures may be more effective.

HER MAJESTY GOING ON BOARD THE "ALBION," AT SPITHEAD.—(SEE PAGE 408.)

The truth is, we are badly seconded in our endeavour, and have to contend with a gigantic evil almost single-handed. We have treaties with almost every nation of Europe, by which they have bound themselves to use every means to suppress the traffic in slaves; but these engagements are only observed by those Powers that have no opportunity of breaking them. Spain and Portugal are notoriously slave traders; France has so few colonies that she has no direct interest in the continuance of the traffic; but national jealousy leads her to thwart as much as possible our attempts to destroy it; her flag is often used to cover the trade, and from this has sprung the right of search question, with all its difficulties, exposing us to a perpetual risk of war, fortunately lessened by the recent convention. America, with slavery as part of her social system, cannot be very zealous in putting down a trade so nearly allied to it. Indeed, even among ourselves, it is to be feared, it meets with too much support. Large returns, it is said, tempt English capital into it. Against all this the English Government stands up almost alone; at an enormous expence of money and waste of life among our marine, it "patrols the sea," and by action preaches superior morality to other nations—but in vain. Nay, by so doing, we excite public opinion in other countries against us. From the immense preponderance of the black population of Cuba over the whites, it is said that the latter are not without apprehensions of danger; if so, they must regard the increase of the Slave Trade with dread; but they not the less dislike to see their vessels seized and condemned by us for engaging in it; they have agreed by treaty to consider such captures legal and warranted, yet there can be little doubt that angry feelings are produced by the process.

The Slave Trade will never be destroyed by force; but is the world, therefore, always to be cursed by such an evil? It is to be hoped not. The system that degenerated, by avarice and cruelty, into the Slave Trade, was originated by a man of piety and benevolence, who little dreamed of what consequences would result from it. We do not see that the transfer of men and labour from one region of the earth to the other must necessarily be attended with all these horrors and abuses. The fertile regions of the Tropics cannot be cultivated by Europeans; the mere attempt is death; nature has not adapted their constitutions to toil in such regions. The negro race can undertake it without injury; the emancipated negroes of our West India colonies can now earn high wages, and live in ease and comfort, compared to thousands of labourers in our own country. Indeed they can live well on so little that they care not to do more than is necessary to earn it, and hence the complaints from the planters of the scarcity of labour. The same demand exists in Brazil, and those places to which slaves are imported. But they are not yet ripe for an experiment that might be tried in our colonies with safety. Securing to the native African a safe transit, the rights of a freeman on his arrival, and the fruits of his labour to himself, an immigration of black labour might be attempted with a good prospect of success. If it did succeed, a heavy blow would be given to Slavery and the Slave Trade, by showing that both are really unnecessary—that they are caused, like many other evils with which the world has ceased to be afflicted, only by ignorance. The plan is by no means a new one, nor is it as visionary as it may at first appear. Time will effect the change, and till then the Slave Trade will flourish. It is commendable in us to check it, though to destroy it is impossible. But it is also necessary to remember that other means, which have not yet been tried, might also be resorted to.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

All the salons in Paris have been excited to an unusual degree during the past week; indeed, the circumstance which has ruffled the present stagnant state of society, may be looked upon as a stroke of good luck to the plaineurs, though disastrous to the principal actors. A young man (I believe he has not reached his 23rd year) of a distinguished family, notorious for their opulence, has been arrested for a singular act of forgery and fraud. You are aware, I believe, that the Jockey Club had created for the interior of the circle, a species of money consisting of ivory jetons, bearing the signature of the cashier. Each jeton bore the value of a hundred francs, and an issue had been made to the amount of 25,000 francs. A few days since, the cashier, to whom 25 jetons (2500 francs) were presented, perceived at the first glance that they bore a forged signature, and he instantly made the case known to the magistracy. The young Prince de B—— was placed at the bar, where, after declaring that the jetons had been received on the race-course from an Italian with whom he had betted on the 18th of May, search was instantly made, but no such person could be found; but they discovered the maker of the jetons. The man declared that they had been ordered by a gentleman whom he had only twice seen, but that he had referred to the date of their delivery, and found that it was the 24th of May. This at once contradicted the story of the young Prince, who burst into tears and confessed. He was instantly handed over to the officers of justice, and will take his trial for forgery. He is but lately married to a young and beautiful girl of the first family. Upon searching his desk, large sums of money were found, so that no pressing necessity could have driven him to the culpable act.

The Custom-House laws and regulations to the various sea-ports are so absurd that the officers are frequently puzzled what to pass or what to detain. A late case which occurred to G. L. will put the legislative folly in a good light; the general opinion among the legalists here is that the laws of the douane will in the next session undergo a complete revision and remodelling. A stag was sent from Spain to Havre, the animal being ultimately destined for Bordeaux; the Custom House officers refused to suffer its being landed, because the game laws forbid the "circulation" of game alive or dead, by sea or by land, unless "corded, bound, or loaded." So the poor deer was obliged to be corded, bound, or loaded; but this was not so easy of accomplishment as that of the two bears which arrived a fortnight since at Paris—they submitted, wise creatures, to the formality; so the deer was sent back whence it came. The case is to be referred for decision to the Central Admiuistration; and their ultimatum will doubtless have its due weight with the concoction of the contemplated new Game Laws.

The various celebrities, poets, painters, feuilletonistes, and all the men and the women of rank, are retiring to their "Sabine fields," while the bar and the bench are on wing for Baden, Hombourg, Spa, and Vichy. M. Cunon-Gridaine is expected at the latter place, and M. Guizot has retained his apartments for the month of July. A small revolution has been consummated in the musical department of the bath. Young Musard has been dethroned, and his sceptre passed to the hands of an obscure pretender, M. Strauss, not he of Vienna, but a very clever Strauss for all that. The literary men of distinction have their Tusculums, like the great letter writers of Rome—without adverting to the three castles of M. Scribe, or of the magnificent property of M. Vanderburch,—purchased with only half the "author's rights" of a single farce, "The Gamin du Paris"—Soulié has a delicious villa at Bievre, and Jules Janin an architectural gem at Passy. I may cite many other retreats, where the imagination and the fancy may inhale, with the fresh breezes of nature and spring, poetical inspirations. Alexander Dumas is installed in the prettiest and greenest spot of the terrace of St. Germain, in a delicious cottage, formed of two pavilions, which overlook the brightest scenes: the eye wanders over the immense panorama of the woods of Vesinay and Charenton—admires the sides of Marli—and follows the "sinuous Seine," winding its slow way through "alleys green."

At the entrance of la rue de Versailles is the villa of M. Pradier, the hospitable threshold of which never artiste, however celebrated or however humble, passed without a general welcome from its kind host; the actual proprietor, M. Guillaume, keeps up the usages of the past age. The garden, peopled with statues, has all the appearance of one of the small reserved parks of Versailles. The fortunate possessor of so many beauties is no niggard of his vast means, and frequent are the fêtes given to the celebrities of the ballet, and the more substantially clothed orchestral performers of Jarry. It has all the air of a resuscitated Trianon. The young girls of the Academy here amuse themselves, and change the regulated pas of the boards for the natural houndings of pleasure on the verdant sward. The side scenes of the Academie Royale are gloomy in summer, and, to fill up the measure of misery, M. Cellarius has closed the doors of this school. This shutting-up was authorised by the approach of the dog-days—yet one farewell night was permitted to the Mazourkers and the Polkistes to form a joyous alliance, and to grasp hands, until the advent of grey-headed old Winter.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers contain news from Switzerland of some importance. It is derived from the Swiss journals.

The New Gazette of Zurich of the 20th inst., announces the escape of Dr. Steiger from the prison in which he was confined at Lucerne. He arrived in good health at half-past two o'clock in the morning of the 20th, at Kironau, and at six o'clock he reached Bonstellen. He was accompanied by three chasseurs of Lucerne, and some friends who had assisted in his escape. At three-quarters past eight o'clock Dr. Steiger made his entrance into Zurich, where he was received with universal enthusiasm.

A private letter from Zurich, dated the 20th instant, gives this account of the escape:—"Dr. Steiger has, with the connivance of three gendarmes who guarded him, made his escape from prison at Lucerne, and the whole party, accompanied by many friends, arrived here about eight o'clock this morning. It appears he was provided with a uniform of the gendarmerie, and in this costume passed in company of the others out of the town, entered a carriage in waiting, and passed the frontiers."

The discussions in the Chamber of Deputies during the week, upon the French navy, have been rather interesting. They commenced on the vote for the pay and clothing of the seamen and marines. The seamen amount to 26,000, the marines and marine artillery to the rather disproportionate number of 19,000 men. M. Lacrosse, deputy for Brest, Finisterre, complained vehemently of the state of neglect in which the navy was left, blamed the Ministry for not having paid more attention to the steam fleet, and contended that an inquiry into the state of the navy in general was necessary, and that an additional article should be attached to the vote of the supplies, to pledge the Ministry at the opening of the session of 1846 to lay before the Chamber a special and detached account of the number of vessels afloat and in dock, the state of the arsenals and dockyards, and, in fine, of every thing and matter connected with the question.

Admiral Mackau (Minister of Marine) defended his conduct in the management of the naval department. France had, he said, at this moment in the Mediterranean eight ships of the line, which she could exhibit with pride to the most fastidious foreign critic. If foreigners were consulted on the state of the French navy, they would give a very different account of it from that which he had, with much pain, just heard from an hon. deputy. On the steam question he felt himself peculiarly strong; for, the moment he entered office, he instituted inquiries by commissioners in all the harbours of France, with a view to ascertain the best and most efficacious means for constructing and equipping steam vessels, and which reports were forwarded to a central committee sitting in Paris. The results were most satisfactory.

All the navy estimates were ultimately voted.

Marshal Sebastiani has read to the Chamber of Deputies the report of the committee on the demand of a credit of 10,000,000 francs (£400,000) to carry into execution the new convention for the repression of the slave trade. The committee had given its entire approbation to the treaty, and subscribed to all the measures indispensable for the accomplishment of a "diplomatic act entitled in every respect to the assent of the Chamber."

The Committee of the Chamber of Deputies to which the Paris and Rennes Railroad Bill had been referred has met to hear the propositions of the two companies of the Versailles Railway, who have come to an understanding together to bid for the concession of the western line. They had, it appears, succeeded in conciliating the interests of the localities through which the road was not to pass, and had undertaken to execute different embranchments, with that object. The committee, after examining the offer, agreed to present the report before the close of the session, so that the bill might have time to pass this year.

It would appear from the following paragraph, which we copy from one of the Paris papers, that there is as much excitement in the Chamber of Deputies about railway proceedings, as there is in our House of Commons:

On Tuesday, before the business of the day was commenced, the Marquis de Larochejaquelin rose and complained to the President that the Salle des Pas Perdus, adjoining the hall they were then sitting in, was absolutely encumbered with persons totally disconnected with the Chamber, who assailed the deputies, as they entered, with importunities relative to the railroad bills that were, or were not to be, placed on the order of the day for discussion during the present session. They seemed to have become, all at once, a sort of chapel of ease to the Bourse. Such conduct he must designate as scandalous, and he called on the President to prevent it for the future. This incident caused some agitation, but was not followed by any result.

The discussion on the Northern Railroad Bill has commenced in the Chamber of Peers.

BELGIUM.

We learn from Brussels, that the King of the Belgians has by two Royal Ordinances, dated 19th instant, for the present filled the place of M. de Nothomb, whose resignation has been accepted, and who has been appointed a Minister of State; a title without functions, which will permit him to take his seat in the Council whenever the King may wish to consult him. The business of the department of M. de Nothomb has been divided between M. Dechamps, Minister of Public Works, and the Baron Jules d'Anethan, Minister of Justice. No person at Brussels can tell how long this provisional Cabinet is to exist. If King Leopold had not found insurmountable difficulties amongst the statesmen of moderate opinions, he would not have adopted a plan which terminates nothing.

UNITED STATES.

The steam-ship Great Western arrived at New York on the morning of the 1st June, having made the passage in 14 days and 22 hours. She had been detained for several hours, on the 26th ult., by numerous icebergs, which she encountered in lat 46 40 N., long. 47 20 W.

The New York papers contain particulars of a destructive fire in that city, by which upwards of one hundred houses were totally consumed. This fire seems to have been in a quarter where property is not so valuable as in many districts of the city, and the houses were small. It is said to have been the work of an incendiary. The greater portion of the demolished buildings are represented as tenements occupied mostly by Irish families. It is said that not fifty dollars' worth of furniture or property of any kind has been saved by any of these poor individuals, and not twenty of them all have been saved. "Nothing," writes the New York Tribune, "can be conceived so utterly sad and pitiful as the condition of these three thousand men, women, and children (for the number will reach that), thus in an instant reduced to absolute want and hunger, shelterless, and many of them unclad, and with only a blanket about their shoulders. They are sitting weeping and starving under the fences, and in the vacant lots, crowded into cow-pens and out-houses—the middle-lifed, the young, the decrepid, aged, the helpless infant—what a scene!" The same paper humanely suggests that a public meeting, for the relief of the sufferers, should be held without delay.

There is no change worth notice in commercial matters.

SUMMARY OF RAILWAY FACTS.—The Select Committee on the Richmond (Surrey) Railway Bill, have made a favourable report respecting it. They agree in the report in support of it made by the Board of Trade.——The past week added eight new schemes to the catalogue of railway projects. Amongst them are the British and Irish Union, to run from Dumfries to Stranraer and Portpatrick, a length of 74 miles; the Derbyshire, Staffordshire, and Worcestershire Junction, uniting Uttoxeter and Dudley; the Galway and Ennis Grand Junction; the West of England, from Exeter to Falmouth; the Aylesbury and Thame, to unite with the London and Birmingham; the Windsor, Ascot, and Farnborough, of 16 miles, to connect with the London and Windsor; and a line from Warrington to Stockport. ——The Windsor Junction Railway Company has been dissolved, and half the amount of the subscription has been returned to the subscribers.——The Committee on the Irish Great Western Railway, have declared the preamble of the bill proved, at the same time suggesting the insertion of clauses to secure the construction of the branch from Tullamore to Portarlington. —— The Select Committee appointed to inquire into the state and progress of the several Railway Bills now before Parliament have resolved—that, in order to prevent expense and delay in the progress through Parliament in the next session of such Railway Bills as it may be found impossible to pass into laws, from want of time for their proper investigation during the present session, it is desirable that a bill should be passed to prevent the proceedings on such bills being discontinued by a prorogation of Parliament; but that this privilege shall be extended to such bills only as shall have been reported to the House, and ordered to be engrossed.——The Norwich and Brandon Line is to be opened next month, the works at the Norwich end and the bridge at Trowse being the only uncompleted portions. A continuous communication will thus be afforded, by means of the North-Eastern and other lines, between the metropolis and the East Anglian districts.——The Committee on the London and Brighton (Wandsworth Extension) Bill decided, on Thursday, that the preamble had not been proved. A similar decision was given in regard to the Birmingham and Gloucester (Worcester Branch) Railway Bill.

A metallic wire for establishing a communication between the electric telegraph of the Rouen Railroad and the Ministry of the Interior at Paris, has been carried along the water-courses and under the Pont de la Concorde to the Minister's office.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.—In reply to a question from the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of DALHOUSIE said that in all cases of accidents on railways, the Board of Trade invariably despatched the Inspector-General to the locality, even though there might have been no injury to the passengers or carriages; and when the causes were discovered, the railway company was communicated with, in order that the requisite precautions might be adopted.—The Duke of WELLINGTON asked if any accident on the Bridgewater part of the Great Western Railway, which occurred to one of the baggage waggons of the train, had been reported to the Board of Trade?—The Earl of DALHOUSIE said no such accident had yet been reported to that board.

BANKING (SCOTLAND) BILL.—The second reading of this bill excited some discussion, but it was eventually carried, and an adjournment took place.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE COLLEGES (IRELAND) BILL.—The question having been put that the house resolve itself into Committee on the Colleges (Ireland) Bill, Sir J. GRAHAM explained the manner in which the £7000 a-year to each college is to be applied, and the amendments which he proposed to make in the bill. The President's salary is to be £700, the Vice-President's £400, the Professors between £200 and £300, the salaries of all the officers and servants, amounting to £5000, and the remaining £2000 to provide for exhibitions, libraries, astronomical instruments, &c. With respect to his amendments, he proposed that the appointment of the Presidents and Vice-Presidents should rest in the Crown absolutely, and that the Professors during the first three years should also be appointed by the Crown; but that, after the year 1848, it should be open to Parliament to regulate the mode in which the Professors should be thereafter nominated. Sir J. Graham then intimated that the Government steadfastly adhered to the principle of not administering any religious test to either the governing body or the students.—Lord MAHON moved as an amendment, "That it is the opinion of this house that in the establishment of Colleges in Ireland, provision should be made for the religious instruction of the pupils by means of lecture fees, till such time as private benefactions for that object may have taken effect."—A discussion ensued, which involved a repetition of the arguments already adduced on the principle of the bill.—Sir R. PEEL spoke, and admitted that the bill was not the most perfect that could be devised, and that it would be better if religion could be made the basis of any system of education; but the peculiar circumstances of Ireland prevented their adoption of any religious tests. At the expense of the State, ample means were to be provided for secular instruction, and they only paid a becoming tribute to the religious feeling of Ireland in leaving it to voluntary endowment to provide the means of theological education. The bill was not opposed to religion. Its object was to unite individuals of different persuasions in one scheme of liberal and generous education, and by removing religious antipathies lay the foundation of a different state of things in the future manhood of Ireland.—Mr. O'CONNELL said he did not impute improper motives to the Government in introducing this bill. He said all our actions sprung from mixed motives, but he believed the predominant feeling of the Government in bringing forward this measure was the conciliation of Ireland. But the people of Ireland were houseless and starving. Agrarian crimes were spreading—frightful murders were on the increase—and the people wanted food before education. But if the Government could not relieve the physical condition of the people let them at least make the bill acceptable. The Irish were essentially a religious people, and the Catholic prelates had proclaimed the bill as injurious to morals and faith. He was anxious that this bill should be made acceptable, and he entreated that the Government might communicate with those prelates in order to make the bill perfectly satisfactory. On a division, the numbers were:—

For the amendment of Lord Mahon	49
Against it	189
Majority	—140

Sir J. GRAHAM then, at the request of Mr. O'Connell, fixed the committee on the bill for Friday.

The house adjourned at half-past twelve.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

THE TENANTS' COMPENSATION (IRELAND) BILL.—A long discussion took place upon this bill, the second reading of which was opposed by some noble lords.—Lord STANLEY insisted upon the necessity for a measure, like the one before the house, for a country where the landlords and tenants were relatively placed towards each other, as they were in Ireland. According to the bill, the tenant was bound to give notice to his landlord of the improvement he contemplated, and if the landlord dissented, it would be for the Government officers to determine as to whether it should be effected. This latter portion of the bill was, however, entirely an open question, though he confessed he felt very strongly that it would be a great deterioration of the bill if this power were to be withdrawn.—Upon a division there appeared—

For the second reading	48
Against it	34
Majority for the second reading	—14

The house sat till midnight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

THE OXFORD AND RUGBY RAILWAY BILL.—The house was occupied for some time with this bill, the third reading of which was opposed; but on a division, it was carried by 132 to 95.

THE SLAVE TRADE.—Mr. HUTT moved the following resolution:—"That the course pursued by Great Britain since 1814, for the suppression of the slave trade, has been attended with large expenditure of the public money, and by serious loss of life to the naval forces of this country, and that it has not mitigated the horrors of the middle passage, nor diminished the extent of the traffic in slaves." The honourable gentleman contended, in accordance with the spirit of his motion, that all the exertions of this country had been productive of much greater mischiefs to the natives of Africa than they were before exposed to, and that the proper course would be to cease all further interference, and withdraw our cruisers from the coast of that quarter of the globe.—Sir G. COCKBURN thought such a course would be very unwise at the very moment when the first chance presented itself of effectually crushing this odious traffic.—Lord HOWICK urged Mr. HUTT not to press the motion to a division, although he concurred in most of his observations.—Sir R. PEEL admitted that the efforts of this country had not been, hitherto, successful in abolishing the slave trade, and that it still existed in much of its usual horrors. He had no doubt, however, that if this country were to withdraw its cruisers, and to relax its efforts, they would have a renewal of all the horrors which enabled Mr. Wilberforce to rouse the feeling of the country to the successful exertion which was made for the extinction of slavery in our colonies. He was of opinion that it would be unwise of us to withdraw from the convention just concluded with France, for watching the coast of Africa—more particularly, as, at the present time, America and Portugal were, as well as France, cordially acting with us, to attain the great object in which this country had always felt so deep an interest.—After some observations from Sir C. NAPIER, Lord PALMERSTON rose to speak: but a motion was made, that the house be counted, and there not being 40 members present, an adjournment took place at nine o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The business this evening was of a general character, but some of it was important.

UNIFORM RAILWAY GUAGE.—Mr. COBDEN moved an address to the Queen, praying her Majesty to issue a commission to inquire whether, in future private Acts for the construction of railways, provision ought to be made for securing a uniform guage, and whether it would be expedient and practicable to take measures to bring the railways already constructed, or in progress of construction in Great Britain, into uniformity of guage; and to inquire whether any other mode of obviating or mitigating the apprehended evil could be adopted, and to report the same to the house.—Sir GEORGE CLERK and Lord GRANVILLE SOMERSET consented to the motion, which was accordingly agreed to.

The Dog Stealing and the Smoke Prevention Bills passed through committee, after several divisions.

Sir H. Pottinger's Annuity Bill was read a third time and passed.

FOREIGN LOTTERIES.—On the motion of the SOLICITOR-GENERAL, leave was given to introduce a Bill to amend the Act of 7th William IV., for preventing the advertising of foreign and other illegal lotteries, and to discontinue certain actions commenced under the provisions of the said act. The bill was read a first time.

The house adjourned at twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

The house sat for some time, but the business was unimportant. The Landlords and Tenants (Ireland) Compensation Bill excited some discussion, the result of which was that a Select Committee was appointed, to whom the bill is to be referred, and the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—On the order of the day for the house taking into its consideration the report of the Committee on Printed Papers, on the subject of the case Howard v. Gossett being read, the SOLICITOR-GENERAL moved, in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee, that, in the case of Howard v. Gossett, a writ of error should be brought against the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench. The hon. and learned gentleman, in supporting this motion, went over the whole of the circumstances, from the period when the question as to the extent of the privileges of the House of Commons was raised by the case of Stockdale v. Hansard. After a long discussion, in which Sir T. Wilde delivered an able speech, and which was concluded by Sir R. Peel, the house divided; the numbers were:—

For the motion	82
Against	48
Majority	—34

The house adjourned at two o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

A long discussion took place on the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, but, ultimately, the Report on the Bill was received, and the house adjourned about seven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

A new writ was issued for the borough of Dartmouth, in the room of the late Mr. Somes.

RAILWAYS.—The Liverpool and Manchester Railway Bill, the North Union and Ribble Navigation Branch Railway Bill, the Birmingham and Gloucester Railway (Gloucester Extension, Stoke Branch, and Midland Railways Junction) Bill, the Great North of England (Clarence and Hartlepool Junction) Railway Bill, and the Richmond (Surrey) Railway Bill were read a third time and passed.

The Small Debts Bill was read a first time.

THE POST OFFICE.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE, on reading the order of the day for Committee of Supply, moved that returns No. 72 and 248, made by the General Post-Office, be referred to a select committee, with a view of inquiring into the accuracy of those returns; also into the present mode of remunerating by fees and perquisites certain officers of the General Post-office.—Some discussion took place, but the motion was rejected on a division.

Mr. WYSE moved an address to her Majesty, praying for the establishment of a Museum of National Antiquities, in conjunction with a commission for the conservation of national monuments. This motion excited some discussion, but, eventually, it was negatived without a division.

The house then went into Committee of Supply (Ordnance Estimates). Several votes were agreed to, and the house proceeded to vote money for the Commissariat and miscellaneous estimates.

The house did not adjourn till a late hour.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.—LORDS.

NEW PEER.—On Monday, the Right Hon. W. Nevill took the oaths and his seat as the Earl of Abergavenny, on the demise of his brother, the late earl.

THE SMALL DEBTS BILL.—This bill has passed through all its stages, the standing orders having been suspended.

RAILWAY BILLS.—The following bills have been read a third time and passed:—The Lynn and Ely; Midland (Syston to Peterborough); Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth; Midland (Nottingham to Lincoln); Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings (Keymer branch); Ely and Huntingdon; Great Grimsby and Sheffield; the West London Railway the Cork and Brandon Railway; the Liverpool and Bury Railway; and the Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Bill.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.—COMMONS.

RAILWAY BILLS READ A THIRD TIME.—The following railway bills have been read a third time and passed:—The Dublin and Belfast Junction; the Ulster Extension; the Manchester South Junction and Altrincham; the Manchester, Bury, and Rossendale; the Cornwall; the Chester and Birkenhead; the Great Southern and Western (Ireland); the Lynn and Dereham; the Ashton and Staleybridge and Liverpool Junction (Guidebridge and Ardwicke branches); the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton.

NEW WRIT.—A new writ has been moved for West Suffolk in the room of the late Colonel Rushbrooke.

THE LAW OF SETTLEMENT.—Sir J. Graham has stated, in answer to a question, that he shall endeavour to press through Parliament this session so much of the bill respecting the law of settlement as related to the removal of paupers, but he found so much difference of opinion prevailing respecting the proposed law of settlement itself, that he should not press it during the present session.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

MORE FRAUDULENT BILL TRANSACTIONS.—A case was commenced in the Court of QUEEN'S BENCH, on Monday, the Queen v. Gompertz and others, in the course of which more disclosures were made of the frauds practised by bill discounters. It was an indictment against Henry Gompertz, William Witham, and Robert Witham, for having conspired to defraud, under false pretences, George Pitt Rose, eldest son of Sir George H. Rose, Bart., and late a captain in the 9th Lancers, of bills or acceptances to the amount of about £17,000, for which the prosecutor was either now liable or had been sued. These transactions had taken place in consequence of Captain Rose's temporary inconvenience for the want of money, which led him imprudently into a snare by confessing his embarassment to H. Gompertz, who, under the pretext of relieving him, had, with others mentioned in the indictment, obtained acceptances to a large amount from him in favour of H. Gompertz, for which he had received only £1500, or rather £1200, as £300 was swallowed up in expenses, charges, and discount, upon this part of the transaction The indictment had originally comprised Charles Lewis; but, upon the intimation from Mr. Hobler, the attorney for the prosecution, that Lewis would serve the case as a witness, he was not proceeded against. The case lasted two days, and, in the progress of it, evidence was given of various deceptions practised under the pretence of raising money. It was proved that Gompertz had been confined in the Queen's Bench for debt. The entries in the books of that prison were these:—Henry Gompertz, a prisoner for debts amounting to £22,000, in 1839, liberated in 1840 by the Insolvent Act—again a prisoner in 1842 for £9010, liberated in 1843 by the operation of the Insolvent Act—again in 1843 a prisoner for £1700, liberated under the Insolvent Act on the 10th of February, 1845. The jury returned a verdict of "Guilty" as to Gompertz, "Not Guilty" as to W. Witham, and "Guilty" as to Robert Witham, recommending him however to mercy, on the grounds of his youth, and of the negligent conduct of his father in the business. Some discussion ensued as to the mode in which the verdict should be entered, and certain counts were selected by the counsel for the prosecution, and on them the verdict was in form returned.

THE DUKE OF BRUNSWICK AND THE "SATIRIST."—On Tuesday another indictment for libel was tried, the plaintiff being the Duke of Brunswick, against Mr. Gregory, late of the Satirist. The case was stated by Mr. Sergeant Talfourd. He described the libel as being one conceived in the deepest malignity, though couched in a variety of insinuations in notices to correspondents—fictitious ones, no doubt—in all of which some allusion was made to the Duke of Brunswick, as an alien, a sojourner here on sufferance, forced to fly from his country for his crimes—a discharged duke, a kicked out prince—daring him to attack the libellous publisher, who threatened to crush him by the power he had to disclose some foul atrocious crime which should prove destructive to him, and winding all this up by attempts to insinuate that he had been the murderer of a poor woman, Eliza Grimwood, who was killed, by having her throat cut, in the Waterloo-road, in the month of May, 1838. The learned sergeant proceeded through a series of numbers of the Satirist published from January 1, 1843, up to the 8th of May following, showing how the whole tenor of these publications on the duke tended to fix upon him some disgraceful crime, which rendered him unfit for the hand of any honourable man's daughter, or being ruined in his own rank and family, attempting to connect him with the assassination of Eliza Grimwood.—Mr. Graeffi put in the newspapers containing the libels.—Baron Audlau, the late equerry of the Duke of Brunswick, had read the passages referred to, and considered that they distinctly referred to his late Royal master.—Mr. Cockburn took some legal objections, and addressed the jury on the part of the defendant. He contended that the articles did not justly bear the construction put upon them.—The jury, after a short charge from Lord Denman, turned round in the box, and found the defendant Guilty upon all the counts in the indictment.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

EXTRAORDINARY DEATH BY SWALLOWING A FISH.—A Coroner's inquest was held last week, at the small village of Pelt, in Sussex, on view of the body of George Mann, a fisherman aged thirty eight. It appeared from the evidence of Joseph Sunmars, a fisherman of Hastings, that the deceased and himself and another fisherman, after drinking some ale, went to their boat to haul in their net, when deceased took up a small sole, which was alive, and said, "I will show you how to eat a sole." He put the fish into his mouth, but it slipped out again: he repeated the attempt, but failed: he put it again into his mouth, and said, "You little beggar, won't you go down!" The fish struggled, and got partly down his throat: deceased tried to pull it out, but failed. He opened his knife, and witness attempted to fin the fish by the tail, but could not succeed. Deceased desired witness to try some string. Witness got some, and whilst he was endeavouring to extract the fish, the deceased dropped his head, and shortly afterwards expired. A surgeon was called in, but deceased was dead before he arrived. The Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

THE ATTEMPT TO MURDER AT THE SHOOTING-GALLERY, HOLBORN.—Mr. Smith, the proprietor of the shooting-gallery in Holborn, expired a few days ago, from an abscess, caused by the wound in his back. It may be remembered he was shot last July by the Hon. Mr. Tuchet, who was tried, and acquitted on the ground of insanity.

THE LATE MURDER OF MR. DELARUE.—The Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury have been pleased to grant to Mr. William Watson, the person upon whose information Thomas Henry Hocker was apprehended for the murder of the late Mr. James Delarue, a sum of money, as prayed for in his memorial, although no reward was offered. This laudable act of their lordships will, it is to be hoped, on future occasions, operate as an inducement to persons to come forward boldly and fearlessly, and give information without waiting until a reward shall have been offered.

AWFULLY SUDDEN DEATH OF A GENTLEMAN.—On Wednesday Mr. Baker held an inquest at the Red Cow, Dalston, on the body of Mr. Joseph Gray, aged sixty-six years. It appeared by the evidence that deceased was a gentleman of property residing at Hadleigh, in Suffolk. A few days since he arrived at his brother-in law's, Mr. Tiffin, Dalston rise, to stay a short time with his sister. On Monday evening, between nine and ten o'clock, deceased and Mrs. Tiffin were returning from their walk, when deceased suddenly staggered and fell forwards; a man named Oppenheim was opportunely passing at the moment, and caught him in his arms. He was conveyed home, and Mr. Hovel, a surgeon, was sent for, but before he could arrive he had expired. Mr. Hovel attributed death from its suddenness to disease of the heart. The verdict given was in accordance with the medical testimony.

FINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF WORKS OF ART IN WESTMINSTER HALL.

This Exhibition will be opened next week. We have just received the following report of the award of premiums of £200 each:—

Subject of Cartoon.	Artist.
The Spirit of Religion ...	... J. N. Paton, jun.
The Spirit of Religion ...	... Edward Armitage.
An Allegory of Justice ...	... John Tenniel.

Judges.
Lansdowne	Richard Westmacott
Robert Peel	Richard Cook
Samuel Rogers	William Etty.

Next week, we shall illustrate this most interesting National Exhibition.

EXHIBITION OF OLD MASTERS AT THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

The Annual Exhibition of the works of old masters at the British Institution, is always one of the most interesting and best attended of the several exhibitions of the London season. Indeed, the Directors of the Institution may be said to cater with a great deal of taste for the critical appetites of their chief supporters. At the Royal Academy, you have a kind of Lord Mayor's Banquet at Guildhall—all plenty and disorder: at the British Institution a well-regulated feast, all excellence and beauty. It would be unfair, however, to expect that the produce of one year and of one country should rival the accumulative excellence of several centuries, or even the second-rate works of art, of the great masters of our own school of painting:—

A king's or poet's birth doth ask an age.

We must not expect great painters in profusion; but still we have a right to demand less glare and gewgaw in a modern exhibition, and that our so-called modern masters would work more frequently than we find them, with a view to hang in unison with the great masters of their calling.

The present exhibition contains 169 works of art, contributed by 66 noblemen, gentlemen, and ladies of rank, and one public body—the Royal Academy. The great master-piece of the exhibition is the Aldobrandini Raphael, "The Virgin and Child with St. John," a small cabinet picture, and one of the very few genuine Raphaels in this country. It is all divine earnestness and beauty, and will well repay a lengthened gaze of high and honest admiration. Lady Garvagh is the fortunate possessor of this fine picture.

The Vandykes are five in number, and of very unequal merit. Lord Alford's picture of the "Archbishop of Trieste" is fairly worth the other four. The Archbishop's head and hands are incomparably fine. This is an early picture of Vandyke's. His latter style partakes of the vicious character of his latter life. The large picture of the "Cleveland Family," in the present Exhibition, by the same master, is altogether unworthy of Vandyke's well-merited reputation. Never were people seen more stiff and formal than they are represented in this picture. They are one and all evidently sitting for their portraits. Vandyke must have blushed when he asked for the money for this large picture. But perhaps Margaret Lemon was pressing, and the King's exchequer impoverished at the time. He could do better things, and may be allowed to sleep like Homer, and have his poor performances like other people. However, it appears to us that the "Head of Vandyke" in the present Exhibition, said to be by himself, was never even touched upon by Vandyke. It is a copy, and that is all. The picture belongs to Sir Robert Peel. It is the head-sized portrait, with the hand bending gracefully down.

We can do little more than enumerate some of the better-class pictures before us. Our columns are, unfortunately, too crowded for critical detail: it will, however, be sufficient to direct attention to the "better few," and to send our readers to the Institution to see and think for themselves. The Marquis of Westminster contributes two very fine Hobbimas (the lover of art, confined to London, would do well to look attentively at these, as we are without a Hobbima in the National Gallery.) Mr. Morrison, M.P., a little Cuyp, all sunshine splendour—but true—so true—literally and poetically true. Mr. Holford, of the Regent's Park, a head, by Holbein, but query if by Holbein? The Duke of Wellington, a little Ostade, "Shuffle-Board Players," which Wilkie must have seen. Then there is an upright landscape, by Vanderneer, with wood and water—a very splendid something made out of nothing: but what cannot true genius accomplish. Swift would have written a clever book about a broomstick; and Cowper produced "The Task" from a piece of household furniture—the sofa.

The Sir Joshuas are fourteen in number, and of very various degrees of merit. Some are very fine—"Lady Gertrude Fitzpatrick," a girl of five years old, especially so; "Infancy," a portrait of Master Hare, hardly inferior; "H.R.H. the Princess Sophia, with a Dog," by some thought superior to the two we have already mentioned; a head of Commodore Keppel, in the broad manly style of his early manner—full of thought, and finely painted; Miss Nelly O'Brien, in her bonnet and muff—full of delicacy and taste. The rest are poor—the figure of "Theory," perhaps, excepted. Her posture, however, is not very lady-like.

The South Room is almost wholly occupied with the works of the late Sir Augustus Callcott. Some of his bettermost pictures are away, so that the present Exhibition hardly affords fair material for the stranger to estimate him by. Callcott has one great merit—if he fails to please, he never offends.

The admirers of Stothard will be glad to meet with a painting of "The Canterbury Pilgrimage." It is hardly equal to Schiavonetti's etching, but parts of it are very fine. The design is admirable—critics and common people alike commend it.

THE THEATRES.

The two last weeks have been unusally bad with regard to the theatres, presenting an almost unprecedented array of empty benches—at least, in comparison with what the same performances have drawn at another time. This may be easily accounted for. Summer came upon us all at once: peas and strawberries jumped into general popularity in two days: and Wenham Lake ice rose in the market. People also began to prefer being out of doors to being boxed up in a theatre; we cannot find fault with them for so doing, for we longed to do so ourselves, and thought that they could not make too much of the fine weather now it had come at last. Then the different races took the "carriage company" out of town; M. Jullien lured others to the Surrey Zoological Gardens; M. Musard was equally seductive at Vauxhall; and the twenty thousand who crammed themselves into the Chiswick Gardens on Saturday, came back too late, too tired, and too deshabellés, to patronise either opera or drama. The ladies inclined to their conservatoires, paroquets, and open drawing-room windows; the gentlemen betook themselves to their clubs, and rushed into pale ale and sherry cobblers—for sherry cobblers have passed ballot and got to the clubs.

DRURY-LANE announces the approaching close of its season on Thursday. Last Saturday there was a relache; the same on Tuesday; and also on Thursday. The bill has remained the same, or very nearly so, for some time. COVENT-GARDEN also asserts that its doors will finally close on the 15th of July. In the meantime we cordially recommend our readers, who admire a perfect "ensemble," to witness the performances of the Brussels Company. Since we last wrote, Auber's magnificent opera "La Muette de Portici" (Massaniello) has been added to the successful representations of this excellent troop, introducing a new singer, M. Albert, to our notice: and "La Part du Demon" has also been performed, which was dramatized at so many theatres here last season, as "The Little Devil," "Asmodeus," &c. &c. In the bill M. Haussens returns thanks for the kind reception his company has met with amongst us. We fear it has not been altogether a lucrative speculation; but, from the great merit of the corps, we are convinced that at another time, and under more favourable circumstances, he will have every reason to be content with a visit to London. The HAYMARKET goes on steadily and well with Jerrold's "Time Works Wonders," "The Old Soldier," and some pleasant farce; and M. Arnal has appeared at the ST. JAMES'S, with the best pieces of his repertoire, ready to carry Mr. Mitchell through to a satisfactory wind up of the season. The SURREY closed on Tuesday. The inability of the management to get together a sufficiently good operatic company, according to custom, must have injured its summer prospects; and we suspect that it feels the influence of fine weather and the counter al fresco attractions of Vauxhall and Walworth more than any other house. But now to the novelties of the week.

HER MAJESTY'S.

The curtain of this theatre rose on Tuesday night before an eager audience; Donizetti's "Roberte Devereux" was to be performed, and the merits of two débutants of European fame were to be decided upon by a convocation of dilettanti notoriously the most fastidious in Europe. It was, therefore, an anxious moment for those behind as well as before the curtain. Doubts and uncertainties as to the excellence of the new prima donna were set at rest, as if by intuition, however, as Madame Rossi-Caccia appeared. The first glance sufficed to tell that it was no ordinary aspirant for applause, who came for the first time that night before the British public. Her very costume, of scrupulous historical exactitude, betokened artistic feeling of a high order; especially as it must have been no small sacrifice of amour-propre to substitute the reddish locks of Queen Elizabeth for the prima donna's own raven hair. Hardly had Madame Rossi-Caccia began her recitative, than she confirmed this impression; she suddenly pitched upon note, in so high a key, sustained it with so much sweetness, and terminated it by a fioralura of such exceeding delicacy, that each spectator looked at his neighbour, and read there a confirmation of his own thoughts; then bursts of applause followed. The charming aria "L'amor suo mi fe beato" was then given by Rossi-Caccia with much tenderness and grace; we thought, however, we could discern, in a slight tremulousness, tones of an indication of that emotion at a first appearance which is not confined to inexperienced artists, doubtful of their reception alone, since the great Mrs. Siddons herself has declared that she never appeared on a stage for the first time in the year without a feeling of alarm that amounted to terror. Very soon, however, Madame Rossi-Caccia showed herself deservedly confident in her own powers. She displayed not only with energy, but with perfect aplomb, in her acting, whilst she surprised the audience in turn by her full and impassioned notes, and by the exquisite delicacy and softness with which she executed passages of marvellous difficulty. Madame Rossi-Caccia appears to us to possess all the materials for a queen of lyrical tragedy—dramatic power, volume of voice, perfect vocalization; but the character of Elizabeth is one that can only offer a partial view of her resources, and we should judge, by what we heard on Tuesday night, that this great cantatrice was equally fitted for parts demanding softness and tenderness of feeling.

We must no longer delay rendering our tribute to the new baritone, whose fame had already preceded him to this country with such flattering announcements. Although we fancied we could occasionally detect the lingering traces of indisposition in the higher notes of his voice, the ensemble was charming; his exquisite feeling for music, his admirable execution, must delight every true dilettante, while his grace and dignity of action, his impassioned energy, combine to produce the highest dramatic effects. In the duet with Rosetti, and in that with Rossi-Caccia, which was encored, especially, these qualities appeared in the most prominent light; but we must reserve to ourselves the right of a definite judgment on these great artists. Many circumstances may combine on the first night of the performance to produce false impressions and to render criticism doubtful and dangerous. We can only, therefore, with safety, give a record of our impressions.

As to Moriani, warmed and stimulated by the presence of two new votaries for public favour, he excelled himself; his tones came forth with even greater sweetness and fullness than usual, especially in the effective duet with the Rossi-Caccia, in the first act, which was clamorously encored, and in his own charming aria. We hardly thought, however, that his conception of Essex's character evinced his wonted dramatic excellence, or that he did justice to the proud and fiery favourite. We could not admire, either, his choice of costume, which contrasted strongly with that, peculiarly graceful and characteristic, worn by Barolhet. The part of Sara found an efficient interpreter in Mdlle. Rosetti: the music was well suited to the display of her fine high notes; but we had still occasion to lament the absence of life and energy in her acting.

The opera itself, interpreted by such artistes, and with all the prestige of novelty in the cast, universally produced, we believe, a more favourable impression than it had ever done before. It certainly possesses the stamp of the composer's genius, and not a few of his characteristic defects; and there is hardly a musical phrase from the beginning which might not be recognised, at first hearing, as emanating from his pen: many of them, also, might be traced in his other works; but the effect is, on the whole, pleasing. The plot is well worked out, and with as close an adherence to the romantic page of history, whence it is taken, as dramatic effects could permit.

This week, novelties have followed each other rapidly. Not the least attractive was the re-appearance of Taglioni, who is now bidding her adieus to the public. The Sylphide is a beautiful creature; and we hope, next week, to do her that justice which time and space will not now allow us to render.

LYCEUM.

Mr. A. Wigan is well known to the frequenters of this house as a very intelligent actor, and one who is fast rising, in his profession, to public favour; and he has adapted some French pieces very cleverly. His pleasant "Model of a Wife," and "Watch and Ward," ran many nights; and now his last piece, "Luck's All," produced on Monday, promises to do the same. The plot, which displays all the intricate ingenuity of the French school, is somewhat difficult to describe. Arthur de Sivrac (Mr. F. Vining), a young man of rank, but rather low in pocket, is compelled to part with all his servants, until he is only left with Pierre Gobemouche (Mr. Keeley), an utterly ignorant bumpkin. Pierre, however, by a most fortunate train of coincidences, contrives to set everything to rights for his master, and realise all his most sanguine expectations, without ever for one instant comprehending what he is doing, or how the events are brought about. Keeley's performance was most perfect, and kept the house in roars of laughter from beginning to end. His intense stupidity, and awe-struck wonder as everything comes right under his unconscious influence, were excellently portrayed; indeed, it is some time since we have seen him in a part in which he has appeared so completely at home. All the other characters were well played; and some spirited dialogue put into their mouths caused the piece to go off capitally. The divertissement by the clever children has proved a hit. It was gratifying, after the theatrical depression to which we have alluded, to find the house on Tuesday evening, when we were present, crowded in every part, and all the private boxes occupied.

ADELPHI.

The celebrated "Peg Woffington" made her first appearance on the London boards at Covent Garden on the 6th of November, 1740, in the "Recruiting Officer," in which she played Sylvia, being at that time twenty-two years old. She directly established herself as a favourite; and, a week afterwards, performed Sir Harry Wildair with such ease, elegance, and propriety of deportment, that she became quite the rage. She was, perhaps, the most beautiful woman that ever appeared on the stage; she had ever a train of admirers, and she possessed wit and vivacity, but never permitted her love of pleasure to occasion the least defect in her duty to the public as a performer; and she was famous for playing any part, however humble, that best suited the interest of her manager, although in possession of the first line of characters. Courted and caressed by all ranks and degrees, she always remained the same gay, affable, obliging, good-tempered "Woffington" to every one around her. She was often on the stage when she ought to have been in bed from real illness; and she never refused playing for the lowest performer in the theatre, acting in twenty-four benefits out of twenty-six for her brother and sister artists.

To Miss Woolgar has been entrusted the somewhat arduous task of personating this remarkable woman, in a pleasant two-act comedy, produced here on Monday evening, called "Peg Woffington; or, The State Secret," from the pen of Mr. Bourcicault.

We presume the plot to be entirely one of fiction, no memoirs of the time hinting at the anecdote upon which it is founded, which is this:—Peg Woffington is sent to Paris for the purpose of exerting her fascination over the Prime Minister, the Marquis de Mousseux (Mr. Selby), and persuading him to sign a treaty of commerce with England. She has three lovers—the Dutch Plenipotentiary at the English Court, Baron Stuph (Mr. Paul Bedford); the ballet-master at Drury-lane Theatre, Jacob Merestick (Mr. Wright); and a young man of fashion, who has nearly ruined himself for her, George Tarleton (Mr. Hudson). The Dutchman has a mission, also, to Paris, to prevent the Minister from signing the treaty, and is persuading Peg to elope there with him, when Tarleton finds out the plot, and carries the actress off, in the carriage of the Plenipotentiary, to Paris, followed by the others. So ends the first act. In the second, we find all the characters in the French capital; and Tarleton, jealous of Peg's assignations with the Minister—who is, also, desperately in love with her—and, not knowing the cause, is distracted. Peg's influence, however, gets the treaty signed, and gives all the praise of the act to George Tarleton, who thus rises high in favour with the English Ministry.

The piece was excellently played throughout: and we can give the highest praise to Miss Woolgar, for the care and intelligence with which she interpreted the character. We do not know what other actress on the stage could so well have realised the intentions of the author. Wright and Paul Bedford were also capital in their respective parts, and contributed greatly to the success of the piece, which was decided. It is constructed with much ingenuity, the situations following one another with rapidity; and the dialogue, always pleasant, rising occasionally to good point and repartee. The mise en scene is, also, of the same praiseworthy character which we have had so frequently occasion to notice in the productions of this house. The popularity which the piece is likely to attain, may cause some of our friends to refer to the theatrical annals of the time for a more intimate acquaintance with the heroine; they will find a number of interesting and curious anecdotes respecting her.

SADLER'S WELLS.

Sir E. L. Bulwer's "Richelieu" has been produced here, with the same care and intelligence apparent in all the details, which characterise the plays brought forward under this meritorious management. With the aid of very excellent acting, attention to costume, and some clever scenery by Mr. Finlay, it promises to prove a most satisfactory production.

Brilliant as has been each Extra Night at her Majesty's Theatre, next Thursday will surpass them all. First, we shall have Grisi, Mario, Fornasari, and Lablache in "I Puritani." Rossi-Caccia, Rosetti, Moriani, and Broilhet in "Roberto Devereux." Lucile Grahn, Cerito, and Carlotta Grisi in various Entertainments, and, to crown all, La Taglioni herself in "La Sylphide." Of course the little Viennese will contribute their quota to the evening's amusements.

MR. HENRY BETTY.—This gentleman has been making a very successful tour in the country. He was last at Shrewsbury, where he played Othello very effectively, and met with deserved support.

The strike of the journeymen carpenters of Paris excites great interest in that capital. It appears that the building operations are nearly all suspended, and that thousands of masons and other workmen are likely to be thrown out of employment by the refusal of the carpenters to go on with their work.

We learn from Avignon that Madame Lartet, the æronaut, nearly lost her life in her last ascent. The balloon, after having gone up majestically, suddenly fell into the Rhone, near St. Benezet. But for a young man who jumped into the river, dressed as he was, and lent assistance, Madame Lartet would have lost her life. She was eventually brought safe to land.

Letters from Constantinople of the 4th inst. announce, that the old Emir Bechir had been banished to the interior of Asia Minor, in consequence of the discovery of a treasonable correspondence carried on between him and the Syrian malcontents.

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE.

We resume our illustration of this very interesting Meeting, with a series of Engravings, by Mr. Landells, who visited Cambridge for the express purpose of sketching its more attractive scenes.

In our Journal of last week, we glanced at the proceedings of Thursday. At the Evening Meeting, at the Senate-House, the Dean of Ely having taken the chair, stated that this meeting of the Association had a distinctive character from all preceding, by its connexion with the Magnetic Conference, which would include scientific men from all parts of Europe, who had resolved to meet on this occasion, and compare and co-ordinate their observations on magnetic and meteorological phenomena. He named several of the eminent men who had come to take a part in the conference, and alluded feelingly to the absence of Gauss, the great patriarch of magnetic science; and concluded by observing that the duties of his office were now fulfilled, and he had only to resign the chair into the hands of his successor, Sir John Herschel. (Applause.) Sir John Herschel was his contemporary in the University, a claim to friendship inferior to none of those which were without the relations of kindred or domestic life: it was one of the foundations of the most lasting and sincere friendship. With Sir John Herschel it had been his fate to contend within the walls of that very building, and he did assure the Association that he felt as much pride in being second to him as he should have felt, under other circumstances, in having secured the victory. (Loud Applause.) It was in connexion with him and other distinguished contemporaries that he first formed his own scientific tastes, and had been induced to devote himself to the studies which constituted his life. It was owing to the example of Sir John Herschel, in connexion with that other distinguished member of this University, the late Professor Woodhouse, that there was introduced into the University of Cambridge a more complete knowledge of the methods of investigation, the introduction of which had produced a great and lasting change in the studies of the place. He was, indeed, the inheritor of an immortal name. (Loud cheers.) The labours and pursuits of a long life, devoted to the vindication of his illustrious name, would tend, he did trust, to transmit that name with still greater lustre to his descendants. (Continued cheers.) It was the boast of the illustrious family of the Cassinis that they were eminent in the pursuits of astronomy and science to the third and fourth generation. Need he say that it was the prayer of every member of the British Association that the still more illustrious name of Herschel would also be eminent in the annals of science to the third and fourth generation? (Cheers.)

Sir J. Herschel, who was suffering from a severe cold, on taking the chair, briefly adverted to the eulogy of the Dean of Ely, as characterised by the partiality of youthful friendship; and then, apologising for his defects of voice, read "The President's Address." In doing so, amongst the epochs of the philosophical history of Cambridge, he alluded to the formation and progress of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, which had published a great many volumes of valuable communications; the publication of the Cambridge Mathematical Journal; and the establishment of the Astronomical Observatory, and the publication of its observations. It was here that the present Astronomer Royal laid the basis of the observations which had been made at Greenwich, and formed a new era in astronomical science. He next proceeded, at considerable length, to refer to the progress of magnetical and meteorological observations throughout the world. The result had been the accumulation of an enormous mass of information, which had placed the science high, although time must be allowed for its discussion. This was the greatest and most prolonged system of observations which had ever been made, the manner in which it had been supported by the British and Russian Governments and the East India Company being most munificent; but its continuance must be settled before the present Meeting closed. For many years, we had had in this country a Government not attached to party, but ready to support science. It was not now necessary to seek for the aid of foreign talent; the mind of Britain was equal to any,—in mathematical analysis it could accomplish anything; and, when once the prize of public estimation was held out to view, nothing would be wanting. The establishment of observatories had always been connected with the civilization of nations; but, irrespective of magnetic co-operation, terrestrial physics should always be connected with astronomical investigation. The President, at considerable length, then adverted to the loss which meteorology had sustained in the death of the late Professor Daniell; to the progress of observation made by Lord Rosse's telescope, where his discoveries had confirmed his father's opinion, that all nebulæ were double stars; to the philosophy of logic, agricultural chemistry, &c.; and the imperative necessity of an alteration in scientific nomenclature, to keep pace with the wider range which it had taken. Sir John concluded by observing, that every year gave fresh instances of the successful application of science to the ordinary occupations of life, which before had been subjected to empiricism. Agriculture was an instance of this, which had been much benefitted by this spirit of scientific investigation. The principles on which the British Association had been founded had been well carried out so far; and the various reports it had given to the world of the respective branches of science from eminent men connected with each other; detailing not only what had been done, but adding new discoveries of their own, had done great good to the cause of truth, and had received the seal of public approbation. The publication of these reports had raised discussions, and brought about the interchange of mind between members far separated from each other, and formed germs of ideas and connecting links between the regions of thought which might otherwise be still disconnected. The President, in further pointing out the spirit by which the Association was actuated, stated that, since the last meeting, it had expended £11,767 in promoting scientific discovery. Most of those present were aware of the great amount of scientific activity which had been called into existence during that interval; and of the great assistance which it had received from the Government. True science, like true religion, embraced a wide, a boundless, and a beautiful field; and all those connected with the British Association, who worked in that field, proclaimed their delight in the investigation of the wonderful works of God. He concluded by saying that Science had still greater and nobler objects to attain, when the public mind was prepared to receive them, and to appreciate the purity of her views and the faithfulness of her disciples. (Loud and long continued cheers).

THE TOWN-HALL, CAMBRIDGE.

SIR JOHN F. HERSCHEL, BART., PRESIDENT OF THE ASSOCIATION.

The thanks of the Association to Sir John Herschel were then proposed by Mr. Everett, the American Minister, seconded by the Marquis of Northampton, and carried with loud applause; and after the transaction of some financial business, the meeting separated.

We annex a portrait of the distinguished President, from a painting by Pickersgill.

FRIDAY.

The first business of the Association was the meeting of "The Magnetic" Congress at the Hoop Hotel; but the result of their deliberations was not made known to the General Meeting of the Committee until Monday.

"THE MODEL ROOM," at the Perse Grammar School, was opened for the display of models and works of art. The most remarkable object in the room was a plaster cast from a model of modern Jerusalem and its environs, by the Rev. J. Blackburne, M.A., of St. John's College, of Attercliffe, Yorkshire, on a scale of 18 inches to a mile. This attracted a good deal of notice, and every facility was given for minute examination of the details by various lenses conveniently placed. There were also models of Darwell and Co.'s curious machine for beating and brushing carpets—of Sanderson's blasting machine—and of the Temple church, London, as it would appear were the houses on the north-west corner removed.—(See the Engraving.)

Among the more popular communications were the following:—

Dr. Buckland described the agency of land snails in forming holes and trackways in compact limestone. His attention had first been called to the subject by a discussion on the perforations 60 feet high at Tenby Castle, which were by some taken to be evidence of a raised beach, but which he considered as the workmanship of land-snails. He considered, that by means of the acid with which they were provided snails could make perforations into the most solid forms of limestone, but the perforations were unlike those made by any other animals, or those made by the salt of the sea and the carbonic acid of the atmosphere. These perforations were never found where the rain and frosts could operate, and always had the aperture downwards. From observations made at Richborough last year, he had concluded that these perforations were not made to a greater depth than an inch in 1,000 years.

Baron W. S. Waltershausen read a paper on a topographical and geological map of Mount Ætna and the adjoining country from actual survey. The author, who has spent nine years residing on and studying the phenomena of the volcano, corroborated the theory, long since propounded by Baron Von Bogue, that there has been a progressive change in the position of its centre. Although there was only esteemed positive evidence of 250 eruptions, the researches of the author showed that there had been at least 750, as there were indications of as many distinct craters.

Sir R. Schomburgck read a paper on the Muridic or Ita palm of British Guiana, which provides the natives of a very large district with food, drink, and clothing, and sometimes grows to the height of 120 feet.

The first sitting of the sub section of Ethnology was held in Trinity College. Admiral Sir Charles Malcolm, who was chosen president, took the chair, and the meeting-room was well attended.

Professor Latham read a paper on the Ethnography of America. This was an elaborate exposition of the various languages spoken by the American Indians, both North and South, although much remains to be done, as of several of the existing tribes no vocabularies are extant.

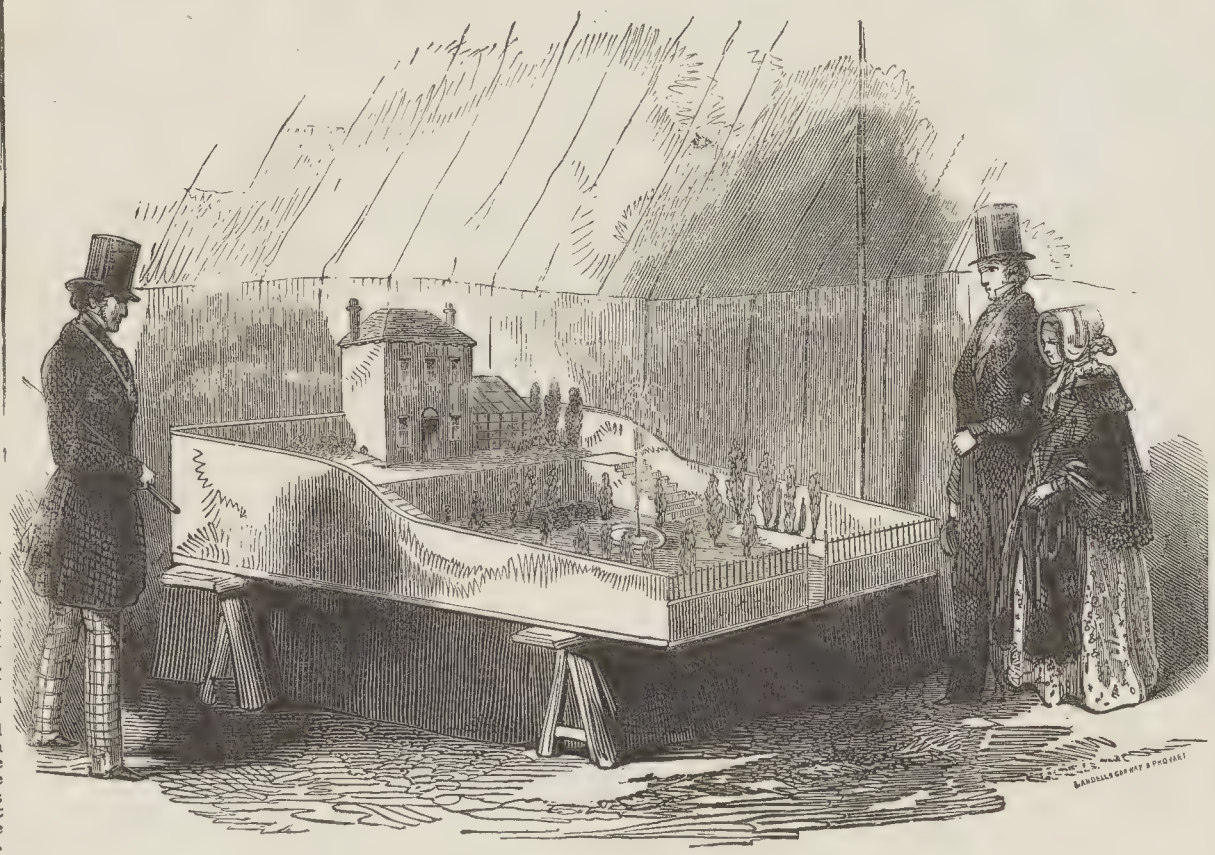
An interesting discussion ensued, in which the American Minister, the Bishop of Norwich, and several other members, took part.

MODEL-ROOM, PERSE SCHOOL.

Dr. King read a paper from Mr. J. Bonomi, on an apparatus for determining the stature of man. It called attention to the importance of ascertaining the breadth, with the arms extended, as well as the length, of man; and, in order to obtain this effectually, diagrams of a machine for the purpose were exhibited. The apparatus consists of two graduated scales, each fitted with a sliding scale—the one measuring the height of the body, and the other the space of the extended arms. In the structure of the human frame, it is so

THE UNION ROOM, JESUS-LANE.

PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY'S HOUSE.—LECTURE ROOM.



LECTURE ROOM, GREAT COURT, TRINITY COLLEGE.

contrived that the measure of the space, from the extremity of the fingers of one hand to that of those of the other, when the arms are extended horizontally, should be the same as the measure of the space from the top of the head to the sole of the foot. There are, however, exceptions, particularly in the effects of occupation and other circumstances; and the apparatus is intended to determine this, as well as to ascertain the differences that exist in various nations and classes of nations. The results to be obtained are not alone of a scientific, but of a practical, nature, as its use in prisons and passport-offices will be the means of furnishing more accurate data of identification than by the existing methods are to be arrived at.

Mr. G. R. Porter read to the Statistical Section a paper on the progress and present state of Savings' Banks in the United Kingdom. The first savings' bank regularly organised was at Ruthwell, and before the Legislature interfered on the subject, there were 70 savings' banks in England, four in Wales, and four in Ireland. The deposits last year were:—England, 832,290 depositors, and the amount, £25,112,363; Wales, 18,690 depositors, and amount, £599,796; Ireland, 91,243 depositors, and amount, £2,749,017; and Scotland, 69,824 depositors, and amount, £10,431,183.

In the evening, the Astronomer Royal delivered a discourse on Terrestrial Magnetism, in the Senate-House, which was very well attended. It consisted chiefly of an elementary notice of the facts of the science, and a popular description of the efforts now making to obtain more information upon this obscure science.

The Horticultural Fête, represented in one of our Engravings, was given in the afternoon, in the private grounds of Downing College, the use of which was generously granted; and it went off in a manner the most gratifying to the gentlemen who have been at so much pains to get it up.

MODEL HOUSE AND GARDEN, HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The day was most charming, and the scene, when the ground was crowded by a gay throng of ladies and gentlemen, was beautiful in the extreme. The exhibition of flowers and plants was in a series of tents, erected in different parts of the ground, and in general terms it may be characterised as the best thing of the kind we have had in Cambridge for some years. In the first marquee, on the left, on entering the ground, the most remarkable object was a collection of various flowers and plants, in three glass cases, formed by an improved electrotype process, whereby their form and growth are most curiously preserved. These copper flowers were sent to the exhibition by Captain Ibbetson, and they deservedly attracted the notice of every visitor. The collections of roses in this tent, sent by Professor Clarke, and Messrs. Widnall, Green, and Twitchett, were admirable; and not less so were the noble baskets of cut flowers, especially those of Mr. E. Foster and the Messrs Hudson. Mr. Widnall's collection of calceolaries, sent for exhibition only, was very much admired; and there was a good show of heart's ease, the first prize being awarded to Messrs. Chater, of Haverhill. The second tent contained a curious model of the Round Church, decorated with flowers, for which an extra prize of 30s. was awarded to Mr. Catling.

Proceeding a little further in the same direction, we arrived at a marquee appropriated to an ingenious and beautiful model of a country-house, with green-houses and gardens, for which we are indebted to the ingenuity and spirit of Mr. Widnall. It was a pretty affair, with its ornamental grounds, and fountain playing, and little gold fish sporting about therein. An extra prize of £3 was adjudged for it. We have engraved this interesting model.

SATURDAY.

One of the most important papers ead to-day was that in the Mechanical

HORTICULTURAL FETE IN THE GROUNDS OF DOWNING COLLEGE.

Section, by Mr. Grant Fairbairn, on Railways, the object of which was to show the importance of economizing the first cost of railways, by introducing steep gradients in difficult districts of the country, whereby the heavy expenses attendant on tunnels, viaducts, and lofty embankments, would be avoided; whilst the author showed that the desired speed might be obtained by increasing the power of the locomotive engine. Originally, cylinders only of 10 inch diameter had been used, but, at the present time, the engines are furnished with cylinders of 14, 16, and 18 inches diameter. The maximum speed which had been originally calculated on was 10 miles per hour, whereas, at the present time, the ordinary speed on the Great Western Railway, with first class gradients, is 40 miles an hour. The paper was illustrated by many experiments which had recently been made with regard to gradients on the Manchester and Leeds Railway. Mr. Whishaw confirmed these views by the results of practical experiments to the extent of nearly 4000 miles, on nearly all the lines of British railways. These he had brought to notice some few years ago in reference to the great importance of reducing the original cost of railways, and it was especially important at the present time, when the whole kingdom, from one extremity to the other, was about to be intersected by them. By adopting the plan of single lines with steep gradients when needed, aided by the electrical telegraph, it had been clearly shown that the first cost per mile might be reduced 50 per cent. A single line also worked on the reciprocating plan, and, protected by the electrical telegraph, he also contended was more safe than any double line without the latter, as a collision, by the former plan, would be physically impossible. Single lines for long distances were now being introduced, as for instance on the Northampton and Peterborough railroad recently opened. 2. Dr. Booth described a method of converting rectilinear into rotatory motion, as applied to the working of the cranks of a steam engine. The advantages of this new construction were that a steam engine of given stroke might be comprised within the smallest possible space, without its efficiency being in the least impaired, whilst in direct action engines, when the space was too confined, the power of the engine was much diminished. Other advantages were that the friction on the sliding parts is insensible, that nearly all the parts of the engine have a rotatory and not a reciprocating motion; that all the subsidiary parts of a low-pressure engine are worked by it with great simplicity; and that in this construction, above all others, the expansive principle may be most fully developed.

Dr. Ernest Diffenbach made, to the Section of Geology and Geography, a Communication on the Geology of the Island of New Zealand. A mountain chain of ancient stratified rocks runs through the island, with dikes of greenstone, anterior to the coal formation, whilst, at both sides of the chain, there are horizontal sedimentary strata, with fossil remains, showing them to belong to a very recent formation. There exist many older volcanic rocks, as basalts and porphyries, but the most interesting feature is a chain of modern volcanic phenomena, on the grandest scale, with a burning volcano in the centre, and hot springs, resembling those of Iceland and St. Michael's, depositing a great quantity of silicious sand. The interior is occupied by a great formation of barren pumice-stone gravel, and the coasts offer no extent of level land. Dr. Buckland drew the conclusion, from the nature of the rocks, that the island was but little suited to agriculture.

There was a soirée in the Senate-House, at which the members and their friends spoke over the scientific transactions of the week. There was a fair sprinkling of the gentler sex, whose brilliant appearance, in full evening costume, gave a gaiety to the scene, which, to a mere spectator, might have otherwise appeared dull and sombre.

At Trinity Lodge, the Master of that College entertained a distinguished party.

On Sunday, the Dean of Westminster preached a sermon at St. Mary's Church, for the benefit of the District Visiting Society, which was well attended by a large portion of the members.

MONDAY.

On Monday afternoon, at a numerous meeting, in the Council-room, at the Town Hall, the next meeting was fixed to take place in the first week in September, at Southampton, Mr. Murchison advocating it chiefly from its proximity to France, and the probability of the attendance of many of the philosophers of that country, whilst it was not unlikely that he could prevail upon the French Geological Society to visit the Association in a body. Mr. Murchison was then appointed President for the ensuing year.

The business at the various sections, with the exception of the Mechanical Section, was very full. Among those of the most popular interest were the following:—

Dr. R. G. Latham drew attention to the great increase of ergot on grains and grasses in this country, within the last few years, not only in its localities, but also in the number of species infected, which was now eighteen. It was very prevalent in many of the most fertilised districts in the neighbourhood of London, and also very extensively in Windsor Park. This great increase was supposed to be owing to the effects of animal manure, and, as this is producing quite a revolution in modern farming, it is a very important matter to adopt some means by which it may be counteracted, as ergot produces the most distressing diseases upon man and animals.

Dr. Martin read a paper on the moral and intellectual character of the New Zealanders. Dr. Martin asks, "Shall we expect from the New Zealanders the full fruits of civilisation, or place them in that instinctive state where self preservation is the only law of their life, or shall we fix their position in that stormy middle state where the indications of sense are not altogether corrected by reflection; when passion is somewhat tempered, but not controlled, by moral and religious feeling; when hatred is stronger than benevolence, and self-love is unrestrained by conscientiousness; when, in fact the mere intellectual perception of self interest is the chief regulator of the conduct?" The latter is the precise position in the great general scale of civilisation in which the New Zealander would find himself placed were his condition not so greatly affected by his own peculiar natural character. That character is, however, so different and superior to that of other semi-civilised people, that we are constrained to award to him the very highest place in that middle state in which civilisation would place him. With the exception of that delicate moral susceptibility which is peculiar to a high state of civilisation, the New Zealanders are at the present day little inferior to the bulk of our uneducated countrymen at home. In sound practical common sense, as indicated in the assertion and maintenance of their rights, they are far their superiors. The New Zealander of the present day is neither the savage nor the civilised man, but is in a transition state, whilst, if properly treated, his passage will be but a short one.

In the evening, Mr. Murchison delivered a discourse on the Geology of Russia and the Ural Mountains. The chief novelty was the association of the mammoth with the auriferous deposits of that country. From an examination of the teeth by Professor Owen, it would appear that these gigantic animals were natives of that country; their form indicating that they could subsist on the fir, willow, and even mosses of the scanty herbage of that country While the whole of Siberia was an early continent, the whole of the northern parts of Russia were submerged in water.

The Meeting was afterwards addressed in a very eloquent manner by the Dean of Westminster and Professor Sedgwick, and the Senate-House was even more fully attended than on the previous evenings.

TUESDAY.

In consequence of this being the last day for "Scientific Business," there was a large influx of papers at each of the Sections, the number read being 52.

Dr. Buckland made a communication to the Geological Section, on the Mechanical Action of Animals on Hard and Soft Substances during the Progress of Stratification, and on the Distinction between Cavities made by Rain drops and Bubbles on Red Sandstone. He gave several instances in which stones had been perforated by small soft worms; but attributed it to be accidental, as well as the perforations by snails being the effects of the ejectment of an acid. In referring to the formation of rain-drops and bubbles in strata, he pointed out a from a slab in which a shower was petrified, the direction of the wind at the time.—Mr. Lyell stated, that in the Bay of Fundy, by detaching the thin lamina of the dried deposit on the banks, it was very easy to recognise, not only the prints of the feet of a species of sandpiper, but the bubbles formed by the impression of their feet.

The threatened dissolution of the Medical Section, from the paucity of the communications brought before its notice the last few years, and which has been unanimously condemned by the members, brought to its rescue several papers of high professional as well as scientific interest. The attendance has also been very numerous, and the committee contains the names of thirty-nine of the most eminent professional men.

A paper was read to the Ethnological Sub-Section from Dr. Black, on certain traces of Roman Colonization in Lancashire. Mancunium, or Manchester, was garrisoned by a Roman auxiliary cohort of 760 Frisian soldiers, who, with their wives and families, resided in the country, remaining behind after the Roman power was extinct. Although they soon became identified with their Saxon successors, they still retained many of their own customs, with much of their peculiar dialect. Many of the inhabitants of this district, especially in the inland and rural parts, have long, and do to this day, show a distinctive variety of form, feature, and vernacular dialect, from those in the other parts of England; and the men of Heaton, and the Lancashire witches, both in the locality of the original settlement, still retain distinction—the one for the picturesque in manner and speech, and the other for their characteristic beauty.

Some Ethnological notes were read from General Miller, the most interesting of which related to Cannibalism, Human Warfare, and Infanticide. The former was too unhappily verified in the Feejee Islands, where its practice could not be extenuated on the plea of a necessity for sustenance. This was exemplified in the singularity of their warfare, for the wars of the Feejee islanders do not bring out above 100 or 150 men at arms. When no more than four or five have fallen on a side, the combatants cease, and the captives are slaughtered and devoured by the victorious party.

Mr. Charlesworth described, to the Chemical Section, the secretion of flint in the pulp cavities of the teeth of a fossil reptile. This he considered as one of the most curious and valuable discoveries yet made known in the history of flint, because it proved to demonstration that the mineral matter must before its decomposition have been in a state of solution, or it could not have perforated the bony material of the jaw.

Professor Schonbein made a communication on the presence of ozone in the atmosphere. It is developed largely by atmospheric electricity, and he conceived that it was thus generated in such quantities as would endanger life, were it not removed as soon as it was formed by the agency of organic matter. He attributed the phosphorescence of the sea and the luminousness of the glow-worm entirely to this agency.

There was a soirée at the Senate-House, which was very fully attended.

The soirée in the Senate-House was very numerously attended. Amongst the distinguished persons present were the Marquis of Northampton, the Earl of Fitzwilliam, Sir David Brewster, Sir Charles Schomburgk, &c., &c. Professor Faraday, who had arrived the day before, explained towards the close of the evening, the principles of the electrifying machine; and much amusement was excited by the various groups of ladies and gentlemen who ventured to test its effects. Even on those who experienced the shock, it seemed to have very nearly the powers of the laughing gas also.

WEDNESDAY.

One of the best attended Sections to-day was the Ethnological, at which the celebrated Anglo-Saxon scholar, Mr. John Kemble, of Trinity; and the Rev. Rowland Williams, of King's, discoursed on the characteristics of the Celts and Saxons. The former was of opinion that the Saxons had settlements along the coast before the period generally ascribed by our history to the Saxon Invasion; and he pointed out circumstances which led him to believe that there were Teutons in Britain before the Roman Conquest. Mr. Williams, during the course of some ethnological remarks, entered into a most interesting disquisition upon the local and hereditary difference of complexion in Great Britain. His remarks concerning the colour of the hair, as a characteristic, were very interesting, and listened to with great attention. It used to be thought that the colour of the hair was of no more value than to point a compliment to beauty, or to afford a subject for the lover's sonnet. It helped now, in an investigating age, to form moral and physical deductions, connected with the human race. Speaking of the hair of the ancient Britons, he alluded to Cæsar's description of its light colour, and glanced at passages in Martial and Ovid, in which the Roman ladies of a certain age were reminded of the fact of their borrowing the auburn locks of the Celts to repair the ravages of time. The rev. speaker then traced the migrations of the Celts on the Map of the World, commencing from the shores of the Caspian, east and west, through Europe and through India, to the borders of China, pointing out where they had advanced and succeeded, and where they had been defeated and driven back. There was this particular feature about their migrations, that they advanced in two bodies, at different periods of time; and these bodies were not—although not very dissimilar—similar, as the Persian and Mede, the Latin and the Greek, and the High and the Low German, were akin, yet different.

Sir Robert Schomburgk read an elaborate paper on the Indians of Guiana, some of whose superstitions were of an extraordinary character.

There was a meeting in the Senate House in the evening, Sir John Herschel in the chair, to close the session. The proceedings consisted of votes of thanks to the different officers of the Association for the manner in which the arrangements had been conducted, and to the distinguished foreign philosophers who had honoured England on this occasion with their presence, and, in doing so, had advanced that cause which she, as well as all civilized nations, had at heart—the cause of science and truth, with the progress of which would progress also the moral and physical amelioration of the human race.

Those gentlemen who had received votes of thanks acknowledged the compliment respectively; and the principal speeches of the evening were delivered by the Rev. Master of Christ's College (Dr. Graham) and the Rev. Professor Sedgwick, both of whom proclaimed the intimate connection between geology and religion, the former aiding and proving the truth of the doctrines of revelation, if further proof were required.

Thus ended the Scientific Congress for the year 1845, the fifteenth year of the Association's existence. This meeting has been declared on all hands to have been most successful; and the future prospects of the body, which has so much good in view for the general cause of science, and for the carrying out the spirit of the age, are looked upon most favourably by all those competent to form a judgment on the matter.

The Second Meeting of the General Committee took place in the afternoon, in the Council Chamber, for the purpose of making arrangements for the place of meeting for the year 1846; the President in the chair. Invitations had been received from Southampton, Cheltenham, and Norwich; and, after some lively advocacy of the claims of the respective towns, it was decided that the next meeting should be held at Southampton, in September. M. Murchison was elected President, by acclamation; the Vice-Presidents, Council, and Officers were appointed; after which the meeting broke up.

The illustrations, in addition to those already noticed, are the Town-Hall, Cambridge, wherein the General Committee met; the Union Room, in Jesus-lane, where the Section for Mathematical and Physical Science assembled; the Philosophical Society's House (Zoology and Botany); and the Lecture-Room, Great Court, Trinity College (Statistics).

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 29.—Sixth Sunday after Trinity—St. Peter martyred at Rome, A. D. 77.

MONDAY, 30.—Earl of Argyll beheaded, 1685—Great Fire at Woolwich Arsenal, 1805.

TUESDAY, JULY 1.—Battles: The Boyne, 1690—The Nile, 1798—Admiral Duncan born, 1731.

WEDNESDAY, 2.—Visitation B. V. M.—Hungerford Market opened 1833.

THURSDAY, 3.—Jean Jacques Rousseau died, 1778—Dog days begin.

FRIDAY, 4.—New Moon.

SATURDAY, 5.—Sovereigns first issued as currency, 1817—President Jefferson died, 1828.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending July 5.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m	h. m
10 43	11 18	11 51	0 0	0 20	0 45	1 8	1 30	1 52	2 12	2 29	2 4.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Scientificus," Bookvale.—Charcoal is prepared by the imperfect combustion of wood in a heap, almost covered with turf and sand; or the wood is put into iron cylinders, set in brickwork, which have only a very small opening to the external air; or the wood may be charred in brick kilns, with openings under regulation. Of woods, oak affords the largest proportion of charcoal.

"F. H.," Manchester.—See the "Cyclopædia of Practical Receipts," 2nd edition.

"A Subscriber."—We do not know the address of the landlord of Raggett's Hotel.

"A. and B."—The Battle of Waterloo commenced about noon, and closed soon after sunset, June 18, 1815.

"A Subscriber," Bristol.—The prices of the books in question are 9s. and 21s.

"A Payer," Chelsea, is thanked.

"A Subscriber," Donaghadee.—Our correspondent's letter has been forwarded to the Secretary to the Art-Union.

"J. W. W.," York.—A bell given to the cathedral of Moscow, by the Empress Anne, weighed 432,000 lb., probably the largest bell in the known world.

"G. C. B."—Savory's "Companion to the Medicine Chest."

"C. L. S." should obtain the interest of some member of the Government, or M. P.

"M. C.," Great Queen street.—Declined.

"W. C."—From April to July may be considered as the full tide of the London season.

"E. R.," Huddersfield.—To the best of our recollection the colours are beautiful shades of brown; but our Correspondent should see the picture.

"Vapid," Shrewsbury.—The accent of "Sybil" is on the first syllable.

"A. B.," Birmingham.—The month's notice may be given on any day.

"T. M.," Queen's County, Ireland.—Not at present.

"T. B. W." is correct.

"Harry," Boston, U.S., is thanked for his letter.

"Armiger" shall be replied to next week.

"R. R. G."—The illustration will appear in our next, if the promised details of the opening be forwarded in time.

"J. M.," Seend, Melksham.—We have not received the letter in question. The Great Telescope was described in No. 155 of our journal.

"A. Contributor" should endeavour to obtain the interest of a Governor of Christ's Hospital.

"M. K. H.," Llandilo.—The deed of gift will be valid.

"A Manchester Subscriber's" last plea would be a mere quibble; the success of the first plea depends on the strength of the doubt.

"H. W. C.," Pembroke, should send his entire address, when the No. shall be duly forwarded.

"G. W. B."—The length of the tunnel on the Gravesend and Rochester Railway is 2¼ miles. See our No. 160.

"T. G. H.," Knightsbridge, is thanked for his note.

"A. B. C."—"Trachea" is pronounced "Trakea."

"A Constant Subscriber," Brecon.—The demand cannot be legally made.

"An English Church Reformer."—We have not yet received the pamphlet named in our last week's "Parisiana:" it may be had, by order, of a foreign bookseller in London.

"An Admirer."—We cannot aid our Correspondent, unless the context be given.

"Harleigh" can proceed by railway as far as Newcastle towards Edinburgh, leaving London by the Birmingham line.

"A Montgomeryshire Farmer."—We are not in possession of the title of the work.

"Sumenda est, &c.," Truro.—The supposed return of the comet of 1811 will be in the year 5194, according to Bessel.

"Fidus Lector."—In the early part of the French Revolution the names of the months were changed: thus, April was called Floreal.

"An Irish Constant Reader."—The farthingale was a large whalebone petticoat, and the sacque a large loose gown, both worn in the last century.

"A Subscriber," Liverpool.—See "Travels on the Western Coast of Africa."

"W. C.," Sturminster Newton, is thanked for his well-intentioned "Thoughts."

"James."—We have not heard the poplar tree characterised as an emblem of time.

"C. S. R."—The price of the works in question is about 5s. each.

"An Aberdeenshire Subscriber."—A. S. is right.

"Daphnis," Bromley, wishes to ascertain the name of the inventor of the musical snuff-box.

"C. R. B. C." may ascertain the point he wishes to settle by addressing a note to the Secretary of the London University.

"Exhibition."—Fifty pounds per annum would suffice.

"S H.," Bath, is thanked for the fire-escapes, for which, however, we have not room.

Ineligible.—"The Wish;" "The Railroad," by G. H.; "The Comet" and "Osborne;" "The Forester," by R. W.; "To Miss F.;" "Lines," from the son of an old subscriber, Leamington.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

Next week we shall present our subscribers with a Supplement, Gratis, containing Index, Title-page, &c., to Volume VI.

All the numbers are reprinted, and our subscribers can make up their sets from No. I. to the present time.

Covers for binding Volumes I., II., III., IV., V., and VI., may be had at the Office, and of all agents, price 3s. each.

Portfolios, price 4s., for preserving the numbers for binding.

The Monthly Part, XXXIII., price 2s. 6d., is now ready.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 28, 1845.

THE Commons' Inclosure Bill is progressing very auspiciously for its framers—very suspiciously for the community at large. It creeps from stage to stage at those hours at which discussion is impossible; and yet, from its length and intricacy, there never was a measure for which a close and searching discussion was more required. The resolution providing that the salaries and expenses of the Commissioners shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund, has been already agreed to without a remark; to many this will prove the most important part of the measure. Now, as the profit to be derived from the enclosures will go wholly into the pockets of the proprietors of the land, the least they could do is to pay the expences of the machinery which will enable them to lay field to field, and bar the step of the poor man from every inch of turf—except the reserved "four" or "ten acres," as the case may be—without making those applications to Parliament for private Acts, to which there are two objections—one, that they are costly; the other, that they involve an explanation of the details of each case, which might be rather inconvenient. Under the present bill, the abstraction may be "lumped," and the whole thing done in that quiet, unobtrusive manner, most favourable to such schemes. Thus the people will be deprived of their common rights, with the aggravation of being saddled with the cost of the process of expulsion. We can see no utility in the measure, and much to object to. Parliament has passed somewhere about five thousand enclosure bills already; many of them were passed during the reign of war prices, when corn, produced even at a high cost, would pay its expences, and leave a profit besides.

When prices sank, much of this land, of which prices alone stimulated the cultivation, was abandoned, and it is now, in its neglected state, of less value than it was before it was reclaimed. It is useless to the owner, and the few advantages it gave the labourer are lost to him. There are many such tracts scattered over the face of England, and nothing presents a more melancholy appearance than these proofs of the uselessness of forcing cultivation upon soil unfit for it, or, as a modern poet has described it, driving the plough "where Martha fed her ewe, and God never intended that corn should be grown." Even of the good land of the country, which has been enclosed for ages, it cannot be said that the most is made of it; thousands of acres might be rendered more productive by better cultivation, and it is in this direction improvement should be effected; multiplying enclosures is not increasing productiveness, which is our true object. But the disposition to "usurp the land, and dispossess the swain," exists as strongly as ever; the extension of hedges and boundaries becomes a sort of passion, like that of the miser for heaping and hoarding the mere metal, without reflecting whether the greatest, or indeed any, use is made of the quantity already possessed.

THE success of the Smoke Prohibition Bill, which has gone through nearly its last stage in the House of Commons, is, we fear, one of the things rather to be hoped than expected. Much, however, will depend on the manner in which it is received by those whose establishments are marked out by the "tall chimneys" almost as conspicuous as steeples; that they can restrain these monsters from pouring out their thick and polluting clouds has been proved; nay, it is said it can be done with actual saving of cost in fuel, as well as increased health to the community; it may be asked, then, why was not the plan long since generally adopted? If the public and individuals can both be benefitted at no cost to either, it seems natural that steps should have been taken to effect the happy change; yet, still it remains to be effected. The best improvements are those made freely, and without Legislative interference, for, if there is a general desire to evade compliance with an Act of Parliament, that Act will certainly fall short of its intention. In the present case, however, we hope the best; a time may come when it will be possible to imagine a city atmosphere somewhat less murky than that which generally envelopes the Metropolis. But it is in the great manufacturing towns the change will be most perceptible.

It is singular that coal, one of the great elements of our national greatness, should at different times have given so much trouble to the Legislature. When it was coming into use, Parliament all but prohibited it by various acts, the dread of its smoke being intense, to a degree, indeed, that appears amusing to a generation compelled to breathe it so copiously as the present one. In after years coal and its vapour were both submitted to as unavoidable evils, and imparted to our large towns that gloomy and dingy colour, which makes the cleanness of the public buildings of the Continent so pleasing a contrast in the eyes of an Englishman to his own. Now it is found that smoke can be got rid of; that it is not imperative on us to breathe it, because we must deal largely in the combustion of what produces it. If the attempt succeeds, the bill will have to be much extended in its provisions to make the improvement perfect. At present it applies only to "stationary" steam-engines, and the furnaces of "works;" the millions of "domestic" chimneys, and all locomotive engines on land and water may puff away as before, unchecked.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

RETURN OF THE COURT TO BUCKINGHAM PALACE.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal family, returned to Buckingham Palace from the Isle of Wight on Wednesday evening.

ARRIVAL OF THE KING AND QUEEN OF THE BELGIANS.—The King and Queen of the Belgians landed at Woolwich on Thursday, and proceeded at once to Buckingham Palace, on a visit to her Majesty.

ARRIVAL OF THE DUCHESS OF KENT IN GERMANY.—A letter from Bonn, on the Rhine, dated June 20, says:—"Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent and suite, accompanied by his Highness the Prince of Leiningen, arrived here to day, and alighted at the Golden Star Hotel. Their Highnesses proceeded from thence to the Palace of Demorbach.

POSTSCRIPT.

Intended Visit of the King of Holland.—We can state on authority that it is the intention of the King of Holland shortly to visit this country, and that his Majesty will be attended by a distinguished suite. His Majesty may be expected the week after next.

Election for Edinburgh County.—On Wednesday, Sir John Hope, Bart., of Pinkie, was elected for Edinburgh County, without opposition, in the room of W. R. Ramsay, Esq., who accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

Sir W. Follett.—The answer to inquiries late last evening was that Sir W. Follett continued in the same dangerous state.

The Leeds and West Riding Railway.—The Committee decided yesterday that the preamble of this bill had not been proved.

Fatal Accident to Captain de Salis.—We regret to record an accident which has proved fatal to Captain de Salis. On Wednesday afternoon, about half past five o'clock, when her Majesty was expected to arrive in town from the Isle of Wight, there being several persons, as usual, collected in the streets, Captain de Salis was proceeding on horseback towards the corner of the Vauxhall-road; and in passing along Victoria-row, the animal, seeming to move uneasy in his walk, broke into a canter, and being checked suddenly, as some brewers' drays were passing, he stumbled. The unfortunate gentleman made an effort to recover himself, but without effect; for the horse fell violently, and rolled over him. Surgical assistance was obtained, and it was then ascertained that severe concussion or fracture of the skull had taken place, and that a deep wound had been inflicted on the hip joint, which laid the bone bare, and also in the knee joint. From the time of being taken from under the horse, Captain de Salis remained totally insensible; and although recourse was had to bloodletting and shaving the head, he remained in the same state until Thursday evening, about eight o'clock, when he expired. The deceased was only 24 years of age, and unmarried. During Thursday there were repeated messages from the Palace by command of her Majesty and Prince Albert, who were much affected upon being informed of the accident.

Steam-Boat Accident.—On Thursday afternoon, as the Eclipse, Chelsea steam-boat, was on her way between Chelsea and London, and whilst off Lambeth, a foolish young man (who was slightly intoxicated) tried to mount the paddle box by stepping on the skylight immediately over the engine. The motion of the boat overbalanced him, and he fell upon the piston, which was ascending at the time. The consequence was that it jammed him several times against the beam above before it could be stopped. When extricated he was found to have his thigh completely smashed, besides other injuries, which preclude any chance of recovery. The boat instantly put him on shore at Chandler's boat-house, Millbank, from whence he was conveyed to the hospital.

A Man's Head Severed by Machinery.—On Tuesday afternoon a most appalling accident, attended with loss of life, occurred at the printing-office of the Weekly Register, Edinburgh. A young man named Robert Falkner, who assisted in tending the printing machine and the steam-engine by which it was worked, while engaged in fastening a nut connected with some part of the machinery, the nut-key slipped, which caused him to overbalance himself, and he fell against the engine fly-wheel, which was then revolving with considerable velocity; the consequence was, that he was thrown into the wheel-pit, where the wheel caught his neck, and almost instantaneously his head was completely severed from his body.

Poisoning by a Boy of Thirteen.—On Thursday the following mysterious case of poisoning occurred to Edward Muir, aged thirteen years, the son of Mr. Muir, a respectable hairdresser and perfumer, in the Commercial-road, Whitechapel. It appears that Mr. Muir was up stairs, leaving the deceased in charge of the shop, together with a sister, ten years old. A short time after, the sister came running up, greatly agitated, saying that her brother had poisoned himself. He immediately ran down, when he found his son lying on the floor in strong convulsions, and quite insensible. Three medical gentlemen were promptly in attendance, when, from the smell which pervaded the room, it was found that he had swallowed essential oil of almonds. Notwithstanding the efforts of the medical men, he died in about ten minutes. The mysterious part of the transaction arose from the fact, that the bottle which contained the oil was, upon search, found to be in a cupboard in the shop, in its usual place, corked, and tied up.

Loss of Five Lives in Plymouth Sound.—On Tuesday an accident happened in Plymouth Sound, by which five persons lost their lives. In the course of the day a number of women and others had gone on board her Majesty's surveying ship, the Pandora, now lying in the Sound, under sailing orders, to take a farewell of their husbands and friends, and of these, eleven women and two children were put on board one of the ship's boats to be sent ashore. The boat, manned by five men, left the ship at about four o'clock in the afternoon; they came on all safely to the reef known as the Bridge, and here, whilst tacking the boat, a portion of one of the women's shawls caught in the sheet-block, preventing it from running out, and at the same moment a sudden puff of wind filling the sail, the boat was capsized, and the passengers and crew precipitated into the water. The whole of the crew and six of the women reached the boat and clung to it until they were rescued from their perilous situation by parties from the shore, by whom the accident had been observed. The other three women and the two children were drowned.

Post-Office Robbery at Gravesend.—Yesterday morning, information was received at the General Post Office, St. Martin's-le Grand, that the house of the postmaster (Mr. Couves) had been broken into late the previous night, and three bags of letters and newspapers stolen therefrom; namely, the London, Dartford, and Deptford bags. The robbery is suspected to have been effected by some persons who were seen in the neighbourhood with a light spring cart.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

Further Accounts from the United States.—Arrival of the "Great Western."—The Great Western has arrived at Liverpool with New York papers to the 13th. Their contents are not important. Mr. Polk, the new President, was rather indisposed. On the 9th inst., his Excellency Lieutenant-General Sir Richard Downes Jackson, K.C.B., Commander of the Forces in Canada, died of apoplexy: Sir Richard was on the point of leaving Montreal for England, his successor, Earl Cathcart, being on his way out. There is nothing new about the Oregon question. The accounts from Mexico are rather warlike; indeed, one letter says that there is little doubt that Mexico will ere long declare war against the United States.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Death of Mr. Somes, the Member for Dartmouth.—We regret to announce the death of Joseph Somes, Esq., the member for Dartmouth, and the most extensive shipowner in the port of London. On Tuesday morning Mr. Somes left his residence, in the Bow road, in his usually good health and spirits, for the purpose of attending a railway committee of the House of Commons. A few minutes before he quitted his house he transacted business with Mr. Symons, chief clerk of the Thames Police Court. About two o'clock he was suddenly taken ill in one of the committee rooms of the house. Medical aid was instantly called in. He was conveyed to his own residence with all convenient expedition, and died on Wednesday morning. The melancholy event caused a great sensation in the eastern part of the metropolis, and especially along both banks of the river. Upon 'Change it was the prominent topic of conversation, for he was held in high and deserved esteem in all the commercial circles. In his politics, Mr. Somes was a staunch Conservative, but he took no leading part in public affairs until towards the close of the last year. Mr. Somes, we believe, was never married. He leaves behind him, it is supposed, property of the value of between one and two millions sterling. Mr. Somes was of humble origin, and by his industry and perseverance amassed considerable wealth. His father was a waterman and lighterman, and he intended his son for the same profession, and he was actually bound at Watermen's Hall, but subsequently abandoned the oars and sculls for a more lucrative business. Mr. Somes's fleet has been a nursery for good seamen, and every captain in his employ originally entered his service as an apprentice, and under his fostering care gradually worked his way up to commander. He was a kind and benevolent master, and was universally respected. Mr. Somes was a liberal patron of the various charitable institutions connected with the port of London. He was present at the anniversary dinner of the Watermen and Lightermen's Asylum on Wednesday week, when Lord Castlereagh presided.

Serious Indisposition of Sir William Follett.—We are exceedingly sorry to state that Sir Wm. Follett is alarmingly ill. Indeed, there appears to be little hope of his recovery. The answer to inquiries on Thursday morning, at his temporary residence in Cumberland-terrace, Regent's-park, was of a very unfavourable character. Sir William continued in the same state of weakness, and without any symptoms of improvement.

Election of Sheriffs.—A Common Hall was held on Midsummer day, when William Chaplin, Esq., citizen and innholder, and John Laurie, Esq., citizen and sadler, were unanimously elected Sheriffs of London and Sheriff of Middlesex for the year ensuing. The re-election of Chamberlain and other civic officers was then proceeded with.

Ornamental Railing for the Wellington Statue in the City.—On Wednesday morning, workmen were employed taking the necessary admeasurement for an ornamental protective railing, to be erected round the base of the Wellington statue at the Royal Exchange.

New Pier at Blackfriars Bridge.—A new and commodious pier, for the accommodation of steam-boat passengers, is in course of erection on the eastern side of Blackfriars Bridge. It will be constructed on a level with the abutment at the foot of the first flight of steps leading to the water side. The works are already carried out as far as the second arch, consequently no steam traffic will be allowed through the two first arches, but on the other side the pier will be useful, as forming a kind of harbour for the numerous coal-barges which are constantly moored there.

Mortality of London.—The total number of deaths in the metropolis, during the week ending last Saturday, was 803; showing a smaller amount of mortality than during any other period of the present year. The number of births during the week was 1,173. The fine weather has produced a most favourable change in all the diseases of the lungs and other organs of respiration, the total number of deaths under that head being only 205, while the weekly average of five springs is 267, and five years 292.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

A letter from Breslau, dated June 14, says, "On the 9th inst. the village of Alt Berun was almost wholly destroyed by fire, only a brewery and two small houses having escaped. Two sick females and 18 children perished. Nearly all the houses were constructed of wood.

Guano has been discovered in considerable quantities at Lawrence Island, New South Wales, and the Governor of South Australia gives his opinion that it will be found in large quantities upon many islands on all the coasts of New Holland.

A new system of electrical telegraph, by which the dispatch is written with a pen by the mere action of the fluid, has been tried at Brussels, in presence of the Minister of Public Works. The experiment is stated to have been entirely successful.

Mr. Robert Owen, who has been for some time in America, has recently returned to Scotland.

A letter from Constantinople of the 4th June, mentions an accident of a disastrous kind, which recently occurred on board a steamer from Trebizond. Two dervishes were among the deck passengers, and while sitting together, under the influence of opium, counting their beads and muttering prayers, one of them suddenly drew his pistol and shot a Greek who was passing by. An Armenian, who thereon ran to the assistance of the fallen man, was next killed with repeated stabs, by the other dervish. The madman then rushed to the after part of the vessel, and succeeded in wounding six other persons, one of whom, an Austrian, is since dead, by which time the captain and some of the crew had armed themselves and fell upon and bayoneted the dervishes. There were many Turks on board, but they sat passively by and did not interfere.

Sir Robert Peel has appointed the youngest son of Sir George Clerk to a junior clerkship in the Treasury.

Mr. Peter Barrow has been appointed Vice-Consul at Caen, in the room of the late Mr. Armstrong.

A Constantinople letter of the 4th, states from Syria that a sanguinary battle took place on the 16th ult., between the Druses and the Maronites, which ended in favour of the latter, but the details are not given.

According to accounts from the Russian frontiers, the Emperor has changed his plan for his journey. Instead of going to Kiew to review the troops, as originally stated, he is going direct from Iwanogrod to St. Petersburg, without returning to Warsaw. There has been a whisper of a conspiracy detected at St. Petersburg, connected with the rebellious movements said to have been discovered in Poland. The Emperor being informed by his emissaries of the plans of his enemies, designedly announced a tour of military inspection to the south, and caused all the preparations for it to be made, in order, while they fancied he was at a distance, very differently engaged, to appear among the rebels suddenly, and to break the threads of the conspiracy, all of which he had in his hands at Warsaw.

It is shown by official documents just published, that the public income, after deducting drawbacks and repayments, in 1842, was £51,244,334; in 1843, £56,945,043; and in 1844, £58,459,751. The expenditure in the same three years was, respectively, £55,223,874; £55,501,740; and £55,103,645. The taxes repealed, expired, or reduced, in 1842, amounted to £2,466,697 net; in 1843, £411,521; and in 1844, £458,810. The taxes imposed in the same period amounted to £5,721,585 net, in 1842 (being the Property and Income Tax).

Dwarkanauth Tagore has reached London from Marseilles, having, en route, made a short stay at Paris.

The Augsburg Gazette says that a treaty of commerce has been concluded between Austria and the republic of Cracow.

The Moniteur Belge officially announces, that the King of the Belgians has signed the concession of the whole of the lines of the Liege and Namur Railway Company. That portion of the line extending from Liege to Sereng and Huy, being about half the whole length of the line, is confidently expected to be ready for opening in the spring of the ensuing year.

Mercantile Letters from Buenos Ayres, dated the 9th of April, positively state the acknowledgment of the strict blockade of Monte Video by the French. At Monte Video the Government was considering the expediency of taking the property of absent citizens, and it was expected they would make a forced contribution.

By a recent enumeration and classification of the population in the Muscovite empire, it appears that out of a population of 53,500,000 souls, 42,000,000, or four-fifths, are literally slaves, being at the entire disposal of their masters, to sell, flog, or kill, at their pleasure. Fifteen millions of them belong to the Crown, and the remainder to the nobility. The remaining eleven and a half millions are free.

On turning up some ground a few days ago about a league from Péronne (France), five large jars of stone and earthen ware filled with pieces of 6f. and 3f., and another pot of glass containing 24 and 12 sous pieces, were found, amounting together in value to a sum estimated at 40,000f. This concealed treasure was very near the site of the ancient castle of Péronne, which has long been destroyed, and therefore is conjectured to have been deposited as far back as the siege of Péronne, in 1536.

A few days ago the Abbé Goldefy, curé of Mazeyrolles (France) was blown from his horse by a storm, near Villefranche-de-Belves, and falling into some water with his cloak blown round his head so as to prevent his extricating himself, was drowned, no person being near at the time to give assistance.

His Excellency Mr. H. Lytton Bulwer, her Majesty's Minister to Madrid, has returned to England, for a short visit.

A singular and adroit robbery is said to have been committed a few evenings ago, in one of the alleys of the Champs Elysees, Paris. The long fringe of the white shawl of a young and pretty woman caught in the button of a gentleman. The fair dame, in releasing her shawl from its hold, amused her captive with a thousand amiable apologies, and then tripped off with light and airy step, till lost under the trees. The next minute the gentleman wished to consult his watch, but, alas for him, it had disappeared with the lady.

"We receive this moment," says the Indicateur of Bordeaux of Sunday, "information that serious disturbances have taken place at Villareal, in the department of the Lot et-Garonne, on account of the Mayor having opposed the bells being rung, when a storm was threatening the town. His authority having been set at defiance, an armed force was called in, and order was re-established."

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange.—(Friday.)—Since Monday the receipts of English wheat up to our market have been on a very moderate scale. To-day the stands were rather scantily supplied with samples of that grain, while the demand was in a sluggish state, at previous quotations. Foreign wheat was a dull sale, at late rates. The supply of barley was rather limited, while the sale for it was rather dull, at unaltered figures. The same may be said of malt. For oats we had a steady inquiry, while the value of other grain was supported.

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 5540; barley, 50; oats, 1630 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 10,440 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 5060; barley, 1570; oats, 3080 quarters. Flour, 6310 sacks; malt, 5610 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 51s; ditto, white, 47s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 43s to 54s; ditto, white, 52s to 56s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distilling, 26s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 58s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s; potato ditto, 22s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 33s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk, Stockton, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 28 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red 38s to 48s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 24s; oats, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s; beans, 24s to 29s; peas, 28s to 32s per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to —; Baltic 15s to —s, per barrel.

The Seed Market.—For all kinds of seeds we have to report a very sluggish demand, at last week's quotations.

Linseed, English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 45s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 44s. Hempseed, 35s to 38s, per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 18s, per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 12s to 14s. Tares, 6s 6d to 7s 6d, per bushel. English Rapeseed, £24 to £26, per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s.; ditto foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000: Rapeseed cakes £5 5s to £6, per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s, per quarter. English Clover seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra, 52s to 55s; white 60s to 62s; extra up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 8d; of household ditto, 5d to 6½d, per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 47s 10d; barley, 29s 9d; oats, 22s 7d; rye, 31s 2d; beans, 38s 6d; peas, 38s 6d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 46s 11d; barley, 29s 11d; oats, 22s 3d; rye, 31s 0d: beans, 37s 3d; peas, 37s 5d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 9s; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 5s 6d; peas, 5s 6d.

Tea.—Several public sales of tea have taken place since our last. Altogether, 14,660 packages have been offered, out of which 3000 found buyers. Gunpowders and imperials went at a decline of 2d per lb. In other kinds no variation was noticed. About 2,000,000 lbs have arrived in London, and at the outports, within the last ten days, direct from China. By private contract a fair amount of business is doing, and prices may be considered firm.

Sugar.—On the whole only a moderate business has been transacted in sugar during the present week. West India may be considered 6d to 1s per cwt cheaper; but Bengal, Mauritius, and refined goods have firmly supported previous rates. Brown lumps have sold at 73s, and standard ditto 74s per cwt. The imports have been moderately extensive.

Coffee.—The market has been well supplied with Ceylon, which is selling at 42s to 43s 6d per cwt for good ordinary. In other kinds of coffee for home consumption, a moderate business has been doing at about previous quotations.

Cocoa.—Trinidad, at public sale, has sold at 48s 6d for good ordinary red, and 43s to 44s 6d for good ordinary greenish, being full rates.

Rice.—Bengal has continued in brisk request, and 950 bags at public sale went at 13s to 13s 6d per cwt for good bold white, little dusty.

Fruit.—We have to report a steady demand for currants at 43s to 51s per cwt. In raisins good business is doing at full prices. Valentias are producing 42s per cwt.

Provisions.—Owing to the prevailing fine weather, the demand for Dutch butter is very dull, at a further decline in the quotations of from 1s to 2s per cwt. The best Friesland is selling at 73s to 76s; and fine Holland, 73s to 75s per cwt. In Irish butter very little is doing at almost nominal figures. Corks, landed, are quoted at 78s to 80s; Limericks, 75s to 77s; and Waterfords, 75s to 76s per cwt. A large business has been doing in bacon at a further rise of 1s per cwt. Mild cured Waterford is selling at 50s to 51s per cwt. Irish lard is in slow request, at 56s to 61s for Waterford bladdered, and 55s to 57s per cwt for Belfast.

Tallow.—The supply of home tallow being somewhat on the increase, the tallow trade is rather inactive, at a decline of from 6d to 1s per cwt. P. Y. C. on the spot is selling at 40s to 40s 3d; and small parcels, 40s 6d. For forward delivery, 41s to 41s 3d are the nearest quotations. Town tallow 40s to 40s 6d net cash.

Coals.—Bell Rohson, 13s 6d; Hotspur, 14s; Bewicke and Co., 19s; East Hetton, 14s 6d; Russell's Hetton, 15s 9d; Hetton, 16s; Stewart's, 16s 6d; Adelaide, 15s 6d; Llangenneck, 21s per ton.

Oils.—Linseed oil is in firm request, yet no improvement can be noticed in value. All oth kinds of oil are a slow inquiry.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 10s; useful ditto, £4 12s to £5 4s; fine upland ditto, £5 5s to £5 14s clover hay, £4 10s to £6 0s; oat straw, £1 16s to £1 18s wheat straw, £1 18s to £2 0s, per load. New meadow hay has moved off steadily, at from £3 5s to £4 8s per load.

Hops (Friday).—Although the plantation accounts are not considered very favourable—an increase of fly being observed in some districts—the demand here for nearly all kinds of hops is heavy, at barely last week's quotations. In the duty, very little is doing.—Sussex pockets, £7 0s to £8 0s; Wealds, £7 8s to £8 10s; Mid Kents, £7 7s to £8 15s; East Kents, £9 9s to £11 0s; Choice ditto, £11 11s to £13 0s; Mid Kent bags, £7 15s to £8 15s; East Kent ditto, £10 10s to £11 15s.

Smithfield (Friday).—The supply of beasts here, to-day, being again extensive—there being on sale nearly 600 Scots from Scotland, and upwards of 50 oxen and cows from Rotterdam—the beef trade was extremely dull, at a decline in the quotations of quite 2d per 8 lbs, and a clearance was not effected. With sheep we were fairly supplied, while the inquiry for them was inactive, at an abatement of 2d per 8 lbs. The lamb trade was steady, at Monday's prices. The number of calves was large, owing to which the veal trade ruled dull, at a decline in value of 4d per 8 lbs. In pigs very little was doing. Milch cows sold at from £16 to £19 each.

Per 8lbs. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; second quality ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime large oxen, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 2d to 4s 4d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; second quality ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 4d; prime coarse woolled sheep, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime Southdowns ditto, 4s 10d to 5s 0d; large coarse calves, 3s 10d to 4s 4d; prime small ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 10d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; neat small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 2d; lambs, 5s 0d to 6s 0d. Suckling calves, 18s 0d to 30s 0d; and quarter old store pigs, 16s 0d to 20s 0d each. Beasts, 959; cows, 148; sheep and lambs, 11,960; calves, 449; pigs, 340.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a very dull trade here to-day, and prices were not supported:—

Per 8lbs. by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 8d; middling ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime large ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; large pork, 2s 6d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 2s 10d to 3s 4d; middling ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 8d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 8d small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 2d; lamb, 4s 10d to 5s 10d. Robert Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English market has been almost deserted during the week, prices remaining without fluctuation, at last week's quotation, until Thursday. Absence of business, rather than any other cause, made things rather flat, and Consols, on Thursday, receded from 99 to ⅛ for the opening. During the period that Consols are shut, and just previous to the expiration of the half year, this dullness is not unusual. The closing prices are, Reduced Three per Cents., 99¼ to ⅜; New Three and a Quarter per Cents., 102⅛ ⅛; Bank Stock, 211; Exchequer Bills, 57 to 59; Consols for the opening, 99 to ⅛.

In the Foreign House the Mexican and Columbian improved at the beginning of the week, but not much variation occurred in the other securities. Mexican has since advanced from 37⅝ (Monday's price) to 37¾, the closing quotation. Columbian has fluctuated between 17½ to ⅝, to the closing improved price of 18½. This improvement has arisen from the announcement of Messrs. Baring and Co. that a dividend of 4s. 6d. (which, with 5s. 6d. already paid, will make one half year due on the New Grenada portion of the debt) will be payable from the 26th of June, and the conversion of the debt commence from that date.

The amount of business done in Spanish has been very small, and prices have been and remain about 28¼ to ⅜ for the Actives, this quotation being almost nominal. The Three per Cents. have fluctuated between 41⅛ and 40⅞, at which price they closed. Dutch is 63¾ for the Two and a Half per Cents.; and Portuguese is 66½ to 67, with an upward tendency.

The Railway market has been inactive during the week, and prices have displayed some symptoms of decline, from the absence of transactions. The payment of the dividends due in July, will, however, without doubt, create more animation, from the amount of capital thrown into the market. The project of the Nottingham and Boston Railway has already received such powerful local support, that no applications for shares can be received after Monday. The influential and wealthy names that form the Provisional Committee is a strong guarantee of the ultimate success of the measure in Parliament, while the interval between this period and next session will admit of such careful surveys of the line as shall ensure its safe passage through the Standing Orders' Committee. All the French lines close flatly; but a little more animation was perceptible at the end of the week in the English, as the following prices will show. Aberdeen, 4; Armagh, Coleraine, and Portrush, 2½; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 4½; Bristol and Exeter, 97; Ditto (New), 11¼; Caledonian, 11½; Cambridge and Lincoln, 4⅜; Chester and Holyhead, 16; Churnet Valley, 5; Coventry, Bedworth, and Nuneaton, 1½; Coventry and Leicester, 1⅜; Cornwall, 4⅜; Direct Northern, 3⅜; Dublin and Belfast Junction, 9; Dublin and Galway, 4½; Dublin and Mullingar, 4½; Eastern Counties, 20⅜; Ditto New, 7½; Great North of Scotland, 27⅛; Great North of England, 250; Ditto New, 34; Great Western, 205; Lancaster and Carlisle, 46½; London and Birmingham, 239; Do. New Thirds, 46; London and Blackwall, 11; London and Brighton, 74⅜; London and Croydon, 19; London and South Western, 84; Ditto New, 16½; London and York, 3⅜; London, Salisbury, and Yeovil, 2⅜; Londonderry and Coleraine, 2⅜; Londonderry and Enniskillen, 4⅜; Lynn and Ely, 6; Midland, 186½; Newcastle and Berwick, 18⅜; Newark and Sheffield, 2½; North British, 24⅜; Ditto New, 6½; North Kent, 4⅜; Norwich and Brandon, 20½; Oxford and Worcester, 6¼; Richmond and West End Junction, 3½; Rugby, Worcester, and Tring, 1⅜; Scottish Central, 6½; South Devon, 25½; South Eastern and Dover, 47½; South Wales, 5⅜; Trent Valley, 18½; Trent Valley and Holyhead Junction, 2⅛; Welch Midland, 3⅜; York and North Midland, 111; Boulogne and Amiens, 9¼; Bordeaux and Toulouse 2; Bordeaux, Toulouse, and Cette, 2; Great Northern of France (Laffitte's), 5; Do., do.. (Rosamel's), 2½; Louvain and Jemeppe, 5⅛; Lyons and Avignon, 2½; Namur and Liege, 4⅜; Orleans and Vierzon, 16; Orleans and Bordeaux, 8⅛; Over Yssel, 0⅜; Paris and Lyons (Laffitte's), 3; Paris and Lyons (Ganneron's), 2⅜; Paris and Lyons (Calon's), 1⅞; Paris and Orleans, 45½; Paris and Rouen, 41¼; Paris and Strasbourg (Ganneron's), 2⅜; Ditto (Compte de L'Est), 2⅜; Sambre and Meuse, 8; Tours and Nantes (Mackenzie's), 2½.

Saturday Morning.—There was no feature of interest in either the English or Foreign houses yesterday. Prices scarcely varied a fraction. The Share Market was flat; but prices were maintained with the exception of Dublin and Galway, which receded to 4.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

Tuesday, June 24.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, June 20.—Royal Regiment of Artillery: Major-General P. Fyers, C.B., to be Colonel Commandant, vice Lieutenant-General Parry; Second Captain J. E. Dupuis to be Captain, vice Dickens; First Lieutenant P. F. Faddy to be Second Captain vice Dupuis; Second Lieutenant C. W. Grey to be First Lieutenant, vice Faddy.

Commissions Signed by the Lord Lieutenant of the County of Cornwall.—Thomas Tristram Spry Carlyon, Esq., to be Deputy Lieutenant; Francis Howell, Esq., to be ditto.

Commission Signed by the Lord Lieutenant of the County of Derby.—Thomas Grey Gisborne, Esq., to be Deputy Lieutenant.

Commission Signed by the Lord Lieutenant of the County of Stafford.—Richard Dyott, Esq. to be Deputy Lieutenant.

Commission Signed by the Lord Lieutenant of the County of Cumberland.—Westmoreland and Cumberland Regiment of Yeomanry Cavalry: G. R. G. Rees to be Cornet.

BANKRUPTS.—W. MORTON, Railway-place, Fenchurch-street, City, gas-fitter. W. H. LEJEUNE, Southampton, corn-merchant. W. MOSSMAN, 14, Clarke's-place, High-street, Islington, fancy stationer. G. BOWLES and J. P. POCKLINGTON, 20, Newgate-street, City, meat salesmen. J. WALKER, jun., Leeds, butcher. F. RIDD, formerly of Barnstaple, Devonshire, but now of Nether Stowey, Somersetshire, surgeon. W. HILDITCH, late of Denbigh, but now of Fawchen, Flintshire, grocer. M. COLLEDGE, Brinklow, Warwickshire, coal-merchant.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. YOUNG, Leith, merchant. J. STENHOUSE, Dunfermline, brewer. A. WHAMOND, Dundee, grocer.

Friday, June 27.

WAR-OFFICE, June 27.—7th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. W. Hogg to be Captain, vice Codrington; Cornet C. Arkwright to be Lieutenant, vice Hogg; A. N. Adams to be Cornet, vice Arkwright.

14th Light Dragoons: Major J. Lawrenson to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Brunton. 17th: Capt. F. Burdett to be Major, vice Lawrenson; Lieut. H. R. Benson to be Captain, vice Burdett: Cornet R. D. H. Lane to be Lieutenant, vice Benson; P. J. W. Miles to be Cornet, vice Lane.

9th Foot: Lieut. H. C. Tyler to be Captain, vice Stanford. 11th: Brevet-Colonel J. Hogge to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Sir M. Creagh: Major H. K. Bloomfield to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Hogge; Captain J. Singleton to be Major, vice Bloomfield: Lieut. J. T. Stanley to be Captain, vice Singleton; Ensign J. A. Hunter to be Lieutenant, vice Stanley; G. M. G. Quantrille to be Ensign, vice Hunter; Assistant-Surgeon H. Hadley M.D., to be Surgeon, vice D. Leonard. 19th: Lieutenant G. B. Jennings, to be Lieutenant vice Maguire. 24th: W. Selby to be Ensign, vice Hackett. 40th: Ensign W. H. Queade to be Lieutenant, vice Tyler; R. J. L. Coore to be Ensign, vice Queade. 44th: Godfrey Cooper to be Ensign, vice Chamberlain. 49th: Lieut. G. F. Bartley to be Captain, vice Wright; Ensign R. L. Ross to be Lieutenant, vice Bartley. 60th: Lieutenant J. Maguire to be Lieutenant, vice Jennings. 62nd: Ensign M. J. Gregorson to be Lieutenant, vice M'Leod; Cadet F. R. E. Burnside to be Ensign, vice Gregorson. 79th: T. G. Robertson to be Ensign, vice Maitland. 93rd: Cadet W. W. Carden to be Ensign, vice Ross.

Rifle Brigade: F. D. Howell to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Hadley.

Unattached.—Capt J. O'Grady to be Major.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, June 26.—Royal Artillery.—Gent. Cadets to be Second Lieutenants: J. S. W. Atkinson, vice Pigou; W. L. Dumaresq, vice Fraser; G. Le Marchant Tupper, vice Telfer; H. Hoyman, vice Strange; A. Dew, vice Gregory; G. S. Robertson, vice Newton; E. H. East, vice Gleig; D. E. Hoste, vice Frye; E. Taswell, vice Yelverton; E. B. Winterbottom, vice Vesey; John Singleton, vice Standish.

Corps of Royal Engineers: Cadets to be Second Lieutenants: C. C. Chesney, vice Mann; E. C. de Moleyns, vice Nugent; L. J. A. Armit, vice Lovell; C. B. Ewart, vice Synge.

BANKRUPTCY ANNULLED.—T. HERNE, Cardiff, Glamorganshire, draper.

BANKRUPTS.—S. MAY and P. MOTTRAM, Shrewsbury, drapers. R. CARR, Fore-street, Cripplegate, cheesemonger. W. GREENWELL, Redcross-street, Southwark, wheelwright. J. FORRESTER, Hampstead, baker. C. PAINE, Lewes, plumber and glazier. R. WESTMORE, West Derby, near Liverpool, joiner. W. MAY, Liverpool, draper. F. LORAINE, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, bookseller. E. THOMAS, Bristol, grocer.

BIRTHS.

At Fulham, Mrs. John Walpole, of a son.—At Hadley, Middlesex, the wife of the Rev. T H. Winbolt, of a daughter.—At Cadogan-place, the wife of B. Blundell, Esq., of a son.—At Clapton, the lady of H. I. Nicholl, D.C.L., of a son.—At Goodrest Lodge, Berks, the wife of Bulkeley J. M. Praed, Esq., of a son.—In Wilton-place, the lady of John Harvey Lovell, Esq., of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At Oporto, Robert Vanzeller, Esq., to Dorothea, only daughter of the Baroness de Villar.—At Twickenham Church, Edmund Edward, son of the late Hon. and Rev. E. J. Turnour, to Helen, youngest daughter of the late William Davies, Esq.—At Hampton-court, Captain George F. Duckett, to Isabella, daughter of the late Lieutenant-General Sir Lionel Smith, Bart., G.C.B. and G.C.H.—At Edwarston, Suffolk, Richard Harby Oddie, Esq., to Harriet Ann, eldest daughter of the late Captain Job Hanmer, R.N.—At Nuneham Courtenay, Oxon., the Rev Henry Blackstone Williams, to Christiana, eldest daughter of the Rev. James Baker.—At Dublin, the Rev. Thomas Pulvertoft Thirkill to Sophia Hamilton, third daughter of the late Rev. Alexander Chetwode Hamilton Stubber, of Kilkenny.—At Torquay, E. K. Fayle, Esq., to Lucy Lucinda, youngest daughter of the late Fitzherbert Brooke, Esq.—At Bath, the Rev. R. B. Brereton, to Mary, third daughter of W. J. Bererdon, Esq.

DEATHS.

At Leicester, John Lawton, Esq., in his 84th year.—At Boulogne-sur-Mer, aged 71, Commander Edward Nathaniel Greensword, R.N.—At Hastings, aged 80, Mary, widow of the late Rev. Gainsford Smith.—At East Sheen, the Rev. Edward Patteson, in his 83rd year.—Jane, the wife of Lieutenant Sir W. A. Hungate, Bart., R.N.—At Belgrade, near Constantinople, the lady of T. N. Black, Esq., agent for Lloyd's at the latter place.—At Caxton, Cambridgeshire, the Rev. Edward F. Champneys.—At Brompton, William Waterman, Esq.—Mary, wife of Thomas Henry Cooper, Esq., and daughter of the late John Lainson, Esq., Alderman.—In Upper Berkeley-street West, in the 78th year of her age, Leah, widow of the late Thomas Boileau, Esq., of Calcutta.—At Calais, Elizabeth, relict of Samuel Lewis, Esq.—At Lympstone, Devon, Maria Ann Dyer, wife of the Rev. J. H. Dyer.—At Southend, Essex, the Rev. Joseph Smith, B.A.

GRAND INSPECTION OF THE EXPERIMENTAL SQUADRON AT SPITHEAD, BY HER MAJESTY.

THE FLEET FROM THE MOTHERBANK.

There was a very splendid Nava Spectacle on Monday last, when her Majesty and Prince Albert inspected the Experimental Squadron, at Spithead.

The Victoria and Albert Royal yacht, Captain Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, weighed anchor in Cowes Roads at ten o'clock, and was in a few minutes off Osborne House, at Mead Hole, passing the Fearless steam vessel, Commander Sherringham, anchored off Norris Castle. There was scarcely a breath of wind at this time, and the heat of the brilliant sun was intense. A short time after the Victoria and Albert had anchored, the Royal barge was lowered, and Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, G.C.B., in full dress uniform, wearing the badge of his order, attended by Mr. Obbard, the senior mate of the Royal yacht, proceeded in the barge to Mead Hole.

The Royal party and suite, consisting of her Majesty and Prince Albert, Lady Portman, the Lady in Waiting, the Hon. G. E. Anson, Major-General Wemyss, Col. Bowles, and Colonel Grey, were on the beach exactly at eleven o'clock, when her Majesty, the Prince, Lady Portman, and Col. Grey went on board the Royal yacht in the barge, and Mr. Anson, Col. Bowles, and General Wemyss were rowed thither in one of the coast guard boats, four of which were keeping guard, and Lieut. Coppinger and a party of men were in attendance on the beach.

The Queen and his Royal Highness were received on board the yacht by the officers with the usual deference and respect; the Royal standard was shifted from the barge to the mainmast of the Victoria and Albert, and at half-past eleven the anchor was weighed, and she started at rapid speed towards the fleet, the appearance of which, from the Motherbank, was truly suberb.—(See the Engraving.) The booming of the guns firing the Admiralty salute was previously heard at Cowes, and as the yacht proceeded the smoke of the Black Eagle could be seen among the squadron, the yacht herself being observed among the mighty hulls and masts and rigging of the men of war. Prince Albert almost immediately proceeded to the paddle-box platform, which his Royal Highness himself had suggested for the yacht, and from which an uninterrupted view is afforded of the surrounding objects. The Prince was engaged in conversation with Lord Adolphus, and appeared to take much pleasure in the view which Spithead then presented. Her Majesty also ascended the platform soon after the Royal yacht got under way, and walked up and down. When abreast of Ryde, the Royal yacht hove to, to receive the Lords of the Admiralty on board; their lordships having left the Black Eagle, then 200 yards distant, to pay their respects to the Queen. Their lordships, on boarding the Royal yacht on the port side, immediately proceeded to the paddle-box platform, from which place the Queen and the Prince had been watching the Admiralty barge. The Earl of Haddington, Sir William Gage, and Mr. Corry, dressed in their Admiralty uniforms, were in succession most graciously received by her Majesty and the Prince, and the Queen and his Royal Highness were afterwards seen in conversation with the Earl of Haddington.

The Royal yacht was then again in motion, and just at this time, when proceeding in a course which led between the two divisions of the men-of-war, and forming a centre line, the ship's bows pointing up to Cowes, a gun was fired from the St. Vincent; a moment, and another flash commenced a roar of British thunder up and down the two lines on each side. Amidst the smoke, which by the breeze from the S.S.E. was drifted from the port sides of the ships of the second division through the shrouds, curling round the masts, and enveloping the

THE "SUPERB," UNDER FULL SAIL.

THE FLEET GETTING UNDER WAY.

decks and lower rigging in its progress to the ships of the other division, the gay colours of the flags of all nations, with which the ships were dressed out on the firing of the first gun, were seen at admirable advantage, while the men in blue jackets and white trousers, ranging along the yards, tier above tier, dwindled in appearance from full human stature on the lower yards, to the merest specks on the symmetrical spars which crowned the slender masts, as, rising perpendicularly towards the heavens, they apparently pierced the clouds. Now flashed the guns, at one time succeeded by a report as if a whole broadside had been discharged; the ships firing a gun each simultaneously, then at irregular intervals, divisible only by seconds, one answered to the other with fierce and sudden retort; sharp and cracking were the sounds from one quarter, with lightning celerity; steady, regular, and booming, came the peals from another.—(See the Engraving.) It was supremely gallant and glorious, and the show gave no faint idea of stern reality, and induced the impression that still

"Britain's best bulwarks [are her wooden walls."

Everything combined to add lustre and greatness to this glorious scene—all that nature could effect in the bright sun, the fleecy clouds, the genial breeze, the blue waters "rippling, not roughening to a wave," the silvery bays

"Where commerce lifts the peaceful sail,
And where the war-barks rise,"

the resounding shores and pomp of groves, and all that affectionate loyalty and devotion could effect to do homage to our Island Queen and to gratify her illustrious consort. The broad expanse of the sea in the vicinity of the fleet was dotted with boats of all kinds. There was a barge from each ship with a distinguishing pennant in the bow, under the command of a lieutenant. These were employed as a guard to the Royal barge, to prevent the pleasure boats from inconveniencing her Majesty by coming too near. There were Royal yacht squadron schooners and cutters sailing round and between the fleet. Steamers from Southampton and Portsmouth, filled with well dressed ladies and gentlemen, and squadrons of other boats of all sizes, some under sail and others being rowed.

The Royal yacht, under slow speed, stopped her engines when abreast of the St. Vincent, 120, Captain Rowley, the flag-ship of the commander in-chief of the experimental squadron, Rear-Admiral Parker, C.B.; the Royal barge was lowered, and the Royal party descended into it. Lord Adolphus was steering, her Majesty was in the cross seat astern, Prince Albert on the right, then the Earl of Haddington and Mr. Corry; on the left were Lady Portman, Sir W. Gage, and Mr. Obbard (the senior mate of the Royal yacht), in attendance.

As her Majesty was leaving the yacht for the barge, the whole of the men-of-war's boats tossed up their oars, and repeated it on every occasion of her Majesty's entering or leaving the barge. The Queen first proceeded to the flag-ship, the St. Vincent, 120, the first ship of the starboard division. Her Majesty and the Prince, on entering the ship, were received at the top of the stairs by the gallant commander in-chief of the squadron, Rear-Admiral Parker, C.B., and his flag captain, Captain Rowley, who conducted the Royal party over the ship, the band playing "God Save the Queen," and the marines drawn up on the poop presenting arms. After visiting the Admiral's cabin, and walking the whole length of the ship, her Majesty and the Prince in the most condescending manner conversing in turn with the Lords of the Admiralty, Lord Adolphus, Admiral Parker, and Captain Rowley, the Royal party descended into the barge, having been on board the St. Vincent seventeen minutes. On quitting this ship, the Admiral presented her Majesty with a plan of the fleet under his command lying at anchor at Spithead in the two divisions.

The Royal standard, on her Majesty entering the St. Vincent, was run up to the mainmast head, Admiral Parker's flag (blue) still flying at the mizen.—(See the Engraving.)

ADMIRAL PARKER GOING ON BOARD THE ROYAL YACHT.

THE FLEET FIRING THE SALUTE.

The Royal barge then, attended by Rear-Admiral Parker in his barge and the squadron of men-of-war boats in procession, proceeded to the Trafalgar, 120, commanded by Captain Thomas Fanshawe Martin, master (the son of the gallant and distinguished Admiral Sir Byam Martin). Her Majesty was received on the platform at the head of the ladder by Captain Martin, and, accompanied by that gallant officer, the Queen and Prince Albert, the lady in waiting, and the lords and officers before enumerated, went over every part of this ship, admiring her much; and her Majesty repeatedly announcing her gratification at the splendid order and appearance which she presented. It will be recollected that her Majesty was present, five years since, at the launch of this noble vessel, and most condescendingly performed the ceremony of naming the ship. The Royal party was more than thirty minutes on board the Trafalgar; and, on leaving, again expressed her gratification at the visit, as the Queen had before done to Admiral Parker and Captain Rowley on quitting the St. Vincent; but her Majesty was specially pleased at the appearance of the Trafalgar, and was heard to eulogise the magnificent structure in the Royal barge. The Trafalgar hoisted the Royal standard at the main as the Queen entered, and the band played the national anthem.

The Royal barge now proceeded past the Queen, 110, Captain Sir B. W. Walker, the third ship of the starboard division, and proceeded on to the Albion, 90, Captain N. Lockyer, C.B., which was the sternmost ship of that line, the boat squadron in procession as before, and the spectators on board the numerous craft, steamers, and sailing vessels, cheering most enthusiastically in the course. Her Majesty was received by Capt. N. Lockyer, C.B., and the officers of the Albion, on board that vessel, and immediately proceeded to the captain's cabin, and walked across the stern gallery on the outside. The appearance of the Queen was the signal for renewed cheers from the boats, to which impulse of loyalty, on this, as well as on the previous and following occasions, her Majesty repeatedly bowed. The Royal party remained on board the Albion twelve minutes, and her Majesty, on quitting the side, acknowledged her gratification at the splendid fittings of this ship.—(See the Engraving.)

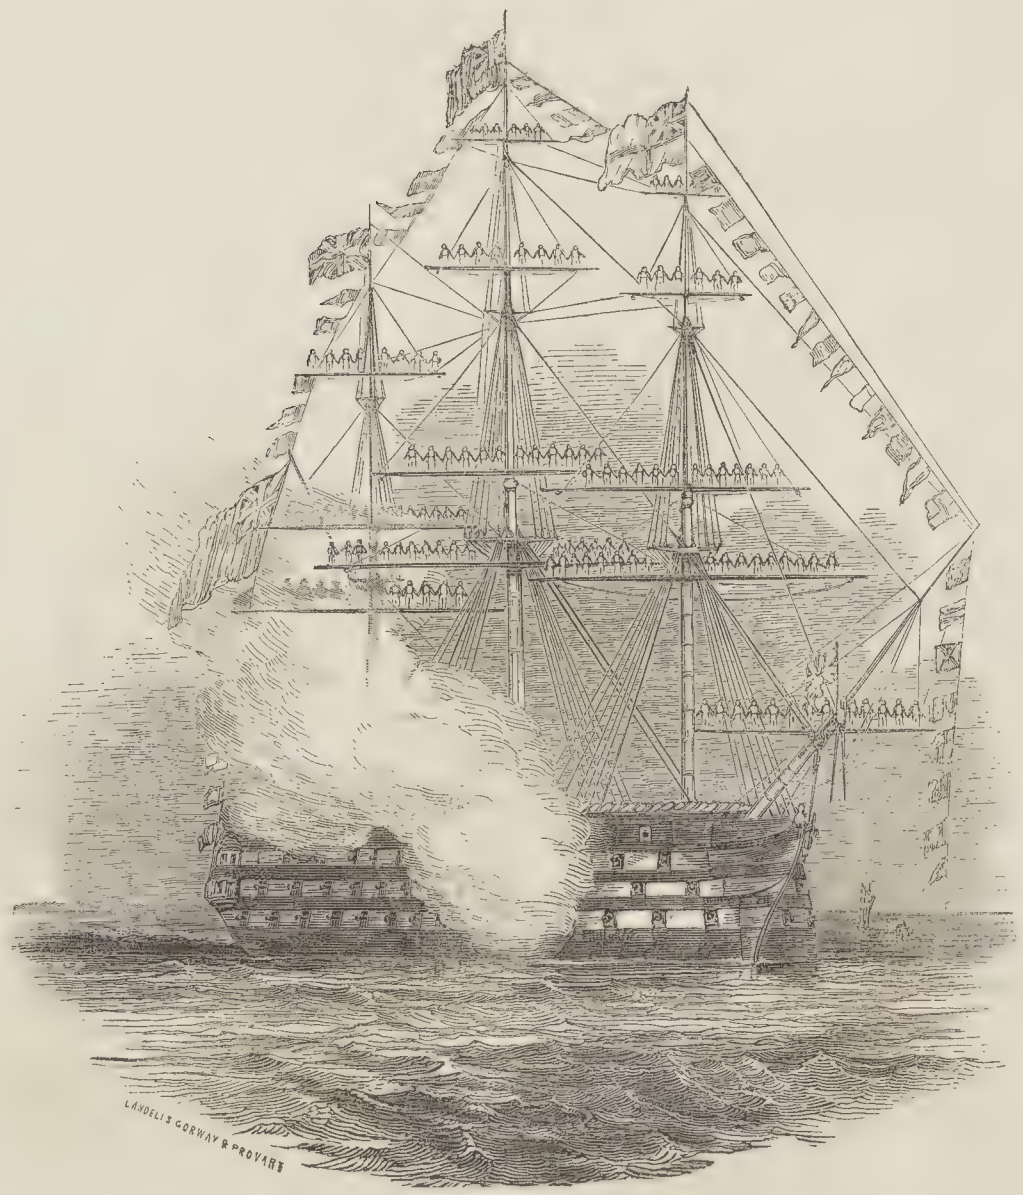
The gallant captain of the Albion, with the freedom of a true British sailor, took delight in explaining everything to her Majesty, and frequently in drawing the Royal attention to particular objects. On visiting this ship the Queen took especial notice of the son of the Earl of Orkney, who, as one of the midshipmen who was on duty as a "side boy," her Majesty, in the most condescending manner, inquired how long he had been in the service, and was informed about seventeen months. The side boys on board each ship were composed by midshipmen.

The Royal yacht, on her Majesty going on board the St. Vincent, proceeded down the line, and brought up at the Albion's stern, to which she was fastened by a hawser; and the Royal barge was again alongside the Victoria and Albert, from the Albion, at thirty minutes past one, nearly one hour and a half being occupied in visiting the three ships of the fleet which her Majesty honoured with her Royal presence. On leaving the Albion, the band again played "Rule Britannia," and the men on the yards gave three hearty cheers.



On the arrival of the Queen, on board the Royal yacht, accompanied by the Lords of the Admiralty and Rear-Admiral Parker, the Royal standard was again hoisted at the main, and the Admiralty flag at the fore, and a signal was made for all the captains of the fleet to repair on board. Her Majesty soon became surrounded by the gallant officers of the squadron. Each, on arrival, was presented by the Earl of Haddington to her Majesty in due form, and then to the Prince.

The Queen received her officers on the quarter-deck of the Royal yacht, on the port side, and, at the conclusion of the presentations, bowed to the whole, and retired to the cupola, attended by Lady Portman. His Royal Highness Prince Albert also took leave of the officers on the quarter-deck.

The deck of the yacht presented a very brilliant appearance while the presentations of the following officers were being made:—Captain Rowley, of the St. Vincent; Captain T. F. Martin, of the Trafalgar; Captain Sir B. Walker, of the Queen, wearing the ribbon of a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath; Captain N. Lockyer, of the Albion, 90, wearing the ribbon of Companion of the Bath; Captain Willes, of the Vanguard, 80, the senior officer, his ship being first of the second division; Captain Fairfax Moresby, of the Canopus, 84, of the second division, wearing the ribbon of Companion of the Bath; Captain Collier, of the Rodney 92, of the second division, wearing the ribbon of the Order of C.B.; Captain Corry, of the Superb, 80, the sternmost ship of the second division.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert wore the ribbon of the Order of the Garter; the Earl of Haddington wore a decoration; and Sir William Gage had the ribbon of the Grand Cross of the Hanoverian Order.

These officers then left the Royal yacht; and Lord Haddington and the other Lords of the Admiralty, having taken leave of the Queen and the

THE FLAG-SHIP "ST. VINCENT" FIRING A SALUTE.

Prince, his lordship and Sir W. Gage proceeded on board the Black Eagle about 100 yards abreast, and, transferring the Admiralty flag to that vessel returned to the port. The Hon. Mr. Corry, with Captain Corry, in his gig went on board the Superb.

On board the ships her Majesty visited, the three Commanders were presented to the Queen, and will be promoted to the rank of post captains, W. F. Glanville (1840) of the St. Vincent; F. Martin, of the Trafalgar; and W. Wybly Chambers (1841) of the Albion; and it is expected that the mate of the Royal yacht, Mr. Obbard, who was in attendance in the Royal barge, will also be recommended to her Majesty's favour by Lord Haddington for promotion. The Royal yacht having proceeded to the eastward, as far as the Vernon, now passed down through the line, cheered in her progress by the thousands of persons afloat, and heartily so by a man of-war-like Indiaman, the Ellenborough, outward bound, with a number of troops on board. The poop was crowded by ladies and gentlemen, and the crew, in white frocks and trousers, manned the whole side of the vessel. Her Majesty appeared highly pleased with their display of loyalty, and marked the Royal appreciation by bowing. The Royal yacht then left the Vernon, 50, on her left, swept round the Superb, belonging to the 2d division, and passed up outside of that line towards Cowes. The yards of all the ships remained manned, and the Vernon, Superb, Rodney, Canopus, and Vanguard, enthusiastically cheered as the Royal yacht crossed the bows of the Superb, and got abreast of each ship. Her Majesty and the Prince had a splendid view of the noble broadsides of these fine men-of war as the Royal yacht passed up outside the lines. Just as the Victoria and Albert had passed abreast the St. Vincent, that ship led off a parting salute, and again the whole squadron became enveloped in smoke, forming the same magnificent spectacle as we have before feebly attempted to describe. The Royal yacht at full speed soon released herself of the troublesome proximity of one or two steamers (which had caused some little inconvenience to the Royal party when in the barge), and arrived off Osborne at twenty-five minutes past two. Her Majesty was landed by Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence at Mead's Hole in the Royal barge. Carriages conveyed the Queen, Prince, and suite to Osborne; and on his lordship again reaching the yacht she proceeded to her moorings off Cowes.

Her Majesty and the Prince were much pleased with the inspection.

The Queen and his Royal Highness partook of sandwiches from the officers of the Royal yacht on the deck of the vessel.

The Duke of Marlborough's schooner yacht the Wivern accompanied the Royal yacht to Cowes.

GRAND NAVAL EVOLUTIONS.

It may be remembered that such an exhibition as that of Monday was never witnessed since the visit of the Allied Sovereigns in 1814, when 24 sail of the line, and half as many frigates, went through a series of naval evolutions in the presence of their Majesties and the Royal Family; but gigantic as was the scale upon which those evolutions were performed, it is said by naval officers that they would bear no sort of comparison with the beautiful manœuvres of the experimental squadron, although the former occurred at the termination of a long war, in the course of which both officers and men had had abundant opportunities of perfecting themselves, under every possible circumstance, in their respective duties.

The wind, which blew fresh from the north on Sunday, was as fresh from the same quarter on Monday morning; but at the moment of her Majesty going afloat it had veered to north-west, and had somewhat fallen. At this time steamers, crowded on all parts with passengers, might be seen traversing the waters of the Solent. The Monarch, of Southampton, could not have had less than 700 aboard; the Ruby was equally full, and Gem, Solent, Calpe, and many others. The Pacha, Oriental Company's steamer, lingering round the fleet with a large party on board, and above 100 yachts of all sizes and rig, belonging to the various Royal squadrons, were sailing round. Among them were the Wivern, with her owner, his Grace the Duke of Marlborough, on board; the Anaconda, schooner. Sir C. Ibbetson; the Circassian, schooner, Captain J. Lyons; the Falcon, Mr. Beardmore: the Camilla schooner. The Kestrel, now a beautiful brigantine, the property of the Earl of Yarborough, was lying at anchor to the northward of the starboard division of the fleet, at the inner moorings.

At a quarter before twelve, the Royal yacht was about half a mile to the westward of the fleet, running down to it, with the Royal standard flying at the main. The Black Eagle was lying-to for the Royal yacht.

The Royal yacht now neared the admiral's ship, and the men on board the squadron were seen in the tops. The life-lines had been rigged, and they were all ready to lay out on the yards. A signal was given from the yacht to salute; and the St. Vincent answered it by a peal; and the second gun was followed by the general salute from the whole fleet; the men immediately manned the yards, but none of the ships were dressed in colours, which was considered favourable to the idea of the squadron getting under way. The beautiful effect of the two divisions saluting again called forth the recollectien of "glories old, and battles won on the great sea." The Royal yacht was now motionless on the water opposite to the St. Vincent, with the yachts, boats, and steamers crowding round her. Rear-Admiral Parker, in his barge, now left his flag-ship to proceed on board the Royal yacht to ascertain her Majesty's wishes.—(See the Engraving.) It was at first determined that all the fleet should get under way, form line of battle ahead, manœuvre, and return to their moorings; but it was afterwards arranged that the fleet should make sail at anchor, and that one of the squadron should lift her anchors and proceed to sea. Admiral Parker, therefore, after remaining a few minutes on board the yacht, returned to the St. Vincent, and then proceeded down the line to the sternmost ship of the port or second division. He arrived with his flag officer, Lieut. Craycroft, on board the Superb, 80, at half-past 12, when the blue ensign was struck on board the St. Vincent and hoisted on the mizen-mast of the Superb; the Vanguard, 80, Captain Willes, having a commodore's broad pendant flying as second in command. Her Majesty and the Prince were now on the port side of the paddle-box platform watching the three-deckers with much interest. There were on the main-yard of the Trafalgar 24 men, on the topsail-yard 16, on the top-gallant-yard 8, and on the royal-yard 6, stretching upward in pyramid-like grandeur. The men were now ordered in from the yards of all the ships except the Superb, and a few minutes was devoted by the crowds on board the private steamers in cheering her Majesty and the Prince, which the Queen repeatedly acknowledged by waving her parasol, and the Prince by taking off his hat.

LOOSED SAILS.

The yacht was now in the centre of the two lines of the fleet to witness the naval tactics, which now commenced by a signal from the Admiral at

TOP GALLANTS SAILS HOME.

12.35, to prepare for getting under way. The men were now seen making their way aloft, running with feline agility to their respective quarters. Another signal, at 12.40, and simultaneously the rigging of the whole fleet, except the Superb, was lumbered with canvass, the men on the yards having loosed the sails. Another signal from the Admiral, and the gallant fellows sheeted home, and up went top-sails, top-gallant-sails, and royals, the Trafalgar, to the admiration of every one, performing this evolution

PREPARING TO MAKE SAIL.

with a smartness not to be surpassed, and the others in a manner most creditable to them. The bands on board the steamers most encouragingly playing "Cheer Up, My Lads." At 12.46, the anchor supposed to be up, the signal from the Admiral was to make sail on the starboard tack; then the ships hoisted the jib and flying-jib, and set the spanker, and were braced up on that tack. At 12.55 the top-sails were lowered and ordered to be reefed, which was executed with astonishing celerity; and the Superb at this time had lifted her anchors, and was running out under jib and flying-jib. At 1.6 the royal and flying-jib were taken in, two reefs were taken in the top-sails, and the ships were immediately reduced to double-reefed top sails, top-gallant-sails, and courses, jib, and spanker; the Trafalgar occupying only two minutes in the manœuvre, and the other ships not much more. The Royal yacht was now again in motion, and was proceeding slowly outside the first division. At 44 minutes past one the signal from the Admiral was "in top-gallant sails," and the fluttering canvass was immediately secured. Then came the order to close reef top-sails and courses, and away flew the hands to their work. The ships then were reduced to close reefed top-sails and reefed courses and foretopmast stay-sail, the jib and spanker having been stowed, the three-deckers having their courses hauled up. In this manner the fleet was left by the Superb under snug sail on the starboard tack, giving their crews time for dinner.—(See the Engraving.)

MAKING SAIL ON THE STARBOARD TACK.

REEFING TOPSAIL.

DOUBLE REEFED TOPSAILS, IN TOP-GALLANT SAILS.

Meanwhile the Royal yacht and the mosquito fleet had followed the Superb, running before the wind under all sail to royals to the eastward into the Channel. The Black Eagle steam yacht was also making way with her, and as she increased her distance, the scene expanded in beauty. Off St. Helena, looking up to Spithead, were the Albion, 90, Captain Lockyer, C.B.; the Queen, 110, Captain Sir Baldwin Walker, K.C.B; and the Trafalgar, 120, Captain T. F. Maston; under sail at their anchorage, their bows looking downward, the St. Vincent, 120, Captain Rowley, the other ship of the starboard division, appeared to be standing across, with her treble tier of ports broadly displayed; while the broadsides of the port division, the Canopus, 84, Captain F. Moresby, C.B.; the Vanguard, 89, Captain Willes; and the Rodney, 92, Captain Collier, C.B., frowningly loomed. At one moment the yachts were in line, six or seven deep; at another, following in each other's wake. The blue sky was chequered with white fleecy clouds, thickly clustered landward, whilst the horizon seaward was bounded by a thin mist, losing itself as it stretched upwards in the light blue sky. The sea was beautifully clear, green and glassy, and only variegated by the white foam which marked the track of the steamers, or curled amid the bows of the noble line of-battle ship, as she

"Walked the waters as a thing of life."

Nobly she dashed on, even outstripping the steamers, but closely followed by two cutter yachts, one of which was the Corsair. At forty-five minutes past one the gallant ship set the fore-topmast and top-gallantmast starboard studding sails. The Royal yacht had got abreast the Superb at two o'clock, and as she ranged up on the weather beam about a cable's length, the gallant Admiral aboard the ship lowered the ensign, and again, as the Royal yacht hove to, she lowered her fore royal, and continued her course. At 3h. 30m. signal was made to the fleet at Spithead to furl sails, and in an instant it had diminished.

The Victoria and Albert had now reached the Vernon, when the crew of that ship manned the shrouds, and, clustering there, gave three hearty cheers; and her Majesty, evidently much pleased with the manner and position from which this expression of loyalty came, stood on the paddle-box platform, and bowed. The yachts lowered their colours, and as the Royal yacht passed again through the fleet, music and cheers resounded from the decks and yards as they were again manned; and at 3h. 36m., at the signal from the Royal vessel, another general peal from the cannon gave the farewell salute, as, at full speed, the Victoria and Albert proceeded on to Mead's Hole, where her Majesty and the Prince and suite were landed, and conveyed to Osborne by the Royal carriages.

THE GRAND NAVAL REVIEW.

What stir is on the deep?
What glory by the coast?
Why have they gathered round our cliffs
Their ancient pride and boast?
Why rides Old England's might
At anchor on her sea?
Like some colossal bird of war
Plumed out for victory!

It's eye upon the sun!
It's wings upon the wave!
It's voice—a nation's freedom song—
The pœans of the brave!
It's heart—the heart of oak—
It's joy—the cannon's roar—
It's mate—that people, million-voiced—
Whose cheers resound the shore!

The gorgeous banners spread
Their sun-hues to the eye!
The masts are like the palmy trees,
That climb towards the sky!
Each giant house of life
Is warm with Nature's breath,
Yet bears within its brawny womb
The Thunder and the Death!

That Splendid Fleet is throned
Upon the glistening sea,
While wreathing sunbeams weave, from Fire,
Its Crown of Majesty!
Soon silver sails shall spread
To kiss the Summer's smile,
And swell—as proud as England's soul
When Nelson won the Nile!

Yes!—with its lofty crest,
And banners broad unfurl'd,—
Is spread a larger Navy here
Than once awe-struck the world!
Knit with an iron frame
To bear our empire far,
And manned with just such daring hearts
As fought at Trafalgar!

Not now the voices of those wars
Arouse them as of old—
The world's wide Peace shines round the wave—
A gleaming flood of gold!
Oh, why does England marshal thus
Her strength upon the deep;
And stir Old Ocean's heart, and wake
His caverns from their sleep?

Hark! to the wild cheers volleying round,—
The Echo's utterance riven
By the quick rolling thunder, winged
To all the winds of Heaven!
The voices of the human joy
Blent with the loud salute!
And not one tongue without its shout!—
And not one cannon mute!

Mark! round the cliffs, and to the coast,
How thick the millions hie!
See the Fleet-crowd!—five thousand men
Between the deck and sky!
The proud land's glorious tars, equipped
In Sabbath-day attire,
Ringing loud answers through the ships
To all their loyal Fire!

"The Queen!"—that cry has oracled
This heart-stir of the Brave!—
The Queen is with her marshall'd Fleet
Throned strong upon the wave!
The Star of England's Love shines forth
On every blessing crew,
As, there, her Navy of the world
Sweeps by in grand review!

A sight of Glory!—to impose
Our Lady of the Throne
With the fine awful thought that she
Calls such a fleet her own!
With one soft lisp of Beauty's voice
Can sway its life of power,
To gem the peace or crown the war
Of England's mightiest hour!

NAVAL PROMOTIONS CONSEQUENT ON HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO THE SQUADRON.—According to the regulations laid down by the Admiralty in 1843, the officers to be promoted on board the ships her Majesty visited at Spithead will not be the commanders, but three lieutenants. Their Lordships, taking into consideration that the Queen's known partiality for her gallant men-of-war might lead her Majesty to pay frequent visits to them, determined to recommend for promotion the officer actually on board at the time of such visit who in the rank in which he was then serving had been placed for the longest time. By this regulation Hector Touse (1824) of the Albion; John Cheene (1836) of the St. Vincent; and William Frederick Fead (1838) of the Trafalgar, are the parties on whom promotion falls.

ARRIVAL OF THE GREAT BRITAIN AT KINGSTOWN.—The Dublin papers announce the arrival of the Great Britain steamer, in Kingstown harbour, on Sunday last, about two o'clock. The vessel had been expected on the previous evening, but a delay had arisen in consequence of the guard of the air pump having given way, which rendered it necessary to stop the engines and lie to.

The Buda-Pesti Heraldo, a Hungarian paper, states that the emigrants travelling through Pesth from the Upper Comitals, where famine prevails to a great extent, have there established a regular slave market. Girls (their own children!) are sold, at the age of from eight to nine, for five florins (8s. 6d.!), and boys of the same age for ten to twenty kreutzers. A person offered three zwanziger for one boy, and while the parents were rejoicing at getting so good a price, the poor little fellow clasped his mother's knees, and implored her not to send him away, and saying he would not ask her for bread again, if she would only keep him.

COUNTRY NEWS.

REPRESENTATION OF WEST SUFFOLK.—It is stated that Mr. Kerrison will be a candidate for the representation of West Suffolk, in the room of Colonel Rushbrooke. Captain Bennet, of Rougham Hall, Bury St Edmund's, has also offered himself for this division of the county. Both are Conservatives.

ACCIDENT AT SEAHAM.—Lieut. Dangerfield, of the Coast Guard at Seaham, went to bathe last week, and was unfortunately drowned.

THE LATE DUEL AT GOSPORT.—A letter has been published from Mrs. Hawkey, in which that lady gives another version of the circumstances connected with the duel in which Mr. Seton lost his life. Mrs. Hawkey states that the challenge emanated from Mr. Seton (and not from Mr. Hawkey), in consequence of the latter having, while the former was quitting the ball room on the Monday evening preceding, administered a kick (or something very like one) to him, for having told him (Mr. Hawkey) "That a light cavalry man could never give satisfaction or mix himself up with an infantry one;" or words to that effect. That the challenge was brought to Mr. Hawkey at half past eleven the following morning by Lieutenant Rowles, Royal Navy, who on the following evening addressed a letter on the subject to Lieut. Ward, Royal Marines. That on the ground Mr. Seton's antagonist received, but did not return that gentleman's first fire. Notwithstanding which, a second pistol was put into the hands of both principals, and discharged without any effort being made to arrest the affair. The effect of the second fire was the wound to Mr. Seton, which ended in death. Mrs. Hawkey, after stating this, says she leaves it to those gentlemen who are conversant in such affairs, to determine how far the second of Mr. Seton was, by the understood laws of duelling, justified in permitting his friend to deliver a second shot after his first shot had been received and not returned by his antagonist, who thereby received two shots but delivered only one. According to the opinions of many officers with whom she has conversed on the point, it seems certain that Mr. Seton's second, instead of allowing the second shot, ought to have immediately withdrawn his friend from the ground, and that by his failing to do so, he was guilty of a dereliction of his duty as a second, which has brought upon him the awful responsibility of having been himself, in truth, the cause of the fatal termination of the duel.

THE MURDER BY POISONING AT CARLISLE.—The investigation into the circumstances connected with this horrible case of double murder by poisoning has been brought to a close. The inquiry occupied the Coroner and jury several days, there being no fewer than nine adjournments, and the excitement that it has created throughout the whole northern part of England has been of a very intense character. The Coroner having, in a very lengthened manner, summed up the whole of the facts of this extremely mysterious tragedy, the jury returned a unanimous verdict of "Wilful murder against John Graham." The Coroner then made out his commitment for trial at the ensuing assizes, the superintendent of police being bound over to prosecute.

MR. BRITTON, F.S.A.—A Committee has been formed and a subscription commenced, for the purpose of presenting a testimonial of respect to Mr. Britton, who has laboured unceasingly for the last fifty years (he is now in his 75th year) in illustration of our national antiquities. Mr. Britton has declined receiving a piece of plate, or any pecuniary mark of approbation, from his friends: it is therefore in contemplation to offer a sum of money for the best Bibliographical Review of the Progress and Influence of that class of Literature illustrative of the Architectural Antiquities of Great Britain. In the meantime, Mr. Britton has been invited to a public dinner at Richmond on the 7th July next. A large attendance is promised.

ADVERTISING.—The Times newspaper, and Double Supplement, Monday, June 23, 1845, contained the extraordinary number of 1,706 advertisements.

"An umbrella, like charity, frequently covereth a multitude of sins;"—so says Rodwell, whose "Memoirs of an Umbrella" are to appear next week. The story, although essentially comic, possesses a very powerful interest. We hope the author may be as successful a novelist as he has already been a farce-writer, in his "Teddy the Tiler."

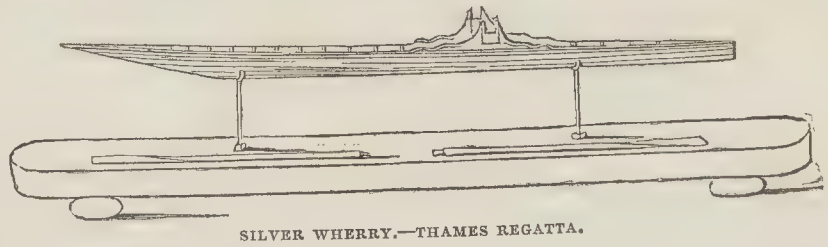
NATIONAL SPORTS.

This has been a stirring week with the amateurs of summer sports. To begin with the beginning—giving the metropolis the precedence—Cricket put forth its strength on Monday, at Lord's, in the case of the match between the Marylebone Club and Ground with Pilch, against the Northern Counties with A. Mynn, Esq. It was a brilliant, scientific display, the Northerns being the conquerors. On the same day one of the most popular of the provincial race meetings commenced—that of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, which extends over four days. In future years it will begin on Tuesday, and continue for three days, which will be a great improvement. If Epsom and Ascot were reduced in a like manner they would be all the better for it. And, having named those places, it may be as well en passant to congratulate the friends of the turf on the recent investigations which have taken place into its position and details. We have ever, in these columns, spoken out as to the practice of permitting persons of bad manners and loose morals to stand on familiar tooting with men of honour and substance, by reason of their forming a portion of a society known as "the Ring." "We apprehend the custom so *dis*honoured in the observance" must be on its last legs. The disclosures made in such morsels of the evidence in the Ratan, Running Rein, Melody colt, and other similar "affairs," as were permitted to ooze out, must deter all who hold character in account from intercourse in future with the community of Legs. For years they had been bringing racing into disrepute with those who felt well disposed towards it as a wholesome national pastime, but who could not conscientiously support an institution common to miscellaneous vagabonds of all sorts. They talk of more exposures but it is improbable those spoken of will come to anything. In their decision in the Melody colt case the members of the Jockey Club, before whom it took place, declared that the nature of the connexion between the person bringing the charge and the individual charged "was discreditable to all the parties conserned, but, considering the length of time that had elapsed since the transactions occurred, they thought it unnecessary to take any further steps with respect to them." Here, then, is a precedent established of a statute of limitations in courts of honour as well as courts of law: this must have been a flattering unction to the souls of the "planters" of some Derbys and Legers not much out of the statute.

To return to our muttons, on Monday commenced Newcastle races, with all the appliances and means to boot peculiar to the days we live in. There were cheap trains put on from all the populous districts, whereby men might go through and back (upon the turnpike principle) for one payment. Great conveniences, moreover, were provided for the accommodation of the "Ring;" the Grand Stand, too, was vastly increased; and, in short, as the official authority declared, "the whole arrangements reflected great credit on the managers," whose exertions, aided by the liberality of the public, will, no doubt, cause the meeting to assume an important position in the provincial gatherings of the season. No doubt it was right well put on the scene, as the Frenchman says, and to deserve success is the best chance of ensuring it after all. Of the racing generally, the leading feature was the excellence of Mr. St. Paul's Mentor, that won both the Northern Derby and the Gateshead or Lottery Stakes in very racing-like form. The course for the latter is two miles—a true Leger trial—and the result is that they back him for the great Doncaster even at 8 to 1. This horse was disappointed in his race for the Derby at Epsom; and that issue must not be taken as any criterion of his quality. The event of the meeting, in particular, however, was, of course, the handicap, or, in other words, the Northumberland Plate. Since Ascot, this has been the only marketable commodity, and a good field of horses was backed for it. A good field came to the post; and, after a good race, it was won by Mr. Meiklam's Inheritress, who, no doubt, had a good entrance, being five years old with but 7st. 10lbs. to carry. Ninety-five were named for the plate, out of which thirty-three accepted. Elsewhere, the aquatics of the week will be found done justice to.

THE THAMES REGATTA.

The boat was one curved shell of hollow pearl
Almost translucent——————
——————— the prow and stern did curl
Horned on high, like the young moon supine,
When o'er dim twilight mountains, dark with pine,
It floats upon the sunset's sea of beams,
Whose golden waves in many a purple line
Fade fast, 'till, borne on sunlight's ebbing streams
Dilating, on earth's verge the sunken meteor gleams.—SHELLEY.



The noon of Tuesday was lovely, and by that hour the parties concerned began to show at the trysting place. Later in the day it came on to rain pretty earnestly, but nobody seemed to care for it; they were moved by something more substantial than "shiey influences." After considerable and august preparation, at three P.M. the first race commenced for the Apprentices' Race, for a coat and silver badge—best of heats. This was won by a youth of the name of Mackinney. Next followed the Tradesman's Plate for four-oared boats, which brought together the Lambeth Aquatic Club, the Richmond Confidence Club, and the Avon Club. The latter appeared in a very novel and elegant craft, brought up by the celebrated Claspers, who made a sensation last year in their new-fashioned boat. The Lambeth Club were the winners. The Amateur pair-oar race for two Silver Cups succeeded. This was a slashing contest in each of the heats, the conqueror being won by a boat's length only—by Messrs. Chapman and Walmsley. This was rowed down stream. A little fleet came out for the Watermen Scullers' Race, which, after some very fine displays of strength and science, was won by Pocock, with perfect ease, in the grand heat. The Committee boat, the Vauxhall state barge, and a whole squadron of pleasure galleys, were moored just above Putney Bridge, and gave a most festive air to the whole scene; all the way up to Chiswick Ait, the river and its banks were one gorgeous gala.

Wednesday was the grand day; and, despite a somewhat chilly afternoon, drew thousands upon thousands to the scene of action. The sport commenced at half-past three for the Silver Challenge Cup, the presentation of Mr. Layton, together with a Silver Wherry, given by Messrs. Nickesson and Walford, for gentleman scullers. Good men and true were in this essay, whereof the first heat was won by Mr. Chapman, the second by Mr. Bumpstead, the final heat standing over till the morrow. The Vauxhall Wherry, with £60 added by the Regatta Committee, for watermen's pair-oars, drew together all the professional talent of the river. It was a startling affair beyond all dispute. The first heat Phelps and Maynard won, in somewhat easy fashion; the second Newell and Barrow carried off cleverly; and now came the tug of watermen. A good start got them off, when the lead was at once taken by Combes and Wilson, who held it to the end, and won a noble struggle by half a boat's length. This brought us to the great event, the Grand Challenge Cup for eight-oared boats—gentlemen amateurs. The first boat in the first heat, and the first in the second to contend for the final heat. Course from Putney to Chiswick Ait. The first heat brought the Cambridge University Subscription Rowers against the Neptune Club, the former having it in hand from the start,

TRADESMAN'S CHALLENGE CUP.—THAMES REGATTA.

and winning, though early in the heat it looked like a race. For the second heat the St. George's Club, a crack lot—very—met the Oxford University Club, and a dashing set-to it was, the two crews crying out for the dear life, and sticking to them like the grim death. Just before making the Malt-house Tavern, Oxford fouled St. George, whose crew threw up their oars, appealed, and had the heat awarded them. Thus stood the question—and thus it stands still, as regards Cam and Isis; but the Grand Heat is to be rowed—and Cambridge and St. George for the rescue! At the signal off they flew, like falcons down the wind—the Cantabs slightly the best. Anon, "St. George!" was the cry; and, as they bent to it, yard-arm and yard-arm, St. George, No. 2, fouled the stern of the Cambridge boat, and Cam was decided by the umpire, to be entitled to the victory. Very unsatisfactory was this to all interested; and when it does come again for arbitrement, let us hope the best may win—and no mistake. This race was followed by a Landsmen's Scurry, whose details may be spared. And thus Wednesday ended.

SILVER WHERRY.—THAMES REGATTA.

Thursday was the finest day of the three, and best in the quantity, though perhaps not the quality, of the company. The sport, spreading as it did over several races, centred, so far as the interest went, in two; the issue of the Amateur Scullers', grand heat for the Silver Challenge Cup, and the mighty contest against the world in oars, for the champion prize of £100. The former of these, Mr. Bumpstead won; the latter, the Claspers!! the immortal Newcastle crew, who now stand A 1 against universal rowing creation. The Scullers' Match, rowed from Putney to Hammersmith—nothing half so worthy of the Thames as is the peculiar stream whereon the fleetest boats float, and the best of "jolly young watermen" impel them, as this regatta has heretofore done it honour. May its shadow never be less.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—To enter minutely into the betting on the various events now in the market, would take more room than we can devote to such subjects. Passing, therefore, the Northumberland Plate—now a bygone—and the Goodwood Stakes, which must of necessity be revolutionised by the declaration of the acceptances, we may confine our notice to the St. Leger. Weatherbit, it will be seen, retains the premiership, but from the demonstrations made this afternoon in favour of Old England and Mentor, may, indeed, must give way, malgré the information volunteered by Messrs. Hargrave and Stebbings, that he is 21lb. better than Old England! The Merry Monarch was rather at a discount, nor were the Baron or Pantasa in much demand. The Connaught Ranger was backed freely at 20 to 1. Is he, like Foigh-a-Ballagh, after being drawn for the Derby, to "do the trick" for the St. Leger? He belongs to the same party, and is in the same stable! The Derby betting does not call for a remark.

NORTHUMBERLAND PLATE.

The field agst five	7 to 1 agst Pagan	20 to 1 agst Godfrey
7 to 4 agst Dawson's lot	10 to 1 —— Queen of Tyne	20 to 1 —— Northumberland
7 to 2 —— Lightning	10 to 1 —— Portobello	25 to 1 —— Little Hampton
11 to 2 —— Inheritress	10 to 1 —— Little John, 3 yrs old	20 to 1 —— Brevity
7 to 1 —— Coheiress (t)

GOODWOOD STAKES (ACCEPT OR NOT).

The field agst 22	20 to 1 agst Winesour	25 to 1 agst Bob Peel (t)
16 to 1 agst Pine Apple	25 to 1 —— The Libel (t)	25 to 1 —— Mundiggelding (t)
	25 to 1 agst Queen Mab

GOODWOOD CUP.

7 to 1 agst Ironmaster	Golden Rule is declared not to run

ST. LEGER.

6 to 1 agst Weatherbit (t)	10 to 1 agst Old England	20 to 1 agst Connaught Ranger (t)
7 to 1 —— The Merry Monarch (t)	10 to 1 —— Mentor	25 to 1 —— Kedger (t)
	20 to 1 —— The Baron
	25 to 1 agst Pantasa (t)

DERBY.

20 to 1 agst Sting	40 to 1 agst Traverser	60 to 1 agst Cambaules
25 to 1 —— Brocardo	40 to 1 —— Tug Net

THURSDAY.—Several "influentials" were present, and the investments upon the few horses backed were heavy.

GOODWOOD STAKES.

15 to 1 agst Pine Apple	20 to 1 agst Nottingham	20 to 1 agst John o' Gaunt
17 to 1 —— Libel — 20 to 1 taken freely	20 to 1 —— Queen Mab	20 to 1 —— Boarding School Miss (t)
	20 to 1 —— Lightning
	25 to 1 agst Milden.

GOODWOOD CUP.

3 to 1 agst Foigh-a-Ballagh (t freely)	6 to 1 agst Ironmaster (t)

ST. LEGER.

6 to 1 agst Weatherbit (t to £100)	10 to 1 agst Old England	20 to 1 agst Connaught Ranger
	20 to 1 —— The Baron (taken freely)	25 to 1 —— Kedger (t)
10 to 1 —— Mentor		40 to 1 —— Comical Boy (t)

THE ROYAL HARWICH YACHT CLUB Annual Regatta is fixed to come off in Harwich Harbour, on the 25th and 26th of July, being the days immediately following Ipswich races.

CRICKET.—The cricket match, Marylebone Club and ground, with Pilch, v. the Northern Counties, was finished on Tuesday at Lord's. Final score: Marylebone, first innings 41, second 99, total 140; Northern Counties, first innings 141. The Northern, therefore, won in one innings by one run.

NEWCASTLE RACES.

This meeting commenced on Monday. The weather was exceedingly favourable, and the influx of visitors from all parts was immense.

The Produce Stakes of 50 sovs each.

Mr. Ramsay's br g Mid Lothian, 3lb, walked over.

The Northern Derby Stakes of 25 sovs each, h ft, with 100 added,

Mr. St. Paul's Mentor	(Lye)	1
Lord Eglinton's Vaudeville		2

The Maiden Plate of £50. Heats.

Mr. H. Johnstone's Millden, 3 yrs	(Cartwright)	1
Lord Eglinton's Bretwalda, 3 yrs		2
Mr. Hornsey's Sittenham, 3 yrs		3

TUESDAY.

The Tyro Stakes, of 25 sovs each, 15 ft, and 30 added.

Mr. Ramsey's Malcolm, by the Doctor	(Lye)	1
Lord Zetland's f by The Bard, out of Coheiress's dam		2

The Northern Oaks Stakes of 10 sovs each.

Mr. Salvin's Marian Ramsay	(Bumby)	1
Sir C. Monck's f by Physician, out of Castaway		2
Mr. R. Kitching's Lucy		3

The Hunter's Stakes of 10 sovs each, h ft, with 20 added.

Captain Boyd's Lara, aged	(Hon. S. Erskine)	1
Mr. Clarke's Netherton Maid, 4 yrs		2
Mr. Robinson's The Wasp, 6 yrs		3

Her Majesty Plate of 100 guineas.

Colonel Cradock's Jinglepot, 3 yrs	(Armstrong)
Mr. Mangle's Comical Boy, 3 yrs		2
Mr. Meiklam's Trueboy, 5 yrs		3

WEDNESDAY.

The Gateshead, or Lottery Stakes, of 10 sovs each, p p, with 50 added.

Mr. St. Paul's Mentor	(Lye)	1
Mr. Wormald's Sister to Pedometer	(Bumby)	2
Mr. Johnson's Nanny Banks	(Joy)	3

The Northumberland Plate of 200 sovs.

Mr. Meiklam's Inheritress, 5 yrs, 7st 10lb	(Lye)	1
Mr. Dawson's Merry Andrew, 5 yrs, 6st 13lb	(Francis)	2
Mr. Meiklam's Lightning, 4 yrs, 7st 5lb	(Cartwright)	3

The Corporation Plate of 60 guineas.

Captain Boyd's Lara, aged, 8st 7lb	(Noble)	1
Mr. W. H. Johnstone's Mildew, 3 yrs, 7st		2

THURSDAY.

The Tyne Stakes of 10 sovs each.

Mr. Cookson's Fair Star	(Francis)	1
Mr. Brown's Sheraton		2

The Corinthian Stakes of 15 sovs each.

Mr. Meiklam's Poussin, 5 yrs, 11 st 4lb	(Mr. M'Donagh)	1
Mr. Clarke's Netherton Maid, 4 yrs, 10st		2

The Gold Cup of 150 sovs. Two miles.

Mr. Bell's Winesour, 5 yrs	(Bumby)	1
Mr. Ramsay's Midlothian, 3 yrs		2

The Members' Plate of 50 sovs, &c.

Mr. Meiklam's Inheritress, 5 yrs	(Templeman)	1
Sir C. Monck's Glossy, 5 yrs		2

The Royal Victoria Whip Stakes were won, in three heats, by Mr. Hesseltine's The Bashaw beating seven others.

THE RACE CUP,

Of which we annex an Engraving, has been manufactured by Messrs. Reid and Sons, goldsmiths and jewellers to her Majesty, Bream's-buildings, Chancery-lane, from a design by Mr. B. Green, architect, Newcastle. The subject, from Lord Byron's "Mazeppa," has been often and well treated before, but not in this way. Byron has added to the interest of his beautiful poem by leaving portions to be filled up by the imagination. After describing the fall of the courser and his thong-bound rider, with the wild horses plunging, foaming, and starting round them, he speaks of Mazeppa's being "released from adding to the vultures' feast," and of his finding himself attended by "a slender girl." She had discovered him in his pitiable condition, and unbound and relieved him, 'scaring away at the same time the wild horses and birds of prey; and this is the moment, undescribed, but imagined and seized by the artist for the group. In the centre is the Female on her knees, in an animated attitude, lifting one arm of Mazeppa, and frightening off the Horses, &c., with a kerchief waving and her right hand extended. Mazeppa and the Horse to which he was bound lie stretched on the ground, and two spirited Wild Horses, "with flowing tail and flying mane," are plunging and rearing around the middle group; while the Vulture, having a lot so near that he "could have smote but lacked the strength," is just leaving his perch to soar.

The Plate, with pedestal, stands about 24 inches high. The figures are of large size, and all of silver. The grounding is bronze work; and it is continued down the edges of a shaped-out octagonal pedestal in ornamental scroll work. On this pedestal is a medallion for the names of the Stewards, &c., and of the Meeting.

A good deal has been told with few figures; and the imaginary incident has been well embodied and successfully related by the artist, while the modelling and execution of the whole thing is highly creditable to the manufacturers.

DREADFUL FIRE AT QUEBEC.

By the Cambridge packet, we have papers from New York, to the 3rd of June. They contain an account of a devastating fire at Quebec, where, it seems, two thousand houses have been destroyed. The fire commenced shortly before mid-day, on the 28th May, in a tannery in St. Valliere-street.

The day was remarkably warm, and the heat and dryness of the few days previous had rendered the roofs of the building in the neighbourhood, and those more remote, highly susceptible of ignition. The adjoining and opposite dwellings were soon involved, and in an inconceivably short space of time the burning flakes, carried afar by the then rising wind, had ignited some buildings in the neighbourhood of the St. Roch's Church—a considerable distance from the outbreak of the fire.

The wind gradually freshened from the west, with a coming storm, and it was soon evident that all human endeavours to arrest the progress of the fire in a locale studded, for the most part, with wooden buildings, alone, would be useless—an impression but too fatally verified. Onward swept the flames—street after street fell before them. A species of whirlwind seemed to aid its fatal advances—for, in advance, in the rear, on every side, the raging element developed itself with momentarily increasing fury. Spots, that to the shrieking and affrighted refugee were now apparently safe, in a few minutes subsequent were wrapped in a vast sheet of flame.

From eleven in the morning until midnight did this dread fire hold uninterrupted sway, until its career was arrested in St. Charles-street—nearly one mile from the place of its outbreak!—at the broadest point the breadth of the burnt district is about one-third of a mile.

Between 1500 and 2000 houses are supposed to have been consumed, and it is calculated that 12,000 persons (one-third of the population) are houseless. Most of these people have lost their all, the rapid advance, and sudden capricious directions taken by the flame, not only rendering it impossible to save any portion of the property in the dwellings, but in a vast number of instances barely allowing the inmates a sufficient time to escape living.

The church in St. Roch's is in ashes. The convent is saved. St. Peter's Chapel is also burnt. The large brewing establishments of Messrs. Lloyd and Lepper, and M'Cullum, are consumed, and the line of wharfs from Munn's to the one at the foot of the Hope-hill. On these were an immense quantity of deals, which were all consumed.

At this point the fire was arrested by throwing down the piles of deals, and on the town side, by blowing up two houses. The operation was conducted by Lieutenant-Colonel Warde, of the Royal Engineers, and some of the officers and men under his command.

Two Methodist Churches were also burnt. The Artillery Barrack was three times in danger. A general meeting had been called, attended by 3000 persons, at which between £3000 and £4000 were collected on behalf of the sufferers. At Montreal steps were being taken to aid the unfortunate persons who have lost their all by the calamity.

The most painful event was the destruction of the hospital, to which, as being considered entirely out of the reach of the conflagration, numbers of sick persons of all classes were carried; the building became ignited by the flakes of fire carried from the distance by the wind; the unfortunate inmates, unable to help themselves perished miserably.

The losses by the mercantile lower town people will be heavy. Almost all the bakers are burned out—M'Conkey, Clarihue, Tourangeau, &c., and nothing saved. What renders matters more disastrous is, not one house in ten in St. Roch's was insured, and those insured are principally at the Mutual Insurance Company, which being composed of persons residents of St. Roch's, the Company is defunct; for if one man owes his neighbour 10s, and his neighbour owes him 10s, and neither have wherewith to pay, both are ruined.

Every exertion was made to relieve the unfortunate sufferers. Lord Metcalfe forwarded £2,000 for their relief; the Catholic Bishop sent £500, and the Hotel Dieu £500. The good Bishop had addressed a circular letter to his clergy, imploring subscriptions for the poor families thus deprived of a home and an asylum, and suggesting the calling of public meetings in every parish for that purpose, together with contributions of clothing, money, and provisions.

The loss of life, according to one of the accounts, exceeds one hundred persons, and the loss of property is said to be above £750,000. Eighteen schooners were burnt at the Palais. "Nothing left," says one of the letters from the scene of the conflagration, "from where you begin to descend Cote les Braz at Tourangeau's, running down the large street toward the Marine Hospital; everything on the right until you reach the water, thence to the two distilleries, M'Cullum's and Lloyd's, these included, is destroyed; the fire ending, or rather being arrested, at the point where the roads St. Paul-street and Hope-hill diverge. The loss in round numbers cannot be easily ascertained, but half a million will not cover the losses, nor perhaps £750,000."

The following letter from Quebec, dated May 29, gives some additional details of interest:—

"Various rumours are afloat as to the number of lives lost. We have seen seven crisped and mutilated remains. Of these two were mothers with their infants clasped to their bosoms. It is feared that many victims as yet unknown will be soon discovered.

"In the Upper Town several houses were on fire. The artillery barrack was three times in danger, as also several private dwellings.

"A meeting was convened yesterday evening, and the bakers ordered to commence the supply necessary or the relief of those distressed. This day relief was extended to about 3000 persons.

THE NEWCASTLE RACE PLATE.—(MAZEPPA.)—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.

"At an adjourned meeting of that of last night we are informed that the extremely handsome sum of upwards of 28,000 dollars was subscribed; the list being still open. We also learn that the Roman Catholic Bishop of the diocese has issued circulars to his clergy, directing them to collect donations of every description in aid of the sufferers.

"Among the public buildings destroyed are two Methodist Churches.

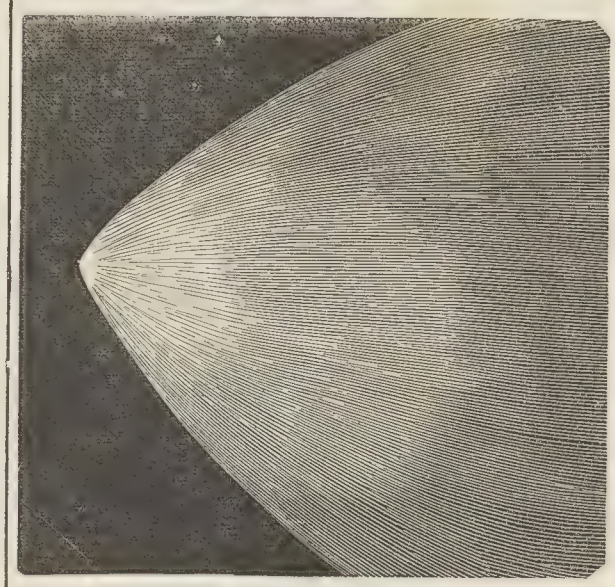
"Many persons have been severely burned—among them the editor of the Canadian, who has lost every thing he possessed.

"Mr. J. B. Bigaonette, a magistrate, is injured, it is feared, mortally.

"We learn, from an extra of the Herald, that its correspondent in Quebec has lost his daughter, a young lady of twelve years of age, 'who, being sick was carried to the Palace (the residence of the former intendants), to which it was hoped at the time the fire would not extend; but which was entirely consumed, there being, at the time, many sick persons in it, taken there for safety, whom it was found impossible to save.'

"The Canadian of Thursday, notwithstanding the sufferings of its editor, contains full details of the catastrophe, but they add little to what we have above communicated. It estimates the insurance at £25,000 to £30,000 in the Quebec, £20,000 to £30,000 in the Canada, and £2500 in the London Phœnix. We have heard of some others, but not considerable.

"Twelve thousand persons are at this moment deprived of the means of existence are homeless, famishing, and destitute. The first duty is to provide for their immediate physical wants. The Catholic Bishop of Montreal, the Seminary, and the Hotel Dieu, each forwarded, we understand, £500 by yesterday's evening steam-boat. The Provincial Government has also acted with a judicious humanity, which we are sure will meet with general approbation. At a meeting of the Executive Council, yesterday, his Excellency the Governor-General, under their advice, directed an order for £2000 to be drawn in favour of the Mayor of Quebec, and dispatched by the evening's mail, to meet their immediate necessity, until the whole matter, and the extent to which it is proper for the Government in the vacation of Parliament to interfere, may receive full consideration.



"In the city of Montreal, a feeling of profound sympathy, which we are convinced will not be barren, prevails. The Mayor of Montreal was one of the spectators of the destruction; and, returning to the city yesterday morning, took immediate measures for arranging a meeting of the inhabitants, which will be held to-day, at one o'clock, in the Parliament House. A preliminary meeting of the clergy of the different denominations will be held in the morning."

Another letter from Quebec, dated May 29, says: "Six bodies were, this morning, taken out of the church of St. Roch, which fell a prey to the fire. The Convent was saved with great difficulty, although the distance between them is very large, but such was the rapidity of the raging element.

THE COMET.

(From a Correspondent.)

The Comet has undergone a marked difference in its appearance, as is shown in the annexed Engraving of the "mysterious stranger," seen through an inverting telescope.

THE COMET.

The light of the head is still brilliant, but it has not that well-defined planetary disc that it had; it appears to be more immersed in the light emanating from it and which encloses at least two-thirds of the head which it did do before, and which was not in the Engraving last week, in consequence of the head of the Comet being cut out rather too large from the wood. The tail is much less bright than it was, and it has assumed an hyperbolic form, the apparent right side still being rather brighter than that on the left; it becomes less and less bright as the distance from the head increases, but its faintness increases so imperceptibly that it is impossible to say where it decidedly terminates.

The motion of the Comet has been very rapid, as it occupies now a very different part of the heavens from that when it first appeared. It was first seen by M. Colla, of Parma, on the 2nd of June, it being then near β Persei.

I have merely to add, that, on the 14th of June, it was about 87 millions o miles from the earth; that, on the 18th, it was 97; that, on the 22nd, it was 110; and to-day, Saturday, June 28, it is nearly 130 millions of miles distant from the earth.

BURNING OF THE CITY OF QUEBEC.

THE CONCERT MONSTRE.

This grand affair took place on Friday evening, the 20th inst., at the Surrey Zoological Gardens, under the direction of M. Jullien, and so successful was the experiment, that we have no doubt a series of these monster musical meetings will now take place. A gigantic orchestra was erected on the large open promenade, in front of the building containing the giraffe, at the extremity of the gardens: and in this the three hundred musicians were stationed, M. Jullien himself taking up his position at an elegant music stand in front. The programme was very judiciously selected, so as to please all tastes; but we must confess, however admirably the classical pieces were executed, that the Post-horn Galops, the English Quadrilles, and Bohemian Polkas, carried off the greatest share of the applause.

The most effective thing was the "Suoni la Trombo," from "Puritani," which in its great crashes appeared to lift the audience fairly off their legs, being set as a quintette for 20 ophicleides, 20 cornets, and the same number of other mighty wind instruments in each part. Indeed, being in the open air, the brass had generally the best of it over the strings; the sounds of the violins being lost at comparatively a short distance from the orchestra. Not the least commendable point in the entertainment was the admirable manner in which M. Jullien kept the mass of musicians together; from first to last their precision was remarkable. We heard that there were upwards of 12,000 persons present; and all these appeared delighted; whether at the beauty of the evening, or the imposing effect of the music, or M. Jullien's curls and waistcoat, or one another, or all put together, we know not; but certainly this "Concert Monstre" was a great hit, and will bear repetition. After dark the orchestra was tastefully illuminated, and when the last salute of cannon, that accompanied "God Save the Queen," had been fired, the vast audience betook themselves to the edge of the lake, where the exhibition of Edinburgh during the Queen's visit, and some very capital fireworks, concluded the amusements of the evening.

THE CONCERT MONSTRE, AT THE SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS.

MADAME ROSSI-CACCIA.

This distinguished artiste, who, on Thursday last, made her début at her Majesty's Theatre, is a countrywoman of the unrivalled Malibran: she was born at Barcelona, the 17th December, 1818. Her parentage was highly respectable, her father having held the rank of colonel, and her grandfather, that of lieutenant-general in the Spanish army. Two years after the birth of Mdlle. Rossi, her mother took her to Paris, being engaged amongst the troupe of the Italiens, of which she was a useful, if not highly-gifted member.

Bordogni, the master to whose genius we owe the development of the voices and talent of some of the greatest singers in Europe, took in hand the musical education of the young Juana Rossi. She had not been more than a year under his tuition, and was only fourteen years of age, when she made her début in a concert given by Beretoni. All the great artistes of the Italian Opera were present; Mdlle. Rossi, though but a child both in person and manners, displayed a voice of such remarkable compass, and so much brilliancy of execution, that she electrified the audience. Her success was shortly afterwards confirmed at a second concert, given at the Hotel de Ville.

Triumphs so premature have ruined the prospects and future career of many a young artiste; and we might have lost, in the impatient display of childish power, the afterwards perfected genius of the great prima donna; but, with a prudent forbearance, worthy of much praise, the young débutante was removed from so prejudicial a sphere of action, and took her place amongst the chorus-singers of the Italiens. In this situation, she laid the foundations of future excellence, thus following the example of the great Rubini himself, who has often since attributed to his quiet, unobtrusive studies, at the time he occupied a post so humble, much of his subsequent success.

At the age of 18, Mdlle. Rossi emerged from the ranks of the chorists, and made her début at the Opera Comique, afterwards the scene of so many of her triumphs. "La Dame Blanche," by Boieldieu, which has ever since been one of her favourite parts, was the one in which our prima donna commenced her career; the "Pré aux Clercs," "Jean de Paris," "Zampa," quickly followed, and all these performances were attended with brilliant success to the youthful débutante. The light charming music of these operas, so peculiar to the French composers, which, in attempts of a more serious and ambitious cast, meet with such signal failures, was well adapted to the sweet and flexible voice of the young prima donna, while their sprightly and piquant plots elicited her dramatic powers. After having exhausted the repertoire of the Opera Comique, Mdlle. Rossi's ambition led her to seek distinction in that land which is the school of all candidates for lyrical fame, and which if it conquered formerly by the force of arms, now enslaves by the "witchery of song"—Italy. In 1840, Mdlle. Rossi made her début at La Scala, with the greatest success. The Milanese journals, on this occasion, gave forth their full tide of enthusiasm, in which the public participated. Imogene, in the "Pirata," was the part chosen for her début, but having on one occasion (a benefit night) sung the famous "Casta Diva," from "Norma," her execution of this difficult air excited such a furore, that, night after night, on each occasion of her performance, and at each interval of the regular opera, this air was clamorously demanded. It was during the stay of Mdlle. Rossi at Milan, that she gave her hand in marriage to M. Caccia, a young sculptor of great merit, one of whose first works after his marriage, was an excellent bust of his gifted bride.

MADAME ROSSI-CACCIA.

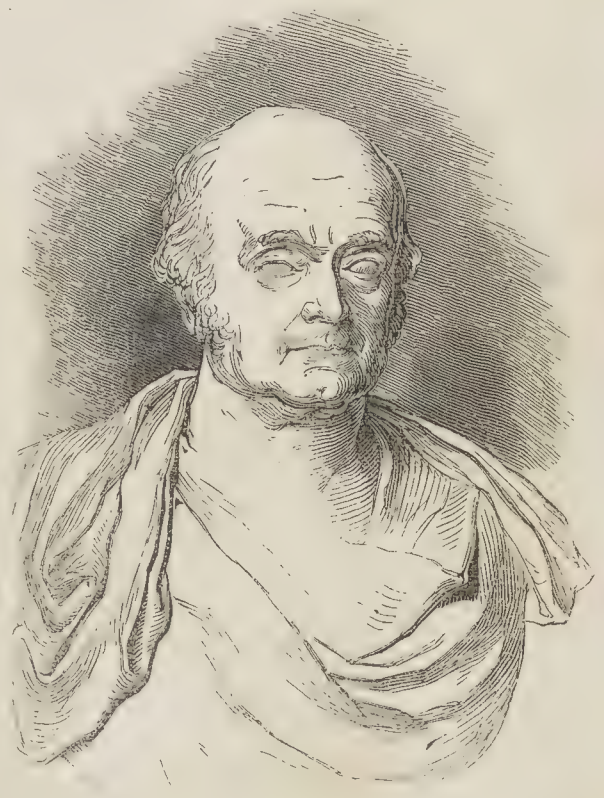
The Opera Comique at Paris was again, for a time, the scene of Madame Rossi-Caccia's triumphs. A most brilliant engagement was offered her at Lisbon, at which capital she made her début in the September of 1843. There, in the fine opera-house of this city, she has, up to the present moment, been performing, in every description of opera, from the lightest to the most serious, both French and Italian. She has sufficed to support this establishment by her sole and unaided efforts, and has, as may be expected, been the object of enthusiastic admiration on the part of a public, to whose entertainment she has so largely contributed. The regrets universally entertained at her departure have given occasion for an unwonted display of poetic fire in Portuguese society. Sonnets of every description, some of them, sooth to say, somewhat poor in composition, but compensating by an immensity of zeal, have found their way into every species of publication, and all bearing testimony to the genius and merits of the great cantatrice, who has now arrived amongst us, to extort from John Bull that tribute which, in general, he so grudgingly and so unwillingly bestows.

Mr. J. W. DAVISON'S second matinée musicale took place at his residence in Berners-street, at the early part of the week, and was very numerously attended, by an audience almost entirely composed of musicians, artists, and literary men, forming a delightful réunion of gentlemen with whom the public are well acquainted. The programme contained the names of Messrs. Leopold de Meyer, Moscheles, Sturndale Bennett, Osborne, Wallace, Sivori, Vieuxtemps, Sainton, Rousselot, Godefroid, T. B. Jewson, Cavalini, and Davison—the last gentleman performing Mendelssohn's Sonata in F minor, for violin and pianoforte, with M. Sainton. It is needless to say that the entire selection was performed in the first style, and was evidently productive of the greatest delight amongst those assembled. The opportunity rarely occurs of meeting so many eminent artistes together in society, and enjoying the display of their talents.

PROTESTANT CLUBS.—A national club has been formed in London in support of the Protestant principles of the constitution, and for raising the moral and social condition of the people. The Earl of Winchilsea has written a letter addressed to the Protestants of Great Britain, urging them to form similar clubs throughout the kingdom.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH CHINA.—The first monthly mail direct to China was dispatched viâ the overland route, and may be considered as an epoch in the history of our intercourse with that vast empire. It will be conveyed to Ceylon by the Oriental Steam Company's vessels carrying the Calcutta mails; and at Ceylon will be transferred to one of the same company's vessels forming the branch line between Ceylon and Hong Kong, touching at Penang and Singapore. By this arrangement Hong Hong is brought within 48 days' post of London.

JOHN MARSHALL, ESQ.



This opulent and celebrated manufacturer affords one of the most remarkable instances, even in this commercial country, of a man rising, by his own talents, energy, and enterprise, from moderate circumstances, to the possession of a splendid fortune, and to a degree of honour and influence rarely attained but by the aristocracy of the land. John Marshall was the second son of John Marshall, of Yeadon Low Hall, in the county of York, and was born at Leeds the 27th July, 1765. Having entered into the manufacturing business, Mr. Marshall the younger, the subject of this notice, was among the earliest of those who, in this country, attempted the spinning of flax by machinery, in imitation of the example of Arkwright's similar process with regard to cotton. On this enterprise Marshall, it is believed, staked his all; and during the progress of the experiment, his funds were in a critical state. By unceasing and skilful attention both to the mechanical and commercial departments, he overcame every difficulty, and by his success not only realised immense wealth for his family, but founded a branch of manufacture at present one of the most important in England. Mr. Marshall's first manufactory was at Scotland Mill, three or four miles from Leeds; after which he built the large mills in Water-lane, in the same town, and also other mills at Shrewsbury.

In politics, Mr. Marshall was an extreme liberal, a supporter of free trade, and an active advocate, on all occasions, of civil and religious liberty in its widest sense. At one time he published a small work on political economy, intended for the working classes, and possessing no inconsiderable merit. Mr. Marshall had much public spirit. His enlarged mind made him the ready promoter of improvements, and especially of institutions designed for the intellectual and moral advantage of the bulk of the people: and his great property, bountifully though prudently used, enabled him to be one of the most munificent of patrons He founded, and liberally contributed to the Lancasterian School, the Philosophical and Literary Society, and the Mechanics' Institution, in his native town. Over the Philosophical Society there he himself for some time presided and he delivered lectures in it on subjects of political economy and geology. He was also one of the founders of the London University, and sat for a period among its council. In his own extensive manufactories, he willingly promoted the education of the children, as well as adopted, before any compulsory law existed, every improvement—in the internal arrangements of the mills—that could conduce to the health and comfort of the working people.

At the general election in 1826, Mr. Marshall, at the request of the late Earl Fitzwilliam and numerous influential members of the Whig party, offered himself for the representation of the county of York, and was returned, together with Lord Milton (the present Earl Fitzwilliam), and two of the opponent party—Mr. Fountayne Wilson and the Hon. W. Duncombe. Mr. Marshall acted as member for Yorkshire until 1830, when he retired. He continued, however, to take a prominent part in politics, and earnestly supported the Reform Bill. On the enfranchisement of the borough of Leeds, his second son, the late Mr. John Marshall, was elected as one of its first representatives—the other being Mr. Macaulay. The eldest son, Mr. William Marshall, who had previously sat in Parliament for Leominster and Petersfield, has also since twice represented the city of Carlisle.

Mr. Marshall married, the 5th of August, 1795, Jane, fifth daughter of William Pollard, Esq., of Halifax, and had issue five sons and six daughters, all of whom survive him, except the second son, who died the 31st of October, 1836, leaving four children. Mr. Marshall's family became allied by a triple union with that of the present Lord Monteagle: the noble Lord himself married Miss Marshall, and two of his daughters were wedded—the one to Mr. James, and the other to Mr. Henry Marshall. Mr. Marshall's second daughter espoused the Reverend William Whewell, Master of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Mr. Marshall, though by no means of robust frame, experienced the benefits of strict temperance and prudence, and enjoyed a green and protracted old age. He devoted his time between London, where he freely patronised science and art, his beautiful seat of Hallsteads on the banks of Ullswater, in Cumberland, and his old residence at Headingly, near Leeds. As infirmities increased he remained chiefly at Hallsteads, and he there terminated his honourable and useful career on the 6th inst., the immediate cause of his death being a combined attack of apoplexy and paralysis. The remains of the deceased were interred on the following Saturday, the 14th inst., at New Church, near Hallsteads: the funeral was strictly private.

THE LATE JOHN MARSHALL, ESQ.

When his political friends were in power, Mr. Marshall, it is said, might have obtained a peerage, had he been willing to accept it; but he preferred leaving a name dignified by his virtues alone—a striking example to future generations, of what may be achieved by English honesty, industry, and perseverance.

FASHIONS FOR JULY.

FASHIONS FOR JULY.

(See our Journal of last week, page 394.)

IRELAND.

MURDER OF A MAGISTRATE IN CAVAN.—On Sunday last, a barbarous murder was committed in the middle of the day between Kilmore and Crossdoney, county Cavan. The "Molly Maguire" system has recently extended into that county from Leitrim, and it is generally believed that the assassination of this gentleman was concocted by the members of that most atrocious confederacy, which has spread so much alarm in several counties of the north and north-west. At a quarter-past two o'clock, George F. Bell Booth, Esq., of Drumcarbin, was returning from Kilmore Church, in his gig, with two of his children, one five and the other six years old; his eldest son, a boy of about eleven, rode behind him on a pony. When he arrived at "The Rocks," the residence of the Sub-sheriff, William Bell, Esq, he was met by a man, who walked coolly and deliberately along the road, smoking a long pipe. The villain walked up to Mr. Booth, presenting a horse pistol. It is thought Mr. Booth stooped his head, and that on his doing so the murderer fired. The ball entered the upper part of the forehead, and lodged within the skull; he fell instantly from his gig—he was dead. The horse, frightened by the report of the shot, ran away, throwing the two children on the road; one of them had his arm broken in the fall, or by the wheel of the gig. Mrs. Bell, of the Rocks, whose carriage had just broken down, passed the murderer on foot a few seconds before he fired. On hearing the report, she turned round, and saw the body fall from the gig. What the motive is which instigated this assassination we cannot form the most distant idea, for a more kind, tender-hearted, upright gentleman did not exist. There is no trace of the murderer, who crossed into the fields and escaped. The assassin (dressed in the usual frieze of the country) was armed with a pistol, the ramrod of which was found on the road; and, immediately on firing, he leaped up on the road ditch, then deliberately turned round to see that his mark was perfect; finding which, he took to the fields, and, although seen by several, escaped. The inquest has been held, and a verdict of "Wilful Murder" returned against some persons unknown. A more quiet, inoffensive country gentleman, a more upright magistrate, or more affectionate husband and father could not be met with. He has left a widow and six children.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

M. JULLIEN'S SECOND CONCERT MONSTRE of 300 Instrumental Performers.—M. JULLIEN begs respectfully to inform the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, that in consequence of the immense success of his first Concert Monstre (which was pronounced by the Press, as well as the Visitors, unequalled in the Annals of Instrumental Musical Assemblies), he will give a Second Concert Monstre on FRIDAY, July 11th, on the same unprecedented scale of grandeur. The programme will be selected from the Works of the great Masters, and will include the eight principal pieces that created so great a sensation at the first Concert Monstre; viz., Selections from I Puritani; Overture, William Tell; Beethoven's Symphony in C Minor; Lo! Hear the Gentle Lark, performed by Messrs. Richardson and Lazarus; Pas de Fleurs Valse; English Quadrilles; Chimes Quadrille; Post Horn Galop. Also the following novelties: Overture Der Freischutz; Locke's Music to Macbeth; Grand Selection from Don Juan and Robert Le Diable; Beethoven's Battle Symphony, for the first time, with Military effect, &c.; and God Save the Queen, performed for the second time in England, in the same style as the Russian Hymn is played in St. Petersburgh, each bar of the National Anthem being marked by a Royal Salute of Cannon, received at first performance with enthusiastic cheering by 12,000 persons forming the audience. Several eminent Artists from the Provinces and the Continent will arrive, in addition to the immense galaxy of instrumental talent at the first Concert Monstre. M. JULLIEN begs respectfully to draw the attention of Musical Amateurs to his announcement during the ensuing week, in which the arrangements pending will be advertised.—For further particulars see Bills. Tickets purchased previous to July 11th, 2s. 6d. Admission on the day of the Concert, 5s. To be had at all the principal Libraries and Musicsellers; and of M. JULLIEN, 214, Regent-street.

EXTRAORDINARY NOVELTY.—THE EUREKA, a Machine for Making Latin Verses, is now exhibiting at the EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY, Daily, from Twelve to Five, and from Seven to Nine. This instrument, which is the nearest approach to a thinking machine ever yet produced, makes an Original Hexameter Verse every Minute, or at the rate of 10,000 in a week, and is a remarkable and perfectly unique example of the union of metaphysical with mathematical powers. Admission, 1s.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A WORKING MODEL of the ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, capable of carrying visitors, is lectured on and exhibited daily, and also in the Evenings. During the week Dr. Ryan will lecture daily at a quarter past Three, and on the Evenings of Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at Nine, on the Causes of STEAM-BOILER EXPLOSIONS; and especially those arising from incrustation, with the means of prevention. Among the Novelties recently introduced is a full-sized Cast from the CENOTAPH of GALEN, in which the PORTLAND VASE was found, a curious MECHANICAL HAND, new and beautiful Objects in the CHROMATROPE, PHYSIOSCOPE, PROTEOSCOPE, &c. New DISSOLVING VIEWS. SUBMARINE EXPERIMENTS by the DIVER and DIVING-BELL. Working Models described daily. Admission, One Shilling; Schools, half-price. A Class for instruction in Mathematics is about to be formed under the direction of Mr. A. W. Hobson B.A. of St. John's College, Cambridge.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Signor MARIO has the honour to inform his Friends, the Subscribers to the Opera, and the Public, that his BENEFIT will take place on THURSDAY next, JULY 3, 1845, when will be presented (Last Time this Season) Bellini's Opera, I PURITANI. Elvira, Mdme. Grisi; Arturo, Sigr. Mario; Riccardo, Sigr Fornasari; and Giorgio, Sigr. Lablache. The DANSEUSES VIENNOISES, under the direction of Mdme Josephine Weiss, will appear in some of their Favourite Dances (being their Last Appearance but one). To be followed by Selections from ROBERTO DEVEREUX. The Principal Characters by Mdme. Rossi-Caccia, Mdlle. Rosetti, Sigr. Moriani, and Sigr. Barroilhet. With Various Entertainments in the BALLET Department, in which Mdlle. Taglioni, Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi, Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, and Mdlle. Cerrito will appear. And for the Last Time, LA SYLPHIDE. La Sylphide, Mdlle. Taglioni; Effie, Madame Petit Stephan; La Sorciere, Madame Copere; Bertha, Mdlle. Berenger; James, M. Perrot; George, M. Toussaint.—Applications for Boxes, Pitt Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors Open at 7; the Opera will Commence at Half past 7.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE OF ARTS, WESTMINSTER-BRIDGE.—Sole Proprietor and Manager, Mr. W. BATTY.—Immense and Overflowing Audiences attend the Reproduction of the Grand Military Spectacle of the BATTLE OF WATERLOO, with all its novel and peculiar effects, aided by the original Representative of Napoleon Buonaparte, Mr. Gomersal.—On MONDAY, June 30, the BATTLE OF WATERLOO. Entire Change of Entertainments in the Circle, containing the whole strength of the French and English artistes. New and Splendid Introductions, by Mdme. Klatt and Mdme. Louise. To conclude with the last new Historical Pantomime, entitled THE GREEK RENEGADE.—Box-office open from 11 till 5.

MASQUERADE at VAUXHALL GARDENS.—M. MUSARD'S Second GRAND BAL MASQUE and CARNIVAL will take place on TUESDAY NEXT, July 1. Gentlemen's Tickets, 10s.; Ladies' ditto, 5s.; to be obtained at the Gardens; of Mr. NATHAN, Costumier, Castle-street, Leicester-square; and at all the Masquerade Warehouses, Libraries, and Musicsellers in the Metropolis.—Doors open at Ten o'clock.

VAUXHALL GARDENS, Open every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. PROMENADE CONCERTS each Evening, under the direction of M. MUSARD. Band of One Hundred Performers. Extraordinary Illuminations (40,000 lamps), and Grand Pyrotechnic Display. On Tuesday, MUSARD'S Second GRAND BAL MASQUE; and on the following night (Wednesday) the JUVENILE FETE, when, in addition to other attractions, the Children of the Royal Military Asylum, Chelsea, with their Full Band, will visit the Gardens.—Admission, 2s.; Children, Half-price. Commence at Eight o'Clock. Admission to the Ball-room, 1s. Master of the Ceremonies, Mr. Widdicomb.

SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The FORTY-FIRST ANNUAL EXHIBITION NOW OPEN, at their Gallery, 5, Pall-Mall East, each day, from Nine till Dusk, WILL CLOSE JULY 12th. Admittance, One Shilling. Catalogue, Sixpence. J. W. WRIGHT, SEC.

THE NEW SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.—The ELEVENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION is now open at their Gallery, 53, Pall-mall, near St. James's Palace, from Nine o'clock till dusk. Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d. JAMES FAHEY, Secretary.

CAPTAIN SIBORNE'S MODELS. — The Original Large MODEL of the BATTLE of WATERLOO has just OPENED at the EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, showing on a surface of 420 square feet, the whole of the hostile armies as they were disposed and engaged when the illustrious Wellington gained the Victory. "Admirable and unequalled model."—Naval and Military Gazette. The NEW MODEL shows the GRAND CHARGE of the BRITISH CAVALRY, led by the Marquis of Anglesey, and of the INFANTRY, by Sir Thomas Picton, in the immediate presence of the immortal Wellington. "The life and spirit which Captain Siborne has infused into this model, is, to us, almost inexplicable."—United Service Gazette. Open from Eleven, Morning, till Nine, Evening. Admission to each Model, 1s.

HIS R. H. the PRINCE of WALES, by gracious permission of her Majesty, from the picture of Winterhalter at Windsor Castle. The HOUSE of BRUNSWICK at ONE VIEW; George I., George II., George III., George IV., William IV., Queen Charlotte, Queen Caroline, Princess Charlotte, Coburg, Dukes of York, Kent, Cambridge, Sussex, &c., the Robes of George IV., restored, the British Orders of the Garter, Bath, Thistle, St. Patrick. The National Group, Mr. Cobden, and Tom Thumb. "This is one of the best sights in the metropolis."—The Times. Open from 11 till 10 at night.—Admittance One Shilling; Napoleon Rooms, Sixpence.—MADAME TUSSAUD and SON'S Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square.

ROYAL ADELAIDE GALLERY, LOWTHER ARCADE, Strand.—LECTURE on CHARACTER.—MR. J. RUSSELL will commence a series of his highly popular Lectures on Character, with Musical Illustrations, on TUESDAY, July the 1st, which will be continued on every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evening; Pianoforte accompaniments by Mr. Sedgwick.—N.B. The performance of the Infant Sappho will take place on the alternate days.

ROYAL ADELAIDE GALLERY, Lowther-arcade, Strand, NOW OPEN, Morning and Evening.—Instructive Lectures on popular subjects—A Working Model of Kollman's Patent Locomotive Engine and Railway for traversing sharp curves in perfect safety (at full speed), and ascending steep inclines; an Explanatory Lecture every Morning at Half-past Two, and in the Evening, at Nine, illustrated by the Model.—The Gas Microscope, with new and beautiful objects.—The Pireidotrope and Dissolving Views. On Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at Three o'Clock, a Lecture on Artificial Memory, by Major Beniowski. Every Evening, a Grand Promenade Concert, under the direction of Mr. Sedgwick; Vocalists, Miss Pearce, and Signor Auguste Giubelei, of her Majesty's Theatre. Master Sebastian Bach Mills, the Infant Pianist (the wonder of the musical world), still continues to perform every day at Four, and during the Evening Concerts.—N.B. Pilbrow's Atmospheric Railway in the course of a few days.

DRESSING CASES.—FISHER, 188, STRAND.—A Large Stock of CASES, with the new and improved morticed partitions, which cannot possibly break loose. Warranted to stand the Tropical Climate. A good Dressing Case, either Lady's or Gentleman's, may be purchased from £3 to £50. Also, Writing Desks, Work Boxes, Leather Travelling Desks, &c.—188, Strand.

R. HOWSE'S (PARTRIDGE-EYE) CHAMPAGNE is pronounced by all who have tasted it this season, to be in every way equal to the first-class French Champagne: it is made from a very superior grape, cultivated at Mayence, on the Rhine, and is warranted always to keep in good condition. May be procured at all respectable British Wine Merchants in town, at 27s. per dozen; and in the country, at 30s. per dozen. Manufactory, 69, 70, and 70½, Strand, London.

CHAMPAGNE.—Messrs. H. and C. SCHOOLING beg to inform the Trade and the Public, that they are appointed SOLE AGENTS in London for the sale of KELSON and FORTT'S BRITISH CHAMPAGNE. This article is now brought to very high perfection, and is acknowledged to possess the finest qualities of the most esteemed French growth. Its flavour is such as to deceive the connoisseur, and the low price brings it within the reach of all.—Sold, Wholesale and Retail, by Messrs. H. and C. SCHOOLING, 3, Barge-yard, Bucklersbury, where samples may be had.

THE MIDSUMMER VACATION.—YOUTHS' CLOTHING.—Those who have the furnishing of "Materials" for Boys' Clothes, and are anxious to purchase on the most advantageous terms, are respectfully invited to a well-selected Stock of WOOLLEN GOODS, where every material will be found, suitable for the equipment of Youth. Every article is marked in plain figures, and sold at the smallest profit, from which no deviation can be made. By these means, those who do not understand the marketable value are protected from imposition.—HILL and MILLS, Woollen Scotch and Manchester Warehouse, 39, St. Martin's-lane, and corner of St. Martin's-court.

SCHWEPPE'S SODA and other ALKALINE WATERS continue to be manufactured as usual, upon the largest scale, at their several establishments, and to maintain their supremacy over all others. Each bottle has its proper proportion of alkali; but, to prevent imposition, consumers are earnestly requested to ascertain that a label with their NAME is over the cork of each bottle of soda water, and a label on each bottle of lemonade and potass water. Schweppe's Liquid Magnesia is of the finest quality, and is strongly recommended as a cure for gout, acidity of the stomach, &c., by the first London Physicians.—51, Berners-street, London.

GIBBINS' CREAM OF ROSES AND ROSEMARY.—This esteemed and elegant Article is most respectfully offered to the Public, by GIBBINS Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, St. James's-square, as the most delicate and effectual Preservative of the Hair. Being a Pomade, it will be successfully applied in promoting its growth and Luxuriance.

GIBBINS' EXTRACT OF ROSES AND ROSEMARY is a liquid made from the above-named plants, and, when applied in washing the Hair, renders it soft and glossy; or, after illness, its astringent properties prevent the Hair from falling off

No. 7, King-street, St. James's-square, London

GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This well-known and highly-appreciated appendage to the British toilet, has for nearly a century past maintained unrivalled reputation as a perfect remedy for all impurities of the Skin, together with the valuable properties of a preserver and sustainer of the Complexion, of the most genial nature, removing every trace of sallowness and discolouration, and promoting that transparency and brightness of the skin which constitute the peculiar graces of a fine complexion.—"ROBERT SHAW, London," is in white letters on the Government stamp, without which none is genuine. Price, 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d.; quarts, 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists.

PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS.—JOHNSON AND CO., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street, Hatters to the Queen and Royal Family, Inventors and Patentees.—From the construction of the PATENT FLEXIBLE HATS the unpleasant pressure on the forehead is entirely removed, and by their extreme elasticity they are capable of accommodating themselves perfectly to the shape of the head; the crown, moreover, being ventilated, and the perspiration prevented from appearing on the outside of the hat, are additional advantages. As Ladies' Riding Hats they are light and elastic, and will retain their position on the head without the least discomfort.—JOHNSON and CO., 113 Regent-street, and GRIFFITHS and JOHNSON, 2, Old Bond-street.

BAKER'S PHEASANTRY, Beaufort-street, King's-road, Chelsea. By Special Appointment to the QUEEN and H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT. Live Game of every description. Gold, Silver, White, and common, tame-bred Pheasants. A great variety of ornamental Water-Fowl, pinioned and domesticated, viz., Black Swans White Swans; Barnacle, China, Egyptian, Canada, Brent, White-fronted, and Bean Geese; also Pintail, Widgeon, Teal, Gadwall, Shovellers, Sheildrakes, and Carolina Ducks. A large assorment of Domestic Poultry, including Cochin China, Malay, Spanish, Hamburgh, Surrey, and Dorking Fowl, Silk Fowl, Fancy Bantams, Pea Fowl, &c. &c. Some pure China Pigs. And at Messrs. BAKER'S, 3, Halfmoon-passage, Gracechurch-street.—Cubs for Stocking.

FOR DUSTY ROADS.—NICOLL'S REGISTERED PALETOT 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 65; unlined, 30s.; 20 paces North of Quadrant, No. 114, Regent-street. An over-coat by many of our patrons called the Dust-ah, is, without encumbering free movement, well adapted for temporary defence against weather, heat, and dusty roads; prepared, and can only be made, by H. J. and D. NICOLL; is naturally repellant of water, yet porous. The tests to breathe through the material to the surface of a mirror. From its elastic softness it will readily fold into the small compass of the ordinary pocket. Price 30s.; is durable withal.—Twenty paces North of Quadrant, London.

NICOLL'S REGISTERED PALETOT, 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 65, made of Llama cloth, in light, dark, and mixed colours, two guineas, patronised by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, is, from the neatness of its form, adapted for the two purposes—as an over-coat, light in weight, a desirable advantage in our ever-variable climate; also, as a surtout, or summer frock coat, without other—a perfect luxury where heat is found oppressive. Unassumed plainness, the characteristic of a gentleman's attire, is fully sustained in the Paletot, being in its fashion neither trop prononce nor trop neglige.—"It speaks well for the working of the new act, which thus secures the profits of a good judgment and well-directed ingenuity to those to whom it is due."—See the "Times" of 4th April. "In the Registered Paletot there is a gentlemanly neatness and an absence of all unsightly vulgarity. It has met with the highest approbation in the Court circle."—See "Morning Post" of 19th April.—Paletots suitable to the habits and professions of all are ready for inspection at the extensive Warerooms, 114, Regent-street, 20 paces North of Quadrant.

JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linendrapers to the Queen, whose Business in Gracechurch-street has been established nearly SEVENTY YEARS, have opened an additional WAREROOM for FAMILY LINEN, at No. 26, REGENT-STREET, two doors below the Piccadilly Circus. JOHN CAPPER and SON have had unusually favourable opportunities for purchasing Linens of every description much below their actual value, and by avoiding the expenses inseparable from giving credit, and selling invariably for IMMEDIATE PAYMENT, WITHOUT DISCOUNT, they can offer this entirely new Stock of the best as well as the most economical manufactures, at prices which will be found highly advantageous to Purchasers of single pieces or smaller quantities. The Stock contains all Household Linens, Table Damasks, both German and British, Huckabacks and Diapers, Towellings, Glass Cloths, &c.; Irish Linens, Linen and Cotton Sheetings, Dimities, Calicos, and Long Cloths; French Cambrics and Muslins for Cravats, Curtains, &c., plain and figured; Flannels, Blankets, Quilts, Table Covers, &c. &c. Family Linen made up and sent home ready for immediate use.

THE ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE for July, contains:—An Article on the Genius of the late T. Hood; with Specimens of his Poetry, Prose, and Pencil; Thirty Engravings; Original Tales, Poetry, Prose, and Topography. Illustrated by the first artists of the day.—1, Crane-court, Fleet-street.

THE ILLUSTRATED FAMILY JOURNAL, Part IV.; a Magazine of Original Essay, Travel, Science, and Poetry; with carefully-selected extracts from the best writers. 64 pages, closely printed, with 40 engravings, in ornamental wrapper, price 9d. J. CLAYTON, 320, Strand.

POPULAR WORKS FOR THE YOUNG.—FIELD'S JUVENILE BOOK WAREHOUSE, 65, QUADRANT, corner of Air-street.—The largest and best selected stock of Juvenile Volumes in London, comprising all the Works of the best Juvenile Writers, and every work of merit as soon as published. Also, an endless variety of Children's Coloured Picture Books.—65, Quadrant.

Published this day, SUMMER FASHIONS for SIXPENCE!!!

CUNNINGHAM'S LADIES' BOOK OF FASHION for July contains a Plate 187 square inches, and another half the size, brilliantly coloured. Also, a splendid Engraving of Benjamin West's celebrated painting, Christ Healing the Sick.  Be particular in giving your orders for CUNNINGHAM'S Fashion Book, by post [illegible]

[illegible] Now ready, second edition, price 5s. 6d., with Cases and Plates,

DR. MADDOCK on a SUCCESSFUL MODE of TREATING DISEASES of the LUNGS, AIR PASSAGES, and HEART. The work is made intelligible to the general reader.—SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row, and all Town and Country Booksellers.

JOE MILLER THE YOUNGER.

This day will appear a Spirited Engraving of YOUNG IRELAND, MESMERISED BY WELLINGTON AND PEEL.

MASTER PEEL THE IRISH SCHOOLMASTER.

The Nassau Balloon	A Right Merrie Conceit Morning, in Serious Verse. By Samivel
The New Brougham Conveyance	Rogers, Esq
American Correspondence	Mr Joseph's Short Discourse on the Flight
Lines on a Dead Mackerel	of Time
Joe's Musical Budget	Joe's Par iamentary Report
The Mysteries of a Muff. (Illustrated)	Sonnet to Sir R. Peel &c. &c. &c.

Office, 159, Fleet-street; and sold by all Booksellers and Newsvenders

FRENCH NEWSPAPER.

L'OBSERVATEUR FRANCAIS. A Journal of the Political, Commercial, and Scientific News of the Week; of Philosophy, Literature, and general information.

Each number contains Articles on English and French politics—News from all countries—Judicial Reports—The "Wandering Jew"—The "History of the Consulate and the Empire"—A Review of Paris—Gossipings and Anecdotes of the Fashionable World—Reports of the Weekly Meetings of the French and other Scientific Academies. A Commercial Report—A Review of English and French Theatres—A Musical Review and Miscellanies.

This Journal appears every Saturday, and in order to admit the most celebrated pieces of French Literature, it is enlarged, without increase of price, from 16 to 24 pages, containing 72 columns of closely printed matter, equal to the contents of 2-8 pages, or 18 printed octavo sheets.—Price Sixpence stamped for post. Orders received by the Publishers, 344, STRAND, and by all Booksellers and Newsvenders in the United Kingdom.

The extensive sale of this Journal renders it an excellent medium for advertisements.

IRELAND.—In the present crisis of Irish affairs, it is of the utmost importance to the British people to possess the means of accurate and impartial information respecting public feeling and political events in Ireland. The Irish Newspapers, with very few exceptions, are the biassed organs or mere agents of parties, political and religious; and it is, consequently, difficult to know from them the true character of parties, or the real merits of the important questions now agitating that country. THE NORTHERN WHIG, published in Belfast, every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, at the office in Calender-street, has uniformly studied, in its advocacy of the rights and interests of all, to merit the character of being strictly impartial; and this character it has maintained during its whole course of upwards of twenty years. Those of the British public who wish to obtain a perfectly independent and true account of Irish affairs, can order this paper through the following Agents:—Messrs. BARKER and WHITE, 33, Fleet-street; WM. DAWSON and SON, 76, Cannon-street, City; NEWTON and Co., 2, Warwick-square; C. MITCHELL, Red Lion-court, Fleet-street.

TERMS:—Yearly Subscription, £2 10s.; Half-yearly, £1 5s.; Quarterly, 12s. 6d.; Single Paper, 4d.

SEVENTEEN SHILLINGS are now charged by the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY for 6lbs. of good sound TEA. This is the lowest price at which Tea can be supplied with credit to the merchant and advantage to the consumer. 6lbs. of COFFEE for 5s. Offices, No. 9, Great St. Helen's Churchyard, Bishopsgate-street.

DUTY OFF GLASS.—BASS and CO.'s PALE EAST INDIA ALE, in Bottle (so highly in repute with the Faculty), reduced in price, to Quarts 6s. 6d., and Pints 3s. 9d., by A. G. FAVENC and Co., Agents, who have also made a similar reduction on London and Dublin Stout.—Stores, 18, 'Change Alley (close to Garraway's); and at No. 3, Sherborne-lane, King William-street, City.

IMPORTANT CHEMICAL DISCOVERY for CLEANING GOLD and SILVER PLATE, JEWELLERY, &c., without wearing the precious Metals in the slightest degree, attested by the eminent Chemist, Dr. Ure, and many Noblemen and Families of the highest distinction.

Caution.—Every genuine Bottle of Silvo-Galvanic Cream is protected by the Stamp and Address of the only Inventors and Makers, "JONES and CO., LIGHT HOUSE, 201, Strand, London." Sold wholesale by Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Sutton and Co., and Edwards and Co., London; and retail by Sanger, Oxford-street; Johnson, Cornhill; Jones and Co 201, Strand; and Rippon and Burton, Oxford-street.

THE PROVIDENT CLERKS' MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION and BENEVOLENT FUND, 42, Moorgate-street, London.

TRUSTEES.

Thomas Baring, Esq, M.P. | W. G. Prescott, Esq.
Baron Haghey, jun., Esq. | Baron L. de Rothschild.

Treasurer of the Benevolent Fund, John Abel Smith, Esq., M.P.

Forms of Proposal for Mutual Life Assurance, to meet every contingency, Annuities, Endowments, Loans, &c., the Fourth Annual Report, and every information, may be had at the offices, where donations and subscriptions to the Benevolent Fund are received.

GEORGE THOMAS, Chairman.

N.B. An Abstract of the Proceedings at the Election of Annuitants, and at the Dinner, on the 28th of May last, may be had, on applica ion.

CIRCULAR NOTES and LETTERS of CREDIT.—The LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK has commenced the issue of Circular Notes, for the use of Travellers and Residents on the Continent. These Notes are payable at every important place in Europe, and thus enable a Traveller to vary his route without inconvenience. No expense is incurred, except the price of the stamp; and when cashed, no charge is made for commission. For the convenience of the public, these Notes may be obtained either at the Head Office of the London and Westminster Bank, in Lothbury, or at the Branches of the Bank, viz.:—

1, St. James's-square. | 3, Wellington-street, Borough.
213, High Holborn. | 87, High street, Whitechapel.
4, Stratford-place, Oxford-street.

By Order of the Board, JAMES WILLIAM GILBART, General Manager.

LOSS OF TEETH SUPPLIED, without Springs, Clasps, or Wires; Loose Teeth Fastened; and Filling Decayed Teeth with Mineral Marmoratum.—Mons. LE DRAY and SON, SURGEON DENTISTS, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street, continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated Mineral Marmoratum, applied without pain, heat, or pressure, preventing and curing the Toothache, and rendering the operation of extraction unnecessary. They also Fasten Loose Teeth, whether arising from age, neglect, the use of calomel, or diseases of the gums. Incorrodible Artificial or Natural Teeth, of surpassing beauty, to match in colour and shape those left in the mouth, fixed, from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, at the following charges:—A single tooth, 10s.; a set, £5 5s. Arranged on the most approved principles, and restoring perfect articulation and mastication. At home from Ten till Six.—Mons. Le Dray's "Treatise on the Diseases of the Gums and Teeth" may be had free, on application at their residence, 42, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—Every description of assurance may be effected with this Society, and policies are granted on the lives of persons of all ages.

Table of Premiums for Assuring £100 on a Healthy Life.

Age.	For One Year only.			For Seven Years at an Annual Payment.			For 14 Years at an Annual Payment of
	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
25	1	1	0	1	2	2	1	3	8
30	1	2	1	1	4	1	1	6	1
35	1	5	2	1	7	2	1	9	3
40	1	8	9	1	10	4	1	13	6
45	1	12	2	1	14	8	2	1	0
50	1	16	11	2	3	10	2	13	11

The sum accumulated and invested, for the security and benefit of the assured, already exceeds half a million sterling; and the income, which is steadily increasing, is now £101,500 per annum.

Bonuses.—The two first divisions averaged £22 per cent. on the premiums paid. The third bonus, declared in January 1842, averaged £28 per cent.; and the future bonuses are expected to exceed that amount.

Further information may be obtained of GEORGE H. PINCKARD, Actuary, 78, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London; or of any of the Society's agents.

SELF MEASUREMENT—GREAT ACCOMMODATION. The following Directions will ensure an exact Fit, and will be found a most convenient accommodation. The measure may be taken with a piece of tape, and reduced into inches, stating the height of person, and if any peculiarity in figure; also whether taken over a Coat.

COATS, VESTS, &c.

	Inches
From Neck seam, not Including Collar, to Hip Buttons
From Hip Buttons to Bottom of Skirt
From centre of Back to Elbow joint
Continued to length of Sleeve at Wrist
Size round top of Arm
Size round Chest under the Coat
Size round Waist under the Coat

TROUSERS.

	Inches
From top of Trousers to bottom
From under the Legs to bottom of Trousers
Size round top of Thigh (tight)
Size round Calf
Ditto Waist
Ditto Hips

HAT

Measure size round the Head

READY MADE.	£	s	d
Tweed Taglionis, from	0	7	6
Ditto, superior quality, with silk collar, cuffs, and facings	0	13	6
Codringtons and Chesterfields, in light and gentlemanly materials	0	18	6
Cachemerette Coats, in every style and make, including the registered veltoe	1	2	0
Holland Jean Grand Drill and Diagonal Blouses	0	3	6
Splendid Summer Vests, from	0	2	6
Cachmere and Persian ditto, in endless variety	0	4	6
Black and Fancy Satins	0	6	6
Cloth Trousers, from	0	9	0
Tweed ditto	0	4	6
Spring ditto (woollen)	0	5	0
Dress Coats	1	0	0
Frock ditto	1	3	0

MADE TO MEASURE.	£	s	d
Tweed Coats, trimmed with silk	0	12	0
Cachmerette ditto, in any shape, handsomely trimmed, made in the first style of fashion	1	5	0
Saxe Gotha ditto, handsomely trimmed	1	15	0
Quilting Vests, 6s. 6d., or 3 for	0	19	0
Cachmere ditto, in choice patterns	0	8	6
Satin ditto, plain or fancy	0	14	6
Spring Trousers in great variety	0	10	6
Tweed ditto, in choice patterns	0	13	6
Single Milled Albert and Plain Doe Trousers	0	19	0
Best quality Black or Dress ditto	1	6	0
Dress Coats	1	12	0
Ditto, ditto, best manufactured	2	15	0
Frock Coats	1	15	0
Ditto, ditto, best manufactured	3	3	0

MOURNING to any extent, at Five Minutes' notice.

IMPORTANT.—Any article purchased or ordered, if not approved of, exchanged, or the money returned.

OBSERVE.—E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Wholesale and Retail Drapers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen.

CAUTION.—E. MOSES and SON are obliged to guard the public against imposition, having earned that the untradesman-like falsehood of being connected with them, or it is the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons. They have no connection with any other house in or out of London; and those who desire genuine Cheap Clothing, should (to prevent disappointments, &c) call at or send to 154, Minories, or, 86, Aldgate, opposite the Church.

N.B.—No business transacted at this Establishment, from Friday at sunset until sunset on Saturday, when business is resumed until twelve o'clock.

HER MAJESTY'S BANQUET.—THE SERENADE POLKA, as played by the Band of the Coldstream Guards, at Windsor, 13th June, now published, and to be had at all Musicsellers in London. Also, the INNISKILLING POLKA, as played by Weippert's inimitable Band, at the Royal Bal Costume.

ELIZA COOK'S POEMS (second series), Just Published, Price FIVE SHILLINGS, containing the Poems written since those which appeared in the Illustrated Edition, with a finely-executed Portrait of the Author. London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL and Co. Orders received by all Booksellers in Town and Country.

ASK FOR AND HAVE.—W. S. LINCOLN'S Quarterly Catalogue of Cheap Second hand English and Foreign Books (ready on Monday, 30th inst.), which will be instantly forwarded gratis, and Postage free, to all applicants, whether in Town or Country. Catalogues of Medical and Classical Books may also be obtained on receipt of two postage stamps. Apply, 3, Cheltenham place, Westminster-road, London.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,
WHAT to EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic
By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.
SHERWOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; CARVALHO, 147, Fleet-street; HANNAY, 63, Oxford-street; MANN, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

THE RIGHT HON. EDMUND BURKE.
This day, price 10s. 6d., cloth,
THE WISDOM AND GENIUS OF EDMUND BURKE, Illustrated in a series of Extracts from his Writings and Speeches; with a Summary of his Life. By PETER BURKE, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.
EDWARD MOXON, 44, Dover-street.

MEMOIRS OF AN UMBRELLA; A New Comic Novel, by G. HERBERT RODWELL! highly illustrated with Engravings by Landells, from Designs by "PHIZ!" This Work will be published in Weekly Numbers, uniform with "Punch;" the readers of that admirable work are therefore requested to give immediate orders to their respective Booksellers and Newsmen, in order that they may receive the two works at the same time. The First Number will appear, Saturday, July 5. PRICE THREEPENCE.
Published by E. MACKENZIE, 111, Fleet-street; opposite the "Punch" Office.

THE ONLY GERMAN NEWSPAPER PUBLISHED in ENGLAND.—DEUTSCHE LONDONER ZEITUNG, Journal of English and Continental Intelligence, containing News of the Week, Politics, Musical and Theatrical Notices, and Criticisms, Commercial Intelligence, &c. A Supplement to each Number, comprising an Original Romance, Poetry, Reviews of Books and of the Arts and Sciences. This paper offers an eligible medium to advertisers, being extensively circulated in England and on the Continent.—Published every Friday evening at the Office of D. Cahn, No. 7, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields; and sold by all newsvenders.

Just Published, foolscap 8vo, price 6s., extra cloth,
SPINAL AFFECTIONS, and the Prone System of Treating them; being an Inquiry into the Nature, Causes, and different Methods of Treating Diseases and Distortions of the Spine, with a view to illustrate the great advantages of the Prone System for the cure of those maladies, with numerous cases. By JAMES COLES, M.R.C.S.E. and L.A.C., Senior Surgeon to the Verral Charitable Society for the Treatment of Poor Persons Afflicted with Diseases and Distortions of the Spine, Chest, and Hips, and Surgeon to the Asylum for Distortions.—HOULSTON and STONEMAN, 65, Paternoster-row.

On the 30th of June, price 4s. 6d., in embossed cloth,
CHAMBERS' EDINBURGH JOURNAL. Third Volume, New Series, comprising Familiar Sketches, Moral Essays, Poetry, Tales, Biographic Sketches, and Miscellaneous Articles of Instruction and Entertainment.
 Vols. 1 and 2 of the New Series,—complete sets of the First Series; and also odd Numbers, may always be had from the publishers. "Chambers' Journal is nobly working its way as one of the great regenerators. We wish it God speed."—Sheffield Iris.
London: WM. S. ORR and Co., Amen-corner; and sold by all Booksellers and Newsvenders.

HOGG'S WEEKLY INSTRUCTOR, now Publishing in Weekly Numbers, price 1½d., and in Monthly Parts, 7d. To be had regularly from any Bookseller.—"One of the best works now issuing from the press. It will be a weekly instructor to thousands of our countrymen."—Glasgow Examiner. "No publication that we have seen appears so well entitled to support."—Banner of Ulster. Part IV., just ready, contains Essays, Tales, Biographical Sketches and Portraits of Eminent Persons, Articles on Literary and Scientific Subjects, Digests of New Books, Poetry, &c.—Edinburgh: JAMES HOGG, 122, Nicholson-street. London: R. GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, 5, Paternoster row.

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—Subscribers are respectfully informed that they can be supplied with this Paper CAREFULLY FOLDED, and ENCLOSED in a LARGE WRAPPER, so as EFFECTUALLY TO PREVENT IT FROM INJURY in passing through the Post.

TERMS.	£ s. d.
Per Quarter	0 6 6
Half Year	0 13 0
Year	1 6 0

Sets completed. The Volumes bound in a superior style, with gilt edges, at 5s each. Orders must be accompanied with a remittance, or by a reference for payment in town. All letters must be addressed thus:—"Mr. F. CLAPPERTON, 159, Fleet-street, London."

SUPERIOR SCHOOL BOOKS
BUTTER'S ETYMOLOGICAL SPELLING-BOOK and EXPOSITOR; an Introduction to the Spelling, Pronunciation, and Derivation of the English Language; containing, besides several other important improvements, extensive Tables of Words deduced from their Greek and Latin Roots; adapted to the Use of Classical and Ladies' Schools, and also of Adults and Foreigners. 83rd Edition. Price 1s. 6d. bound.
BUTTER'S GRADATIONS in READING and SPELLING, upon an entirely New and Original Plan, by which Dissyllables are rendered as easy as Monosyllables: with numerous entertaining and instructive Reading Lessons, in prose and verse. 29th Edition. Price 1s 6d., bound.
Simpkin and Co., Whittaker and Co., Longman and Co., Hamilton and Co., London. H Mozley and Son, Derby. Oliver and Boyd, Edinburgh.

Just Published,
AN ELABORATE MODEL-MAP OF THE HOLY LAND, dedicated, by special permission, to her Majesty.—This unique MAP exhibits all the Mountains, Valleys, &c., in exact proportions, and shows clearly to the eye the remarkable difference in level between the Dead Sea and the Mediterranean. It is enriched with Original Biblical and Geological Notes and References, by the Rev. Dr. WILSON, F.R.S.—Price, handsomely framed, 21s.
Also,
A SERIES OF EMBOSSED TABLEAUX, executed after works of the Great Masters.—The increasing taste for the Fine Arts has induced Messrs. D. B. and Co. (in anticipation of extensive patronage) to issue these Embossings at the minimum prices; enabling Subscribers to secure a Collection of Choice Compositions at a very trifling cost. Already finished, Raphael's Cartoons (2s. each), and other interesting subjects.
London: DOBBS, BAILEY and Co., 134, Fleet-street, and 13, Soho-square; and sold by all Booksellers and Stationers.

This day is published, price 2s 6d., No. VI. of
THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL JOURNAL, published under the direction of the Central Committee of the British Archæological Association for the Encouragement and Prosecution of Researches into the Arts and Monuments of the Early and Middle Ages. No. VII. will be published in September.
8vo. with 52 illustrations, 10s. 6d.,
THE ARCHITECTURAL HISTORY OF CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL. By the Rev. R. WILLIS, M.A., F.R.S., &c., Jacksonian Professor in the University of Cambridge.
Extract from the Preface:—"The Translation of Gervase, which it is the principal object of the following history to illustrate, was read by me with a few necessary omissions at the evening meeting of the Architectural Section of the British Archæological Association on the 11th of September, 1844. . . . The work may therefore be considered as forming part of the Transactions of the Association, although it is obviously too bulky and independent for insertion in the Journal, which is the recognised organ of that body."
The Second Congress of this Association will be held at Winchester during the week commencing September 8.
London: Longman and Co.; W. Pickering; G. Bell. Oxford: Parker. Cambridge Deighton.

TO AMATEURS OF CHESS.
On the 1st of July will be published, price 1s., No. 7, Volume 6, of
THE CHESS PLAYER'S CHRONICLE, containing original Games and Problems by the most distinguished Players of the day; a complete Report of the Anniversary Dinner of the Yorkshire Chess Players; an Account of the Great Chess Match between France and England, by T. J. Bryan, Esq.; an Article on the Chinese and Hindoo Methods of playing the Game: some particulars touching the late game of Chess by Telegraph, &c. &c. &c. The five volumes of this highly-popular and interesting Magazine, which have previously appeared, are acknowledged to contain by far the largest and most valuable collection of Chess varieties ever brought together. In addition to Articles by the best authorities illustrative of the History and Antiquities of the Game, Anecdotes and Biographical Notices of eminent Players, Miscellaneous Information of every description relative to Chess and its Votaries, there will be found in these volumes about 2000 Games and Problems, the greater part of which have never before been published, by Philidor, Des Chappelles, Mc Donnell, Lewis, La Bourdonnais, Cochrane, Staunton, Heydebrant, Bledow, Kieseritzki, Ghulam, Kassim, Petroff, Jaenish, &c. &c. &c.
London: R. HASTINGS, 13, Carey-street, Lincoln's Inn; and of all Booksellers in Town and Country.

THE GREAT BAZAAR AT COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE.
THE ART-UNION MONTHLY JOURNAL of the FINE ARTS, THE ARTS DECORATIVE AND ORNAMENTAL, and Record of the Arts of Manufacture. Largely Illustrated by Engravings on Wood, Steel, &c. Price One Shilling.—This day is Published,
A complete REPORT of the INDUSTRIAL ART of ENGLAND, exhibited at the recent BAZAAR in Covent garden Theatre; occupying sixty columns of the ART-UNION, and illustrated by about Sixty Engravings on Wood, comprising Drawings of the most prominent "Stalls," and the most striking objects exhibited on the interesting and important occasion—the earliest attempt to form in this country a "National Exposition," similar to those expositions which have so largely benefitted France and other nations of the Continent.
"The Manufacturers, generally, are now aware of the immensely beneficial aid they may derive from the Artist. It is our duty to make this manifest more and more; to reiterate the important truth again and again—labouring unceasingly to obtain for Great Britain the advantages which have followed the alliance between the Fine Arts and the Useful Arts in every other country of Europe."
The Work (which should be ordered without delay) may be obtained of any Bookseller in town or country, or of the Publishers, Messrs. CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand, to whom all communications for "The Editor" are to be addressed.

NEW EDITOR—GRATUITOUS SUPPLEMENT.
COLBURN'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.
NOW EDITED BY W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, ESQ.
CONTENTS OF THE JULY NUMBER:—
CECCO DEL ORSO,
An Italian Romance of the Fourteenth Century; by the Editor.
2. My Room in the Country. By Andrew Wintr
3. Thoughts on Inns: In Two Chapters. By the Author of "Hillingdon Hall"
4. The Principality of the Captive Jews. By W. Francis Ainsworth, Esq
5. Written after witnessing the Performance of a young American Actress. By Charlotte Cushman
6. The Ass Eathing Thistles. (Æsop Illustrated.) By the Author of "Peter Priggins"
7. The Robertses on their Travels. Chapters XL, XLI., XLII., and XLIII. By Mrs. Trollope
8. Lights and Shades in the Life of a Gentleman on Half-pay. No. XIII. By the Author of "Stories of Waterloo"
9. Recreations in Natural History. No. XXIV. Elephants
10. Beauteous Little Mary. By Edward Kenealy
11. The Chest of Cigars. By Lancelot Wagstaff, Esq
12. The Fiddler of Frankfort. By Dudley Costello
13. The Gray Old Ash Tree, By Thomas Miller
14. Selections from Jean Paul Freidrich Richter. By John Oxenford
15. The Last Adventures of Hereward the Saxon. By Thomas Wright, M.A.
16. The Opera
17. Literature of the Month

With this Number is presented a
GRATUITOUS SUPPLEMENT,
Containing Twenty-One Chapters of the "REVELATIONS OF LONDON," BY W. HARRISON AINSWORTH, ESQ.;
ILLUSTRATED BY
FOURTEEN MAGNIFICENT DESIGNS ON STEEL, BY PHIZ.
Thus giving a Double Number, without increase of charge.
 Mr. Ainsworth will henceforth write EXCLUSIVELY in the "New Monthly Magazine," and continue his "Revelations of London" in that Journal, until the completion of the Romance. HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, Great Marlborough-street.

CHASTON'S INDIA-RUBBER ELASTIC CORN PLASTERS, the only safe and sure remedy, may be had, by sending free 13 postage stamp. to B. CHASTON, Chemist, Watton, Norfolk. They will be sent free to any part of the kingdom

ALE! ALE! ALE!—Best, brightest, purest, and most in esteem by Connoisseurs, to be had in Eighteen or Nine Gallon Casks, at One Shilling per Gallon, by addressing to the JOHN BULL BREWERY. Office, 20, Philpot-lane, City. Conveyed, free, to any part of London.

DANCING.—LESSONS in the MAZURKA, CELLARIUS VALS, POLKA, and VALSE a DEUX TEMPS, (as taught by Cellarius), by Mr. WILLIS, 41, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons at all hours to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age, wishing privacy and expedition. Terms may be had on application.

GENUINE GERMAN SELTERS WATER, bottled at the Fountain-head of the celebrated Spring on the Estate of the Grand Duke of Nassau, whose seal, impressed upon every Bottle, distinguishes this salubrious beverage from chemical imitations. Imperial Quarts, 12s.; Pints, 8s.; per Dozen. Order by Post, direct from the Importers, HENRY BRETT and CO., Old Furnival's-inn, Holborn-bars

BED FEATHERS, Duty Free:—

Best White Dantzic	2s. 10d.	Best Foreign Greys	2s. 0d.
Irish Whites	2s. 0d.	Irish Greys	1s. 6d.
Best ditto	2s. 6d.	Best ditto	1s. 9d.

HEAL and SON, 196, Tottenham-court-road, opposite the Chapel.

PARIS.—To prevent inconvenience and disappointment, persons visiting PARIS are respectfully informed that the HOTEL VICTORIA is in the Rue Chauveau la Garde, near the Church of the Madeline, No. 3, and not in the Rue Vivienne as stated by error in Mr. Murray's Hand Book. The Prospectus of the Hotel Victoria (containing much information) may be had gratis of W. STRANGE, 21, Paternoster-row (who will send it post-free on receipt of 2 postage stamps); G. BIGGS, Strand; or Mr. MOON, Regent-street.

A GREAT CHEMICAL TRIUMPH.—UPTON'S PARISIAN GOLD DETERGENT instantly restores the most discoloured and fly-spotted Gilding to its original beauty and lustre. One 2s. 6d. Bottle is of more service than £20 expended in re-gilding. Or-Molu-Lacquer, Silver and Bronze Detergents, 1s 6d. per Bottle; Gold Varnish, 1s. 6d.; and Silver Plating, 1s. These are equally effective and cheap. UPTON and Co., 33, George-street, Hanover-square; and 66, Basinghall-street, City. N.B. Trial gratis.

DINNER SERVICES, TABLE GLASS, &c.—SANDER and Co., 319, Holborn, corner of Southampton Buildings, opposite Gray's Inn Gate, have on view the largest Stock in London of Table Glass, Dinner, Dessert, and Tea Services, Ornamental China, Chandeliers, Lustres, Lamps, Hall Lanterns, &c. N.B. A considerable number of Dinner, Dessert, and Tea Services at a great reduction in price; these patterns are not those of the present year, but the ware is of the best quality, and they will be found worthy of attention; some of the Dinner Services in question, are porcelain, in addition to which, there are a few suspending Drawing Room Lamps; Lustres, and Hall Lanterns.

A HAND and ARM COVERED with WOUNDS CURED by HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—Thos. Main injured his hand two years ago, in the Yard, at Northfleet, which, in a short time, began to swell to an alarming extent, and broke out, from the fingers up to the elbow, into several ulcers. Not only was this poor man incapable of doing anything for eighteen months, but, what was worse, he had been discharged as incurable from an hospital, after being there nine weeks. From this hopeless state has this person been radically cured by Holloway's wonderful Ointment and Pills.—Sold at Professor Holloway's Establishment, 244, Strand, and by all respectable medicine sellers throughout the civilised world.

OLD PATTERNS BRUSSELS CARPETS.—Ladies who do not object to purchase carpets of last year's designs have now an opportunity of selecting from upwards of 1000 pieces of magnificent dining and drawing-room BRUSSELS CARPETS, at a considerable reduction from the original prices. Thus the richest qualities, Comber patterns, original price 5s. 9d. and 6s. 6d. per yard, will be sold at 3s 9d. to 4s. 3d. per yard; three-threads reduced from 4s 9d. to 3s. 6d., and good medium Brussels 2s. 4d to 2s. 9d. per yard; several hundred pieces of velvet pile, Axminster and Kidderminster carpets; strong yard-wide carpets, for common use, 9½d. per yard; tabarets, chintzes, satin and washing damasks. The above goods are now for inspection at the National Linen Company's warehouse, 105, Fleet-street, corner of Farringdon-steet.

HAY-MAKING SEASON.—Mrs. MARY WEDLAKE, widow of the late THOMAS WEDLAKE, of the Fairkytes Original Iron Works, Hornchurch, Essex, and 118, Fenchurch-street, opposite Mark-lane, London, begs to remind Agriculturists, she continues making that most useful Implement, for which her late husband obtained a Patent, and received a Silver Medal at the Derby Show, the DOUBLE-ACTION HAY-MAKER, so much admired; also, the HORSE HAY-RAKE. They may be inspected daily at the City Repository for Agricultural and Colonial Implements, 118, Fenchurch-street, opposite Mark lane, London. N.B. To prevent disappointment at this season, an early application for these Implements is solicited.

SILKS.—GEORGE SMITH, 32, Ludgate-hill, invites the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, to inspect the magnificent collection of FOREIGN SILKS, which he is selling at little more than half-price. They are the richest Lyons manufacture, three-quarters wide, and varied in every hue and size of pattern. An eminent Paris house has submitted to this loss, in consequence of the ruinous effects of the winterly weather which prevailed through the late spring. System of business—Ladies are invited to inspect at their pleasure, but on no pretence solicited to purchase: no deviation from the prices, which are marked in plain figures, for ready money only. Shawls, silks, satins, velvets, dresses, cloaks, fancy goods, mourning, table linen, &c. &c.—GEORGE SMITH, late Graham and Smith, successors to Everington, now 32, Ludgate-hill, the premises lately occupied by Rundell and Bridge.

LADIES, whether frequenting the crowded saloon, the close assembly, the rural ride or drive, the summer promenade, or the aquatic excursion, will find in ROWLAND'S KALYDOR a renovating and refreshing auxiliary, dispelling the cloud of langour from the complexion, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity of the Skin. The distressing and unsightly varieties of Cutaneous Eruptions, as well as Sunburns, Freckles, Discolorations, and Sallowness, yield to its specific qualities, and are succeeded by a clearness and softness of the skin truly grateful to its possessor. Its invaluable properties have obtained its selection by the Court, and the Royal Family of Great Britain, and those of the Continent of Europe, together with the whole elite of the aristocracy and haut ton. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.—Ask for "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR," all others are fraudulent Counterfeits!

ROWLAND'S UNIQUE PREPARATIONS.—(Patronised by the several Sovereigns and Courts of Europe, and in general use in all Countries.)
ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth, Preservation, and for Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 3s. 6d., 7s.; Family Bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s. per bottle.
ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for Improving and Beautifying the Skin and Complexion, eradicates all Cutaneous Eruptions, Sun-burn, and Freckles, and renders the Skin Soft, Fair, and Blooming. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle
ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for Preserving and Beautifying the Teeth and Strengthening the Gums. Price 2s. 9d. per box.
CAUTION.—Beware of Spurious Compounds under the same names (some under the implied sanction of Royalty). The only Genuine Preparations have the word "ROWLAND'S" on the Wrappers.—Sold by the Proprietors, at 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

SUPERIOR SHIRTS AT MODERATE PRICES

Strong Cotton and Long Cloth Shirts	1s 6d and 2s 0d
Long Cloth Shirts, with fine Linen Full Fronts, Collars, and Wristbands (well made)	2s 6d and 3s 6d
Superior Long Cloth Shirts, extra super Linen Fronts, Collars, and Wristbands (beautifully made)	4s 6d and 5s 6d

Fine Linen Collars 4½d., or 4s. 3d. per Dozen. Extra Superfine, 6d., or 5s. 6d. per Dozen.
A large assortment of Shirts of every description, including some of the most approved fabrics in all Linen Shirts, and the finest qualities in India Long Cloth, kept washed and ready for immediate use. Hosiery at the lowest prices.
Boys' Shirts in all sizes. Shirts and Hosiery made to order.
Gentlemen and Families waited upon with patterns and specimens of superior workmanship. Country orders faithfully executed, and forwarded to all parts of the United Kingdom.
RODGERS and Co., Shirt Makers, Hosiers, and Manufacturing Outfitters (Successors to the late Mr. KIPLING), 59, St. Martin's-lane, and 29, New-street, Covent-garden, the premises being at the corner of New-street. Established half a century.

CABBURN'S OIL.—Triumphant Success in SPINAL AFFECTIONS, Deformity, Rheumatic Pains, &c.—The daughter of a very respectable innkeeper at one of the principal watering and bathing towns in Kent, was so afflicted with a Spinal Affection, as to be given over by all the Faculty who had seen her, the physicians observing that the disease had so completely overcome all nature, that no person on earth could ever restore the child, who was seven years of age, with her limbs all so contracted, that the knee was drawn up into the breast, and the heel so tight to the under part of the thigh, that even a thread could not be passed between; in constant pain, with total loss of appetite; so emaciated and worn down, that she was obliged upon all occasions to be moved (agreeably to the doctor's order) with a sheet, as she dare not be lifted otherwise, for fear of the bones protruding through the skin. The parents had made up their minds to the painful result—dissolution, when, fortunately, a gent. recommended Mr. Cabburn's Oil, which, after the third application, allayed all pain, procured rest, appetite, regularity, &c.; by a steady application she has become a healthy child, and can run about anywhere. The full particulars of this case, as also many other extraordinary restorations of Spinal Weakness, Deformity, and Rheumatic Affections, may be had at Mr. Cabburn's Dispensary, No. 1, King's-cross, London, where the Oil may be had in bottles, at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s, 22s., and of all respectable Medicine Vendors.
N.B. Ask for Cabburn's Oil for the cure of Rheumatism, &c.

GREAT SAVING IN SOAP AND LABOUR.
Royal Letters Patent, granted March 4, 1844.
WARD'S PATENT WASHING and CLEANSING POWDER, manufactured at the Oldbury Alkali Works, near Birmingham. One great advantage which this powder possesses over others consists in its not injuring the hands of the persons using it. Other Washing Powders contain carbonate of soda in its free state, which, by acting upon the skin, inflames the hands and renders them sore and wrinkled. Other advantages peculiar to this powder may be stated as follows, viz.:—A saving of at least one-half of the soap which is necessary when soda is used. A great saving in the labour of washing. The colour of linen and other fabrics turns out far superior in whiteness to that which is given by any other means. From the wear and tear caused by the rubbing and maiding being diminished, the durability of the clothes is increased.
This Powder will be found very valuable in Scouring Greasy Floors and Tables, in Cleansing Brass, Tin, and other utensils of domestic use, and also Publicans' Pewter Pots.
 Warranted not to injure articles, though made of the finest materials.
Sold in packets, at 1d., 2d., 3d., and 6d. each, with directions for using. Be particular in asking for WARD'S WASHING POWDER, as no other possesses the same qualities.—To be had of all Druggists, Grocers, Oilmen, &c., or wholesale from the Manufacturers, by application to Mr. P. WARD, at the Works as above, or in London, to Mr. JOHN MACARTNEY, 2, Coleman-street Buildings.

ROYAL FARMERS' and GENERAL FIRE, LIFE, and HAIL INSURANCE INSTITUTION.
Empowered by Special Act of Parliament. Capital, £500,000.
OFFICES, STRAND, LONDON.
DIRECTORS.
CHAIRMAN—Joseph Rogerson, Esq.
MANAGING DIRECTOR—W. Shaw Esq.

J. Blackstone, Esq.	J. R. Cooper, Esq.	Wm. Smeddle Esq.
S. Boydell, Esq.	John Hudson, Esq.	G. P. Tuxford, Esq.
Wm. Clutton, Esq.	R. M. Jaques, Esq.	J Workman, Esq.
	W. Youatt, Esq.

MEDICAL OFFICERS—J. Blackstone, Esq.; and G. W. Blanch, Esq.
STANDING COUNSEL—C. W Johnston, Esq.; W. Shaw, Esq.
JOINT SOLICITORS—John Rogerson, Esq.; C. Boydell, Esq.
ASSISTANT MANAGER—W. Jenkinson, Esq.
SECRETARY—J. Hanson, Esq.
BANKERS—The London and Westminster Bank.
The Proprietary of this Company exceeds 1,960 in number, of whom 195 are County Directors
The share of public favour this Institution has obtained, proves the appreciation of its system by a numerous body of insurers.
Every kind of Life Insurance, of Deferred and Immediate Annuities, and of Endowments for Children, may be accomplished on terms as low as is consistent with security.
A dividend of Four per Cent. is now in course of payment to the Shareholders in this office
In the Fire Department, Insurances effected at the lowest rates.
HAIL INSURANCE.—Premium Sixpence per acre for Wheat, Barley, Turnips, and Peas Fourpence per acre for Oats, Beans, and Potatoes. Glass in hothouses, greenhouses, or private houses, 20s. per Cent.
Prospectuses may be obtained at the office, or will be forwarded, post free, upon application
The usual commission to Solicitors
Agents are appointed in the Principal Towns in the Kingdom.
W. SHAW, Managing Director.

ROYAL EXCHANGE HANDKERCHIEFS.—A Beautiful Engraving on Copper upon a large scale, showing the Clock Tower, &c., printed upon the best Silk Handkerchief, from a Drawing done expressly for that purpose, 5s. 6d. each, or by post, postage stamps enclosed, 6s.—To be had of W. TENT, the Publisher, No. 21, Royal Exchange, at his Hosiery and Outfitting Warehouse

SPOONS and FORKS strongly plated with Silver on a white metal, and consequently not liable by wear to show any other colour. Table Spoons or Forks, 27s. per dozen; Dessert Spoons or Forks, 21s. 6d. per dozen; Tea Spoons, 16s. per dozen; Gravy Spoons, 6s. each; Soup Ladles, 13s. 6d. each.—T. COX SAVORY, Silversmith, &c., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp

INGRAM'S MANUFACTORY, 29, CITY-ROAD.
CHILDREN'S and INVALIDS' CARRIAGES.—INVALIDS Wheel Chairs, from £3 to £35, with hoods; second-hand, as well as new. Spinal and Self-acting Chairs. Children's Chaises, Vis-a-vis Waggons, Phaetons, Barouches, &c. &c, from Ten Shillings to Twenty Guineas. Immense and varied collections on sale or hire.

THE LARGEST STOCK IN EUROPE.—FURNISHING IRONMONGERY, Stove Grates, Kitchen Ranges, Fenders, Fire-Irons, Best Sheffield Plate, Ornamental Iron and Wire Work, Garden Engines, Rollers, &c.; Japan Tea Trays, Baths, &c.—PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS, adjoining Madame Tussaud's, 53, Baker-street, Portman-square.—N.B. Every article is marked in plain figures at the lowest cash prices.

SYLPHIDE PARASOLS.—The CLAREMONT SYLPHIDE, AS WORN AT PARIS, and manufactured by the Patentees, is the most elegant form in which this admired Parasol has been offered to the public, and is about half the weight only of the usual description, which is so desirable in Parasols. Ladies are requested to observe that the parasols are all stamped "Sylphide Patent."—W. and J. SANGSTER, 140, Regent-street, and 10, Royal Exchange.

INDIA and COLONIAL OUTFITS, LADIES' WEDDING ORDERS, &c., prepared with particular attention as to quality, fashion, and economy, and executed to any extent on the shortest notice, by POPE and PLANTE, General Outfitters and Manufacturers of every description of the best Hosiery for Family Use, 4, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall. The Ladies' Department conducted by experienced female assistants. Lists and Patterns forwarded.

LIGHTER and SOFTER than FLANNEL.—THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE WAISTCOATS, manufactured expressly for warm climates, are perfectly free from every irritating or disagreeable quality. They are manufactured by THRESHER and GLENNY, and can only be procured at their East India Outfitting Establishment, 152, Strand, London. It is very important to notice, that every article is marked "THRESHER'S INDIA GAUZE," as no other material possesses the same absorbent qualities.

TO LADIES BEFORE LEAVING TOWN.—BARGAINS for SUMMER DRESS.—1000 Swisse Muslin, Barege, Cashmere, and Balzorine Dresses, at 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 6s. 9d., to 10s. 9d. the full Dress: 4000 yards rich Striped, Checked, and Glace Silks, 1s. 6½d., 1s. 9½d., 2s., 2s. 6½d. per yard; 1000 French Berge, Lama, Mecklin, Shetland, and Paisley Shawls, at 5s. 9d., 7s. 9d., 10s. 9d., to 21s each. The above Goods have been purchased by tender at a large discount, and are now offering at the London Silk Establishment, 137, Oxford-street, near Old Cavendish-street. P.S. Wanted an active Youth as an Apprentice.

GERMAN HOSPITAL IN LONDON.
Under the protection of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen,
Her Majesty the Queen Dowager,
His Majesty the King of Prussia,
His Royal Highness Prince Albert,
And under the Patronage of
His Majesty the King of Hanover,
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester,
Her Royal Highness the Princess Sophia,
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent,
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge,
His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge,
His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia,
His Majesty the King of Denmark,
His Majesty the King of Bavaria,
His Majesty the King of Saxony,
H. R. H. the Grand Duke of Hesse Darmstadt,
H. R. H. the Grand Duke of Saxe Weimar,
H. R. H. the Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz,
H. R. H. the Crown Prince of Wirtemberg.
President—His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE,

At a PUBLIC MEETING, held at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, on Wednesday, the 18th of June,
H.R.H. the Duke of CAMBRIDGE in the Chair,
the following donations and subscriptions were announced:—

	Donations.	Annual.
Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen	£100 0 0
Her Majesty the Queen Dowager	100 0 0
His Majesty the King of Prussia	300 0 0	100 0 0
H.R.H. Prince Albert	100 0 0
His Majesty the King of Hanover	150 0 0	50 0 0
H.R.H. the Duchess of Gloucester	25 0 0
H.R.H. the Princess Sophia	25 0 0
H.R.H. the Duchess of Kent	100 0 0
H.R.H. the Duchess of Cambridge	25 0 0
H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge	50 0 0
His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia	100 0 0
His Majesty the King of Denmark	100 0 0
His Majesty the King of Bavaria	100 0 0
His Majesty the King of Saxony	50 0 0
H.R.H. the Grand Duke of Hesse Darmstadt	20 0 0
H.R.H. the Grand Duke of Saxe Weimar	40 0 0
H.R.H. the Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, 20 Louis d'or	16 10 0
H.R.H. the Crown Prince of Wirtemberg	20 0 0
His Excellency Chevalier Bunsen	50 0 0	50 0 0
His Excellency Baron de Cetto	10 10 0
His Excellency Count Kielmansegge		5 5 0
His Excellency Baron Gersdorff	10 0 0
H.S.H. Prince Biron Curland		10 0 0
H.S.H. Prince Puckler Muskau	50 0 0
His Grace the Duke of Sutherland		5 5 0
Lord Ashley, M.P.		2 2 0
Sir Thos Dyke Acland, Bart., M.P.	20 0 0
Sir Robert H. Inglis, Bart., M.P.	10 10 0
Frederick Huth, Esq., treasurer	200 0 0
B. Hebeler, Esq.	50 0 0
Messrs. Konigswarter, Brothers	20 0 0
J Mallet, Esq.	1 1 0
M. F. Bremer, Esq.	10 0 0
S. Schwabe, Esq., Manchester	50 0 0	10 10 0
C. A Preller, Esq.	50 0 0	5 5 0
Collection after a Sermon by Rev. M. Sydow	20 0 0
Anonymous	50 0 0
Anonymous, per Dr. Freund	5 0 0	1 1 0
W. Kuper, Esq.	20 0 0	2 2 0
William Bird, Esq.	25 0 0	5 5 0
T. Hornemann, Esq.	1 1 0
Thomas Payne, Esq.	1 1 0
S. Reuter, Esq.	10 0 0	5 5 0
George Walker, Esq.		1 1 0
J. C. Haddan, Esq.		2 2 0
J. M. Oppenheim, Esq.	25 0 0	5 5 0
R. J., per C A. Preller, Esq.	10 0 0
Messrs. Platow and Co.	10 0 0	2 0 0
Samuel Gurney, Esq.	50 0 0
Herman Sillem, Esq.	100 0 0
A. Bach, Esq.		1 1 0
C. G. Draeseke	10 0 0	1 1 0
Anonymous, per S. Ruter, Esq.	2 2 0
Messrs. Gaban and Co.	15 15 0	5 5 0
William Bevan, Esq.	5 5 0	1 1 0
Jeremiah Clark, Esq.		1 1 0
Mrs. Clark	1 1 0
A Lady, per ditto	1 0 0
Miss Ditl	1 1 0	1 1 0
S. Spreuger, Esq.		1 1 0
Joseph Garras, Esq.		1 1 0
S. Lippmann, Esq., Prague	10 0 0
J. D Kohler, Esq.	25 0 0	1 1 0
T. H. Elmenhorst, Esq.	10 10 0	2 2 0
Thomas H. Hunsch, Esq	5 5 0	1 1
George Smith, Esq.	10 0 0
George Appold, Esq.	10 0 0
Mrs. Schrocler	1 0 0
Messrs. S. and J. Lovegrove	2 2 0
W. Bean, Esq.	1 0 0
Anonymous, per C. A. Preller, Esq.		1 1 0
Messrs. J. and S. Cahlmann Brothers	10 0 0	2 2 0
Benjamin Bond Cabbel, Esq.,	50 0 0
William Preller, Esq., Liverpool	5 0 0
H. Frommel, Esq., ditto	3 0 0
John Ball, Esq.	10 10 0	1 1 0
Hunt and Roskell, Mass.		2 2 0
R. M. Phillips, Esq.	50 0 0	2 2 0
Thomas Turner, Esq.		1 1 0
— Martin, Esq.	5 0 0
Miss Kramer	1 0 0
A Lady, per ditto	1 0 0
G. H. Wulff, Esq.	10 10 0	1 1 0
E. J. Dent, Esq.	1 1 0
Two Ladies	2 0 0
A Friend	1 0 0
John Heimann, Esq., Bonn	5 0 0
Albert Wintzer, Esq		1 1 0
James Heywood, Esq., Manchester	20 0

THE REV. RICHARD BARHAM, B.A.

The Rev. Richard Harris Barham, the "Thomas Ingoldsby" of Bentley's Miscellany, died on the 17th inst., and the news of his death coming, as it did, unexpectedly on the public, has caused general regret.

Mr. Barham descended from a branch of the respectable Kentish family of Barham of Barham Court. Having taken holy orders in the Church of England, he rose to eminence in his sacred profession, and was, at the period of his demise, Minor Canon, and Divinity Lecturer of St. Paul's; Rector of St. Augustine's; and Priest of the Chapel Royal. He was made a Canon in 1821; and admitted to the rectory in 1842. As a clergyman, Mr. Barham's character stood high for piety, charity, and benevolence: as a private individual, he was much beloved by his family, relatives, and friends. He ever showed the greatest promptitude and pleasure in all works of mercy; and his services were given to several charitable institutions—among others, to the Literary Fund, and the Society for the Relief of Poor Widows. As Almoner to the Bishop of Llandaff (who is Dean of St. Paul's), he had the opportunity of liberally relieving the distressed, and he exercised his office with much kindness and discretion.

THE LATE REV. RICHARD BARHAM.

As an author, Mr. Barham possessed a poetic vein of peculiar humour. His verse, and its mirthful tone, bore a great resemblance to the productions of Peter Pindar (Dr. Wolcot): the latter, however, sought for subjects in the jokes of Joe Miller, whilst "Ingoldsby" went into the world of spirits, or among the legendary records of the monkish era; and, we must confess, with sometimes an irreverence which scarcely became the dignified priestly reputation which he deservedly bore. The "Ingoldsby Legends" appeared first in Bentley's Magazine—their drollery increased by accompanying broad caricature illustrations: they were afterwards published in two volumes, and have, in either shape, enjoyed much popularity. Mr. Barham was also a novel writer: one tale of his, "Cousin Nicholas," is very well known. It is not unlikely, also, that he may have been the writer of much more anonymous pleasantry that, during his career, enlivened the various periodical publications.

Mr. Barham expired, after a short, but severe illness, at his residence, Amen Corner, St. Paul's.

LEGALIZATION OF ART UNIONS.—The Bill introduced into the House of Commons for legalizing Art Unions, declares that all such voluntary associations now constituted, or which may hereafter be constituted, shall be deemed and taken to be lawful associations, provided always a Royal charter shall have been obtained, or the deed of partnership or other instrument constituting such association have been approved of by a Committee of the Privy Council.

LITERATURE.

THE WISDOM AND GENIUS OF THE RIGHT HON. EDMUND BURKE. Illustrated in a Series of Extracts from his Writings and Speeches; with a Summary of his Life. By PETER BURKE, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Moxon.

The preparation of this volume must have been to its pains-taking compiler a labour of love: "ever a warm and reverential admirer of the character and principles of Edmund Burke," he has evidently worked with diligence and discrimination in selecting from a rich store of reason and eloquence the characteristics of the master-mind of the illustrious patriot and philosopher, Burke, who, assuredly, possessed an understanding stronger than that of any statesman, active or speculative, of the eighteenth century. Hitherto, the most admired portions of his writings and speeches were mostly clogged with political, financial, and statistical details, which the public or parliamentary business of the moment required; and to free the "thoughts of wisdom and words of fire" from this baser matter has been the aim of the editor of the present volume, "by giving, under a systematic arrangement, the finer part of the works of Burke. The plan adopted is a classification into chapters, of the different subjects which principally occupied the great statesman's attention; and a formation under each chapter of a connected series of extracts, the most remarkable for eloquence, argument, or style. The whole, with a biographical summary annexed, displays a concise, and, it is submitted, a clear view of what was the luminous course of Burke's action and thought—what were his parliamentary and literary powers." (Preface.)

The work, we can cheerfully testify, presents an unbroken succession of brilliant passages, such as "enlarge the thoughts and set the soul on fire;" whilst a closer reading of the volume justifies the eloquent tribute to the memory of Burke. "His immortality," said Grattan, "is that which is common to Cicero or to Bacon—that which can never be interrupted, while there exists the beauty of order, or the love of virtue, and which can fear no death, except what barbarity may impose on the globe."

The volume before us is produced in handsome library style; and is embellished with a well-engraved bust of Burke.

POST-OFFICE DIRECTORY OF THE SIX HOME COUNTIES. Kelly and Co.

This capacious volume is a companion to, or rather an extension of, the Post-office Directory, the radius of which it extends to the Six Home Counties, viz.:—Essex, Herts, Kent, Middlesex, Surrey, and Sussex. It is compiled and arranged precisely on the plan of the metropolitan volume; and the editors assure us that the requisite information has been collected on the spot. To each county is allotted a well-compiled topographical and statistical summary, accompanied by a map; and the "Directory" of each place is preceded by a sort of gazetteer description. The second division of the volume comprehends a Trades and Court Directory of the Six Counties. The whole, as far as our examination of the work enables us to speak, is admirably executed, and must prove a valuable acquisition to all classes; for, the work is produced in that spirit of concentration which leads to high convenience.

OSBORNE HOUSE, ISLE OF WIGHT.

Her Majesty having signified her intention of laying the foundation-stone of the new building about to be erected at the end of the present mansion (which may as yet be termed a wing, though laid down with the intention of ultimately forming a centre to the Palace), every preparation was made.

On Monday, at ten o'clock, the Queen, accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and the Princess Royal, assembled at the spot selected for the corner-stone, accompanied by the Earl of Aberdeen, and attended by Lady Portman, and the Royal suite; when her Majesty, under the superintendence of Mr. Cubitt, the architect, laid the foundation-stone with masonic honours. Beneath the stone was deposited in a glass bottle a full set of coins of her Majesty's reign.

After the ceremony her Majesty, accompanied by Prince Albert and suite, proceeded to East Cowes, and at eleven, A.M., embarked in the Royal barge for the yacht, which was lying off the mouth of the harbour; the Royal party was escorted by the boats of the Tide-Surveyor of the Port, and of the Stag and Rose revenue cutters, in which were their respective commanders—Lieutenant Clark, R.N., and Mr. Hughes. In a few minutes, the Royal barge was alongside the yacht, and the Royal party having entered, the vessel then got under way, and proceeded towards the Experimental Squadron, assembled at Spithead, for the purpose of witnessing the manœuvres of the Squadron.

On Tuesday, at two o'clock, her Majesty having signified her attention of taking an excursion on the water, the Royal yacht proceeded to Mede Hole, but, the weather not proving very auspicious, her Majesty did not embark.

Prince Albert, during his stay at Osborne, bathed almost daily from the beach.

On Wednesday, at half-past two o'clock in the afternoon, her Majesty and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Royal children, and suite, embarked from the beach at Osborne on board the Royal yacht, which had been waiting for their reception, on their return to Buckingham Palace. Immediately on the Royal standard being hoisted on board the Victoria and Albert Royal salutes were fired from the Castle; also from the Royal Yacht Squadron, Battery, and the R.Y.S. brigantine Kestrel, Commander the Earl of Yarborough, which was lying in Cowes Roads. At three o'clock the Royal yacht arrived off the fleet at Spithead, when Royal salutes were fired from the respective ships. The Royal yacht then proceeded for Portsmouth Harbour, where the Royal party embarked in the barge, and landed at Clarence-yard, and proceeded from thence in the Royal carriages to the terminus at Gosport, and, at four P.M., left by special train for Buckingham Palace. It is said that her Majesty and the Court will return here in ten days; Friday week being the day at present fixed for the purpose.

Meanwhile, the repair, or, rather, the restoration of Barton House, or Farm, is proceeding. All the main features, architectural and decorative, are to be restored; not forgetting the ornamented gables, and "the windpipes of hospitality," as chimneys have been figuratively termed. The mansion is spacious, and the grounds being divided but by one field from the domain of Osborne, the property will prove a great accession of accommodation to the Royal suite. On the Farm was formerly a small Augustine convent, or oratory, some traces of which are visible.

BARTON HOUSE ISLE OF WIGHT.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—"W."—The recently-established Chess Club in Edinburgh is called "The Athenian."

"Cerberus."—Only adapted for very juvenile players.

"Nick."—"Stalemate," in this country, makes a drawn game.

"H. B.," "A. C. Z.," "J. G.," "A. G. C.," Lancaster; "O. P.," "F. W. K" "J. P. S.," "G. D."—The solutions are right.

"A Player," Horncastle.—Get Tomlinson's little work called "Amusements in Chess."

"W. K.," Liverpool, and "A. G.," will see by the solution o Problem 74, in our last paper, that they were altogether in error.

"Clericus Delgovitiæ."—Too easy.

"W. H.," Bruton-street; "Alpha," Cambridge; "P. Y."—Your solutions are wrong. Mate cannot possibly be given in the way you suggest.

"G. D.," Leeds. We cannot remember at the moment. Either in a paper called the "Court Gazette," or in the "British Miscellany," the precursor of the "Chess Player's Chronicle."

"Juvenis."—"K B to K's 2nd;" for the opening player of the Bishop's Gambit at his 7th move appears to us very bad play. The second player may advance his K Kt's P, and drive the Kt completely out of the field. We have no space to give the best defence to the Muzio Gambit. Consult M. Heydebrant's admirable "Handbook of Chess."

"W. H.," Paris, has our best thanks and wishes. His highly acceptable packets arrived safely.

"A. G. E." should send his interesting little article on Chess notation to the Editor of the "Chess Player's Chronicle;" we have no room for such disquisitions.

"J. F. S.," Maldon.—According to Carrera, Paoli Boi died, from a complaint brought on by hunting, in the year 1598. See Lewis's excellent translation of Carrera's "Treatise on Chess."

"Pedone," Bayswater.—You may obtain the recently-published collection of Chess games, called "The Souvenir of the Bristol Chess Club," at Hastings's, Carey-street.

"Philo-Chess," Manchester.—Your problem, with many others lately received, shall be examined shortly.

"Mate-mate-ican (Diplo-mate)," Brussels, is thanked for the game, which we will endeavour to find room for hereafter. White, for his 19th move, should have taken the Queen's Bishop instead of the Knight. At move 23, too, he overlooked an opportunity of mating his adversary in four moves.

"H. P."—We are not surprised at your failing to discover the key to Mr. Bolton's capital problem in our last. It is extremely difficult; and, among the multitudinous "solutions" of it which have come to hand, two only are correct. Your others are right

"Clio Viator."—Nearly all of the published games played by Philidor will be found in the "Chess Player's Chronicle."

"M. Z. E.," Glasgow.—The law is stringent. No matter how strongly the aggressive monarch may be supported, he must not occupy the next square to his rival king.

"J. Topling."—All wrong.

"W. C.," Wimborne.—A pawn only can take a pawn en passant. The K Kt's pawn, in the position given, can therefore be played two squares with impunity.

"Amateur," Great Yarmouth.—The position is interesting; but mate may be effected in fewer than eight moves.

"Scacchi."—There is no limit, except by special agreement.

"S. R C." is thanked.

"Z. A.," Park-lane.—The position of the pieces in Anderssen's problem, as given in our paper of the 14th of this month, is correct. White must mate in 5 moves.

"Eliza M.," Manchester.—Your solution is imperfect.

"Frodshaw."—So called because the inventor's name was "Muzio."

Solutions by "Claudius," "M. M.," "Orion," "Slick," "J. T. W.," "Henry," "W. F. F.," "E. H.," are incorrect.

PROBLEM, NO. 76

By M. BREDE.

White playing first mates in seven moves.

BLACK.

WHITE.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, NO. 75.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. K to Q's Kt 7th	K's P one
2. Kt takes K P	K takes P
3. K to Kt 6th	K to R's 5th
4. Kt to Q's 7th	K to Kt 5th (best)
5. Kt to Q Kt 8th	K to R's 5th
6. Kt to Q R's 6th	P one
7. Kt mates

The two smart skirmishes following will be novelties to the readers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS:—

GAME NO. 14.

In this game M. Von Heydebrant gives his Queen's Kt and the first move to M. Von. M——, of the Berlin Chess Club.—(Remove White's Q's Kt from the board.)

BLACK. (V. M.)	WHITE. (V. H.)	BLACK. (V. M.)	WHITE (V. H.)
1. K P two	K P two	10. K R P one	K B to Q B 4th
2. K B to Q B 4th	K B P two	11. K B P one	Q R to K R sq
3. B takes Kt	R takes B	12. Q takes K R	Q takes Q
4. P takes P	Q P two	13. B P takes B	Q to K B 3rd
5. Q to K R 5th (ch)	K Kt P one	14. K Kt to B 3rd	K P one
6. P takes P	R takes P	15. P to K Kt 5th	Q to K B 5th
7. Q takes K R P*	Q to K B 3rd	16. Q Kt to B 3rd	Q to K Kt 6th (ch)
8. Q to K R 5th†	Q B to K Kt 5th	17. K to Q sq	Q takes K Kt P
9. Q to K R 7th	Castles		And wins.

* He would obviously lose his Queen by taking the K's Pawn.
† To prevent the Rook taking the K Kt's P.

GAME NO. 15.

Mr. Staunton gives his Queen's Knight to a skilful amateur belonging to the Metropolitan Chess Clubs.—(Remove White's Q Kt from the board.)

WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Mr. —.)	WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Mr. —
1. K P two	K P two	10. K R P one	Kt takes K P
2. K B to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 4th	11. Q takes Kt	R to K sq
3. Q Kt P two	B takes Q Kt P	12. Q B to K 5th	P takes B
4 K B P two	P takes P	13. Castles on K's side	P takes Q P
5. Kt to K B 3rd	Q P one	14. B takes K B P (ch)	K takes B
6. Q B P one	K B to Q B 4th	15. Kt to his 5th (double ch)	K to Kt sq
7. Q P two	B to Q Kt 3rd	16. Q takes R P—Mate.
8. Q B takes P	K Kt to B 3rd
9. Q to her 3rd	Castles

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198 Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JUNE 28, 1845.

CHRONOLOGY OF REMARKABLE EVENTS

JANUARY TO JUNE, 1845.

JANUARY.

1. The New Royal Exchange opened for business.—The New Metropolitan Buildings Act came into operation.—Great tumults in consequence of the Mexican Chambers being dissolved by order of Santa Anna, who threatened to attack the city of Mexico.—A dense fog in Paris, and many accidents and robberies in consequence, during the festivities of the jour de l'an.—The influence of the French Cabinet on the wane, in the elections in the Chamber of Deputies.—Intelligence received of the insanity of M. Villemain, the French Minister.—Admiral Dupetit Thouars declined to accept "the sword of honour" presented to him by the war-party of France, in approbation of his conduct at Tahiti.—News of the retirement of Sir Baldwin Walker from the Turkish service.—The President's Message, of a pacific character, received from the United States.—News of a revolution in Mexico; flight of Santa Anna; and of fatal riots in Lower Canada.—Death of Major-General Sir William Nott, G.C.B., at Carmarthen.—Murder of Sarah Hart, at Salt-Hill: the suspected person left Slough by the railway for London, but intelligence of the suspicion was conveyed by the electro-magnetic telegraph, and a reply received, before his arrival at Paddington; so that he was followed by a sergeant of police, and captured.

2. The tragedy of "Antigone," from Sophocles, with Mendelssohn's music, produced, with complete success, at Covent Garden Theatre.—News of Great Mass Meetings in New York; and of a great Foot Race at Hoboken: 10 miles in 54 min. 21 sec.

4. Two murderers executed at Kirkdale in Lancashire.—Violent storm in Norway, followed by an earthquake, the seventh shock felt there within 18 months.

5. The Quarter's Revenue accounts presented improvement in all the principal heads of finance: the year's income, £51,235,538; increase upon the year, £1,163,595; increase of the Excise upon the year, £365,000, or £1000 a-day! Sum total of the National Debt, £790,576,392; total charge thereon, £29,110,933.

6. Governor Porter declared the state of Pennsylvania to be in a solvent condition, and about to liquidate its debts.

7. Appalling news of the atrocities of Rosas, the military ruler of the Argentine Republic; and of the Americans having resolved on the Annexation of Texas.—The Times newspaper of this day recorded three executions for murder; and two committals for trial for murder.

8. News of serious abolition riots in Ohio; and of the Americans in the Oregon territory, having formed themselves a Government.—A Postmaster sentenced by the Central Criminal Court to twelve months' hard labour, for embezzling 1s. 10d. postage money.—John Green sentenced to 15 years transportation for coining.—Tawell, a quaker, committed for trial to Aylesbury gaol, for the murder of Sarah Hart.

9. Brutal attack upon an Irish comic singer, in a theatre at Lisbon.

11. The Births in the metropolis for the week ending this day, exceeded the deaths by 202.—A woman executed at Ipswich, for the murder of her grand-child.—The number of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS sold this day, placed separately, would reach upwards of 678 miles.

12. The Message of President Houston to the Texan Congress received: the country prosperous.—Upwards of 160 whales captured at Sandwich Bay, Orkney.

13. A brief received in Dublin, from the Papal See of Rome, deprecating ecclesiastical connexion with the recent political agitation in Ireland.—At an Inquest there were stated to be 1000 Italian organ-boys in England, who annually draw from the public £20,000.—Santa Anna despaired of success, and treated with the supreme government.

14. Gen. Jackson urged upon the American Government the re-annexation of Texas.—The Cabinet of M. Guizot attacked by Count Molé, in the French Chamber of Peers.—Proceedings in the Court of Exchequer against the Messrs. Smith, of Whitechapel, for the alleged illegal distillation of 50,000 gallons of spirits.—Visit of her Majesty to the Duke of Buckingham, at Stowe; splendid festivities; return of the Queen to Windsor, on the 18th.—Inquests held in the Metroplis on the bodies of four persons who had died suddenly.

15. The Simplon route obstructed with snow, and the hospice much injured by the fall of an avalanche.—Continued insurrection in Kolapore.

16. The death of the Emperor of Russia reported in London; but proved to be a fabrication.

17. A band of thieves (des habits noirs), after several days' trial, at Paris, found guilty of twenty-seven burglaries.—Defeat of native insurgents at Scinde, by Sir C. Napier.

18. During the past week there died in the Metropolis, four persons, of the ages 90, 92, 94, and 105 years.

19. Louis Philippe, in his reply to the Address of the Chamber of Peers, congratulated them on the re-establishment of a favourable disposition with Great Britain.—Disgraceful proceedings at Exeter, in consequence of rubrical changes by the clergy.—The Old Grey Friars Church at Edinburgh destroyed by fire.—Zurbano, the Spanish insurgent, captured, and shot on the 21st, at Logrono.

20. Her Majesty visited the Duke of Wellington, at Strathfieldsaye, and returned to Windsor on the 23rd inst.: the visit was strictly private, but the Queen was loyally received en route.—Fearful rise of the Arno, at Florence.

21. Mr. Rowland Hill received £10,000, part of the money subscribed as a reward for his improved Postage System.—An elegant church, entirely of terra cotta, completed at Lever Bridge, near Bolton.

22. Paris incessantly gay: 4000 invitations to Louis Philippe's last state ball: Macready performed Hamlet at the Tuileries.—The finances of Portugal reported to the Chamber of Deputies to be very flourishing.—A woman burnt to death at Battersea by the incautious use of camphine.—Consecration of St. John's Church, Notting Hill.—A comet with two tails stated to have been visible in India.

23. General Prim, the insurgent, pardoned by the Queen of Spain.—The Great Britain steam-ship left Bristol for Blackwall, where she arrived on the 26th, after a stiff gale and heavy sea.

24. General Prim liberated at Cadiz.

26. Eleven persons killed by the fall of a house at Limerick, during a "wake."—Upwards of 250 houses burnt at Luc, in Switzerland.

27. Stormy discussions in the French Chamber of Deputies on the affair of Tahiti.—Great foot race at Barnet, between Jackson, the American deer, and Shepherd, of Birmingham; won by the latter: 5 miles in 25 min. 45 sec.—Marriage of an Arab chief at Paris, with Miss Weyer.

28. News of afflicting catastrophes in Java: fall of a mountain, which buried several houses and inhabitants; great floods, and 600 houses destroyed by fire.—Abd-el-Kader had assembled 18,000 men in Algeria.—The award of the King of Prussia in the Portendic affair, gave to the claimant only £1760, the sum claimed being £80,000.—Three men killed by a steam-boiler explosion on the Leeds and Manchester Railway.

29. The Carnival at Paris unusually gay: splendid private theatricals at the British Embassy.—Address presented to Louis Philippe by the Conservatives, in support of the Guizot Cabinet.—Recovery of M. de Villemain.

30. The wife of a tanner at Anstruther delivered of four children, two boys and two girls.

FEBRUARY.

1. Splendid festivities at Badminton, the seat of the Duke of Beaufort, on the coming of age of the Marquis of Worcester.—The Prince Royal of Hanover stated to have partially recovered his sight.

3. Pennsylvania paid interest on her debt: the event signalised by the firing of cannon.—Santa Anna continued a prisoner in the castle of Perote, and his effects seized for sale.

4. Parliament opened by her Majesty in person. The Address in the House of Lords moved by the Marquis of Camden, and seconded by Lord Glenlyon; in the Commons, moved by Mr. Charteris, and seconded by Mr. T. Baring: both Addresses carried unanimously. A newspaper copy of the Queen's Speech transmitted from Vauxhall to Gosport, in from 3000 to 4000 signals, in less than two hours; copies of the Royal Speech expressed in Paris in less than 24 hours.—Eight boys drowned by the breaking of the ice in Duntillan Loch, N.B.—Bridgetown, in Barbadoes, almost entirely destroyed by fire.—Another instalment of the Chinese indemnity money (£3,000,000) received at Whampoa.

5. The "letter opening" department at the General Post-office abolished.—Extraordinary excitement in the Railway Share-market.—Nine women and seven men drowned during a gale in the Bay of Dundrum.—A railway train buried in the snow, near Munich.—Several persons stabbed by a negro at a masked ball at Havana, of whom six died.

6. The Terrible steam frigate, (1848 tons), launched from the Royal Dockyard, Deptford.—Four persons drowned by the upsetting of a sailing-boat on the Thames, between Woolwich and Barking.—Thunder and lightning during a heavy fall of snow, at Flavigny, in France.

7. The American House of Representatives passed the Oregon Territory Bill by a large majority.—The exquisite Portland Vase, in the British Museum, wilfully destroyed by one of the visitors, a young Irishman.

8. Upwards of 200 suspected thieves arrested by the police at Paris.—Assassination attempted in several parts of Ireland.—Severe frost; large masses of ice in the Thames; the roads and railways sonth and east of London impeded by deep snow.

10. Heavy fall of snow in Paris; difficult for carriages to proceed through the streets.—The Chamber of Deputies rejected M. St. Priest's proposed uniform rate of postage in France.—The Spanish Government granted a railway from Madrid to Cadiz. A Deputy detected in stealing plate at General Narvaez's ball, and expelled the Chamber.—The barque Henry burnt off Blackwall.

11. Extensive fire at Chatham dockyard.

12. The thermometer 1½ deg. below zero, or 33½ below the freezing point in the morning; temperature at noon, 21 deg.—Several sudden deaths in London, attributed to abrupt changes of temperature.—The cold in Denmark more severe than since 1829.

13. The conduct of the Railway Department of the Board of Trade much discussed in both Houses of Parliament,—Lord Stanley took the oaths and his seat in the House of Lords.—Her Majesty visited the Duke of Norfolk, at Arundel Castle.—First appearance of Miss Cushman at the Princess' Theatre.—Convocation of the University of Oxford, in the case of Mr. Ward; his deprivation carried; but the condemnation of Tract 90 negatived,

14. Sir Robert Peel brought forward his Budget, by which he proposed reduction of upwards of three millions of taxation.—A bell, weighing between nine and ten tons, completed for York Minster.—The Elbe frozen over a few miles below Hamburg.

15. News of the capture by the British of the hill forts of Powanghur and Punalla, in Kolapore.—Death of the Marquis of Westminster, aged 78.—Death of Mr. Laman Blanchard.

16. A verdict given this morning (Sunday) in the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin—Howard v. Shaw.

17. Switzerland in a very disturbed state, owing to the dissensions sown by the Jesuits.—The continuation of the Income tax carried in the House of Commons, by the Government, with a large majority.—Mr. Forrest, the American tragedian, first appeared at the Princess' Theatre, as Othello.

18. Opening of the splendid New Conservative Club-house, St. James's-street.—The Queen of Portugal safely delivered of a Princess.—Brazil and Paraguay concluded a treaty which thwarted the designs of Rosas.

19. A conspiracy for the restoration of Espartero discovered at Bayonne.—A railway on the Desert, between Cairo and Suez, resolved on by Mehemet Ali.

21. Eight men drowned in Lough Rea, near Athlone.—In the House of Commons, Lord Howick's amendment for a Committee of Inquiry, on the opening of the letters of an M.P., negatived.—James Delarue murdered in Haverstock-field, Hampstead.

22. Deaths of the Earl of Mornington, aged 82; and of the Rev. Sydney Smith, aged 74.

24 News received by the first intermediate mail from Calcutta: revolution at Lahore and Nepaul.—News of the discovery of a small guano island, at the entrance of Saldanha Bay; and of disturbances at Hong-Kong.—In the House of Commons, Mr. M. Gibson's amendment for the equalisation of foreign and colonial Sugar Duties, lost.

26. Paris contained a million of inhabitants; including 7000 Belgians, 6000 Savoyards, 4000 Swiss, and 5000 English.—The French Ministry carried the Secret Service Bill by a large majority, so as to re-establish the Guizot Cabinet.—In the House of Commons, Lord John Russell's Amendment on the Sugar Duties negatived.—A public dinner given to Thom, the weaver-poet, in London.—Ten persons killed by the bursting of a steam-boat boiler in Apalachicola Bay.

27. In the House of Commons, Mr. Bright's Motion for a Committee on the Game Laws, agreed to.

28. The diligence from Perpignan to Barcelona, plundered by brigands, and three of the passengers carried into the mountains.

MARCH.

1. Death of Mr. Baron Gurney, aged 77.—Great devastation in Italy, during the last few weeks, from rain-floods, thunder-storms, and hurricanes.—Mr. Polk, the new President of the United States, delivered his inaugural address, and signed the Bill for the Annexation of Texas.

2. The first import of American sugar, from Louisiana, arrived at Liverpool.—The Messrs. Enderby's extensive extensive rope manufactory at East Greenwich, destroyed by fire.—Death of Miss Linwood, in her 90th year.

3. Five persons suffocated in a passage-boat, on the Royal Canal, Longford, Ireland.—Death of Lord Wynford, aged 82.

4. The Liverpool Grand Steeple Chase well attended.—A flying machine invented by a prisoner at La Force, in Paris.—News of conflicts between the Druses and Maronites; many lives lost.—The sum of £6040 received for tolls, in one year, at the Thames Tunnel.—Mr. Polk, the newly-elected President of the United States, took office.

5. Three men killed by the explosion of a steam-boiler at Messrs. Samuda's works, Blackwall.—The Queen held her first levee for the season.—Disclosure of pestilential practices at the Spa fields burial-ground.—The National Theatre, at New York, destroyed by fire.

8. Explosion of a powder-magazine at Algiers: 100 persons killed.—The Baltic, at Kiel, covered with ice, and crossed by heavy waggons.—Her Majesty's Theatre opened for the season.

9. Her Majesty and Prince Albert visited Christ's Hospital, to witness the public supper.

10. The French Ministry left in a minority of 13, in the rejection of the Civil Pensions Bill by the Chamber of Deputies.

11. T. H. Hocker committed to Newgate, for trial, for the murder of J. Delarue, at Hampstead.—Diabolical attempt to shoot Prince Albert, on Constitution Hill, in the Green Park.

12. M. Dujarrier, one of the editors of La Presse, killed in a duel by M. Beauvillon, editor of Le Globe, at Paris.—The statement of the capture of Santa Anna confirmed.—The Income and Property Tax Bill passed in the House of Commons.—Death of Dr. Allen, Bishop of Ely, aged 75.

13. Sudden death of Professor Daniell, of King's College, by apoplexy.

14. The Bill for the Removal of the Disabilities of the Jews read a third time in the House of Lords.—John Tawell found guilty of the murder of Sarah Hart, at Slough.

15. Awful catastrophe at the head of the Magdalena, by the fall of a snowy mountain: 1000 souls stated to have perished.

16. Grand banquet given by the merchants of Paris, to Marshal Bugeaud, in the Great Hall of the Bourse.—Violent snow-storm in Russia, which lasted six days; 76 persons perished.

17. In the House of Commons, Mr. W. Miles's amendment for the relief of the agricultural interest negatived by a majority of 123.—A fancy fair held in the Thames Tunnel.

18. In the House of Commons, Lord Duncan's Motion for Inquiry into the Window Duties, rejected by a majority of 46.—The Spanish Chamber of Deputies passed a Bill for Restoring the Unsold Church Property to the Clergy.

20. The Diet of Switzerland held its last meeting, when there was much exciting discussion on the Jesuits.—Death of Sir Thomas Potter, the first Mayor of Manchester, aged 71.

21. Tremendous storms at the Cape of Good Hope: two persons killed by lightning.

24. James Tapping executed at Newgate, for the murder of Emma Whiter, at Bethnal-green.—Death of the wealthy P. J. Miles, Esq., of Leigh Court, aged 72.

26. News of nearly 200 Mahomedam pilgrims wrecked in the Red Sea.—Detection of a manufactory of counterfeit foreign coins in Birmingham.—Shock of earthquake felt at Huntingdon.

27. Five persons perished by the falling of a house in a hurricane, at Glasgow.—General Rivera defeated by General Urquira, 90 miles north of Monte Video; 1000 men killed.

28. Tawell executed at Aylesbury, for the murder of Sarah Hart.

29. Her Majesty visited the Osborne Estate, in the Isle of Wight, recently purchased for a Royal residence.

30. Great rise of the Rhine, the Danube, the Moselle, and the Elbe.

31. A bill to repress speculation in railways rejected by the French Chamber of Peers.—Intelligence from New Zealand of the abolition of the Customs, and the imposition of a property and income tax, by Governor Fitzroy.—The Navy Estimates agreed to in Parliament, with an increase of 4000 men.—Atrocious murder of a woman, in George-street, St. Giles's.

APRIL.

1. Mr. Sheil's motion in Parliament, condemning the Government for opening Mazzini's letters, negatived by 52 to 38.

2. Death of Sir Philip Durham, aged 80, who was saved from the sinking of the Royal George.—General Tom Thumb presented to the King of the French, at Paris.—Medals and gratuities distributed at Greenwich, to each of the surviving sharers in Nelson's great victories.

3. Sir Robert Peel, in Parliament, proposed an additional grant to the College of Maynooth; carried, by 216 to 114.—M. Noel de Quersonnières died, near Paris, in his 117th year.—Continued insurrection in Lucerne, and other parts of Switzerland.—The right to hiss actors decided by the Tribunal de Police, at Paris.

4. Sir R. Peel, in Parliament, declared the Government ready to maintain their rights in the settlement of the Oregon Territory.

5. The fountains in Trafalgar-square played for the first time.—The ships United States and England, missing for some months past, had on board 162 persons.—Upwards of £7000 subscribed to compensate Father Mathew.—The Quarter's Revenue showed an increase of nearly a million and a half upon the year.

7. The city of Mexico desolated by an earthquake.—From forty to sixty persons drowned in the wreck of the Swallow steamboat, on the Hudson river.—A floating theatre launched at New York.

8 Thirty-six Viennese children first danced at her Majesty's Theatre.

10. Her Majesty held her first Drawing-Room for the season.—A Game of Chess played between London and Portsmouth, through the Electric Telegraph of the South Western Railway; the players being Mr. Walker at Vauxhall, and Mr. Staunton at Portsmouth.—Dr. Wolff arrived at Portsmouth, from Constantinople, on his return from Bokhara.

11. Hocker sentenced to Death at the Central Criminal Court, for the Murder of Delarue.—Great Fire at Pittsburg; nearly 1200 houses destroyed, but no lives lost.

12. Death of the Marquis of Downshire, aged 55.—Rumours of marvellous discoveries with the great Rosse Telescope.

15. Violent shock of Earthquake felt at Alicant.

16. Meeting of the Swiss Diet; great insubordination among the militia at Berne, &c.—The Sublime Porte appointed 10 Commissioners for the Improvement of the Turkish Provinces.

17. Death of Saussure, the naturalist, at Geneva, aged 77.

19. In the House of Commons, the second reading of the Maynooth Grant Bill carried by a majority of 147; the decision known and printed at Southampton within half-an-hour, by means of the Electric Telegraph.—Several persons killed by the falling of 9 arches on the Sheffield and Ashton Railway.

20. Death of Mr. T. Philips, R.A., aged 75.

21. Great numbers of petitions presented to the House of Lords against the additional grant to Maynooth.

21 and 22. Considerable discussion in both Houses of Parliament on the Railway Department of the Board of Trade.—Sale of the materials of the Fleet Prison.

22. The sentence of the Royal Court of Jersey in the case of Mr. Carus Wilson, confirmed by the Court of Queen's Bench.—The Queen visited the Great Britain steam-ship at Blackwall.—Tom Thumb robbed by one of his visitors at Paris, of the gold watch presented to him by Queen Victoria.—By an account published at Paris, the total number of persons convicted of crimes in France in 1843, was 7226.—M. Guizot declared in favour of duelling, in reply to a motion for its suppression.

23. Sarah Freeman executed at Taunton, for poisoning her husband, child, mother, and brother.—Died lately, at Four Mile Water, Ireland, Mrs. Seveney, aged 129 years.—Several persons condemned to five years' imprisonment, for having joined the Free Corps at Lucerne.

24. In the House of Commons, Mr. Ward's motion for the Maynooth Grant to be taken from the Church property in Ireland, rejected by a majority of 174.—The Queen's State Visit to Drury-lane Theatre.—Violent storm burst over Vienna; the city inundated, and several persons killed.

25. The Bowery Theatre, New York, burnt for the fourth time.

26. Mr. Jerrold's comedy of "Time Works Wonders," produced with perfect success at the Haymarket Theatre.

28. M. Arago introduced to the Academy of Sciences a calculating boy, possessing extraordinary capacity for algebraical combinations.—The Ioways and Mr. Catlin visited the Tuileries, at Paris.—Madame Grisi adjudged to a fine of 10,000 francs for refusing a manager to appear in the "Matrimonio Segreto."—Hocker executed at the Old Bailey for the murder of Delarue.

29. Tranquillity restored in Switzerland.

30. News of continued disturbances at Tahiti, and conflicts between the French and the natives.—Completion of the journey from Malta to London and back in less than 11 days.—Battle between the Christians and Druses, in the Lebanon; 33 killed.

MAY.

1. The Suspension Foot Bridge across the Thames, from Hungerford Market to Lambeth, opened.—The Fête du Roi celebrated with great splendour at Paris.—Upwards of 20 persons trodden and crushed to death on a bridge at Lyons.—Violent feeling in America towards England upon the Oregon question.

2 Fall of the Suspension Bridge at Great Yarmouth, by the people crowding to witness a feat upon the river: 79 persons killed.

3. A magnificent silver fountain, 10 feet high, manufactured for a present from the East India Company to Mehemet Ali: cost 7000 guineas.—Continued agitation by O'Connell and the Repeal Association in Dublin; a large banquet at Dundalk.—Death of Mr. Thomas Hood, the humorist, aged 47.—A murderer executed at Munich by his head being taken off with a sword.—Eighteen persons killed during a fire at Valencia.

6. The Legion of Honour accorded by the French Government to De Balzac, De Musset, and Soulié; Victor Hugo having been already raised to the peerage.—News from the Punjaub: Rajah Golab Sing treacherously assassinated several delegates sent to confer with him: much bloodshed followed.

7. Upwards of 30 persons drowned by the upsetting of a boat near Vienna.—In the House of Commons, Sir James Graham withdrew certain accusations he had brought against M. Mazzini, in the Post-office espionage debate.—Upwards of 7629 petitions had been presented to Parliament against the Maynooth Grant.

8. Opening of the Anti-Corn-Law League Bazaar, in Covent Garden Theatre; the proceeds are stated to have been nearly £25,000.—Death of Mr. Shouldham, Marlsford, Suffolk, aged 102.

9. Walton Church, Stafford, struck by lightning, and the spire destroyed.

12 Adele Chevalier, an actress, at Paris, heroically saved a poor girl from drowning in the Seine.—The fortifications of Paris cost four millions sterling: bill for arming them passed the Chamber of Deputies.—The Duke de Broglie in London, negotiating the suppression of the slave trade.—Vauxhall Gardens re-opened.

13. A person died upon the stage at Stockport, whilst performing the part of Octavian, in the "Mountaineers."—Death of the widow of J. P. Kemble, aged 90.

14. Mad. Thillon appeared at Drury Lane Theatre, in Balfe's new opera of "The Enchantress," with brilliant success.

16. Martha Brixey, who had killed an infant child at Greenwich, tried at the Central Criminal Court, and found "Not Guilty, on the ground of insanity."—A cotton factory at Burnley entirely destroyed by the bursting of a steam-boiler.

17. Continued war of extermination in Syria.

18. Death of Strickland, the comedian, in his 48th year.

19. The Erebus and Terror sailed from the Thames, on an expedition to the Polar Seas, under the command of Sir John Franklin.

20. Tragical duel fought near Gosport, between Mr. Seton and Lieutenant Hawkey, when the former received wounds, of which he died on June 2.—Blowing up of the Whiting-Shoal in the Thames.—Snow fell at Geneva, one foot deep.—The Emperor of Russia visited Warsaw: the city illuminated.

21. In the House of Commons, the Maynooth College Bill read a third time, and passed by a majority of 133.

22. Renewed operations of the French army in Algiers, victorious.—News from Tahiti: Queen Pomare refused the overtures of the French.—Great excitement in Madrid, caused by the arbitrary arrest of two newspaper editors.—The festival of Corpus Christi celebrated with great pageantry at Lisbon; the exteriors of the houses hung with crimson damask and cloth-of gold.

23. Schlegel, the eminent German critic, died, a few days ago, at Bonn, aged 79.—M. Arago estimated the rapidity of transmission by the Electrical Telegraph at 32,000 leagues per hour!

24. Death of Ida de St. Elme, "La Contemporaine," at Brussels, aged 78.

25. Grand Catholic Procession and Celebration of Corpus Christi, in the splendid new church of St. Barnabas, Nottingham.

26. A railway from Lisbon to Corunna proposed to the Portuguese Government.—Shrewsbury Show celebrated with great éclat.

27. Fire at Raggett's Hotel, Dover-street, Piccadilly; four persons burnt.

28. In the House of Commons, Lord John Russell's nine resolutions for the relief of the labouring classes rejected, by a majority of 78.—News of the Abdication of Don Carlos, in favour of his son, the Prince of Asturias.—The Epsom Derby Stakes won by Mr. Gratwicke's Merry Monarch.—Extensive Fire at Quebec: nearly 2000 dwellings consumed, and 12,000 persons made houseless.

29. A great number of prisoners liberated at Lucerne without trial.

30. Greece in a state of great anarchy.

31. A recently-discovered autograph of Shakspeare sold by auction in the Metropolis, for 21 guineas.

JUNE.

1. Disastrous fire in Fenchurch-street; a mother and her infant burnt.

2. News of an English officer and eight men murdered by the crew of a slaver on the African coast; the villains captured.—A poor man committed to Reading gaol for four months, for selling pheasants' eggs: his fine of £10 11s. paid by Mr. Collett, M.P., and the man liberated.—A man died in the Isle of Skye, aged 109 years.—Connor, the murderer, executed at the Old Bailey.—Her Majesty present at the performance of "St. Paul," at Exeter Hall.—Opening of the Northampton and Peterborough Railway.

3. M. Guizot resumed his official duties, having recovered from his late indisposition.—A fine female chimpanzee, 3 feet 6 inches high, lately received at the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park.—A Greek vessel lost in the Channel of Chesma; 70 pilgrims perished.—The admission of the public to hear "condemned sermons," and to visit persons under sentence of death, forbidden by an order from the Secretary of State.

4. A Hippodrome erecting at Neuilly, to accommodate upwards of 30,000 spectators.—The news from the United States of a more pacific character than heretofore.—News of a great fire at Toronto, and earthquake at Montreal.—The Thames Royal mail steamer made the passage from Bermuda in thirteen days thirteen hours, the quickest yet accomplished by the mail-steamers: railways proceeding in Jamaica.—News of Governor Davis being attacked by Chinese footpads at Macao.

5. The Maynooth College Bill read a second time in the House of Lords; majority, 157.—The Duke of Brunswick obtained a verdict of £200 damages against the publisher of the Lancaster Guardian, for stating that the Duke had been captured as one of the "swell mob."—News of the betrothal of Mehemet Ali Pacha with the Sultana Adile, youngest sister of the Sultan.

6. The anniversary of the liberation of O'Connell and others celebrated in Dublin, amidst great excitement.—Her Majesty gave a grand Ball at Buckingham Palace; the whole of the company wore the costumes worn between 1740 and 1750 (reign of George II).—Covent Garden Theatre opened with French opera, by the Brussels company.—Death of John Marshall, Esq., of Leeds, in his 80th year.

8. A magnificent Comet seen by Sir James South, at Kensington; first discovered by M. Colla, at Parma, on June 2.—Great O'Connell demonstration at Cork.

9. The village of Alt Berun, in Prussia, almost wholly destroyed by fire.

10. A bill brought into the French Chamber of Deputies for maintaining 26 ships of war on the coast of Africa, in pursuance of the treaty with Great Britain for the repression of the Slave Trade.—Mr. Villiers's annual motion on the Corn-laws rejected by a majority of 132.—A splendid "amateur" bull-fight at Madrid.

11. A bill, making dog stealing a misdemeanour, read in the House of Commons, a second time.

12. Ascot Races, brilliantly attended; the Emperor of Russia's Cup won by the horse "Emperor."—Exhibition of Prize Poultry, at the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park.—The Great Britain steam-ship left the Thames.

13. Grand Polish Fancy Ball at Willis's Rooms; 1300 persons present.

14. The thermometer, in the shade, from 84 to 86 degrees.—The Foundation-stone of the Waterloo Barracks, in the Tower of London, laid by the Duke of Wellington.

16. Resignation of the Belgian Ministry.—News of the Emperor of China favouring Christianity.—A pension of £1500 per annum granted to Sir H. Pottinger, on the motion of Mr Hume, in Parliament.—The Maynooth Grant Bill passed in the House of Lords.—The Earl of Winchilsea presented to the Queen 348 addresses against the Maynooth Grant.

17. Death of the Rev. R. H. Barham ("Thomas Ingoldsby").—M. Daguerre discovered a new mode of grafting.—A verdict of Wilful Murder returned against Lieut. Hawkey and his second, for shooting Mr. Seton, in a duel, near Gosport.

18. Mr. W. J. O'Connell, in the Court of Common Pleas, obtained a verdict of £50 damages against the proprietors of the Morning Post, for libel.—Meeting of the British Association commenced at Cambridge.

19. In the House of Commons, Mr. C. Buller's motion for inquiry into the state of New Zealand, negatived after three nights' debate, by a majority of 51.

20. Dr. Steiger escaped from prison at Lucerne, and received at Zurich with enthusiasm.—Mr. Cobden's parliamentary motion for an uniform railway guage, negatived by 134.—Concert Monstre, at the Surrey Zoological Gardens.

22. The Great Britain steam-ship arrived in Kingston Harbour, Dublin.—A magistrate murdered in Cavan, at mid-day.

23. Inspection by her Majesty of the experimental squadron, and grand naval evolutions, at Spithead.—The Times newspaper, and Double Supplement, contained 1706 advertisements.

24. Great excitement in the French Chambers, in railway [illegible] interesting discussions on the French [illegible] number of seamen, 26,000, besides marines.—News of a great fire in New York; one hundred houses burnt.

25 Death of Mr. Somes, M.P., the most extensive shipowner in the port of London.

28. The magnificent Comet, nearly 130,000,000 of miles distant from the earth.

INDEX TO ENGRAVINGS IN VOL VI.

ABDU-L-MEDJID, Sultan of Turkey, 184
Abney House, Stoke Newington, 208
Agliombly, M.P., Mr., Portrait of, 184
Albert, His Royal Highness Prince, Fowling-Piece presented by his Majesty the King of the French to,

Alfred Indiaman, Launch of the, at Blackwall, 232
Algiers, Powder Magazine at, after the Explosion, 196
American President, The Inauguration of the; Approach to the Capitol; the Oath, 244
Anti-Corn Law League. (See "Free Trade Bazaar')
"Antigone,'' Scene from, at Covent Garden, 45
Arctic Expedition—Captain Sir John Franklin, K. C. H., Portrait of; H. M. S. Erebus and Terror; Captain Franklin's and Captain Fitzjames's Cabins in the Erebus, 328
Ascot Prizes—Royal Hunt Cup, The Emperor's Cup, The Queen's Vase, 384
Ascot Races—Her Majesty, Her Illustrious Visitors, &c., leaving Windsor Castle for the Races, 384
Atmospheric Railway Station, Croydon and Epsom Line, 370
Aylesbury Court House — Trial of John Tawell, 173

BADMINTON HOUSE, the Seat of the Duke of Beaufort; Badminton House and the Lawn; Procession of the Ox; The Ox Roasted; Dinner to the Tenantry; Drinking the Health of the Marquis of Worcester, 92, 93
Bale in Norfolk Gigantic Oak at, 317
Bank of England. (See Bullion-Office at the, also Weighing-Office at the)
Barbadoes, View of, from an Original Sketch, 212
Barham, Portrait of the late Rev. Richard, 416
Barnet, Foot Race near, 21
Barton House, Isle of Wight, 416
Birmingham Artisans, Presentation of Jewellery by, to Her Majesty and Prince Albert. (See "Queen, The")
Blackwall, Explosion at Samuda's Works, at, 161
Board of Trade Offices—"A Deputation;" President's Room; Railway Board, 249
Boat, New, with Projecting Rowlocks, 205
Bolton, Terra Cotta Church, near, 77
Borio, Signora Rita, 168
Bramshill House, 77
Brazil, Their Majesties the Emperor and Empress of 25
Brazilian Slaves' Halt, 260
Brazilian Sugar Mill; Domestic Punishments of Slaves on a Brazilian Sugar Farm, 197
"Brigadier," The, Scene from, at the Princess' Theatre, 109
Brighton, Captain Tayler's Breakwater off, 284
Brighton Pavilion — Garden Front, and North Entrance, 101
Brighton from the Sea, 101
British Association, Cambridge—The Reception Room at the Town Hall, 393; Portrait of Sir J. F. Herschell, Bart., President of the Association; Town Hall, Cambridge; Model Room, Perse School; The Union Room, Jesus Lane, 404; Philosophical Society's House; Lecture Room; Lecture Room, Great Court, Trinity College; Model House and Garden, Horticultural Society; Horticultural Fête in the Grounds of Downing College, 405
British Museum—The Great Zoological Gallery, 201
Buckingham, His Grace the Duke of, Visit of her Majesty to, at Stowe, 36, 37, 40, 41, 52, 53
Buckingham, House at, where Chas. I. Lodged, 52
Bude Lights in Trafalgar Square, 284
Bullion Office, Bank of England—Receiving Office — Sycee Silver, Spanish Dollar, Mexican Dollar, American Silver, Bar of Silver, Plata pena Silver, English Silver, Bar of Gold, 148; Compartment in the Bullion Vault — Stacking Bags of Dollars, Balance for Bar Silver, Balance for Bar Gold, Chopper for Light Sovereigns, Balance for Dollars, 149—(See, also, "Weighing Office," &c.)
Byrne, Mr., The Irish Harper, 236

CAMBRIDGE, Plan of, 394
Canterbury, His Grace the Archbishop of, Portrait of, 60
Carbery, Portrait of the Late Lord, 332
Castellan, Madame, Portrait of, 221
Ditto, 285
Chandos Testimonial, The, 53
Charlemagne, The Talisman of, 157
Chess, 16, 29, 43, 59, 91, 108, 125, 144, 160, 176, 192, 208, 224, 256, 266, 282, 336, 352, 368, 379, 416
"Chimes," The, Scene from, at the Adelphi Theatre, 16; Mr. Keeley, as Toby Veck, at the Lyceum Theatre, 16; Scene from, at the Adelphi Theatre, 29
Chimpanzee at the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park, 356
Chinese Monster Mortar, and Monster Gun at Woolwich, 336
Christ-Church, Newgate-street, 188
Christ's Hospital, Her Majesty at, 169; Piggin Bearer; Basket Bearer; Bowl Bearer; Candlestick Bearer; The Reader; Knife Basket Bearer, 169, 170
Cincinnati, View of, from an Original Drawing, 356
"Cinderella," Scene from the New Burlesque of, at the Lyceum Theatre, 320
Clayton Column, The, 236
Clive, Colonel, C.B., Funeral of the late, 272
Colabah, The Church at, in Memory of those who fell in the Wars of Scinde and Affghaniston, 68
Colchester, The Ancient Moot Hall at, 76
Coleridge, Justice, wearing the Black Cap, 245
Collingwood, H.M.S. Ship, 177
Collins, Esq., R.A., Portrait of W., 292
Colosseum, Regent's Park, Re-opening of the. The Conservatory; Temple of Apollo Epicurus, 276; Temple of Vesta, &c.; Italian Ruins and Fountain; Stalactite Grotto, 277; The Chalet, Mer De Glace, Mont Blanc, &c.; The Glyptotheca, or Museum of Sculpture, 264
Comet, The, 412; The Magnificent Appearance of, 395; The magnificent one as seen on June 8th, 9th, and 11th, 381
Concert Monstre at the Surrey Zoological Gardens, 413
Conservative Club-house, St. James's street—Monogram of the Club in the Tesselated Pavement of the Hall; Monogram on Cornice Shield in the Coffee-Room; British Frieze in Drawing-Room; Door of the Drawing-Room; Sang's and Naundorf's Monograms; The Upper Vestibule; The Inner Hall, 121
Contemporaine, La, Ida de St. Elme, 365
Convent, The New, at Chelsea, 256
Crown Jewels, &c.—The Queen's or Imperial Crown; The Old Imperial Crown (Charles II.); The Prince of Wales's Crown; Queen's Diadem; Queen Consort's Crown; Imperial Orb; Queen Consort's Orb; Temporal Sceptre (Victoria); Spiritual Sceptre (Victoria); Temporal Sceptre (William IV.); Spiritual Sceptre (William IV.); St. Edward's Staff; Ivory Sceptre of A. Boleyn; Ampullæ; Anointing Spoon; Coronation Spur; Coronation Bracelets; Temporal Sword of Justice; Sword of Spiritual Justice; Sword of Mercy (Sheathed), 132; Six State Salt-Cellars, Salt-Spoon, Baptismal Font, Coronation Tankard, Sacramental Flagon, 133
Croydon and Epsom Station, Atmospheric Railway, 137
Curricle Tribes, The New, 205

DANIELL, the late Professor, Portrait of, 185
David, M. Felicien, Portrait of, 200
De Broglie, Portrait of the Duc, 260
Devonport Royal British Female Orphan Asylum, Laying the Foundation Stone of, 288
Dost Mohamed, Portait of 220
Dover, St. Margaret Church at Cliffe, near, 288
Downshire, Funeral of the late Marquis of, at Hillsborough, 288; The late Marquis of, Portrait of, 253
Dragon, The, Mr. Paul Bedford as, 204
Dresden, Partial Destruction of the Bridge of the Elbe at, 245
Dryden's House in Fetter-lane, 317
Duprez, Mons., as Arnold, in Guillaume Tell, 229

EASTER HUNT, with the Royal Stag-hounds—The Meet at Stoke Common, 200
East Greenwich, Fire at, 153
Eclipse of the Sun, 290
Edinburgh — Greyfriars Church; Burning of Do., 69; Ruins of the Church, 96; Royal Institution, and Scott Monument, 120
Electric Gun—The "Siva," and the Target, 397
Electric Telegraph of the South-Western Railway, 233; Room of, in which the Game of Chess was played, 233
Elephant Carriage (Hughes's) at Gloucester, 285
Electro-Magnetic Telegraph at Slough; the Great Western Telegraph; the Coiled Magnets; the Index; the Striking Apparatus, 25
Elgin Marbles—Additions to the British Museum—Victory (No. 1), Parthenon Marble (No. 2), Victory (No. 3), 136; Frieze of the Parthenon (1), Ditto (2), 156
Ely Cathedral—The Funeral Procession of the late Bishop of Ely in, 236
"Eoline," Scene from the new Ballet of, at her Majesty's Theatre, 168
Epsom Races—Derby Day: Leaving the Course, 337; the Return from the Derby (drawn by Leech), 340; Merry Monarch, the Winner of the Derby, 341; Scenes on the Road (drawn by Gilbert), 344, 345
Erebus and Terror, H. M. S., Departure of, for the Arctic Expedition, 328
"Ernani," Scene from, at Her Majesty's Theatre, 168
Etruscan Tazza, presented by the Students of the Royal Academy to George Jones, Esq., R.A., 220
"Ev'ry Land my Home," Song by M. J. Sporle, with Music and Illustration, 32
Exeter Hall, Her Majesty at, 365
Experimental Brigs, The Daring; The Flying Fish; The Espiègle; Scudding in a Gale, 172
Experimental Squadron, Grand Inspection of, by Her Majesty, 401, 408, 409, 410

FAIRY, Her Majesty's River Steamer, 221
Fashions, The London and Parisian, 74, 141, 221, 285
Fashions, The, 324, 414
Fine Arts—Florence, from the Ponte de Perro, after the late Inundations, 8; The Young Gardeners, 9; Head of Christ, Paul de la Roche, 76; Russian Family attacked by Wolves, 104; The Last Ripening Sunbeam, 137; Flaxman's Condemned Youth, 245; May Day in the Last Century, painted by Anthony, 280; Irish Mendicant, by Fripp, 281
Ford House, Newton Abbot, View of, 108
Forrest, Mr., The American Tragedian, Portrait of, 125
Foot Race near Barnet, 21
Franklin, Capt. Sir John, K.C.H., Commander of the Arctic Expedition, Portrait of, 328
French Chamber of Peers, 69
Free Trade Bazaar, Covent Garden Theatre, and Refreshment Room, 296; Chandelier; Iron Model of the Warwick Vase; Iron Flower Table; Iron Fountain, 336; Stall, &c, 309

GALAGO, The, 356
Gambier Islanders, Raft of, 100
General Assembly of Scotland—The Lord High Commissioner Entering the New Assembly Hall; Presentation of the Keys at Holyrood, 348
"Golden Fleece," The, Scene from the Extravaganza of, at the Haymarket Theatre, 200
Goodwin Sands, "The Light for all Nations" on the, 61
Grahn, Mdlle. Lucile, Portrait of, 152
Grant, Esq., A.R.A., Portrait of F., 292
Gravesend and Rochester Railway—Gravesend Terminus, 332
Gravesend Terrace, New Pier, 209
Great Britain, The Steam-ship, Struck by the Sea, off Lundy Island, 72; Sections of—Upper Deck, Promenade Deck, The Saloon, 112; Her Majesty's Visit to the, 257; Leaving Blackwall, 396
Great Yarmouth—Suspension-bridge and River at, 297; Fall of the Suspension-bridge at, on 2nd May, 289; Remains of Ditto, &c., 297, 298; Funerals of the Sufferers, at St. Nicholas Church, 316
"Green Bushes," Scene from the New Drama of, at the Adelphi Theatre, 73
Gregory XVI., The Pope, 64
Greek Theatre, Plan of a, 45
Guernsey—St. Peter's Port, and Castle Cornet, 61
"Guillaume Tell," Scene from the Opera of, at Covent-garden Theatre, 397

HAMPSTEAD MURDER — Plan of the Neighbourhood in which the Murder was Committed. 230
Harrow Steeple Chase—The Fall at the Brook; The Last Brook, 265
Henry, The Bark, Burning of, off Blackwall, 104
"Honesty," Scene from the New Play of, 72
Hood, Thos., Esq., The Late, from a Bust by Davis, 301
Hope, M.P., Mr. G. W., Portrait of, 184
"Hopes" (by Frederica Bremer), Illustrations to, 153, 173
House of Lords, The Library of the, 188
House of Commons, The New Committee Rooms, 124
Hudson's Bay Company's Ships Leaving Gravesend, 388
Hungerford Suspension Bridge, Opening of the, 1st May last, 273
Hydro-Electric Machine (Armstrong's), 245

IBRAHIM PACHA, Portrait of, 129
Ireland, Travelling in the South and West of, in 1845; Getting Ready; Full Pace, 213
Ice-Marker; Plough; Splitting Bar; Saw; Hook, 315; Ice Plane; Refrigerator; Ice Lake at Wenham, 316
Illuminated Magazine, Illustrations from, by Phiz — Our Christmas Dream; "The Crown," at King's Oversley, 13
Illustrated Family Journal and Gazette of Variety, Illustrations from —Dryden's House in Fetter-lane, &c., 317
Isle of Wight, Opening of the New Steam Frigate Dock, 137
Italian Opera House (Her Majesty's Theatre), The Opening of the, 152

JERSEY CITY, U. S., Texas, Demonstration at, 180
Jersey, Mount Orgueil, 61
Jersey, Mr. Carus Wilson leaving, 125
Jewellery, Presentation of, to her Majesty and Prince Albert. See "Queen, The"
Jones, George, Esq., R.A., Etruscan Tazza presented to, 220

KEW, Royal Gardens, The Great Palm House, The Monster Cactus (Echinocactus Stainesii), 12
King's Cross, New-road, Removal of, 108
Kolapore, the War in, Hill Forts of Powanghur and Punalla, Distant View of Powanghur and Punalla, East Side of Punalla, 116
"Know'st thou the Land?" Song, Music by the Chevalier Neukomm. 128

LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL, Tableau Vivant from, 236
Leamington Steeple Chase, Prize Cup and Whip, 176
Lemaitre, M., as Don Cæsar de Bazan, 157
Life Buoy, A New, 205
Lincoln and Oxford Assizes—Lincoln Castle, Assembling of the Sheriff's Procession, Sheriff's Procession passing the Stone Bow at Lincoln, 161; The Sheriff of Oxford's Javelin Men escorting the Judges of Assize, Assize Sunday, Lincoln Cathedral, 165
Linwood, The late Miss, 185
Liverpool Grand Steeple Chase, 145
Liverpool, St. George's Hall, 28
Llanllechyd Church, Carnarvonshire, 196
London, The Lord Bishop of, Portrait of, 60
Louth Church, Restoration of, 180; New Finial and Vane of Spire, 181
Lord Ashburton Ship on Fire, Charleston, 181
"Lucrezia Borgia," Scene from the Opera of — Grisi, Lablache, and Moriani, 397

MADAGASCAR, The Queen of (Ranavalona) in her State Howdah, 100
"Macbeth," Scene from, at the Princess' Theatre, 141
Maclise, Esq., R.A., D.; Portrait of, 292
Manchester, Roby Day, and Sunday Schools, 176
Marshall, John, Esq., Bust of the late, 413
May-Day in the last Century, Painted by Anthony, 280
Maynooth College, Great Meeting at the London Tavern to oppose the increased Grant to, 241
Meteor seen in Nottinghamshire, 284
Metternich, Prince, Portrait of, 228
Mexico, Sketches in—Street in, 33; Mexican Soldier; Mexican Dragoon; Throwing the Lasso; Mexican Water Carrier; Mexican Beggar, 44; The Great Square in Mexico, 65; The Town of Jalapa; Travelling in Mexico, 68; Sketches in Tampico, View of, 125
Miami, Madame Celeste as, 73.
Milnes, Esq., M.P., Monckton, Portrait of, 252
Monster Cactus (Echinocactus Staneii), 12
Moriani, Sigr., Portrait of, 152
Mysterious Lady, The, 205
Mystery, The Fan Steamer, on an Experimental Trip, 80

NAPLES BY MOONLIGHT, Panorama of, by Burford, 24
Nelson Medal, Distributed at Greenwich Hospital, to the Men who Fought under Lord Nelson, 224
"Nelson Medals," Distribution of the, in the Painted Hall, Greenwich Hospital, 240
Newcastle Race Plate, 412
Newmarket—the 2000 Guineas Race near the Course, 280
Newspaper Department of the General Post Office—Receiving Office; Bagging for the Great Towns; Sorting, 140
New Year's Gifts at Windsor, Distribution of Her Majesty's Alms, in the Royal Riding House, at Windsor, 8
New York, Burning of the Bowery Theatre, 321; Celebration of Washington's Birthday, in the Tabernacle, 193; Destruction of the Tribune Office at, 196
New York, Floating Theatre—"The Temple of the Muses," 308
New York, Frozen Fountain, Bowling green, 212
New York, Great Democratic Mass Meeting in the Park at, 17; Great Native Meeting in the Park; Great Whig Mass Meeting, Procession passing the Gothic Hall, 20; Great Foot Race at Hoboken, 21; Great Texas Meeting, 189; Sleigh Riding after the late Snow Storm, 181; Great Meeting of the Ladies' Industry Asssociation, 256
New Zealand—Portrait of Perle, the Son of a New Zealand Chief, Great Seal of, 388
Northampton Steeple Chase, 220
Northampton and Peterborough Railway, Opening of the; Thrapston Station; Oundle Station; Northampton Station; Lynch Bridge Nene Viaduct, 389; Peterborough Station, 381

OAKS, The, Portrait of "Refraction," the Winner of the, 357
Old Year, The Last Days and Funeral of the, Illustration to Lines on, 5
Oxford, Exterior of the University Theatre; Mr. Ward, of Balliol, 120

PALM SUNDAY at Crowhurst, 192
Parke, Mr. Baron, Portrait of, 185
Parliament, Opening of—Her Majesty leaving the House of Lords, 81; Ceremony of Robing her Majesty in the Library of the House of Lords; The Lord Chancellor Presenting her Majesty with a Copy of the Speech, 88; The Ambassadors' and Church Benches, House of Lords; The House of Commons before her Majesty at the Bar of the Peers, 89
Pacha of Egypt, Magnificent Silver Fountain for the, a Present from the East India Company, 368
Paul Pry, Mr. Wright as, at the Adelphi Theatre, 320
Pavilion at Brighton, Garden Front and North Entrance of, 101
Pelican, H. M. S., Perilous Situation of, with the Chinese Ransom on board, 64
Perrot, Signor, Portrait of, 152
Perth, The Inch of, 356
Phillips, Esq., R.A., Thomas, Portrait of, 261
"Pierre le Rouge," Scene from, at St. James's Theatre, 73
Pigeon Expresses—Starting the Pigeon, Carrier Pigeon, 341
Pittsburg, The Great Fire at, 313
Polish Ball, Scene from the Grand, 400
Portland Vase—Bottom of the Vase; Handle of Ditto; Bas Reliefs on Ditto; Section of the Sepulchre in which the Vase was found, 105
Post-Office Van Calling at the Office of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 48
Potter, The late Sir Thomas Portrait of (First Mayor of Manchester), 213
"Priest's Daughter, The," Scene from, at Sadler's Wells Theatre, 109
Prince Rupert's Cottage, Liverpool, 316
Prize Poultry (See "Zoological Society")

QUEBEC, Burning of the City of, 412
Queen Anne's Bath, View of, 108
Queen, The, Her Most Gracious Majesty, Victoria Alexandrina's Distribution of Alms in the Royal Riding House, Windsor, 8
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Visit to Exeter Hall, 365
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Visit to Christ's Hospital, 169, 170
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Visit to the Great Britain Steam-ship, 257
Queen, The—Her Majesty, &c., leaving Windsor Castle for the Ascot Races, 384
Queen, The—Grand Review by her Majesty in Windsor Great Park, 385
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Visit to the Isle of Wight—Her Majesty Landing, 312; Reception of her Majesty by the Royal Yacht Squadron, 313; Her Majesty Receiving the Keys at Portsmouth, 324
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Visit to the Duke of Wellington, at Strathfieldsaye—Arrival of her Majesty at, 49; Her Majesty passing through Bracknell, 53; Presentation of the Address to her Majesty at Wokingham; Changing the Escort at Arborfield, 56; The Duke of Wellington Meeting the Queen; View of Strathfieldsaye, 57
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Visit to the Duke of Buckingham, at Stowe —County Meeting at Aylesbury, to Address her Majesty; The Reception Room at the Wolverton Station Arch &c. at Wicken 36; Lord Cobham's Pillar, at Stowe; Arch at the Entrance into Stowe; Arch in Buckingham, 37; Presentation of the Mace to her Majesty, at Buckingham; Her Majesty leaving Buckingham, 40; The Grand Corinthian Arch at Stowe; Stowe—The Garden Front, 41; Her Majesty Planting an Oak at Stowe; Her Majesty's Departure from Stowe House, 52; Fireworks in the Market-place, Buckingham, 53
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Costume Ball at Buckingham Palace, 369, 376, 377; Costumes of the Duchess of Argyle, Lord Chesterfield, Lord Bolingbroke, Miss Kitty Fisher, 333; Costumes of 1740 and 1750, 352; Costumes of her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, The Hon. W. Cowper and Mr. G. E. Anson, Lady Cust, the Duchess of St. Alban's, Col. Dawson Damer and the Prince of Leiningen, Lady Tighe, 360, 361; Duke of Norfolk, Duchess of Grafton, Marchioness of Londonderry, Viscount Sydney, Countess of Jersey, Lady C. Villiers, Lord Mandeville, Baroness Rothschild, Earl of Surrey, Marchioness of Ormonde, Belgian Ambassadress, Marquis of Donegal, Miss Burdett Coutts, Duchess of St. Alban's, Duchess of Sutherland, Lord Viscount Castlereagh, Lady Peel, Duke of St. Alban's, 373; Baroness Brunow, Duchess of Kent, Viscount Sydney, Duke of Norfolk, Austrian Ambasadress; the "Sir Roger De Coverley" Dance in the Picture Gallery, 376; The Supper in the Great Dining Room, Minuet in the Throne Room, 377
Queen, The—Grand Inspection of the Experimental Squadron at Spithead by her Majesty: Her Majesty going on board the Albion, at Spithead, 401; The Fleet from the Motherbank; the Superb, under full sail; the Fleet Getting under way, 408; Admiral Parker going on board the Royal yacht—The Fleet Firing the Salute—The Flagship St. Vincent firing a Salute, 409; Loosed Sails — Top-gallant Sails Home—Preparing to Make Sail—Making Sail on the Starboard Tack—Reefing Topsails—Double-reefed Topsails in Top gallant Sails, 410
Queen, The — Her Majesty and Prince Albert, &c, in Hyde Park, 232
Queen, The—Presentation of Jewellery to her Majesty and Prince Albert, by the Artisans of Birmingham—Brooch, Ear-rings, Bracelet, Buckle, Watch-chain, Seal, and Key, 352

RAILWAY CARRIAGES, German and Danish, 160
Railways, New Portable Gas lamps for, 28; The Lighter, 28
Railway Ticket Machinery—Railway Tickets, Railway Ticket printing Machinery, Arrangements of a Ticket Delivery Box, Ticket Cabinet, Pay-office Date Printing Machine, 117
Refraction, The Winner of the Oaks, 357
"Robert and Bertrand," Scene from the Ballet of, at Drury-lane Theatre, 221
Rosse Telescope, The Great—Machine for Grinding, &c., Specula; Ground Plan of Foundry; Section of Machinery, 253
Rossi-Caccia, Madame, Portrait of, 413
"Rosida," Scene from the new Ballet of, at her Majesty's Theatre, 365
Royal Academy Exhibition—Scene from the Life of the Duc de Biron, by Lance; View near Ournelo Contrada di Sora, Naples, by W. Leitch, 293; King Henry the Fourth, painted by Gilbert, 312; Uriel and Satan, painted by Haydon, 364
Royal Horticultural Society, Dublin, The Exhibition of the, at the Rotunda, 304
Royal Humane Society's Fothergillian Gold Medal, 172
Royal Thames Yacht Club—Match for the Belvidere Cup: The Belvidere, Blue Belle, Ino, Champion, Mystery, and Antagonist yachts, 301. Club Match: The Mystery, Antagonist, Belvidere, Vixen, Prima Donna; The Antagonist and Mystery towed off by the Waterman steamer No. 13, 325
Russia—Alexandra, the Empress of; The Cæsarwitsch, Grand Duke Alexander, Heir to the Throne of Russia, 48

SCOTT MONUMENT, The Statues for the, 237; Meg Merrilies, Lady of the Lake, Last Minstrel, Prince Charles Edward; Portion of the Monument, showing one of the principal niches for the reception of the present Statues, and arrangements made for the smaller ones, 237
Serk, View of the Coupee Rock, 61
Sheffield and Ashton Railway, Ruins on the, 261
Sheriffs, Election of, and Regal Ceremony of Pricking the Sheriffs' Roll; Her Majesty Pricking the Sheriffs' Roll; Privy Council in the Court of Exchequer, 84
"Sheriff of the County," Scene from the Comedy of, at the Haymarket Theatre, 157
Shrewsbury Races, 325
Shrewsbury Show, 357
Slave Felucca, Encounter with a, 229
Slaver off Fish Bay, West Coast of Africa, Gallant Capture of a, 1
Slave Vessel, Extraordinary Capture of a, off Congo River, 301
Sledge, Picture by Lessing, 113
Sophocles, Bust of, 45
South Hackney, New Church at, 308
Standard Theatre, Shoreditch, The New, 320
St. Austell's Well, 181
Stepney, The Late Lady, 261
"St. George and the Dragon," Scene from the Burlesque of, at the Adelphi Theatre, 204
St. John's Church, Notting Hill, 124
St. Keyne's Well, Cornwall, 364
St. Margaret's Church, at Cliffe, near Dover, 288
St. Mary Woolnoth Church, Lombard-street, 156
St. Sidwell's Church, Exeter, 124
Stopford, Admiral, The Hon. Sir Robert, G.C.B., Governor of Greenwich Hospital, 240
Stowe, Visit of Her Majesty to. (See "Queen, The") Strathfieldsaye, Visit of her Majesty to, 49, 53, 56, 57; Tennis Court at, 80. (See "Queen, The")
Sun, The Appearance of, on Sunday, 9th March, 1845, 192
Surbiton, Kingston on-Railway, New Church at, 29
Surrey Zoological Gardens, Concert Monstre at, 413
Sussex, Tomb of his Late Royal Highness the Duke of, at Kensal Green Cemetery, 272
Swallow Steam Boat, Wreck of the, in Hudson's River, 303
Switzerland, The Civil War in—Conflict at Lucerne, 225; Chart of Seat of War, 227; Town Hall of Zurich; The Swiss Diet at Zurich; View of Lucerne, 228

TELEGRAPH, The Great Western. (See "Electro-Magnetic Telegraph")
Terrible, Launch of H.M. Steam Frigate, at Deptford, 96
Texas—Review of Texan Troops; Port of Galveston; City of Houston, the Capital of Texas, 4
Thames Regatta — Tradesman's Challenge Cup; Silver Wherry, 411
Thames Royal Yacht Club Match—The Prima Donna rounding the Buoy at Erith; The Vixen, Belvidere, and Blue Belle, 353
Thom, the Weaver Poet, Portrait of, 144
"Time Works Wonders," Scene from the New Comedy of, 304
Tissington Well-Dressing in 1845 — Miss Goodwin's Well; Hand's Well; The Ceremony at the Hall Well; The Coffin Well; The Town Well; The Hall Well, 300
Toilet Mirror, The Song, with Words, 248
Tower of London, The Elizabethan Armoury, 201
Tower, The Duke of Wellington laying the first Stone of the Waterloo Barracks at the; The Waterloo Barracks, from the Architect's Design, 392
Trafalgar-square, View of, 216; Pumping Engine for supplying the Fountains and Government offices, 216; Fountain in, and Section of the Well, 217; Bude Lights in, 284
Turner, Esq., R. A., Portrait of J. M. W., 292

VALENTINE AND ORSON, Mrs. and Mr. Keeley as, at the Lyceum Theatre, 16
Valentine's Day (drawn by Phiz), 85
Vauxhall Gardens—Joel II Diavolo's Descent with Fireworks; The Firework Temple, 396
"Victory," Head of the Statue of, by Phidias, 109
Vidocq, Portrait of, 208
Viennese Children at Her Majesty's Theatre, 252

WALES, His Royal Highness the Prince of, Fowling-Piece presented to, by his Majesty the King of the French, 24
Walton Church, Stafford, struck by Lightning, 332
Ward, Mr., of Balliol, Portrait of, 120
Wardour Castle, Wilts, View of, 156
Warwick Races, 229
Water Colours, Exhibition of the Society of Painters in Pall Mall East —Irish Mendicants, by Fripp; Sir Roger de Coverley with the Gipsies, by Harrison, 281
Water Colours, Exhibition of the New Society of Painters in—The Crusaders' First Sight of Jerusalem, by H. Warren; Sheep Washing, by E. Duncan, 268; The Gipsy's Home, by G. Dodgson; Courtship, by C. H. Weigall; The Milkmaid, by John Absalon; Le Tombeau du Pécheur, by Josh. J. Jenkins; The Prisoner of Gisors, by E. H. Wehnert, 269; Light, Painted by Jenkins, 348
Waterloo, The Field of, 400
Weighing Office at the Bank of England — Sovereign Weighing Machine; Box of the Sovereign Balance; Section of the Works of the Balance; Bate's Scales for testing Sovereign Weights; Enlarged View of the End of the Balance; Machine for Cutting Sovereigns, 189
Wellington Monument, near Hornscastle, 208
Wellington, The Duke of, laying the Foundation Stone of the New Barracks at the Tower, 392
Wenham Ice Lake, 316
Whitehall, Offices of the Board of Trade, 153
Whiteheaded Eagles at the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park, 305
Whiting Shoal, Limehouse Reach, Blowing up of the—Plan of the Channel to be cut; Firing the Train by the Galvanic Battery, 329; Dredging Machine; Section of the Shoal and River at Low Water; Gunpowder Canisters, 330
"Whittington and his Cat," Scene from the Burlesque of, at the Lyceum Theatre, 204
Windsor Great Park, Grand Review in, by her Majesty, 385
Wilson, Mr. Carus, Leaving Jersey, 125

YORK MINSTER, The Monster Bell for, 97

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, Regent's Park, White-headed Eagles at the, 305; Australian Ant-Eater, 324; Chimpanzee, 356
Zoological Society Prize Poultry—Common Geese; Ducks; Gold Spangled Bantams; Spangled Turkey; Roman Runts; Polish Fowls; Fowls from China; Silver Spangled Fowls, 389

ABANDONMENT of a Child, 12
Abdu-l-Medjid, Sultan of Turkey, 184
Aberfeldy, The Birks of, 20
Abney House, Stoke Newington, 208
Accidents, Offences, &c., 3, 26, 43, 62, 75, 87, 107, 123, 131, 147, 167, 182, 202, 215, 227, 259, 295, 311, 327, 342, 355, 391, 403
Aglionby, Esq., M.P., Henry, 184
Aggravation of Crime, 275
Albert, His Royal Highness Prince, K.G., &c.—Fowlingpiece presented to his Royal Highness, by the King of the French, 24; alleged Attempt to shoot, 167
Albion, H.M.S., The, her Majesty going on Board, at Spithead, 401
Alexandra, Empress of Russia, 48
Alfred, Launch of the, Indiaman, at Blackwall, 232
Algiers, The late Explosion at; Powder Magazine after the Explosion, 196
American Slops, 82
American President, Inauguration of the, 243; Approach to the Capitol —the Oath, 244
Anti-Corn-law League Bazaar at Covent Garden Theatre, 275, 295, 296—(See also, "Free-trade Bazaar.")
"Antigone," Scene from, at Covent Garden Theatre, 45
Arches Court—the Case of Mr. Oakeley, 370
Arctic Expedition, The New, 326; Departure of the Erebus and Terror; Portrait of Sir John Franklin, K.C.H.; Sir John Franklin's Cabin in the Erebus; Capt. Fitzjames's ditto, 328
Armstrong's Hydro-Electric Machine, 245
Arundel Castle, Visit of her Majesty to, 103
Ascot Cup Day, 371
Ascot Prizes—Royal Hunt Cup; the Emperor's Cup; the Queen's Vase, 384
Ascot Races, Her Majesty, Illustrious Visitors and Suite, Leaving Windsor Castle, for, 384
Ashton-under-Lyne, The Late Accident at, 274
Assize Intelligence, 211, 235
Astronomical Phenomenon Extraordinary, 191
Atmospheric Railway, Improvements in the, 11
Atmospheric Railway Stations, Croydon and Epsom Line, 137.
Australian Ant-Eater at the Zoological Gardens, 324
Aylesbury County Meeting to address her Majesty, 36

BADMINTON HOUSE, Festivities at, on the coming of age of the Marquis of Worcester, 92, 93; Badminton House and Lawn, Procession of the Ox, 92; The Ox roasted, Dinner to Tenantry, &c., 93
Bail Court, Case of Harriett E. Pelham, 87
Bale, Norfolk, The Gigantic Oak at, 317
Bank of England Bullion Office. (See "Bullion Office"); Bank of England, Weighing Office at the. (See "Weighing Office")
Bankrupt's Certificate, Suspension of a, 147
Bankruptcy Court, 34, 50, 119, 147, 191, 226, 267, 290, 339
Barbadoes. View of, &c., 212
Barham, The Rev. R. H., Death of, 386; Portrait, &c., of, 416
Barrington, Sir H. F., Death of, by Fire, 167
Barton House, Isle of Wight, 416
Base Coin in London, Circulation of, 149
Basso-Borio, Madame Rita, Portrait, &c., of, 168
Battersea, The late Murder in (Case of Dalmas), 138
Bedford, Mr. Paul, as the Dragon, 204
Beggars, The Tricks of, 35
Belgian Ambassador, The, annoyed by a Maniac, 50 67
Belgium. A Man convicted of poisoning his Wife and Six Servants, 208
Bermondsey Convent of Mercy; Ceremony of taking the Veil at, 220
Bethlem Hospital, Dome of, 100
Bethnal Green, The late Murder at, 71, 75, 87, 147
Bigamy, Curious Case of, 51
Bill Discounting, Case of Mr. Gibbs, 290
Rill Discounting Transactions, 311
Birmingham Artisans, Presentation of Jewellery by the, to her Majesty and Prince Albert—Brooch, Earrings, Buckle, Bracelet, Watch-chain, Seal, and Key, 352
Births, 14, 30, 46, 59, 78, 94, 110, 126, 139, 158, 171, 187, 206, 222, 238, 251, 267, 283, 299, 318, 334, 347, 363, 371, 398, 407
Blackwall, The Explosion at Samuda's Works, 147, 161, 162, 182, 311
Blaine, The Late Delabere Pritchard, 261
Blanchard, Mr. Laman, Death of, 103
Board of Trade, Offices of the—"A Deputation;" President's Room; Railway Board, 249
Boat, A New One, with Projecting Rowlock, 205
Bode, The Baron De, v. the Queen, (in the Queen's Bench), 67
Bolton, Terra Cotta Church near, 76, 77
Bourne, Death of the Right Hon. William Sturges, 82
Bramshill House, 77
Brazil, The Emperor and Empress of, 25
Brazil, Slave Labour in, 197
Brazilian Sugar Mill; Domestic Punishments of Slaves on a Brazilian Sugar Farm, 197
Brazilian Slaves, Halt of, 260
Breakwater off Brighton, Captain Tayler's, R.N., 284, 310
"Brigadier," The, Scene from the Comedietta of, at the Princess' Theatre, 109
Brighton from the Sea, View of, 101
Brighton, Royal Pavilion—Garden Front; North Entrance, 101
British Association for the Advancement of Science, Cambridge—The Reception-room at the Town-hall, 393; Town-hall, Cambridge; Sir John Herschell, Bart., President of the Association; Model Room, Perse School; The Union Room, Jesus Lane, 404; Philosophical Society's House; Lecture Room; Lecture Room, Great Court, Trinity College; Model House and Garden, Horticultural Society; Horticultural Fête in the Grounds of Downing College, 405
British Institution, Exhibition of the Old Masters at the, 403
British Museum, Additions to the; Frieze of the Parthenon, 156; The Great Zoological Gallery on Easter Monday, 201
Brixey, Martha, the Murderer of Mr. Ffinch's Child, 295
Brough, John, The Execution of, for Fratricide, 227
Brougham, Lord, Abuse and Flattery Resorted to by, &c., 326
Brown, Miss Frances, the Blind Poetess of Ulster, 22
Brunswick, The Duke of, and the Satirist (Queen's Bench), 370
Buckingham, House at, where Chas. I. Lodged, 52
Buckingham, Her Majesty's Visit to his Grace the Duke of, at Stowe, 36
Buckingham Election, 103
Budget, The, 98, 113, 118
Bullion Office, Bank of England—Receiving Office; American Silver; Bar of Silver; Plata Pena Silver; Sycee Silver; Spanish and Mexican Dollars; English Silver; Bar of Gold, 148; Compartment in the Bullion Vault; Balance for Bar Silver; Balance for Bar Gold; Chopper for Light Sovereigns; Balance for Dollars, 149
Buxted Park, Visit of her Majesty to the Earl of Liverpool at, 116
Byrne, Mr., the Irish Harper, 236

CÆSAREWITSCH, The Grand Duke Alexander, Heir to the Russian Throne, 48
Camberwell Poisoning Case, 131
Cambridge, Plan of the Town, &c., 394
Canonry of St. Paul's, 154
Canterbury, The Archbishop of, 60
Carbery, Death of the late Lord, 306; Portrait, &c. of, 332
Castellan, Madame, 221; Portrait of, 285
Celeste, Madame, as Miami, 73
Central Criminal Court. 19, 83, 310
Chandos Testimonial, The, 53
Channel Islands, Views, &c. in, 61; Jersey—Mount Orgueil; Guernsey—St. Peter's Port and Castle Cornet; Serk—The Coupee Rock, 61
Charitable Bequests Acts, Ireland, 22
Charlemagne, The, Talisman of, 157
Charlton, The Late Edmund Lechmere, 307
Chat, A Ramble in the Realms of, 362, 395
Chatham Dockyard, Alarming Fire at, 107
Chess, 16, 29, 48, 59, 91, 108, 125, 144, 160, 176, 192, 208, 224, 234, 256, 266, 282, 304, 336, 352, 368, 379, 416; Games of, by Telegraph, 211, 256; The Game of, played between London and Portsmouth, through the Electric Telegraph of the South Western Railway, 10th April, 233
Chess Club, The Anniversary Dinner of the London, 266
Child Murder at Greenwich, 311
"Chimes," The, Scene from at the Adelphi Theatre, 16; Mr. Keeley as Toby Veck, 16; Scene from at the Adelphi, 29
Chinese Monster Gun at Woolwich, 336
Christ Church, Newgate-street, 188
Christ's Hospital, Her Majesty's Visit to, 169; Piggin Bearer; Basket Bearer; The Reader; Bowl Bearer; Candlestick Bearer, 169; Knife Basket Bearer, 170
Church, Universities, &c., 6, 43, 55, 77, 87, 102, 144, 166, 178, 211, 235, 290, 310, 342, 362, 386
Cincinnatti, View and Improved Condition of, 355, 356
"Cinderella," Scene from the new burlesque of, at the Lyceum, 320
Circuits of the Judges—Lincoln and Oxford Assizes, 164, 165
Claremont, Suicide of the Lodge-keeper at, 147
Clayton, The late General Browne, 235
Clayton Column, The, 235
Clive, Colonel, C.B., Funeral of the late, 272
Codfish, Extraodinary Voracity of a, 11
Colabah, The Church of, 68
Colchester, Ancient Moot Hall at, 76
Coleridge, Justice, wearing the Black Cap, 245
Colleges, New, in Ireland, Remarks on, 305
Collingwood, H. M. ship, 177
Colonial Office, 161, 385
Colosseum, Regent's-park, Re-opening of the—View of the Chalet, Mer de Glace, Mont Blanc, &c.; The Glyptotheca, or Museum of Sculpture, 264; the Conservatory —Temple of Apollo Epicurus, 276; Temple of Vesta, &c., Italian Ruins and Fountain, Stalactite Grotto, 277
Comet, The, 412; Magnificent one, as seen at Blackheath, 395; Comet, The, magnificent one, as it appeared on the 8th, 9th, and 11th of June, 381
Coming Spring, Lines to the, 205
Commentaries of the Week, 42
Common Pleas, Court of, 386
Commons' Inclosure Bill, Remarks on the, 406
Concert Monstre at the Surrey Zoological Gardens, 413
Condemned Sermon in Newgate, Comments on, &c, 278, 294; Condemned Sermon, the late, Statement respecting, before the Court of Aldermen, &c., 290
Connor, Joseph, Trial of, for the Murder of Mary Brothers, 310; Execution of, at the Old Bailey, 355
Conservative Club House, the New, St. James's-street—Monogram of the Club in the Tesselated Pavement of the Hall; Monogram on Cornice Shield, in the Coffee Room; British Frieze in the Drawing Room; Door of Drawing Room; Sang's and Naundorf's Monograms; The Upper Vestibule; The Inner Hall, 121; The Decorative Painters of, 134
Contemporaine, La—Ida de St. Elme, Portrait, &c., of, 365
Convent (The New) at Chelsea, 256
Cooper, The late Robert Bransby, 332
Cooper, R.B, Esq., M.P. for Gloucester, Death of, 317
Corn-laws—Mr. Villiers's Motion, 374
Coroners, The Power of (Lord Denman's Judgment), 370
Corporal Punishments — Army and Navy, 354
Correspondents, Notices to, 6, 22, 38, 54, 70, 86, 102, 118, 134, 150, 166, 182, 198, 214, 230, 246, 262, 278, 294, 310, 326, 358, 390, 406
Counterfeit Coin, New Mode of Passing, 107
Country News, 10, 23, 35, 51, 67, 83, 103, 122, 138, 154, 179, 203, 211, 247, 259, 323, 350, 355, 374, 411
Court and Haut Ton, 6, 22, 39, 55, 70, 87, 102, 118, 135, 151, 166, 182, 194, 214, 230, 247, 262, 295, 310, 326, 342, 354, 374, 406
Court-martial on the Officers and Crew of the Skylark, 307
Cowes, Isle of Wight—Opening of the Steam frigate Dock at, 137
Crime, Aggravation of, 275
Croome, Murder of the Gamekeeper at, 23
Crown Jewels—The Queen's, or Imperial Crown; The Old Imperial Crown (Charles II.); The Prince of Wales's Crown; The Queen's Diadem; Queen Consort's Crown; Imperial Orb; Queen Consort's Orb; Temporal Sceptre (Victoria); Spiritual Sceptre (Victoria); St. Edward's Staff; Temporal Sceptre (William IV.); Spiritual Sceptre (William IV.); Ivory Sceptre of Anna Boleyn; Ampulæ; Anointing Spoon; Coronation Spur; Coronation Bracelets; Temporal Sword of Justice; Sword of Mercy (Sheathed); Sword of Spiritual Justice, 132; State Salt Cellars; Salt Spoon; Baptismal Font; Coronation Tankard; Sacramental Flagon, 133
Croydon and Epsom Atmospheric Railway Line Station, 137
Culloden, The Battle of, 262
Curricle Tribus, The New, 205
Cushman, Miss, as Lady Macbeth, 141
Customs' Act—Official Copy of the Articles on which Sir Robert Peel Proposes to Exempt from Duty, &c. &c., 138
Customs, Frauds upon the, by Landing Waiters, 290

DALMAS, the Murderer of a Woman in Battersea-fields, 138
"Danaides, Les," Ballet of, 109
Daniell, The Late Professor, 185, 232; Memorial to, 224
Dartmouth Election Committee, 179
David, M. Felicien, Author of the Symphonic Ode, "The Desert"—Biography and Portrait of, 200
Deaths, 14, 30, 46, 59, 78, 94, 110, 126, 139, 158, 171, 187, 206, 222, 238, 251, 267, 283, 299, 318, 334, 347, 363, 371, 398, 407
Death, Punishment of, Remarks on, 245; Flaxman's Condemned Youth, 245
Deaths by Accidents, Bill in the House of Lords, 262
Debate of the Week, 184
De Broglie, The Duc, and the Right of Search; Portrait of, 260
Delarue, The Murder of, 150
Derby Week, &c., Remarks on, 342
Derby, The Late Fatal Accident at, 259
Devonport, Royal Female Orphan Asylum, Laying the Foundation Stone of the, 288
Disappointed Man, Soliloquy on a, 172
Dolgyn Hall, Destruction of, by Fire, 7
Don Cæsar de Bazan, M. Lemaitre as, 157
Don Carlos, Abdication of, 369
Doncaster Race Course Stand (in the Court of Exchequer), 131
Dost Mohammed, Portrait and description of, 220
Downing, The late Mrs. Harriet, 235
Downshire, The late Marquis of, 253
Downshire, Funeral of the late Marquis of, at Hillsborough, 288
Dragon, The, Mr. Paul Bedford as 204
Dramatic and Musical Chit Chat, 29, 42, 59, 74, 85, 110, 126, 142, 157, 186, 234, 266
Dresden, Partial Destruction of the Bridge of the Elbe at, 245
Dryden's House, Fetter-lane, 317
Duel, Tragical, at Gosport, 323
Duncan, the late Thomas, R.S.A. and A.R.A., 307
Duprez, as Arnold in "Guillaume Tell," 228
Durham, G.C.B., The late Sir Phillip C. H. C., 275

EAST GREENWICH. Fire at, 153
East Kent Election, 160
Easter Holidays; Amusements of the People, 202
Easter Hunt with the Royal Stag Hounds, 199, 200
Easter Monday at the Tower, and at the Great Zoological Gallery, British Museum, 201, 202
Eclipse of the Sun on 6th May, 290
Edinburgh, Greyfriars Church, Conflagration of the Old, &c., 60
Edinburgh, Justiciary Court, 123
Edinburgh, Royal Institution and Scott Monument, 120
Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway, Fatal Accident on the, 123
Effingham, Death of the Earl of, 115
Egremont, The late Earl of, 235
Electric Gun, The "Siva," and Target, 397
Electric Telegraph, Usefulness of the, 82
Electric Telegraph, Nine Elms Station, 233; Room in which the Game of Chess was played, 233
Electric Telegraph, More Wonders of the, 263
Electrical Telegraph, on the South Western Railway, 77
Elephant Carriage, at Gloucester, Hughes's, 285
Ely, The late Bishop of (Dr. Allen), 236
Ely Cathedral, Funeral of the Bishop of Ely in, 236
English Vocalists in Italy, 186
Envy and Imitation; Observations on the State of Parties in France, 49
Eoline, Impromptu to, 187
"Eoline," Scene from the Ballet of, at Her Majesty's Theatre, 168
Epitome of News, Foreign and Domestic, 14, 30, 43, 55, 66, 94, 107, 123, 142, 151, 167, 183, 187, 195, 211, 235, 247, 259, 286, 295, 318, 327, 343, 362, 375, 391, 407
Epsom Races; Portrait of "Merry Monarch," the Winner of the Derby; Starting the Pigeon Express; Carrier Pigeon, 341; "Scenes on the Road," Drawn by Gilbert, 344, 345; Derby Day; Leaving the Course, 337, 338; "The Return from the Derby," Drawn by Leech, 340
"Ernani," Scene from the Opera of, at Her Majesty's Theatre, 168
Etruscan Tazza, Presented to George Jones, Esq., R.A., by the Students of the Royal Academy, 220
Every Body's Column, 11, 27, 43, 83, 115, 147, 195, 270, 334
"Ev'ry Land My Home!" Words by Henry Lovell, Esq., Music by N. J. Sporle, 32
Exchequer, Court of, 34, 131, 278
Excise and Customs Reform, 122
Execution of two Murderers at Kirkdale, 23
Execution of Mary Gallop for the Murder of her Father, 11
Execution of William Kendrew, for the Murder of Mr. Inchbald, 11
Executions, The Admission of the Press to witness, Case of Hocker, &c., 358
Exeter Hall, Her Majesty's Visit to, 365
Experimental Brigs, Daring, Flying Fish, and Espiegle; scudding in a Gale, 172
Experimental Squadron at Spithead, Grand Inspection of by her Majesty, 401, 408, 409; Loosed Sails; Topgallant Sails Home; Preparing to Make Sail; Making Sail on the Starboard Tack; Reefing Topsail; Double Reefed Topsails, in Top Gallant Sails, 410
Experimental Steam Trip of the Mystery Fan Steamer, 80

FAIRS, 320
Fairy, Her Majesty's River Steamer, 224
Fashions, The English and Parisian, 2, 10, 74, 141, 221, 285, 394, 414
Field Gardens, Observations respecting, 289
Fire, and Loss of Two Lives, Another Disastrous, 363
Fires, &c., 7, 43
Fine Arts—Exhibition of Works of Art in Westminster Hall, 403; The Young Gardeners, 9; The Beauties of the Opera; Head of Christ, 42; Head of Christ—Paul de la Roche, 76; A Russian Family attacked by Wolves, 104; The last Ripening Sunbeam, by Lance; Elgin Marbles, Victory (No. 1); Parthenon Marble (No. 2); Victory (No. 3), 136
Finden's Beauties of the Poets (Moore), Part 1, 277
Fisher House, Islington, 372
Flaxman's Condemned Youth, 245
Florence, The late Inundations at, 7; View from the Ponte de Perro after the Inundation, 8
Foot Race near Barnet, 21
Ford House, Newton Abbot, Devonshire, 108
Foreign Intelligence, &c., 2, 7, 18, 34, 39, 50, 66, 82, 98, 114, 130, 146, 162, 178, 194, 210, 212, 226, 242, 247, 258, 274, 290, 306, 322, 339, 354, 370, 386, 402
Foreign Post Nights, 42
Forrest, Mr., The American Tragedian; Portrait of, 125
Forrest, Mr., as Macbeth, 141
Franchise of Lodgers, 39
Fratricide in Staffordshire, 35
Frauds on the Excise, 34
Freeman, Sarah, Convicted of Poisoning her Brother, at the Taunton Assizes, 235
Free Trade Bazaar, at Covent Garden Theatre, 275, 295; Refreshment Room, 296; Stall, &c., 309; Chandelier; Iron Model of the Warwick Vase; Iron Flower Table; Iron Fountain, 336
French Chamber of Peers, The, 69
French Ministry, The, 22
French Plays, 126, 142; "Pierre Le Rouge," Scene from, 73
French Press and the Grant to Maynooth, 263
Fruit Women, The War Against the, 35

GAIETIES and Gravities of the Week, 54, 75. 106, 122, 139, 150, 170, 186, 202
Galago, The, 355, 356
Gambier Islands—Raft of Gambier Islanders, 100
Game Laws, The, 145
Gamekeepers, Another Affray with, 10
Gardeners, The Young, 9
Gazette, The London, 14, 30, 46, 59, 78, 94, 110, 126, 139, 158, 171, 187, 206, 222, 238, 251, 267, 283, 299, 318, 334, 347, 363, 371, 398, 407
General Assembly of Scotland, 347; The Lord High Commissioner entering the New Assembly Hall—Presentation of the Keys at Holyrood, 348
General Post Office Newspaper Department; Sorting; Bagging for the Great Towns, 140
German Courts, The Rumoured Visit of Her Majesty and Prince Albert to, 27
Gilbert, The Late Mrs. Davies, 307
Gladstone, Mr., M.P., Rumoured Retirement of, 70
Glasgow University, Installation of the Late Lord Advocate as Lord Rector, 35
Glass and Window Duties, Remarks on, 182
Gloucester, Sale of the Effects of the Late Princess Sophia of, 74
Goats Sold for Venison, 119
"Golden Fleece," Scene from the Extravaganza of, at the Haymarket Theatre, 200
Gold of England, The Observations on the bugbear of, &c., 209
Goodwin Sands, The Light for All Nations on the, 61
Gosport, Tragical Duel at, 323, 355 387
Grahn, Mdlle. Lucile, Portrait of, 152
Grant, The Late Col. Turner, 215
Gravesend and Rochester Railway—Gravesend Terminus, 332; Terrace New Pier, 209, 210
Great Britain Steam ship, Departure of the, 374; Leaving Blackwall, 396; The Interior of; Section; Promenade Deck and Saloon, 112; Her Majesty's Visit to; Lines, &c., on the Trial of the, 71, 72
Great Western Railway, Alarming Accident on the, 391
Great Yarmouth—Remains of the Suspension Bridge; The Suspension Bridge and River, 297; The Late Catastrophe at; Funerals of the Persons Drowned at, 316; The Late Melancholy Accident at, 387
"Green Bushes," Scene from the Drama of, at the Adelphi Theatre, 73
Greenwich, The Late Child Murder at—Trial of Martha Brixey, 311
Greek Theatre, Plan of a, 45
Gregory XVI., The Pope, 64
Greyfriars Church, Edinburgh, Ruins of, 96
Guernsey, 62; Royal Court and Mr. Carus Wilson, 110; St. Peter's Port and Castle Cornet, 61
Guildford-street, The Late Calamitous Fire in, 7
"Guillaume Tell," Scene from the Opera of, 397
Guizot Cabinet, The Retention of Office by, 71

HAMPSTEAD, Murder at, 135, 150, 155, 163, 182, 230, 263
Harris, Death of Lieut.-Gen. Lord, 354
Harrow Steeplechase—The Fall at the Brook, 265
Hart, Mrs., Murder of, at Salt Hill, 7
Henry, The Bark, Burning off Blackwall, 103, 104
Hill, Mr. Rowland, Testimony to, 39
Hocker, The Convict, 183, 230, 247, 279
"Honesty," Scene from the New Play of, at Covent-garden Theatre, 72
Hood, Thomas, The late, Subscription for the Widow and Children of, 326; Bust of, 300
Hope, Esq., M.P., G. W., 184
"Hopes," by Frederica Bremer, 153, 173
Hornstentein, The Late M. Weis de, 275
Horticultural Society of Ireland (See Royal Horticultural Society of Ireland)
Hoste, C.B., The Late Colonel Sir George, 275
House of Commons, The New Committee Rooms, 124
House of Lords, Library of the, 188
Houses of Parliament, The New, 166
Hudson's Bay Company—Sailing of their Ships from Gravesend, 388
Hungerford Suspension Bridge, Opening of the, &c., on the 1st of May, 273, 274
Huntingtower, Lord, Charge of, against Mr. Duckett, 19; The Case of, 50
Hyde Park, A Sketch taken from, 232
Hydro-Electric Machine, (Armstrong's) 245
Hydrophobia, Dreadful Death from, 363

IBRAHAM PACHA, Portrait of, &c., 129, 130
Ice—Ice-marker; Plough; Splitting Bar; Saw; Hook, 315; Ice Plane; Refrigerator; Wenham Ice Lake, 316
"Ice Tree," Middle Temple, 141
Illuminated Magazine, Illustrations, &c., from — "Our Christmas Dream;" "The Crown, at King's Oversley," 13
Illustrated Family Journal and Gazette of Variety, Illustrations from, 317
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, The Post-office Van calling at the Office of the, 48
Illustrated Pleas in the Bail Court, 50
Incendiarism and Incendiary Fires, 10, 51, 131, 138, 154, 395
Income Tax, Observations on the, 97
Income tax, Debate on the, 150, 160
India and China, 3
Interments in Towns, Mr. Mackinnon's Motion on, 230
Ireland—and Irish News, 11, 22, 23, 35, 51, 75, 87, 123, 131, 158, 167, 179, 195, 226, 247, 267, 298, 306, 323, 382, 414; Charitable Bequests Act, 22, 35; Chapter of the Order of St. Patrick, 23; Affray and Loss of Life near Killaloe, 75; Present Locomotive Communication in; Travelling in the South and West of Ireland in 1845; Getting Ready; Full Pace, 213; The Queen's Visit to, 226; Effect of the Late Division in, 267; The Repealers, and the State of Public Feeling in Ireland, 278; The New Colleges, Observations on,

305; Demonstration at Tara and Navan, 342; Conflict Between the Police and the Peasantry, 354; O'Connell's Demonstration at Cork, 332; Landlord and Tenant—Commission in, 374
Irish Members and the Call of the House, 306
Iron Trade, The, 107
Isle of Wight—Grand Military Hurdle Race, 265; Her Majesty's Visit to, 324; Her Majesty's Landing at the, 312; Reception of her Majesty by the Royal Yacht Squadron, 313
Italian Boys, Treatment of, 43
Italian Opera House (her Majesty's Theatre), 167; The Opening of the for the Season, 151, 152

JERSEY, 62; The Island of; Case of Habeas Corpus, re Carus Wilson, &c., 6; Mount Orgueil, 61
Johnson, Doctor, Rescuing Oliver Goldsmith from his Landlady, 331
Jones, Geo., Esq., R.A., Etruscan Tazza Presented to, 220
Judges, Deaths of Two Retired, 160

KEELEY, Mr., as Toby Veck, 16; Mrs. and Mr., as Valentine and Orson, 16
Kemble, The late Mrs. John Philip, 347
Kent (West) Election, 263
Kew Church, Robbery at, of the Parish Registers, 131
Kew Royal Gardens, The Great Palm House and Monster Cactus at the, 12
"King's Cross," Removal of, in the New Road, 108
Kingston-on-Railway, New Church at Surbeton, 29
"Know'st thou the Land?" Mignon's Song from, "Wilhelm Meister" 128
Kolapore, The War in—Hill Forts of Powanghur and Punalla, Distant View of Powanghur and Punalla, East Side of Punalla, Western Gate of Powanghur, 116

LADY OF THE LAKE Steamer on Windermere, Launch of the, 372
Lancaster and Carlisle Railway, Fatal Accident on the, 123
Lautour, Esq., The late Joseph Andrew De, 261
Law Intelligence, 10, 34, 50, 67, 87, 110, 119, 131, 147, 167, 191, 195, 211, 226, 267, 278, 290, 311, 339, 370, 386, 403
"Lay of the Last Minstrel," Tableau Vivant fom the, 236
Leamington Cup Steeple Chase, 176
Leeds, Murder at, 22
Lemaitre as Don Cæsar de Bazan, 157
Lessing's "Sledge" Picture, 113, 114
Libelling, Extraordinary Case of, a Mercantile Firm, 67
Life Buoy, A New, 205
Light for all Nations on the Goodwin Sands, 61
Lincoln, Supposed Murder at, 341
Linen Drapery Trade, The Secrets of the, 226
Lincoln and Oxford Assizes; Lincoln Castle, Assembling of the Sheriff's Procession, Sheriff's Procession, Passing the Stone Bow, Lincoln, 164; The Sheriff of Oxford's Javelin Men escorting the Judges of Assize, Assize Sunday, Lincoln Cathedral, 165
Linwood, Miss, The late, 185
Literature, Magazines, &c., 13, 157, 171, 218, 235, 250, 267, 317
Liverpool Grand Steeple Chase, 145, 146
Liverpool, Murder near, 23
Liverpool, St. George's Hall, New Assize Courts, &c., 28
Llanllechyd Church, Carnaervonshire, 196
Lloyd, William, Case of, who Wilfully Broke the Portland Vase, 103
Lodgers, the Franchise of, 39
London, The Bishop of, 60
Lord Ashburton, The Ship, on Fire, off Charleston, 181
Louth Church and Spire, Restoration of, 180; New Finial and Vane of Spire, 181
"Lucrezia Borgia," Scene from the Opera of, 397
Lynar, The Late Sir William W. F., 235

"MACBETH," Scene from, at the Princess' Theatre, 141
Madagascar, the Queen of (Ranavalona), in her State Howdah, 100
Manslaughter, Verdict of against an Engineer, 35; Two Boys Committed for, 343
Manchester and Leeds Railway, Explosion on the, 87
Manchester, New Schools at, 176
Markets, The, 14, 30, 46, 59, 78, 94, 110, 126, 139, 158, 171, 187, 206, 222, 238, 251, 267, 283, 299, 318, 334, 347, 363, 371, 398, 407
Marriages, 14, 30, 46, 59, 78, 94, 110, 126, 139, 158, 171, 187, 206, 222, 238, 251, 267, 283, 299, 318, 334, 347, 363, 371, 398, 407
Marshall, Esq., The Late John, 413
Mathews, Mr. Charles, and his Creditors, 34, 339; The Insolvency of, 119, 267
May Day in the Last Century—Painted by Anthony, &c, 280
May Meetings, The, 273
May, Our Branch of, 282
Maynooth College Bill, 358; Observations on the, 321
Maynooth College, Debate on the Grant to, 262; Opposition to the Bill for Endowing, 226; Great Meeting at the London Tavern, to Oppose the Increased Grant to, 241, 242; The Late Debate on Proposed Grant to, 246; Meeting at Covent Garden Theatre, to Oppose, 247; Catholic Meeting in Favour of the Grant to, 256
Medical Reform, 129
"Merry Monarch," the Winner of the Derby, 341
Merit and Reward — Mr. Hume's Proposal for a Pension to Sir H. Pottinger, 353
Mercury, Discovery of, in Australia, 149
Message of the New President—Annexation of Texas, 194
Meteor, Magnificent, seen in Nottinghamshire, 284
Metropolis Churches, 124, 156, 188
Metropolis, Mortality in the, 82, 103, 167, 215, 226, 298, 323, 354, 374, 390
Metropolitan Burial Grounds, Treatment of the Dead in, 131
Metropolitan Improvements, 119
Metropolitan News, 7, 23, 39, 55, 70, 82, 102, 110, 118, 131, 154, 167, 178, 195, 215, 226, 247, 263, 275, 311, 323, 342, 354, 374, 399, 407
Metternich, Prince, Portrait of, &c., 228
Mexico, Earthquake at, 306; Sketches in; Mexican Foot Soldier; Mexican Dragoon; Mexican Water Carrier; Throwing the Lasso; Mexican Beggar, 44; Tampico, Main Street in, 33; The Dictator of, Remarks on; The Great Square of, 65; The Revolution in; The Town of Jalapa; Travelling in, 68; United States, &c., 22
Miami, Madame Celeste as, 73
Middlesbro on-Tees, Ship Launch and Accident at, 307
Middlesex Sessions, 195
Miles, Esq., The Late Philip John, of Leigh Court, 214
Military Funeral at Woolwich, 286
Milnes, M.P., Mr. Monckton, 252
Minstrel's Curse, The (from the German of Uhland), 42
Monetary Transactions, 14, 30, 46, 59, 78, 94, 126, 139, 158, 171, 187, 206, 222, 238, 251, 267, 283, 299, 318, 334, 347, 363, 371, 398, 407
Monster Cactus (Echinocactus Staineii), 12
Monster Chinese Mortar at Woolwich, 336
Monster Gun, Trial of a, at Liverpool, 365
Moriani, Sketch and Portrait of, 151, 152
Morning Mails, 343
Mornington, Death of the Earl of, 140
Mortality among Statesmen, Noblemen, and Men of Letters, 134
Musical Monologues, 74
Musical Prodigy, A, 314
Music, New, &c., 5, 23, 42, 74, 106, 110, 123, 126, 142, 170, 186, 203, 224, 229, 251, 282, 315, 320, 331
Murder at Salt Hill, 46
Murder of a Child by a Servant Girl, 295
Mysterious Lady, The, 205
Mystery, The, Fan Steamer, 60

NAPLES BY MOONLIGHT, Burford's New Panorama of, 24
National Sports, 10, 21, 27, 42, 59, 78, 82, 107, 123, 158, 171, 186, 206, 219, 234, 251, 266, 283, 291, 307, 327, 346, 362, 371, 395, 411
Naval and Military Intelligence, 10, 19, 42, 74, 115, 195, 263, 354, 370
Naval Review, Grand, Lines on the, 410
Navy, Rumoured Increace of the, 19
"Nelson Medals," Presentation of at Greenwich Hospital to those who fought under Lord Nelson, 224; Distribution of in the Painted Hall, Greenwich, 240
Newcastle, Letter of his Grace the Duke of; Observations on, 198
Newcastle Races; Plate, 412
Newmarket, The 2000 Guineas Day at, 279, 280; Near the Course, 280
News of the Week, a Lively Comment upon, 27
Newspaper Department at the General Post Office, Saturday Night; The Receiving House, &c., 140
New Staines, The late Tragical Affair at, 10
New Yarmouth, (See Great Yarmouth
New Yarmouth Suspension Bridge, Fall of the, 289, 294, 297
New Year, The Address to our Readers on the Opening of, 1
New York—Celebration of Washington's Birthday in the Tabernacle, 193, 194; Destruction of the Tribune Office, 196; Burning of the Bowery Theatre, 321; Frozen Fountain at, 212; Great "Democratic" Meeting in the Park at, 17, 18; Great Meeting of the Ladies' Industry Association, 256; Great "Native" Meeting in the Park; Great "Whig" Mass Meeting; Great Foot Race at Hoboken, 20, 21; Great Texas Meeting at, 180; Sleigh-Riding in, 181; Broadway, New York, 181; The Floating Theatre—"The Temple of the Muses," 308
New Zealand, 68, 70; Perie, the Son of a New Zealand Chief; Great Seal of New Zealand, 388
New Zealand Company, 70
Nooks and Corners of Auld Scotland, 20
Nooks and Corners of Old England, 76, 108, 156, 181, 208, 288, 317, 364, 372
Normandy, the Duke of, Attempt to Assassinate, 23; Another Attempt to Assassinate, 7, 19
Northampton and Peterborough Railway, Opening of the, 380; Thrapston Station, Oundle Station, Northampton Station, Lynch Bridge, Nene Viaduct, Peterborough Station, 380, 381
Northampton Grand Military Steeple Chase, 220
Nott, G.C.B., Death of Major-General Sir William, 7; The Late Sir William, 19
Nottingham Lunatic Asylum, Fire at, 179

OAKELEY, The Case of Mr., 370
"Oaks," The, Portrait of "Refraction," the Winner of, 357
Obituary of Eminent Persons recently Deceased, 213, 235, 253, 261, 275, 307, 332, 347, 365
O'Connell and the Maynooth Grant, 247
Ojibbeway Indian, "Strong Wind," in America, 34
Old Kent-road Steam Mills, Explosion at the, 336
Old Year, The Last Days and Funeral of the, 5
Oregon Territory—American Policy, &c., Remarks on, 310
Osborn, Miss Elizabeth, Case of, Charged with Stealing, 83
Overland Indian Mail, 3, 6, 7, 130, 146, 210, 258, 290, 322, 354, 386
Oxford University — Case of Mr. Ward, 120; Exterior of the University Theatre; Portrait of Mr. Ward, of Balliol, 120

PALM SUNDAY in Surrey (Crowhurst), 192
Panorama of London, Our Large, 6
Panorama Royal, Leicester-square, 266
Parke, Mr. Baron, 185
Parliamentary Portraits, 252
Parliament, The Approaching Session of, Remarks on, 54; Parliament, Opening of—Reflections on the Speech from the Throne, &c., 86; Parliament, the Opening of, 81, 82; Her Majesty Leaving the House of Lords, 81; Parliament, Opening of—Ceremony of Robing her Majesty, in the Library; The Lord Chancellor presenting her Majesty with a Copy of the Speech, 88; The Ambassadors' and Church Benches, House of Lords; The House of Commons Before her Majesty, at the Bar of the House of Lords, 89; Parliament, The Toils of, 257
Parliamentary, New, Committee Rooms, 124
Parliamentary Proceedings, 90, 98, 114, 130, 146, 162, 178, 210, 226, 242, 258, 274, 291, 306, 322, 339, 355, 370, 387, 402
Parrot, A, Examined as a Witness (a Very Remarkable Case), 23
Pacha of Egypt, Splendid Silver Fountain for the, a Present from the East India Company, 368
Passage of the Desert, The Lines Upon, 208
Paul Pry, Mr. Wright as, at the Adelphi Theatre, 320
Pavilion, the Royal, Brighton, 101
Peel, Lady, and Miss Frances Brown, the Blind Poetess of Ulster. 22
Pelican, Perilous Situation of H.M S., with the Chinese Ransom on Board, 64
Perrot, M., 167; Portrait of, 152
Perth, The Inch of, 336
Pittsburg, Great Fire at, 313, 314
Phidias, 109
Philips, Esq., R.A., The Late Thomas, 261
"Pierre Le Rouge," Scene from, at St. James's Theatre, 73
Pigeon Expresses, 341
Poachers, Another Outrage by, 30
Poet, Lines to the, 180
Poisoning—A Child Poisoned by its Father, 154
Police Offices, Cases at, 3, 19, 35, 50, 67, 83, 103, 119, 131, 171, 191, 195, 211, 235, 267, 275, 347
Polish Ball, Scene from the Grand, 400
Political Rumours, 263
Polka, The Ship, Launch of, at Sunderland, 179
Polk, the President of the United States, 193
Portland Vase, Wanton Destruction of the, at the British Museum, by an Irishman named Lloyd, 87, 102, 103; Drawing of the; Bottom of the Vase; Handle; Bas reliefs; Section of the Sepulchre in which the Vase was found, 105; The Restoration of the, 117
Portraits of Eminent Living Painters—Collins, Grant, Turner, Maclise, 291, 292
Postscripts, 7, 39, 55, 71, 87, 103, 119, 135, 167, 183, 193, 215, 247, 263, 279, 295, 311, 327, 343, 359, 375, 391, 407
Postmaster, A, Convicted of Embezzlement, 19
Post-office Espionage, 118
Post-office, Opening of Letters at the, 230
Potter, The Late Sir Thomas, First Mayor of Manchester, Portrait, &c., of, 213
Poulden, Admiral, The Late, 213
Precincts of Windsor Castle, Presumed Freedom of Arrest of Persons living within the, 16.
Premier's Plan, The Budget, 113
"Priest's Daughter," The, Scene from the New Play of, at Sadler's Wells, 109
Prince Rupert's Cottage at Liverpool, 316
Privileges of the House of Commons (Howard v. Gossett) 311, 339
Prize Poultry, 390 (See "Zoological Society")

QUEBEC, Dreadful Fire at, 411; Burning of the City of, 412
Queen Anne's Bath, 108
Queen's Bench, Court of, 67, 110, 267, 290, 311, 370
Queen, The, Her Most Gracious Majesty Victoria Alexandrina — Her Majesty's Visit to Strathfieldsaye —Her Majesty's Arrival, 49; Her Majesty Passing through Bracknell, 53; Presentation of Address at Wokingham; Changing the Escourt at Arborfield, 56; The Duke of Wellington Meeting the Queen; Strathfieldsaye, the Residence of his Grace the Duke of Wellington, 57
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Visit to the Duke of Buckingham, at Stowe, 36, 38, 40, 41; Aylesbury County Meeting; The Reception Room at the Wolverton Station; Arch at Wicken, 36; Lord Cobham's Pillar, at Stowe; Arch at Entrance into Buckingham; Arch in Buckingham, 37; Presentation of the Mace to her Majesty, at Buckingham; Her Majesty Leaving Buckingham, 40; The Grand Corinthian Arch at Stowe; Stowe; The Grande Front, 41; Her Majesty Planting an Oak at Stowe; Her Majesty's Departure from Stowe House; House at Buckingham, where Charles I. Lodged, 52; The Chandos Testimonial; Fire-works, Market Place, Buckingham, 53
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Visit to the Duke of Norfolk, at Arundel Castle, 103
Queen, The—Visit of her Majesty to the Earl of Liverpool, at Buxted Park, 116
Queen, The—Her Majesty's intended Visit to Germany, 359
Queen, The—Her Majesty's State Visit to Drury Lane Theatre, 262
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Visit to Christ's Hospital, &c, 169
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Visit to the Great Britain Steam-ship, on Tuesday, 22nd April, 257, 258
Queen, The—Grand Review by her Majesty, in Windsor Great Park, 385
Queen, The — Her Majesty, &c., Leaving Windsor Castle for Ascot Races, 384
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Visit to the Isle of Wight; Her Majesty Landing, 312; Reception of her Majesty by the Royal Yacht Squadron, 313; Her Majesty Receiving the Keys at Gosport, 324; Her Majesty's Arrival at the Isle of Wight, 391
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Grand Inspection of the Experimental Squadron off Spithead, 408; Her Majesty Going on Board the Albion at Spithead, 401; The Fleet from the Motherbank; The Superb under Full Sail; The Fleet Getting Under Way, 408; Admiral Parker Going on Board the Royal Yacht; The Fleet Firing the Salute; The Flag Ship St. Vincent Firing a Salute, 409
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Costume Ball, 333, 352, 358, 359, 369, 376, 378; The Duchess of Argyle, Lord Chesterfield, Lord Bolingbroke, Miss Kitty Fisher, 333; Costume of 1740 and 1750, 352; Costumes of Her Majesty and H. R. H. Prince Albert, Hon. W. Cowper, and Mr. G. E. Anson, Lady Cust, Duchess of St. Alban's, Colonel Dawson Damer and the Prince of Leiningen, Lady Tighe, 360, 361; Duke of Norfolk, Duchess of Grafton, Marchioness of Londonderry, Viscount Sydney, Countess of Jersey, Lady C. Villiers, Lord Mandeville, Baroness Rothschild, Earl of Surrey, Marchioness of Ormonde, Belgian Ambassadress, Marquis of Donegal, Miss Burdett Coutts, Duchess of St. Alban's, Viscount Villiers, Duchess of Sutherland, Viscount Castlereagh, Lady Peel, Duke of St. Alban's, 373; Baroness Brunow, Duchess of Kent, Viscount Sydney, Duke of Norfolk, Austrian Ambassadress, 376; The "Sir Roger de Coverley" Dance in the Picture Gallery, 376; The Supper in the Great Dining Room, Minuet in the Throne Room, 377
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Visit to Exeter Hall, 365
Queen, The—Attempted Intrusion Upon, at Brighton, by Ralph Stennett, 122
Queen, The—Presentation of Jewellery to Her Majesty and Prince Albert by the Artisans of Birmingham, 352
Queen, The—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, &c., in Hyde Park, 232
Queen's Birthday, Celebration, 341
Quersonneres, The Late M. L'Abbe Noel des, 275

RAGGETT'S HOTEL, Fire and Loss of Life at, 342, 343
Railway Carriages, German and Danish, 160
Railway Facts, Summary of, 386, 402
Railway Reform, Remarks Upon, 241
Railways, Continental, 64
Railways, New Portable Gas Lamps for; Gas Lamp; Interior; The Lighter, 28
Railway Schemes, Decisions of the Board of Trade Respecting, 118
Railways, The Progress of, 317
Railway Ticket Machinery; Railway Ticket Printing Machine; Tickets; Ticket Cabinet; Arrangements of a Ticket Delivery Box; Pay Office Date Printing Machine, 117
Recess, The, 177
"Refraction," The Winner of the Oaks, 357
Repeal Association, Secession of Mr. Grey Porter from the, 294
Repton, Mrs., Suicide of (an Insane Lady), 3
Rescript from the See of Rome, 35
Revenue, Continued Improvement in the, 7; Return up to 5th April, 226; State of the, 22; Revenue and Taxation, Remarks on, 17
Robber Burned to Death in Prison, A, 123
"Robert and Bertrand," Scene from the New Ballet of, at Drury-lane Theatre, 221
Roche, The late Regina Maria, 307
Roebuck, Mr., Conduct of, in the House of Commons, 390
Romney, The late Earl of, 214
Rondolet, A, 184
Rosse Telescope, The Great, Discoveries with, 253, 254; The Great Telescope, Machine for Grinding the Specula, Ground-plan of Foundry, Section of Machinery, 253
Rossi-Caccia, Madame, 413
"Rosida," Scene from the New Ballet of, 365
Royal Academy Exhibition, 292; Scene from the Life of the Duc De Biron, View near Ournelo, 293; King Henry IV., painted by Gilbert, 312; Uriel and Satan, painted by Haydon, 364
Royal Exchange really opened for the Transaction of Business, 6, 7
Royal Horticultural Society of Ireland, Exhibition of at the Rotunda, Dublin. 304
Royal Humane Society, New Gold Medal of the, 172
Royal Scottish Academy, Exhibition of the, 119
Royal Thames Yacht Club—Match for the Belvidere Cup: Belvidere, Blue Belle, Ino, Champion, Mystery, Antagonist, 301, 302; Mystery, Antagonist, Belvidere, Vixen, Prima Donna, 325
Russia, Alexandra, Empress of, 48; Cæsarewitsch, Heir to the Throne of, 48
Russian Droshky, presented to Prince Albert by the Emperor of Russia, 372
Russian Empire, Census of the, 327
Russia, the Emperor of, Reported Death of, 39
Russell's, Lord John, Nine Resolutions, 337

SACRILEGE at Hastings, 220
Salt Hill, Murder at; The Supposed Murder at, 7, 11; The Murder at—The Electro-Magnetic Telegraph at Slough, 25; The Murder at, 26 46, 67, 154, 183. (See also "Tawell, John.")
Sarsfield, The late Simon Count, 307
Satirist Newspaper and the Duke of Brunswick (Queen's Bench), 403
Saussure, The late Theodore De, 307
Scinde, Letter to the Editor in Reference to a Recent Work on, 54
Scotland—Opening of the Direct Railway between Airdrie and Glasgow, Edinburgh, &c., 11; Incendiary Fire at Dumfries, 11
Scott Monument, The; Statues for, Meg Merrilies, Lady of the Lake, Last Minstrel, Prince Charles Edward; Portion of the Monument showing one of the Principal Niches for the reception of the present Statues, and the arrangements made for smaller ones, 237
Self Accused Murderer, Another, 275
Serk, 62; The Couper Rock, 61
Settlement, The Law of, 102
Shaftesbury Election, 151
Shapwick Murders, The, 39
Sheffield and Ashton Railway, Ruins on the, 261, 262
Sheriffs' Court (Howard v. Gossett), 339
Sheriffs, Election of, and Regal Ceremony of Pricking the Sheriffs' Roll; Privy Council in the Court of Exchequer, 83, 84
"Sheriff of the County," Scene from the, at the Haymarket Theatre, 157
Shoplifting, Case of, 171
Shrewsbury Races, 325, 326
Shrewsbury Show, 357
Shuldham, Esq, The late William, 332
Skelton, Colonel, Fatal Accident to, 306; the late, 347
Slave Felucca, Encounter with a, 229
Slaver, Gallant Capture of a, off Fish Bay, West Coast of Africa, 1
Slave Labour in the Brazils, 197
Slave Trade, The, Observations on the Efforts of Great Britain to suppress, 401; Treaty with France, 336
Slave Vessel, Capture of a, off the Congo River, 300
Sledge Driving, 113, 114
Sleigh Riding in New York Broadway, 181
Sligo, Death of the Marquis of, 82
Smith, the Rev. Sydney, Death of, 144; Opinion of, in reference to the Condition of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, 214; Will of, 245
Smith, The Messrs., the Distillers, the Alleged Fraud by, 87
Solomon Heine, The Will of the late, of Hamburg, 27
Somes, M.P., Death of Mr., 407
Sophocles, Bust of, 45, 122
Soumet, The late Alexandre, 261
South America, Texas, &c., Condition of, 38
South Australia, Discovery of Mercury in the neighbourhood of Adelaide, 149
South Hackney New Church, 308
South Western Railway, Electrical Telegraph on the, 77
Spa Fields Burying Grounds, Disgusting Disclosures respecting, 131, 154, 191, 386
Spain, General Remarks on the Social and Political Condition of, 22
Spitfire Steam Vessel, Launch of the, at Deptford, 195
Splinter in the Thumb, Death from a, 211
Stamford Election, 103
Stamford and Warrington, the Late Earl of, 307
Standard Theatre, The New, Shoreditch, 320
St. Austell's Well, 181
Steam-boat Accident in America, 279
Stepney Fair, Serious Occurrence at, 195
Stepney, The Late Lady, 261
"St. George and the Dragon," Scene from the Burlesque of, at the Adelphi Theatre, 204
St Giles's, The Murder in, 215, 238, 247; Trial of Joseph Connor for, 310
St John's Church, Notting Hill, 124
St Keyne's Well, Cornwall, 364
St. Margaret's Church, South Foreland, 288
St. Mary's Woolnoth, Church, Lombard-street, 156
Stopford, Admiral the Hon. Sir Robert, G.C.B, Governor of Greenwich Hospital, 240
St. Petersburg, Very Extraordinary Incident at (Countess Z—), 11
Stowe, Her Majesty's Visit to the Duke of Buckingham at 36, 37, 38, 40, 41—(See "Queen, The,")
Strathfieldsaye, Her Majesty's Visit to, 49, 53, 56; The Tennis Court at, 80
Strickland, The Late Mr. Robert, 332
St. Sidwell's Church, Exeter, 124
St. Vincent, H.M.S., Firing a Salute, 409
Suffolk-street Exhibition, 219
Sugar Resolutions to be Proposed by the Government, 138
Sugar Question, The, 134
Suicide at Waterloo-bridge, 26
Suicide of an Insane Lady, 3
Sun, Appearance of the, on Sunday, 9th of March, 192
Sunday, Trial on a, in the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin, 123
Superb, H.M.S, under Full Sail, 408
Surrey Zoological Gardens, The Concert Monstre at, 413
Survilliers, The Countess, widow of Joseph Bonaparte, 347
Sussex, Monument to the late Duke of, in Kensal Green Cemetery, &c., 272
Swallow Steamer, Loss of on the Hudson River, 308
Switzerland, The Civil War in, Remarks on, 225; Conflict at Lucerne, 225; Chart of Seat of War, &c., 227; The Town Hall, Zurich; The Swiss Diet at Zurich; View of Lucerne, 228

TAHITI, The Island of, 2, 82
Talacre Mining Company, 10
Tapping, James, The Convict, 167; Execution of, 202
Taunton Assizes; Trial of Sarah Freeman for Poisoning her Mother, 235
Tawell, John, Committal of, for the Murder of Sarah Hart at Salt Hill, 26, 46, 67; Court House at Aylesbury; Trial of, 173; Execution of, 198; A Sketch of his History, 203; Further Particulars respecting, 215
Tayler's Breakwater off Brighton, 284
Terrible, Launch of her Majesty's Steam Frigate, The, 96
Texas, Description of, 3; Review of Texan Troops; Port of Galvaston; City of Houston, the Capital of Texas, 4
Texas, Great Meeting at New York; Texas Demonstration, Jersey City, 180
Thames Regatta—Tradesmen's Challenge Cup; Silver Wherry, 411
Thames Tunnel, 149
Thames Royal Yacht Club Match—Prima Donna Rounding the Buoy; Vixen; Belvidere; Blue Belle, 353, 354
Thames Yacht Club, The Royal. (See "Royal Thames Yacht Club")
Thaxted Church, A Midnight Ascent at, 25
Theatres, &c., 9, 29, 58, 72, 91, 109, 125, 141, 157, 167, 170, 186, 203, 218, 229, 234, 250, 266, 282, 299, 304, 314, 331, 346, 365, 375, 394, 397, 403
Thiers's History of the Consulate and the Empire of France under Napoleon, 218
Thom, the Inverury poet, 144
"Time Works Wonders," Scene from the new Comedy of, at the Haymarket Theatre, 304
Tissington Well-dressing, in 1845, 299; Miss Goodwin's Well, Hand's Well, the Ceremony at the Hall Well, the Coffin Well, the Town Well, the Hall Well, 300
Tobacco Seizure of, at St. Katharine's Docks, 23
Toilet Mirror, the Music by J. L. Hatton, Words by Bayley, 248
Too Loving by Half—Case at Marlborough street Police-court, 19
Tower, Improvements in the, 39; Progress of the Works in, 320; the Elizabethan Armoury, 201; New Barracks in the—Laying the Foundation stone, 391, 392; View of New Barracks, from Architect's Design, 392
Townsend, The late Colonel, 307
Trafalgar-square, Artesian Well in, 320; Bude Lights in, 284; the Fountains in, 82; the Fountains in, and Sections of the Well, 217; Pumping Engine for Supplying the Fountains, &c., 216
Turkey, The Sultan of, Abdu l-Medjid, 184
Turkish Marriage, Description of, 365

ULVERSTONE, Barbarous Murder at, 11
Umbrella, Statistics of the, 11
United States, President's Message, 2, 6; Speech of the President Elect, 18

VALENTINE, A Story of a, on the 14th of February, 85
Valentine's Day- Drawn by Phiz, 85
"Valentine and Orson"—Mr. and Mrs. Keeley as, 16
Vauxhall Gardens—Joel H Diavolo's Descent with Fireworks at Firework Temple, 396; the Opening of the Gardens at, 314
"Victory," by Phidias, Head of the Statue of, 109
Viennese Children at her Majesty's Theatre, 252
Vidocq, Memoir and Portrait of, 208; Letter of Explanation of, to our Editor, 214; Exhibition at the Cosmorama Rooms, 375

WALES, His Royal Highness the Prince of, Fowling Piece presented to, by the King of the French, 24
Walton Church, Stafford, Struck by Lightning, 332
Ward, Mr., and the University of Oxford, 134, 290, 370; Marriage of, 224
Wardour Castle, Wilts, 156
War Steamer, Launch of a, 341
Warwick Races and Spring Meeting, 229
Wasp, H. M. S., The Murder of an Officer and Eight Men of, by the Crew of a Slaver, 354
Water Colours, Pall Mall East, Exhibition of the Society of Painters in—"Irish Mendicants," by Fripp; "Sir Roger de Coverley with the Gipsies," by G. Harrison, 281
Water Colours, Exhibition of the New Society of Painters in—"Crusaders' First Sight of Jerusalem;" "Sheep Washing," 268; "Gipsy's Home;" "Courtship;" "The Milkmaid;" "Le Tombeau du Pêcheur;" "The Prisoner of Gisors," 269; "Light," by Jenkins, 348
Waterloo Banquet, The, 386
Waterloo, Lines to the Forget-me-not growing on the Field of, 391
Waterloo, View of the Field of, 400
Waverley Ball, at Edinburgh, 237
Weather, The, Lieut. Morrison's, R.N., Letter respecting, 22
Weather, The, 106, 167
Wedding Day, Death on the, 355
Weighing Office at the Bank of England — Sovereign Weighing Machine; Section of the Works of the Balance; Bates's Scales for Testing Sovereign Weights; Box of the Sovereign Balance; Enlarged View of the End of the Balance; Machine for Cutting Sovereigns, 189
Weiss, Madame, and the Viennese Children, 252
Wellington Monument, near Horncastle, 208
Wellington, The Duke, his Life Endangered, 347; Laying the First Stone of the New Barracks at the Tower, 392
Wenham Ice Lake, 316
West Kent Election, 263
West Middlesex Assurance Company, The Independent, 167
Westminster Hall, Exhibition of Works of Art in, 403
Westminster Improvements, 263
Westminster Loan and Discount Society, 34
Westminster, K.G., Death of the Marquis of, 118; Funeral of, 135
Whist, A Novel Game at, 265
Whitechapel Distillery Case (Smith and Co), 278
Whitehall, Offices of the Board of Trade at, 153
White, the Late Sir John Chambers, K.C.B, 235
Whiting Shoal, Limehouse Reach—Blowing Up of the; Plan of the Channel; Firing the Train by the Galvanic Battery, 329; Dredging Machine; Section of the Shoal and River at Low Water; Gunpowder Canisters, 330
Whitsun Week, Chat of the, 315
"Whittington and His Cat," Scene from the Burlesque of, at the Lyceum Theatre, 204
Wilson, Mr. Carus, 350
Wilson, Mr. Carus, and the Royal Court of Guernsey, 110; Leaving Jersey, 125; Remanded Back to Jersey, 267; Removal of to Jersey, 275
Windfall for a Nottingham Butcher, 208
Window Duties, Remarks on, 182
Windsor Castle, Precincts of, 16
Windsor, Distribution of Royal New Year's Gifts at; View of, in the Royal Riding House, 8
Windsor Great Park, Grand Review by her Majesty in, 385, 386
Windsor Steeple Chases, 220
Winter Assize, The, Remarks on, 33
Wolff, Dr. Joseph, 181; Arrival of at Portsmouth, 247; Journey to Bokhara, 275
Woodruffe, Mr., Death of, 151
Woodstock, Election of Lord Henry Loftus for the Borough of, 274
Working People at their Labour and in their Homes, Prospectus of Publication respecting, in this Journal, 80

YORK MINSTER, The Monster Bell for, 97, 118, 179
Yorkshire Chess Association, Dinner to Mr. Staunton, 330

ZOOLOGICAL Society, Australian Ant-Eater at the, 324; Prize Poultry—Common Geese, Ducks, Gold Spangled Bantams, Spangled Turkey, Roman Runts, Polish Fowls, Fowls from China, Silver Spangled Fowls, 389
Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park, Royal Visit to the, 227; the White-Headed Eagles at, 305; Chimpanzee at, 355, 356

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1845.—SUPPLEMENT.

NOV 13 1982

Utah